* Based upon information provided to the FDIC, deposits placed by this entity under the listed business line, may involve one or more additional third parties that may meet the deposit broker definition. If such an additional third party meets the deposit broker definition, institutions should report deposits received under the business line as brokered deposits on their Call Report. For example, deposits received under a broker-dealer sweep program by institutions unaffiliated with the depositor's agent should be reported as brokered deposits if a third party that facilitates the placement of deposits, for example, by engaging in matchmaker activities, as defined in the regulation, is involved in the sweep program.

Notice may become inactive for a number of reasons, including that the notice provider is no longer in the particular line of business, has withdrawn the notice, no longer meets the requirements for the PPE, did not provide an annual recertification, submitted an incomplete or inaccurate notice, or other reason.

The FDIC will post notices received and will update the Report of Notices each month as information becomes available.

If such an additional third party meets the deposit broker definition, institutions should report deposits received under the business line as brokered deposits on their Call Report. For example, deposits received under a broker-dealer sweep program by institutions unaffiliated with the depositor's agent should be reported as brokered deposits if a third party that facilitates the placement of deposits, for example, by engaging in matchmaker activities, as defined in the regulation, is involved in the sweep program.

Notice may become inactive for a number of reasons, including that the notice provider is no longer in the particular line of business, has withdrawn the notice, no longer meets the requirements for the PPE, did not provide an annual recertification, submitted an incomplete or inaccurate notice, or other reason.

The FDIC will post notices received and will update the Report of Notices each month as information becomes available.
