I. Manual
Introduction
Introduction

The Consumer Compliance Examination Manual (Manual) is designed as a reference tool for Compliance examination staff to use when conducting Compliance and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) examinations and other supervisory activities. The detailed procedures presented in the Manual are not intended to replace sound judgment and discretion on the part of examination staff. Instead, the materials are designed to promote uniformity in the examination process and as a reference tool for examiners.

Organization of the Manual

The Manual is divided into 12 sections as described below and is organized so that information is presented based on regulation rather than process. The Manual incorporates examination policies and procedures in effect as of the most recent update, which is noted in the footnote in each subsection. The Manual begins with the risk focused, process oriented examination procedures (Section II) and sample templates to use during the examination (Section III). Sections IV through X cover specific rules and regulations, divided into general topics. The Manual concludes by covering the Community Reinvestment Act examination (Section XI) and samples of the various performance evaluations (Section XII) to be used. Each Section of the Manual is discussed below.

- I – Manual Introduction – This section includes information on how to use the Manual as well as a list of common abbreviations.
- II – Consumer Compliance Examinations – This section covers the Compliance Examination process beginning with pre-examination planning through determining the rating. Also included is information on documenting examination findings, enforcement actions, appeals, visitations, investigations, and violation codes.
- III – Compliance Examination Templates & Samples – This section provides sample forms and templates to be used during Compliance Examinations, including Pre-Examination Information Package, a model entry letter, a scoping memorandum, an interview sheet, a Compliance Information Document Request, a sample Bank of Anytown Report of Examination, and a sample Bank of Anytown Public Evaluation.
- IV – Fair Lending Laws and Regulations – This section addresses the procedures for evaluating compliance with the Fair Lending provisions of Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) and the Fair Housing Act (FHAct). Examination procedures and checklists are included. Procedures for evaluating compliance with the technical, non-discriminatory provisions of ECOA and FHAct are covered in Section V.
- V – Consumer Compliance Lending Issues – This section covers lending related topics including Truth in Lending, Truth in Lending Questions and Answers, Real Estate Settlement Procedures, Homeownership Counseling, Homeowners Protection, Flood Insurance, Flood Questions and Answers, Equal Credit Opportunity and Fair Housing, Home Mortgage Disclosures, Consumer Leasing, Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, and Talent Amendment. Examination procedures and checklists are included.
- VI – Consumer Compliance Depository Issues – This section covers deposit function related topics including Expedited Funds including Check 21, Electronic Funds Transfers, and Truth in Savings, and Interest on Deposits. Examination procedures and checklists are included.
- VII – Unfair and Deceptive Practices – This section covers issues relating to unfair and deceptive practices including Unfair and Deceptive Acts, Credit Practices, Preservation of Claims of Consumer Claims and Defenses, and Fair Debt Collection. Examination procedures and checklists are included.
- VIII – Privacy and Consumer Information – This section covers issues relating to privacy issues including Gramm-Leach-Bliley Privacy of Consumer Financial Information, Children’s Online Privacy Protection, Right to Financial Privacy, Controlling the Assault of Non-Solicited Pornography and Marketing, Telephone Consumer Protection, and Fair Credit Reporting. Examination procedures and checklists are included.
- IX – Retail Sales – This section covers retail sales to consumers for Investment and Insurance Sales. This topic is often referred to as Non-Deposit Products or NDP. Examination procedures and checklists are included.
- X – Other Consumer Compliance Issues – This section covers Compliance Examination related topics not included in the prior sections. Included are issues relating to Membership Advertising, Branch Closings, E-Sign, and Interstate Banking and Branching. Examination procedures and checklists are included.
- XI – Community Reinvestment Act – This section covers CRA related examination procedures for all types and asset sizes of institutions as well as the CRA Sunshine Act, and CRA Questions and Answers. Examination procedures and checklists are included.
- XII – Community Reinvestment Act Performance Evaluation Templates – This section provides samples of Performance Evaluations for all sizes and types of institutions under CRA.

How to Use the Manual

The Manual incorporates existing policies and procedures, adding information, job aids, and references that may assist the reader. Each Section includes pertinent background material, examination procedures, references, and job aids to assist the examiner in the examination process. Each subtopic covered in the Sections is included independently in the Manual and can be readily removed, replaced, and updated. In addition, the electronic version is divided into corresponding sections and topics. When new examination policies and procedures are released and incorporated into the Manual, they will be available through FDIC.gov.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations
Overview of Consumer Compliance Examinations

Introduction

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) promotes compliance with federal consumer protection laws, fair lending statutes and regulations, and the Community Reinvestment Act through supervisory and outreach programs. The FDIC conducts three types of supervisory activities to review an institution’s compliance management system; compliance examinations, visitations, and investigations.

Compliance examinations are the primary means the FDIC uses to determine whether a financial institution is meeting its responsibility to comply with the requirements and proscriptions of federal consumer protection laws and regulations. The FDIC conducts visitations for a variety of reasons: to review the compliance posture of newly-chartered institutions or those converting to state non-member status; to review progress on corrective actions or compliance with an enforcement action in the interval between examinations; or to investigate problems brought to the attention of the FDIC. Visitations are usually targeted events aimed at specific operational areas, or entire compliance management systems previously identified as significantly deficient. Compliance examinations and visitations may also be considered during the review of an application submitted to the FDIC (e.g., application for deposit insurance or establishing a branch). Finally, investigations are conducted primarily to follow-up on particular consumer inquiries or complaints, including fair lending complaints.

This section provides a general overview of the FDIC compliance examination. The purposes of compliance examinations are to:

- assess the quality of an FDIC-supervised institution’s compliance management system (see “Compliance Management System”) for implementing federal consumer protection statutes and regulations;
- review compliance with relevant laws and regulations; and
- initiate effective supervisory action when elements of an institution’s compliance management system are deficient and/or when violations of law are found.

Examination Approach

FDIC compliance examinations blend risk-focused and process-oriented approaches. Risk-focusing involves using information gathered about a financial institution to direct FDIC examiner resources to those operational areas where compliance errors present the greatest potential risks of having a negative impact on bank customers, resulting in consumer harm (See the Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm section of this manual at page II-2.1 for additional information.) Concentrating on the institution’s internal control infrastructure and methods, or the “process” used to ensure compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations, both acknowledges that the ultimate responsibility for compliance rests with the institution and encourages examination efficiency.

Determining Risk

Risk-focusing involves:

- developing a compliance risk profile for an institution using various sources of information about its products, services, markets, organizational structure, operations, and past supervisory performance;
- assessing the quality of an institution’s compliance management system in light of the inherent risks associated with the level and complexity of its business operations and product and service offerings; and
- testing selected transactions based on risk such as when an operational area is determined to have a high risk of consumer harm and institution’s compliance management efforts appear weak.

Evaluating the Compliance Management System

Compliance examinations start with a top-down, risk-focused process to comprehensively analyze and review an institution’s compliance management system. The compliance examiner considers:

Board and Management Oversight

- Commitment to and oversight of the institution’s CMS.
- Level of resources dedicated toward compliance functions.
- Due diligence and oversight of third parties to ensure compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations, and appropriate oversight of third parties’ compliance responsibilities.
- Anticipation and responsiveness to changes in applicable laws and regulations, market conditions, and products and services offered.
- Due diligence reviews performed in advance of product changes, considering the entire lifecycle of the product or service, and after implementation of changes.
- Comprehension and identification of compliance risks, including emerging risks, in the institution’s financial products, services, and other activities.
- Management of identified risk, including self-assessments.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Overview of Consumer Compliance Examinations

- Identification of and responsiveness to compliance risk management deficiencies and violations of law or regulations, including remediation.

Consumer Compliance Program

- Whether the institution’s policies and procedures are appropriate to the risk in the products, services, and activities of the institution.
- Adequacy of third-party relationship program management.
- The degree to which compliance training is current and tailored to risk and staff responsibilities.
- The sufficiency of the monitoring and, if applicable, audit to encompass compliance risks throughout the institution.
- The responsiveness and effectiveness of the consumer complaint resolution process.

Based on the results of this review, the examiner may conclude that weaknesses in the institution’s compliance management system may result in current or future noncompliance with federal consumer protection laws, regulations, or policy statements, thereby resulting in potential consumer harm. The examiner must determine, based on this analysis, whether transaction testing is warranted to further study particular risk in an entire operational area or regulation, or only a limited aspect of an area or regulation.

The FDIC examination approach appropriately recognizes that the Board of Directors and management of a financial institution are responsible for complying with all federal consumer protection laws and regulations. While the formality and complexity of compliance management systems will vary greatly among institutions, the FDIC expects the Board of Directors and management of each institution to have a system in place to effectively manage its compliance risk, consistent with the size and complexity of its products, services, and markets.

Managing the examination based on risk maximizes examiner efficiency and may reduce the on-site examination presence, while emphasizing areas requiring elevated supervisory attention. By focusing on compliance management systems, examiners will be able to identify the root causes of deficiencies and suggest appropriate corrective actions designed to address the problem and prevent recurrence.

In order to provide as much relevant and useful guidance as possible, the procedures detailed in this Manual include instructions for reviewing the various elements of a compliance management system (CMS), such as written policies and procedures, monitoring and/or audit, and training. When these elements are in place at an institution being examined, the examiner will use the guidance to evaluate their effectiveness. However, the fact that certain elements of a CMS are described in these examination procedures is not intended to suggest that all institutions must maintain a CMS that includes all of these elements. Many institutions do not. There is no reason for them to, if their operations do not warrant it. Conclusions about the adequacy of a bank’s CMS must be based on the effectiveness of those elements that are in place, taken as a whole, for that bank’s particular operations.

For example, assume two institutions – a large, complex bank and a small, non-complex bank – each has a record of strong compliance with all regulations that apply to the products and services it offers. Because of the complex nature of its operations, the large bank’s CMS includes comprehensive external audits and formalized training from third-party vendors. The smaller bank’s CMS includes no internal or external audits and no formalized training except for the compliance officer, who trains bank staff individually when needed. After reviewing all relevant material available, the examiner finds no significant deficiencies in the small bank’s CMS and no reason to believe that the adoption of an audit function or formalized training is necessary to ensure ongoing compliance. The examiner would not criticize the small bank for the absence of audit (or formal training.) Nor should the examiner feel obliged to assign a higher rating to the larger bank simply because its CMS has more elements than the smaller bank. This is because each bank has a CMS that is adequate for the compliance responsibilities that are incumbent upon it due to its operating environment.

The descriptions of CMS elements provided in the Manual will assist the examiner in evaluating the element if one exists and in suggesting content if he or she determines that management should consider adopting an element.

Role of the Compliance Examiner

Compliance examiners play a crucial role in the supervisory process. The compliance examination, and follow-up supervisory attention to an institution’s compliance program deficiencies and violations, helps to ensure that consumers and businesses obtain the benefits and protections afforded them under federal law. To this end, an examiner’s efforts should help the financial institution improve its compliance posture and prevent future violations.

Primarily, examiners must:

- establish an examination scope focused on areas of highest consumer harm risk;
- evaluate an institution’s compliance management system;
II. Compliance Examinations - Overview of Compliance Examinations

- conduct transaction testing where risks intersect with weaknesses in the compliance management system or uncertainties about aspects of that system; and
- report findings to the Board of Directors and management of the institution.

As part of the examination process, examiners are expected to:

- take a reasoned, common sense approach to examining and use sound judgment when making decisions;
- maintain ongoing communication with financial institution management throughout an examination;
- assist an institution to help itself improve performance by providing management with sound recommendations for enhancing its compliance management system;
- share experiences and knowledge of successful compliance management systems; and
- provide guidance regarding the various consumer protection and fair lending laws and regulations.

Overview of the Examination Process

Compliance examinations primarily involve three stages: pre-examination planning; review and analysis, both off-site and on-site; and communicating findings to institution management via meetings and a report of examination.

Pre-examination Planning

Pre-examination planning involves gathering information available in FDIC records and databases, contacting the financial institution to review and narrow the draft request for information and documents, and delivering a letter to the institution requesting specific information and documents for detailed analysis by the examination team (see Section III). Proper examination preparation and planning maximizes an examination team’s time and resources.

Review and Analysis

During the review and analysis phase of an examination, an examiner thoroughly evaluates an institution’s compliance management system to assess its quality and effectiveness, and documents system weaknesses and violations of federal consumer protection laws and regulations, if any. The EIC starts by analyzing information about the type, level, and complexity of the institution’s operations, and begins to develop the scope of the examination and plan for resource deployment to areas of highest risk. The EIC also preliminarily assesses the potential risk of consumer harm based upon the information available at the time of pre-examination planning.

The scope of an examination will be preliminarily established prior to entering the financial institution, and should be refined through the results of examiner discussions with management, the compliance officer (or staff assigned), and the internal auditor. Consistent with the FDIC’s approach, examination resources are focused on addressing the areas of highest consumer harm risk. Additionally, there may be some cases where the EIC may include additional areas in the examination scope even though consumer harm risk is not exhibited. While on-site at an institution, an examiner may limit the scope of the compliance review based on reliable procedures and controls in place. Similarly, the examiner may expand the review based on, for example, management’s view about compliance, a lack of necessary procedures or controls, the presence of violations, the identification of potential or actual consumer harm, or the presence of new or significantly amended regulations. The compliance review continues with an evaluation of the:

- commitment of the Board of Directors, management, and staff to compliance;
- qualifications of the compliance officer or designated staff;
- scope and effectiveness of compliance policies and procedures;
- effectiveness of training;
- thoroughness of monitoring and any internal/external reviews or audits; and
- responsiveness of the Board and management to the findings of internal/external reviews and to the findings of the previous examination.

An examiner must consider the size, level, and complexity of an institution’s operations when evaluating the adequacy of an institution’s compliance management system.

The examination procedures outlined in this Manual are designed to enable an examiner to identify and measure compliance risk; make an assessment of an institution’s compliance infrastructure and methods for identifying, monitoring, and controlling compliance risk and potential consumer harm; and determine the transaction testing needed to assess the integrity of the compliance management system. The number of transactions selected and the type of sampling used should be relative to the perceived risk of consumer harm and the need to assess the level of compliance in an activity or function.

At the conclusion of the review and analysis phase, an examiner:

- summarizes all findings regarding the strengths and weaknesses of an institution’s compliance management system;
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Overview of Consumer Compliance Examinations

• determines the cause(s) of programmatic deficiencies or Level 3 or Level 2 violations and relates them to the underlying root causes as well as specific weakness(es) in the institution’s compliance management system; and

• identifies actions necessary to address deficiencies or violations.

Determining the cause(s) of a program deficiency or violation is critical to recommending solutions that will successfully address problem areas and strengthen an institution’s compliance posture for the future.

Communicating Findings

Examiners must discuss findings and recommendations with management and obtain a commitment for corrective action. These discussions will be held during the course of the examination and at an exit meeting with management and/or the Board of Directors.

The results of the examination will also be communicated to the Board of Directors and management of the institution in a Report of Examination. The Report of Examination provides an account of the strengths and weaknesses of a compliance management system. It is more than an exception-based document and should add value to the institution’s compliance efforts.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm

Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm

Introduction

The FDIC has a risk-focused consumer compliance examination approach, based on the potential for compliance errors to have an adverse impact on banking customers. The following guidance is provided to assist compliance examiners in understanding the impact of consumer harm on examination and supervisory responsibilities. In addition, this guidance communicates to examiners information about bank activities or omissions that can frequently result in consumer harm. Examination activities promote and confirm FDIC-supervised institutions’ compliance with federal consumer protection and fair lending laws, the Community Reinvestment Act, and the regulations that implement these requirements. Effective supervision focuses on the areas requiring elevated supervisory attention and promotes the efficient use of resources.

What is Consumer Harm?

The FDIC’s consumer compliance examination process is risk-focused based on the potential for consumer harm. “Consumer Harm” is an actual or potential injury or loss to a consumer, whether such injury or loss is economically quantifiable (e.g., overcharge) or non-quantifiable (e.g., discouragement). It may be caused by a financial institution’s violation of a federal consumer protection law or regulation, a disregard for supervisory guidance, or a wrongful act by a financial institution or by a third party. Consumer Harm may occur in a variety of ways, including:

1. Quantifiable harm – Economic harm to a consumer where the injury or loss can be measured. For example, a consumer may suffer monetary harm as a result of deceptive marketing practices that entice a consumer to purchase a product without having accurate information regarding the benefits, costs, or terms of the product in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Similarly, if a bank employs a pricing structure that allows significant discretion, without effective monitoring or controls, resulting in a protected class of borrowers being charged higher prices on average than similarly situated non-protected borrowers in violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, then the higher prices paid by the protected class of borrowers over similarly situated non-protected borrowers is quantifiable consumer harm.

2. Non-quantifiable harm – Injury or loss to the consumer that cannot be measured, or is very difficult to measure, yet the consumer may suffer some form of economic or other harm. For example, a consumer could be injured economically when a financial institution unfairly denies the consumer credit or discourages an application on a prohibited basis in violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, however calculating a monetary value for the injury may be challenging. Another example may be a bank that imposes additional, unlawful requirements on consumers before the bank is willing to consider the consumers’ billing disputes or requirements that are not accurately divulged in the bank’s error resolution disclosures. The practices could discourage a consumer from filing a dispute. Consumer harm exists, but may be difficult to identify and/or quantify.

3. Potential harm – Involves financial institution activities (or failure to take action) that create the possibility that a consumer may be harmed. An example of potential consumer harm is a violation of the regulations that implement the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 where the financial institution failed to require flood insurance on a residence at loan closing. The consumer has not suffered actual loss but is exposed to potential economic loss should a flood occur.

Consumer harm is a broad concept and the examples provided here are not exhaustive. Among key points are that consumer harm is not limited to monetary loss, can be quantifiable or non-quantifiable, can be actual harm or potential harm, and may be caused by activities conducted through third-party relationships.

How does Consumer Harm Impact Examination Activities?

The concept of consumer harm is an important consideration in all examination and enforcement efforts, including examination strategies, examination scoping activities, assessment of the CMS, content of examination reports, supervisory actions, and communications with bankers. The FDIC’s mission of promoting public confidence in the financial system is best served through a supervisory approach focused on identifying, addressing, and preventing consumer harm.

- Identification – Supervisory and examination activities are driven by a focus on identifying the inherent risk of consumer harm that may occur in a financial institution’s business activity. Inherent risk is the compliance risk associated with product and service offerings, practices, or other activities that could directly or indirectly result in significant consumer harm or noncompliance with consumer protection rules and regulations. For example, a new loan product, a change to deposit account terms, or a third party relationship all represent inherent risk.

- Addressing identified risks – When inherent risks of consumer harm are identified, examiners will ensure the
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm

An institution takes appropriate action to address or mitigate these risks. Corrective action for violations of law and regulations should remediate consumer harm when it occurs and remove underlying incentives to engage in practices harmful to consumers. Where there is a violation of law or regulation, the extent and severity of consumer harm informs the type and scope of enforcement action sought to correct the violation.

- Prevention – Mitigating factors are the strength of the compliance management system (CMS) to mitigate inherent risk. Examples of mitigating factors include strong management controls, effective training programs, and ongoing monitoring efforts. Supervisory efforts should encourage institutions to have an effective CMS to avoid and mitigate risks of consumer harm. To support that effort, examination and other staff communicate information and best practices in a variety of settings to assist institutions in managing risks of consumer harm when conducting their business. Identifying, addressing, and preventing consumer harm is an important consideration in all examination and enforcement activities, as identified in the following diagram and discussed below.

Examination Scoping Activities

All applicable federal consumer compliance laws and regulations are considered in connection with any bank compliance examination through the risk scoping process. However, the FDIC’s supervisory approach apportions resources to areas of higher risk for consumer harm rather than to uncovering technical issues in meeting regulatory requirements. This approach also results in the identification of the most serious violations of federal consumer compliance laws and regulations during the examination. If financial institutions understand the potential for consumer harm and choose to develop and implement institution-specific plans, policies, and processes to prevent and mitigate consumer harm based on their risk profiles, it may assist institutions in avoiding risk and promoting compliance with the federal consumer protection regulations.

Examiners have several tools available to assist them in identifying risks of consumer harm. Examiners evaluate risks of consumer harm through an analysis of an institution’s historical CMS, the products and services currently offered, the markets served, and existing and new third-party relationships. Examiner judgment is the most critical aspect of properly evaluating an institution’s risk profile. The FDIC’s approach tailors the examination to focus primarily on those areas that present the highest risk of consumer harm, as examiners are unable to review all aspects of an institution’s CMS at any given examination. The pre-examination planning process, which includes review of the pre-exam questionnaire with bank management and preparation of the automated Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR), guides examiners in requesting the information necessary to identify areas of the greatest risk of potential consumer harm.

In scoping examinations, examiners consider the inherent risks associated with product and service offerings or other activities that could directly or indirectly result in consumer harm. Inherent risk refers to the risk that a product, service, practice, or other activity would pose if no controls or other mitigating factors were in place. Examiners also focus on whether a bank is effectively and independently managing or mitigating the risk of consumer harm that comes from the products and services the institution offers and markets in which they serve. After considering an institution’s inherent risks, and the strength of its CMS, residual risk exposure may remain.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm

Residual risk refers to the risk exposure that remains after identifying the level of inherent risk and factoring in the strength of the mitigating factors to control that risk. The guiding principle is a risk scoping formula: inherent risk – mitigating factors = residual risk. For example, a bank introduces a new overdraft program with no due diligence, no monitoring or auditing, and numerous customer inquiries. This example represents a high risk product without effective CMS elements to mitigate inherent risk; therefore, a higher level of residual risk remains, and this product warrants review and transaction testing during an examination. As part of the examination scoping process, examiners focus on areas where residual risk is elevated and not on areas where risk is well-controlled and residual risk of consumer harm is low.

Examination Procedures

Examination procedures are drafted and implemented in a manner to guide examiners in assessing the risk of consumer harm in the conduct of the examination. Well-crafted examination procedures that are focused on risks and potential for consumer harm promote the efficient use of resources, identification of root causes of deficiencies, and allocation of resources to areas presenting the highest risk, while avoiding unnecessary review of areas with little or no risk of consumer harm. As an example, examination procedures regarding overdraft programs differentiate the type and extent of review based on the type of overdraft program offered (e.g., automated versus ad hoc) and further reserves more detailed transaction testing to situations where examiners have identified specific risks or weaknesses.

Consumer Compliance Examination Ratings

The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council’s Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System (CC Rating System), which is a supervisory policy for evaluating financial institutions’ adherence to consumer compliance requirements, includes a section titled Violations of Law and Consumer Harm.\(^2\) The CC Rating System emphasizes the importance of institution’s compliance management systems, with emphasis on compliance risk management practices designed to manage consumer compliance risk, support compliance, and prevent consumer harm. Examiners consider this section as they assess institutions’ compliance with the federal consumer protection laws and regulations.

Report Presentation

The Report of Examination plays an important role in communicating the FDIC’s assessment of the CMS to the institution. The FDIC classifies violations of federal consumer laws based, in part, on the level of risk of consumer harm. In the event violations are identified in the Report of Examination, this classification process serves to communicate to banks the FDIC’s conclusions about the severity, extent, or potential consumer harm caused by the violation. The expectation is that FDIC-supervised institutions will prioritize corrective action and on-going management of their CMS to correct errors and mitigate risks of consumer harm.

Supervisory Actions

Effective supervision includes requiring institutions to take corrective action when weaknesses in the CMS or violations are identified. Appropriate corrective action considers the overall effectiveness of the institution’s CMS, the root cause(s) of the deficiencies as well as the extent and impact of consumer harm. When there is a violation of law or regulation that results in consumer harm, the FDIC will seek corrective action, which may include restitution to consumers as part of an appropriate enforcement action. Civil money penalties (CMPs) may also be assessed to sanction an institution or an institution-affiliated party according to the degree of culpability. Other factors examiners consider include intent and severity of the violation of law or regulation, breach of fiduciary duty, and/or whether a practice is unsafe or unsound. CMPs are also assessed to deter future misconduct.

Communication and Technical Assistance

Communication and technical assistance to supervised institutions is an important component of the FDIC’s supervisory approach in preventing consumer harm by supporting institutions’ efforts to maintain an effective CMS. Communication is especially important during periods of regulatory change and transition. The FDIC communicates through a number of channels, including national and regional bankers’ teleconferences on emerging topics; speaking engagements at national, regional, state, and local conferences and conventions; a web-based regulatory calendar; Supervisory Insights Journal articles; regional newsletters; banker and bank director trainings and online technical assistance videos; meetings with industry trade groups; and issuance of guidance through Financial Institution Letters. Communicating the focus of FDIC examination efforts and supervisory priorities through these diverse channels assists bankers in identifying and reviewing key areas of concern and addressing deficiencies promptly, prior to and unrelated to a specific examination activity. In addition, examiners can provide certain types of technical assistance to community bankers during the course of an examination that may enable an institution to reduce the risk of consumer harm in the operation of its business. These communication and technical assistance efforts provide bankers with tools to address issues that may pose risk of consumer harm.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Compliance Management System

Compliance Management System

Introduction

Financial institutions operate in a dynamic environment influenced by industry consolidation, convergence of financial services, emerging technology, and market globalization. To remain profitable in such an environment, financial institutions continuously assess and modify their product and service offerings and operations in the context of a business strategy. At the same time, new legislation may be enacted to address developments in the marketplace.

All these forces combine to create inherent risk. To address this risk, a financial institution must develop and maintain a sound compliance management system (CMS) that is integrated into the overall risk management strategy of the institution. Ultimately, consumer compliance should be part of the daily routine of management and employees of a financial institution.

This chapter discusses the elements of an effective compliance management system—Board of Directors (Board) and management oversight and the consumer compliance program.

Compliance Management System

A CMS is how an institution:

• learns about its consumer compliance responsibilities;

• ensures that employees understand these responsibilities;

• ensures that requirements are incorporated into business processes;

• reviews operations to ensure responsibilities are carried out and requirements are met; and

• takes corrective action and updates materials as necessary.

An effective CMS is commonly comprised of two interdependent elements:

• Board and management oversight; and

• Consumer compliance program

When both elements are strong and working together, an institution will be successful at managing its consumer compliance responsibilities and risks now and in the future.

Financial institutions are required to comply with federal consumer protection laws and regulations, and are ultimately responsible for such compliance including the use of third-party providers. Noncompliance can result in monetary penalties, litigation, and formal enforcement actions. The responsibility for ensuring that an institution and its third-party providers are in compliance appropriately rests with the Board and management of the institution. Therefore, every FDIC-supervised institution must have an effective CMS adapted to its unique business strategy.

Board and Management Oversight

The Board of a financial institution is ultimately responsible for developing and administering a CMS that ensures compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations. To a large degree, the success of an institution’s CMS is founded on the actions taken by its Board and management. Key actions that Board and management may take to demonstrate their commitment to maintaining an effective CMS and to set a positive climate for compliance include:

• demonstrating clear and unequivocal expectations about consumer compliance, not only within the institution, but also to third-party providers;

• adopting clear policy statements;

• appointing a compliance officer with authority and accountability;

• allocating resources to compliance functions commensurate with the level and complexity of the institution’s operations;

• anticipating and evaluating changes in the institution’s operating environment and implementing responses across impacted lines of business;

• identifying compliance risk in the institution’s products, services, and other activities, and responding to deficiencies and violations;

• conducting periodic compliance audits; and

• providing for recurrent reports by the compliance officer to the Board.

Leadership on consumer compliance by the Board and management sets the tone in an organization. The Board and management should discuss compliance topics during their meetings. They should include compliance matters in their communications to institution personnel and the general public. Institution management and staff should have a clear understanding that compliance is important to the Board and management, and that they are expected to incorporate compliance in their daily operations.

Policy statements on compliance topics provide a framework for the institution’s procedures and provide clear communication to management and employees of the Board’s intentions toward compliance.

Regardless of size or institution complexity, the first step Board and management should take is to provide for the administration of the compliance program is the designation of a compliance officer. In developing the organizational structure of the compliance program, Board and management must grant a compliance officer sufficient authority and independence to:

- cross departmental lines;
- have access to all areas of the institution’s operations; and
- effect corrective action.

A compliance committee, as an alternative to or in addition to a full-time compliance officer, could be formed consisting of the compliance officer, representatives from various departments, and member(s) of management or the Board. However, the ultimate responsibility of overall compliance with all statutes and regulations resides with the Board.

A qualified compliance officer will have knowledge and understanding of all consumer protection laws and regulations that apply to the business operations of the financial institution. The compliance officer should also have general knowledge of the overall operations of the institution and interact with all of the departments and branches to keep abreast of changes (e.g., new products, services or business practices; personnel turnover) that may require action to manage perceived risk. In larger or more complex institutions the compliance officer may devote all of his or her time to compliance activities. In smaller or less complex institutions, where staffing is limited, a full-time compliance officer may not be necessary; instead, the compliance responsibilities may be divided between various individuals by type of regulation, such as loan-related or deposit-related regulations. In some instances, several banks may share a compliance officer.

A compliance officer’s general responsibilities, regardless of the size or complexity of the institution’s operations, include:

- developing compliance policies and procedures;
- training management and employees in consumer protection laws and regulations;
- reviewing policies and procedures for compliance with applicable laws and regulations and the institution’s stated policies and procedures;
- assessing emerging issues or potential liabilities;
- coordinating responses to consumer complaints;
- reporting compliance activities and audit/review findings to the Board; and
- ensuring that corrective actions are implemented in a timely fashion and are effective at preventing recurrence.

When more than one individual is responsible for compliance matters, responsibility and accountability must be clearly defined.

To be effective at overseeing compliance and maintaining a strong compliance posture, a compliance officer must be provided with ongoing training, as well as sufficient time and adequate resources to do the job. The compliance officer may utilize third-party service providers or consultants to help administer the compliance program or audit functions. However, the compliance officer should perform sufficient due diligence to verify that the provider is qualified, because ultimately the institution’s Board and management are responsible for identifying and controlling compliance risks arising from third-party relationships, to the same extent as if the third-party activity was handled within the institution.

If an institution engages the services of a third party, the Board and management must ensure that the third-party operations, products, services, and activities are reviewed for compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations. An effective compliance risk management process will vary depending on the complexity and risk potential of the third-party relationship, but generally includes risk assessment, due diligence in selecting the third-party provider, appropriate contract structuring and review, and sufficient oversight of third-party activities, including adequate quality control over products or services provided.

A sound compliance program is essential to the efficient and successful operation of the institution, much as a business plan. A compliance program includes the following components:

- Policies and procedures
- Training
- Monitoring and/or Audit
- Consumer complaint response

A financial institution should generally establish a formal, written compliance program. In addition to being a planned and organized effort to guide the institution’s compliance activities, a written program represents an essential source document that will serve as a training and reference tool for all employees. A well planned, implemented, and maintained compliance program will prevent or reduce regulatory violations and provide cost efficiencies, and is a sound business step. However, a compliance program is not static. The compliance program must be dynamic and constantly amended on an ongoing basis to focus resources where they are needed most based upon risks to the institution.

It is expected that no two compliance programs will be the same, and that the formality of a program will be dictated by numerous considerations, including:

- institution’s size, number of branches, and organizational structure;
- business strategy of the institution (e.g., community bank versus regional; or retail versus wholesale bank);
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Compliance Management System

- complexity of products and services offered;
- staff experience and training;
- type and extent of third-party relationships;
- location of the institution—its main office and branches; and
- other influences, such as whether the institution is involved in interstate or international banking.

The formality of the consumer compliance program is not as important as its effectiveness. This is especially true for small institutions where the program may not be in writing but an effective monitoring system has been established that ensures overall compliance. However, during periods of expansion or turnover of staff, a written compliance program becomes more important because individuals with the particular knowledge or experience may no longer be with the institution or available for contact.

Regardless of the degree of formality, all financial institutions are expected to manage their compliance programs proactively to ensure continuing compliance. Compliance efforts require an ongoing commitment from all levels of management and should be a part of an institution’s daily business operations.

Consumer compliance policies and procedures generally should be described in a document and reviewed and updated as the financial institution’s business and regulatory environment changes. Policies should be established that include goals and objectives and appropriate procedures for meeting those goals and objectives. Generally, the degree of detail or specificity of procedures will vary in accordance with the complexity of the issue or transactions addressed.

An institution’s policies and procedures should provide personnel with all the information needed to perform a business transaction. This may include applicable regulation cites and definitions, sample forms with instructions, institution policy, and, where appropriate, directions for routing, reviewing, retaining, and destroying transaction documents. For example, loan application procedures should be established so that institution personnel consistently treat all applicants equitably and fairly. These procedures should incorporate and clearly convey to staff the regulatory requirements and the institution’s lending policy, including the institution’s nondiscriminatory lending criteria. Similarly, contracts with third parties should set clear expectations for adherence to relevant laws and regulations, as well as the applicability of regulatory guidance, and management should ensure that sufficient policies and procedures are in place to control the risks associated with a particular third party.

Compliance policies and procedures are the means to ensure consistent operating guidelines that support the institution in complying with applicable federal consumer protection laws and regulations, both directly and through the use of third-party providers. Also, these criteria will provide standards by which compliance officers and line managers may review business operations.

Training

Education of a financial institution’s Board, management, and staff is essential to maintaining an effective compliance program. Line management and staff should receive timely, specific, comprehensive training in laws and regulations, and internal policies and procedures that directly affect their jobs.

The compliance officer should be responsible for compliance training and establish a regular training schedule for Directors, management, and staff, as well as for third-party service providers, where appropriate. Training can be conducted in-house or through external training programs or seminars. Once personnel have been trained on a particular subject, a compliance officer should periodically assess employees on their knowledge and comprehension of the subject matter.

An effective compliance training program is frequently updated with current, complete, and accurate information on products and services and business operations of the institution, consumer protection laws and regulations, internal policies and procedures, and emerging issues in the public domain. For example, loan officers, as well as other front-line personnel regularly interacting with loan applicants, should be fully informed about the loan products and services offered by the institution and thoroughly knowledgeable about all aspects of the applicable consumer credit protection laws and regulations.

Monitoring and/or Audit

Monitoring is a proactive approach by the institution to identify procedural or training weaknesses in an effort to preclude regulatory violations.

An audit is an independent assessment and validation of an institution’s system of internal controls, operations, and compliance risk management framework. It complements the institution’s monitoring system. Audits can be performed internally or by an external entity, as long as the individuals that perform audit activities are independent of the areas being audited.

Every institution should have monitoring and/or audit functions that are appropriate for their size, complexity, and risk profile. Each function plays an important but different role in supporting a strong CMS. It should not be assumed that if an institution has a strong monitoring function in place, risks are appropriately mitigated. For many institutions, it is necessary to have both.

Monitoring:

An effective monitoring system includes regularly scheduled
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Compliance Management System

reviews of:

- disclosures and calculations for various product offerings;
- document filing and retention procedures;
- posted notices, marketing literature, and advertising;
- various state usury and consumer protection laws and regulations;
- third-party service provider operations; and
- internal compliance communication systems that update and revise the applicable laws and regulations to management and staff.

Institutions that include a compliance officer in the planning, development, and implementation of business propositions increase the likelihood of success of its compliance monitoring function.

Changes to regulations or changes in business operations, products, or services should trigger a review of established consumer compliance procedures. Modifications that are necessary should be made expeditiously to minimize compliance risk, and applicable personnel in all affected operating units should be advised of the changes.

Monitoring also includes reviews at the transaction level during the normal, daily activities of employees in every operating unit of the institution. This might include, for example, verification of an annual percentage rate, or a second review of a loan application, before the transaction is completed. Monitoring at this level helps establish management and staff accountability and identifies potential problems in a timely manner.

Compliance officers should monitor employee performance to ensure that they are following established internal consumer compliance policies and procedures. The frequency and volume of employee turnover at an institution should be factored into the schedule for reviews. Such reviews are especially critical after problems have been noted during past audits or examinations, regulation changes, new products are introduced, mergers occur, or when additional branch locations are opened.

Audit:

The Board of the institution should determine the scope of an audit and the frequency with which audits are conducted. The scope and frequency of an audit should consider such factors as:

- expertise and experience of various institution personnel;
- organization and staffing of the compliance function;
- volume of transactions;
- complexity of products offered;
- number and type of consumer complaints received;
- number and type of branches;
- acquisition or opening of additional branch(es);
- size of the institution;
- organizational structure of the institution;
- outsourcing of functions to third-party service providers, including a review of agreements signed or made between the institution and vendors;
- degree to which policies and procedures are defined and detailed in writing; and
- magnitude/frequency of changes to any of the above.

An audit may be conducted once a year, or may be ongoing where all products and services, all applicable operations, and all departments and branches are addressed on a staggered basis. An audit may be performed “in-house” or may be contracted to an outside firm or individual, such as a consultant or accountant. A financial institution that outsources the audit should make certain that the auditor is well-versed in consumer compliance, and that the audit program is based on current law and regulation, as well as comprehensive in scope. Generally, a strong consumer compliance audit will incorporate vigorous transaction testing.

Regardless of whether audits are conducted by institution personnel or by a contractor, the audit findings should be reported directly to the Board or a committee of the Board. A written consumer compliance audit report should include:

- scope of the audit (including departments, branches, product types and third-party relationships reviewed);
- deficiencies or modifications identified;
- number of transactions sampled by category of product type; and
- descriptions of, or suggestions for, corrective actions and time frames for correction.

Board and management response to the audit report should be prompt. The compliance officer should receive a copy of all consumer compliance audit reports and act to address noted deficiencies and required changes to ensure full compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations. Management should also establish follow-up procedures to verify, at a later date, that the corrective actions were lasting and effective.

Consumer Complaint Response

An institution should be prepared to handle consumer complaints promptly. Procedures should be established for addressing complaints, and individuals or departments responsible for handling them should be designated and known to all institution personnel to expedite responses.

Examiners should also discuss with management how complaints are identified and defined, as consumer inquiries may also highlight areas with increased risk of consumer harm and/or regulatory compliance concerns.

Complaints may be indicative of a compliance weakness in a particular function or department. Therefore, a compliance officer should be aware of the complaints received and act to ensure a timely resolution. A compliance officer should determine the cause of the complaint and take action to improve the institution’s business practices, as appropriate.

An institution should also monitor complaints to and/or about third parties that are providing services on behalf of the institution.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

Pre-Examination Planning

Introduction

The objective of the pre-examination planning process is to collect necessary information to understand the institution and the risks of consumer harm prior to the on-site phase of the examination. This information allows the Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) and the examination team to plan and conduct the off-site and on-site phases of the examination, to develop the scope of the examination, and to accomplish supervisory objectives in an efficient and effective manner.

This chapter discusses the three phases of the pre-examination planning process and usage of the Pre-Examination Planning System (PEP System), which is a web-based automated system used to generate the various pre-examination planning documents. The pre-examination planning process involves the following three phases:

1. Information Package (IP)
2. Pre-Examination Planning Phase 1 (PEP-1)
3. Pre-Examination Planning Phase 2 (PEP-2)

Information Package (IP)

The examination planning process begins with sending the IP to the institution’s management. The IP is designed to increase banker awareness of the examination process prior to the examination; promote open communications with examination staff; and ensure that the institution’s management team knows what to expect during the examination and where to go in the event their expectations are not met. The IP module in the PEP System is used to produce the IP package.

The IP consists of a standardized introductory letter that provides an overview of the examination process; discusses various resources available to help the institution understand the examination process; identifies the appropriate communication channels for any concerns about the examination process or the resultant ratings; and provides contact information for the Field Supervisor (FS) and/or the Supervisory Examiner (SE). In addition, the IP includes informational brochures and a sample list of interview questions for the institution’s management team to review prior to the EIC’s pre-examination interview.

The IP is to be mailed by the FS or SE to all institutions no less than 75 calendar days prior to the scheduled on-site date of the examination. The IP letter has been standardized and automated within the PEP System and should be consistently used by all field offices without changes. A sample IP letter is included in this Manual (see Section III).

Data Validations: For the largest Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) reporters (over 500 LAR lines) and/or Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) reporters, validation testing should be conducted in advance of scheduled fair lending and CRA examinations. This approach will allow the institution to resolve any data errors so the examination can proceed without significant delay. In addition, validation testing must be conducted for HMDA Outlier reviews prior to the start of the on-site review. For examinations of all other reporters, the validation testing will generally be conducted during the on-site review. However, a Field Office has the option to perform a data validation for other institutions before the on-site review if the Field Office has sufficient resources to complete the validation prior to the on-site examination date. The HMDA validations should be conducted following the FDIC HMDA validation procedures, considering the scale and complexity of the institution’s mortgage lending activities and an overall assessment of the institution’s prior practices and compliance risk profile.

A HMDA/CRA Validation Letter is to be provided to institutions when data validations occur prior to any examination. A data validation letter has been standardized and included in the IP module of the PEP System and should be used consistently. This letter is either sent with or after the IP to allow sufficient time for the data validation process.

Pre-Examination Planning Phase 1 (PEP-1)

The risk assessment of the institution begins during PEP-1. Every bank has inherent risk based on strategic plans, products, past supervisory actions, business activity, and other factors. PEP-1 starts the process of identifying and documenting risk based on the institution’s structure, supervisory history, and the operational areas. The various activities performed during PEP-1 are meant to promote critical thinking about the possible inherent risks in the institution being examined.

PEP-1 consists of the following activities:

A. Gathering information about the institution from both internal and external sources;
B. Contacting the institution to conduct the pre-examination interview (PEP interview);
C. Preparing and sending the Entry Letter to the institution along with the Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR) that primarily requests CMS-related information and documents; and
D. Completing Section 1 of the ARCH, “Identification of Inherent Risk”, to the extent possible.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

PEP-1 should begin no less than 45 calendar days prior to the scheduled on-site date of the examination. However, institutions must have at least 30 days to complete the CIDR and upload requested documents to FDICconnect. Longer time periods may be necessary based on the institution’s size, resources, and complexity. The EIC should communicate with the institution’s management during the PEP interview to determine a sufficient amount of time to provide the requested materials. This timeframe is also discussed in the Entry Letter.

A. Gathering Available Information

Examiners should first concentrate on gathering as much of the information as possible from FDIC records and databases and from publicly available sources before obtaining information from the financial institution. The following is a list of some key documents and information that the EIC should obtain for review because of their relevance to the financial institution’s compliance posture.

FDIC Records and Databases

- Data Gathering Tool, which compiles institution, examination, supervisory, and financial information from multiple FDIC systems and databases
- Prior ARCH and other information from the System of Uniform Reporting of Compliance and CRA Examinations (SOURCE) or Regional Automated Document Distribution (RADD)
- Previous Reports of Examination (ROE) and supporting workpapers for compliance, risk management, trust, and information systems
- Prior corrective actions (such as restitution) and responses to ROE
- Risk management supervisory plan (for complex institutions, or others, as available)
- CRA Performance Evaluations and community demographic data
- Uniform Bank Performance Reports (UBPR) and Call Reports
- FDIC monitoring reports
- Complaint and correspondence files
- Applications in process

External Sources

- Previous years’ HMDA and CRA data disclosure reports
- Content of the financial institution’s website
- Public records, such as securities filings
- Newspaper or website articles that raise examination-related issues
- Community contacts (for CRA evaluations)

B. PEP Interview

The EIC will contact the institution and arrange a PEP interview to be conducted either by telephone or through an in-person discussion. The PEP interview questions are maintained in the C-PREP module of the PEP System and updated on an ongoing basis. The interview questions are also provided to the institution with the IP discussed previously.

The purpose of the interview is to gather current information to understand the institution’s risk profile, size, complexity, and the types of products offered. The interview responses are input to the C-PREP module to ensure that the CIDR is tailored to request only what is necessary to conduct the examination. The EIC should also use the interview as an opportunity to answer the institution’s questions about the examination process and to discuss the timing and logistics of the on-site examination. Additionally, the EIC should determine the applicability of the FDIC’s e-Exam Policy and should discuss and address electronic document/data access requirements and delivery method(s) with the institution’s management. It also provides an opportunity to identify the institution’s staff members who will need to be available to the examination team during the on-site portion of the examination. This will allow the institution to take steps to ensure, to the extent possible, that those persons are available when needed.

Director Involvement: During the PEP interview, the EIC should also inform management that the institution’s board members are welcome to participate in regularly scheduled meetings with examiners or to schedule individual meetings with the EIC, if desired. The EIC should emphasize that such participation is purely voluntary and that a lack of participation will not be viewed negatively. As stated in the memorandum announcing this initiative, “The primary objectives are to improve communication with outside Directors, increase director knowledge of the examination process, provide an opportunity for Directors to discuss their views with examiners on banking related matters, and give examiners the opportunity to gain further insight into the experience levels and leadership qualities of bank management.”

C. CIDR and Entry Letter

The C-PREP module in the PEP System is used to produce the Entry Letter and Electronic Data Download Instructions and the CIDR. These documents must be tailored, as appropriate, for each institution.

After conducting the information gathering and PEP interview outlined above, the EIC (or a designee with whom he or she communicates closely) is required to use C-PREP to customize and create the CIDR based on an institution’s risk profile, size, complexity, and type of products offered. C-PREP filters the CIDR to make available certain items based on the institution’s responses to the PEP interview questions. Time periods should be specified when seeking periodic reports, administrative changes, etc., to avoid receiving data not relevant to the examination. Additional information about how to use C-PREP can be obtained from the user guide available within the PEP System.

The CIDR developed during PEP-1 primarily requests CMS-related information and documents. As discussed later in this chapter, the majority of transaction-level documentation will be requested during PEP-2 after completion of the ARCH. The initial request will provide the EIC with enough information to properly scope the examination and to identify products, services, and markets (PSMs) that exhibit inherent risk not sufficiently mitigated by the institution’s CMS (i.e., residual risks). These residual risks will be the basis for requesting transactional testing related documentation (i.e., disclosures, loan files, etc.) during PEP-2.

The Entry Letter may be provided to the institution in either hard copy or electronic format. The letter instructs the institution on how to deliver the materials to the EIC or examination team and in what format. As previously discussed, the timing of the request and the turnaround must ensure that the institution has sufficient time to assemble the requested information and the examination team has sufficient time to adequately review the materials. Where appropriate and with supervisor approval, the EIC may visit the institution prior to the formal on-site date to either pick up the documents or review on-site any documents that are too bulky to duplicate or that are confidential. FDICconnect may be used for secure requests and transmission of electronic examination files and is the preferred method for transmitting examination information.

The ARCH is used to document the scope of the examination and assists with prioritization of efforts, time, and resources toward those PSMs with the highest residual risk of consumer harm. The EIC will complete the ARCH prior to the on-site examination using available information gathered. Additional information about preparing the ARCH is included in this Manual (see Section II – Review and Analysis). A sample ARCH template is included in this Manual (see Section III). Information about how to use the ARCH module can be obtained from the user guide available within the PEP System.

ARCH Section 1 starts the process of identifying and documenting inherent risk during PEP-1 based on the institution’s structure, supervisory history, and operational areas. In an effort to make the PEP process more efficient, Section 1 of the ARCH has been coordinated with and linked to the PEP interview. Several responses for Section 1 of the ARCH will pre-populate based on what is entered into the C-PREP module of the PEP System from the PEP interview. In other words, completing the PEP interview in the C-PREP module should result in completing portions of Section 1 of the ARCH, to the extent possible. However, examiners should review the pre-populated questions and answers to ensure they are correctly completed.

During PEP-2, examiners will conduct an initial assessment of the institution’s CMS, which may or may not mitigate the inherent risks identified during PEP-1. Examiners will analyze how effective the CMS is in identifying, addressing, and mitigating the potential for consumer harm. This information will primarily be obtained from the institution’s responses to the pre-examination interview and the CIDR. The areas that indicate a moderate or high level of potential consumer harm risk not mitigated by the strength of the CMS will potentially require further evaluation during the on-site examination. In PEP-2, examiners will finalize the examination scope and establish specific areas for on-site review or transaction testing.

PEP-2 consists of the following activities:

A. Reviewing the CIDR responses and requested items;
B. Completing the ARCH;
C. Requesting additional documents for PSM transactional testing; and D. Getting the ARCH approved.

Supervisors will ensure sufficient time is scheduled prior to the on-site date of the examination for PEP-2. The amount of time needed to complete PEP-2 will vary based on the size and complexity of the institution. Each Field Office will establish procedures to ensure that PEP-2 starts early enough to provide sufficient time for the institution for gathering additional documents for transaction testing.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

A. Review CIDR Responses and Requested Items

The EIC and examination team will review the information and documents provided by the institution in response to the CIDR. If documents necessary to complete the ARCH, such as Board minutes or monitoring/audit reports, are not provided in response to the CIDR, the EIC may go on-site during PEP-2 to review this information as time, resources, and travel requirements permit. Follow-up contact with the institution’s personnel during PEP-2 is encouraged to properly answer any questions and to determine the most appropriate examination scope.

B. ARCH Completion

Based on the information provided by the institution, the EIC will complete the ARCH. This will involve finalizing Section 1 of the ARCH, as necessary, but will primarily involve completing: Section 2, “Initial Assessment of CMS/Internal Controls”; “Decision Point”; and Section 3, “Scope of Examination”. The EIC will identify the PSMs warranting transactional testing and any additional documentation needed for the on-site examination. Additional information about completing the ARCH is included in this Manual (see Section II – Review and Analysis).

C. Transaction Testing (TT) Request

The EIC will prepare and send a TT Request to the institution based on the scope of the examination. If the scope is changed to add a PSM subsequent to sending the TT Request, the examiner has the option to request necessary documents for the additional PSM(s) once on-site instead of sending another TT Request. If, however, a PSM is deleted, the EIC should discuss why the area will not be reviewed in the entrance meeting.

Documents requested during PEP-2 will largely be transaction-level documentation such as loan files, account disclosures, system parameters, etc. that will assist with further evaluating the effectiveness of the institution’s CMS or performing CRA, HMDA, or Fair Lending reviews, as applicable. The documents requested should be consistent with the approved scope of the examination. These items will generally be held at the institution for the on-site portion of the examination, unless alternative arrangements, such as the usage of FDICconnect, are agreed to by the institution and the EIC.

In order to facilitate preparation of this TT Request, the C-PREP module of the PEP System will allow examiners to develop the separate TT Request list. The TT Request should specify the review time periods when seeking loan and/or deposit records, periodic statements, disclosures, etc., to avoid receiving data not relevant to the examination.

The EIC will provide the TT Request through FDICconnect or secure e-mail to the institution’s designated contact. Based on the size, complexity, and resources of the institution, examiner judgment should be exercised regarding the approximate number of days the institution needs to gather the requested documents. Additionally, it is important that examiners communicate to the institution which documents are needed at the start of the examination. This communication will help prioritize the TT Request and allow the institution additional time to gather lower priority documents during the examination.

D. ARCH Approval

The EIC will finalize the ARCH using information obtained during PEP-2 to determine residual consumer harm risk and to establish the scope of the compliance examination. The completed ARCH will be submitted to the supervisor for approval. Each Field Office will establish procedures to ensure that the ARCH is approved by the FS or SE prior to the examination start date.

PEP Record Retention

To ensure consistency in record retention, PEP documents should be maintained as follows:

- The IP letter should be stored in the correspondence folder in RADD;
- PEP interview questions and answers should be completed within C-PREP and maintained as an examination workpaper in RADD;
- The completed CIDR should be retained as an examination workpaper in RADD;
- The approved ARCH should be stored as an examination document in SOURCE; and
- The TT Request list should be retained as an examination workpaper in RADD.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

Review and Analysis

Introduction

The FDIC’s compliance examination process assesses how well a financial institution manages compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations. The review and analysis phase of the compliance examination starts with a top-down, comprehensive evaluation of the compliance management system (CMS) used by the financial institution to identify, monitor, and manage its compliance responsibilities and risks. The procedures outlined below guide the examiner through an assessment of an institution’s CMS, and assist the examiner in identifying specific areas of weakness for further analysis. Many procedures listed in this section can be performed at the field office or other location prior to the on-site portion of the examination, if materials are available.

Off-Site Review and Analysis

The Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) reviews and analyzes the material gathered from FDIC, third parties, and the institution in response to the Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR) in order to develop the scope memorandum and plan the on-site portion of the examination. This review and analysis should be broad enough to obtain an understanding of the organizational structure of the institution, its related activities, and compliance risks associated with each of its activities.

The review should be used to preliminarily determine whether the institution’s Board and management identify, understand, and adequately control the elements of risks facing the financial institution. In general, management and Directors are expected to have a clearly defined system of risk management controls governing the institution’s compliance operations, including those activities conducted by affiliates and third party vendors. During this review the EIC should consider what types of questions should be asked while on-site to test whether the bank’s written policies and procedures accurately reflect actual operations.

Risk Scope Memorandum

The goal of a risk-focused, process-oriented examination is to direct resources toward areas with higher degrees of risk of consumer harm. To accomplish this goal, the examiner must assess the financial institution’s CMS as it applies to key operational areas, and evaluate the risk of non-compliance with applicable laws and regulations. This process is documented by the examiner in a scoping memorandum, the Assessment of Risk of Consumer Harm (ARCH) that is reviewed and approved by the supervisor. The ARCH is developed during the pre-examination planning process and utilizes historical data, information obtained from the interview with the bank, and documents and information submitted by the bank. The ARCH describes the focus of the examination, including issues to be investigated and the products, services, or markets that exhibit inherent risk not sufficiently mitigated by the institution’s CMS. The identified areas with residual risk will be further reviewed or transaction tested during the on-site portion of the examination.

During the examination the EIC should obtain approval for any material changes to the scope of the examination, in accordance with regional or field office requirements.

The final ARCH should be posted to SOURCE, making it available to all staff and management during the exam review and for future internal use, especially for the start of the subsequent examination.

A sample ARCH template is included in this Manual (see Section III).

Developing a Risk Profile

Every bank has inherent risk based on strategic plans, products, past supervisory actions, business activity, and other factors. The ARCH will document the identified areas of inherent risk by considering the following:

Bank Structure:
- Significant Factors or Changes
- Mergers or Acquisitions
- Significant Growth since Prior Examination
- De Novo Status

Supervisory History:
- Current & Past Enforcement Actions
- Reimbursement History
- History of Compliance with fair lending Laws and Regulations.
- Current and Prior Regulator Ratings and Recommendations
- Consumer-Related Litigation
- Consumer Complaints

Operational Areas - Regulation Risk:
- Applicable Regulations
- New Regulations
- Changes to Regulations
- Recent Case Law

Operational Areas - Product/Service/Market (PSM) Risk:
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- Major Product Line
- New Products/Services/Markets
- Growth in Operations
- Complexity of Operations
- Third Party Affiliations

Supervisory History: The financial institution’s past compliance performance is an important consideration when developing its risk profile. Historic effectiveness of the CMS, including the results of previous examinations and management’s record of taking corrective measures, will impact its risk profile and ultimately, the scope of the examination. The most recent compliance history should be given the most weight. The EIC will be able to locate performance risk information in various areas, including the FDIC’s correspondence and enforcement records for the subject institution. The most recent Risk Management report and workpapers may contain additional information on the bank’s performance risk (e.g., comments regarding institution management).

Operational Areas is a critical consideration in the identification of inherent risk. Regulation or Product/Service/Market risks can exist in the following operational areas:

- Lending
- Deposits
- Non-Deposit Products
- Third Party Relationships
- Other Products or Issues
- UDAP

Regulation Risk: Regulation risk measures the possible consequences to the bank and its customers of noncompliance with specific regulatory provisions. Regulation risk recognizes that the impact of noncompliance differs depending on the consumer law or regulation. For the public, it is the measurement of relative adverse financial impact or other harm that noncompliance may produce. For the bank, regulation risk is the measurement of legal, reputation, and financial harm that noncompliance may produce. For example, the financial harm both to the bank and to consumers associated with violations of the Truth in Lending Act (Regulation Z) requiring reimbursements far exceeds the consequences of an isolated undocumented check hold. The level of regulation risk is affected by such factors as:

- Potential financial and/or reputation harm to consumers;
- Potential legal, reputation, and financial harm to a bank;
- New laws, regulations or amendments thereof; and
- The amount of transaction activity subject to a specific regulation.

Product/Service/Market (PSM) Risk: The institution’s products, services, and markets impact the bank’s risk depending upon the financial institution’s size, market share, and portfolio concentration. The complexity of products offered and the associated likelihood of error should be considered. Third party affiliations can present heightened risk, particularly for product delivery, but also for any operation, product, service, or activity provided or conducted by a third party on behalf of the institution. Finally, the institution’s strategic plan for growth and for the introduction of new products, services, or markets should also be taken into account.

In order to properly assess a financial institution’s risk, the EIC or designee also reviews the following aspects of the CMS, which may or may not mitigate the identified inherent risks:

- Board and management Oversight
- Compliance Program
  o Policies and Procedures o Training
  o Monitoring and/or Audit Procedures
  o Complaint Response

Taking into consideration the conclusions drawn in each of the preceding components, and any other pertinent information, the examiner should identify and assess the inherent risk within the institution’s PSMs. When the institution’s inherent risk is not sufficiently mitigated by its CMS, residual risk is present. To develop a risk profile of the institution and set the examination scope, the examiner should keep the risk scoping formula in mind (Inherent Risk – Mitigating Factors = Residual Risk). The areas with residual risk should be further reviewed or transaction tested during the on-site examination. The result of the EIC’s assessment of risk and the specific issues to be investigated and areas to be targeted with transaction testing should be addressed in the ARCH, which is discussed in the next Section.

It is important to remember that one element of a financial institution’s compliance efforts may influence another area. Be aware of relationships and their mutual impact. For example, if the initial review of bank practices identifies a lack of audit of loan denials, the examiner should look to see whether monitoring procedures are in place to mitigate the impact of the lack of audit procedures. The existence of monitoring procedures may lead the examiner to determine that the absence of an audit does not raise the institution’s risk profile. Conversely, if the initial review of bank policies and procedures identifies well-organized written guidelines for deposit compliance management, the examiner should also consider the bank’s record of oversight in this area. If deposit compliance has historically suffered from poor management oversight, then the existence of written procedures should be given less weight when determining the risk profile. It is important to accurately identify inherent risk and weight any mitigating factors that reduce the risk. This process requires the use of sound examiner judgment.

Developing a Scope Memorandum

The EIC should start the Scope Memorandum, the ARCH, using the information gathered prior to conducting the pre-examination interview. The EIC uses information such as prior compliance and risk management reports of examination, correspondence, and available complaint information to prepare for initial contact with the institution, and may complete some parts of the ARCH during this time. Once the information is received during pre-examination planning, the remainder of the ARCH should be completed. Follow-up contact with bank personnel is encouraged, if warranted to properly determine the most appropriate examination scope.

Examiner judgment is a critical aspect of properly evaluating an institution’s risk profile. The ARCH allows examiners to use their judgment to focus and prioritize resources on areas (products, services, or markets) that present the highest risk of consumer harm. A series of questions guides examiners through the analysis of documenting inherent risk, mitigating factors, and the residual risk of consumer harm. ARCH is divided into four sections and has a midpoint decision summary. The ARCH requires summaries within each section to document elements that present higher risk of consumer harm.

The questions in the ARCH do not cover every potential risk but rather set out a basic framework to assist examiners in assessing and documenting an institution’s risk of consumer harm. Examiners are not limited to these questions and should consider all relevant facts when evaluating the bank’s risk profile.

The ARCH must be in writing and should address the following:

- Scope of the examination;
- Issues to be investigated or areas to be targeted, and reasons why; and
- Areas not included in the examination scope; and
- reasons why.

The severity of CMS weakness and consumer harm risk will dictate the intensity of transaction testing, as examination resources are focused in areas where residual risk is identified, either prior to or during the examination. If limited risk is identified or if the bank has mitigated the identified risk, then no transaction testing would be required.

On-Site Review and Analysis

Throughout the on-site review and analysis phase of the examination, the examiner should have discussions with management, the compliance officer, Directors, and other personnel to develop an understanding of how management approaches its compliance responsibilities. These discussions will enable the examiner to determine whether and to what extent the financial institution has a CMS that is integrated into its daily operations.

Entrance Meeting With Senior Management

During the pre-examination planning stage, the EIC should schedule a meeting with senior management (e.g., the president, chief executive officer, compliance officer, and if they wish, members of the Board of Directors). This meeting should take place as soon as possible after entering the financial institution to conduct the on-site portion of the examination and should facilitate the discussion of various administrative items and the scope of the examination.

Matters to be discussed during the entrance meeting include:

- An overview of the examination process, including the use of information collected during the pre-examination and its impact on the scope of the examination.
- The names of FDIC examiners involved.
- Anticipated length of the examination.
- The EIC’s accessibility throughout the on-site examination to discuss any issues relating to the examination or FDIC policy and practices.
- The identity of the individual(s) who is/are the primary contact person(s) for examination related issues.
- Any issues identified during off-site review and analysis, particularly areas of significant risk of consumer harm that will be receiving close attention.
- The materials requested during PEP that were not provided by the financial institution prior to the on-site date.
- An explanation of the closing management meeting procedures.
- The date of the next Board of Directors/trustees meeting. (Management should be advised that depending upon the examination findings, the FDIC may need to attend the regularly scheduled meeting or call for a special Board meeting.)
- Any issues related to the CRA evaluation and fair lending review.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

Examiners should use a written agenda to document the issues covered at the entrance meeting, and file a copy in the examination workpapers.

Ongoing Communication

Communication between financial institution management, Boards of Directors, bank staff, and FDIC examination staff is a major component of an effective examination or visitation. Open communication should be maintained with management during the course of the examination. To the extent possible, all issues of concern should be discussed with management as they arise. This allows management time to provide additional relevant information, or to begin correcting problems where appropriate.

The financial institution’s directors/trustees are encouraged to participate in regularly scheduled meetings with examiners. However, examination findings should be discussed with management prior to discussing with Board members. Also, the EIC should notify the financial institution’s management as early as possible of any plans to meet with the Board to present examination findings. This will provide directors/trustees with an opportunity to forego meetings during the examination, if that is their preference.

Based on information gleaned from the discussions with bank management and staff, along with the off-site review and analysis, the examiner should:

- Determine the quality of the institution’s CMS, including the degree to which management has taken a proactive approach to compliance and whether management can demonstrate its ability to assure compliance with federal consumer laws and regulations.

- Assess whether the CMS is effective at facilitating compliance.

- Identify potential deficiencies in the CMS and areas of greatest risk of consumer harm.

- Determine where transaction testing is necessary.

The following sections include question lists that are intended to serve only as general guidance for the matters to be addressed during the examiner’s dialogue with bank personnel. The sections are organized by elements of the CMS, and should be considered in conjunction with each of the different operational areas of the bank to come to a conclusion about the strength of each element overall. The questions will not apply to every examination scenario and should be customized to each situation. Examiner judgment must be used to determine whether additional pertinent questions should be asked. Because all the facets of a CMS are interrelated, certain themes will be repeated in the question lists for multiple sections. Throughout the examination process, the examiner should refer to the FDIC Law, Regulations and Related Acts, and any pertinent outstanding FDIC guidance regarding the regulatory or policy requirements of each area under review.

NOTE: The Examination Checklists/Workpapers are not to be given to institution management to complete.

Applicable Statutes and Regulations

The CMS must adequately address (through oversight, policies and procedures, training, monitoring and/or audit, and complaint response) all areas related to the following federal consumer laws, regulations, rules, and policy statements:

Lending
- Truth in Lending
- Real Estate Settlement Procedures
- Homeowners Protection
- Equal Credit Opportunity
- Fair Housing
- Home Mortgage Disclosure
- Flood Insurance
- Preservation of Consumers’ Claims and Defenses
- Homeownership Counseling
- Servicemembers Civil Relief
- Consumer Leasing
- Military Lending Act
- Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing

Deposits
- Truth in Savings
- Electronic Fund Transfers
- Expedited Funds Availability
- Part 360 – Resolution and Receivership Rules

Non-Deposit Products
- Investment Sales/Recordkeeping
- Broker/Dealer Rules and Exemptions (Regulation R)
- Consumer Protection in Sales of Insurance

Other Products or Issues

Evaluating Management Oversight

Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

• The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to management oversight;

• Prior Reports of Examination, including Compliance, Risk Management, and specialty examinations (with a focus on the management component of each);

• Minutes of the meetings of the Board, compliance committee, discount committee, etc.;

• New, modified or amended compliance-related policies, procedures, and other internal memoranda;

• All files related to the receipt and resolution of compliance-related consumer complaints archived by the institution or the FDIC, including information from the FDIC’s automated complaint tracking system managed by the FDIC’s Consumer Response Center;

• Written management and Board response and follow-up to internal monitoring and audit and external audits, if applicable;

• Agreements with third parties to provide products or services such as with an outside vendor to provide compliance services and educational materials, or with a networking broker/dealer to provide brokerage services;

• Institution organizational chart and management résumés; and

• Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, managers, etc.

Procedures

1. Review Board and committee meeting minutes. Review of these documents should give the examiner an indication of the following:

• Extent of Board oversight/involvement in assuring compliance with consumer protection and fair lending laws and regulations by the institution and, as applicable, by third party providers.

• Training of Directors and management regarding compliance and fair lending issues.

• Rationale for implementing new policies or procedures or modifying existing ones.

• Any negative comments on rejected loan applications during loan committee or any other meeting (such records must be traced to the specific loan file to assure that no unlawful disparate treatment or discrimination was involved in the denial).

• Consideration of new loan or deposit products and strategies for their implementation.

• Consideration of new software or software vendors.

• Consideration of third parties for compliance audit, if applicable.

• Approval of, and rationale for, branch openings and closings.

• Whether the Board documented a review of the prior Report that included, as applicable: a discussion of recommendations for policy changes, an adoption of those revisions, and a report regarding corrective action and subsequent testing for identified violations

2. Based on the material reviewed during PEP and on-site, and based on discussions with management, answer the following questions:

• What is the bank’s business strategy and what are the compliance implications of that strategy (for example, elevated risk due to rapidly growing subprime lending, cutting-edge e-banking activities, etc.)?
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

Examiners are to determine whether the institution’s policies and procedures are appropriate to the risk in the products, services, and markets of the institution. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to policies and procedures, including the institution’s business strategy, product offering, branches, third party relationships, etc.;
- Compliance-related policies and other written compliance procedures;
- Board minutes, compliance committee minutes, and other committee minutes, as applicable; and
- Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, senior managers, etc.

Policies and procedures, whether written or unwritten, should cover all of the areas listed below. A financial institution may have other policies or procedures related to compliance not listed here that should be included in the examiner’s review, depending on the institution’s activities and risk profile.

- Compliance Policy – This may be a single document or a compilation of various documents each relating to specific areas of institution activity. In addition to specific guidance on daily compliance activities, the policy should provide for an adequate level of responsibility and authority for the compliance officer, compliance committee, and individual employees.
- Lending – Often, institutions will have separate policies for various lending types such as consumer, real estate, commercial, agricultural, etc. All should be reviewed during PEP.
- Deposits – Institutions often have separate policies for Regulation DD, Regulation E, Regulation CC, and Part 329.
- Electronic Banking – The adequacy of e-banking policies should be assessed in light of the level of activity in which the institution is engaged.
- Privacy – Institution privacy policies and procedures vary widely, depending on the level of information sharing involved.
- Non-Deposit Products – Policies and procedures must provide adequate guidance for the sale of investment and insurance products by bank employees (including loan officers who sell insurance during the loan process), dual employees, and on-site non-employee brokers.
- Branch Closing Policy – Section 42 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act requires every financial institution that has one or more branch locations to maintain a branch closing
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

Policy.

- Truth in Lending Policy – Applicable to institutions as defined under section 1503(3) of the SAFE Act, 12 U.S.C. 5102(3). These may be incorporated into the loan policy or as stand-alone policies. For these institutions, written policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository institution and its subsidiaries. They specifically must address lender compensation, prohibition on steering, and the requirements under the SAFE Act.

- Fair Credit Reporting Act – Policies and procedures must provide adequate guidance for the adequate reporting of consumer information, complaint resolution of consumer information, and safeguarding of consumer information.

- Overdraft Programs – Institutions providing overdraft programs should adopt written policies and procedures adequate to address the credit, operational, and other risks associated with these types of programs.

In order to ensure an accurate assessment of the institution’s CMS, each policy and procedure must be reviewed during PEP or at the institution unless all the following are true:

1) the policy was reviewed at the prior FDIC compliance examination;
2) the review of the policy at the prior examination found no deficiencies;
3) no changes or amendments have been made since the policy was last reviewed; and
4) there have been no significant regulatory or operational changes pertinent to the area covered by the policy since the prior examination.

1. Conduct sufficient documentation reviews and management discussions to answer the following questions.

- What areas of compliance do written policies or procedures cover?
- Which policies or procedures are unwritten?
- Is the use of unwritten policies/procedures adequate for the institution’s needs?
- Do the policies give effective guidance to institution employees?
- Are policies and procedures structured and implemented in such a way as to ensure fair and equitable treatment of all consumers?
- Do the policies assign compliance responsibility? Are the assignments logical and reasonable given the time and resources available to those employees?
- Do the policies provide appropriate authority to employees responsible for identifying and correcting deficiencies?
- Are the policies and procedures established in such a way as to ensure a smooth transition in the case of key personnel turnover?
- Are policies, procedures, and standardized forms periodically reviewed and updated in response to regulatory changes and changes in the institutions risk profile? How frequent are the reviews?
- Does the Board review and approve all changes to policies and procedures? If not, is the level of approval appropriate given the examiner-determined institution risk profile?
- Are there any practices that have become policy by virtue of the frequency of their occurrence? If so, do these practices conflict with formal policies or procedures?

NOTE: Additional guidance for the review of loan and appraisal policies is located in the Fair Lending Examination Procedures.

2. Determine whether the institution’s policies and procedures provide the appropriate level of guidance for all employees and include clearly defined goals and objectives.

3. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution’s performance related to this area. Are policies and procedures considered generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Training

Examiners will determine whether compliance training is current and tailored to risk of the institution and staff responsibilities. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to training;
- Compliance-related training documentation;
- Examiner notes from discussions with compliance officer, managers, etc.

1. Review the institution’s training records and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:

- Does every employee receive appropriate training given his or her compliance responsibilities?
- Do third party service providers receive appropriate training?
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- How often is training conducted? Is the frequency of training acceptable?
- Is the training program continuously updated to incorporate accurate, complete information on new products and services, regulatory changes, emerging issues, etc.?
- Is the effectiveness of the training evaluated by management through delayed testing, before-and-after work product reviews, or other means?
- Regardless of whether staff training is conducted primarily in-house or is out-sourced, does management evaluate whether the institution’s training needs are being met? As EIC, do you agree or disagree with management’s conclusions?
- How are errors that are identified during the monitoring process documented?
- How are the errors corrected?
- Is there appropriate follow-up when errors are identified (i.e. refresher training, disciplinary action)?

2. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution’s performance related to this area. Is the institution’s training considered generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Monitoring

Examiners should determine the sufficiency of the monitoring and, if applicable, audit to encompass compliance risks throughout the institution. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to monitoring;
- Compliance-related policies and other written compliance procedures;
- Documentation of the results of monitoring activities;
- Formal and/or informal reports to management of the findings, corrective actions, and related follow-up from monitoring procedures; and
- Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, manager, etc.

1. Conduct documentation review and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:

- What monitoring systems are in place for loan transactions? Deposit transactions? Investment and insurance sales activities?
- Is every transaction subject to monitoring? If not, what is the level of transactional review? Is the level of monitoring adequate?
- Does monitoring include a review of the performance by third party product or service providers?
- Are the appropriate personnel conducting the monitoring (i.e. someone with daily involvement in the monitored area and who has received adequate training)?

2. Determine whether the institution’s monitoring efforts encompass all applicable regulations.

3. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution’s performance related to this area. Is the institution’s monitoring effort generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Evaluating the Audit Function:

Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to the audit function.
- Audit policy, external audit agreement, or other written audit guidelines;
- Compliance-related internal and external audit reports, responses, and follow-up;
- Internal and external audit workpapers;
- Institution organizational chart;
- BOD minutes, compliance committee minutes, and other committee minutes, as applicable; and
- Examiner notes from discussions with audit staff, compliance officer, managers, etc.

Consumer Complaint Response

Examiners are to determine the responsiveness and effectiveness of the consumer complaint resolution process. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to consumer complaints;
- Consumer complaint policy or other written compliance procedures regarding complaints;
- All files related to the receipt and resolution of compliance-related consumer complaints archived by the institution or the FDIC, including information from the FDIC’s automated complaint tracking system (STARS);
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- BOD minutes, compliance committee minutes, and other committee minutes, as applicable; and
- Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, managers, etc.

1. Conduct documentation review and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:

   - Has the institution implemented policies and procedures to handle consumer complaints about the institution and, as applicable, third party providers?
   - If policies and procedures are in place, do they comply with all regulatory requirements regarding complaints (maximum time limits for response, documentation requirements, etc.)?
   - If the institution has received consumer complaints, have all complaints been resolved satisfactorily?
   - Cross-referencing the complaints to all other areas of the CMS, does the type or quantity of complaints suggest any other areas in need of in-depth review?
   - Does the institution review complaints to determine whether improvements or changes to products or operations should be made?

2. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution’s performance related to this area. Are the institution’s consumer complaint response processes generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Exception: Do not request fair lending self-testing reports (or results). If, however, a financial institution voluntarily provides documentation of its fair lending self-testing, review the findings as part of the fair lending examination.

NOTE: A financial institution’s audit or review of loan files, internal policies, and training material may indicate difference in the treatment of applicants that could constitute a violation of the fair lending laws.

1. Conduct documentation review and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:

   - Are internal audits conducted? How often and by whom?
   - If internal audits are conducted, is the auditor independent of the transaction being audited? If not, is this considered acceptable considering the institution’s resources and risk profile?
   - Are external audits conducted? How often and by whom?
   - Are internal/external audits comprehensive in scope? If audits are not comprehensive, do they cover all areas of significant risk? Do they include reviews at every branch location and of significant third party relationships?
   - Are audit findings compiled in writing? Do they identify the nature and circumstances (i.e., cause, time period, etc.) of the identified exceptions? Do they provide management enough information to (1) determine cause and (2) formulate an appropriate corrective action?
   - Are internal/external audits of sufficient quality?
   - Are the audit findings communicated to the Board either directly or through the compliance committee?
   - Have audit report findings been appropriately addressed by the Board and senior management in a timely manner and include corrective actions and follow-up efforts?
   - Are written audit reports readily available for examiner review?

2. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution’s performance related to this area. Is the audit function generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Transaction Sampling and Testing

After analyzing the CMS elements in relationship to a bank’s inherent risks, the EIC must identify PSMs with residual risks and decide what transaction sampling and testing is necessary. The number of transactions and the particular regulatory requirements to be reviewed should be carefully tailored to weaknesses identified in the CMS as it relates to specific PSMs. For example, if there is a weakness in monitoring the calculation of Annual Percentage Rates in open-end credit transactions, then a sample of those calculations should be tested; it would not be necessary to test all Truth in Lending Act requirements.

The severity of CMS weakness and inherent risk will dictate the intensity of transaction testing; greater weakness and higher risk will generally lead to the review of more transactions. If the examiner finds a moderate degree of risk, then sufficient testing should be done to support a conclusion. Depending on the importance of an element, the examiner may find it appropriate to conduct a limited review of a couple of transactions to support a favorable conclusion. In certain cases, however, management’s admission that a violation occurred is sufficient to warrant the citation without transaction testing. This also negates the need to list specific transactions in the Report of Examination (ROE).

When transaction sampling and testing is conducted for PSMs exhibiting higher levels of residual risk, the examiner should tailor the actual sample and test to the identified weakness. If an inherent risk is sufficiently mitigated by the strength of the CMS, then minimal residual risk of consumer harm exists and on-site transaction testing is not considered necessary. ARCH comments should summarize how the CMS elements reduce the inherent risk of each applicable PSM.

Consultation Policy

Consultations and communication between Field, Regional, and Washington staff members help maintain the quality and consistency of compliance, fair lending, and CRA examinations and supervision. Information communicated informally or through consultations alerts senior DCP officials to significant, unusual or emerging supervisory issues, which ensures that these issues receive appropriate and timely consideration. Current information from examiners in the field also helps the FDIC and interagency groups develop more realistic policies and regulations.

Examination staff should consult with regional or field office management or staff if they find an unusual issue or problem. In turn, regional or field office management and staff are encouraged to consult with Washington subject matter experts, particularly with respect to findings, issues, or potential violations requiring guidance with respect to new regulations, or involving emerging/sensitive policy concerns.

Certain situations, because of their sensitivity or potential impact, mandate that the Regional and/or Washington office(s) be consulted. Actions that require either approval or concurrence under delegated authority or DCP policy also require formal documentation.

If a consultation results in an outcome inconsistent with the examiner’s recommendation, then the examiner and the review examiner should ensure that the language of the ROE or CRA PE is consistent with the final outcome.
Communicating Findings

At the conclusion of an FDIC risk-focused, on-site consumer compliance and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) examination, visitation or review, compliance examination staff communicates supervisory findings to institutions describing the strengths and weaknesses of an institution’s compliance management system (CMS), assessing adherence to the consumer protection laws and regulations, and describing potential or actual consumer harm. Typically, such findings are conveyed during a closing meeting with the institution’s management and/or the Board of Directors/Trustees (Board) at the conclusion of a consumer compliance examination, and also in the Report of Examination (ROE).

Examiners communicate Matters Requiring Board Attention (MRBAs) when significant issues are identified requiring an institution’s Board and management to take prompt corrective action on behalf of the institution and elevated supervisory attention is necessary. Examiners also provide recommendations to management when issues are identified that have a lower risk of consumer harm and are correctable by management in the normal course of business. If institutions take recommended actions, their CMS generally improves, and subsequent supervisory attention may not be necessary.

Closing Management Meeting

A closing meeting is held with management at the conclusion of on-site compliance and CRA examination or reviews.1 When practical, at least two FDIC representatives are present at the closing meeting. Attendance by financial institution representatives other than management is at the discretion of management. These participants may include: consultants, agents, counsel, accountants, holding company officers, directors, and employees who work directly with consumer protection laws or CRA. The presence of the aforementioned representatives should only be during segments that pertain to their area of responsibility. Third party participants must be under contract with the bank, with appropriate confidentiality language, in order to attend the closing meeting.

During concurrent examinations with Risk Management Supervision (RMS), DCP’s Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) coordinates with RMS examiners to schedule the closing management and Board meetings in an effort to ensure that all necessary attendees are present and that the bank’s and FDIC staff’s time is used efficiently. Reasonable requests from management, such as for separate meetings, are considered and accommodated, if practical.

Examination findings, including compliance and CRA ratings, are not final until the appropriate reviews are conducted by review staff, Field Supervisors, and/or the Regional or Washington Offices, as applicable. Prior to the closing meeting, Regional Offices generally consult with examiners and approve enforcement action recommendations.

The closing meeting is used to:

- Summarize review or examination findings. All critical issues are discussed. If significant issues arise subsequently, they are discussed with management either in person or by telephone. If management presents significant, new information at the closing meeting, additional review by the examiner may be required. In such instances, the examination process is left open for further review of applicable regulatory issues and the institution’s records. A second meeting with management may be necessary to discuss any additional matters.
- Discuss, when appropriate, positive findings to acknowledge the effectiveness of the institution’s compliance or CRA efforts.
- Provide recommendations to address noted weaknesses or deficiencies.
- Obtain management’s response(s) and commitment(s) for corrective action for deficiencies identified in the CMS and for cited violations and the resulting consumer harm.
- Advise management of recommended compliance and CRA ratings, as well as any recommendations for formal or informal enforcement actions.
- Recommend actions that would strengthen or enhance the financial institution’s CMS, as applicable.

The agenda for the closing meeting lists the discussion items in the order of their significance in relation to the overall conclusions. The agenda also includes a tentative listing of Level 3 and 2 violations, and to the extent possible, draft copies of the pertinent violation sections of the ROE. At the closing meeting, examiners also provide management with a copy of the Level 1 violations, if applicable. A copy of the agenda is provided to management and included in the examination workpapers.

Board Meeting

The purpose of a meeting with the financial institution’s Board is to convey the pertinent findings of the examination directly to persons ultimately responsible for the operating policies and procedures of the institution. Board meetings are conducted after the closing meeting with management, and are planned for regularly scheduled Board meetings, whenever possible. When significant issues requiring consultation with the Regional Office are present, the Consultation Policy is followed prior to scheduling the Board meeting.

Board meetings are attended by at least a quorum of Directors/Trustees. The EIC, Field Supervisor, and/or Review Examiner or senior member of the Regional Office staff attend, as deemed appropriate.

Board meetings are required under one or more of the following circumstances:
- Examiners identify significant problems that require consultations with the Regional Office;

1 An on-site review includes: Consumer complaint investigations; Visitations; or Other Special Reviews.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Communicating Findings

- An informal or formal enforcement action is recommended;
- The proposed compliance rating is “3,” “4,” or “5”;
- The proposed composite CRA rating, state rating, or multi-state rating is “Needs to Improve” or “Substantial Noncompliance”;
- The institution’s management or Board requests such a meeting.

A Board meeting is not required for:
- Visitations;
- Consumer complaint investigations; or
- Other on-site reviews.

Report of Examination

Introduction

The ROE is a compliance examination’s principal document of record. It communicates the results of an examination to the Board and management of the financial institution. The ROE highlights the strengths and weaknesses of a financial institution’s CMS and cites violations (if any) in order of significance. The ROE may also include pages that inform the institution about matters requiring Board attention (MRBA), compliance with enforcement actions, or other matters. The ROE offers recommendations for addressing deficiencies and improving future compliance management performance, which could also include informal suggestions such as best practices. Compliance examiners develop the ROE’s content and its findings based on bank information reviewed during the supervisory process, FDIC examination policies and procedures, and examiner experience and professional judgment. For additional information, see the instructions for the Bank of Anytown provided on page III-2.1 in this manual.

Format of the Report of Examination

The Report of Examination is a standalone document that is organized as follows:

- Transmittal Letter
- Cover Page
- Examiner’s Comments and Conclusions
  - Scope of the Examination
  - Consumer Compliance Rating
  - Compliance Management System
  - Enforcement Action(s) (if applicable, including proposed enforcement actions)
  - Community Reinvestment Act Evaluation (if applicable)
  - Meeting with Management (and the Board if applicable)

Transmittal Letter

A transmittal letter accompanies a written ROE to a financial institution’s Board. The letter is used, in part, to require appropriate follow-up concerning the examination with the Regional Office. The transmittal letter requires the institution, within a timeframe established by the applicable Regional Office, to:

- Address each MRBA;
- Develop appropriate corrective actions for any Level 3 or Level 2 violation that was not adequately corrected prior to the completion of the examination; and
- Send a letter or letters to the appropriate FDIC office notifying it, in sufficient detail, of the actual resolution of the MRBAs and Level 3 and Level 2 violations.

Appropriate staff at the Regional Office level reviews an institution’s response letter(s) and determines whether the response sufficiently addresses the issues in a timely manner. The Regional Office maintains a tracking system to ensure responses are received and corrective actions are completed in a timely manner. In cases where an enforcement action is pursued against an institution, examination staff will follow established monitoring procedures.

The guiding principle for completing the ROE is that it contains all information that is necessary and useful for the institution’s Board and management to understand the scope and conclusions of the examination, and any corrective actions that may be necessary to achieve compliance or address consumer harm. The ROE should aid the Board and management in developing an action plan to address any findings or supervisory concerns. Examiners exercise judgment and discretion when determining the amount of information and detail to include in the ROE. Examiners use the instructions and template for the Bank of Anytown at page III-2.1 in this manual when writing the following sections and pages of the ROE.

This section of the ROE provides information regarding the date, type, and coverage of the examination.

Fair lending matters are incorporated into the ROE. Fair lending is specifically noted in the Scope of the Examination section, and the examiner’s findings are incorporated into the CMS section of the ROE (described below), as appropriate. If warranted, a separate fair lending section may be included in the ROE.

Consumer Compliance Rating

This section of the ROE discloses and supports the consumer compliance rating. The introductory sentences disclose and support the consumer compliance rating, using the applicable rating definition as follows:

- 1: “A Consumer Compliance Rating of ’1’ is assigned. An institution in this category maintains a strong CMS and takes action to prevent violations of law and consumer harm.”
- 2: “A Consumer Compliance Rating of ’2’ is assigned. An institution in this category maintains a CMS that is satisfactory at managing compliance risks in the institution’s products and services and at substantially limiting violations of law and consumer harm.”
- 3: “A Consumer Compliance Rating of ’3’ is assigned. An institution in this category reflects a CMS deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and at limiting violations of law and consumer harm.”
- 4: “A Consumer Compliance Rating of ’4’ is assigned. An institution in this category reflects a CMS seriously deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and at preventing violations of law and consumer harm.”
- 5: “A Consumer Compliance Rating of ’5’ is assigned. An institution in this category reflects a CMS critically deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and at preventing violations of law and consumer harm.”

Compliance Management System

This section of the ROE includes the EIC’s comments and conclusions regarding the overall quality of the institution’s CMS and the Board and management’s ability to effectively meet its compliance responsibilities. This section discusses the EIC’s comments and conclusions relative to each of the two elements of a CMS: Board and management oversight, and the Compliance Program. Both positive and negative aspects of the institution’s management of its compliance responsibilities are discussed.

Violations of Law and Consumer Harm

This section of the ROE summarizes the relationship between violations identified and the deficiencies in the CMS. This section also summarizes the consumer harm that resulted from such deficiencies. Generally, examiners consider the collective significance and frequency of all infractions and any mitigating factors.

Violations are categorized as Level 3/High Severity, Level 2/Medium Severity, and Level 1/Low Severity. Only violations at Levels 3 and 2 that are of High or Medium Severity are discussed in this section of the ROE. Level 1 violations will not be mentioned in the examiner’s comments and conclusions pages of the report.

This section may include information about reimbursements related to Truth in Lending, administrative enforcement actions, or potential civil liability. In the case of reimbursement (or restitutioin of any type), this section briefly states the total reimbursable amount when reliable estimates have been determined, or estimates based upon the examiner’s calculations, including the assumptions on which the estimate is based.

Enforcement Actions

Include a brief comment summarizing any proposed enforcement actions and/or the institution’s actions with regard to any outstanding enforcement action(s). For outstanding enforcement action(s), assess the adequacy of the steps taken by the institution to comply with each provision on separate “Compliance with Enforcement Actions” pages.

Community Reinvestment Act

If a concurrent CRA evaluation was conducted, this section of the report includes the CRA rating and a reference to the CRA Performance Evaluation.

Meeting with Management

This section of the ROE describes the exit meeting(s) with management.

Meeting with the Board

This section of the ROE describes the meeting with the Board, if applicable. If a meeting is held with the Board, this section includes the same elements that are discussed under "Meeting with Management" in the Bank of Anytown as it relates to the meeting with the Board members.

Matters Requiring Board Attention

The MRBA page is only included in the ROE for items that are significant and require prompt corrective action and elevated supervisory attention. MRBAs are intended to
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Communicating Findings

Compliance with Enforcement Actions

The Compliance with Enforcement Actions page is only included when applicable and discusses how management has addressed weaknesses identified in the action. The guidance in this section applies to both formal and informal actions. The page will start with a brief overview of the facts leading to the issuance of an action. At the first examination/visitation after the issuance of a formal or informal administrative action, the provisions of the action will generally appear verbatim on this page.

Each provision should be followed with the examiner’s assessment of the adequacy of the steps taken by the institution to comply with the provision. For example, an assessment of a new policy might say “The updated Compliance Policy is comprehensive and tailored to the bank’s product offerings.” Examiners should not use conclusory statements of opinion such as “The institution is in compliance/noncompliance with this provision.” Comments should indicate whether any time limits set forth in actions have been met. At subsequent examinations/visitations, the examiner need only address provisions of an ongoing nature and those that remain outstanding. In all cases, a summary of the institution’s actions with regard to the enforcement action will be included on the examiner’s comments and conclusions page along with the examiner’s recommendation to terminate, continue, or change the enforcement action.

Violations of Highest Concern - Level 3/High Severity:

Violations that have resulted in significant harm to consumers or members of a community are classified as Level 3/High Severity. These violations typically result in a request or a requirement that the institution provide restitution in excess of $10,000 (in aggregate), and other examples include pattern or practice violations of anti-discrimination provisions, including redlining or widespread discouragement.

Violations of Moderate Concern - Level 2/Medium Severity:

Violations reflecting systemic, recurring, or repetitive errors that represent a failure of the bank to meet a key purpose of an underlying regulation or statute are classified as Level 2/Medium Severity. These violations may have had a small, but negative impact on consumers or have the potential to have a negative impact if uncorrected. Level 2 Violations may also include those resulting in potential restitution in an amount below the Level 3 threshold.

Violations of Lowest Concern - Level 1/Low Severity:

Violations that are isolated or sporadic, or systemic violations that are unlikely to affect consumers or the underlying purposes of an applicable regulation or statute are classified as Level 1/Low Severity. These violations are typically due to individual instances of failure to follow established procedures or minor errors in the implementation of reasonable procedures to comply with the obligations of a regulation or statute.

Violations Pages:

Level 3 and Level 2 violations are described in the ROE and are listed in order of severity with management’s response to each violation. Level 1 violations are recorded as a list on the Level 1 Violations page. The Level 1 Violations page is left with management at the conclusion of the exit meeting but is not included in the ROE or mentioned in the examiner’s comments and conclusions pages of the report.

Descriptions of the Level 3 and Level 2 violations in the violations pages readily call attention to the general nature and magnitude of these matters. Examiner’s recommendations to address the violations along with management’s responses will be included on the violations pages. Where no violation was found for a particular level of violation, the associated violations page is omitted.

The FDIC relies on examiner professional judgment in categorizing the level of violations. Examiners make reasonable efforts to appropriately categorize violations; however, the key purpose of the categorization system is to communicate to institutions the FDIC’s level of concern regarding each of the violations cited, and for institutions to appropriately prioritize efforts to correct violations cited.

Violations that have been self-identified by a bank and fully corrected before the start of the examination (including remedial action, if appropriate) generally are not cited on the violations pages or recorded in SOURCE. Examiners confirm that the bank identified the root cause of the violation and that the corrective action gives reasonable assurance that the violation will not recur.

Other Matters

The Other Matters page, if used, discusses matters that arise during an examination that may not rise to the level of a violation of law or regulation regarding which the FDIC has examination authority. Other matters may include violations that are referred to another agency, or details to support a potential risk that is included on the examiner’s comments and conclusions pages.

Supervisory Comments

The purpose of the Supervisory Comments page is to provide the FDIC Regional and Washington Offices and other banking regulators with confidential or controversial information. It also provides information to succeeding examiners on supervisory and examination activities relating to the institution. The Supervisory Comments are not included in the ROE transmitted to the financial institution.

Most of the information that examiners traditionally placed on this page can now be found in SOURCE or in the examination workpapers. However, examples of information that continues to be important to report on this page include:

- Planned changes in key management positions or compliance personnel that are not widely known in the institution;
- Pending litigation on a consumer protection matter that is not widely known in the institution;
- Tentative plans or strategies that are not widely known in the institution that may affect the frequency or scope of future compliance examinations; and
- Matters requiring consultation with the Regional Office or Washington Office.
- An explanation as to why civil money penalties are not imposed for Flood violations.
- Bank’s compliance with the Interstate Banking and Branching Efficiency Act of 1994.

This page is omitted when there are no issues to discuss, or all information is accessible in SOURCE, or the examination workpapers.

3 SOURCE is FDIC’s system of record for all compliance and CRA examination activities. It stores both examination data and documents including the Compliance Report of Exam and the CRA Performance Evaluation.

Review of the Report of Examination

The EIC or Review Examiner, as directed by regional policy, completes and uploads the following documents into SOURCE for review:

- Transmittal Letter;
- Cover Page;
- Page 1 – Examiner’s Comments and Conclusions;
- CRA Performance Evaluation (if applicable);
- Matters Requiring Board Attention (if applicable);
- Compliance with Enforcement Actions (if applicable);
- Level 1, Level 2, and Level 3 Violations Pages (if applicable);
- Other Matters (if applicable)
- Supervisory Comments (if applicable);
- Final examination scoping documents for compliance and fair lending.

The EIC ensures that all SOURCE submission requirements are met, which includes completing all applicable screens and recording the appropriate violation code for all levels of violations cited during the examination or visitation.

During the review process, Review Examiners identify any gaps, inconsistencies, or unsupported or unexplained conclusions contained in the ROE or any other document informing the institution of a FDIC material supervisory determination. The assigned Review Examiner and the EIC shall fully support the facts identified with supporting information before the ROE or document is submitted to the institution.

Generally, examiners conduct Board meetings before forwarding the examination report to FDIC’s Regional or Washington Office for review. However, in special circumstances, examiners may conduct the meeting after forwarding the report for review. If this occurs, the EIC will prepare a memorandum to the Regional Director summarizing the pertinent issues from the Board’s discussion for inclusion in the ROE.

The FDIC communicates with the financial institution if, during the review process, the examiner’s recommended rating is downgraded or the examiner’s conclusions are changed in a way that adversely affects the financial institution.

After the ROE is signed, it is delivered to the Board of the financial institution.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Documenting the Examination

Documenting the Examination

Introduction
Examination documentation should demonstrate a clear trail of decisions and supporting logic within a given area. Documentation should provide a written record of the examiner’s decisions and analysis, and provide support for assertions of fact or opinion in the Report of Examination. A well-constructed examination documentation file will provide sufficient data to reconstruct the examiner’s decision process for each step of the examination. This includes support for the examiner’s decision to include or exclude a regulation or area of review from the scope of the examination, as well as providing documentation of significant findings, including Level 3 and Level 2 violations.

It is vitally important that appropriate, relevant workpapers are maintained within the applicable storage medium to support:

• Review of the report of examination;
• Expanded explanations of Level 3 and Level 2 violations in the event of subsequent enforcement action or appeals of supervisory determinations;
• Development of a supervisory plan;
• A current risk profile; and
• Developing the scope of future examinations and limiting future information and document requests of the institution.

Documenting Findings

1. The Assessment of Risk of Consumer Harm (ARCH) is used to identify and documents inherent risk. Some areas of risk will be eliminated from further review during pre-examination planning based on their low level of inherent and/or residual risk. Sections 1 and 2 and the Decision Point section of the ARCH should explain why areas are eliminated from on-site review. Comments should be concise but specific enough to indicate why consumer harm risk is low and how CMS factors mitigate the inherent risk.

2. The ARCH also is also used to identify and documents the areas with moderate or high level of potential consumer harm risk that are not mitigated by the strength of the CMS. Section 3 of the ARCH documents the examination scope and establishes specific products, services, or markets (PSMs) for on-site review or transaction testing. As mentioned previously, PSMs are based on residual consumer harm risk and only PSMs exhibiting such residual risk would be presented here.

   There may be certain situations in which transaction testing or other review procedures will be necessary but is not predicated upon residual consumer harm risk. Training and development needs are one example. These areas should also be addressed in Section 3 of the ARCH but in the “Other Areas for Review” section rather than as a PSM.

   An Examiner Summary workpaper should be prepared for each area selected for transaction testing or other review procedures. The Examiner Summary should support examination findings, conclusions, and recommendations and discuss applicable strengths and weaknesses relevant to inherent risk and how effectively the bank is identifying, addressing, and preventing consumer harm. The Examiner Summary, in conjunction with the ARCH and the ROE, will allow subsequent readers to clearly identify the scope of work performed and the basis for the examiner’s conclusion.

   Include:

   • A statement indicating the scope of the review and describing the examination procedures used. Copies of the procedures, marked to indicate the portions used, may be substituted for the description.
   • Examiner Summaries should include (1) significant findings and their impact on the CMS rating and (2) any deficiencies or violations noted during the examination that are not contained in the ROE.
   • Generally, the examiner should maintain all discussion notes and all copies of bank documentation obtained during the examination. Exceptions can be made for irrelevant material or bulky items that have limited audit trail value. A copy of any document which is being directly criticized, or which supports a criticism made during the examination, must be maintained in the workpapers.

   NOTE: At the EIC’s discretion, multiple areas may be aggregated. For instance, it may be appropriate to combine all mortgage loan-related areas in one Examiner Summary.

   Again, Examiner Summaries are only necessary for areas selected for transaction testing or other review procedures. The ARCH will be used to provide a summary of the other areas not reviewed.

3. When a violation of a specific regulation has been identified, then:

   • Ensure that appropriate workpapers are fully completed, and that supporting documentation is attached. The use of standardized workpapers is required. The examiner is required to download the most current version of the standardized workpaper prior to the start of the current examination. The workpaper and documentation should be sufficient to enable an examiner having no previous connection... with the examination to ascertain the evidence supporting the significant conclusions, judgments, cited violations, and compliance with any outstanding enforcement action.

- Assign a violation code to each violation identified during the examination. All violation codes, regardless of whether or not they were detailed in the ROE, should be uploaded through SOURCE at the completion of the examination.

4. Ensure that the workpapers include clear and legible notes from discussions with management. All responses to examiner questions should be readily attributable to specific members of management. Specific comments made by management that are relevant to a significant finding should be marked or highlighted accordingly.

5. Attach to the relevant workpapers the documents supporting each finding noted in the Report of Examination.

For example:

- A copy of the relevant portion of the bank’s compliance policy which stipulates procedures that are in contradiction to the procedures actually performed.

- Copies of notes and related disclosure statements for violations of Regulation Z, Truth in Lending.

- Copies of adverse action notifications for violations of Fair Credit Reporting Act and/or Regulation B, Equal Credit Opportunity.

- Copies of completed hold notices where the financial institution failed to make $200 available at the start of the next business day in violation of Regulation CC, Expedited Funds Availability.

NOTE: For any violations cited as systemic or a pattern or practice, the examiner need only attach enough copied documents to support this conclusion. Additionally, any violations cited in the ROE that contain examples of specific transactions should have corresponding evidence in the examination file. Furthermore, any violation that results in the imposition of a civil money penalty should be supported with all applicable documentation.

General Procedures

1. The EIC, or designee, should upload workpapers into the electronic storage database:

   - Check to make sure that you are not overwriting a more current version of the document;
   - Do a quality control check to ensure that the documents are legible and that all pages have been included (front and back).

2. Workpapers are generally not changed after the conclusion of an examination. However, if revising a workpaper in any manner after the completion of an examination is necessary, such revisions should be clearly documented on the workpaper.

3. Some checklists in this manual have been incorporated into the national standardized workpapers and are required to be completed in conjunction with the review of an area. In situations where the national standardized workpapers have not incorporated the checklists within the manual, or if a checklist is obtained elsewhere, the completion of these checklists is optional. The examiner has the option of completing relevant portions of the checklists or using them merely as a guide. If used, they should be maintained in the workpapers, as they help document the procedures performed during the examination.

4. Documents added into the electronic storage database are only those not required to be uploaded to SOURCE.

Filing Workpapers

1. The EIC is responsible for ensuring that all appropriate documents are uploaded according to National Standardized Workpapers filing schema for the areas reviewed during the examination and ensuring the documents are complete and legible. The EIC can assign this responsibility to team members, as appropriate (e.g. the examiner reviewing an area could be assigned responsibility to upload the appropriate documents in that specific review).

2. The EIC (or designee) should:

   - Review workpapers to ensure that they are accurate, legible, and complete.
   - Determine that appropriate bank documentation, where applicable, has been attached and retained in the workpapers.
   - Confirm that mandatory workpapers are appropriately organized and uploaded to electronic storage.
   - Close the examination in the electronic storage database after the EIC has been informed that the RE review process is complete.

Retention

Retain workpapers for a period of at least two years or until the next examination, whichever is later. Retain workpapers for longer periods in the following instances, until corrective action or other resolution is complete:

- Truth in Lending violations requiring reimbursement;
- Fair lending violations resulting in referrals to the Department of Justice or Department of Housing and Urban Development;
- Any type of enforcement action that has been placed on or remains outstanding against the financial institution;
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Documenting the Examination

- A criminal referral has been made regarding the institution or any of its directors, trustees, management, or employees; and
- Other reasons, at the discretion of the Regional Director or Field Supervisor, for which the retention of documents and workpapers is required.

Consult the FDIC Records Schedule directives for further information.

SOURCE

SOURCE is the system of record for the compliance and CRA examination program and is extensively used by compliance field supervisors, examiners, review examiners, and Washington Office policy staff. SOURCE is used to support reporting requirements, provides substantial task support for staff, and is a management support and decision tool. Among other functions, SOURCE:

- Generates examination schedules that are used to support workload projections by incorporating quarter planning and benchmark hours;
- Provides information to facilitate the pre-exam process;
- Captures examination summary information;
- Attaches examination documents for divisional sharing and historical reference;
- Tracks information through the consultation process; and
- Facilitates the reporting of examination data for legislatively mandated reporting.

Information in SOURCE should be complete, accurate, and timely.

- Examiners and reviewers should ensure that the most current versions of documents are attached and labeled correctly. For example:
  - Transmittal Letter;
  - Cover Page;
  - The ROE, including Level 1, Level 2, and Level 3 Violations Pages (if any);
  - CRA Performance Evaluation;
  - Supervisory Comments (if applicable);
  - Level 1, Level 2, and Level 3 Violations Pages (if any);
  - Final examination scoping documents for compliance and fair lending.

- Examiners and reviewers should ensure that all required information fields are completed at the conclusion of the examination;
- Supervisors should plan examinations and visitations in advance and indicate the quarter for which the activity is planned; and
- Examiners-in-charge, or their designees, should update required dates, such as the examination On-Site Date, as soon as possible.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Investigations and Visitations

Investigations and Visitations

Investigations

Consumer Complaints

Consumer complaint investigations are generally handled by Consumer Response Center staff. Examiners will be requested to assist if an on-site review is determined to be necessary. As with all sensitive matters, close cooperation between staff in the field office, region, and Washington is essential to a prompt and appropriate resolution of a complaint.

Enforcement Actions

To obtain information or evidence necessary to support an enforcement action, a formal investigation may be conducted pursuant to Section 10(c) of the FDI Act. Through such an investigation, administrative subpoenas may be issued for information or testimony. Orders of Investigation must be developed in cooperation with the Legal Division, which shares delegated authority for this process.

Visitations

Introduction

Visitations are usually targeted events aimed at specific operational or regulatory areas, but can also focus on compliance management systems that require more than the normal level of supervisory attention. Visitations are conducted by the FDIC to review the compliance posture of an institution that is newly chartered, involved in a recent or proposed merger, or recently converted to state nonmember status; to review an institution’s progress on corrective actions since its last examination; to ascertain an institution’s compliance with an enforcement action; and to investigate problems brought to the FDIC’s attention.

Visitations can be scheduled at any time at the discretion of Regional Office management.

Visitations may be expanded to a regular compliance/CRA examination with the Examiner-in-Charge’s recommendation and Regional Office management’s concurrence. This recommendation should be considered in situations where:

- Significant deficiencies are noted in a financial institution’s compliance management system or CRA policies or procedures;
- Significant noncompliance is noted particularly regarding previously criticized areas; or
- Significant noncompliance with an informal or formal enforcement action is noted.

Regional compliance management may change an institution’s compliance rating if interim events, visitations, investigations, or similar situations result in finding that the assigned rating is no longer suitable and that a different level of supervisory concern is warranted. Ratings may be moved up or down. Decisions to change a rating must be based on a review that considers whether the institution’s compliance with consumer protection and civil rights statutes and regulations display weaknesses requiring special supervisory attention and which are cause for more than a normal degree of supervisory concern. Any change must be carefully documented, and the bank should be notified of the change and the basis for it.

General Visitation Procedures

1. Perform appropriate off-site review and analysis procedures prior to the commencement of the on-site visitation. Review should include documents in electronic storage facilities that have been received from the bank since the previous examination activity, such as Progress Reports. Tailor the visitation to address the compliance deficiencies or concerns identified, or the matters under review. An Assessment of Risk and Consumer Harm (ARCH) is not required.

2. Notify the institution of the date of the visitation.

3. Conduct the on-site visitation. An initial meeting with management should define the scope of the visitation.

4. If applicable, prepare a list of violations. Examiners will use the violations pages from the Report of Examination and include these pages with the visitation report submitted to the Regional Office.

5. Consult as appropriate or required.

6. Conduct a closing meeting with management and, if the situation warrants, a meeting with the Board. Leave a copy of the violations list with management.

Preparing the Report of Visitation

1. Prepare Report of Visitation — Compliance (required). Examiners use the Report of Visitation template page when writing comments and conclusions. Additional pages may include, as applicable:
   - Matters Requiring Board Attention
   - Compliance with Enforcement Action(s)
     - The financial institution must receive, either in the visitation report, report of examination, or both, a discussion of compliance with the provisions of an outstanding enforcement action.
     - Use topical headings, such as those used to prepare Page 1 comments for the Compliance Report of Examination.
   - Violations Page(s)
   - Other Matters
   - Supervisory Comments (Page A – Supervisory Section)
     - Include recommendation to the Regional Office on whether to remove or retain reporting requirements contained within outstanding formal or informal enforcement actions (if not in-
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Investigations and Visitations

2. Forward the Report of Visitation to the review staff designated by Regional Office management.

3. Update all appropriate SOURCE data fields, and ensure that all SOURCE submission requirements are met.

4. Regional review staff will review the Report of Visitation. At the discretion of the Regional Office management, visitation findings will be forwarded to the financial institution by either of the following:

- Transmittal letter only; or

Documenting Visitation Findings
Standardized workpapers must be completed for applicable areas reviewed during each visitation.

Enforcement Actions

Introduction
The FDIC may initiate informal or formal action when an insured depository institution is found to be in an unsatisfactory condition. Informal actions represent the final supervisory step before formal enforcement proceedings are initiated. The FDIC has broad enforcement powers under the Federal Deposit Insurance (FDI) Act to issue formal enforcement actions.

This section provides a brief summary of the types of informal and formal actions that the FDIC has the authority to issue. When considering an enforcement action, the consultation policy should be followed.

Types of Enforcement Actions
Informal actions are voluntary commitments made by the Board of Directors/trustees of a financial institution. They are designed to correct identified deficiencies and ensure compliance with federal and state banking laws and regulations. Informal actions are neither publicly disclosed nor legally enforceable.

The most common informal enforcement actions used by the FDIC are the following:

• Board Resolution: Informal commitments developed and adopted by a financial institution’s Board of Directors/trustees, often at the request of an FDIC Regional Director, directing the institution’s personnel to take corrective action regarding specific noted deficiencies. The FDIC is not a party to the resolution, but approves and accepts the resolution as a means to initiate corrective action.

• Memorandum of Understanding: Informal agreement between an institution and the FDIC that is drafted by the Regional Office staff to address and correct identified weaknesses in an institution’s compliance or CRA posture. A Memorandum of Understanding is generally used in place of a Board Resolution when the FDIC has reason to believe that a Board Resolution would not adequately address the deficiencies noted during the examination.

Formal enforcement actions are those taken pursuant to the powers granted to the FDIC’s Board of Directors under Section 8 of the FDI Act. Each situation and circumstance determines the most appropriate action(s) to be taken. It is of note that formal enforcement actions are publicly available records.

Formal actions used in connection with compliance matters may include the following:

• Termination of Insurance: Section 8(a).

• Cease-and-Desist Order: Section 8(b): Issued to halt violations of laws or regulations as well as to require affirmative action to correct any condition resulting from such violations. By ordering an institution or an institution affiliated party (IAP), including an individual officer or director of an institution, to cease and desist from practices and/or take affirmative actions, the FDIC may prevent the problems facing the institution from reaching such serious proportions as to require more severe enforcement actions. If an institution voluntarily agrees to the entry of a Cease-and-Desist Order, it is entitled a “Consent Order.”

• Order for Restitution: Section 8(b)(6): Issued to require an institution or IAP to disgorge any unjust enrichment to consumers and/or take other affirmative action to redress consumer harm.

• Temporary Cease-and-Desist Order: Section 8(c): Issued in the most severe situations to halt particularly egregious practices pending a formal hearing on permanent Cease-and-Desist Orders issued pursuant to Section 8(b).

• Removal and Prohibition Order: Section 8(e)(1): The FDIC has the authority to order the removal of an IAP, i.e., director, officer, employee, controlling stockholder other than a bank holding company, or agent for an insured depository institution. The prohibition may be for specific activities or may be industry-wide.

• Temporary Suspension Order: Section 8(e)(3): The FDIC may order the temporary suspension of an IAP pending a hearing on an Order of Removal if the individual’s continued participation poses an immediate threat to the institution or to the interests of the institution’s depositors.

• Suspension Order: Section 8(g): Issued to IAPs who are charged with felonies involving dishonesty or a breach of trust pending the disposition of the criminal charges.

• Civil Money Penalties: Section 8(i)(2): CMPs are assessed to sanction an institution, IAP, or an individual for a violation, breach of a fiduciary duty, and/or practice. They are also assessed to deter future occurrences. In the case of a CMP assessed to an institution or IAP, twelve factors that measure the breadth and severity of the problem are considered, including consumer harm, cooperation, and supervisory history. Additionally, the asset size of the institution is taken into account. In the case of a CMP assessed to an individual, a similar analysis is performed. The FDIC utilizes separate matrices for institutions and individuals. In both cases, the CMP matrices are guidance intended to promote consistency in the assessment of CMPs. The matrices aid the examiner in determining the appropriateness and/or level of CMPs. Each CMP matrix is included at the end of this section.

NOTE: The Matrix for CMPs Against Institutions is offered only as guidance; it should not be a substitute for experience and sound supervisory judgment. The matrix in no way limits the discretion of the FDIC to factor in the precise facts and circumstances of each case, or other factors as justice requires, into the CMP determination. Also, to determine a CMP against an individual, refer to the Instructions and Matrix for Civil Money Penalties Against Individuals. The CMP amount may not exceed the statutory maximum set forth in section 8(i)(2) of the FDI Act, as adjusted by 12 C.F.R. § 308.132.

Truth in Lending (TIL) Restitution Verification

Examination Objectives
1. Determine during PEP whether the prior Report of Examination included a request for restitution pursuant to Section 108(e) of the Truth in Lending Act.
2. Become familiar with the nature of the violations and the extent of the file search necessary to identify affected loans.
3. Review the correspondence file to determine if the financial institution has reported completion of the restitutions or if there are any unresolved issues pending, such as a formal request for relief from restitution.
4. Perform the following examination procedures during PEP in those instances where the number of loans subject to restitution is relatively small and requesting the institution to provide relevant documentation would not be burdensome.

The objectives are to:
• Determine that a complete file search was conducted.
• Verify that restitution calculations and worksheets from the financial institution are accurate and conform with violations cited.
• Verify that restitutions were made to all entitled customers and dispersed correctly.

Verification Procedures
The following procedures are to be used when reviewing an institution’s compliance with restitution requested as a result of Truth in Lending (TIL) / Regulation Z violations subject to restitution cited at the previous compliance examination.

1. Identify the person(s) responsible for making the calculations and providing restitution.
2. Discuss the method used to determine which loans were subject to restitution.
3. Determine that an appropriate file search and any subsequent restitutions were completed in accordance with direction received from the FDIC through the prior Compliance Report of Examination and transmittal letter sent to the financial institution.
4. Consider the following items when determining the scope of the review:
   • Number of affected loans identified;
   • Effectiveness of overall compliance program;
   • Management’s willingness to correct prior violations;
   • Nature of violations; and
   • Time constraints.
5. Review restitution documentation for accuracy.
6. Review restitution documentation for the following items:
   • Restitution calculations;
   • Canceled restitution checks (When reviewing canceled checks be sure to look at the endorsement(s) on the back of the checks to ensure the checks have been endorsed by the appropriate individual(s)); and
   • Verify, through a sample of checks, the validity of the endorsement signature.
7. Compare the list of restitution exceptions, maintained in the prior Compliance Examination workpapers, with the file search and actual restitutions made by the financial institution.
8. If either the file search or restitutions were not handled correctly, immediately inform the Field Supervisor and the Regional Office.
9. The examiner must complete appropriate workpapers, in accordance with instructions, and attach them to the appropriate documentation of the financial institution’s restitution calculations.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Appeals

Appeals

Introduction
Section 309(a) of the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994 (Public Law 103-325, 108 Stat.2160) (Riegle Act) required the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) to establish an independent intra-agency appellate process to review material supervisory determinations made at insured depository institutions that it supervises. The Guidelines for Appeals of Material Supervisory Determinations (“guidelines”) describe the types of determinations that are eligible for review and the process by which appeals will be considered and decided. The procedures set forth in these guidelines establish an appeals process for the review of material supervisory determinations by the Supervision Appeals Review Committee (“SARC”).

The following individuals comprise the three (3) voting members of the SARC: (1) One inside FDIC Board member, either the Chairperson, the Vice Chairperson, or the FDIC Director (Appointive), as designated by the FDIC Chairperson (this person would serve as the Chairperson of the SARC); and (2) one deputy or special assistant to each of the inside FDIC Board members who are not designated as the SARC Chairperson. The General Counsel is a non-voting member of the SARC. The FDIC Chairperson may designate alternate member(s) to the SARC if there are vacancies so long as the alternate member was not involved in making or affirming the material supervisory determination under review. A member of the SARC may designate and authorize the most senior member of his or her staff within the substantive area of responsibility related to cases before the SARC to act on his or her behalf.

Institutions Eligible To Appeal
The guidelines apply to the insured depository institutions that the FDIC supervises (i.e., insured State nonmember banks and insured branches of foreign banks) and also to other insured depository institutions with respect to which the FDIC makes material supervisory determinations.

Determinations Subject To Appeal
An institution may appeal any material supervisory determination pursuant to the procedures set forth in these guidelines. Material supervisory determinations include:

a. CAMELS ratings under the Uniform Financial Institutions Rating System;
b. IT ratings under the Uniform Interagency Rating System for Data Processing Operations;
c. Trust ratings under the Uniform Interagency Trust Rating System;
d. CRA ratings under the Revised Uniform Interagency Community Reinvestment Act Assessment Rating System;
e. Consumer compliance ratings under the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System;
f. Registered transfer agent examination ratings;
g. Government securities dealer examination ratings;
h. Municipal securities dealer examination ratings;
i. Determinations relating to the adequacy of loan loss reserve provisions;
j. Classifications of loans and other assets in dispute the amount of which, individually or in the aggregate, exceed 10 percent of an institution’s total capital;
k. Determinations relating to violations of a statute or regulation that may impact the capital, earnings, or operating flexibility of an institution, or otherwise affect the nature and level of supervisory oversight accorded an institution;
l. Truth in Lending (Regulation Z) restitution;
m. Filings made pursuant to 12 CFR 303.11(f), for which a Request for Reconsideration has been granted, other than denials of a change in bank control, change in senior executive officer or board of directors, or denial of an application pursuant to section 19 of the FDI Act (which are contained in 12 CFR 308, subparts D, L, and M, respectively), if the filing was originally denied by the DCP Director, Deputy Director or Associate Director; and
n. Any other supervisory determination (unless otherwise not eligible for appeal) that may impact the capital, earnings, operating flexibility, or capital category for prompt corrective action purposes of an institution, or otherwise affect the nature and level of supervisory oversight accorded an institution.

Material supervisory determinations do not include:

a. Decisions to appoint a conservator or receiver for an insured depository institution;
b. Decisions to take prompt corrective action pursuant to section 38 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C.1831);
c. Determinations for which other appeals procedures exist (such as determinations of deposit insurance assessment risk classifications and payment calculations);
d. Decisions to initiate informal enforcement actions (such as memoranda of understanding); and

e. Formal enforcement-related actions and decisions, including determinations and the underlying facts and circumstances that form the basis of a recommended or pending formal enforcement action, and FDIC determinations regarding compliance with an existing formal enforcement action.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Appeals

A formal enforcement-related action or decision commences, and therefore becomes unappealable, when the FDIC initiates a formal investigation under 12 U.S.C. 1820(c) or provides written notice to the bank indicating its intention to pursue available formal enforcement remedies under applicable statutes or published enforcement-related policies of the FDIC, including written notice of a referral to the Attorney General or a notice to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for violations of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act or the Fair Housing Act. For the purposes of these guidelines, remarks in a Report of Examination do not constitute written notice of intent to pursue formal enforcement remedies.

Good Faith Resolution
An institution should make a good faith effort to resolve any dispute concerning a material supervisory determination with the on-site examiner and/or the appropriate Regional Office. The on-site examiner and the Regional Office will promptly respond to any concerns raised by an institution regarding a material supervisory determination. Informal resolution of disputes with the on-site examiner and/or the appropriate Regional Office is encouraged, but seeking such a resolution is not a condition to filing a request for review with the Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection or an appeal to the SARC under these guidelines.

Filing a Request for Review With the FDIC Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection
An institution may file a request for review of a material supervisory determination with the Director, Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection, 550 17th Street, NW, Room F-4026, Washington, DC 20429, within 60 calendar days following the institution’s receipt of a report of examination containing a material supervisory determination or other written communication of a material supervisory determination. A request for review must be in writing and must include:

a. A detailed description of the issues in dispute, the surrounding circumstances, the institution’s position regarding the dispute and any arguments to support that position (including citation of any relevant statute, regulation, policy statement or other authority), how resolution of the dispute would materially affect the institution, and whether a good faith effort was made to resolve the dispute with the on-site examiner and the Regional Office; and

b. A statement that the institution’s board of directors has considered the merits of the request and authorized that it be filed.

The Director, Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection, will issue a written determination of the request for review, setting forth the grounds for that determination, within 45 days of receipt of the request. No appeal to the SARC will be allowed unless an institution has first filed a timely request for review with the Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection.

Appeal to the SARC
An institution that does not agree with the written determination rendered by the Director of the Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection must appeal that determination to the SARC within 30 calendar days from the date of that determination. The Director’s determination will inform the institution of the 30-day time period for filing with the SARC and will provide the mailing address for any appeal the institution may wish to file. Failure to file within the 30-day time limit may result in denial of the appeal by the SARC. If the Director of the Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection determines that an institution is entitled to relief that the Director lacks delegated authority to grant, the Director may, with the approval of the Chairperson of the SARC, transfer the matter directly to the SARC without issuing a determination. Notice of such a transfer will be provided to the institution. The Division Director may also request guidance from the SARC Chairperson as to procedural or other questions relating to any request for review.

Filing with the SARC
An appeal to the SARC will be considered filed if the written appeal is received by the FDIC within 30 calendar days from the date of the division director’s written determination or if the written appeal is placed in the U.S. mail within that 30-day period. If the 30th day after the date of the division director’s written determination is a Saturday, Sunday or Federal holiday, filing may be made on the next business day. The appeal should be sent to the address indicated on the determination being appealed.

Contents of Appeal
The appeal should be labeled to indicate that it is an appeal to the SARC and should contain the name, address, and telephone number of the institution and any representative, as well as a copy of the determination being appealed. If oral presentation is sought, that request should be included in the appeal. Only matters previously reviewed at the division level, resulting in a written determination or direct referral to the SARC, may be appealed to the SARC. Evidence not presented for review to the DCP Director may be submitted to the SARC only if authorized by the SARC Chairperson. The institution should set forth all of the reasons, legal and factual, why it disagrees with the determination. Nothing in the SARC administrative process shall create any discovery or other such rights.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Appeals

Burden of Proof
The burden of proof as to all matters at issue in the appeal, including timeliness of the appeal if timeliness is at issue, rests with the institution.

Oral Presentation
The SARC may, in its discretion, whether or not a request is made, determine to allow an oral presentation. The SARC generally grants a request for oral presentation only if it determines that oral presentation is likely to be helpful or would otherwise be in the public interest. Notice of the SARC’s determination to grant or deny a request for oral presentation will be provided to the institution. If oral presentation is held, the institution will be allowed to present its positions on the issues raised in the appeal and to respond to any questions from the SARC. The SARC may also require that FDIC staff participate as the SARC deems appropriate.

Dismissal and Withdrawal
An appeal may be dismissed by the SARC if it is not timely filed, if the basis for the appeal is not discernable from the appeal, or if the institution moves to withdraw the appeal.

Scope of Review and Decision
The SARC will review the appeal for consistency with the policies, practices and mission of the FDIC and the overall reasonableness of and the support offered for the positions advanced, and notify the institution, in writing, of its decision concerning the disputed material supervisory determination(s) within 60 days from the date the appeal is filed, or within 60 days from oral presentation, if held. SARC review will be limited to the facts and circumstances as they existed prior to or at the time the material supervisory determination was made, even if later discovered, and no consideration will be given to any facts or circumstances that occur or corrective action taken after the determination was made. The SARC may reconsider its decision only on a showing of an intervening change in the controlling law or the availability of material evidence not reasonably available when the decision was issued.

Publication of Decisions
SARC decisions will be published, and the published SARC decisions will be redacted to avoid disclosure of exempt information. In cases where redaction is deemed to be insufficient to prevent improper disclosure, published decisions may be presented in summary form. Published SARC decisions may be cited as precedent in appeals to the SARC.

SARC Guidelines Generally
Appeals to the SARC will be governed by these guidelines. The SARC will retain the discretion to waive any provision of the guidelines for good cause; the SARC may adopt supplemental rules governing SARC operations; the SARC may order that material be kept confidential; and the SARC may consolidate similar appeals.

Limitation on Agency Ombudsman
The subject matter of a material supervisory determination for which either an appeal to the SARC has been filed or a final SARC decision issued is not eligible for consideration by the Ombudsman.

Coordination With State Regulatory Authorities
In the event that a material supervisory determination subject to a request for review is the joint product of the FDIC and a State regulatory authority, the Director, Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection, will promptly notify the appropriate State regulatory authority of the request, provide the regulatory authority with a copy of the institution’s request for review and any other related materials, and solicit the regulatory authority’s views regarding the merits of the request before making a determination. In the event that an appeal is subsequently filed with the SARC, the SARC will notify the institution and the State regulatory authority of its decision. Once the SARC has issued its determination, any other issues that may remain between the institution and the State authority will be left to those parties to resolve.

Effect on Supervisory or Enforcement Actions
The use of the procedures set forth in these guidelines by any institution will not affect, delay, or impede any formal or informal supervisory or enforcement action in progress or affect the FDIC’s authority to take any supervisory or enforcement action against that institution.

Effect on Applications or Requests for Approval
Any application or request for approval made to the FDIC by an institution that has appealed a material supervisory determination which relates to or could affect the approval of the application or request will not be considered until a final decision concerning the appeal is made unless otherwise requested by the institution.

Prohibition on Examiner Retaliation
The FDIC has an experienced examination workforce and is proud of its professionalism and dedication. FDIC policy prohibits any retaliation, abuse, or retribution by an agency examiner or any FDIC personnel against an institution. Such behavior against an institution that appeals a material supervisory determination constitutes unprofessional conduct and will subject the examiner or other personnel to appropriate disciplinary or remedial action. Institutions that believe they have been retaliated against are encouraged to contact the Regional Director for the appropriate FDIC region. Any institution that believes or has any evidence that it has been subject to retaliation may file a complaint with the Director,

Examination and Visitation Frequency

Institutions supervised by the FDIC are examined at intervals established by FDIC policy. Generally, newly chartered insured institutions or institutions that change charters and are newly supervised by the FDIC will receive a visitation within the first 12 months of operation/conversion and a full scope examination within the first 24 months. After the first examination, they will follow the standard intervals for all other institutions. All other institutions are examined at intervals outlined in the Standard Examination Frequency Schedule which sets examination intervals by an institution’s size and the ratings assigned during the most recent previous compliance examination and CRA evaluation.

When scheduling an examination, the objectives are to:

• Target examinations and supervisory efforts where risk of consumer harm is greatest;
• Appropriately allocate examination resources; and • Conduct concurrent examinations, when requested by the bank, if practical.

Examination and Visitation Frequency

The Initial Examination Frequency Schedule is presented below in Table 1. The Standard Examination Frequency Schedule for institutions with total assets of $250 million or less is presented below in Table 2. The Standard Examination Frequency Schedule for institutions with total assets of greater than $250 million is presented below in Table 3. Visitations may be scheduled at the discretion of Regional Office Management. In addition, examinations may be scheduled earlier than the general schedule when warranted.

Concurrent Examinations

Concurrent compliance/CRA, risk management, and specialty examinations should be conducted to accommodate the preferences of the bank, unless doing so would be impractical or inefficient. Examinations of banks subject to Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) supervision will be coordinated in accordance with the requirements of Section 1025(e) of the Dodd-Frank Act.

Consumer Compliance Ratings

Introduction

The FDIC assigns consumer compliance ratings to institutions it supervises pursuant to the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System (CC Rating System) approved by the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) in 2016 and effective on March 31, 2017. The CC Rating System is a supervisory policy for evaluating financial institutions’ adherence to consumer protection requirements. It is composed of guidance and definitions which are contained in this section of the manual.

The primary purpose of the CC Rating System is to ensure that regulated financial institutions are evaluated in a comprehensive and consistent manner and that supervisory resources are appropriately focused on areas exhibiting risk of consumer harm and on institutions that warrant elevated supervisory attention. The CC Rating System serves as a useful tool for summarizing the compliance position of individual institutions.

Under the CC Rating System, each financial institution is assigned a consumer compliance rating. The CC Rating System is based upon a scale of 1 through 5 in increasing order of supervisory concern.

FFIEC Guidance on the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System

FFIEC member agencies (Agencies) promote compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations through supervisory and outreach programs. The Agencies engage in consumer compliance supervision to assess whether a financial institution is meeting its responsibility to comply with these requirements.

The CC Rating System provides a general framework for assessing risks during the supervisory process using certain compliance factors and assigning an overall consumer compliance rating to each federally regulated financial institution. The primary purpose of the CC Rating System is to ensure that regulated financial institutions are evaluated in a comprehensive and consistent manner, and that supervisory resources are appropriately focused on areas exhibiting risk of consumer harm and on institutions that warrant elevated supervisory attention.

The CC Rating System is composed of guidance and definitions. The guidance provides examiners with direction on how to use the definitions when assigning a consumer compliance rating to an institution. The definitions consist of qualitative descriptions for each rating category and include compliance management system (CMS) elements reflecting risk control processes designed to manage consumer compliance risk and considerations regarding violations of laws, consumer harm, and the size, complexity, and risk profile of an institution. The consumer compliance rating reflects the effectiveness of an institution’s CMS to ensure compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations and reduce the risk of harm to consumers.

The Agencies developed the following principles to serve as a foundation for the CC Rating System.

Risk-based. Recognize and communicate clearly that CMS vary based on the size, complexity, and risk profile of supervised institutions.

Transparent. Provide clear distinctions between rating categories to support consistent application by the Agencies across supervised institutions. Reflect the scope of the review that formed the basis of the overall rating.

Actionable. Identify areas of strength and direct appropriate attention to specific areas of weakness, reflecting a risk-based supervisory approach. Convey examiners’ assessment of the effectiveness of an institution’s CMS, including its ability to prevent consumer harm and ensure compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations.

Incent Compliance. Incent the institution to establish an effective consumer compliance system across the institution and to identify and address issues promptly, including self-identification and correction of consumer compliance weaknesses. Reflect the potential impact of any consumer harm identified in examination findings.

Five-Level Rating Scale

The CC Rating System is based upon a numeric scale of 1 through 5 in increasing order of supervisory concern. Thus, 1 represents the highest rating and consequently the lowest degree of supervisory concern, while 5 represents the lowest rating and the most critically deficient level of performance.
and therefore, the highest degree of supervisory concern.\textsuperscript{4} Ratings of 1 or 2 represent satisfactory or better performance. Ratings of 3, 4, or 5 indicate performance that is less than satisfactory. Consistent with the previously described Principles, the rating system incents a financial institution to establish an effective CMS across the institution, to self-identify risks, and to take the necessary actions to reduce the risk of non-compliance and consumer harm.

- The highest rating of 1 is assigned to a financial institution that maintains a strong CMS and takes action to prevent violations of law and consumer harm.

- A rating of 2 is assigned to a financial institution that maintains a CMS that is satisfactory at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and at substantially limiting violations of law and consumer harm.

- A rating of 3 reflects a CMS deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and at limiting violations of law and consumer harm.

- A rating of 4 reflects a CMS seriously deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and/or at preventing violations of law and consumer harm. “Seriously deficient” indicates fundamental and persistent weaknesses in crucial CMS elements and severe inadequacies in core compliance areas necessary to operate within the scope of statutory and regulatory consumer protection requirements and to prevent consumer harm.

- A rating of 5 reflects a CMS critically deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and/or at preventing violations of law and consumer harm. “Critically deficient” indicates an absence of crucial CMS elements and a demonstrated lack of willingness or capability to take the appropriate steps necessary to operate within the scope of statutory and regulatory consumer protection requirements and to prevent consumer harm.

CC Rating System Categories and Assessment Factors

\textbf{CC Rating System – Categories}

The CC Rating System is organized under three broad categories:

1. Board and Management Oversight,

2. Compliance Program, and

3. Violations of Law and Consumer Harm.

The \textit{Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions} below list the assessment factors considered within each category, along with narrative descriptions of performance.

The first two categories, \textit{Board and Management Oversight} and \textit{Compliance Program}, are used to assess a financial institution’s CMS. As such, examiners should evaluate the assessment factors within these two categories commensurate with the institution’s size, complexity, and risk profile. All institutions, regardless of size, should maintain an effective CMS. The sophistication and formality of the CMS typically will increase commensurate with the size, complexity, and risk profile of the entity.

Additionally, compliance expectations contained within the narrative descriptions of these two categories extend to third-party relationships into which the financial institution has entered. There can be certain benefits to financial institutions engaging in relationships with third parties, including gaining operational efficiencies or an ability to deliver additional products and services, but such arrangements also may expose financial institutions to risks if not managed effectively. The prudential agencies, the CFPB, and some states have issued guidance describing expectations regarding oversight of third-party relationships.\textsuperscript{5} While an institution’s management may make the business decision to outsource some or all of the operational aspects of a product or service, the institution cannot outsource the responsibility for complying with laws and regulations or managing the risks associated with third-party relationships.

As noted in the \textit{Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions}, examiners should evaluate activities conducted through third-party relationships as though the activities were performed by the institution itself. Examiners should review a financial institution’s management of third-party relationships and servicers as part of its overall compliance program.

The third category, \textit{Violations of Law and Consumer Harm}, includes assessment factors that evaluate the dimensions of any identified violation or consumer harm. Examiners should weigh each of these four factors – root cause, severity, duration, and pervasiveness – in evaluating relevant violations of law and any resulting consumer harm.

\textbf{Board and Management Oversight – Assessment Factors}

Under Board and Management Oversight, the examiner should assess the financial institution’s board of directors and management, as appropriate for their respective roles and responsibilities, based on the following assessment factors:

\textsuperscript{5} For FDIC guidance describing potential risks arising from third-party relationships and outlining risk management principles that may be tailored to suit the complexity and risk potential of a financial institution's significant third-party relationships, see FIL-44-2008.
II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Consumer Compliance Rating System

- oversight of and commitment to the institution’s CMS;
- effectiveness of the institution’s change management processes, including responding timely and satisfactorily to any variety of change, internal or external, to the institution;
- comprehension, identification, and management of risks arising from the institution’s products, services, or activities; and
- self-identification of consumer compliance issues and corrective action undertaken as such issues are identified.

Compliance Program – Assessment Factors

Under Compliance Program, the examiner should assess other elements of an effective CMS, based on the following assessment factors:

- whether the institution’s policies and procedures are appropriate to the risk in the products, services, and activities of the institution;
- the degree to which compliance training is current and tailored to risk and staff responsibilities;
- the sufficiency of the monitoring and, if applicable, audit to encompass compliance risks throughout the institution; and
- the responsiveness and effectiveness of the consumer complaint resolution process.

Violations of Law and Consumer Harm – Assessment Factors

Under Violations of Law and Consumer Harm, the examiner should analyze the following assessment factors:

- the root cause, or causes, of any violations of law identified during the examination;
- the severity of any consumer harm resulting from violations;
- the duration of time over which the violations occurred; and
- the pervasiveness of the violations.

As a result of a violation of law, consumer harm may occur. While many instances of consumer harm can be quantified as a dollar amount associated with financial loss, such as charging higher fees for a product than was initially disclosed, consumer harm may also result from a denial of an opportunity. For example, a consumer could be harmed when a financial institution denies the consumer credit or discourages an application in violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, whether or not there is resulting financial harm.

This category of the Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions defines four factors by which examiners can assess violations of law and consumer harm.

Root Cause. The Root Cause assessment factor analyzes the degree to which weaknesses in the CMS gave rise to the violations. In many instances, the root cause of a violation is tied to a weakness in one or more elements of the CMS. Violations that result from critical deficiencies in the CMS evidence a critical absence of management oversight and are of the highest supervisory concern.

Severity. The Severity assessment factor of the Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions weighs the type of consumer harm, if any, that resulted from violations of law. More severe harm results in a higher level of supervisory concern under this factor. For example, some consumer protection violations may cause significant financial harm to a consumer, while other violations may cause negligible harm, based on the specific facts involved.

Duration. The Duration assessment factor considers the length of time over which the violations occurred. Violations that persist over an extended period of time will raise greater supervisory concerns than violations that occur for only a brief period of time. When violations are brought to the attention of an institution’s management and management allows those violations to remain unaddressed, such violations are of the highest supervisory concern.

Pervasiveness. The Pervasiveness assessment factor evaluates the extent of the violation(s) and resulting consumer harm, if any. Violations that affect a large number of consumers will raise greater supervisory concern than violations that impact a limited number of consumers. If violations become so pervasive that they are considered to be widespread or present in multiple products or services, the institution’s performance under this factor is of the highest supervisory concern.

Self-Identification of Violations of Law and Consumer Harm

Strong compliance programs are proactive. They promote consumer protection by preventing, self-identifying, and addressing compliance issues in a proactive manner. Accordingly, the CC Rating System provides incentives for such practices through the definitions associated with a 1 rating.

The Agencies believe that self-identification and prompt correction of violations of law reflect strengths in an institution’s CMS. A robust CMS appropriate for the size, complexity and risk profile of an institution’s business often will prevent violations or will facilitate early detection of

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Consumer Compliance Rating System

The consumer compliance rating system is a comprehensive evaluation of the financial institution’s performance under the CC Rating System by considering the categories and assessment factors described above. The consumer compliance rating reflects the effectiveness of an institution’s CMS to identify and manage compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and to prevent violations of law and consumer harm, as evidenced by the financial institution’s performance under each of the assessment factors.

The consumer compliance rating reflects a comprehensive evaluation of the financial institution’s performance under the CC Rating System by considering the categories and assessment factors in the context of the size, complexity, and risk profile of an institution. It is not based on a numeric average or any other quantitative calculation. Specific numeric ratings will not be assigned to any of the 12 assessment factors. Thus, an institution need not achieve a satisfactory assessment in all categories in order to be assigned an overall satisfactory rating. Conversely, an institution may be assigned a less than satisfactory rating even if some of its assessments were satisfactory.

In arriving at the final rating, the examiner must balance potentially differing conclusions about the effectiveness of the financial institution’s CMS over the individual products, services, and activities of the organization. Depending on the relative materiality of a product line to the institution, an observed weakness in the management of that product line may or may not impact the conclusion about the institution’s overall performance in the associated assessment factor(s). For example, serious weaknesses in the policies and procedures or audit program of the mortgage department at a mortgage lender would be of greater supervisory concern than those same gaps at an institution that makes very few mortgage loans and strictly as an accommodation. Greater weight should apply to the financial institution’s management of material products with significant potential consumer compliance risk.

An institution may receive a less than satisfactory rating even when no violations were identified, based on deficiencies or weaknesses identified in the institution’s CMS. For example, examiners may identify weaknesses in elements of the CMS in a new loan product. Because the presence of those weaknesses left unaddressed could result in future violations of law and consumer harm, the CMS deficiencies could impact the overall consumer compliance rating, even if no violations were identified.

Similarly, an institution may receive a 1 or 2 rating even when violations were present, if the CMS is commensurate with the risk profile and complexity of the institution. For example, when violations involve limited impact on consumers, were self-identified, and resolved promptly, the evaluation may result in a 1 or 2 rating. After evaluating the institution’s performance in the two CMS categories, Board and Management Oversight and Compliance Program, and the dimensions of the violations in the third category, the examiner may conclude that the overall strength of the CMS and the nature of observed violations viewed together do not present significant supervisory concerns.

The prudential regulators will continue to assign and update, as appropriate, consumer compliance ratings for institutions they supervise, including those with total assets of more than $10 billion. As a member of the FFIEC, the CFPB will also use the CC Rating System to assign a consumer compliance rating, as appropriate, for institutions with total assets of more than $10 billion, as well as for nonbanks for which it has footnote: Section 1025 of the Dodd-Frank Act (12 U.S.C. 5515) applies to federally insured institutions with more than $10 billion in total assets. This section granted the CFPB exclusive authority to examine insured depository institutions and their affiliates for compliance with Federal consumer financial laws. The prudential regulators retained authority for examining insured depository institutions with more than $10 billion in total assets for compliance with certain other laws related to consumer financial protection, including the Fair Housing Act, the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, and section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Consumer Compliance Rating System

jurisdiction regarding the enforcement of Federal consumer financial laws as defined under the Dodd-Frank Act. The prudential regulators will take into consideration any material supervisory information provided by the CFPB, as that information relates to covered supervisory activities or covered examinations. Similarly, the CFPB will take into consideration any material supervisory information provided by prudential regulators in appropriate supervisory situations.

State regulators maintain supervisory authority to conduct examinations of state-chartered depository institutions and licensed entities. As such, states may assign consumer compliance ratings to evaluate compliance with both state and federal laws and regulations. States will collaborate and consider material supervisory information from other state and federal regulatory agencies during the course of examinations.

8 12 U.S.C. 5481 et seq. A financial institution with assets over $10 billion may receive a consumer compliance rating by both its primary prudential regulator and the CFPB. The rating is based on each agency’s review of the institution’s CMS and compliance with the federal consumer protection laws falling under each agency’s jurisdiction.

9 The prudential regulators and the CFPB signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Supervisory Coordination dated May 16, 2012 (MOU) intended to facilitate the coordination of supervisory activities involving financial institutions with more than $10 billion in assets as required under the Dodd-Frank Act.

297250 Section 1005.36(a)(1) of Regulation E requires the remittance transfer provider for a one-time transfer scheduled five or more business days before the date of transfer or for the first in a series of preauthorized remittance transfers to: (i) (1) provide either the pre-payment disclosure and receipt; or (2) the combined disclosure; and (ii) mail or deliver to the sender an additional receipt meeting the requirements of Section 1005.31(b)(2) no later than one business day after the date of the transfer. [297250]

297270 Section 1005.36(b)(2) of Regulation E requires for each subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer that the most recent receipt must be accurate as of when such transfer is made except: (i) the temporal elements required by Section 1005.31(b)(2)(ii) and (b)(2)(vii) must be accurate only if the transfer is the first transfer to occur after the disclosure was provided; and (ii) to the extent estimates are permitted under Section 1005.32. [297270]

297275 Section 1005.36(b)(3) of Regulation E requires the disclosures provided pursuant to paragraphs (a)(1)(ii) or (a)(2)(ii) must be accurate as of when the remittance transfer to which it pertains is made, except to the extent estimates are permitted by Section 1005.32(a) or (b)(1). [297275]

297285 Section 1005.36(d)(1)(i) of Regulation E requires the remittance transfer provider to disclose certain information to the sender for any subsequent transfer in a series of preauthorized remittance transfers. The remittance transfer provider must disclose: (A) the date the provider will make the subsequent transfer using the term “Future Transfer Date” or a substantially similar term; (B) a statement about the rights of the sender regarding the Section 1022.72(b)(2) of Regulation V states that a person that sets the material terms of credit that is granted, extended, or provided to a consumer by placing the consumer within one of a discrete number of pricing tiers for a specific type of credit product, based in whole or in part on a consumer report, may comply with the requirements of paragraph (a) of this section by providing a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer who is not placed within the top pricing tier or tiers, as described in paragraph (b)(2)(ii) or (b)(2)(iii). [113230]

Section 1022.72(c) of Regulation V states that a credit card issuer subject to the requirements of paragraph (a) of this section may use the case-by-case method, credit score proxy method, or tiered pricing method to identify consumers to whom it must provide a risk-based pricing notice. Alternatively, a credit card issuer may satisfy its obligation under paragraph (a) of this section by providing a risk-based pricing notice to consumers who meet the criteria outlined in section 1022.72(c)(1)(i) or 1022.72(c)(1)(ii). [113235]

Section 1022.72(d) of Regulation V states that a person is generally subject to the requirements of paragraph (a) of this section and must provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer in the form and manner required by this subpart if the person uses a consumer report in connection with a review of credit that has been extended to the consumer; and based in whole or in part on the consumer report, the annual percentage rate is increased. [113240]

Section 1022.73(a)(1) of Regulation V requires the risk-based pricing notice required by section 1022.72(a) or section 1022.72(c) to include the information specified in paragraphs (a)(1)(i) through (a)(1)(ix) of this subpart. [113250]

Section 1022.73(a)(2) of Regulation V requires the risk-based pricing notice required by section 1022.72(d) to include the information specified in paragraphs (a)(2)(i) through (a)(2)(ix) of this subpart. [113255]

Section 1022.73(b) of Regulation V requires that the risk-based pricing notice required by § 1022.72(a), (c), or (d) to be clear and conspicuous and provided to the consumer in oral, written, or electronic form. [113260]

113265
Section 1022.73(c)(1) of Regulation V requires that a risk-based pricing notice be provided to a consumer in accordance with the timeframes set forth in paragraph (c)(1)(i), (c)(1)(ii), or (c)(1)(iii) of this subpart, as applicable. [113265]

113270
Section 1022.73(c)(2) of Regulation V requires that the conditions set forth in paragraph (c)(2)(i) or (c)(2)(ii) of this subpart be satisfied when a person to whom a credit obligation is initially payable grants, extends, or provides credit to a consumer for the purpose of financing the purchase of an automobile from an auto dealer or other party that is not affiliated with the person. [113270]

113275
Section 1022.73(c)(3) of Regulation V requires that the risk based pricing notice be provided in the timeframes set forth in paragraph (c)(3)(i) or (c)(2)(ii) of this subpart when credit under an open-end credit plan is granted, extended, or provided to a consumer in person or by telephone for the purpose of financing the contemporaneous purchase of goods or services. [113275]

Section 1022.75(a) of Regulation V requires that a risk-based pricing notice be provided when the conditions set forth in section 1022.72(d) have been met, even if a consumer has previously received a risk-based pricing notice in connection with a grant, extension, or other provision of credit. 370301 | Section 1003.4(b) of Regulation C requires a nonexempt financial institution to collect data regarding applications for, and originations and purchases of, home purchase loans, home improvement loans, and refinance loans for each calendar year. An institution is required to collect data regarding requests under a preapproval program (as defined in § 1003.2) only if the preapproval request is denied or results in the origination of a home purchase loan. These collected data shall include the ethnicity, race, and sex of the applicant or borrower as prescribed in Appendix B. [370301] |

370302 | Section 1003.4(d) of Regulation C requires that a nonexempt financial institution shall not report: (1) Loans originated or purchased by the financial institution acting in a fiduciary capacity (such as trustee); (2) Loans on unimproved land; (3) Temporary financing (such as bridge or construction loans); (4) The purchase of an interest in a pool of loans (such as mortgage-participation certificates, mortgage-backed securities, or real estate mortgage investment conduits); (5) The purchase solely of the right to service loans; or (6) Loans acquired as part of a merger or acquisition, or as part of the acquisition of all of the assets and liabilities of a branch office as defined in § 1003.2(1). [370302] |

370501 | Section 1003.5(a)(1) of Regulation C requires a nonexempt financial institution to send its complete loan/application register to the agency office specified in Appendix A by March 1 following the calendar year for which the loan data are compiled. The institution shall retain a copy for its records for at least three years. [370501]

370505 Section 1003.5(a)(2) of Regulation C requires a nonexempt subsidiary of a bank or savings association to complete a separate loan/application register. The subsidiary shall submit the register, directly or through its parent, to the agency that supervises its parent, to the agency office specified in Appendix A, by March 1 following the calendar year for which the loan data are compiled. The subsidiary shall retain a copy for its records for at least three years. [370505]

370702 Section 1003.5(b)(3) of Regulation C requires a nonexempt financial institution to either: (i) Make its disclosure statement available to the public, within ten business days of receiving it, in at least one branch office in each other metropolitan area where the institution has offices (the disclosure statement need only contain data relating to the metropolitan area where the branch is located); or (ii) Post the address for sending written requests in the lobby of each branch office in other metropolitan areas where the institution has offices; and mail or deliver a copy of the disclosure statement within fifteen calendar days of receiving a written request (The disclosure statement need only contain data relating to the metropolitan area for which the request is made.). Including the address in the general notice required under paragraph (e) of this section satisfies this requirement. [370702]

370801 Section 1003.5(c) of Regulation C requires a nonexempt financial institution to make its loan/application register available to the public after removing the following information regarding each entry: the application or loan number, the date that the application was received, and the date action was taken.

An institution shall make its modified register available following the calendar year for which the data are compiled, by March 31 for a request received on or before March 1, and within thirty calendar days for a request received after March 1. The modified register need only contain data relating to the metropolitan area for which the request is made. [370801]

370901 Section 1003.5(d) of Regulation C requires a nonexempt financial institution to make its modified register available to the public for a period of three years and its disclosure statement available for a period of five years. An institution shall make the data available for inspection and copying during the hours the office is normally open to the public for business. It may impose a reasonable fee for any cost incurred in providing or reproducing the data. [370901]

371101 Section 1003.5(e) of Regulation C requires a nonexempt financial institution to post a general notice about the availability of its HMDA data in the lobby of its home office and of each branch office located in a metropolitan area. An institution shall provide promptly upon request the location of the institution's offices where the statement is available for inspection and copying, or it may include the location in the lobby notice. with this subpart. These policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the bank, and apply only to those employees acting within the scope of their employment at the bank.

At a minimum, these policies and procedures must:

(a) establish a process for identifying which employees of the bank are required to be registered mortgage loan originators;
(b) require that all employees of the covered financial institution who are mortgage loan originators be informed of the registration requirements of the S.A.F.E. Act and this subpart and be instructed on how to comply with such requirements and procedures;
(c) establish procedures to comply with the unique identifier requirements in Section 1007.105;
(d) establish reasonable procedures for confirming the adequacy and accuracy of employee registrations, including updates and renewals, by comparisons with its own records;
(e) establish reasonable procedures for tracking systems and monitoring compliance with the registration and renewal requirements and procedures;
(f) provide for independent testing for compliance with this subpart to be conducted at least annually by bank personnel or an outside party;
(g) provide for appropriate action in the case of any employee who fails to comply with the registration requirements of the S.A.F.E. Act, this subpart, or the bank’s related policies and procedures, including prohibiting such employees from acting as mortgage loan originators or other appropriate disciplinary actions;
(h) establish a process for reviewing employee criminal history background reports received pursuant to this subpart, taking appropriate action consistent with Federal law, including section 19 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and implementing regulations with respect to these reports, and maintaining records of these reports and actions taken with respect to applicable employees; and
(i) establish procedures designed to ensure that any third party with which the bank has an arrangement related to mortgage loan origination has policies and procedures to comply with the S.A.F.E. Section 1026.9(c)(2)(i) of Regulation Z requires creditors of open-end (not home-secured) plans to provide a change in terms notice whenever a significant change in account terms as described in paragraph (c)(2)(ii) is made to a term required to be disclosed under Section 1026.6(b)(3), (b)(4), or (b)(5) or the required minimum periodic payment is increased. The creditor must provide the written notice of the change at least 45 days prior to the effective date of the change to each consumer who may be affected. [069910]

Section 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A) of Regulation Z requires the change in terms notice provided pursuant to paragraph (c)(2)(i) to contain the following information, as applicable:
(1) a summary of the changes made to terms required by Sections 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2), a description of any increase in the required minimum periodic payment, and a description of any security interest being acquired by the creditor;
(2) a statement that changes are being made to the account;
(3) notice of opt-out rights;
(4) the date the changes will become effective;
(5) a statement that the consumer may find additional information about the summarized changes in the notice;
(6) a statement regarding the penalty rate;
(7) required statements regarding an increase in the annual percentage rate. [069915]

090701 Section 1026.24(e)(1) of Regulation Z states if a catalog or other multiple-page advertisement, or an electronic advertisement (such as an advertisement appearing on an Internet Web site), gives information in a table or schedule in sufficient detail to permit determination of the disclosures required by paragraph (d)(2) of this section, it shall be considered a single advertisement if: (i) The table or schedule is clearly and conspicuously set forth; and (ii) Any statement of terms of the credit terms in paragraph (d)(1) of this section appearing anywhere else in the catalog or advertisement clearly refers to the page or location where the table or schedule begins. [090701]

090805 Section 1026.24(f)(2) of Regulation Z requires that if an advertisement for credit secured by a dwelling, other than television or radio advertisements, states a simple annual rate of interest and more than one simple annual rate of interest will apply over the term of the advertised loan, the advertisement shall disclose in a clear and conspicuous manner in accordance with paragraph (ii) of this section:

(A) Each simple annual rate of interest that will apply. In variable rate transactions, a rate determined by adding an index and margin shall be disclosed based on a reasonably current index and margin;
(B) The period of time during which each payment will apply; and
(C) In an advertisement for credit secured by a first lien on a dwelling, the fact that the payments do not include amounts for taxes and insurance premiums, if applicable, and that the actual payment obligation will be greater.

The requirements of this section do not apply to an envelope in which an application or solicitation is mailed, or to a banner advertisement or pop-up advertisement linked to an application or solicitation provided electronically. [090805]

090810 Section 1026.24(f)(3) of Regulation Z requires in addition to the requirements of paragraph (c) of this section, if an advertisement for credit secured by a dwelling states the amount of any payment, the advertisement shall disclose in a clear and conspicuous manner:

(A) The amount of each payment that will apply over the term of the loan, including any balloon payment. In variable-rate transactions, payments that will be determined based on the application of the sum of an index and margin shall be disclosed based on a reasonably current index and margin;
(B) The period of time during which each payment will apply; and
(C) In an advertisement for credit secured by a first lien on a dwelling, the fact that the payments do not include amounts for taxes and insurance premiums, if applicable, and that the actual payment obligation will be greater.

The requirements of this section do not apply to an envelope in which an application or solicitation is mailed, or to a banner advertisement or pop-up advertisement linked to an application or solicitation provided electronically. [090810]

090820 Section 1026.24(g) of Regulation Z requires that in an advertisement made through television or radio stating any of the terms requiring additional disclosures under paragraph (d)(2) of this section may comply with paragraph (d)(2) of this section either by:

(1) Stating clearly and conspicuously each of the additional disclosures required under paragraph (d)(2) of this section; or (2) Stating clearly and conspicuously the information required by paragraph (d)(2)(iii) of this section and listing a toll-free telephone number, or any telephone number that allows a consumer to reverse the phone charges when calling for information, along with a reference that such number may be used by consumers to obtain additional cost information. ### Truth in Lending Restitution Narrative

Section 108(e)(1) of the Truth in Lending Act requires the FDIC to order creditors to make monetary adjustments to the accounts of consumers in cases where the annual percentage rate has been understated by more than the allowed tolerance.

For Finance Charge violations

Section 108(e)(1) of the Truth in Lending Act requires the FDIC to order creditors to make monetary adjustments to the accounts of consumers in cases where the finance charge has been understated by more than the allowed tolerance.

For Total Failure to Disclosed the Annual Percentage Rate

Section 108(e)(2)(c) of the Truth in Lending Act provides that if a disclosure error involved a total failure to disclose the annual percentage rate the FDIC may order the creditor to make an equitable adjustment to the account of the affected consumer.

III. Examination Templates
Dear [Name]:

We are planning to conduct a [CHOOSE ONE: Compliance OR Compliance and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA)] examination of your institution in the upcoming quarter. The purpose of this letter is to provide you with information about the examination process and a list of available resources.

EXAMINATION PROCESS

Our upcoming examination will assess how your institution complies with various consumer protection laws and regulations. Examiners will evaluate your institution’s compliance management system (CMS) using a risk-based approach that involves: developing a compliance risk profile of your institution’s products, services, markets, organizational structure, operations, and past supervisory performance; identifying inherent risks associated with the level and complexity of your business operations; and testing selected transactions when an area has a high risk of consumer harm and CMS efforts appear weak.

Examiners will evaluate your institution using the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System, which is organized under three broad categories: board and management oversight, compliance program, and violations of law and consumer harm. The first two categories, board and management oversight and compliance program, are used to assess your institution’s CMS. The third category, violations of law and consumer harm, includes assessment factors that evaluate the dimensions of any identified violation or consumer harm.

- Board and management oversight is assessed based on the level of oversight and commitment to your institution’s CMS; effectiveness of your institution’s change management processes; comprehension, identification, and management of risks arising from your institution’s products, services, or activities; and self-identification of consumer compliance issues and corrective action undertaken as such issues are identified.
- The compliance program is assessed based on whether your institution’s policies and procedures are appropriate to the risk in the products, services, and activities of your institution; the degree to which compliance training is current and tailored to risk and staff responsibilities; the sufficiency of the monitoring and audit, if applicable, to encompass compliance risks throughout your institution; and the responsiveness and effectiveness of the consumer complaint resolution process.
III. Templates — Pre-Examination Information Packet

- The violations of law and consumer harm are assessed by analyzing the root cause(s) of any violations of law identified during the examination; the severity of any consumer harm resulting from violations; the duration of time over which the violations occurred; and the pervasiveness of the violations.

Examiners will also review your institution’s ability to appropriately assess, measure, monitor, and control the risks associated with significant third-party relationships. Additionally, examiners will review and follow-up on violations, recommendations, and Matters Requiring Board Attention, as applicable, identified at your previous compliance examination. Information related to the examination process, including examination procedures and definitions of consumer harm, can be found in the FDIC Compliance Examination Manual, which is available at www.fdic.gov/regulations/compliance/manual.

[ONLY INCLUDED WHEN CRA EXAMINATION SCHEDULED: The CRA is intended to encourage depository institutions to help meet the credit needs of the communities in which they operate, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, consistent with safe and sound banking operations. The FDIC has adopted interagency examination procedures for the following types of institutions: Small Institutions, Intermediate Small Institutions, Large Retail Institutions, Limited Purpose and Wholesale Institutions, and Institutions under Strategic Plans. More information about the CRA examination procedures and the asset size thresholds can be found at www.ffiec.gov/cra.]

Pre-Examination Interview

The Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) will conduct a pre-examination interview prior to the on-site portion of your examination. The purpose of the interview is to ensure that we understand your institution’s operations, as well as the products and services offered. It further allows us to tailor any information and document requests appropriately and plan for the examination efficiently.

Enclosed is a list of the questions the EIC will use to conduct the interview. We encourage you to review these questions in advance and invite appropriate institution personnel to participate in the interview. We are not requesting that you prepare written responses to these questions. After this interview, you will receive a Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR) to complete and return to the FDIC. The EIC will use your responses to the CIDR to determine the scope of our on-site review. Once the EIC has determined the products and services to be reviewed on-site, a subsequent request for specific transactional level information may be provided.

FDICconnect

During the pre-examination interview, the EIC will discuss the method(s) available for exchanging examination information and will determine your willingness to provide electronic information via FDICconnect. FDICconnect is an FDIC web-based application located on a secure website designed to specifically accommodate the interchange of sensitive information between the FDIC and the financial institutions we supervise. FDICconnect is our preferred method for exchange of all documents associated with the examination. You can upload documents to this site as separate files, or you can utilize any computer application that electronically groups or “zips” multiple files together and upload the zipped file in one step.

Representatives of your institution should already have access privileges for FDICconnect. Users may access the application and the instructions at www.fdicconnect.gov. If you need assistance accessing or using FDICconnect, please e-mail FDICconnect@fdic.gov or call 877-275-3342.

REFERENCE RESOURCES

Listed below are some of the resources available to assist bank management in understanding and managing the examination process.

FDIC Website
The FDIC’s website has several resources that you may find useful. In particular, www.fdic.gov/regulations contains the following links:

- Bank Examinations – includes information about Compliance and CRA examination processes and supervisory guidance.
- Resources for Bank Officers & Directors – includes the Community Banking Initiative and the Directors’ Resource Center, which focuses on guidance and other information that address current issues faced by the banking industry. Links to the Technical Assistance Video Program are also available.

Technical Assistance Brochure
FDIC examiners can provide you with certain types of technical assistance related to consumer compliance. A list of the types of technical assistance available from the FDIC is contained in the enclosed Technical Assistance for Managing Consumer Compliance Responsibilities brochure.

COMMUNICATION WITH FDIC

We strive to maintain open communication throughout the examination process. Ongoing communication between the examination staff and bank management is a critical element of effective bank supervision. All Board members are also encouraged to participate with bank management in the examination process, which can provide an opportunity to discuss compliance-related banking matters.

Your institution is supervised by the [XXX] Field Office, which is part of the FDIC’s [XXX] Region. The EIC is your primary point of contact; however, if you wish to provide feedback or have concerns during the examination, we encourage you to contact the Field Supervisor, Supervisory Examiner, or Regional Office. In the event these efforts are not successful, you may contact the Division Director at DirectorDCP@fdic.gov. The FDIC provided this communication channel to FDIC-supervised institutions in FIL-51-2016, a copy of which is enclosed.
FDIC Post-Examination Survey
At the end of the examination, you will receive a Post-Examination Survey. We encourage financial institutions to provide feedback on the examination process, Report of Examination, and other supervisory processes by completing this survey. Your feedback is confidential and responses are not attributable to your institution unless you specifically request follow-up from FDIC senior leadership. Honest and candid feedback helps ensure that the FDIC’s supervisory programs are fair, balanced, and objective.

FDIC Ombudsman
The FDIC Office of the Ombudsman is a confidential, neutral, and independent source of information and assistance to anyone affected by the FDIC in its regulatory, resolution, receivership, or asset disposition activities. If you have concerns about your interactions with the FDIC, you may contact them with questions. Refer to the enclosed FDIC Office of the Ombudsman brochure for more detailed information.

FDIC Appeals Process
If disagreements or other concerns arise, we encourage bank management to communicate their concerns with the EIC, field office management, or the appropriate regional office staff. If these efforts to resolve disagreements are not successful, you may pursue a formal request as explained in the enclosed Supervision Appeals Review Committee (SARC) brochure.

If you have questions regarding the information in this letter, please contact me at [phone number].

Sincerely,

[Name]

The Bank of Anytown Examination Template provides guidance on the format and content of the Report of Examination (ROE). Examiners use their professional judgment and discretion when writing the ROE. The ROE informs the Board of Directors about the examination findings. Additionally, the tone matches the Compliance Management System element descriptors (strong, adequate, and weak). Examination staff prepare the ROE according to the Plain Writing Act, which requires federal agencies to use clear government communication that the public can understand and use. Finally, all formal recommendations that require follow-up by the bank are limited to the “Matters Requiring Board Attention” section of the ROE.

SCOPE OF EXAMINATION

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Date of examination and name of the Examiner-in-Charge.
- Review period (discuss CRA evaluation period, if applicable).
- Type (Compliance, CRA, both, or Visitation) and purpose of the examination.
- Description of the role or impact, if any, of other examination findings, ratings, or pre-examination materials on establishing the scope.
- Description of the process or procedures used to review the CMS, fair lending, and CRA.

Example:

Examiner-in-Charge Robin J. Cummings conducted a compliance examination and a Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) evaluation of Bank of Anytown as of [month, day, year].

The examination included a risk-focused review of the bank’s compliance management system (CMS), with an emphasis on areas exhibiting potential risk of consumer harm, since the [month, day, year] FDIC compliance examination. FDIC data, bank documentation, and publicly available information influenced the examination scope. Based on the compliance risk profile of the institution, examiners focused transaction testing in areas such as residential lending activities and third-party relationships. In addition, examiners conducted a fair lending review using the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council’s Fair Lending Examination Procedures focusing on consumer loan pricing. Examiners evaluated the bank’s CRA performance using Intermediate Small Institution Examination Procedures, focusing on activities since the previous evaluation dated [month, day, year].

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Disclosure of, and support for, the Consumer Compliance Rating.
- Discussion of the primary factors contributing to the rating.
- Trend of the institution’s compliance posture since the prior examination.
- Reference to the Matters Requiring Board Attention page, if appropriate.

Example:

A Consumer Compliance Rating of “2” is assigned. An institution in this category represents a financial institution that maintains a CMS that is satisfactory at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution’s products and services and at substantially limiting violations of law and consumer harm. The rating is supported by adequate Board of Directors (Board) and management oversight and an adequate compliance program. Although a Level 3/High Severity violation is cited, the violation was self-identified and management implemented corrective action during the examination. As a result, the duration of consumer harm was limited. The compliance posture remains unchanged since the prior examination. The Matters Requiring Board Attention, which follow the Examiner’s Comments and Conclusions, detail matters that require follow-up by the Board and additional supervisory oversight.

COMPLIANCE MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Board and Management Oversight

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information:

- Summary statement about the quality of Board and Management Oversight based upon the institution’s size, complexity, and risk profile. Use one of the following descriptors: strong, adequate, or weak.
- Comments addressing each of the following components of Board and Management Oversight, as outlined below under the optional sub-headings:

  o Oversight and Commitment –
    - Commitment to and oversight of the institution’s CMS.
    - Level of resources dedicated toward compliance functions.
    - Due diligence and oversight of third parties to ensure compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations, and appropriate oversight of third parties’ compliance responsibilities.

  o Change Management –
    - Anticipation and responsiveness to changes in applicable laws and regulations, market conditions, and products and services offered.
    - Due diligence reviews performed in advance of product changes, considering the entire lifecycle of the product or service, and after implementation of changes.

  o Comprehension, Identification, and Management of Risk –
    - Comprehension and identification of compliance risks, including emerging risks, in the institution’s financial products, services, and other activities.
    - Management of identified risk, including self-assessments.

  o Corrective Action and Self-Identification –
    - Comment(s) addressing whether Matters Requiring Board Attention and recommendations from the previous examination, if any, have been satisfactorily addressed. Comments regarding any outstanding issues should be made under the applicable CMS elements.
    - Identification of and responsiveness to compliance risk management deficiencies and violations of law or regulations, including remediation.

- Separate summary statement for any recommendation(s) after the discussion of strengths and weaknesses of the Board and Management Oversight components, as applicable.

Example:

Board and management oversight is adequate. Examiners considered oversight and commitment; change management; comprehension, identification, and management of risk; and corrective action and self-identification.

Oversight and Commitment

Board and management provide adequate oversight to the compliance function. The Board demonstrates its commitment to maintaining an effective CMS in several key ways. First, the Board allocates sufficient resources to compliance functions. Vice President and Compliance Officer (CO) Taylor Cook has the independence and authority needed to effect corrective actions and is knowledgeable of consumer protection laws and regulations. Second, minutes from the Board, Compliance, and Audit Committees revealed regular discussion and ample knowledge of compliance matters. Finally, the Board reviews and approves compliance policies annually, or more frequently as necessitated by changes in consumer protection regulations.

Management has generally conducted effective and ongoing due diligence and oversight of third parties. However, one weakness was identified related to a new relationship with third-party service provider, Error Resolution Services, Inc. (ERS). The bank contracted with ERS at year-end [year], but did not adequately review the contract or understand processes related to handling error resolutions, resulting in a Level 2/Medium Severity Violation of the Electronic Funds Transfer Act (EFTA).

Strengthening due diligence and contract review processes prior to entering contracts with third parties will help mitigate the risk of consumer harm and prevent future violations. See Matters Requiring Board Attention and Level 2/Medium Severity Violations Pages for additional details.

Change Management

Management has demonstrated the ability to respond timely and adequately to regulatory changes. Management proactively developed procedures and provided training in anticipation of the Truth in Lending Act (TILA)-Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) Integrated Disclosure Rule (TRID). Management was also aware of changes to flood insurance regulations in response to the Biggert-Waters Act and updated policies and procedures accordingly. However, changes were not fully communicated to personnel, which contributed to a Level 2/Medium Severity Violation of Flood Insurance. See Level 2/Medium Severity Violations Pages for recommendations.

Comprehension, Identification, and Management of Risk

Management comprehends and identifies compliance risks throughout the institution, including risks involved with new products and services. For example, management identified the new overdraft program as a high-risk area. As a result, CO Cook implemented a comprehensive oversight program to ensure compliance with applicable regulations and internal policies on an ongoing basis.

In addition to discussions held at periodic Compliance Committee meetings, CO Cook presents emerging issues to the Audit Committee, as well as the results of monitoring efforts and compliance audits. The Board is sufficiently informed through reviews of Compliance and Audit Committee minutes. This structure enhances Board and management’s ability to identify, prevent, and correct deficiencies.

Corrective Action and Self-Identification

Management appropriately identifies deficiencies through ongoing monitoring and auditing programs. In addition, all Matters Requiring Board Attention, violations, and recommendations from the prior examination were fully addressed and in a timely manner. However, in one case management failed to implement corrective action for a self-identified issue. Specifically, a Level 3/High Severity Violation was cited involving an exception in the audit report in which management failed to provide corrective action. Eight consumers were harmed but were not provided remediation.

Examiners recommend that management ensure full corrective action is completed, including any applicable remediation, in response to all compliance-related findings. See Level 3/High Severity Violation Pages for additional details.

Compliance Program

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Summary statement about the quality of the overall Compliance Program using one of the following descriptors: strong, adequate, or weak.
- Subsequent information, as applicable, under the designated sub-headings: Policies and Procedures, Training, Monitoring and/or Audit, and Consumer Complaint Response.
- Separate summary statement about policies and procedures, training, monitoring and/or audit, and consumer complaint response using one of the following descriptors: strong, adequate, or weak.
- Scope and adequacy of policies and procedures, training, monitoring and/or audit, and consumer complaint response. Focus on strengths and weaknesses, particularly in identifying, addressing, and preventing consumer harm.
- Deficiencies in policies and procedures, training, and monitoring and/or audit; and violations that resulted, or could pose a risk of consumer harm.
- Volume of consumer complaints received by the bank, or complaints pertaining to the bank, received by third-party service provider(s) since the prior compliance examination. State number and impact, if known. State whether the institution responded timely and effectively.
- Separate summary statement for any recommendation(s) after the discussion of strengths and weaknesses of the Compliance Program components, as applicable.

Example:

The Compliance Program is adequate. Examiners considered strengths and weaknesses in policies and procedures, training, monitoring and audit, and consumer complaint response.

Policies and procedures and third-party relationship management programs are adequate. The bank has written policies for all applicable consumer protection regulations and formal procedures for most compliance-related regulations. Fair lending procedures document underwriting criteria, exceptions to policy, and loan processing centralization. However, there is no guidance on pricing consumer loans. Instead, individual loan officers have pricing discretion. The lack of formalized guidance combined with a lack of internal controls over pricing increases fair lending risks. In addition, a weakness in procedures regarding the calculation of annual percentage rates contributed to the Level 3/High Severity Violation of TILA, resulting in customer restitution totaling $18,000. Finally, the lack of formalized due diligence procedures to ensure that Board and management are aware of compliance and other risks prior to entering into contracts with third parties contributed to Level 2/Medium Severity violations of the EFTA.
Examiners recommend that management develop formal guidance on pricing consumer loans and include monitoring and/or auditing of areas where discretion is allowed. The development and implementation of third-party oversight procedures will help ensure appropriate due diligence and contract structuring, and revisions to the Loan Processing Policy and related procedures will provide for accurate annual percentage rate calculations. See Matters Requiring Board Attention, Level 3/High Severity Violations, and Level 2/Medium Severity Violations Pages for additional details.

Training
Compliance training is adequate and provided timely to appropriate staff. CO Cook is responsible for compliance training and establishes an annual training schedule for Directors, management, and staff. Compliance training is multifaceted, employing in-person meetings, online programs, and external workshops and seminars. Training appropriately focuses on new and revised consumer protection regulations and areas exhibiting greater risk of consumer harm. CO Cook periodically assesses employees’ knowledge and updates training with current information. Despite these efforts, a lack of training on new Flood Insurance requirements contributed to the Level 2/Medium Severity Violation resulting in customer restitution totaling $326.

Examiners recommend training loan personnel on recent Flood Insurance requirements. See Level 2/Medium Severity Violation Pages for additional details.

Monitoring and/or Audit
Monitoring practices and the audit program are adequate. The institution employs various methods of monitoring for compliance with consumer protection regulations in the loan administration, deposit operations, and other areas. In addition to regularly scheduled reviews, monitoring is used to follow-up on audit and examination findings, regulation changes, and new product or service implementation. Since the last examination, management implemented an effective pre-closing review of all residential real estate loan transactions.

Monitoring practices are supplemented by a formalized, external audit program. External audit firm Anytown Risk Advisors conducts periodic risk-based compliance audits, including deposit and loan compliance audits semi-annually and fair lending audits annually. Written audit reports are comprehensive, addressing the scope, sample size, identified deficiencies, corrective action recommendations, management’s responses, and timeframes for correction. Responses to audit findings are prompt. The Audit Committee develops an annual compliance risk assessment, which considers exceptions noted in monitoring and assists in prioritizing the audit schedule and scope based on risk. While audit is generally effective, the scope of the [year] lending audit did not review compliance with force-placed flood insurance requirements. Examiners identified a Level 2/Medium Severity Violation of Flood Insurance, specifically relating to force-placed policies.

Examiners recommend expanding the scope of the Flood Insurance audit to include compliance with force-placed Flood Insurance requirements. See Level 2/Medium Severity Violations Pages for additional details.

Consumer complaint response procedures are adequate and address complaints received by the bank and third-party service providers. These complaints include feedback received from consumers, whether it is verbal, written, or electronic. Under the Board-approved complaint policy, CO Cook is charged with investigating and responding to consumer complaints. In addition, CO Cook effectively monitors complaints to identify any issues that may have a widespread impact on consumers or business practices and takes action when warranted. Since the last examination, the bank received one written complaint, which management responded to in a timely and appropriate manner.

VIOLATIONS OF LAW AND CONSUMER HARM

This section should briefly summarize the following information, as applicable:
- Impact of the violation(s) identified on the evaluation of the institution’s CMS and resulting consumer compliance rating.
- Summary statement of the primary weaknesses or deficiencies that contributed to the violations.
- Assessment of severity and duration of consumer harm.
- Pervasiveness or number of consumers impacted.

Example:

The violations identified during this examination did not evidence a deficient CMS or warrant an adverse consumer compliance rating. The violations were the result of minor weaknesses in policies, procedures, training, and third party oversight. One violation resulted in $18,000 of restitution to eight customers. Because the violation was self-identified and partially corrected prior to the examination, the duration of consumer harm was limited. Bank management has committed to full corrective action.

COMMUNITY REINVESTMENT ACT

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.
- The CRA rating, including the interagency definition of the rating
- A brief statement explaining the basis for the rating
- A statement referring the reader to the CRA Performance Evaluation

Example:

A CRA Rating of Satisfactory is assigned. The bank has a satisfactory record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment areas, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods. Satisfactory ratings under the Lending Test and Community Development Test support the overall rating. Please refer to the Performance Evaluation for further details.

MEETING WITH MANAGEMENT

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.
- The date of the meeting.
- The names and titles of the attendees representing the FDIC, state regulators, and the bank.
- Brief comment on items discussed at the meeting, including but not limited to the compliance examination findings and proposed rating, fair lending review, and the CRA performance evaluation findings and proposed rating. Include a statement that ratings are subject to additional review.
- Management’s response to the findings, proposed ratings, and recommendations; CRA performance evaluation and proposed ratings; and any proposed enforcement action(s), if applicable.
• Management's willingness to make restitution, if applicable.

Example:

On [month, day, year], Examiner-in-Charge Cummings, Supervisory Examiner Kenneth Randall, and Financial Institution Specialist Joseph Barr met with management to discuss the results of the examination and the CRA evaluation. President James Crowley, Senior Vice President Stephen Gidney, Vice President Matthew Wolcott, Vice President Edward Harl, and CO Cook represented the bank.

Examiner-in-Charge Cummings discussed the scope of the examination, and the strengths and weaknesses of the CMS. She also discussed the importance of maintaining a CMS that prioritizes areas where harm to consumers may occur, particularly in third-party oversight. Finally, Examiner-in-Charge Cummings addressed the fair lending portion of the examination, the violations cited, and the bank’s CRA performance.

Examiners discussed all recommendations and Matters Requiring Board Attention in the Report and disclosed the proposed compliance and CRA ratings. Examiner-in-Charge Cummings informed management that the ratings are subject to additional review. Management was receptive to the findings of the compliance examination and CRA evaluation. They concurred with the proposed ratings, agreed to address all Matters Requiring Board Attention and recommendations, and confirmed that voluntary restitution was provided to customers impacted by the TILA and Flood Insurance violations on [month, day, year].

Matters Requiring Board Attention

This section is only included in the ROE for significant matters that require action by the Board and additional supervisory oversight. Matters Requiring Board Attention should be presented on a separate page, and must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- An introductory statement explaining the significance of the matters.
- Specific matters (CMS deficiencies or violations) that require action by the Board and follow-up by the regulators. Each Matter Requiring Board Attention must include the following components:
  - Specific issue warranting attention
  - Measurable action to be taken
  - Benefit of prompt corrective action or potential consequence of inaction
- Board or management’s response to the Matters Requiring Board Attention, and the timeframe(s) for implementation. Examiners may use their judgment in determining whether one response to the Matters Requiring Board Attention is sufficient, or if an individual response to each item is necessary. Include the name(s) of the individual(s) who committed to the corrective action(s) whether there is one response to all matters or individual responses to each. Also include a conclusion reminding the Board of their responsibility to respond.

Example:

The following matters identified during the compliance examination represent areas where Board action is necessary to ensure the CMS continues to provide a framework to successfully manage its compliance responsibilities and risks. These matters will receive supervisory follow-up prior to the next examination.

- Third Party Oversight - The Board and management did not conduct sufficient due diligence when entering into a third-party contract. This resulted in a violation of the EFTA and potential harm to customers. The development and implementation of procedures governing third-party providers will help provide for effective due diligence prior to entering into contracts with third parties. Furthermore, these procedures will ensure that the Board and management are aware of compliance and other risks prior to entering into third-party contracts. Financial Institution Letter 44-2008, Guidance for Managing Third-Party Risk (June 6, 2008), provides additional information regarding third-party risk management principles and practices that assist management in developing a third party oversight program that meets the needs of the bank.

- Truth in Lending - Current bank procedures do not include all fees required in the annual percentage rate calculation causing a systemic violation that resulted in a severe level of harm to the bank’s customers. The development and implementation of procedures will assist applicable personnel in including all required fees into the prepaid finance charge and ensure the accurate calculation of annual percentage rates and prevent the recurrence of TILA violations.

President Crowley agreed to implement corrective action in each of the above areas within 30 days after receiving the Report. It is the Board’s responsibility to ensure that these matters are addressed and provide responses, as requested.

Level 3/High Severity Violations

Level 3 violations are those violations that have resulted in significant harm to consumers or members of a community and/or may pose legal or reputational risks, or financial harm to the bank.

Level 3/High Severity and Level 2/Medium Severity Violations, listed in order of severity, must include the following elements, as applicable:

- Summary of regulatory section and six digit violation code
- Description of how the institution’s practices differed from regulatory requirements
- Sample size reviewed, and universe of applicable transactions
- Number of violations identified and 2-3 examples. (Examples are not required if the violation is systemic.)
- Description of the root cause(s) of the violation
- Description of any corrective action taken by the institution before or during the examination
- Information about whether the violation was previously identified but remained unchanged since the previous examination
- Corrective action(s) recommended
- Management’s response to the violation and recommendations (noting the individual responding)

Example:

TRUTH IN LENDING VIOLATIONS SUBJECT TO RESTITUTION

Section 1026.18(e) of Regulation Z requires that the annual percentage rate be accurately disclosed, as defined in Section 1026.22(a). [083502]

Loan processors failed to include the loan guarantee fee as a prepaid finance charge when calculating the “amount financed” on Anytown Housing Finance Agency (AHFA) loans. Consequently, the Truth in Lending (TIL) disclosures understated the annual percentage rate for each loan. In the second and third quarter [year] quality control reports, Anytown Risk Advisors identified this error in all eight AHFA loans the bank originated. At that time, management did not perform a file review or determine if restitution was applicable. Although CO Cook provided TIL training in [month, year], she did not update the bank’s written procedures to reflect how employees should consider the loan guarantee fee in the “amount financed” calculation. This omission is the root cause of the violation. While on-site, CO Cook and examiners confirmed that the eight loans identified by Anytown Risk Advisors represented the total universe of loans originated since the last examination.

Revisions to the Loan Processing Policy and Procedures Manual to specify how different loan fees should be treated in the “amount financed” calculation will help ensure this violation does not recur. In addition, examiners recommend that management implement practices to provide for full corrective action, including any applicable remediation, is made in response to findings.

Management’s Response: Management provided restitution totaling $18,000 on [month, day, year]. CO Cook also committed to updating the Loan Processing Policy and related procedures and committed to ensuring full corrective action in response to findings.
III. Templates — Bank of Anytown

Level 2/Medium Severity Violations

Level 2 violations include systemic, recurring or repetitive errors that represent a failure of the bank to meet a key purpose of the underlying regulation or statute but do not rise to a Level 3 violation.

Refer to the Level 3/High Severity Violations page for required elements.

Example:

FLOOD INSURANCE

Section 339.7(b)(1) of FDIC regulations requires that within 30 days of receipt of a confirmation of a borrower's existing flood insurance coverage, an FDIC-supervised institution or its servicer shall: (i) Notify the insurance provider to terminate any insurance purchased by the FDIC-supervised institution or its servicer under § 339.7(a); and (ii) Refund to the borrower all premiums paid by the borrower for any insurance purchased by the FDIC-supervised institution or its servicer under § 339.7(a) during any period during which the borrower's flood insurance coverage and the insurance coverage purchased by the FDIC-supervised institution or its servicer were each in effect, and any related fees charged to the borrower with respect to the insurance purchased by the FDIC-supervised institution or its servicer during such period. [150620]

Examiners reviewed all five flood insurance policies that management force-placed since the last examination. In two instances, borrowers confirmed that they had purchased private flood insurance policies. Loan personnel terminated the force-placed policies. However, the bank did not refund the premium for the force-placed policy for the timeframe the borrower’s policy was also in effect. CO Cook is aware of the recent Biggert-Waters Act changes and updated the bank’s Flood Insurance Policy and procedures. The root cause of this violation is that CO Cook did not train loan personnel on the new requirements. Further, compliance with force-placed flood insurance requirements was not included in the scope of the Flood Insurance audit, which contributed to the violation continuing undetected.

Examiners recommended training for loan personnel on the recent flood insurance changes and expanding the scope of the Flood Insurance audit to include compliance with force-placed flood insurance requirements. They also reminded management that continued flood insurance violations may result in future civil money penalties.

Management’s Response: CO Cook reviewed the Biggert-Waters Act requirements with loan personnel during the examination. She also scheduled formal flood insurance training for the third quarter of [year]. President Crowley notified the affected customers and voluntarily provided restitution for the premium amounts on [month, day, year].
ELECTRONIC FUND TRANSFERS

Section 1005.11(c) of Regulation E requires a financial institution to promptly investigate and determine whether an error occurred and transmit the results of the investigation and determination to the consumer within the prescribed timeframe after receiving oral notice of an error. (Alternatively, provided the financial institution has complied with the conditions specified therein regarding the provisional recrediting of the amount of the alleged error, it may investigate and determine within the prescribed timeframe whether an error occurred and transmit the results of the investigation and determination to the consumer.) [288601]

Bank personnel did not process all Electronic Fund Transfer (EFT) error disputes according to Section 1005.11(c) of Regulation E. CO Cook explained that management relies solely on ERS to manage the EFT dispute process. ERS is a new third-party service provider contracted since the last examination. Examiners reviewed the log showing all 20 disputes that ERS received relating to the Bank of Anytown. The log notes the timeframes for processing each dispute. There were three disputes under $20 that ERS did not process. During the examination, deposit personnel reviewed the three disputes and determined that no EFT errors occurred that required adjustments to customer accounts. The root cause of this violation is that CO Cook was unaware that the ERS contract stated that claims under $20 would not be processed.

Thorough review of the bank’s third-party oversight procedures and the ERS contract will help ensure that all EFT disputes are processed according to regulatory requirements.

Affected customers are evidenced in the following table:

Management’s Response: President Crowley agreed that it is management’s responsibility to ensure that third-party contracts and procedures comply with regulations. He stated that the bank will properly investigate all claims going forward.
Level 1/Low Severity Violations

Level 1 violations are isolated or sporadic in nature or systemic violations that are unlikely to impact consumers or the underlying purposes of the regulation or statute.

Level 1/Low Severity Violations must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Regulatory section and six-digit violation code
- Description of how the institution’s practices differed from regulatory requirements
- Blanket statement indicating management’s (specific name) actions or intentions to address the noted violation(s)
- The Level 1/Low Severity Violations should be provided to management and a copy retained in the examination workpapers. They should not be included in the ROE.

INSTITUTION RATING

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- The institution’s CRA rating, including the corresponding rating definition
- Rating for each test
- Description of performance under each factor

Example:

INSTITUTION’S CRA RATING: This institution is rated Satisfactory. An institution in this group has a satisfactory record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, in a manner consistent with its resources and capabilities.

Bank of Anytown’s satisfactory Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) performance under the Lending Test and Community Development Test supports the overall rating. Examiners did not identify any evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices. The following points summarize the bank’s Lending Test and Community Development Test performance.

The Lending Test is rated Satisfactory.

- The loan-to-deposit (LTD) ratio is reasonable given the institution’s size, financial condition, and assessment area credit needs.

- The bank made a majority of its small business and home mortgage loans in the assessment area.

- The geographic distribution of loans reflects reasonable dispersion throughout the assessment area.

- The distribution of borrowers reflects reasonable penetration of loans among businesses of different sizes and individuals of different income levels.

- The institution did not receive any CRA-related complaints since the previous evaluation; therefore, this factor did not affect the Lending Test rating.

The Community Development Test is rated Satisfactory.

- The institution demonstrated adequate responsiveness to the community development needs of its assessment area through community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services, as appropriate. Examiners considered the institution’s capacity and the need and availability of such opportunities for community development in the assessment area.
SCOPE OF EVALUATION

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Identification of procedures used
- Brief description of tests used
- Brief discussion of assessment areas reviewed. Indicate whether a full-scope or limited-scope review is used and why.
- Description of product lines reviewed, considering number and dollar volume during the evaluation period, as applicable
- Products and timeframes selected for review and why. Briefly explain why any of the main three products were not reviewed, as applicable (home mortgage lending, small business loans, small farm loans).
- Number and dollar volume of loan product universe and/or sample size reviewed
- Comments about the review of community development activities
- Description of affiliate lending activities considered, as applicable

Example:

General Information
This evaluation covers the period from the prior evaluation dated Month Day, 20XX, to the current evaluation dated Month Day, 20XX. Examiners used the Interagency Intermediate Small Institution Examination Procedures to evaluate Bank of Anytown’s CRA performance. These procedures include two tests: the CRA Small Bank Lending Test and the Community Development Test.

The Lending Test considered the institution’s performance according to the following criteria.

- Loan-to-deposit ratio
- Assessment area concentration
- Geographic distribution
- Borrower profile
- Response to CRA-related complaints

The Community Development Test considered the following factors.

- Number and dollar amount of community development loans, qualified investments and community development services
- The responsiveness of such activities to the community development needs of the assessment area

Banks must achieve at least a Satisfactory rating under each test to obtain an overall Satisfactory rating. This evaluation does not include any lending activity performed by affiliates.

Loan Products Reviewed
Examiners determined that the bank’s major product lines are small business and home mortgage loans. This conclusion considered the bank’s business strategy and the number and dollar volume of loans originated during the evaluation period.

The bank’s record of originating small business loans contributed more weight to overall conclusions due to the larger loan volume when compared to home mortgage lending during the most recent calendar year. Also, no other loan types, such as small farm loans or consumer loans, represent a major product line. Therefore, they provided no material support for conclusions or ratings and are not presented. The following table shows the bank’s originations and purchases over the most recent calendar year by loan type.

Bank records indicated that the lending focus and product mix remained consistent throughout the evaluation period. Examiners selected a sample of small business loans originated in the period January 1, 20XX, through December 31, 20XX. This sample was considered representative of the bank’s performance during the entire evaluation period. The bank originated 1,094 small business loans totaling $115.1 million in 20XX, of which 43 totaling $5.1 million were sampled. D&B data for 20XX provided a standard of comparison for the sampled small business loans.

In addition, this evaluation considered all home mortgage loans reported on the bank’s 20XX and 20XX Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) Loan Application Registers (LARs). For 20XX the bank reported 451 loans totaling $59.9 million, and for 20XX the bank reported 468 loans totaling $77.4 million. Examiners did not identify any trends between 20XX and 20XX that materially affect conclusions. Therefore, this evaluation presents information for 20XX, the most recent year for which aggregate data is available.

For the Lending Test, examiners reviewed the number and dollar volume of small business and home mortgage loans. While number and dollar volume of loans are presented, examiners emphasized performance by number of loans because the number of loans is a better indicator of the number of businesses and individuals served.

For the Community Development Test, bank management provided data on community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services since the prior CRA evaluation dated [Month Day, 20XX].
DESCRIPTION OF INSTITUTION

This section should include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Holding company and any affiliates or subsidiaries
- Previous CRA rating, date, procedures, and regulator
- Bank’s primary business focus
- Participation in any merger or acquisition activity since the last examination
- Number of offices and general location
- Number of offices opened or closed. Note impact to low- or moderate-income areas as applicable.
- Brief description of loan products and deposit services offered
- Other delivery systems (for example, ATMs, telephone banking, online banking, and mobile banking)
- Description of the loan distribution from Call Report data
- Statement whether there are any financial, legal, or other impediments that would limit the bank’s ability to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s)

Example:

Background
Bank of Anytown is headquartered in Anytown, Anystate, and operates in the eastern part of the Anystate, in Counties One, Two, Three, Four, and Five. Bank of Anytown is owned by Bank Holding Co, Inc., a one-bank holding company also in Anytown. Bank of Anytown operates one wholly-owned subsidiary, Any Title Company in Anytown. The institution received a Satisfactory rating at its previous FDIC Performance Evaluation, dated [Month Day, 20XX], based on Interagency Intermediate Small Institution Examination Procedures.

Operations
Bank of Anytown operates nine full-service branches in its assessment area in the eastern part of Anystate. Bank of Anytown offers loan products including commercial, agricultural, home mortgage, and consumer loans, primarily focusing on commercial lending. The institution provides a variety of deposit services including checking, savings, money market deposit accounts, and certificates of deposit. The bank also offers investment advisory and trust services. Alternative banking services include internet and mobile banking, electronic bill pay, and ten bank-owned automated teller machines (ATMs). The bank did not open or close any branches, and no merger or acquisition activities occurred since the previous evaluation.

Ability and Capacity
Assets totaled approximately $903 million as of [Month XX, 20XX], and included total loans of $418 million and securities totaling $400 million. The loan portfolio is illustrated in the following table.

Examiners did not identify any financial, legal, or other impediments that affect the bank’s ability to meet assessment area credit needs.
DESCRIPTION OF ASSESSMENT AREA

For assessment areas reviewed using full-scope procedures, this section must address, at a minimum, the following information.

- Number of individuals and census tracts in each income level
- Population
- Median income
- Employment conditions, including major employers
- Number and type of community contacts. Include relevant information obtained.
- Community credit and community development needs and business opportunities

Example:

The CRA requires each financial institution to define one or more assessment areas within which its CRA performance will be evaluated. Bank of Anytown designated a single assessment area in the Number One Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA). The following sections discuss demographic and economic information for the assessment area.

Economic and Demographic Data

The assessment area includes all 63 census tracts in Counties One, Two, Three, Four and Five. These tracts reflect the following income designations according to the 20XX U.S. Census:

- 10 low-income tracts,
- 11 moderate-income tracts,
- 23 middle-income tracts,
- 18 upper-income tracts, and
- 1 census tract with no income designation.

In addition, City One encompasses three low-, and three moderate-income census tracts designated by the state government as an Enterprise Zone. This area is targeted for economic development to attract new and retain existing businesses. The following table illustrates select demographic characteristics of the assessment area.
According to 20XX D&B data, there were 25,000 businesses. Gross annual revenues (GARs) for these businesses are below.

- 76.0 percent have $1 million or less.
- 4.0 percent have more than $1 million.
- 20.0 percent have unknown revenues.

The analysis of small business loans under the Borrower Profile criterion compares the distribution of businesses by GAR level. Service industries represent the largest portion of businesses at 40.0 percent; followed by retail trade (15.0 percent); construction (12.0 percent); and finance, insurance, and real estate (8.0 percent). In addition, 77.0 percent of area businesses have four or fewer employees, and 82.0 percent operate from a single location.

The 20XX FFIEC-updated median family income level is used to analyze home mortgage loans under the Borrower Profile criterion. The low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income categories are presented in the following table. These categories are based on the 20XX FFIEC-updated median family income of $59,500.

Source: 20XX FFIEC-Estimated Median Family Income data

There are 150,000 housing units. Of these, 66.7 percent are owner-occupied, 20.0 percent are occupied rental units, and 13.3 percent are vacant. The Geographic Distribution criterion compares home mortgage loans to the distribution of owner-occupied housing units. There are no owner-occupied housing units in the census tract without an income designation.
Data obtained from the U. S. Bureau of Labor and Statistics indicates that the 20XX year-end unemployment rate was 6.0 percent statewide. However, the rate varied from 4.8 percent for County One to 5.2 percent for County Four. Unemployment rates remained constant throughout the evaluation period.

Competition

The assessment area is moderately competitive in the market for financial services. According to the FDIC Deposit Market Share data as of Month 20XX, there were 25 financial institutions that operated 75 full-service branches within the bank’s assessment area. Of these institutions, Bank of Anytown ranked 8th with an 8.5 percent deposit market share.

The bank is not required to collect or report its small business loan data, and it has not elected to do so. Therefore, the analysis of small business loans under the Lending Test does not include comparisons against aggregate data. The aggregate data, however, reflects the level of demand for small business loans and is therefore included. Aggregate data for 20XX shows that 58 institutions reported 18,324 small business loans in the assessment area, indicating a moderate degree of competition for this product.

There is a high level of competition for home mortgage loans among several banks, credit unions, and non-depository mortgage lenders. In 20XX, 123 lenders reported a total of 11,777 residential mortgage loans originated or purchased. Bank of Anytown ranked 16th out of this group of lenders, with a market share of 3.1 percent. The three most prominent home mortgage lenders accounted for 45.2 percent of total market share.

Community Contact

As part of the evaluation process, examiners contact third parties active in the assessment area to assist in identifying the credit and community development needs. This information helps determine whether local financial institutions are responsive to these needs. It also shows what credit and community development opportunities are available.

Examiners contacted a representative of an economic development organization in the assessment area. The contact identified a significant level of opportunity for small business lending, especially to start-up businesses, within County One. The contact noted a particular need to attract new businesses within the Enterprise Zone of City One. In addition, the contact cited a lack of affordable housing and opportunities for local financial institutions to provide financing to develop affordable units. Overall, the contact indicated that financial institutions have been responsive to the credit and community development needs.

Credit and Community Development Needs and Opportunities

Considering information from the community contact, bank management, and demographic and economic data, examiners determined that small business loans represent a primary credit need for the assessment area. Small business loans, particularly those for start-up businesses, are in high demand. Opportunity exists for originating such loans, particularly in the City One Enterprise Zone. The significant percentage of businesses with GARs of $1 million or less and the large number of businesses with four or fewer employees support this conclusion.
Small business lending opportunity and demand are significant throughout the assessment area. Furthermore, as indicated by community contact information and demographic and economic data, the assessment area has community development needs including affordable housing and revitalization and stabilization.
CONCLUSIONS ON PERFORMANCE CRITERIA

LENDING TEST

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Support for overall Lending Test rating
- Description of facts, data, and analysis used to form conclusions for all applicable performance factors. Include the bank’s performance compared to available data while considering the bank’s performance context.
- Description of safe, affordable, and feasible small dollar loan programs (Small Dollar Loan Programs) under applicable performance factor(s), (if offered)

Example:

Bank of Anytown demonstrated reasonable performance under the Lending Test. Geographic Distribution and Borrower Profile performance primarily support this conclusion.

Loan-to-Deposit Ratio

The LTD ratio is reasonable given the institution’s size, financial condition, and assessment area credit needs. The bank’s LTD ratio, calculated from Call Report data, averaged 89.6 percent over the past 11 calendar quarters from September 30, 20XX, to March 31, 20XX. The ratio ranged from a low of 86.2 percent as of March 31, 20XX, to a high of 93.7 percent as of September 30, 20XX. The ratio remained generally stable during the evaluation period. Bank of Anytown maintained a ratio similar to those of comparable institutions, as shown in the following table. Examiners selected comparable institutions based on their asset size, geographic location, and lending focus.

Assessment Area Concentration

The bank made a majority of small business and home mortgage loans, by number and dollar volume, within its assessment area. See the following table.
Geographic Distribution

The geographic distribution of loans reflects reasonable dispersion throughout the assessment area. The bank’s reasonable performance of small business and home mortgage lending supports this conclusion. Examiners focused on the percentage by number of loans in low- and moderate-income census tracts.

Small Business Loans

The geographic distribution of sampled small business loans reflects reasonable dispersion. The following table shows that the bank’s performance in low-income census tracts exceeds business demographics by 3.7 percentage points. This difference, also considering competition and the bank’s capacity, reflects reasonable performance. The bank’s level of lending in moderate-income areas is similar to business demographics, falling just 1.9 percentage points lower. This relatively similar level of lending again reflects reasonable performance.

Home Mortgage Loans

The geographic distribution of home mortgage loans reflects reasonable dispersion throughout the assessment area. Examiners focused on the comparison to aggregate data. The following table shows that the bank’s performance in low-income census tracts compares reasonably to the aggregate level, at 0.5 percentage points lower. This minor difference reflects reasonable performance. In moderate-income areas, the bank is similar to aggregate, at 1.1 percentage points lower. This comparison again reflects reasonable performance.
Market share data further supported the bank’s reasonable performance. In 20XX, the bank ranked 14th in lending in low-income census tracts with a 4.5 percent market share. The bank ranked 18th in lending in moderate-income census tracts with a 3.8 percent market share. These market rankings are relatively consistent with the bank’s overall market rank of 16th in the assessment area in 20XX.

Borrower Profile

The distribution of borrowers reflects reasonable penetration among businesses of different sizes and individuals of different income levels in the assessment area. The bank’s reasonable performance of small business and home mortgage lending supports this conclusion. Examiners focused on the percentage by number of small business loans to businesses with GARs of $1 million or less. They also focused on the percentage by number of home mortgage loans to low- and moderate-income borrowers.

Small Business Loans

The distribution of small business loans reflects reasonable penetration of loans to businesses with GARs of $1 million or less. The following table shows that 72.7 percent of the sampled loans were originated to businesses with GARs of $1 million or less. This number compares reasonably the percent of businesses in this revenue category. This level of lending reflects reasonable performance.

Home Mortgage Loans
The distribution of home mortgage loans to individuals of different income levels, including low- and moderate-income borrowers, is reasonable. Examiners focused on the comparison to aggregate data.

Home mortgage lending to low-income borrowers, at 3.8 percent, is reasonable when compared to the aggregate data of 3.3 percent. A low-income family in the assessment area, with an income of $29,750, would not likely qualify for a mortgage under conventional underwriting standards, especially considering the median housing value of $150,000. Therefore, the demand and opportunity for lending to low-income families are relatively limited. This helps explain the difference between bank performance of lending to low-income borrowers and the 22.7 percent of families of this income level. The bank’s performance of lending to moderate-income borrowers, at 14.7 percent, is also similar to aggregate at 14.5 percent.

Market share data further supported the bank’s reasonable performance under this criterion. In 20XX, the bank ranked 16th in lending to low-income borrowers with a 4.8 percent market share. It ranked 20th in lending to moderate-income borrowers with a 3.5 percent market share. These market rankings are relatively consistent with the bank’s overall market rank of 16th in the assessment area in 20XX.

Response to Complaints

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- If no CRA-related complaints have been received, state that fact and that this criterion did not affect the rating.
- If a CRA-related complaint has been received, include a brief statement generally describing
  - A summary of the adequacy of the bank’s response;
  - The source of the complaint, not necessarily specifying a source by name;
  - The nature of the complaint;
  - Any bank response to the complaint.
III. Templates — Bank of Anytown

Example:

The bank did not receive any CRA-related complaints since the previous evaluation; therefore, this criterion did not affect the Lending Test rating.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT TEST

The narrative related to community development activities must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- Overall conclusion regarding responsiveness of community development activities to the needs and opportunities in the broader statewide or regional area including the institution’s assessment area(s)
- Total number and dollar amount of community development loans and qualified investments made during the evaluation period by year and purpose. (You may list all activities, or summarize activities by category and highlight notable examples.)
- Community development services provided during the evaluation period by year and purpose. (You may list all activities, or summarize activities by category and highlight notable examples.)
- Discussion of community development services that increase access to financial services for low- or moderate-income individuals (such as Small Dollar Loans or safe, low-cost transaction and basic savings accounts like Safe Accounts)
- Quantitative measures such as community development loans to average loans and qualified investments to average securities and average assets during the evaluation period

Example:

Bank of Anytown demonstrated adequate responsiveness to the community development needs of its assessment area through community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services. Examiners considered the institution’s capacity and the need and availability of such opportunities.

Community Development Loans

Bank of Anytown originated 51 community development loans totaling approximately $21.5 million during the evaluation period. This level of activity represents 2.6 percent of average total assets and 5.6 percent of average total loans since the prior CRA evaluation. Of the 51 community development loans, 8 totaling $3.3 million were used to create affordable housing in the assessment area. These loans demonstrate the bank’s responsiveness to this community development need identified by a community contact.
The bank’s community development lending includes two loans totaling $550,000 outside the assessment area to entities that serve a broader statewide area that includes the assessment area. However, these loans will not directly benefit the assessment area. As the bank has been responsive to the community development needs of its assessment area, examiners considered these two loans under the Community Development Test. The following table illustrates the bank’s community development lending activity by year and purpose.

Below are notable examples of the bank’s community development loans:

- In 20XX, the bank made two residential mortgage loans totaling $1.0 million. These loans were secured by an 11-unit property in City Two and a 6-unit property in City Four. All 17 apartment units are designated as affordable housing for families at or below 80 percent of the median family income for the MSA.

- In 20XX, the bank made a loan for $1.5 million to develop a supermarket in a low-income census tract of City One. The state government designated the neighborhood, including this tract, as an Enterprise Zone. According to a community contact, the supermarket is estimated to draw an additional employment base of approximately 150 individuals to the area.

Qualified Investments

Bank of Anytown made 139 qualified investments totaling approximately $8.9 million. This total includes qualified equity investments of approximately $8.5 million and donations of $422,000. This dollar amount of equity investments equates to 1.1 percent of average total assets and 2.8 percent of average securities since the last evaluation.

Of the total dollar amount, 89.8 percent benefited efforts to revitalize or stabilize low- or moderate-income geographies in the bank’s assessment area. These investments demonstrate the bank’s responsiveness to the revitalization or stabilization of certain geographies, which is an identified community development need. The following table illustrates the bank’s community development investments by year and purpose.
Below are notable examples of the bank’s qualified investment activities:

- In 20XX, the bank purchased a $2.5 million revenue bond associated with the Anytown Downtown Revitalization Project. The project addresses specific infrastructure needs such as roads, parking, and building renovations in the moderate-income census tract designated for the revitalization project. The project will help to attract new, or retain existing, businesses.

- In 20XX, the bank purchased a $1.0 million investment benefitting an organization that provides services to senior living centers that primarily house low- and moderate-income individuals. The yield from this investment provides funds totaling $18,750 per year to this organization. Due to decreasing investment yields, the bank increased the amount of the underlying security in December, 20XX, to $1.875 million. The additional amount will ensure funding continues at $18,750 per year. This annual donation of $18,750 provides community services targeted toward low- and moderate-income senior citizens in the assessment area.

Community Development Services

During the evaluation period, bank employees provided 58 instances of financial expertise or technical assistance to 24 different community development-related organizations in the assessment area. The following table illustrates the bank’s community development services by year and purpose.

Below are notable examples of the bank’s community development services:

- An employee serves as the Chairman of the Board of the Bank-On program. The program, still in its infancy stage, will reach the area’s unbanked and under-banked. Bank-On requires consumers to take three financial education classes before they can open a checking account at a participating financial institution. Bank of Anytown trained 12 employees to teach these financial education classes.

- An employee serves as Director of a non-profit organization. The organization provides services for low- and moderate-income individuals including shelter, training, and jobs in a designated distressed area. This individual lends their financial expertise to this organization.

In addition, Bank of Anytown operates two branches and ATMs in moderate-income census tracts of the assessment area, which also border the area’s low-income tracts. These branches and ATMs demonstrate the availability of banking services to low- and moderate-income individuals.
DISCRIMINATORY OR OTHER ILLEGAL CREDIT PRACTICES REVIEW

This section must include, at a minimum, the following information.

- State whether examiners identified evidence of discriminatory or other illegal practices.
- When evidence of discrimination or other illegal credit practices in any geography by the institution, or in any assessment area by an affiliate whose loans were considered as part of the institution’s lending performance, is identified, state the following.
  - Effect on the CRA rating
  - Law or regulation violated
  - Extent of the violation (for example, wide-spread)
  - Management’s responsiveness
  - Policies, procedures, training, and corrective actions

Example:

Examiners did not identify any evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices; therefore, this consideration did not affect the institution’s overall CRA rating.
GLOSSARY

Aggregate Lending: The number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in specified income categories as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Area Median Income: The median family income for the MSA, if a person or geography is located in an MSA; or the statewide non-metropolitan median family income, if a person or geography is located outside an MSA.

Assessment Area: A geographic area delineated by the bank under the requirements of the Community Reinvestment Act.

Census Tract: A small, relatively permanent statistical subdivision of a county. Census tract boundaries normally follow visible features, but they may follow governmental unit boundaries and other non-visible features in some instances. They always nest within counties. Census tracts average about 4,000 persons, and their physical size varies widely depending upon population density. Census tracts are designed to be homogenous for population characteristics, economic status, and living conditions to allow for statistical comparisons.

Combined Statistical Area (CSA): A combination of several adjacent metropolitan statistical areas or micropolitan statistical areas or a mix of the two, which are linked by economic ties.

Community Development: For loans, investments, and services to qualify as community development activities, their primary purpose must:
(1) Support affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals;
(2) Target community services toward low- and moderate-income individuals;
(3) Promote economic development by financing small businesses or farms; or
(4) Provide activities that revitalize or stabilize low- and moderate-income geographies, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved non-metropolitan middle-income geographies; or
(5) Enable or facilitate projects or activities that address needs regarding foreclosed or abandoned residential properties in designated target areas.

Community Development Corporation (CDC): A CDC allows banks and holding companies to make equity type of investments in community development projects. Bank CDCs can develop innovative debt instruments or provide near-equity investments tailored to the development needs of the community. Bank CDCs are also tailored to their financial and marketing needs. A CDC may purchase, own, rehabilitate, construct, manage, and sell real property. Also, it may make equity or debt investments in development projects and in local businesses. The CDC activities are expected to directly benefit low- and moderate-income groups, and the investment dollars should not represent an undue risk on the banking organization.
Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs): CDFIs are private intermediaries (either for profit or nonprofit) with community development as their primary mission. A CDFI facilitates the flow of lending and investment capital into distressed communities and to individuals who have been unable to take advantage of the services offered by traditional financial institutions. Some basic types of CDFIs include community development banks, community development loan funds, community development credit unions, micro enterprise funds, and community development venture capital funds.

A certified CDFI must meet eligibility requirements. These requirements include the following:
- Having a primary mission of promoting community development;
- Serving an investment area or target population;
- Providing development services;
- Maintaining accountability to residents of its investment area or targeted population through representation on its governing board of directors, or by other means;
- Not constituting an agency or instrumentality of the United States, of any state or political subdivision of a state.

Community Development Loan: A loan that
(1) Has as its primary purpose community development; and
(2) Except in the case of a wholesale or limited purpose bank:
   (i) Has not been reported or collected by the bank or an affiliate for consideration in the bank’s assessment area as a home mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loan, unless it is a multifamily dwelling loan (as described in Appendix A to Part 203 of this title); and
   (ii) Benefits the bank’s assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area including the bank’s assessment area(s).

Community Development Service: A service that
(1) Has as its primary purpose community development;
(2) Is related to the provision of financial services; and
(3) Has not been considered in the evaluation of the bank’s retail banking services under § 345.24(d).

Consumer Loan(s): A loan(s) to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures. A consumer loan does not include a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan. This definition includes the following categories: motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured consumer loans, and other unsecured consumer loans.

Distressed Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as distressed if it is in a county that meets one or more of the following triggers:
(1) an unemployment rate of at least 1.5 times the national average;
(2) a poverty rate of 20 percent or more; or,
(3) a population loss of 10 percent or more between the previous and most recent decennial census or a net migration loss of 5 percent or more over the 5-year period preceding the most recent census.

Family: Includes a householder and one or more other persons living in the same household who are related to the householder by birth, marriage, or adoption. The number of family households always equals the number of families; however, a family household may also include non-relatives living with the family. Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

Family Income: Includes the income of all members of a family that are age 15 and older.

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and non-metropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: Performance under the applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (geographic loan distribution, borrower profile loan distribution, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. The reports include such data as the race, gender, and the income of applicants; the amount of loan requested; and the disposition of the application (approved, denied, and withdrawn).

Home Mortgage Disclosure Loan Application Register (HMDA LAR): The HMDA LARs record all applications received for residential purchase, refinance, home improvement, and temporary-to-permanent construction loans.

Home Mortgage Loans: Includes home purchase and home improvement loans as defined in the HMDA regulation. This definition also includes multi-family (five or more families) dwelling loans, loans to purchase manufactured homes, and refinancings of home improvement and home purchase loans.

Household: Includes all persons occupying a housing unit. Persons not living in households are classified as living in group quarters. In 100 percent tabulations, the count of households always equals the count of occupied housing units.
Household Income: Includes the income of the householder and all other persons that are age 15 and older in the household, whether related to the householder or not. Because many households are only one person, median household income is usually less than median family income.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: Performance under the applicable tests is analyzed using only quantitative factors (for example, geographic loan distribution, borrower profile loan distribution, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

Low Income Housing Tax Credit: The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit Program is a housing program contained within the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended. It is administered by the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service. The U.S. Treasury Department distributes low-income housing tax credits to housing credit agencies through the Internal Revenue Service. The housing agencies allocate tax credits on a competitive basis.

Developers who acquire, rehabilitate, or construct low-income rental housing may keep their tax credits. Or, they may sell them to corporations or investor groups, who, as owners of these properties, will be able to reduce their own federal tax payments. The credit can be claimed annually for ten consecutive years. For a project to be eligible, the developer must set aside a specific percentage of units for occupancy by low-income residents. The set-aside requirement remains throughout the compliance period, usually 30 years.

Market Share: The number of loans originated and purchased by the institution as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Median Income: The median income divides the income distribution into two equal parts, one having incomes above the median and other having incomes below the median.

Metropolitan Division (MD): A county or group of counties within a CBSA that contain(s) an urbanized area with a population of at least 2.5 million. A MD is one or more main/secondary counties representing an employment center or centers, plus adjacent counties associated with the main/secondary county or counties through commuting ties.

Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA): CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 50,000. The MSA comprises the central county or counties or equivalent entities containing the core, plus adjacent outlying counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the central county or counties as measured through commuting.
Micropolitan Statistical Area: CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 10,000, but less than 50,000.

Middle-Income: Individual income that is at least 80 percent and less than 120 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 80 and less than 120 percent in the case of a geography.

Moderate-Income: Individual income that is at least 50 percent and less than 80 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 50 and less than 80 percent in the case of a geography.

Multi-family: Refers to a residential structure that contains five or more units.

Non-metropolitan Area: All areas outside of metropolitan areas. The definition of non-metropolitan area is not consistent with the definition of rural areas. Urban and rural classifications cut across the other hierarchies. For example, there is generally urban and rural territory within metropolitan and non-metropolitan areas.

Owner-Occupied Units: Includes units occupied by the owner or co-owner, even if the unit has not been fully paid for or is mortgaged.

Qualified Investment: A lawful investment, deposit, membership share, or grant that has as its primary purpose community development.

Rated area: A rated area is a state or multistate metropolitan area. For an institution with domestic branches in only one state, the institution’s CRA rating would be the state rating. If an institution maintains domestic branches in more than one state, the institution will receive a rating for each state in which those branches are located. If an institution maintains domestic branches in two or more states within a multistate metropolitan area, the institution will receive a rating for the multistate metropolitan area.

Rural Area: Territories, populations, and housing units that are not classified as urban.

Small Business Investment Company (SBIC): SBICs are privately-owned investment companies which are licensed and regulated by the Small Business Administration (SBA). SBICs provide long-term loans and/or venture capital to small firms. Because money for venture or risk investments is difficult for small firms to obtain, SBA provides assistance to SBICs to stimulate and supplement the flow of private equity and long-term loan funds to small companies. Venture capitalists participate in the SBIC program to supplement their own private capital with funds borrowed at favorable rates through SBA’s guarantee of SBIC debentures. These SBIC debentures are then sold to private investors. An SBIC’s success is linked to the growth and profitability of the companies that it finances. Therefore, some SBICs primarily assist businesses with significant growth potential, such as new firms in innovative industries. SBICs finance small firms by providing straight loans and/or equity-type investments. This kind of financing gives them partial ownership of those businesses and the possibility of sharing in the companies’ profits as they grow and prosper.
Small Business Loan: A loan included in “loans to small businesses” as defined in the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $1 million or less and are either secured by nonfarm nonresidential properties or are classified as commercial and industrial loans.

Small Farm Loan: A loan included in “loans to small farms” as defined in the instructions for preparation of the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $500,000 or less and are either secured by farmland, including farm residential and other improvements, or are classified as loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers.

Underserved middle-income nonmetropolitan geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as underserved if it meets criteria for

- Population size, density, and dispersion indicating the area’s population is sufficiently small, thin, and distant from a population center that the tract is likely to have difficulty financing the fixed costs of meeting essential community needs.

Upper-Income: Individual income that is more than 120 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is more than 120 percent in the case of a geography.

Urban Area: All territories, populations, and housing units in urbanized areas and in places of 2,500 or more persons outside urbanized areas. More specifically, “urban” consists of territory, persons, and housing units in places of 2,500 or more persons incorporated as cities, villages, boroughs (except in Alaska and New York), and towns (except in the New England states, New York, and Wisconsin).

“Urban” excludes the rural portions of “extended cities”; census designated place of 2,500 or more persons; and other territory, incorporated or unincorporated, including in urbanized areas.
ASSESSMENT OF RISK OF CONSUMER HARM (ARCH)

General Instructions

The ARCH is used to document the scope of all examinations. The ARCH contains a series of questions and Examiner Summary sections to document risk assessment, mitigations to inherent or identified risk, and conclusions. The questions provided are not intended to cover every potential risk or mitigation, but set out a basic framework to assist an examiner in assessing and documenting the initial risk assessment and on-site plan of action for the institution. Examiners should provide additional explanation and support for these assessments, as necessary, in the Examiner Summary sections in the memorandum. Sections 1-3 should be completed and submitted for approval prior to the on-site portion of the examination. Section 4 should be completed and approved if material changes to the scope of the examination are warranted. Post examination comments are not required.

DECISION POINT

DECISION POINT

Discuss each inherent risk deemed to have been sufficiently mitigated by the strength of the CMS. These areas now exhibit minimal residual risk of consumer harm. Summarize how the CMS elements reduce the inherent risk of each applicable product, service, or market in the comments.

Products, services, or markets not sufficiently mitigated and exhibiting residual risk of consumer harm will be documented in Section 3 for further analysis and on-site transactional testing.

SECTION 3 - SCOPE OF EXAMINATION

This section addresses the residual risk of consumer harm. Complete the table below identifying the specific product, service, or market (PSM) to be examined based on residual consumer harm risk. The

ADDITIONAL SCOPE INFORMATION

Other Areas for Review:

This section may include, but is not limited to, the following:
- Training to be conducted for purpose of meeting trainee benchmarks
- Areas to be confirmed on-site due to lack of information available during PEP
- Any review necessary to validate accuracy of information obtained in PEP
- Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA)- discuss review conducted or to be conducted on-site

Community Reinvestment Act (CRA):

If a CRA evaluation is to be performed, this section should include brief comments related to the scope of this evaluation. This section is generally written in paragraph form and begins with a sentence like "The CRA evaluation will follow (small bank, ISB, or large bank) procedures." Other information may include:
- Description of previous CRA evaluation (i.e., procedures used, rating)
- Which products will be reviewed, what is the review timeframe
- Reasons any of the 3 primary loan products (RRE, small business, or small farm) are excluded, as applicable
- Description of the sample(s)/universe(s) to be reviewed and comparison data and/or source(s)
- Whether the bank offers a small dollar loan program
- General description of assessment area(s), focusing on relevant data and/or significant changes since previous examination
- If multiple assessment area(s), which will receive full review/limited review and why
- Whether IBBEA is applicable, and if so, what states will be rated
- Discussion of any distressed, underserved, or designated disaster areas within the assessment area(s)
- Discussion of changes to bank locations/branches
- Bank requests review/consideration of investments/services (small bank)
- Discussion of community contacts

Miscellaneous Information:

This section may include, but is not limited to, the following:

- Benchmark Hours: Address whether the EIC’s initial determination indicates benchmark hours assigned are appropriate, too low, or too high based upon the residual consumer harm risks identified; Discuss known fair lending risks that may measurably impact examination hours (e.g., history of discriminatory violations, complaints/litigation, open investigations, HMDA outlier identification); If the determination is estimated hours are materially higher or lower than benchmark, provide an estimate of actual hours needed.
- Location of on-site examination and any branch visits to be conducted, as well as other logistics (e.g., attire, parking, available work hours on-site)
- Staff assignments
- Primary point of contact name/phone number
- Indicate if the bank has any mortgage company, payday lending, or private education lending subsidiaries that will require CFPB coordination.

What is the initial determination of benchmark hours based on the residual consumer harm risks identified?

Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Introduction

This overview provides a basic and abbreviated discussion of federal fair lending laws and regulations. It is adapted from the Interagency Policy Statement on Fair Lending issued in March 1994.

Lending Discrimination Statutes and Regulations

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) prohibits discrimination in any aspect of a credit transaction. It applies to any extension of credit, including extensions of credit to small businesses, corporations, partnerships, and trusts.

The ECOA prohibits discrimination based on:

• Race or color;
• Religion;
• National origin;
• Sex;
• Marital status;
• Age (provided the applicant has the capacity to contract);
• The applicant’s receipt of income derived from any public assistance program; or
• The applicant’s exercise, in good faith, of any right under the Consumer Credit Protection Act.

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau’s Regulation B, found at 12 CFR part 1002, implements the ECOA. Regulation B describes lending acts and practices that are specifically prohibited, permitted, or required. Official staff interpretations of the regulation are found in Supplement I to 12 CFR part 1002.

The Dodd–Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 further amended the ECOA and covers:

• Data collection for loans to minority-owned and women-owned businesses (awaiting final regulation);
• Legal action statute of limitations for ECOA violations is extended to five years (effective July 21, 2010); and
• A disclosure of the consumer’s ability to receive a copy of any appraisal(s) and valuation(s) prepared in connection with first-lien loans secured by a dwelling is to be provided to applicants within 3 business days of receiving the application (effective January 18, 2014).

The Fair Housing Act (FHAct) prohibits discrimination in all aspects of “residential real-estate related transactions,” including but not limited to:

• Making loans to buy, build, repair, or improve a dwelling;
• Purchasing real estate loans;
• Selling, brokering, or appraising residential real estate; or • Selling or renting a dwelling.

The FHAct prohibits discrimination based on:

• Race or color;
• National origin;
• Religion;
• Sex;
• Familial status (defined as children under the age of 18 living with a parent or legal custodian, pregnant women, and people securing custody of children under 18); or • Handicap.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development’s (HUD) regulations implementing the FHAct are found at 24 CFR Part 100. Because both the FHAct and the ECOA apply to mortgage lending, lenders may not discriminate in mortgage lending based on any of the prohibited factors in either list.

Under the ECOA, it is unlawful for a lender to discriminate on a prohibited basis in any aspect of a credit transaction, and under both the ECOA and the FHAct, it is unlawful for a lender to discriminate on a prohibited basis in a residential real-estate-related transaction. Under one or both of these laws, a lender may not, because of a prohibited factor:

• Fail to provide information or services or provide different information or services regarding any aspect of the lending process, including credit availability, application procedures, or lending standards.
• Discourage or selectively encourage applicants with respect to inquiries about or applications for credit.
• Refuse to extend credit or use different standards in determining whether to extend credit.
• Vary the terms of credit offered, including the...

amount, interest rate, duration, or type of loan.

- Use different standards to evaluate collateral.
- Treat a borrower differently in servicing a loan or invoking default remedies.
- Use different standards for pooling or packaging a loan in the secondary market.

A lender may not express, orally or in writing, a preference based on prohibited factors or indicate that it will treat applicants differently on a prohibited basis. A violation may still exist even if a lender treated applicants equally.

A lender may not discriminate on a prohibited basis because of the characteristics of

- An applicant, prospective applicant, or borrower.
- A person associated with an applicant, prospective applicant, or borrower (for example, a co-applicant, spouse, business partner, or live-in aide).
- The present or prospective occupants of either the property to be financed or the characteristics of the neighborhood or other area where property to be financed is located.

Finally, the FHAct requires lenders to make reasonable accommodations for a person with disabilities when such accommodations are necessary to afford the person an equal opportunity to apply for credit.

Types of Lending Discrimination

The courts have recognized three methods of proof of lending discrimination under the ECOA and the FHAct:

- Overt evidence of disparate treatment;
- Comparative evidence of disparate treatment; and
- Evidence of disparate impact.

Disparate Treatment

The existence of illegal disparate treatment may be established either by statements revealing that a lender explicitly considered prohibited factors (overt evidence) or by differences in treatment that are not fully explained by legitimate nondiscriminatory factors (comparative evidence).

Overt Evidence of Disparate Treatment. There is overt evidence of discrimination when a lender openly discriminates on a prohibited basis.

Example: A lender offered a credit card with a limit of up to $750 for applicants aged 21-30 and $1500 for applicants over 30. This policy violated the ECOA’s prohibition on discrimination based on age.

There is overt evidence of discrimination even when a lender expresses — but does not act on — a discriminatory preference:

Example: A lending officer told a customer, “We do not like to make home mortgages to Native Americans, but the law says we cannot discriminate and we have to comply with the law.” This statement violated the FHAct’s prohibition on statements expressing a discriminatory preference as well as Section 1002.4(b) of Regulation B, which prohibits discouraging applicants on a prohibited basis.

Comparative Evidence of Disparate Treatment. Disparate treatment occurs when a lender treats a credit applicant differently based on one of the prohibited bases. It does not require any showing that the treatment was motivated by prejudice or a conscious intention to discriminate against a person beyond the difference in treatment itself.

Disparate treatment may more likely occur in the treatment of applicants who are neither clearly well-qualified nor clearly unqualified. Discrimination may more readily affect applicants in this middle group for two reasons. First, if the applications are “close cases,” there is more room and need for lender discretion. Second, whether or not an applicant qualifies may depend on the level of assistance the lender provides the applicant in completing an application. The lender may, for example, propose solutions to credit or other problems regarding an application, identify compensating factors, and provide encouragement to the applicant. Lenders are under no obligation to provide such assistance, but to the extent that they do, the assistance must be provided in a nondiscriminatory way.

Example: A non-minority couple applied for an automobile loan. The lender found adverse information in the couple’s credit report. The lender discussed the credit report with them and determined that the adverse information, a judgment against the couple, was incorrect because the judgment had been vacated. The non-minority couple was granted their loan. A minority couple applied for a similar loan with the same lender. Upon discovering adverse information in the minority couple’s credit report, the lender denied the loan application on the basis of the adverse information without giving the couple an opportunity to discuss the report.

The foregoing is an example of disparate treatment of similarly situated applicants, apparently based on a prohibited factor, in the amount of assistance and information the lender provided.

If a lender has apparently treated similar applicants differently on the basis of a prohibited factor, it must provide an explanation for the difference in treatment. If the lender’s explanation is found to be not credible, the agency may find that the lender discriminated.
Redlining is a form of illegal disparate treatment in which a lender provides unequal access to credit, or unequal terms of credit, because of the race, color, national origin, or other prohibited characteristic(s) of the residents of the area in which the credit seeker resides or will reside or in which the residential property to be mortgaged is located. Redlining may violate both the FHAct and the ECOA.

Disparate Impact

When a lender applies a racially or otherwise neutral policy or practice equally to all credit applicants, but the policy or practice disproportionately excludes or burdens certain persons on a prohibited basis, the policy or practice is described as having a “disparate impact.”

Example: A lender’s policy is not to extend loans for single family residences for less than $60,000.00. This policy has been in effect for ten years. This minimum loan amount policy is shown to disproportionately exclude potential minority applicants from consideration because of their income levels or the value of the houses in the areas in which they live.

The fact that a policy or practice creates a disparity on a prohibited basis is not alone proof of a violation. When an Agency finds that a lender’s policy or practice has a disparate impact; the next step is to seek to determine whether the policy or practice is justified by “business necessity.” The justification must be manifest and may not be hypothetical or speculative.

Factors that may be relevant to the justification could include cost and profitability. Even if a policy or practice that has a disparate impact on a prohibited basis can be justified by business necessity, it still may be found to be in violation if an alternative policy or practice could serve the same purpose with less discriminatory effect. Finally, evidence of discriminatory intent is not necessary to establish that a lender’s adoption or implementation of a policy or practice that has a disparate impact is in violation of the FHAct or ECOA.

These procedures do not call for examiners to plan examinations to identify or focus on potential disparate impact issues. The guidance in this Introduction is intended to help examiners recognize fair lending issues that may have a potential disparate impact. Guidance in the Appendix to the Interagency Fair Lending Examination Procedures provides details on how to obtain relevant information regarding such situations along with methods of evaluation, as appropriate.

General Guidelines

These procedures are intended to be a basic and flexible framework to be used in the majority of fair lending examinations conducted by the FFIEC agencies. They are also intended to guide examiner judgment, not to supplant it. The procedures can be augmented by each agency as necessary to ensure their effective implementation. While these procedures apply to many examinations, agencies routinely use statistical analyses or other specialized techniques in fair lending examinations to assist in evaluating whether a prohibited basis was a factor in an institution’s credit decisions. Examiners should follow the procedures provided by their respective agencies in these cases.

For a number of aspects of lending — for example, credit scoring and loan pricing — the “state of the art” is more likely to be advanced if the agencies have some latitude to incorporate promising innovations. These interagency procedures provide for that latitude.

Any references in these procedures to options, judgment, etc., of “examiners” means discretion within the limits provided by that examiner’s agency. An examiner should use these procedures in conjunction with his, or her, own agency’s priorities, examination philosophy, and detailed guidance for implementing these procedures. These procedures should not be interpreted as providing the examiner greater latitude than his, or her, own agency would. For example, if an agency’s policy is to review compliance management systems in all of its institutions, an examiner for that agency must conduct such a review rather than interpret Part II of these interagency procedures as leaving the review to the examiner’s option.

The procedures emphasize racial and national origin discrimination in residential transactions, but the key principles are applicable to other prohibited bases and to nonresidential transactions.

Finally, these procedures focus on analyzing institution compliance with the broad, nondiscrimination requirements of the ECOA and the FHAct. They do not address such explicit or technical compliance provisions as the signature rules or adverse action notice requirements in Sections 1002.7 and 1002.9, respectively, of Regulation B.

Part I — Examination Scope Guidelines Background

The FDIC has developed the Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions Memorandum (FLSC) to implement a standard nationwide format for documenting the scope and conclusions of fair lending reviews. FLSC has been adopted as a means of focusing the examiner’s attention to the areas that pose the greatest unmanaged fair lending risk to the institution. It incorporates the Interagency Fair Lending Examination Procedures and assists in documenting the types of fair lending risks that are present; the controls that management has put in place to manage the risk; the effectiveness of these controls; why the particular focal point(s) are chosen; the level of review conducted; and the results of any additional analysis that was conducted. The FLSC is included in section IV-3.1 of this manual.

The scope of an examination encompasses the loan product(s), market(s), decision center(s), time frame, and prohibited basis and control group(s) to be analyzed during the examination. These procedures refer to each potential combination of those elements as a “focal point.” Setting the scope of an examination involves, first, identifying all of the potential focal points that appear worthwhile to examine. Then, from among those, examiners select the Focal Point(s) that will form the scope of the examination, based on risk factors, priorities established in these procedures or by their respective agencies, the record from past examinations, and other relevant guidance. This phase includes obtaining an overview of an institution’s compliance management system as it relates to fair lending.

When selecting focal points for review, examiners may determine that the institution has performed “self-tests” or “self-evaluations” related to specific lending products. The difference between “self-tests” and “self-evaluations” is discussed in the Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination section of the Appendix. Institutions must share all information regarding “self-evaluations” and certain limited information related to “self-tests.” Institutions may choose to voluntarily disclose additional information about “self-tests.” Examiners should make sure that institutions understand that voluntarily sharing the results of self-tests will result in a loss of confidential status of these tests. Information from “self-evaluations” or “self-tests” may allow the scoping to be streamlined. Refer to Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination in the Appendix for additional details.

Scoping may disclose the existence of circumstances — such as the use of credit scoring or a large volume of residential lending — which, under an agency’s policy, call for the use of regression analysis or other statistical methods of identifying potential discrimination with respect to one or more loan products. Where that is the case, the agency’s specialized procedures should be employed for such loan products rather than the procedures set forth below.

Setting the intensity of an examination means determining the breadth and depth of the analysis that will be conducted on the selected loan product(s). This process entails a more involved analysis of the institution’s compliance risk management processes, particularly as it relates to selected products, to reach an informed decision regarding how large a sample of files to review in any transactional analyses performed and whether certain aspects of the credit process deserve heightened scrutiny.

Part I of these procedures provides guidance on establishing the scope of the examination. Part II (Compliance Management Review) provides guidance on determining the intensity of the examination. There is naturally some interdependence between these two phases. Ultimately the scope and intensity of the examination will determine the record of performance that serves as the foundation for agency conclusions about institutional compliance with fair lending obligations. The examiner should employ these procedures to arrive at a well-reasoned and practical conclusion about how to conduct a particular institution’s examination of fair lending performance.

In certain cases where an agency already possesses information which provides examiners with guidance on priorities and risks for planning an upcoming examination, such information may expedite the scoping process and make it unnecessary to carry out all of the steps below. For example, the report of the previous fair lending examination may have included recommendations for the focus of the next examination. However, examiners should validate that the institution’s operational structure, product offerings, policies, and risks have not changed since the prior examination before condensing the scoping process.

The scoping process can be performed either off-site, onsite, or both, depending on whatever is determined appropriate and feasible. In the interest of minimizing burdens on both the examination team and the institution, requests for information from the institution should be carefully thought out so as to include only the information that will clearly be useful in the examination process. Finally, any off-site information requests should be made sufficiently in advance of the on-site schedule to permit institutions adequate time to assemble necessary information and provide it to the examination team in a timely fashion. (See “Potential Scoping Information” in the Appendix for guidance on additional information that the examiner might wish to consider including in a request).

Examiners should focus the examination based on:

- An understanding of the credit operations of the institution;
- The risk that discriminatory conduct may occur in each area of those operations; and
- The feasibility of developing a factually reliable record of an institution’s performance and fair lending compliance in each area of those operations.

Understanding Credit Operations

Before evaluating the potential for discriminatory conduct, the examiner should review sufficient information about the
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

In thinking about an institution’s credit markets, the examiner should recognize that these markets may or may not coincide with an institution’s Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) assessment area(s). Where appropriate, the examiner should review the demographics for a broader geographic area than the assessment area.

Where an institution has multiple underwriting or loan processing centers or subsidiaries, each with fully independent credit-granting authority, consider evaluating each center and/or subsidiary separately, provided a sufficient number of loans exist to support a meaningful analysis. In determining the scope of the examination for such institutions, examiners should consider whether:

- Subsidiaries should be examined. The agencies will hold a financial institution responsible for violations by its direct subsidiaries, but not typically for those by its affiliates (unless the affiliate has acted as the agent for the institution or the violation by the affiliate was known or should have been known to the institution before it became involved in the transaction or purchased the affiliate’s loans). When seeking to determine an institution’s relationship with affiliates that are not supervised financial institutions, limit the inquiry to what can be learned in the institution and do not contact the affiliate without prior consultation with agency staff.

- The underwriting standards and procedures used in the entity being reviewed are used in related entities not scheduled for the planned examination. This will help examiners to recognize the potential scope of policy-based violations.

- The portfolio consists of applications from a purchased institution. If so, for scoping purposes, examiners should consider the applications as if they were made to the purchasing institution. For comparison purposes, applications evaluated under the purchased institution’s standards should not be compared to applications evaluated under the purchasing institution’s standards.

- The portfolio includes purchased loans. If so, examiners should look for indications that the institution specified loans to purchase based on a prohibited factor or caused a prohibited factor to influence the origination process.

- A complete decision can be made at one of the several underwriting or loan processing centers, each with independent authority. In such a situation, it is best to conduct on-site a separate comparative analysis at each underwriting center. If covering multiple centers is not feasible during the planned examination, examiners should review their processes and internal controls to determine whether or not expanding the scope and/or length of the examination is justified.

- Decision-making responsibility for a single transaction may involve more than one underwriting center. For example, an institution may have authority to decline mortgage applicants, but only the mortgage company subsidiary may approve them. In such a situation, examiners should learn which standards are applied in each entity and the location of records needed for the planned comparisons.
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

As part of understanding the financial institution’s own lending operations, it is also important to understand any dealings the financial institution has with affiliated and non-affiliated mortgage loan brokers and other third party lenders.

These brokers may generate mortgage applications and originations solely for a specific financial institution or may broadly gather loan applications for a variety of local, regional, or national lenders. As a result, it is important to recognize what impact these mortgage brokers and other third party lender actions and application processing operations have on the lending operations of a financial institution. Because brokers can be located anywhere in or out of the financial institution’s primary lending or CRA assessment areas, it is important to evaluate broker activity and fair lending compliance related to underwriting, terms, and conditions, redlining, and steering, each of which is covered in more depth in sections of these procedures.

If the institution is large and geographically diverse, examiners should select only as many markets or underwriting centers as can be reviewed readily in depth, rather than selecting proportionally to cover every market. As needed, examiners should narrow the focus to the Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) or underwriting center(s) that are determined to present the highest discrimination risk. Examiners should use Loan Application Register (LAR) data organized by underwriting center, if available. After calculating denial rates between the control and prohibited basis groups for the underwriting centers, examiners should select the centers with the highest fair lending risk. This approach would also be used when reviewing pricing or other terms and conditions of approved applicants from the prohibited basis and control groups. If underwriting centers have fewer than five racial or national origin denials, examiners should not examine for racial discrimination in underwriting. Instead, they should shift the focus to other loan products or prohibited bases, or examination types such as a pricing examination.

However, if examiners learn of other indications of risks that favor analyzing a prohibited basis with fewer transactions than the minimum in the sample size tables, they should consult with their supervisory office on possible alternative methods of analysis. For example, there is strong reason to examine a pattern in which almost all of 19 male borrowers received low rates but almost all of four female borrowers received high rates, even though the number of each group is fewer than the stated minimum. Similarly, there would be strong reason to examine a pattern in which almost all of 100 control group applicants were approved but all four prohibited basis group applicants were not, even though the number of prohibited basis denials was fewer than five.

Evaluating the Potential for Discriminatory Conduct

Step One: Develop an Overview

Based on his or her understanding of the credit operations and product offerings of an institution, an examiner should determine the nature and amount of information required for the scoping process and should obtain and analyze that information. No single examination can reasonably be expected to evaluate compliance performance as to every prohibited basis, in every product, or in every underwriting center or subsidiary of an institution. In addition to information gained in the process of Understanding Credit Operations, above, the examiner should keep in mind the following factors when selecting products for the scoping review:

- Which products and prohibited bases were reviewed during the most recent prior examination(s) and, conversely, which products and prohibited bases have not recently been reviewed?
- Which prohibited basis groups make up a significant portion of the institution’s market for the different credit products offered?
- Which products and prohibited basis groups the institution reviewed using either a voluntarily disclosed self-test or a self-evaluation?

Based on consideration of the foregoing factors, the examiner should request information for all residential and other loan products considered appropriate for scoping in the current examination cycle. In addition, whenever feasible, examiners should conduct preliminary interviews with the institution’s key underwriting personnel and those involved with establishing the institution’s pricing policies and practices. Using the accumulated information, the examiner should evaluate the following, as applicable:

- Underwriting guidelines, policies, and standards.
- Descriptions of credit scoring systems, including a list of factors scored, cutoff scores, extent of validation, and any guidance for handling overrides and exceptions. (Refer to Part A of the “Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring” section of the Appendix for...
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

guidance.)

• Applicable pricing policies, risk-based pricing models, and guidance for exercising discretion over loan terms and conditions.

• Descriptions of any compensation system, including whether compensation is related to, loan production or pricing.

• The institution’s formal and informal relationships with any finance companies, subprime mortgage or consumer lending entities, or similar institutions.

• Loan application forms.

• Home Mortgage Disclosure Act – Loan Application Register (HMDA-LAR) or loan registers and lists of declined applications.

• Description(s) of databases maintained for loan product(s) to be reviewed.

• Records detailing policy exceptions or overrides, exception reporting and monitoring processes.

• Copies of any consumer complaints alleging discrimination and related loan files.

• Compliance program materials (particularly fair lending policies), training manuals, organization charts, as well as record keeping, monitoring protocols, and internal controls.

• Copies of any available marketing materials or descriptions of current or previous marketing plans or programs or pre-screened solicitations.

Step Two: Identify Compliance Program Discrimination Risk Factors

Review information from agency examination work papers, institutional records and any available discussions with management representatives in sufficient detail to understand the organization, staffing, training, recordkeeping, auditing, policies and procedures of the institution’s fair lending compliance systems. Review these systems and note the following risk factors:

C1. Overall institution compliance record is weak.

C2. Prohibited basis monitoring information required by applicable laws and regulations is nonexistent or incomplete.

C3. Data and/or recordkeeping problems compromised reliability of previous examination reviews.

C4. Fair lending problems were previously found in one or more institution products or in institution subsidiaries.

C5. The size, scope, and quality of the compliance management program, including management’s involvement, designation of a compliance officer, and staffing is materially inferior to programs customarily found in institutions of similar size, market demographics, and credit complexity.

C6. The institution has not updated compliance policies and procedures to reflect changes in law or in agency guidance.

C7. Fair lending training is nonexistent or weak.

Consider these risk factors and their impact on particular lending products and practices as you conduct the product specific risk review during the scoping steps that follow. Where this review identifies fair lending compliance system deficiencies, give them appropriate consideration as part of the Compliance Management Review in Part II of these procedures.

Step Three: Review Residential Loan Products

Although home mortgages may not be the ultimate subject of every fair lending examination, this product line must at least be considered in the course of scoping every institution that is engaged in the residential lending market.

Divide home mortgage loans into the following groupings: home purchase, home improvement, and refinancings. Subdivide those three groups further if an institution does a significant number of any of the following types or forms of residential lending, and consider them separately:

• Government-insured loans
• Mobile home or manufactured housing loans
• Wholesale, indirect, and brokered loans
• Portfolio lending (including portfolios of Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac rejections)

In addition, determine whether the institution offers any conventional “affordable” housing loan programs special purpose credit programs or other programs that are specifically designed to assist certain borrowers, such as underserved populations and whether their terms and conditions make them incompatible with regular conventional loans for comparative purposes. If so, consider them separately.

If previous examinations have demonstrated the following, then an examiner may limit the focus of the current examination to alternative underwriting or processing centers or to other residential products that have received less scrutiny in the past:

• A strong fair lending compliance program.
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

- No record of discriminatory transactions at particular decision centers or in particular residential products.
- No indication of a significant change in personnel, operations, or underwriting or pricing policies at those centers or in those residential products.
- No unresolved fair lending complaints, administrative proceedings, litigation, or similar factors.
- No discretion to set price or credit terms and conditions in particular decision centers or for particular residential products.

Step Four: Identify Residential Lending Discrimination Risk Factors

Review the lending policies, marketing plans, underwriting, appraisal and pricing guidelines, broker/agent agreements and loan application forms for each residential loan product that represents an appreciable volume of, or displays noticeable growth in, the institution’s residential lending.

- Review any available data regarding the geographic distribution of the institution’s loan originations with respect to the race and national origin percentages of the census tracts within its assessment area or, if different, its residential loan product lending area(s).

- Conduct interviews of loan officers and other employees or agents in the residential lending process concerning adherence to and understanding of the above policies and guidelines as well as any relevant operating practices.

- In the course of conducting the foregoing inquiries, look for the following risk factors (factors are numbered alphanumerically to coincide with the type of factor, e.g., “O” for “overt”, “P” for “pricing,” etc.).

NOTE: For risk factors below that are marked with an asterisk (*), examiners need not attempt to calculate the indicated ratios for racial or national origin characteristics when the institution is not a HMDA reporter. However, consideration should be given in such cases to whether or not such calculations should be made based on gender or racial-ethnic surrogates.

Overt indicators of discrimination such as:

O1. Including explicit prohibited basis identifiers in the institution’s written or oral policies and procedures (underwriting criteria, pricing standards, etc.).

O2. Collecting information, conducting inquiries or imposing conditions contrary to express requirements of Regulation B.

O3. Including variables in a credit scoring system that constitute a basis or factor prohibited by Regulation B or, for residential loan scoring systems, the FHAct. (If a credit scoring system scores age, refer to Part E of the Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring section of the Appendix.)

O4. Statements made by the institution’s officers, employees, or agents which constitute an express or implicit indication that one or more such persons have engaged or do engage in discrimination on a prohibited basis in any aspect of a credit transaction.

O5. Employee or institutional statements that evidence attitudes based on prohibited basis prejudices or stereotypes.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment in Underwriting such as:

U1. *Substantial disparities among the approval/denial rates for applicants by monitored prohibited basis characteristic (especially within income categories).

U2. *Substantial disparities among the application processing times for applicants by monitored prohibited basis characteristic (especially within denial reason groups).

U3. *Substantially higher proportion of withdrawn/incomplete applications from prohibited basis group applicants than from other applicants.

U4. Vague or unduly subjective underwriting criteria.

U5. Lack of clear guidance on making exceptions to underwriting criteria, including credit scoring overrides.

U6. Lack of clear loan file documentation regarding reasons for any exceptions to standard underwriting criteria, including credit scoring overrides.

U7. Relatively high percentages of either exceptions to underwriting criteria or overrides of credit score cutoffs.

U8. Loan officer or broker compensation based on loan volume (especially loans approved per period of time).

U9. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in loan processing or in approving/denying residential loans.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment in Pricing (interest rates, fees, or points) such as:

P1. Financial incentives for loan officers or brokers to charge higher prices (including interest rate, fees and points). Special attention should be given to situations where financial incentives are accompanied by broad pricing discretion (as in P2), such as through the use of overages or yield spread premiums.

P2. Presence of broad discretion in loan pricing (including interest rate, fees and points), such as through overages, underages or yield spread premiums. Such discretion may be present even when institutions provide rate sheets... and fees schedules, if loan officers or brokers are permitted to deviate from those rates and fees without clear and objective criteria.

P3. Use of risk-based pricing that is not based on objective criteria or applied consistently.

P4. *Substantial disparities among prices being quoted or charged to applicants who differ as to their monitored prohibited basis characteristics.

P5. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in residential loan pricing.

P6. *In mortgage pricing, disparities in the incidence or rate spreads of higher-priced lending by prohibited basis characteristics as reported in the HMDA data.

P7. *A loan program that contains only borrowers from a prohibited basis group, or has significant differences in the percentages of prohibited basis groups, especially in the absence of a Special Purpose Credit Program under ECOA.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment by Steering such as:

S1. Lack of clear, objective and consistently implemented standards for (i) referring applicants to subsidiaries, affiliates, or lending channels within the institution (ii) classifying applicants as “prime” or “sub-prime” borrowers, or (iii) deciding what kinds of alternative loan products should be offered or recommended to applicants (product placement).

S2. Financial incentives for loan officers or brokers to place applicants in nontraditional products (i.e., negative amortization, “interest only”, “payment option” adjustable rate mortgages) or higher cost products.

S3. For an institution that offers different products based on credit risk levels, any significant differences in percentages of prohibited basis groups in each of the alternative loan product categories.

S4. *Significant differences in the percentage of prohibited basis applicants in loan products or products with specific features relative to control group applicants. Special attention should be given to products and features that have potentially negative consequences for applicants (i.e., non-traditional mortgages, prepayment penalties, lack of escrow requirements, or credit life insurance).

S5. *For an institution that has one or more sub-prime mortgage subsidiaries or affiliates, any significant differences, by loan product, in the percentage of prohibited basis applicants of the institution compared to the percentage of prohibited basis applicants of the subsidiary(ies) or affiliate(s).

S6. *For an institution that has one or more lending channels that originate the same loan product, any significant differences in the percentage of prohibited basis applicants in one of the lending channels compared to the percentage of prohibited basis applicants of the other lending channel.

S7. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in residential loan pricing or product placement.

S8. *For an institution with sub-prime mortgage subsidiaries, a concentration of those subsidiaries’ branches in minority areas relative to its other branches.

Indicators of potential discriminatory Redlining such as:

R1. *Significant differences, as revealed in HMDA data, in the number of applications received, withdrawn, approved not accepted, and closed for incompleteness or loans originated in those areas in the institution’s market that have relatively high concentrations of minority group residents compared with areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.

R2. *Significant differences between approval/denial rates for all applicants (minority and non-minority) in areas with relatively high concentrations of minority group residents compared with areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.

R3. *Significant differences between denial rates based on insufficient collateral for applicants from areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents and those areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.

R4. *Significant differences in the number of originations of higher-priced loans or loans with potentially negative consequences for borrowers, (i.e., non-traditional mortgages, prepayment penalties, lack of escrow requirements) in areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents compared with areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.

R5. Other patterns of lending identified during the most recent CRA examination that differ by the concentration of minority residents.

R6. Explicit demarcation of credit product markets that excludes MSAs, political subdivisions, census tracts, or other geographic areas within the institution’s lending market or CRA assessment areas and having relatively high concentrations of minority residents.

R7. Difference in services available or hours of operation at branch offices located in areas with concentrations of minority residents when compared to branch offices located in areas with concentrations of non-minority residents.

R8. Policies on receipt and processing of applications, pricing, conditions, or appraisals and valuation, or on any other aspect of providing residential credit that vary between areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents and those areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.

R9. The institution’s CRA assessment area appears to have been drawn to exclude areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents.

R10. Employee statements that reflect an aversion to doing business in areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents.

R11. Complaints or other allegations by consumers or community representatives that the institution excludes or restricts access to credit for areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents. Examiners should review complaints against the institution filed either with their agency or the institution; the CRA public comment file; community contact forms; and the responses to questions about redlining, discrimination, and discouragement of applications, and about meeting the needs of racial or national origin minorities, asked as part of obtaining local perspectives on the performance of financial institutions during prior CRA examinations.

R12. An institution that has most of its branches in predominantly non-minority neighborhoods at the same time that the institution’s sub-prime mortgage subsidiary has branches which are located primarily in predominantly minority neighborhoods.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment in Marketing of residential products, such as:

M1. Advertising patterns or practices that a reasonable person would believe indicate prohibited basis customers are less desirable.

M2. Advertising only in media serving non-minority areas of the market.

M3. Marketing through brokers or other agents that the institution knows (or has reason to know) would serve only one racial or ethnic group in the market.

M4. Use of marketing programs or procedures for residential loan products that exclude one or more regions or geographies within the institutions assessment or marketing area that have significantly higher percentages of minority group residents than does the remainder of the assessment or marketing area.

M5. Using mailing or other distribution lists or other marketing techniques for pre-screened or other offerings of residential loan products that:
   • Explicitly exclude groups of prospective borrowers on a prohibited basis; or
   • Exclude geographies (e.g., census tracts, ZIP codes, etc.) within the institution’s marketing area that have significantly higher percentages of minority group residents than does the remainder of the marketing area.

M6. *Proportion of prohibited basis applicants is significantly lower than that group’s representation in the total population of the market area.

M7. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in advertising or marketing loans.

Step Five: Organize and Focus Residential Risk Analysis

Review the risk factors identified in Step 4 and, for each loan product that displays risk factors, articulate the possible discriminatory effects encountered and organize the examination of those loan products in accordance with the following guidance. For complex issues regarding these factors, consult with agency supervisory staff.

- Where overt evidence of discrimination, as described in factors O1-O5, has been found in connection with a product, document those findings as described in Part III, B, besides completing the remainder of the planned examination analysis.

- Where any of the risk factors U1-U9 are present, consider conducting an underwriting comparative file analysis as described in Part III, C.

- Where any of the risk factors P1-P7 are present, consider conducting a pricing comparative file analysis as described in Part III, D.

- Where any of the risk factors S1-S8 are present, consider conducting a steering analysis as described in Part III, E.

- Where any of the risk factors R1-R12 are present, consider conducting an analysis for redlining as described in Part III, G.

- Where any of the risk factors M1-M7 are present, consider conducting a marketing analysis as described in Part III, H.

- Where an institution uses age in any credit scoring system, consider conducting an examination analysis of that credit scoring system’s compliance with the requirements of Regulation B as described in Part III, I.

Step Six: Identify Consumer Lending Discrimination Risk Factors

For any consumer loan products selected in Step One for risk analysis, examiners should conduct a risk factor review similar to that conducted for residential lending products in Steps Three through Five, above. Examiners should consult with agency supervisory staff regarding the potential use of surrogates to identify possible prohibited basis group individuals.

NOTE: The term surrogate in this context refers to any factor related to a loan applicant that potentially identifies that applicant’s race, color, or other prohibited basis characteristic in instances where no direct evidence of that characteristic is available. Thus, in consumer lending, where monitoring data is generally unavailable, a Hispanic or Asian surname could constitute a surrogate for an applicant’s race or national origin because the examiner can assume that the institution (which can rebut the presumption) perceived the person to be Hispanic or Asian. Similarly, an applicant’s given name could serve as a surrogate for his or her gender. A surrogate for a prohibited basis group characteristic may be used to set up a comparative analysis with control group applicants or borrowers.

Examiners should then follow the rules in Steps Three through Five, above and identify the possible discriminatory patterns encountered and consider examining those products determined to have sufficient risk of discriminatory conduct.

Step Seven: Identify Commercial Lending Discrimination Risk Factors

Where an institution does a substantial amount of lending in the commercial lending market, most notably small business lending and the product has not recently been examined or the underwriting standards have changed since the last examination of the product, the examiner should consider conducting a risk factor review similar to that performed for residential lending products, as feasible, given the limited information available. Such an analysis should generally be limited to determining risk potential based on risk factors U4-U8; P1-P3; R5-R7; and M1-M3.

If the institution makes commercial loans insured by the Small Business Administration (SBA), determine from agency supervisory staff whether SBA loan data (which codes race and other factors) are available for the institution and evaluate those data pursuant to instructions accompanying them.

For large institutions reporting small business loans for CRA purposes and where the institution also voluntarily geocodes loan denials, look for material discrepancies in ratios of approval-to-denial rates for applications in areas with high concentrations of minority residents compared to areas with concentrations of non-minority residents.

Articulate the possible discriminatory patterns identified and consider further examining those products determined to have sufficient risk of discriminatory conduct in accordance with the procedures for commercial lending described in Part III, F.

Step Eight: Complete the Scoping Process

To complete the scoping process, the examiner should review the results of the preceding steps and select those focal points that warrant examination, based on the relative risk levels identified above. In order to remain within the agency’s resource allowances, the examiner may need to choose a smaller number of focal points from among all those selected on the basis of risk. In such instances, set the scope by first, prioritizing focal points on the basis of (i) high number and/or relative severity of risk factors; (ii) high data quality and other factors affecting the likelihood of obtaining reliable examination results; (iii) high loan volume and the likelihood of widespread risk to applicants and borrowers; and (iv) low quality of any compliance program and, second, selecting for examination review as many focal points as resources permit.

Where the judgment process among competing focal points is a close call, information learned in the phase of conducting the compliance management review can be used to further refine the examiner’s choices.

Part II — Compliance Management Review

The Compliance Management Review enables the examination team to determine:

- The intensity of the current examination based on an evaluation of the compliance management measures employed by an institution.
- The reliability of the institution’s practices and procedures for ensuring continued fair lending compliance.

Generally, the review should focus on:

- Determining whether the policies and procedures of the institution enable management to prevent, or to identify and self-correct, illegal disparate treatment in the transactions that relate to the products and issues identified for further analysis under Part I of these procedures.
- Obtaining a thorough understanding of the manner by which management addresses its fair lending responsibilities with respect to (a) the institution’s lending practices and standards, (b) training and other application-processing aids, (c) guidance to employees or agents in dealing with customers, and (d) its marketing or other promotion of products and services.
To conduct this review, examiners should consider institutional records and interviews with appropriate management personnel in the lending, compliance, audit, and legal functions. The examiner should also refer to the Compliance Management Analysis Checklist contained in the Appendix to evaluate the strength of the compliance programs in terms of their capacity to prevent, or to identify and self-correct, fair lending violations in connection with the products or issues selected for analysis. Based on this evaluation:

- Set the intensity of the transaction analysis by minimizing sample sizes within the guidelines established in Part III and the Fair Lending Sample Size Tables in the Appendix, to the extent warranted by the strength and thoroughness of the compliance programs applicable to those focal points selected for examination.
- Identify any compliance program or system deficiencies that merit correction or improvement and present these to management in accordance with Part IV of these procedures.

Where an institution performs a self-evaluation or has voluntarily disclosed the report or results of a self-test of any product or issue that is within the scope of the examination and has been selected for analysis pursuant to Part I of these procedures, examiners may streamline the examination, consistent with agency guidance, provided the self-test or self-evaluation meets the requirements set forth in Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination located in the Appendix.

Part III — Examination Procedures

Once the scope and intensity of the examination have been determined, assess the institution’s fair lending performance by applying the appropriate procedures that follow to each of the examination focal points already selected.

A. Verify Accuracy of Data

Prior to any analysis and preferably before the scoping process, examiners should assess the accuracy of the data being reviewed. Data verifications should follow specific protocols (sampling, size, etc.) intended to ensure the validity of the review. For example, where an institution’s LAR data is relied upon, examiners should generally validate the accuracy of the institution’s submitted data by selecting a sample of LAR entries and verifying that the information noted on the LAR was reported according to instructions by comparing information contained in the loan file for each sampled loan. If the LAR data are inconsistent with the information contained in the loan files, depending on the nature of the errors, examiners may not be able to proceed with a fair lending analysis until the LAR data have been corrected by the institution. In cases where inaccuracies impede the examination, examiners should direct the institution to take action to ensure data integrity (data scrubbing, monitoring, training, etc.).

NOTE: While the procedures refer to the use of HMDA data, other data sources should be considered, especially in the case of non-HMDA reporters or institutions that originate loans but are not required to report them on a LAR.

B. Documenting Overt Evidence of Disparate Treatment

Where the scoping process or any other source identifies overt evidence of disparate treatment, the examiner should assess the nature of the policy or statement and the extent of its impact on affected applicants by conducting the following analysis.

Step 1. Where the indicator(s) of overt discrimination are found in or based on a written policy (for example, a credit scorecard) or communication, determine and document:

a. The precise language of the apparently discriminatory policy or communication and the nature of the fair lending concerns that it raises.

b. The institution’s stated purpose in adopting the policy or communication and the identity of the person on whose authority it was issued or adopted.

c. How and when the policy or communication was put into effect.

d. How widely the policy or communication was applied.

e. Whether and to what extent applicants were adversely affected by the policy or communication.

Step 2. Where any indicator of overt discrimination was an oral statement or unwritten practice, determine and document:

a. The precise nature of the apparently discriminatory policy or practice, and the nature of the fair lending concerns that they raise.

b. The identity of the persons making the statement or applying the practice and their descriptions of the reasons for it and the persons authorizing or directing the use of the statement or practice.

c. How and when the statement or practice was disseminated or put into effect.

d. How widely the statement or practice was disseminated or applied.

e. Whether and to what extent applicants were adversely affected by the statement or practice.

Assemble findings and supporting documentation for...
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

presentation to management in connection with Part IV of these procedures.

C. Transactional Underwriting Analysis — Residential and Consumer Loans.

Step 1. Set Sample Size

a. For each focal point selected for this analysis, two samples will be utilized: (i) prohibited basis group denials and (ii) control group approvals, both identified either directly from monitoring information in the case of residential loan applications or through the use of application data or surrogates in the case of consumer applications.

b. Refer to Fair Lending Sample Size Tables, Table A in the Appendix and determine the size of the initial sample for each focal point, based on the number of prohibited basis group denials and the number of control group approvals by the institution during the twelve month (or calendar year) period of lending activity preceding the examination.

In the event that the number of denials and/or approvals acted on during the preceding 12 month period substantially exceeds the maximum sample size shown in Table A, reduce the time period from which that sample is selected to a shorter period. (In doing so, make every effort to select a period in which the institution’s underwriting standards are most representative of those in effect during the full 12 month period preceding the examination.)

c. If the number of prohibited basis group denials or control group approvals for a given focal point that were acted upon during the 12 month period referenced in 1.b., above, do not meet the minimum standards set forth in the Sample Size Table, examiners need not attempt a transactional analysis for that focal point. Where other risk factors favor analyzing such a focal point, consult with agency supervisory staff on possible alternative methods of judgmental comparative analysis.

d. If agency policy calls for a different approach to sampling (e.g., a form of statistical analysis, a mathematical formula, or an automated tool) for a limited class of institutions, examiners should follow that approach.

Step 2. Determine Sample Composition

a. To the extent the institution maintains records of loan outcomes resulting from exceptions to its credit underwriting standards or other policies (e.g., overrides to credit score cutoffs), request such records for both approvals and denials, sorted by loan product and branch or decision center, if the institution can do so. Include in the initial sample for each focal point all exceptions or overrides applicable to that focal point.

b. Using HMDA/LAR data or, for consumer loans, comparable loan register data to the extent available, choose approved and denied applications based on selection criteria that will maximize the likelihood of finding marginal approved and denied applicants, as discussed below.

c. To the extent that the above factors are inapplicable or other selection criteria are unavailable or do not facilitate selection of the entire sample size of files, complete the initial sample selection by making random file selections from the appropriate sample categories in the Sample Size Table.

Step 3. Compare Approved and Denied Applications

Overview: Although a creditor’s written policies and procedures may appear to be nondiscriminatory, lending personnel may interpret or apply policies in a discriminatory manner. In order to detect any disparate treatment among applicants, the examiner should first eliminate all but “marginal transactions” (see 3.b. below) from each selected focal point sample. Then, a detailed profile of each marginal applicant’s qualifications, the level of assistance received during the application process, the reasons for denial, the loan terms, and other information should be recorded on an Applicant Profile Spreadsheet. Once profiled, the examiner can compare the target and control groups for evidence that similarly qualified applicants have been treated differently as to either the institution’s credit decision or the quality of assistance provided.

a. Create Applicant Profile Spreadsheet

Based upon the institution’s written and/or articulated credit standards and loan policies, identify categories of data that should be recorded for each applicant and provide a field for each of these categories on a worksheet or computerized spreadsheet. Certain data (income, loan amount, debt, etc.) should always be included in the spreadsheet, while the other data selected will be tailored for each loan product and institution based on applicable underwriting criteria and such issues as branch location and underwriter. Where credit bureau scores and/or application scores are an element of the institution’s underwriting criteria (or where such information is regularly recorded in loan files, whether expressly used or not), include a data field for this information in the spread sheet.

In order to facilitate comparisons of the quality of assistance provided to target and control group applicants, respectively, every work sheet should provide a “comments” block appropriately labeled as the site for recording observations from the file or interviews regarding how an applicant was, or was not, assisted in overcoming credit deficiencies or otherwise qualifying for approval.
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

b. Complete Applicant Profiles

From the application files sample for each focal point, complete applicant profiles for selected denied and approved applications as follows:

• A principal goal is to identify cases where similarly qualified prohibited basis and control group applicants had different credit outcomes, because the agencies have found that discrimination, including differences in granting assistance during the approval process, is more likely to occur with respect to applicants who are not either clearly qualified or unqualified (i.e., “marginal” applicants). The examiner-in-charge should, during the following steps, judgmentally select from the initial sample only those denied and approved applications which constitute marginal transactions. (See Appendix on Identifying Marginal Transactions for guidance)

• If few marginal control group applicants are identified from the initial sample, review additional files of approved control group applicants. This will either increase the number of marginal approvals or confirm that marginal approvals are so infrequent that the marginal denials are unlikely to involve disparate treatment.

• The judgmental selection of both marginal-denied and marginal-approved applicant loan files should be done together, in a “back and forth” manner, to facilitate close matches and a more consistent definition of “marginal” between these two types of loan files.

• Once the marginal files have been identified, the data elements called for on the profile spreadsheet are extracted or noted and entered.

• While conducting the preceding step, the examiner should simultaneously look for and document on the spreadsheet any evidence found in marginal files regarding the following:
  o the extent of any assistance, including both affirmative aid and waivers or partial waivers of credit policy provisions or requirements, that appears to have been provided to marginal-approved control group applicants which enabled them to overcome one or more credit deficiencies, such as excessive debt-to-income ratios; and o the extent to which marginal-denied target group applicants with similar deficiencies were, or were not, provided similar affirmative aid, waivers or other forms of assistance.

c. Review and Compare Profiles

• For each focal point, review all marginal profiles to determine if the underwriter followed institution lending policies in denying applications and whether the reason(s) for denial were supported by facts documented in the loan file and properly disclosed to the applicant pursuant to Regulation B. If any (a) unexplained deviations from credit standards, (b) inaccurate reasons for denial or (c) incorrect disclosures are noted, (whether in a judgmental underwriting system, a scored system or a mixed system) the examiner should obtain an explanation from the underwriter and document the response on an appropriate workpaper.

NOTE: In constructing the applicant profiles to be compared, examiners must adjust the facts compared so that assistance, waivers, or acts of discretion are treated consistently between applicants. For example, if a control group applicant’s DTI ratio was lowered to 42% because the institution decided to include short-term overtime income and a prohibited basis group applicant who was denied due to “insufficient income” would have had his ratio drop from 46% to 41% if his short-term overtime income had been considered, then the examiners should consider 41%, not 46%, in determining the benchmark.

• For each reason for denial identified within the target group, rank the denied prohibited basis applicants, beginning with the applicant whose qualification(s) related to that reason for denial were least deficient. (The top-ranked denied applicant in each such ranking will be referred to below as the “benchmark” applicant.)

• Compare each marginal control group approval to the benchmark applicant in each reason-for-denial ranking developed in step (b), above. If there are no approvals who are equally or less qualified, then there are no instances of disparate treatment for the institution to account for. For all such approvals that appear no better qualified than the denied benchmark applicant o identify the approved loan on the worksheet or spreadsheet as an “overlap approval,” and o compare that overlap approval with other marginal prohibited basis denials in the ranking to determine whether additional overlaps exist. If so, identify all overlapping approvals and denials as above.

• Where the focal point involves use of a credit scoring system, the analysis for disparate treatment is similar to the procedures set forth in (c) above, and should focus primarily on overrides of the scoring system itself. For guidance on this type of analysis, refer to Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring, Part C in the Appendix.
Step 4. If there is some evidence of violations in the underwriting process but not enough to clearly establish the existence of a pattern or practice, the examiner should expand the sample as necessary to determine whether a pattern or practice does or does not exist.

Step 5. Discuss all findings resulting from the above comparisons with management and document both the findings and all conversations on an appropriate worksheet.

D. Analyzing Potential Disparities in Pricing and Other Terms and Conditions.

Depending on the intensity of the examination and the size of the borrower population to be reviewed, the analysis of decisions on pricing and other terms and conditions may involve a comparative file review, statistical analysis, a combination of the two, or other specialized technique used by an agency. Each examination process assesses an institution’s credit-decision standards and whether decisions on pricing and other terms and conditions are applied to borrowers without regard to a prohibited basis.

The procedures below encompass the examination steps for a comparative file review. Examiners should consult their own agency’s procedures for detailed guidance where appropriate. For example, when file reviews are undertaken in conjunction with statistical analysis, the guidance on specific sample sizes referenced below may not apply.

Step 1. Determine Sample Selection

Examiners may review data in its entirety or restrict their analysis to a sample depending on the examination approach used and the quality of the institution’s compliance management system. The Fair Lending Sample Size Tables in the Appendix provide general guidance about appropriate sample sizes. Generally, the sample size should be based on the number of prohibited basis group and control group originations for each focal point selected during the 12 months preceding the examination and the outcome of the compliance management system analysis conducted in Part II. When possible, examiners should request specific loan files in advance and request that the institution have them available for review at the start of the examination.

Step 2. Determine Sample Composition and Create Applicant Profiles

Examiners should tailor their sample and subsequent analysis to the specific factors that the institution considers when determining its pricing, terms, and conditions. For example, while decisions on pricing, and other terms and conditions are part of an institution’s underwriting process, general underwriting criteria should not be used in the analysis if they are not relevant to the term or condition to be reviewed. Additionally, consideration should be limited to factors which examiners determine to be legitimate.

While the period for review should be 12-months, prohibited basis group and control group borrowers should be grouped and reviewed around a range of dates during which the institution’s practices for the term or condition being reviewed were the same. Generally, examiners should use the loan origination date or the loan application date.

Identify data to be analyzed for each focal point to be reviewed and record this information for each borrower on a spreadsheet to ensure a valid comparison regarding terms and conditions. For example, in certain cases, an institution may offer slightly differentiated products with significant pricing implications to borrowers. In these cases, it may be appropriate to group these procedures together for the purposes of evaluation.

Step 3. Review Terms and Conditions; Compare with Borrower Outcomes

a. Review all loan terms and conditions (rates, points, fees, maturity variations, LTVs, collateral requirements, etc.) with special attention to those which are left, in whole or in part, to the discretion of loan officers or underwriters. For each such term or condition, identify (a) any prohibited basis group borrowers in the sample who appear to have been treated unfavorably with respect to that term or condition and (b) any control group borrowers who appear to have been treated favorably with respect to that term or condition. The examiner’s analysis should be thoroughly documented in the workpapers.

b. Identify from the sample universe any control group borrowers who appear to have been treated more favorably than one or more of the above-identified prohibited basis group borrowers and who have pricing or creditworthiness factors (under the institution’s standards) that are equal to or less favorable than the prohibited basis group borrowers.

c. Obtain explanations from the appropriate loan officer or other employee for any differences that exist and reanalyze the sample for evidence of discrimination.

d. If there is some evidence of violations in the imposition of terms and conditions but not enough to clearly establish the existence of a pattern or practice, the examiner should expand the sample as necessary to determine whether a pattern or practice does or does not exist.

e. Discuss differences in comparable loans with the institution’s management and document all conversations on an appropriate worksheet. For additional guidance on evaluating management’s responses, refer to Part A, 1 – 5, Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment in the Appendix.
E. Steering Analysis

An institution that offers a variety of lending products or product features, either through one channel or through multiple channels, may benefit consumers by offering greater choices and meeting the diverse needs of applicants. Greater product offerings and multiple channels, however, may also create a fair lending risk that applicants will be illegally steered to certain choices based on prohibited characteristics.

Several examples illustrate potential fair lending risk:

- An institution that offers different lending products based on credit risk levels may present opportunities for loan officers or brokers to illegally steer applicants to the higher-risk products.

- An institution that offers nontraditional loan products or loan products with potentially onerous terms (such as prepayment penalties) may present opportunities for loan officers or brokers to illegally steer applicants to certain products or features.

- An institution that offers prime or sub-prime products through different channels may present opportunities for applicants to be illegally steered to the sub-prime channel.

The distinction between guiding consumers toward a specific product or feature and illegal steering centers on whether the institution did so on a prohibited basis, rather than based on an applicant’s needs or other legitimate factors. It is not necessary to demonstrate financial harm to a group that has been “steered.” It is enough to demonstrate that action was taken on a prohibited basis regardless of the ultimate financial outcome. If the scoping analysis reveals the presence of one or more risk factors S1 through S8 for any selected focal point, consult with agency supervisory staff about conducting a steering analysis as described below.

Step 1. Clarify what options are available to applicants

Through interviews with appropriate personnel of the institution and review of policy manuals, procedure guidelines and other directives, obtain and verify the following information for each product-alternative product pairing or grouping identified above:

a. All underwriting criteria for the product or feature and their alternatives that are offered by the institution or by a subsidiary or affiliate. Examples of products may include stated income, negative amortization, and options ARMs. Examples of terms and features include prepayment penalties and escrow requirements. The distinction between a product, term, and feature may vary institution to institution. For example, some institutions may consider “stated income” a feature, while others may consider that a distinct product.

b. Pricing or other costs applicable to the product and the alternative product(s), including interest rates, points, and all fees.

Step 2. Document the policies, conditions, or criteria that have been adopted by the institution for determining how referrals are to be made and choices presented to applicants.

a. Obtain not only information regarding the product or feature offered by the institution and alternatives offered by subsidiaries/affiliates, but also information on alternatives offered solely by the institution itself.

b. Obtain any information regarding a subsidiary of the institution directly from that entity, but seek information regarding an affiliate or holding company subsidiary only from the institution itself.

c. Obtain all appropriate documentation and provide a written summary of all discussions with loan personnel and managers.

d. Obtain documentation and/or employee estimates as to the volume of referrals made from or to the institution, for each product, during a relevant time period.

e. Resolve to the extent possible any discrepancies between information found in the institution’s documents and information obtained in discussions with loan personnel and managers by conducting appropriate follow-up interviews.

f. Identify any policies and procedures established by the institution and/or the subsidiary or affiliate for (i) referring a person who applies to the institution, but does not meet its criteria, to another internal lending channel, subsidiary or affiliate; (ii) offering one or more alternatives to a person who applies to the institution for a specific product or feature, but does not meet its criteria; or (iii) referring a person who applies to a subsidiary or affiliate for its product, but who appears qualified for a loan from the institution, to the institution; or referring a person who applies through one internal lending channel for a product, but who appears to be qualified for a loan through another lending channel to that particular lending channel.

g. Determine whether loan personnel are encouraged, through financial incentives or otherwise, to make referrals, either from the institution to a subsidiary/affiliate or vice versa. Similarly, determine whether the institution provides financial incentives related to products and features.

Step 3. Determine how referral decisions are made and documented within the institution.

Determine how a referral is made to another internal lending channel, subsidiary, or affiliate. Determine the reason for referral and how it is documented.

Step 4. Determine to what extent individual loan personnel are able to exercise personal discretion in deciding what loan products or other credit alternatives will be made available to a given applicant.

Step 5. Determine whether the institution’s stated policies, conditions, or criteria in fact are adhered to by individual decision makers. If not, does it appear that different policies or practices are actually in effect?

Enter data from the prohibited basis group sample on the spread sheets and determine whether the institution is, in fact, applying its criteria as stated. For example, if one announced criterion for receiving a “more favorable” prime mortgage loan was a back end debt ratio of no more than 38%, review the spread sheets to determine whether that criteria was adhered to. If the institution’s actual treatment of prohibited basis group applicants appears to differ from its stated criteria, document such differences for subsequent discussion with management.

Step 6. To the extent that individual loan personnel have any discretion in deciding what products and features to offer applicants, conduct a comparative analysis to determine whether that discretion has been exercised in a nondiscriminatory manner.

Compare the institution’s or subsidiary/affiliate’s treatment of control group and prohibited basis group applicants by adapting the “benchmark” and “overlap” technique discussed in Part III, Section C of these procedures. For purposes of this Steering Analysis, that technique should be conducted as follows:

a. For each focal point to be analyzed, select a sample of prohibited basis group applicants who received “less favorable” treatment (e.g., referral to a finance company or a subprime mortgage subsidiary or counteroffers of less favorable product alternatives).

   NOTE: In selecting the sample, follow the guidance of Fair Lending Sample Size Tables, Table B in the Appendix and select “marginal applicants” as instructed in Part III, Section C, above.

b. Prepare a spreadsheet for the sample which contains data entry categories for those underwriting and/or referral criteria that the institution identified in Step 1.b as used in reaching underwriting and referral decisions between the pairs of products.

c. Review the “less favorably” treated prohibited basis group sample and rank this sample from least qualified to most qualified.

d. From the sample, identify the best qualified prohibited basis group applicant, based on the criteria identified for the control group, above. This applicant will be the “benchmark” applicant. Rank order the remaining applicants from best to least qualified.

e. Select a sample of control group applicants. Identify those who were treated “more favorably” with respect to the same product-alternative product pair as the prohibited basis group. (Again refer to the Sample Size Table B and marginal applicant processes noted above in selecting the sample.)

f. Compare the qualifications of the benchmark applicant with those of the control group applicants, beginning with the least qualified member of that sample. Any control group applicant who appears less qualified than the benchmark applicant should be identified on the spreadsheet as a “control group overlap.”

g. Compare all control group overlaps with other, less qualified prohibited basis group applicants to determine whether additional overlaps exist.

h. Document all overlaps as possible disparities in treatment. Discuss all overlaps and related findings (e.g., any differences between stated and actual underwriting and/or referral criteria) with management, documenting all such conversations.

Step 7. Examiners should consult with their agency’s supervisory staff if they see a need to contact control group or prohibited basis group applicants to substantiate the steering analysis.

F. Transactional Underwriting Analysis — Commercial Loans.

Overview: Unlike consumer credit, where loan products and prices are generally homogenous and underwriting involves the evaluation of a limited number of credit variables, commercial loans are generally unique and underwriting methods and loan pricing may vary depending on a large number of credit variables. The additional credit analysis that is involved in underwriting commercial credit products will entail additional complexity in the sampling and discrimination analysis process. Although ECOA prohibits discrimination in all commercial credit activities of a covered institution, the agencies recognize that small businesses (sole proprietorships, partnerships, and small, closely-held corporations) may have less experience in borrowing. Small businesses may have fewer borrowing options, which may make them more vulnerable to discrimination. Therefore, in implementing these procedures, examinations should generally be focused on small business credit (commercial applicants that had gross revenues of $1,000,000 or less in the preceding fiscal year), absent some evidence that a focus on other commercial products would be more appropriate.
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Step 1. Understand Commercial Loan Policies

For the commercial product line selected for analysis, the examiner should first review credit policy guidelines and interview appropriate commercial loan managers and officers to obtain written and articulated standards used by the institution in evaluating commercial loan applications.

NOTE: Examiners should consult their own agencies for guidance on when a comparative analysis or statistical analysis is appropriate, and follow their agencies procedures for conducting such a review/analysis.

Step 2. Conduct Comparative File Review

a. Select all (or a maximum of ten) denied applications that were acted on during the three month period prior to the examination. To the extent feasible, include denied applications from businesses that are (i) located in minority and/or integrated geographies or (ii) appear to be owned by women or minority group members, based on the names of the principals shown on applications or related documents. (In the case of institutions that do a significant volume of commercial lending, consider reviewing more than ten applications.)

b. For each of the denied commercial applications selected, record specific information from loan files and through interviews with the appropriate loan officer(s), about the principal owners, the purpose of the loan, and the specific, pertinent financial information about the commercial enterprise (including type of business — retail, manufacturing, service, etc.), that was used by the institution to evaluate the credit request. Maintenance or use of data that identifies prohibited basis characteristics of those involved with the business (either in approved or denied loan applications) should be evaluated as a potential violation of Regulation B.

c. Select ten approved loans that appear to be similar with regard to business type, purpose of loan, loan amount, loan terms, and type of collateral, as the denied loans sampled. For example, if the denied loan sample includes applications for lines of credit to cover inventory purchases for retail businesses, the examiner should select approved applications for lines of credit from retail businesses.

d. For each approved commercial loan application selected, obtain and record information parallel to that obtained for denied applications.

e. The examiner should first compare the credit criteria considered in the credit process for each of the approved and denied applications to established underwriting standards, rather than comparing files directly.

f. The examiner should identify any deviations from credit standards for both approved and denied credit requests, and differences in loan terms granted for approved credit requests.

g. The examiner should discuss each instance where deviations from credit standards and terms were noted, but were not explained in the file, with the commercial credit underwriter. Each discussion should be documented.

Step 3. Conduct Targeted Sampling

a. If deviations from credit standards or pricing are not sufficiently explained by other factors either documented in the credit file or the commercial underwriter was not able to provide a reasonable explanation, the examiner should determine if deviations were detrimental to any protected classes of applicants.

b. The examiner should consider employing the same techniques for determining race and gender characteristics of commercial applicants as those outlined in the consumer loan sampling procedures.

c. If it is determined that there are members of one or more prohibited basis groups among commercial credit requests that were not underwritten according to established standards or received less favorable terms, the examiner should select additional commercial loans, where applicants are members of the same prohibited basis group and select similarly situated control group credit requests in order to determine whether there is a pattern or practice of discrimination. These additional files should be selected based on the specific applicant circumstance(s) that appeared to have been viewed differently by lending personnel on a prohibited basis.

d. If there are not enough similarly situated applicants for comparison in the original sample period to draw a reasonable conclusion, the examiner should expand the sample period. The expanded sample period should generally not go beyond the date of the prior examination.

a. Generally, the task of selecting an appropriate expanded sample of prohibited basis and control group applications for commercial loans will require examiner judgment. The examiner should select a sample that is large enough to be able to draw a reasonable conclusion.

b. The examiner should first select from the applications that were acted on during the initial sample period, but were not included in the initial sample, and select applications from prior time periods as necessary.

c. The expanded sample should include both approved and denied, prohibited basis and control group applications, where similar credit was requested by similar enterprises for similar purposes.

G. Analysis of Potential Discriminatory “Redlining”

Overview: For purposes of this analysis, traditional “redlining” is a form of illegal disparate treatment in which an institution provides unequal access to credit, or unequal terms of credit, because of the race, color, national origin, or other prohibited characteristic(s) of the residents of the area in which the credit seeker resides or will reside or in which the residential property to be mortgaged is located. Redlining may also include “reverse redlining,” the practice of targeting certain borrowers or areas with less advantageous products or services based on prohibited characteristics.

The redlining analysis may be applied to determine whether, on a prohibited basis:

• an institution fails or refuses to extend credit in certain areas;
• an institution targets certain borrowers or certain areas with less advantageous products:
• an institution makes loans in such an area but at a restricted level or upon less-favorable terms or conditions as compared to contrasting areas; or
• an institution omits or excludes such an area from efforts to market residential loans or solicit customers for residential credit.

This guidance focuses on possible discrimination based on race or national origin. The same analysis could be adapted to evaluate relative access to credit for areas of geographical concentration on other prohibited bases — for example, age.

NOTE: It is true that neither the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) nor the Fair Housing Act (FHAct) specifically uses the term “redlining.” However, federal courts as well as agencies that have enforcement responsibilities for the FHAct, have interpreted it as prohibiting institutions from having different marketing or lending practices for certain geographic areas, compared to others, where the purpose or effect of such differences would be to discriminate on a prohibited basis. Similarly, the ECOA would prohibit treating applicants for credit differently on the basis of differences in the racial or ethnic composition of their respective neighborhoods.

Like other forms of disparate treatment, redlining can be proven by overt or comparative evidence. If any written or oral policy or statement of the institution (see risk factors R6-10 in Part I, above) suggests that the institution links the racial or national origin character of an area with any aspect of access to or terms of credit, the examiners should refer to the guidance in Section B of this Part III, on documenting and evaluating overt evidence of discrimination.

Overt evidence includes not only explicit statements, but also any geographical terms used by the institution that would, to a reasonable person familiar with the community in question, connote a specific racial or national origin character. For example, if the principal information conveyed by the phrase “north of 110th Street” is that the indicated area is principally occupied by Hispanics, then a policy of not making credit available “north of 110th Street” is overt evidence of potential redlining on the basis of national origin.

Overt evidence is relatively uncommon. Consequently, the redlining analysis usually will focus on comparative evidence (similar to analyses of possible disparate treatment of individual customers) in which the institution’s treatment of areas with contrasting racial or national origin characters is compared.

When the scoping process (including consultation within an agency as called for by agency procedures) indicates that a redlining analysis should be initiated, examiners should complete the following steps of comparative analysis:

1. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution’s CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that have a racial or national origin character;
2. Determine whether any minority area identified in Step 1 appears to be excluded, under-served, selectively excluded from marketing efforts, or otherwise less-favorably treated in any way by the institution;
3. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution’s CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that are non-minority in character and that the institution appears to treat more favorably;
4. Identify the location of any minority areas located just outside the institution’s CRA assessment area and market area for residential products, such that the institution may be purposely avoiding such areas;
5. Obtain the institution’s explanation for the apparent difference in treatment between the areas and evaluate whether it is credible and reasonable; and
6. Obtain and evaluate other information that may support or contradict interpreting identified disparities to be the result of intentional illegal discrimination.

These steps are discussed in detail below.

Using Information Obtained During Scoping
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Although the six tasks listed are presented below as examination steps in the order given above, examiners should recognize that a different order may be preferable in any given examination. For example, the institution’s explanation (Step 5) for one of the policies or patterns in question may already be documented in the CRA materials reviewed (Step 1) and the CRA examiners may already have verified it, which may be sufficient for purposes of the redlining analysis.

As another example, as part of the scoping process, the examiners may have reviewed an analysis of the geographic distribution of the institution’s loan originations with respect to the racial and national origin composition of census tracts within its CRA assessment or residential market area. Such analysis might have documented the existence of significant discrepancies between areas, by degree of minority concentration, in loans originated (risk factor R1), approval/denial rates (risk factor R2), and/or rates of denials because of insufficient collateral (risk factor R3). In such a situation in which the scoping process has produced a reliable factual record, the examiners could begin with Step 5 (obtaining an explanation) of the redlining analysis below.

In contrast, when the scoping process only yields partial or questionable information, or when the risk factors on which the redlining analysis is based on complaints or allegations against the institution, Steps 1-4 must be addressed.

Step 1. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution’s CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that are of a racial or national origin minority character.

NOTE: The CRA assessment area can be a convenient unit for redlining analysis because information about it typically already is in hand. However, the CRA assessment area may be too limited. The redlining analysis focuses on the institution’s decisions about how much access to credit to provide to different geographical areas. The areas for which those decisions can be best be compared are areas where the institution actually marketed and provided credit and where it could reasonably be expected to have marketed and provided credit. Some of those areas might be beyond or otherwise different from the CRA assessment area.

If there are no areas identifiable for their racial or national origin minority character within the institution’s CRA assessment area or reasonably expected market area for residential products, a redlining analysis is not appropriate. (If there is a substantial but dispersed minority population, potential disparate treatment can be evaluated by a routine comparative file review of applicants.)

This step may have been substantially completed during scoping, but unresolved matters may remain. (For example, several community spokespersons may allege that the institution is redlining, but disagree in defining the area.) The examiners should:

a. Describe as precisely as possible why a specific area is recognized in the community (perceptions of residents, etc.) and/or is objectively identifiable (based on census or other data) as having a particular racial or national origin minority character.

   • The most obvious identifier is the predominant race or national origin of the residents of the area. Examiners should document the percentages of racial or national origin minorities residing within the census tracts that make up the area. Analyzing racial and national origin concentrations in quartiles (such as 0 to <=25%, >25% to <= 50%, >50% to <= 75%, and >75%) or based on majority concentration (0 to <=50% and >50%) may be helpful. However, examiners should bear in mind that it is illegal for the institution to consider a prohibited factor in any way. For example, an area or neighborhood may only have a minority population of 20%, but if the area’s concentration appears related to lending practices, it would be appropriate to use that area’s level of concentration in the analysis. Contacts with community groups can be helpful to learn whether there are such subtle features of racial or ethnic character within a particular neighborhood.

   • Geographical groupings that are convenient for CRA may obscure racial patterns. For example, an underserved, low-income, predominantly minority neighborhood that lies within a larger low-income area that primarily consisted of non-minority neighborhoods may seem adequately served when the entire low-income area is analyzed as a unit. However, a racial pattern of underservice to minority areas might be revealed if the low-income minority neighborhood shared a border with an underserved, middle-income, minority area and those two minority areas were grouped together for purposes of analysis.

b. Describe how the racial or national origin character changes across the suspected redlining area’s various boundaries.

c. Document or estimate the demand for credit, within the minority area. This may include the applicable demographics of the area, including the percentage of homeowners, the median house value, median family income, or the number of small businesses, etc. Review the institution’s non-originated loan applications from the suspected redlined areas. If available, review aggregate institution data for loans originated and applications received from the suspected redlined areas.
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Community contacts may also be helpful in determining the demand for such credit. If the minority area does not have a significant amount of demand for such credit, the area is not appropriate for a redlining analysis.

Step 2. Determine whether any minority area identified in Step 1 is excluded, underserved, selectively excluded from marketing efforts, or otherwise less-favorably treated in any way by the institution.

The examiners should begin with the risk factors identified during the scoping process. The unfavorable treatment may have been substantially documented during scoping and needs only to be finished in this step. If not, this step will verify and measure the extent to which HMDA data show the minority areas identified in Step 1 to be underserved and/or how the institution’s explicit policies treat them less favorably.

a. Review prior CRA lending test analyses to learn whether they have identified any excluded or otherwise underserved areas or other significant geographical disparities in the institution’s lending. Determine whether any of those are the minority areas identified in Step 1.

b. Learn from the institution itself whether, as a matter of policy, it treats any separate or distinct geographical areas within its marketing or service area differently from other areas. This may have been done completely or partially during scoping analysis related to risk factors R5-R9. The differences in treatment can be in marketing, products offered, branch operations (including the services provided and the hours of operation), appraisal practices, application processing, approval requirements, pricing, loan conditions, evaluation of collateral, or any other policy or practice materially related to access to credit. Determine whether any of those less-favored areas are the minority areas identified in Step 1.

c. Obtain from the institution: (i) its reasons for such differences in policy, (ii) how the differences are implemented, and (iii) any specific conditions that must exist in an area for it to receive the particular treatment (more favorable or less favorable) that the institution has indicated.

Step 3. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution’s CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that are non-minority in character and that the institution appears to treat more favorably.

To the extent not already completed during scoping:

a. Document the percentages of control group and of racial or national origin minorities residing within the census tract(s) that comprise(s) the non-minority area.

b. Document the nature of the housing stock in the area.

c. Describe, to the extent known, how the institution’s practices, policies, or its rate of lending change from less-to more-favorable as one leaves the minority area at its various boundaries. (Examiners should be particularly attentive to instances in which the boundaries between favored and disfavored areas deviate from boundaries the institution would reasonably be expected to follow, such as political boundaries or transportation barriers.)

d. Examiners should particularly consider whether, within a large area that is composed predominantly of racial or national origin minority households, there are enclaves that are predominantly non-minority or whether, along the area’s borders, there are irregularities where the non-minority group is predominant. As part of the overall comparison, examiners should determine whether credit access within those small non-minority areas differs from credit access in the larger minority area.

Step 4. Identify the location of any minority areas located just outside the institution’s CRA assessment area and market area for residential products, such that the institution may be purposely avoiding such areas.

Review the analysis from prior CRA examinations of whether the assessment area appears to have been influenced by prohibited factors. If there are minority areas that the institution excluded from the assessment area improperly, consider whether they ought to be included in the redlining analysis. Analyze the institution’s reasonably expected market area in the same manner.

Step 5. Obtain the institution’s explanation for the apparent difference in treatment between the areas and evaluate whether it is credible and reasonable.

This step completes the comparative analysis by soliciting from the institution any additional information not yet considered by the examiners that might show that there is a nondiscriminatory explanation for the apparent disparate treatment based on race or ethnicity.

For each matter that requires explanation, provide the institution full information about what differences appear to exist in how it treats minority and non-minority areas, and how the examiners reached their preliminary conclusions at this stage of the analysis.

a. Evaluate whether the conditions identified by the institution in Step 2 as justifying more favorable treatment pursuant to institutional policy existed in minority neighborhoods that did not receive the favorable treatment called for by institutional policy. If there are minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask... the institution to explain why the areas were treated differently despite the similar conditions.

b. Evaluate whether the conditions identified by the institution in Step 2 as justifying less favorable treatment pursuant to institutional policy existed in non-minority neighborhoods that received favorable treatment nevertheless. If there are non-minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask the institution to explain why those areas were treated differently, despite the similar conditions.

c. Obtain explanations from the institution for any apparent differences in treatment observed by the examiners but not called for by the institution’s policies:

- If the institution’s explanation cites any specific conditions in the non-minority area(s) to justify more favorable treatment, determine whether the minority area(s) identified in Step 1 satisfied those conditions. If there are minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask the institution to explain why the areas were treated differently despite the similar conditions.

- If the institution’s explanation cites any specific conditions in the minority area(s) to justify less favorable treatment, determine whether the non-minority area(s) had those conditions. If there are non-minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask the institution to explain why those areas were treated differently despite the similar conditions.

d. Evaluate the institution’s responses by applying appropriate principles selected from the Appendix on Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment.

Step 6. Obtain and evaluate specific types of other information that may support or contradict a finding of redlining.

As a legal matter, discriminatory intent can be inferred simply from the lack of a legitimate explanation for clearly less-favorable treatment of racial or national origin minorities. Nevertheless, if the institution’s explanations do not adequately account for a documented difference in treatment, the examiners should consider additional information that might support or contradict the interpretation that the difference in treatment constituted redlining.

a. Comparative file review. If there was a comparative file review conducted in conjunction with the redlining examination, review the results; or, if it is necessary and feasible to do so to clarify what appears to be discriminatory redlining, compare denied applications from within the suspected redlining area to approved applications from the contrasting area.

- Learn whether there were any denials of fully qualified applicants from the suspected redlining area. If so, that may support the view that the institution was avoiding doing business in the area.

- Learn whether the file review identified instances of illegal disparate treatment against applicants of the same race or national origin as the suspected redlining area. If so, that may support the view that the institution was avoiding doing business with applicants of that group, such as the residents of the suspected redlining area. Learn whether any such identified victims applied for transactions in the suspected redlining area.

- If there are instances of either of the above, identify denied non-minority residents, if any, of the suspected redlining area and review their application files to learn whether they appear to have been treated in an irregular or less favorable way. If so, that may support the view that the character of the area rather than of the applicants themselves appears to have influenced the credit decisions.

- Review withdrawn and incomplete applications for the suspected redlining area, if those can readily be identified from the HMDA-LAR, and learn whether there are reliable indications that the institution discouraged those applicants from applying. If so, that may support the view that the institution was avoiding conducting business in the area and may constitute evidence of a violation of Section 1002.4(b) of Regulation B. Conversely, if the comparisons of individual transactions show that the institution treated minority and non-minority applicants within and outside the suspected redlining area similarly, that tends to contradict the conclusion that the institution avoided the areas because it had minority residents.

b. Interviews of third parties. The perspectives of third parties will have been taken into account to some degree through the review of available materials during scoping. Later in the examination, in appropriate circumstances, information from third parties may help determine whether the institution’s apparent differences in treatment of minority and non-minority areas constitute redlining.

- Identify persons (such as housing or credit counselors, home improvement contractors, or real estate and mortgage brokers) who may have extensive experience dealing with credit applicants from the suspected redlined area.
• After obtaining appropriate authorization and guidance from your agency, interview those persons to learn of their first-hand experiences related to:
  o oral statements or written indications by an institution’s representatives that loan applications from a suspected redlined area were discouraged;
  o whether the institution treated applicants from the suspected redlining area as called for in its own procedures (as the examiners understand them) and/or whether it treated them similarly to applicants from non-minority areas (as the examiners are familiar with those transactions);
  o any unusual delays or irregularities in loan processing for transactions in the suspected redlining area; and o differences in the institution’s pricing, loan conditions, property valuation practices, etc., in the suspected redlining area compared to contrasting areas.

Also, learn from the third parties the names of any consumers they described as having experienced the questionable behavior recounted by the third party, and consider contacting those consumers.

If third parties witnessed specific conduct by the institution that indicates the institution wanted to avoid business from the area or prohibited basis group in question, this would tend to support interpreting the difference in treatment as intended. Conversely, if third parties report proper treatment or positive actions toward such area or prohibited basis group, this would tend to contradict the view that the institution intended to discriminate.

c. Marketing. A clear exclusion of the suspected redlining area from the institution’s marketing of residential loan products supports the view that the institution did not want to do business in the area. Marketing decisions are affirmative acts to include or exclude areas. Disparities in marketing between two areas may reveal that the institution prefers one to the other. If sufficiently stark and supported by other evidence, a difference in marketing to racially different areas could itself be treated as a redlining violation of the Fair Housing Act. Even below that level of difference, marketing patterns can support or contradict the view that disparities in lending practices were intentional.

• Review materials that show how the institution has marketed in the suspected redlined area and in non-minority areas. Begin with available CRA materials and discuss the issues with CRA examiners, then review other materials as appropriate. The materials may include, for example, the institution’s guidance for the geographical distribution of pre-approved solicitations for credit cards or home equity lines of credit, advertisements in local media or business or telephone directories, business development calls to real estate brokers, and calls by telemarketers.

e. Peer performance. Market share analysis and other comparisons to competitors are insufficient by themselves to prove that an institution engaged in illegal redlining. By the same token, an institution cannot justify its own failure to market or lend in an area by citing other institutions’ failures to lend or market there. However, an institution’s inactivity in an underserved area where its acknowledged competitors are active would tend to support the interpretation that it intends to avoid doing business in the area. Conversely, if it is as active as other institutions that would suggest that it intends to compete for, rather than avoid, business in the area.

• Develop a list of the institution’s competitors.

• Learn the level of lending in the suspected redlining area by competitors. Check any public evaluations of similarly situated competitors obtained by the CRA examiners as part of evaluating the performance context or obtain such evaluations independently.

f. Institution’s record. Request from the institution information about its overall record of serving or attempting to serve the racial or national origin minority group with which the suspected redlining area is identified. The record may reveal intent to serve that group that tends to contradict the view that the institution intends to discriminate against the group.

NOTE: For any information that supports interpreting the situation as illegal discrimination, obtain and evaluate an explanation from the institution as called for in Part IV. If the institution’s explanation is that the disparate results are the consequence of a specific, neutral policy or practice that the institution applies broadly, such as not making loans on homes below a certain value, review the guidance in the Special Analyses section of the Appendix under Disproportionate Adverse Impact Violations and consult agency managers.

H. Analysis of Potential Discriminatory Marketing Practices.

When scoping identifies significant risk factors (M1-M7) related to marketing, examiners should consult their agency’s supervisory staff and experts about a possible marketing discrimination analysis. If the supervisory staff agrees to proceed, the examiners should collect information as follows:
Step 1. Identify the institution’s marketing initiatives.

a. Pre-approved solicitations • Determine whether the institution sends out pre-approved solicitations:
     ° For home purchase loans,
     ° For home improvement loans, or ° For refinance loans.
   • Determine how the institution selects recipients for such solicitations ° Learn from the institution its criteria for such selections.
     ° Review any guidance or other information the institution provided credit reporting companies or other companies that supply such lists.

b. Media Usage
   • Determine in which newspapers and broadcast media the institution advertises.
     ° Identify any racial or national origin identity associated with those media.
     ° Determine whether those media focus on geographical communities of a particular racial or national origin character.
   • Learn the institution’s strategies for geographic and demographic distribution of advertisements.
   • Obtain and review copies of the institution’s printed advertising and promotional materials.
   • Determine what the institution regards as the target audience(s) for those materials.

b. Self-produced promotional materials
   • Learn how the institution distributes its own promotional materials, both methods and geographical distribution.
   • Learn what the institution regards as the target audience(s) for those materials.

d. Realtors, brokers, contractors, and other intermediaries • Determine whether the institution solicits business from specific realtors, brokers, home improvement contractors, and other conduits.

   • Learn how the institution decides which intermediaries it will solicit.
   • Identify the parties contacted and determine the distribution between minority and non-minority areas.
   • Obtain and review the types of information the institution distributes to intermediaries.
   • Determine how often the institution contacts intermediaries.
   • Determine what criteria the institution communicates to intermediaries about the type of customers it seeks or the nature of the geographic areas in which it wishes to do business.

e. Telemarketers or predictive dialer programs
   • Learn how the institution identifies which consumers to contact, and whether the institution sets any parameters on how the list of consumers is compiled.

Step 2. Determine whether the institution’s activities show a significantly lower level of marketing effort toward minority areas or toward media or intermediaries that tend to reach minority areas.

Step 3. If there is any such disparity, document the institution’s explanation for it.

For additional guidance, refer to Part C of the Special Analyses section in the Appendix.

I. Credit Scoring.

If the scoping process results in the selection of a focal point that includes a credit or mortgage scored loan product, refer to the Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring section of the Appendix.

If the institution utilizes a credit scoring program which scores age for any loan product selected for review in the scoping stage, either as the sole underwriting determinant or only as a guide to making loan decisions, refer to Part E of the Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring section of the Appendix.

J. Disparate Impact Issues.

These procedures have thus far focused primarily on examining comparative evidence for possible unlawful disparate treatment. Disparate impact has been described briefly in the Introduction. Whenever an examiner believes that a particular policy or practice of an institution appears to have a disparate impact on a prohibited basis, the examiner should refer to Part A of the Special Analyses section of the Appendix or consult with agency supervisory staff for further guidance.
IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Part IV — Obtaining and Evaluating Responses From the Institution and Concluding the Examination

Step 1. Present to the institution’s management for explanation:

a. Any overt evidence of disparate treatment on a prohibited basis.

b. All instances of apparent disparate treatment (e.g., overlaps) in either the underwriting of loans or in loan prices, terms, or conditions.

c. All instances of apparent disparate treatment in the form of discriminatory steering, redlining, or marketing policies or practices.

d. All instances where a denied prohibited basis applicant was not afforded the same level of assistance or the same benefit of discretion as an approved control group applicant who was no better qualified with regard to the reason for denial.

e. All instances where a prohibited basis applicant received conspicuously less favorable treatment by the institution than was customary from the institution or was required by the institution’s policy.

f. Any statistically significant average difference in either the frequency or amount of pricing disparities between control group and prohibited basis group applicants.

g. Any evidence of neutral policies, procedures or practices that appear to have a disparate impact or effect on a prohibited basis.

Explain that unless there are legitimate, nondiscriminatory explanations (or in the case of disparate impact, a compelling business justification) for each of the preliminary findings of discrimination identified in this Part, the agency could conclude that the institution is in violation of the applicable fair lending laws.

Step 2. Document all responses that have been provided by the institution, not just its “best” or “final” response.
Document each discussion with dates, names, titles, questions, responses, any information that supports or undercuts the institution’s credibility, and any other information that bears on the issues raised in the discussion(s).

Step 3. Evaluate whether the responses are consistent with previous statements, information obtained from file review, documents, reasonable banking practices, and other sources, and satisfy common-sense standards of logic and credibility.

a. Do not speculate or assume that the institution’s decision-maker had specific intentions or considerations in mind when he or she took the actions being evaluated. Do not, for example, conclude that because you have noticed a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for a denial (such as an applicant’s credit weakness), that no discrimination occurred unless it is clear that, at the time of the denial, the institution actually based the denial on that reason.

b. Perform follow-up file reviews and comparative analyses, as necessary, to determine the accuracy and credibility of the institution’s explanations.

c. Refer to Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment in the Appendix for guidance as to common types of responses.

d. Refer to the Disproportionate Adverse Impact Violations portion of the Special Analyses section of the Appendix for guidance on evaluating the institution’s responses to apparent disparate impact.

Step 4. If, after completing Steps 1–3 above, you conclude that the institution has failed to adequately demonstrate that one or more apparent violations had a legitimate nondiscriminatory basis or were otherwise lawful, prepare a documented list or discussion of violations, or a draft examination report, as prescribed by agency directives.

Step 5. Consult with agency supervisory staff regarding whether (a) any violations should be referred to the Departments of Justice or Housing and Urban Development and (b) enforcement action should be undertaken by your agency.
Appendices

Introduction
This Appendix offers a full range of information that might conceivably be brought to bear in an examination. In that sense, it is a “menu” of resources to be considered and selected from, depending on the nature and scope of the examination being conducted.

Compliance Management Analysis Checklist
This checklist is for use in conjunction with Part II of these procedures as a device for examiners to evaluate the strength of an institution’s compliance program in terms of its capacity to prevent, and to identify and self-correct fair lending violations in connection with the products or issues selected for analysis. The checklist is not intended to be an absolute test of an institution’s compliance management program. Programs containing all or most of the features described in the list may nonetheless be flawed for other reasons; conversely, a compliance program that encompasses only a portion of the factors listed below may nonetheless adequately support a strong program under appropriate circumstances. In short, the examiner must exercise his or her best judgment in utilizing this list and in assessing the overall quality of an institution’s efforts to ensure fair lending compliance.

If the transactions within the proposed scope are covered by a listed preventive measure, and the answer is “Yes”, check the box in the first column. You may then reduce the intensity (mainly the sample size) of the planned comparative file review to the degree that the preventive measures cover transactions within the proposed scope. Document your findings in sufficient detail to justify any resulting reduction in the intensity of the examination.

You are not required to learn whether preventive measures apply to specific products outside the proposed scope. However, if the information you have obtained shows that the measure is a general practice of the institution, and thus applies to all loan products, check the box in the second column in order to assist future examination planning.

Preventive Measures
Determine whether policies and procedures exist that tend to prevent illegal disparate treatment in the transactions you plan to examine. There is no legal or agency requirement for institutions to conduct these activities. The absence of any of these policies and practices is never, by itself, a violation.

2. Compliance Audit Function: Does the Institution Attempt to Detect Prohibited Disparate Treatment by Self-Test or Self-Evaluation?

NOTE: A self-test is any program, practice or study that is designed and specifically used to assess the institution’s compliance with the ECOA and the Fair Housing Act. It creates data or factual information that is not otherwise available and cannot be derived from loan, application or other records related to credit transactions (12 CFR 1002.15(b)(1) and (24 CFR 100.141). The report, results, and many other records associated with a self-test are privileged unless an institution voluntarily discloses the report or results or otherwise forfeits the privilege. See 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a) for a complete listing of the types of information covered by the privilege. A self-evaluation, while generally having the same purpose as a self-test, does not create any new data or factual information, but uses data readily available in loan or application files and other records used in credit transactions and, therefore, does not meet the self-test definition. See Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination in this Appendix for more information about self-tests and self-evaluations.

While you may request the results of self-evaluations, you should not request the results of self-tests or any of the information listed in 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a). If an institution discloses the self-test report or results to its regulator, it will lose the privilege. The following items are intended to obtain information about the institution’s approach to self-testing and self-evaluation, not the findings. Complete the checklist below for each self-evaluation and each self-test, where the institution voluntarily discloses the report or results. Evaluating the results of self-evaluations and voluntarily disclosed self-tests is described in Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination in the Appendix.

Mark the box if the answer is “yes” for the transactions within the scope.

   - Compensated for any damages, both out of pocket and compensatory?
   - Notified of their legal rights?

b. Other corrective action:

1. Are institutional policies or procedures that may have contributed to the discrimination to be corrected?
2. Are employees involved to be trained and/or disciplined?
3. Is the need for community outreach programs and/or changes in marketing strategy or loan products to better serve minority segments of the institution’s market to be considered?
4. Are audit and oversight systems to be improved in order to ensure there is not recurrence of any identified discrimination?

Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring

These procedures are designed to help an examiner draw and support fair lending conclusions in situations involving automated underwriting or credit scoring.

A. Structure and Organization of the Scoring System

Determine the utilization of credit scoring at the institution including:

1. For each customized credit scoring model or scorecard for any product, or for any credit scoring model used in connection with a product held in portfolio, identify and obtain:
   a. The number and inter-relationship of each model or scorecard applied to a particular product;
   b. The purposes for which each scorecard is employed (e.g., approval decision, set credit limits, set pricing, determine processing requirements, etc.);
   c. The developer of each scorecard used (e.g., in-house department, affiliate, independent vendor name) and describe the development population utilized;
   d. The types of monitoring reports generated (including front-end, back-end, account management and any disparate impact analyses), the frequency of generation and recent copies of each;
   e. All policies applicable to the use of credit scoring;
   f. Training materials and programs on credit scoring for employees, agents and brokers involved in any aspect of retail lending;
   g. Any action taken to revalidate or re-calibrate any model or scorecard used during the exam period and the reason(s) why;
   h. The number of all high-side and low-side overrides for each type of override occurring during the exam period and any guidance given to employees on their ability to override;
   i. All cutoffs used for each scorecard throughout the examination period and the reasons for the cutoffs and any change made during the exam period;
   j. All variables scored by each product’s scorecard(s) and the values that each variable may take; and
   k. The method used to select for disclosure those adverse action reasons arising from application of the model or scorecard.

2. For each judgmental underwriting system that includes as an underwriting criterion a standard credit bureau or secondary market credit score, identify:
   a. The vendor of each credit score and any vendor recommendation or guidance on the usage of the score relied upon by the institution;
   b. The institution’s basis for using the particular bureau or secondary market score and the cutoff standards for each product’s underwriting system and the reasons for the cutoffs and any changes to the same during the exam period;
   c. The number of exceptions or overrides made to the credit score component of the underwriting criteria and the basis for those exceptions or overrides, including any guidance given to employees on their ability to depart from credit score underwriting standards; and
   d. Types of monitoring reports generated on the judgmental system or its credit scoring component (including front-end, back-end, differential processing and disparate impact analysis), the frequency of generation and recent copies of each.

B. Adverse Action Disclosure Notices

Determine the methodology used to select the reasons why adverse action was taken on a credit application denied on the basis of the applicant’s credit score. Compare the methodology used to the examples recited in the Commentary to Regulation B and decide acceptability against that standard. Identify any consumer requests for reconsideration of credit score denial reasons and review the action taken by management for consistency across applicant groups.

Where a credit score is used to differentiate application processing, and an applicant is denied for failure to attain a judgmental underwriting standard that would not be applied if the applicant had received a better credit score (thereby being considered in a different—presumably less stringent—application processing group), ensure that the adverse action notice also discloses the bases on which the applicant failed to attain the credit score required for consideration in the less stringent processing group.

C. Disparate Treatment in the Application of Credit Scoring Programs

1. Determine what controls and policies management has implemented to ensure that the institution’s credit scoring models or credit score criteria are not applied in a discriminatory manner, in particular:
   a. Examine institution guidance on using the credit scoring system, on handling overrides and on processing applicants and how well that guidance is understood and observed by the targeted employees and monitored for compliance by management; and
   b. Examine institution policies that permit overrides or that provide for different processing or underwriting requirements based on geographic identifiers or borrower score ranges to assure that they do not treat protected group applicants differently than other similarly situated applicants.

2. Evaluate whether any of the bases for granting credit to control group applicants who are low-side overrides are applicable to any prohibited basis denials whose credit... score was equal to or greater than the lowest score among the low-side overrides. If such cases are identified, obtain and evaluate management’s reason for why such different treatment is not a fair lending violation.

3. Evaluate whether any of the bases for denying credit to any prohibited basis applicants who are high-side overrides are applicable to any control group approvals whose credit score was equal to or less than the highest score among the prohibited basis high-side overrides. If such cases are identified, obtain and evaluate management’s reason for why such different treatment is not a fair lending violation.

4. If credit scores are used to segment applicants into groups that receive different processing or are required to meet additional underwriting requirements (e.g., “tiered risk underwriting”), perform a comparative file review, or confirm the results and adequacy of management’s comparative file review, that evaluates whether all applicants within each group are treated equally.

D. Disparate Impact and Credit Scoring Algorithms Consult with agency supervisory staff to assess potential disparate treatment issues relating to the credit scoring algorithm.

E. Credit Scoring Systems that Include Age Regulation B expressly requires the initial validation and periodic revalidation of a credit scoring system that considers age. There are two ways a credit scoring system can consider age: 1) the system can be split into different scorecards depending on the age of the applicant; and 2) age may be directly scored as a variable. Both features may be present in some systems. Regulation B requires that all credit scoring systems that consider age in either of these ways must be validated (in the language of the regulation, empirically derived, demonstrably and statistically sound (EDDSS)).

1. Age-Split Scorecards: If a system is split into only two cards and one card covers a wide age range that encompasses elderly applicants (applicants 62 or older), the system is treated as considering, but not scoring, age.
Typically, the younger scorecard in an age-split system is used for applicants under a specific age between 25 and 30. It de-emphasizes factors such as the number of trade lines and the length of employment, and increases the negative weight of any derogatory information on the credit report. Systems such as these do not raise the issue of assigning a negative factor or value to the age of an elderly applicant. However, if age is directly scored as a variable (whether or not the system is age-split), or if elderly applicants are included in a card with a narrow age range in an age-split system, the system is treated as scoring age.

2. Scorecards that Score Age: If a scorecard scores age directly, in addition to meeting the EDDSS requirement, the creditor must ensure that the age of an elderly applicant is not assigned a negative factor or value. (See the staff commentary at 12 CFR 1002.2(p) and 1002.6(b)(2)). A negative factor or value means utilizing a factor, value, or weight that is less favorable than the creditor’s experience warrants or is less favorable than the factor, value, or weight assigned to the most favored age group below the age of 62 (12 CFR 1002.2(v)).

F. Examination for Empirical Derivation and Statistical Soundness Regulation B requires credit scoring systems that use age to be empirically derived, and demonstrably and statistically sound.
This means that they must fulfill the requirements of 12 CFR 1002.2(p)(1)(i) - (iv). Obtain documentation provided by the developer of the system and consult the agency’s most recent guidance for making that determination.

Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment
A. Responses to Comparative Evidence of Disparate Treatment
The following are responses that an institution may offer — separately or in combination — to attempt to explain that the appearance of illegal disparate treatment is misleading, and that no violation has in fact occurred. The responses, if true, may rebut the appearance of disparate treatment. The examiners must evaluate the validity and credibility of the responses.

1. The institution’s personnel were unaware of the prohibited basis identity of the applicant(s)
If the institution claims to have been unaware of the prohibited basis identity (race, etc.) of an applicant or neighborhood, ask it to show that the application in question was processed in such a way that the institution’s staff would not know the prohibited basis identity of the applicant.
If the product is one for which the institution maintains prohibited basis monitoring information, assume that all employees could have taken those facts into account.
Assume the same when there was face-to-face contact between any employee and the consumer.
If there are other facts about the application from which an ordinary person would have recognized the applicant’s prohibited basis identity (for example, the surname is an easily recognizable Hispanic one), assume that the institution’s staff drew the same conclusions. If the racial character of a community is in question, ask the institution to provide persuasive evidence why its staff would not know the racial character of any community in its service area.

2. The difference in treatment was justified by differences in the applicants (applicants not “similarly situated”)

FDIC Consumer Compliance Examination Manual — December 2012
IV–2.9
Ask the institution to account for the difference in treatment by pointing out a specific difference between the applicants’ qualifications, or some factor not captured in the application but that legitimately makes one applicant more or less attractive to the institution, or some non-prohibited factor related to the processing of their applications. The difference identified by the institution must be one that is important enough to justify the difference in treatment in question, not a meaningless difference.

The factors commonly cited to show that applicants are not similarly situated fall into two groups: those that can be evaluated by how consistently they are handled in other transactions, and those that cannot be evaluated in that way.

a. Verifying “not similarly situated” explanations by consistency

The appearance of disparate treatment remains if a factor cited by the institution to justify favorable treatment for a control group applicant also exists for an otherwise similar prohibited basis applicant who was treated unfavorably. Similarly, the appearance of disparate treatment remains if a factor cited by the institution to justify unfavorable treatment for a prohibited basis applicant also exists for a control group applicant that got favorable treatment. If this is not so, ask the institution to document that the factor cited in its explanation was used consistently for control group and prohibited basis applicants.

• Among the responses that should be evaluated this way are:
  ° Customer relationship. Ask the institution to document that a customer relationship was also sometimes considered to the benefit of prohibited basis applicants and/or that its absence worked against control group customers.
  ° “Loan not saleable or insurable.” If file review is still in progress, be alert for loans approved despite the claimed fatal problem. At a minimum, ask the institution to be able to produce the text of the secondary market or insurer’s requirement in question.
  ° Difference in standards or procedures between branches or underwriters. Ask the institution to provide transactions documenting that each of the two branches or underwriters applied its standards or procedures consistently to both prohibited basis and control group applications it processed, and that each served similar proportions of the prohibited basis group.
  ° Difference in applying the same standard (difference in “strictness”) between underwriter, branches, etc. Ask the institution to provide transactions documenting that the stricter employee, branch, etc., was strict for both prohibited basis and control group applicants and that the other was lenient for both, and that each served similar proportions of the prohibited basis group. The best evidence of this would be prohibited basis applicants who received favorable treatment from the lenient branch and control group applicants who received less favorable treatment from the “strict” branch.

b. Evaluating “not similarly situated” explanations by other means.

• If consistency cannot be evaluated, consider an explanation favorably even without examples of its consistent use if:
  ° The factor is documented to exist in (or be absent from) the transactions, as claimed by the institution;
  ° The factor is one a prudent institution would consider and is consistent with the institution’s policies and procedures;
  ° File review found no evidence that the factor is applied selectively on a prohibited basis and control group applications. If that is not available, find no violation if the misunderstanding is a reasonable mistake.

• Some factors that may be impossible to compare for consistency are:
  ° Unusual underwriting standard. Ask the institution to show that the standard is prudent. If the standard is prudent and not inconsistent with other information, accept this explanation even though there is no documentation that it is used consistently.
  ° “Close calls.” The institution may claim that underwriters’ opposite decisions on similar applicants reflects legitimate discretion that the examiners should not second guess. That is not an acceptable explanation for identical applicants... with different results, but is acceptable when the applicants have differing strengths and weaknesses that different underwriters might reasonably weigh differently. However, do not accept the explanation if other files reveal that these “strengths” or “weaknesses” are counted or ignored selectively on a prohibited basis.

- “Character loan.” Expect the institution to identify a specific history or specific facts that make the applicant treated favorably a better risk than those treated less favorably.
- “Accommodation loan.” There are many legitimate reasons that may make a transaction appealing to an institution apart from the familiar qualifications demanded by the secondary market and insurers. For example, a consumer may be related to or referred by an important customer, be a political or entertainment figure who would bring prestige to the institution, be an employee of an important business customer, etc. It is not illegal discrimination to make a loan to an otherwise unqualified control group applicant who has such attributes while denying a loan to an otherwise similar prohibited basis applicant without them. However, be skeptical when the institution cites reasons for “accommodations” that an ordinary prudent institution would not value.
- “Gut feeling.” Be skeptical when institutions justify an approval or denial by a general perception or reaction to the consumer. Such a perception or reaction may be linked to a racial or other stereotype that legally must not influence credit decisions. Ask whether any specific event or fact generated the reaction. Often, the institution can cite something specific that made him or her confident or uncomfortable about the consumer. There is no discrimination if it is credible that the institution indeed considered such a factor and did not apply it selectively on a prohibited basis.

c. Follow up customer contacts

- If the institution’s explanation of the handling of a particular transaction is based on consumer traits, actions, or desires not evident from the file, consider obtaining agency authorization to contact the consumer to verify the institution’s description. Such contacts need not be limited to possible victims of discrimination, but can include control group applicants or other witnesses.

3. The different results stemmed from an inadvertent error

If the institution claims an identified error such as miscalculation or misunderstanding caused the favorable or unfavorable result in question, evaluate whether the facts support the assertion that such an event occurred.

If the institution claims an unidentified error caused the favorable or unfavorable result in question, expect the institution to provide evidence that discrimination is inconsistent with its demonstrated conduct, and therefore that discrimination is the less logical interpretation of the situation. Consider the context (as described below).

4. The apparent disparate treatment on a prohibited basis is a misleading portion of a larger pattern of random inconsistencies

Ask the institution to provide evidence that the unfavorable treatment is not limited to the prohibited basis group and that the favorable treatment is not limited to the control group. Without such examples, do not accept an institution’s unsupported claim that otherwise inexplicable differences in treatment are distributed randomly.

If the institution can document that similarly situated prohibited basis group applicants received the favorable treatment in question approximately as frequently and in comparable degree as the control group applicants, conclude there is no violation.

NOTE: Transactions are relevant to “random inconsistency” only if they are “similarly situated” to those apparently treated unequally.

5. Loan terms and conditions

The same analyses described in the preceding sections with regard to decisions to approve or deny loans also apply to pricing differences. Risks and costs are legitimate considerations in setting prices and other terms and conditions of loan products. However, generalized reference by the institution to “cost factors” is insufficient to explain pricing differences.

If the institution claims that specific borrowers received different terms or conditions because of cost or risk considerations, ask the institution to be able to identify specific risk or cost differences between them.

If the institution claims that specific borrowers received different terms or conditions because they were not similarly situated as negotiators, consider whether application records might provide relevant evidence. If the records are not helpful, consider seeking authorization to contact consumers to learn whether the institution in fact behaved comparably toward prohibited basis and control group consumers. The contacts would be to learn such information as the institution’s opening quote of terms to the consumer and the progress of the negotiations.

If the institution responds that an average price difference between the control and prohibited basis groups is based on cost or risk factors, ask it to identify specific risk or cost differences between individual control group
IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

applicants with the lowest rates and prohibited basis group applicants with the highest rates that are significant enough to justify the pricing differences between them. If the distinguishing factors cited by the institution are legitimate and verifiable as described in the sections above, remove those applications from the average price calculation. If the average prices for the remaining control group and prohibited basis group members still differ more than minimally, consult agency supervisory staff about further analysis. Findings or violations based on disparate treatment or disparate impact regarding cost or risk factors should be discussed with agency supervisory staff.

B. Responses to Overt Evidence of Disparate Treatment

1. Descriptive references vs. lending considerations

A reference to race, gender, etc., does not constitute a violation if it is merely descriptive — for example, “the applicant was young.” In contrast, when the reference reveals that the prohibited factor influenced the institution’s decisions and/or consumer behavior, treat the situation as an apparent violation to which the institution must respond.

2. Personal opinions vs. lending considerations

If an employee involved with credit availability states unfavorable views regarding a racial group, gender, etc., but does not explicitly relate those views to credit decisions, review that employee’s credit decisions for possible disparate treatment of the prohibited basis group described unfavorably. If there are no instances of apparent disparate treatment, treat the employee’s views as permissible private opinions. Inform the institution that such views create a risk of future violations.

3. Stereotypes related to credit decisions

There is an apparent violation when a prohibited factor influences a credit decision through a stereotype related to creditworthiness — for example, a loan denial because “a single woman could not maintain a large house.” If the stereotyped beliefs are offered as “explanations” for unfavorable treatment, regard such unfavorable treatment as apparent illegal disparate treatment. If the stereotype is only a general observation unrelated to particular transactions, review that employee’s credit decisions for possible disparate treatment of the prohibited basis group in question. Inform the institution that such views create a risk of future violations.

4. Indirect reference to a prohibited factor

If negative views related to creditworthiness are described in non-prohibited terms, consider whether the terms would commonly be understood as surrogates for prohibited terms. If so, treat the situation as if explicit prohibited basis terms were used. For example, an institution’s statement that “It’s too risky to lend north of 110th Street” might be reasonably interpreted as a refusal to lend because of race if that portion of the institution’s lending area north of 110th Street were predominantly black and the area south, white.

5. Lawful use of a prohibited factor

a. Special Purpose Credit Program (SPCP)

If an institution claims that its use of a prohibited factor is lawful because it is operating an SPCP, ask the institution to document that its program conforms to the requirements of Regulation B. An SPCP must be defined in a written plan that existed before the institution made any decisions on loan applications under the program. The written plan must:

- demonstrate that the program will benefit persons who would otherwise be denied credit or receive credit on less favorable terms; and
- state the time period the program will be in effect or when it will be re-evaluated.

No provision of an SPCP should deprive people who are not part of the target group of rights or opportunities they otherwise would have. Qualified programs operating on an otherwise-prohibited basis will not be cited as a violation.

NOTE: Advise the institution that an agency finding that a program is a lawful SPCP is not absolute security against legal challenge by private parties. Suggest that an institution concerned about legal challenge from other quarters use exclusions or limitations that are not prohibited by ECOA or the FHAct, such as “first-time home buyer.”

b. Second review program

Such programs are permissible if they do no more than ensure that lending standards are applied fairly and uniformly to all applicants. For example, it is permissible to review the proposed denial of applicants who are members of a prohibited basis group by comparing their applications to the approved applications of similarly qualified individuals who are in the control group to determine if the applications were evaluated consistently.

Ask the institution to demonstrate that the program is a safety net that merely attempts to prevent discrimination, and does not involve underwriting terms or practices that are preferential on a prohibited basis.

Statements indicating that the mission of the program is to apply different standards or efforts on behalf of a particular racial or other group constitute overt evidence of disparate treatment. Similarly, there is an apparent violation if comparative analysis of applicants who are processed through the second review and those who are not discloses dual standards related to the prohibited basis.

c. Affirmative marketing/advertising program:

Affirmative advertising and marketing efforts that do not involve application of different lending standards are permissible under both the ECOA and the FHAct.
For example, special outreach to a minority community would be permissible.

Identifying Marginal Transactions

These procedures are intended to assist an examiner in identifying denied and approved applications that were not either clearly qualified or unqualified, i.e., marginal transactions.

A. Marginal Denials

Denied applications with any or all the following characteristics are “marginal.” Such denials are compared to marginal approved applications. Marginal denied applications include those that:

- Were close to satisfying the requirement that the adverse action notice said was the reason for denial;
- Were denied by the institution’s rigid interpretation of inconsequential processing requirements;
- Were denied quickly for a reason that normally would take a longer time for an underwriter to evaluate;
- Involved an unfavorable subjective evaluation of facts that another person might reasonably have interpreted more favorably (for example, whether late payments actually showed a “pattern,” or whether an explanation for a break in employment was “credible”);
- Resulted from the institution’s failure to take reasonable steps to obtain necessary information;
- Received unfavorable treatment as the result of a departure from customary practices or stated policies. For example, if it is the institution’s stated policy to request an explanation of derogatory credit information, a failure to do so for a prohibited basis applicant would be a departure from customary practices or stated policies even if the derogatory information seems to be egregious;
- Were similar to an approved control group applicant who received unusual consideration or service, but were not provided such consideration or service;
- Received unfavorable treatment (for example, were denied or given various conditions or more processing obstacles) but appeared fully to meet the institution’s stated requirements for favorable treatment (for example, approval on the terms sought);
- Received unfavorable treatment related to a policy or practice that was vague, and/or the file lacked documentation on the applicant’s qualifications related to the reason for denial or other factor;
- Met common secondary market or industry standards even though failing to meet the institution’s more rigid standards;
- Had a strength that a prudent institution might believe outweighed the weaknesses cited as the basis for denial;
- Had a history of previously meeting a monthly housing obligation equivalent to or higher than the proposed debt; and/or
- Were denied for an apparently “serious” deficiency that might easily have been overcome. For example, an applicant’s total debt ratio of 50 percent might appear grossly to exceed the institutions guideline of 36 percent, but this may in fact be easily corrected if the application lists assets to pay off sufficient nonhousing debts to reduce the ratio to the guideline, or if the institution were to count excluded part-time earnings described in the application.

B. Marginal Approvals

Approved applications with any or all of the following characteristics are “marginal.” Such approvals are compared to marginal denied applications. Marginal approvals include those:

- Whose qualifications satisfied the institution’s stated standard, but very narrowly;
- That bypassed stated processing requirements (such as verifications or deadlines);
- For which stated creditworthiness requirements were relaxed or waived;
- That, if the institution’s own standards are not clear, fell short of common secondary market or industry lending standards;
- That a prudent conservative institution might have denied;
- Whose qualifications were raised to a qualifying level by assistance, proposals, counteroffers, favorable characterizations or questionable qualifications, etc.; and/or
- That in any way received unusual service or consideration that facilitated obtaining the credit.

Potential Scoping Information

As part of the scoping process described in Part I of the procedures, examiners will need to gather documents and information to sufficiently identify their focal points for review. Below is a list of suggested information that examiners may wish to gather internally, as well as from the institution itself.

A. Internal Agency Documents and Records

1. Previous examination reports and related work papers for the most recent Compliance / CRA and Safety and Soundness Examinations.
2. Complaint information.
3. Demographic data for the institution’s community.
IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

Comment: The examiner should obtain the most recent agency demographic data, for information on the characteristics of the institution’s assessment/market areas.

B. Information from the institution

Comment: Prior to beginning a compliance examination, the examiner should request the institution to provide the information outlined below. This request should be made far enough in advance of the on-site phase of the examination to facilitate compliance by the institution. In some institutions, the examiner may not be able to review certain of this information until the on-site examination. The examiner should generally request only those items that correspond to the time period(s) being examined.

Explanatory Notes to Sample Size Tables

1. Examiners should not follow Table B when conducting a pricing review that involves a regression analysis. Consult with agency supervisory staff for specific protocol in these cases.

2. When performing both underwriting and terms and conditions comparisons, use the same control group approval sample for both tasks.

3. If there are fewer than 5 prohibited basis denials or 20 control group approvals, refer to “Sample Size” instructions in the procedures.

4. “Minimum” and “maximum” sample sizes: select a sample size between the minimum and maximum numbers identified above. Examiners should base the size of their review on the level of risk identified during the preplanning and scoping procedures. Once the sample size has been determined, select individual transactions judgmentally. Refer to procedures.

5. If two prohibited basis groups (e.g., black and Hispanic) are being compared against one control group, select a control group that is 5 times greater than the larger prohibited basis group sample, up to the maximum.

6. Where the institution’s discrimination risk profile identifies significant discrepancies in withdrawal/incomplete activity between control and prohibited basis groups, or where the number of marginal prohibited basis group files available for sampling is small, an examiner may consider supplementing samples by applying the following rules:
   - If prohibited basis group withdrawals/incompletes occur after the applicant has received an offer of credit that includes pricing terms, this is a reporting error under Regulation C (the institution should have reported the application as approved but not accepted) and therefore these applications should be included as prohibited basis group approvals in a terms and conditions comparative file analysis.
   - If prohibited basis group incompletes occur due to lack of an applicant response with respect to an item that would give rise to a denial reason, then include them as denials for that reason when conducting an underwriting comparative file analysis.
IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

1. Institution’s Compliance Program (For examinations that will include analysis of the institution’s compliance program.)
   a. Organization charts identifying those individuals who have lending responsibilities or compliance, HMDA or CRA responsibilities, together with job descriptions for each such position.
   b. Lists of any pending litigation or administrative proceedings concerning fair lending matters.
   c. Results of self-evaluations or self-tests (where the institution chooses to share self-test results), copies of audit or compliance reviews of the institution’s program for compliance with fair lending laws and regulations, including both internal and independent audits.
      NOTE: The request should advise the institution that it is not required to disclose the report or results of any self-tests of the type protected under amendments to ECOA and the FFAct programs.
   d. Complaint file.
   e. Any written or printed statements describing the institution’s fair lending policies and/or procedures.
   f. Training materials related to fair lending issues including records of attendance.
   g. Records detailing policy exceptions or overrides, exception reporting and monitoring processes.

2. Lending Policies / Loan Volume
   a. Internal underwriting guidelines and lending policies for all consumer and commercial loan products.
      Comment: If guidelines or policies differ by branch or other geographic location, request copies of each variation.
   b. A description of any credit scoring system(s) in use now or during the exam period.
      Comment: Inquire as to whether a vendor or in-house system is used; the date of the last verification; the factors relied on to construct any in-house system and, if applicable, any judgmental criteria used in conjunction with the scoring system.
   c. Pricing policies for each loan product, and for both direct and indirect loans.
      Comment: The institution should be specifically asked whether its pricing policies for any loan products include the use of “overages”. The request should also ask whether the institution offers any “sub-prime” loan products or otherwise uses any form of risk-based pricing. A similar inquiry should be made regarding the use of any cost-based pricing. If any of these three forms are or have been in use since the last exam, the institution should provide pricing policy and practice details for each affected product, including the institution’s criteria for differentiating between each risk or cost level and any policies regarding overages. Regarding indirect lending, the institution should be asked to provide any forms of agreement (including compensation) with brokers/dealers, together with a description of the roles that both the institution and the dealer/broker play in each stage of the lending process.
   d. A description of each form of compensation plan for all lending personnel and managers.
   e. Advertising copy for all loan products.
   f. The most recent HMDA / LAR, including unreported data if available.
      Comment: The integrity of the institution’s HMDA-LAR data should be verified prior to the pre-examination analysis.
   g. Any existing loan registers for each non-HMDA loan product.
      Comment: Loan registers for the 3 month period preceding the date of the examination, together with any available lists of declined loan applicants for the same period should be requested. Registers / lists should contain, to the extent available, the complete name and address of loan applicants and applicable loan terms, including loan amount, interest rate, fees, repayment schedule and collateral codes.
   h. A description of any application or loan-level data bases maintained, including a description of all data fields within the database or that can be linked at the loan-level.
   i. Forms used in the application and credit evaluation process for each loan product.
      Comment: At a minimum, this request should include all types of credit applications, forms requesting financial information, underwriter worksheets, any form used for the collection of monitoring information, and any quality control or second review forms or worksheets.
   j. Lists of service providers.
      Comment: Service providers may include: brokers, realtors, real estate developers, appraisers, underwriters, home improvement contractors and private mortgage insurance companies. Request the full name and address and geographic area served by each provider. Also request documentation as to any fair lending requirements imposed on, or commitments required of, any of the institution’s service providers.
   k. Addresses of any Internet Site(s)
      Comment: Internet “Home Pages” or similar sites that an institution may have on the Internet may provide information concerning the availability of credit, or means for obtaining it. All such information must comply with the nondiscrimination requirements of the fair lending laws. In view of the increasing capability to conduct transactions on the Internet, it is extremely important for examiners to review an institution’s Internet sites to ensure that all of the information or procedures set forth therein are in compliance with any applicable provisions of the fair lending statutes and regulations.
IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

3. Community Information
   a. Demographic information prepared or used by the institution.
   b. Any fair lending complaints received and institution responses thereto.

Special Analyses
These procedures are intended to assist examiners who encounter disproportionate adverse impact violations, discriminatory pre-application screening and possible discriminatory marketing.

A. Disproportionate Adverse Impact Violations
When all five conditions below exist, consult within your agency to determine whether to present the situation to the institution and solicit the institution’s response. Note that condition 5 can be satisfied by either of two alternatives.

The contacts between examiners and institutions described in this section are information-gathering contacts within the context of the examination and are not intended to serve as the formal notices and opportunities for response that an agency’s enforcement process might provide. Also, the five conditions are not intended as authoritative statements of the legal elements of a disproportionate adverse impact proof of discrimination; they are paraphrases intended to give examiners practical guidance on situations that call for more scrutiny and on what additional information is relevant.

NOTE: Even if it appears likely that a policy or criterion causes a disproportionate adverse impact on a prohibited basis (condition 3), consult agency supervisory staff if the policy or criterion is obviously related to predicting creditworthiness and is used in a way that is commensurate with its relationship to creditworthiness, or is obviously related to some other basic aspect of prudent lending, and there appears to be no equally effective alternative for it. Examples are reliance on credit reports or use of debt-to-income ratio in a way that appears consistent with industry standards and with a prudent evaluation of credit risk.

Conditions

1. A specific policy or criterion is involved.
   The policy or criterion suspected of producing a disproportionate adverse impact on a prohibited basis should be clear enough that the nature of action to correct the situation can be determined.
   NOTE: Gross HMDA denial or approval rate disparities are not appropriate for disproportionate adverse impact analysis because they typically cannot be attributed to a specific policy or criterion.

2. The policy or criterion on its stated terms is neutral for prohibited bases.

3. The policy or criterion falls disproportionately on applicants or borrowers in a prohibited basis group.
   The difference between the rate at which prohibited basis group members are harmed or excluded by the policy or criterion and the rate for control group members must be large enough that it is unlikely that it could have occurred by chance. If there is reason to suspect a significant disproportionate adverse impact may exist, consult with agency supervisory staff as appropriate.

4. There is a causal relationship between the policy or criterion and the adverse result.
   The link between the policy or criterion and the harmful or exclusionary effect must not be speculative. It must be clear that changing or terminating the policy or criterion would reduce the disproportion in the adverse result.

5. Either a or b:
   a. The policy or criterion has no clear rationale, or appears to exist merely for convenience or to avoid a minimal expense, or is far removed from common sense or standard industry underwriting considerations or lending practices.
      The legal doctrine of disproportionate adverse impact provides that the policy or criterion that causes the impact must be justified by “business necessity” if the institution is to avoid a violation. There is very little authoritative legal interpretation of that term with regard to lending, but that should not stop examiners from making the preliminary inquiries called for in these procedures. For example, the rationale is generally not clear for basing credit decisions on factors such as location of residence, income level (per se rather than relative to debt), and accounts with a finance company. If prohibited basis group applicants were denied loans more frequently than control group applicants because they failed an institution’s minimum income requirement, it would appear that the first four conditions plus 5a existed; therefore, the examiners should consult within their agency about obtaining the institution’s response, as described in the next section below.
   b. Alternatively, even if there is a sound justification for the policy, it appears that there may be an equally effective alternative for accomplishing the same objective with a smaller disproportionate adverse impact.
IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

The law does not require an institution to abandon a policy or criterion that is clearly the most effective method of accomplishing a legitimate business objective. However, if an alternative that is approximately equally effective is available that would cause a less severe adverse impact, the policy or criterion in question may constitute a violation.

At any stage of the analysis of possible disproportionate adverse impact, if there appears to be such an alternative, and the first four conditions exist, consult within the agency how to evaluate whether the alternative would be equally effective and would cause a less-severe impact. If the conclusion is that it would, solicit a response from the institution, as described in the next section below.

Obtaining the institution’s response
If the first four conditions plus either 5a or 5b appear to exist, consult with agency supervisory staff about whether and how to inform the institution of the situation and solicit the institution’s response. The communication with the institution may include the following:

• The specific neutral policy or criterion that appears to cause a disproportionate adverse impact.
• How the examiners learned about the policy.
• How widely the examiners understand it to be implemented.
• How strictly they understand it to be applied.
• The prohibited basis on which the impact occurs.
• The magnitude of the impact.
• The nature of the injury to individuals.
• The data from which the impact was computed.
• The communication should request that the institution provide any information supporting the business justification for the policy and request that the institution describe any alternatives it considered before adopting the policy or criterion at issue.

Evaluating and following up on the response
The analyses of “business necessity” and “less discriminatory alternative” tend to converge because of the close relationship of the questions of what purpose the policy or criterion serves and whether it is the most effective means to accomplish that purpose.

Evaluate whether the institution’s response persuasively contradicts the existence of the significant disparity or establishes a business justification. Consult with agency supervisory staff, as appropriate.

Discriminatory Pre-Application Screening Obtain an explanation for any:

Withdrawals by applicants in prohibited basis groups without documentation of consumer intent to withdraw;
Denials of applicants in prohibited basis groups without any documentation of applicant qualifications; or
On a prohibited basis, selectively quoting unfavorable terms (for example, high fees or down payment requirements) to prospective applicants, or quoting unfavorable terms to all prospective applicants but waiving such terms for control group applicants.

Obtain explanations for any delays between application and action dates on a prohibited basis

If the institution cannot explain the situations, examiners should consider obtaining authorization from their agency to contact the consumers to verify the institution’s description of the transactions. Information from the consumer may help determine whether a violation occurred.

In some instances, such as possible “prescreening” of applicants by institution personnel, the results of the procedures discussed so far, including interviews with consumers, may be inconclusive in determining whether a violation has occurred. In those cases, examiners should, if authorized by their agency, consult with agency supervisory staff regarding the possible use of “testers” who would pose as apparently similarly situated applicants, differing only as to race or other applicable prohibited basis characteristic, to determine and compare how the institution treats them in the application process.

C. Possible Discriminatory Marketing
1. Obtain full documentation of the nature and extent, together with management’s explanation, of any:
• Prohibited basis limitations stated in advertisements;
• Code words in advertisements that convey prohibited limitations; or
• Advertising patterns or practices that a reasonable person would believe indicate prohibited basis consumers are less desirable or are only eligible for certain products.

2. Obtain full documentation as to the nature and extent, together with management’s explanation, for any situation in which the institution, despite the availability of other options in the market:
• Advertises only in media serving either minority or non-minority areas of the market;
• Markets through brokers or other agents that the institution knows, or could reasonably be expected to know, to serve only one racial or ethnic group in the market; or

- Utilizes mailing or other distribution lists or other marketing techniques for pre-screened or other offerings of residential loan products* that:
  - Explicitly exclude groups of prospective borrowers on a prohibited basis; or
  - Exclude geographies (e.g., census tracts, ZIP codes, etc.) within the institution’s marketing area that have demonstrably higher percentages of minority group residents than does the remainder of the marketing area, but which have income and other credit-related characteristics similar to the geographies that were targeted for marketing; or
  - Offer different products to such geographies, especially if sub-prime products are primarily marketed to racial or ethnic minorities.

*NOTE: Pre-screened solicitation of potential applicants on a prohibited basis does not violate ECOA. Such solicitations are, however, covered by the FHAct. Consequently, analyses of this form of potential marketing discrimination should be limited to residential loan products.

3. Evaluate management’s response particularly with regard to the credibility of any nondiscriminatory reasons offered as explanations for any of the foregoing practices. Refer to Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment elsewhere in this Appendix for guidance.

Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination

Institutions may find it advantageous to conduct self-tests or self-evaluations to measure or monitor their compliance with ECOA and Regulation B. A self-test is a program, practice or study that is designed and specifically used to assess the institution’s compliance with fair lending laws that creates data not available or derived from loan, application or other records related to credit transactions (12 CFR 1002.15(b)(1) and 24 CFR 100.140-100.148). For example, using testers to determine whether there is disparate treatment in the pre-application stage of credit shopping may constitute a self-test. The information set forth in 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a) is privileged unless an institution voluntarily discloses the report or results or otherwise forfeits the privilege. A self-evaluation, while generally having the same purpose as a self-test, does not create any new data or factual information, but uses data readily available in loan or application files and other records used in credit transactions and, therefore, does not meet the self-test definition.

Examiners should not request any information privileged under 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a), related to self-tests. If the institution discloses the results of any self-tests, or has performed any self-evaluations, and examiners can confirm the reliability and appropriateness of the self-tests or self-evaluations (or even parts of them), they need not repeat those tasks.

NOTE: When the term self-evaluation is used below, it is meant to include self-tests where the institution has voluntarily disclosed the report or results.

If the institution has performed a self-evaluation of any of the product(s) selected for examination, obtain a copy thereof and proceed through the remaining steps of this section on Streamlining the Examination.

Determine whether the research and analysis of the planned examination would duplicate the institution’s own efforts. If the answers to Questions A and B below are both Yes, each successive Yes answer to Questions C through L indicates that the institution’s work up to that point can serve as a basis for eliminating examination steps.

If the answer to either Question A or B is No, the self-evaluation cannot serve as a basis for eliminating examination steps. However, examiners should still consider the self-evaluation to the degree possible in light of the remaining questions and communicate the findings to the institution so that it can improve its self-evaluation process.

A. Did the transactions covered by the self-evaluation occur not longer ago than two years prior to the examination? If the self-evaluation covered more than two years prior to the examination incorporate only results from transactions in the most recent two years.

B. Did it cover the same product, prohibited basis, decision center, and stage of the lending process (for example, underwriting, setting of loan terms) as the planned examination?

C. Did the self-evaluation include comparative file review?

NOTE: One type of “comparative file review” is statistical modeling to determine whether similar control group and prohibited basis group applicants were treated similarly. If an institution offers self-evaluation results based on a statistical model, consult appropriately within your agency.

D. Were control and prohibited basis groups defined accurately and consistently with ECOA and/or the FHAct?

E. Were the transactions selected for the self-evaluation chosen so as to focus on marginal applicants or, in the alternative, selected randomly?

F. Were the data analyzed (whether abstracted from files or obtained from electronic databases) accurate? Were those data actually relied on by the credit decision makers at the time of the decisions?

To answer these two questions and Question G below, for the institution’s control group sample and each of its prohibited basis group samples, request to review 10% (but not more than 50 for each group) of the transactions covered by the self-evaluation. For example, if the institution’s self-evaluation reviewed 250 control group and 75 prohibited basis group transactions, plan to verify the data for 25 control group and seven prohibited basis group transactions.

G. Did the 10% sample reviewed for Question F also show that customer assistance and institution judgment that assisted or enabled applicants to qualify were recorded systematically and accurately and were compared for differences on any prohibited bases?

H. Were prohibited basis group applicants’ qualifications related to the underwriting factor in question compared to corresponding qualifications of control group approvals? Specifically, for self-evaluations of approve/deny decisions, were the denied applicants’ qualifications related to the stated reason for denial compared to the corresponding qualifications for approved applicants?

I. Did the self-evaluation sample cover at least as many transactions at the initial stage of review as examiners would initially have reviewed using the sampling guidance in these procedures?

If the institution’s samples are significantly smaller than those in the sampling guidance but its methodology otherwise is sound, review additional transactions until the numbers of reviewed control group and prohibited basis group transactions equal the minimums for the initial stage of review in the sampling guidance.

J. Did the self-evaluation identify instances in which prohibited basis group applicants were treated less favorably than control group applicants who were no better qualified?

K. Were explanations solicited for such instances from the persons responsible for the decisions?

L. Were the reasons cited by credit decision makers to justify or explain instances of apparent disparate treatment supported by legitimate, persuasive facts or reasoning?

If the questions above are answered “Yes”, incorporate the findings of the self-evaluation (whether supporting compliance or violations) into the examination findings. Indicate that those findings are based on verified data from the institution’s self-evaluation. In addition, consult appropriately within the agency regarding whether or not to conduct corroborative file analyses in addition to those performed by the institution.

If not all of the questions in the section above are answered “Yes”, resume the examination procedures at the point where the institution’s reliable work would not be duplicated. In other words, use the reliable portion of the self-evaluation and correspondingly reduce independent comparative file review by examiners. For example, if the institution conducted a comparative file review that compared applicants’ qualifications without taking account of the reasons they were denied, the examiners could use the qualification data abstracted by the institution (if accurate) but would have to construct independent comparisons structured around the reasons for denial.
Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions Memorandum

General Instructions

All fair lending reviews will be conducted in accordance with the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) Fair Lending Examination Procedures and documented using the Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions memorandum (FLSC). The FLSC contains a series of questions and Examiner Summary sections to document fair lending risk assessments and conclusions. The questions provided are not intended to cover every potential risk, but set out a basic framework to assist an examiner in assessing and documenting the fair lending risk of the institution. Examiners should provide additional explanation and support for these assessments, as necessary, in the Examiner Summary sections in the FLSC. The discrimination risk factors set forth in the FFIEC Fair Lending Examination Procedures are provided in the appendix.

Section 1 Checkpoint: Based on the facts, data, and analysis conducted in the Institutional Overview, does the institution exhibit minimal fair lending risk?

- Yes — Complete Section 5 — “Fair Lending Analysis and Conclusions” and summarize the basis for not selecting any products for further review. Provide the FLSC to the Field Supervisor or designee for approval.
- No — Determine what product(s) or product group(s) warrant further review and proceed to Section 2 — “Identification of Discrimination Risk Factors.”
- Note, if significant information is noted during the review that alters the information captured in Section 1 after Field Supervisor/designee approval, document changes in Section 4 — “Scope Addendum.”
Section 2: Identification of Discrimination Risk Factors

Examiner Summary:

- Identify each product or product group (e.g., residential real estate, consumer, and commercial loans) selected for further analysis and explain the reason for selecting such product(s) for further review.
- Complete a table, which summarizes the discrimination risk factors (refer to Appendix A) for each product or product group. If there are risks for individual products within a broader group (e.g., consumer unsecured vs. automobile loans), complete a table for each applicable loan product.

Complete a chart for each product or product group being considered in the scoping process.

Lending Issues Truth in Lending Act

Introduction

Regulation Z also was amended to implement section 1204 of the Competitive Equality Banking Act of 1987, and in 1988, to include adjustable rate mortgage loan disclosure requirements. All consumer leasing provisions were deleted from Regulation Z in 1981 and transferred to Regulation M (12 CFR 1013).

The Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act of 1994 (HOEPA) amended the TILA. The law imposed new disclosure requirements and substantive limitations on certain closed-end mortgage loans bearing rates or fees above a certain percentage or amount. The law also included new disclosure requirements to assist consumers in comparing the costs and other material considerations involved in a reverse mortgage transaction and authorized the Federal Reserve Board to prohibit specific acts and practices in connection with mortgage transactions.

The TILA amendments of 1995 dealt primarily with tolerances for real estate secured credit. Regulation Z was amended on September 14, 1996 to incorporate changes to the TILA. Specifically, the revisions limit lenders’ liability for disclosure errors in real estate secured loans consummated after September 30, 1995. The Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act of 1996 further amended the TILA. The amendments were made to simplify and improve disclosures related to credit transactions.

The Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (the E-Sign Act), 15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq., was enacted in 2000 and did not require implementing regulations. On November 9, 2007, amendments to Regulation Z and the official commentary were issued to simplify the regulation and provide guidance on the electronic delivery of disclosures consistent with the E-Sign Act.

In July 2008, Regulation Z was amended to protect consumers in the mortgage market from unfair, abusive, or deceptive lending and servicing practices. Specifically, the change applied protections to a newly defined category of “higher-priced mortgage loans” (HPML) that includes virtually all closed-end subprime loans secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling. The revisions also applied new protections to mortgage loans secured by a dwelling, regardless of loan price, and required the delivery of early disclosures for more types of transactions. The revisions also banned several advertising practices deemed deceptive or misleading. The Mortgage Disclosure Improvement Act of 2008 (MDIA) broadened and added to the requirements of the Board’s July 2008 final rule by requiring early Truth in Lending disclosures for more types of transactions and by adding a waiting period between the time when disclosures are given and consummation of the transaction. In 2009, Regulation Z was amended to address those provisions. The MDIA also requires disclosure of payment examples if the loan’s interest rate or payments can change, as well as disclosure of a statement that there is no guarantee the consumer will be able to refinance in the future. In 2010, Regulation Z was amended to address these provisions, which became effective on January 30, 2011.

In December 2008, the Board adopted two final rules pertaining to open-end (not home-secured) credit. The first rule involved Regulation Z revisions and made comprehensive changes applicable to several disclosures required for: applications and solicitations, new accounts, periodic statements, change in terms notifications, and advertisements. The second was a rule published under the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act and was issued jointly with the Office of Thrift Supervision and the National Credit Union Administration. It sought to protect consumers from unfair acts or practices with respect to consumer credit card accounts. Before these rules became effective, however, the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 (Credit CARD Act) amended the TILA and established a number of new requirements for open-end consumer credit plans. Several provisions of the Credit CARD Act are similar to provisions in the Board’s December 2008 TILA revisions and the joint FTC Act rule, but other portions of the Credit CARD Act address practices or mandate disclosures that were not addressed in these rules. In light of the Credit CARD Act, the Board, NCUA, and OTS withdrew the substantive requirements of the joint FTC Act rule. On July 1, 2010, compliance with the provisions of the Board’s rule that were not impacted by the Credit CARD Act became effective.

1 These procedures include amendments to TILA and Regulation Z through April 2016, the mortgage servicing amendments effective in October 2017, and the amendments to Regulation Z regarding prepaid accounts, unless otherwise indicated. These procedures do not include the 2017 TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule amendments.
The Credit CARD Act provisions became effective in three stages. The provisions effective first (August 20, 2009) required creditors to increase the amount of notice consumers receive before the rate on a credit card account is increased or a significant change is made to the account’s terms. These amendments also allowed consumers to reject such increases and changes by informing the creditor before the increase or change goes into effect. The provisions effective next (February 22, 2010) involved rules regarding interest rate increases, over-the-limit transactions, and student cards. Finally, the provisions effective last (August 22, 2010) addressed the reasonableness and proportionality of penalty fees and charges and re-evaluation of rate increases.

In 2009, Regulation Z was amended following the passage of the Higher Education Opportunity Act (HEOA) by adding disclosure and timing requirements that apply to lenders making private education loans.

In 2009, the Helping Families Save Their Homes Act amended the TILA to include several provisions that protect the consumer’s interest to increase the loan originator’s “steering” a consumer to a loan that is not in the consumer’s interest to increase the loan originator’s compensation.

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act) amended the TILA to establish a new requirement for notifying consumers of the sale or transfer of their mortgage loans. The purchaser or assignee that acquires the loan must provide the required disclosures no later than 30 days after the date on which it acquired the loan.

In 2010, the Board further amended Regulation Z to prohibit payment to a loan originator that is based on the terms or conditions of the loan, other than the amount of credit extended. The amendment applies to mortgage brokers and the companies that employ them, as well as to mortgage loan officers employed by depository institutions and other lenders. In addition, the amendment prohibits a loan originator from directing or “steering” a consumer to a loan that is not in the consumer’s interest to increase the loan originator’s compensation.

The Dodd-Frank Act generally granted rulemaking authority under the TILA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB). Title XIV of the Dodd-Frank Act included a number of amendments to the TILA, and in 2013, the CFPB issued rules to implement them. Prohibitions on mandatory arbitration and waivers of consumer rights, as well as requirements that lengthen the time creditors must maintain an escrow account for higher-priced mortgage loans, were generally effective June 1, 2013. Most of the remaining amendments to Regulation Z were effective in January 2014. These amendments include ability-to-repay requirements for mortgage loans, appraisal requirements for higher-priced mortgage loans, a revised and expanded test for high-cost mortgages, as well as additional restrictions on those loans, expanded requirements for servicers of mortgage loans, refined loan originator compensation rules and loan origination qualification standards, and a prohibition on financing credit insurance for mortgage loans. The amendments also established new record retention requirements for certain provisions of the TILA. On October 22, 2014, the CFPB issued a final rule providing an alternative small servicer definition for nonprofit entities and amended the ability-to-repay exemption for nonprofit entities. The final rule also provided a cure mechanism for the points and fees limit that applies to qualified mortgages. The final rule was effective on November 3, 2014, except for one provision that is effective on October 3, 2015. On October 2, 2015, the CFPB revised the definitions of small creditor and rural and underserved areas, which affect the availability of some special provisions and exemptions to Regulation Z’s Ability-to-Repay, high-cost mortgage, and HPML escrow requirements. The final rule was effective January 1, 2016. In March 2016, the CFPB issued an interim final rule exercising the expanded authority granted to the CFPB by the Helping Expand Lending Practices in Rural Communities Act to exempt small creditors that operate in rural or underserved areas. The interim final rule was effective March 31, 2016.

In 2013, the CFPB also revised several open-end credit provisions in Regulation Z. The CFPB revised the general limitation on the total amount of account fees that a credit card issuer may require a consumer to pay. Effective March 28, 2013, the limit is 25 percent of the credit limit in effect when the account is opened and applies only during the first year after account opening. The CFPB also amended Regulation Z to remove the requirement that card issuers consider the consumer’s independent ability to pay for applicants who are 21 or older and to permit issuers to consider income and assets to which such consumers have a reasonable expectation of access. This change was effective May 3, 2013, with a mandatory compliance date of November 4, 2013.

In 2013, the CFPB further amended Regulation Z as well as Regulation X, the regulation implementing the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA), to fulfill the mandate in the Dodd-Frank Act to integrate the mortgage disclosures under TILA and RESPA sections 4 and 5.

2 The amendment to 12 CFR 1026.35(c) was effective July 24, 2013; the amendments to 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii), 1026.36(a), (b), and (c), and commentary to 12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2), 1026.35, and 1026.36(a), (b), (d), and (f) in Supp. I to Part 1026, were effective January 1, 2014.

4 81 FR 16074 (Mar. 25, 2016).
Regulation Z now contains two new forms required for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans. The Loan Estimate is provided within three business days from application, and the Closing Disclosure is provided to consumers three business days before loan consummation. These disclosures must be used for mortgage loans for which the creditor or mortgage broker receives an application on or after October 3, 2015. The 2016 Servicing Rule also adopts a general definition of delinquency that applies to all of the servicing provisions in Regulation X and the provisions regarding periodic statements for mortgage loans in Regulation Z. Furthermore, the 2016 Servicing Rule clarifies, revises, or amends provisions of Regulation Z relating to:

- Interest rate adjustment notices for adjustable-rate mortgages (ARMs) (12 CFR 1026.20);
- Prompt crediting of mortgage payments and responses to requests for payoff amounts (12 CFR 1026.36(c));
- Periodic statements for mortgage loans (12 CFR 1026.41), including requiring servicers to provide certain consumers in bankruptcy a modified periodic statement or coupon book; and
- Small servicers (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)).

The 2016 Servicing Rule was effective on October 19, 2017, except the provisions related to successors in interest and periodic statements for consumers in bankruptcy, which take effect on April 19, 2018.

The CFPB concurrently issued an interpretive rule under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) to clarify the interaction of the FDCPA and specified mortgage servicing rules in Regulations X and Z. (81 Fed. Reg. 71977) (October 19, 2016). This interpretive rule constitutes an advisory opinion for purposes of the FDCPA and provides safe harbors from liability for servicers acting in compliance with it.

Format of Regulation Z

The rules creditors must follow differ depending on whether the creditor is offering open-end credit, such as credit cards or home-equity lines, or closed-end credit, such as car loans or mortgages.

Subpart A (12 CFR 1026.1 through 1026.4) of the regulation provides general information that applies to open-end and closed-end credit transactions. It sets forth definitions (12 CFR 1026.2) and stipulates which 5 The effective date for the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule was extended to October 3, 2015 by a final rule published in the Federal Register on July 24, 2015. (80 Fed.Reg. 43911). Other provisions of the rule were effective on October 3, 2015, regardless of whether an application was received on that date. Specifically, these provisions restrict the imposition of fees on a consumer before the consumer has received the Loan Estimate and indicated an intent to proceed, and restrict creditors from providing a consumer with a written estimate of terms or costs (prior to providing the Loan Estimate) unless they also provided a written statement informing the consumer that the terms or costs may change. The rule also restricts a creditor from requiring the submission of documents verifying information related to the consumer’s application before providing the Loan Estimate.

6 The 2016 Servicing Rule includes the following changes to Regulation Z for successors in interest: 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11) and (27), 1026.20(f), 1026.39(f), and 1026.41(g). The 2016 Servicing Rule also changes several sections of the Official Interpretations of Regulation X, published in commentary.

7 See Safe Harbors from Liability under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act for Certain Actions Taken in Compliance with Mortgage Servicing Rules under the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (Regulation X) and the Truth in Lending Act (Regulation Z) (81 Fed. Reg. 71977) (October 19, 2016) (hereinafter 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule). The interpretations contained in this interpretive rule are included in Regulation X comments 30(d)-1 and 39(d)-2; Regulation Z comment 2(a)(11)-4.i. transactions are covered and which are exempt from the regulation (12 CFR 1026.3). It also contains the rules for determining which fees are finance charges (12 CFR 1026.4).

Subpart B (12 CFR 1026.5 through 1026.16) relates to open-end credit. It contains rules on account-opening disclosures (12 CFR 1026.6) and periodic statements (12 CFR 1026.7-8). It also describes special rules that apply to credit card transactions, treatment of payments (12 CFR 1026.10), credit balances (12 CFR 1026.11), procedures for resolving credit billing errors (12 CFR 1026.13), annual percentage rate (APR) calculations (12 CFR 1026.14), rescission rights (12 CFR 1026.15), and advertising (12 CFR 1026.16).

Subpart C (12 CFR 1026.17 through 1026.24) relates to closed-end credit. It contains rules on disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17 - 20), treatment of credit balances (12 CFR 1026.21), annual percentage rate calculations (12 CFR 1026.22), rescission right (12 CFR 1026.23), and advertising (12 CFR 1026.24).

Subpart D (12 CFR 1026.25 through 1026.30) contain rules on record retention (12 CFR 1026.25), oral disclosures (12 CFR 1026.26), disclosures in languages other than English (12 CFR 1026.27), effect on state laws (12 CFR 1026.28), state exemptions (12 CFR 1026.29), and rate limitations (12 CFR 1026.30).

Subpart E (12 CFR 1026.31 through 1026.45) Subpart E contains special rules for mortgage transactions. The rules require certain disclosures and provide limitations for closed-end credit transactions and open-end credit plans that have rates or fees above specified amounts or certain prepayment penalties (12 CFR 1026.32). Special disclosures are also required, including the total annual loan cost rate, for reverse mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.33). The rules also prohibit specific acts and practices in connection with high-cost mortgages, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a), (12 CFR 1026.34); in connection with closed-end higher-priced mortgage loans, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a), (12 CFR 1026.35); and in connection with an extension of credit secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36). This subpart also sets forth disclosure requirements, effective October 3, 2015, for most closed-end transactions secured by real property, as required by 12 CFR 1026.37. Disclosures for mortgage transfers (12 CFR 1026.39), and disclosure requirements for periodic statements for residential mortgage loans are also provided (12 CFR 1026.41). In addition, it contains minimum standards for transactions secured by a dwelling, which contains provisions relating to ability to repay and qualified mortgages (12 CFR 1026.43). This subpart includes the small servicer exemption found in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)

Subpart F (12 CFR 1026.46 through 1026.48) relates to private education loans. It contains rules on disclosures (12 CFR 1026.46), limitations on changes in terms after approval (12 CFR 1026.48), the right to cancel the loan (12 CFR 1026.47), and limitations on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans (12 CFR 1026.48).

Subpart G (12 CFR 1026.51 through 1026.61) relates to credit card accounts, including covered separate credit features accessible by hybrid prepaid-credit cards, under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (except for 12 CFR 1026.57(c), which applies to all open-end credit plans). This subpart contains rules regarding disclosures provided on or with credit and charge card applications and solicitations (12 CFR 1026.60). It also contains rules regarding hybrid prepaid-credit cards (12 CFR 1026.61). Subpart G contains rules on evaluation of a consumer’s ability to make the required payments under the terms of an account (12 CFR 1026.51), limits the fees that a consumer can be required to pay (12 CFR 1026.52), and contains rules on allocation of payments in excess of the minimum payment (12 CFR 1026.53). It also sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as the result of a loss of a grace period (12 CFR 1026.54), and on increases in annual percentage rates, fees, and charges for credit card accounts (12 CFR 1026.55), including the reevaluation of rate increases (12 CFR 1026.59). This subpart prohibits the assessment of fees or charges for over-the-limit transactions unless the consumer affirmatively consents to the creditor’s payment of over-the-limit transactions (12 CFR 1026.56). This subpart also sets forth rules for the Internet posting of credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.58).

Several appendices contain information such as the procedures for determinations about state laws, state exemptions and issuance of official interpretations, special rules for certain kinds of credit plans, model disclosure forms, standards for determining ability to pay, and the rules for computing annual percentage rates in closed-end credit transactions and total-annual-loan-cost rates for reverse mortgage transactions.

Official interpretations of the regulation are published in a commentary. Good faith compliance with the commentary protects creditors from civil liability under the TILA. In addition, the commentary includes more detailed information on disclosures or other actions required of creditors. It is virtually impossible to comply with Regulation Z without reference to and reliance on the commentary.

NOTE: The following narrative does not discuss all the sections of Regulation Z, but rather highlights only certain sections of the regulation and the TILA.
Subpart A – General

This subpart contains general information regarding both open-end and closed-end credit transactions. It sets forth definitions (12 CFR 1026.2) and sets out which transactions are covered and which are exempt from the regulation (12 CFR 1026.3). It also contains the rules for determining which fees are finance charges (12 CFR 1026.4).

Purpose of the TILA and Regulation Z

The TILA is intended to ensure that credit terms are disclosed in a meaningful way so consumers can compare credit terms more readily and knowledgeably. Before its enactment, consumers were faced with a bewildering array of credit terms and rates. It was difficult to compare loans because they were seldom presented in the same format. Now, all creditors must use the same credit terminology and expressions of rates. In addition to providing a uniform system for disclosures, the act:

- Protects consumers against inaccurate and unfair credit billing and credit card practices;
- Provides ability to repay requirements and other limitations applicable to credit cards;
- Provides consumers with rescission rights;
- Provides for rate caps on certain dwelling-secured loans;
- Imposes limitations on home equity lines of credit (HELOCs) and certain closed-end home mortgages;
- Provides minimum standards for most dwelling-secured loans; and
- Delineates and prohibits unfair or deceptive mortgage lending practices.

The TILA and Regulation Z do not, however, tell financial institutions how much interest they may charge or whether they must grant a consumer a loan.

Summary of Coverage Considerations – 12 CFR 1026.1 and 1026.2

Lenders must carefully consider several factors when deciding whether a loan requires Truth in Lending disclosures or is subject to other Regulation Z requirements. The coverage considerations under Regulation Z are addressed in more detail in the commentary to Regulation Z. For example, broad coverage considerations are included under 12 CFR 1026.1(c) of the regulation and relevant definitions appear in 12 CFR 1026.2.

The 2016 Servicing Rule adds a definition of successor in interest. Successor in interest means a person to whom an ownership interest in a dwelling securing a closed-end consumer credit transaction is transferred from a consumer, provided that the transfer is:

- A transfer by devise, descent, or operation of law on the death of a joint tenant or tenant by the entirety;
- A transfer to a relative resulting from the death of the consumer;
- A transfer where the spouse or children of the consumer become an owner of the property;
- A transfer resulting from a decree of a dissolution of marriage, legal separation agreement, or from an incidental property settlement agreement, by which the spouse of the consumer becomes an owner of the property; or
- A transfer into an inter vivos trust in which the consumer is and remains a beneficiary and which does not relate to a transfer of rights of occupancy in the property.

Confirmed successor in interest means a successor in interest once a servicer has confirmed the successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in the dwelling. 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27)(ii). (Effective April 19, 2018).

Under 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11), a confirmed successor in interest is a consumer for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.20(c) through (e), 1026.36(c), 1026.39, and 1026.41. (Effective April 19, 2018).

Further, a servicer that is debt collector under the FDCPA with respect to a mortgage loan does not violate the prohibition in FDCPA section 805(b)'s on communicating with third parties by communicating with a confirmed successor in interest in compliance with the mortgage servicing rules because “consumer” for purposes of FDCPA section 805 includes any person who meets the definition in this part of confirmed successor in interest. (Comment 2(a)(11)-4.ii).8

Exempt Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.3

The following transactions are exempt from Regulation Z:

- Credit extended primarily for a business, commercial, or agricultural purpose;

8 See also the 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule (81 Fed. Reg. 71977, 71979).
V. Lending — TILA

- Credit extended to other than a natural person (including credit to government agencies or instrumentalities);
- Credit in excess of an annually adjusted threshold not secured by real property or by personal property used or expected to be used as the principal dwelling of the consumer;
- Public utility credit;
- Credit extended by a broker-dealer registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC), involving securities or commodities accounts;
- Home fuel budget plans not subject to a finance charge; and
- Certain student loan programs.

However, when a credit card is involved, generally exempt credit (e.g., business purpose credit) is subject to the requirements that govern the issuance of credit cards and liability for their unauthorized use. Credit cards must not be issued on an unsolicited basis and, if a credit card is lost or stolen, the cardholder must not be held liable for more than $50 for the unauthorized use of the card. (Comment 3-1)

When determining whether credit is for consumer purposes, the creditor must evaluate all of the following:

- Any statement obtained from the consumer describing the purpose of the proceeds.
  - For example, a statement that the proceeds will be used for a vacation trip would indicate a consumer purpose.
  - If the loan has a mixed-purpose (e.g., proceeds will be used to buy a car that will be used for personal and business purposes), the lender must look to the primary purpose of the loan to decide whether disclosures are necessary. A statement of purpose from the consumer will help the lender make that decision.
  - A checked box indicating that the loan is for a business purpose, absent any documentation showing the intended use of the proceeds could be insufficient evidence that the loan did not have a consumer purpose.

- The consumer’s primary occupation and how it relates to the use of the proceeds. The higher the correlation between the consumer’s occupation and the property purchased from the loan proceeds, the greater the likelihood that the loan has a business purpose. For example, proceeds used to purchase dental supplies for a dentist would indicate a business purpose.
- Personal management of the assets purchased from proceeds. The lower the degree of the borrower’s personal involvement in the management of the investment or enterprise purchased by the loan proceeds, the less likely the loan will have a business purpose. For example, money borrowed to purchase stock in an automobile company by an individual who does not work for that company would indicate a personal investment and a consumer purpose.
- The size of the transaction. The larger the size of the transaction, the more likely the loan will have a business purpose. For example, if the loan is for a $5,000,000 real estate transaction, that might indicate a business purpose.
- The amount of income derived from the property acquired by the loan proceeds relative to the borrower’s total income. The lesser the income derived from the acquired property, the more likely the loan will have a consumer purpose. For example, if the borrower has an annual salary of $100,000 and receives about $500 in annual dividends from the acquired property, that would indicate a consumer purpose.

All five factors must be evaluated before the lender can conclude that disclosures are not necessary. Normally, no one factor, by itself, is sufficient reason to determine the applicability of Regulation Z. In any event, the financial institution may routinely furnish disclosures to the consumer. Disclosure under such circumstances does not control whether the transaction is covered, but can assure protection to the financial institution and compliance with the law.

9 The Dodd-Frank Act requires that this threshold be adjusted annually by any annual percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers (CPI-W). For the current threshold, see 12 CFR 1026.3(b)(8).
Coverage Considerations under Regulation Z

Is the purpose of the credit for personal, family or household use?

Yes

Is the consumer credit extended to a consumer?

Yes

Is the consumer credit extended by a creditor?

Yes

Is the loan or Credit plan secured by real property or by a dwelling?

Yes

Regulation Z applies

Is the amount financed or credit limit at or below the annual threshold limit?

Yes

No

Regulation Z does not apply, but may apply later if the loan is refinanced for an amount at or below the annual threshold limit (as annually adjusted). If the principal dwelling is taken as collateral after consummation, rescission rights will apply and, in the case of open-end credit, billing disclosures and other provisions of Regulation Z will apply.

No

Is the amount financed or credit limit at or below the annual threshold limit?

No

Regulation Z does not apply, except for the rules of issuance of and unauthorized use liability for credit cards. (Exempt credit includes loans with a business or agricultural purpose, and certain student loans. Credit extended to acquire or improve rental property that is not owner-occupied is considered business purpose credit.)

Yes

Regulation Z does not apply. (Credit that is extended to a land trust is deemed to be credit extended to a consumer.)

No

Regulation Z does not apply, except for the rules of issuance of and unauthorized use liability for credit cards. (Exempt credit includes loans with a business or agricultural purpose, and certain student loans. Credit extended to acquire or improve rental property that is not owner-occupied is considered business purpose credit.)

The institution is not a “creditor” and Regulation Z does not apply unless at least one of the following tests is met:

1. The institution extends consumer credit regularly and a. The obligation is initially payable to the institution and
   b. The obligation is either payable by written agreement in more than four installments or is subject to a finance charge
2. The institution is a card issuer that extends closed-end credit that is subject to a finance charge or is payable by written agreement in more than four installments.
3. The institution is not the card issuer, but it imposes a finance charge at the time of honoring a credit card.
Determination of Finance Charge and Annual Percentage Rate (“APR”)

Finance Charge (Open-End and Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.4

The finance charge is a measure of the cost of consumer credit represented in dollars and cents. Along with APR disclosures, the disclosure of the finance charge is central to the uniform credit cost disclosure envisioned by the TILA.

The finance charge does not include any charge of a type payable in a comparable cash transaction. Examples of charges payable in a comparable cash transaction may include taxes, title, license fees, or registration fees paid in connection with an automobile purchase. In addition, with respect to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, the finance charge does not include a charge imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account to the extent the amount of the charge does not exceed comparable charges imposed on prepaid accounts in the same prepaid account program that do not have a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card.

Finance charges include any charges or fees payable directly or indirectly by the consumer and imposed directly or indirectly by the financial institution either as an incident to or as a condition of an extension of consumer credit. The finance charge on a loan always includes any interest charges and often, other charges. Regulation Z includes examples, applicable both to open-end and closed-end credit transactions, of what must, must not, or need not be included in the disclosed finance charge (12 CFR 1026.4(b)).

Accuracy Tolerances (Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.18(d) and 1026.23(g)

Regulation Z provides finance charge tolerances for legal accuracy that should not be confused with those provided in the TILA for reimbursement under regulatory agency orders. As with disclosed APRs, if a disclosed finance charge were legally accurate, it would not be subject to reimbursement.

Under the TILA and Regulation Z, finance charge disclosures for open-end credit must be accurate since there is no tolerance for finance charge errors. However, both the TILA and Regulation Z permit various finance charge accuracy tolerances for closed-end credit.

Tolerances for the finance charge in a closed-end transaction, other than a mortgage loan, are generally $5 if the amount financed is less than or equal to $1,000 and $10 if the amount financed exceeds $1,000.

Tolerances for certain transactions consummated on or after September 30, 1995, are noted below.

- Credit secured by real property or a dwelling (closed-end credit only):
  - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is not understated by more than $100.
  - Overstatements are not violations.

- Rescission rights after the three-business-day rescission period (closed-end credit only):
  - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it does not vary from the actual finance charge by more than one-half of 1 percent of the credit extended or $100, whichever is greater.
  - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it does not vary from the actual finance charge by more than 1 percent of the credit extended for the initial and subsequent refinancings of residential mortgage transactions when the new loan is made at a different financial institution. (This excludes high-cost mortgage loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.32, transactions in which there are new advances, and new consolidations.)

- Rescission rights in foreclosure:
  - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it does not vary from the actual finance charge by more than $35.
  - Overstatements are not considered violations.
  - The consumer can rescind if a mortgage broker fee that should have been included in the finance charge was not included.

NOTE: Normally, the finance charge tolerance for a rescindable transaction is either 0.5 percent of the credit transaction or, for certain refinancings, 1 percent of the credit transaction. However, in the event of a foreclosure, the consumer may exercise the right of rescission if the disclosed finance charge is understated by more than $35.

See the “Finance Charge Tolerances” charts within these examination procedures for help in determining appropriate finance charge tolerances.

Calculating the Finance Charge (Closed-End Credit)

One of the more complex tasks under Regulation Z is determining whether a charge associated with an extension of credit must be included in, or excluded from, the disclosed finance charge. The finance charge initially includes any charge that is, or will be, connected with a specific loan. Charges imposed by third parties are finance charges if the financial institution requires use of the third party. Charges imposed by settlement or closing agents are finance charges if the bank requires the specific service that gave rise to the charge and the charge is not otherwise excluded. The “Finance Charge Tolerances” charts within this document briefly summarize the rules that must be considered.

Prepaid Finance Charges – 12 CFR 1026.18(b)(3)

A prepaid finance charge is any finance charge paid separately to the financial institution or to a third party, in cash or by check before or at closing, settlement, or consummation of a transaction, or withheld from the proceeds of the credit at any time.

Prepaid finance charges effectively reduce the amount of funds available for the consumer’s use; usually before or at the time the transaction is consummated.

Instructions for the Finance Charge Chart

The finance charge initially includes any charge that is, or will be, connected with a specific loan. Charges imposed by third parties are finance charges if the creditor requires use of the third party. Charges imposed by the consumer by a settlement agent are finance charges only if the creditor requires the particular services for which the settlement agent is charging the borrower and the charge is not otherwise excluded from the finance charge.

Immediately below the finance charge definition, the chart presents five captions applicable to determining whether a loan related charge is a finance charge.

The first caption is “charges always included.” This category focuses on specific charges given in the regulation or commentary as examples of finance charges.

The second caption, “charges included unless conditions are met,” focuses on charges that must be included in the finance charge unless the creditor meets specific disclosure or other conditions to exclude the charges from the finance charge.

The third caption, “conditions,” focuses on the conditions that need to be met if the charges identified to the left of the conditions are permitted to be excluded from the finance charge. Although most charges under the second caption may be included in the finance charge at the creditor’s option, third-party charges and application fees (listed last under the third caption) must be excluded from the finance charge if the relevant conditions are met. However, inclusion of appraisal and credit report charges as part of the application fee is optional.

The fourth caption, “charges not included,” identifies fees or charges that are not included in the finance charge under conditions identified by the caption. If the credit transaction is secured by real property or the loan is a residential mortgage transaction, the charges identified in the column, if they are bona fide and reasonable in amount, must be excluded from the finance charge. For example, if a consumer loan is secured by a vacant lot or commercial real estate, any appraisal fees connected with the loan must not be included in the finance charge.

The fifth caption, “charges never included,” lists specific charges provided by the regulation as examples of those that automatically are not finance charges (e.g., fees for unanticipated late payments).
Finance Charge = Dollar Cost Of Consumer Credit: It includes any charge payable directly or indirectly by the consumer and imposed directly or indirectly by the creditor as a condition of or incident to the extension of credit.

- Charges always included
  - Interest
  - Transaction fees
  - Loan origination fees
  - Credit guarantee insurance premiums

- Charges included unless conditions are met
  - Premiums for credit life, A&H, or loss of income insurance
  - Debt cancellation fees
  - Premiums for property or liability insurance
  - Security interest charges (filing fees), insurance in lieu of filing fees and certain notary fees
  - Charges imposed by third parties

- Conditions
  - (Any loan)
  - Insurance not required, disclosures are made, and consumer authorizes
  - Coverage not required, disclosures are made, and consumer authorizes
  - Consumer selects insurance company and disclosures are made
  - Insurer waives right of subrogation, consumer selects insurance company, and disclosures are made
  - Use of the third party is not required to obtain loan and creditor does not retain the charge
  - Creditor does not require and does not retain the fee for the particular service
  - Application fees, if charged to all applicants, are not finance charges. Application fees may include appraisal or credit report fees

- Charges not included if bona fide and reasonable amount
  - (Residential Mortgage transactions and loans secured by real estate)
  - Fees for title insurance, title examination, property survey, etc.
  - Fees for preparing loan documents, mortgages, and other settlement documents
  - Amounts required to be paid into escrow, if not otherwise included in the finance charge
  - Notary fees
  - Pre-consummation flood and pest inspection fees
  - Appraisal and credit report fees
  - Application fees, if charged to all applicants, are not finance charges. Application fees may include appraisal or credit report fees

- Charges never included
  - Charges payable in a comparable cash transaction.
  - Fees for unanticipated late payments
  - Overdraft fees not agreed to in writing
  - Seller’s points
  - Participation or membership fees
  - Discount offered by the seller to induce payment by cash or other means not involving the use of a credit card
  - Interest forfeited as a result of interest reduction required by law
  - Charges absorbed by the creditor as a cost of doing business Annual Percentage Rate Definition – 12 CFR 1026.22 (Closed-End Credit)

Credit costs may vary depending on the interest rate, the amount of the loan and other charges, the timing and amounts of advances, and the repayment schedule. The APR, which must be disclosed in nearly all consumer credit transactions, is designed to take into account all relevant factors and to provide a uniform measure for comparing the cost of various credit transactions.

The APR is a measure of the cost of credit, expressed as a nominal yearly rate. It relates the amount and timing of value received by the consumer to the amount and timing of payments made. The disclosure of the APR is central to the uniform credit cost disclosure envisioned by the TILA.

The value of a closed-end credit APR must be disclosed as a single rate only, whether the loan has a single interest rate, a variable interest rate, a discounted variable interest rate, or graduated payments based on separate interest rates (step rates), and it must appear with the segregated disclosures. Segregated disclosures are grouped together and do not contain any information not directly related to the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.18.

Since an APR measures the total cost of credit, including costs such as transaction charges or premiums for credit guarantee insurance, it is not an “interest” rate, as that term is generally used. APR calculations do not rely on definitions of interest in state law and often include charges, such as a commitment fee paid by the consumer, that are not viewed by some state usury statutes as interest. Conversely, an APR might not include a charge, such as a credit report fee in a real property transaction, which some state laws might view as interest for usury purposes. Furthermore, measuring the timing of value received and of payments made, which is essential if APR calculations are to be accurate, must be consistent with parameters under Regulation Z.

The APR is often considered to be the finance charge expressed as a percentage. However, two loans could require the same finance charge and still have different APRs because of differing values of the amount financed or of payment schedules. For example, the APR is 12 percent on a loan with an amount financed of $5,000 and 36 equal monthly payments of $166.07 each. It is 13.26 percent on a loan with an amount financed of $4,500 and 36 equal monthly payments of $152.18 each and final payment of $152.22. In both cases the finance charge is $978.52. The APRs on these example loans are not the same because an APR does not only reflect the finance charge. It relates the amount and timing of value received by the consumer to the amount and timing of payments made.

The APR is a function of:

- The amount financed, which is not necessarily equivalent to the loan amount. For example, if the consumer must pay at closing a separate 1 percent loan origination fee (prepaid finance charge) on a $100,000 residential mortgage loan, the loan amount is $100,000, but the amount financed would be $100,000 less the $1,000 loan fee, or $99,000.

- The finance charge, which is not necessarily equivalent to the total interest amount (interest is not defined by Regulation Z, but rather is defined by state or other federal law). For example:
  - If the consumer must pay a $25 credit report fee for an auto loan, the fee must be included in the finance charge. The finance charge in that case is the sum of the interest on the loan (i.e., interest generated by the application of a percentage rate against the loan amount) plus the $25 credit report fee.
  - If the consumer must pay a $25 credit report fee for a home improvement loan secured by real property, the credit report fee must be excluded from the finance charge. The finance charge in that case would be only the interest on the loan.

- The payment schedule, which does not necessarily include only principal and interest (P + I) payments. For example:
  - If the consumer must pay a $25 credit report fee for a vacation trip at 14 percent simple interest per annum and repays that amount with 25 equal monthly payments beginning one month from consummation of the transaction, the monthly P + I payment will be $115.87, if all months are considered equal, and the amount financed would be $2,500. If the consumer’s payments are increased by $2.00 a month to pay a non-financed $50 loan fee during the life of the loan, the amount financed would remain at $2,500 but the payment schedule would be increased to $117.87 a month, the finance charge would increase by $50, and there would be a corresponding increase in the APR. This would be the case whether or not state law defines the $50 loan fee as interest.
  - If the loan above has 55 days to the first payment and the consumer prepays interest at consummation ($24.31 to cover the first 25 days), the amount financed would be $2,500 - $24.31, or $2,475.69. Although the amount financed has been reduced to reflect the consumer’s reduced use of available funds at consummation, the time interval during which the consumer has use of the $2,475.69, 55 days to the first payment, has not changed. Since the first payment period exceeds the limitations of the regulation’s minor irregularities provisions (see 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(4)), it may not be treated as regular. In calculating the APR, the first payment period must not be reduced by 25 days (i.e., the first payment period may not be treated as one month).

Financial institutions may, if permitted by state or other law, precompute interest by applying a rate against a loan balance using a simple interest, add-on, discount or some other method, and may earn interest using a simple interest accrual system, the Rule of 78s (if permitted by law) or some other method. Unless the financial institution’s internal interest earnings and accrual methods involve a simple interest rate based on a 360-day year that is applied over actual days (even that is important only for determining the accuracy of the payment schedule), it is not relevant in calculating an APR, since an APR is not an interest rate (as that term is commonly used under state or other law). Since the APR normally need not rely on the internal accrual systems of a bank, it always may be computed after the loan terms have been agreed upon (as long as it is disclosed before actual consummation of the transaction).

Special Requirements for Calculating the Finance Charge and APR

Proper calculation of the finance charge and APR are of primary importance. The regulation requires that the terms “finance charge” and “annual percentage rate” be disclosed more conspicuously than any other required disclosure, subject to limited exceptions. The finance charge and APR, more than any other disclosures, enable consumers to understand the cost of the credit and to comparison shop for credit. A creditor’s failure to disclose those values accurately can result in significant monetary damages to the creditor, either from a class action lawsuit or from a regulatory agency’s order to reimburse consumers for violations of law.

If an APR or finance charge is disclosed incorrectly, the error is not, in itself, a violation of the regulation if:

- The error resulted from a corresponding error in a calculation tool used in good faith by the financial institution.
- Upon discovery of the error, the financial institution promptly discontinues use of that calculation tool for disclosure purposes.
- The financial institution notifies the CFPB in writing of the error in the calculation tool.

When a financial institution claims a calculation tool was used in good faith, the financial institution assumes a reasonable degree of responsibility for ensuring that the tool in question provides the accuracy required by the regulation. For example, the financial institution might verify the results obtained using the tool by comparing those results to the figures obtained by using another calculation tool. The financial institution might also verify that the tool, if it is designed to operate under the actuarial method, produces figures similar to those provided by the examples in Appendix J to the regulation. The calculation tool should be checked for accuracy before it is first used and periodically thereafter.

Subpart B – Open-End Credit

Subpart B relates to open-end credit. It contains rules on account-opening disclosures (12 CFR 1026.6) and periodic statements (12 CFR 1026.7-8). It also describes special rules that apply to credit card transactions, treatment of payments (12 CFR 1026.10) and credit balances (12 CFR 1026.11), procedures for resolving credit billing errors (12 CFR 1026.13), annual percentage rate calculations (12 CFR 1026.14), rescission requirements (12 CFR 1026.15) and advertising (12 CFR 1026.16).

Time of Disclosures (Periodic Statements) – 12 CFR 1026.5(b)

For credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, creditors must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the payment due date disclosed on the periodic statement and that payments are not treated as late for any purpose if they are received within 21 days after mailing or delivery of the statement. In addition, for all open-end consumer credit accounts with grace periods, creditors must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the date on which a grace period (if any) expires and that finance charges are not imposed as a result of the loss of a grace period if a payment is received within 21 days after mailing or delivery of a statement. For purposes of this requirement, a “grace period” is defined as a period within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate. For non-credit card open-end consumer plans without a grace period, creditors must adopt reasonable policies and procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 14 days prior to the date on which the required minimum periodic payment is due. Moreover, the creditor must adopt reasonable policies and procedures to ensure that it does not treat as late a required minimum periodic payment received by the creditor within 14 days after it has mailed or delivered the periodic statement.

Subsequent Disclosures (Open-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.9

For open-end, not home-secured credit, the following applies:

Creditors are required to provide consumers with 45 days’ advance written notice of rate increases and other significant changes to the terms of their credit card account agreements. The list of “significant changes” includes most fees and other terms that a consumer should be aware of before use of the account. Examples of such fees and terms include:

- Penalty fees;
- Transaction fees;
- Fees imposed for the issuance or availability of the open-end plan;
- Grace period; and Determining the Balance and Computing the Finance Charge

The examiner must know how to compute the balance to which the periodic rate is applied. There are three common methods used, namely, the previous balance method, the daily balance method, and the average daily balance method, which are described as follows:

- Previous balance method. The balance on which the periodic finance charge is computed is based on the balance outstanding at the start of the billing cycle. The periodic rate is multiplied by this balance to compute the finance charge.

- Daily balance method. A daily periodic rate is applied to either the balance on each day in the cycle or the sum of the balances on each of the days in the cycle. If a daily periodic rate is multiplied by the balance on each day in the billing cycle, the finance charge is the sum of the products. If the daily periodic rate is multiplied by the sum of all the daily balances, the result is the finance charge.

- Average daily balance method. The average daily balance is the sum of the daily balances (either including or excluding current transactions) divided by the number of days in the billing cycle. A periodic rate is then multiplied by the average daily balance to determine the finance charge. If the periodic rate is a daily one, the product of the rate multiplied by the average balance is multiplied by the number of days in the cycle.

In addition to those common methods, financial institutions have other ways of calculating the balance to which the periodic rate is applied. By reading the financial institution’s explanation, the examiner should be able to calculate the balance to which the periodic rate was applied. In some cases, the examiner may need to obtain additional information from the financial institution to verify the explanation disclosed. If the examiner is unable to understand the disclosed explanation, he or she should discuss the explanation with management and should remind management of Regulation Z’s requirement that disclosures be clear and conspicuous.

When a balance is determined without first deducting all credits and payments made during the billing cycle, that fact and the amount of the credits and payments must be disclosed.

If the financial institution uses the daily balance method and applies a single daily periodic rate, disclosure of the balance to which the rate was applied may be stated as any of the following:

- A balance for each day in the billing cycle. The daily periodic rate is multiplied by the balance on each day and the sum of the products is the finance charge.

- A balance for each day in the billing cycle on which the balance in the account changes. The finance charge is figured by the same method as discussed previously, but the statement shows the balance only for those days on which the balance changed.

- The sum of the daily balances during the billing cycle. The balance on which the finance charge is computed is the sum of all the daily balances in the billing cycle. The daily periodic rate is multiplied by that balance to determine the finance charge.

- The average daily balance during the billing cycle. If this is stated, the financial institution may, at its option, explain that the average daily balance is or can be multiplied by the number of days in the billing cycle and the periodic rate applied to the product to determine the amount of interest.

If the financial institution uses the daily balance method, but applies two or more daily periodic rates, the sum of the daily balances may not be used. Acceptable ways of disclosing the balances include:

- A balance for each day in the billing cycle;
- A balance for each day in the billing cycle on which the balance in the account changes; or
- Two or more average daily balances. If the average daily balances are stated, the financial institution may, at its option, explain that interest is or may be determined by 1) multiplying each of the average daily balances by the number of days in the billing cycle (or if the daily rate varied during the cycle, by multiplying the number of days that the applicable rate was in effect), 2) by multiplying each of the results by the applicable daily periodic rate, and 3) adding these products together.

In explaining the method used to find the balance on which the finance charge is computed, the financial institution need not reveal how it allocates payments or credits. That information may be disclosed as additional information, but all required information must be clear and conspicuous.

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.54 prohibits a credit card issuer from calculating finance charges based on balances for days in previous billing cycles as a result of the loss of a grace period (a practice sometimes referred to as “double-cycle billing”).

Finance Charge Resulting from Two or More Periodic Rates

Some financial institutions use more than one periodic rate in computing the finance charge. For example, one rate may apply to balances up to a certain amount and another rate to balances more than that amount. If two or more periodic rates apply, the financial institution must disclose all rates and conditions. The range of balances to which each rate applies also must be disclosed. It is not necessary, however, to break the finance charge into separate components based on the different rates.

Annual Percentage Rate (Open-End Credit)

The disclosed APR on an open-end credit account is accurate if it is within one-eighth of one percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z.

Determination of APR – 12 CFR 1026.14

The basic method for determining the APR in open-end credit transactions involves multiplying each periodic rate by the number of periods in a year. This method is used in all types of open-end disclosures, including:

- The corresponding APR in the initial disclosures;
- The corresponding APR on periodic statements;
- The APR in early disclosures for credit card accounts;
- The APR in early disclosures for home-equity plans;
- The APR in advertising; and
- The APR in oral disclosures.

The corresponding APR is prospective and it does not involve any particular finance charge or periodic balance.

A second method of calculating the APR is the quotient method. At a creditor’s option, the quotient method may be disclosed on periodic statements for home-equity plans subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 (home-equity lines of credit or “HELOCs”). The quotient method reflects the annualized equivalent of the rate that was actually applied during a cycle. This rate, also known as the effective APR, will differ from the corresponding APR if the creditor applies minimum, fixed, or transaction charges to the account during the cycle. (12 CFR 1026.14(c))

Brief Outline for Open-End Credit APR Calculations on Periodic Statements

NOTE: Assume monthly billing cycles for each of the calculations below:

I. Basic method for determining the APR in an open-end credit transaction. This is the corresponding APR. (12 CFR 1026.14(b))

   A. Monthly rate x 12 = APR

II. Optional effective APR that may be disclosed on HELOC periodic statements

   A. APR when only periodic rates are imposed (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(1)) 10 If a creditor does not disclose the effective (or quotient method) APR on a HELOC periodic statement, it must instead disclose the charges (fees and interest) imposed as provided in 12 CFR 1026.7(a).

1. Monthly rate x 12 = APR

Or

2. (Total finance charge / sum of the balances) x 12 = APR

B. APR when minimum or fixed charge, but not transaction charge imposed. (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(2))

1. (Total finance charge / amount of applicable balance\(^{11}\)) x 12 = APR\(^{12}\)

C. APR when the finance charge includes a charge related to a specific transaction (such as a cash advance fee), even if the total finance charge also includes any other minimum, fixed, or other charge not calculated using a periodic rate. (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(3))

1. (Total finance charge / (all balances + other amounts on which a finance charge was imposed during the billing cycle without duplication\(^{13}\)) x 12 = APR\(^{14}\)

D. APR when the finance charge imposed during the billing cycle includes a minimum or fixed charge that does not exceed $0.50 for a monthly or longer billing cycle (or pro rata part of $0.50 for a billing cycle shorter than monthly). (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(4))

1. Monthly rate x 12 = APR

E. APR calculation when daily periodic rates are applicable if only the periodic rate is imposed or when a minimum or fixed charge (but not a transactional charge) is imposed. (12 CFR 1026.14(d))

1. (Total finance charge / average daily balance) x 12 = APR

Or

2. (Total finance charge / sum of daily balances) x 365 = APR

11 For the following formulas, the APR cannot be determined if the applicable balance is zero. (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(2))

12 Loan fees, points, or similar finance charges that relate to the opening of the account must not be included in the calculation of the APR.

13 The sum of the balances may include the average daily balance, adjusted balance, or previous balance method. When a portion of the finance charge is determined by application of one or more daily periodic rates, the sum of the balances also means the average of daily balances. See Appendix F to Regulation Z.

14 Cannot be less than the highest periodic rate applied, expressed as an APR. Loan fees, points, or similar finance charges that relate to the opening of the account must not be included in the calculation of the APR.

Change in Terms Notices for Home Equity Plans Subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 – 12 CFR 1026.9(c)

Servicers are required to provide consumers with 15 days’ advance written notice of a change to any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) or where the required minimum periodic payment is increased. Notice is not required when the change involves a reduction of any component of a finance charge or other charge or when the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding. If the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit in certain circumstances (if permitted by contract), a written notice must be provided no later than three business days after the action is taken and must include the specific reasons for the action. If the creditor requires the consumer to request reinstatement of credit privileges, the notice also must state that fact.

Payments – 12 CFR 1026.10 (Open-End Credit)

Creditors are required to credit a payment to the consumer’s account as of the date of receipt, except when a delay in crediting does not result in a finance or other charge. If a creditor fails to credit a payment, as required by 12 CFR 1026.10(a) or (b), in time to avoid the imposition of finance or other charges, the creditor shall adjust the consumer’s account so that the charges imposed are credited to the consumer’s account during the next billing cycle.

If a card issuer makes a material change in the address for receiving payments or procedures for handling payments, and such change causes a material delay in the crediting of a payment to the consumer’s account during the 60-day period following the date on which such change took effect, the card issuer may not impose any late fee or finance charge for a late payment on the credit card account during the 60-day period following the date on which the change took effect.

Timely Settlement of Estates – 12 CFR 1026.11(c)

Issuers are required to establish procedures to ensure that any administrator of an estate can resolve the outstanding credit card balance of a deceased account holder in a timely manner. If an administrator requests the amount of the balance:

- The issuer is prohibited from imposing additional fees on the account;
- The issuer is required to disclose the amount of the balance to the administrator in a timely manner (safe harbor of 30 days); and
- If the balance is paid in full within 30 days after disclosure of the balance, the issuer must waive or rebate any trailing or residual interest charges that accrued on the balance following the disclosure.
Billing Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1026.13 (Open-End Credit)

A billing error notice is a written notice from a consumer that:

- Is received by a creditor at the address disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(9) or (b)(9), as applicable, no later than 60 days after the creditor transmitted the first periodic statement that reflects the alleged billing error;
- Enables the creditor to identify the consumer’s name and account number; and
- To the extent possible, indicates the consumer’s belief and the reasons for the belief that a billing error exists, and the type, date, and amount of the error.

The creditor shall mail or deliver written acknowledgment to the consumer within 30 days of receiving a billing error notice, unless the creditor has complied with the appropriate resolution procedures of 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within the 30–day period. Furthermore, the creditor credit must comply with the appropriate resolution procedures provided by 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within two complete billing cycles (but in no event later than 90 days) after receiving a billing error notice.

Until a billing error is resolved, the following rules apply:

- The consumer need not pay (and the creditor may not try to collect) any portion of any required payment that the consumer believes is related to the disputed amount (including related finance or other charges).
- The creditor or its agent is also prohibited from making or threatening to make an adverse report to any person about the consumer’s credit standing, or report that an amount or account is delinquent, because the consumer failed to pay the disputed amount or related finance or other charges.
- A creditor shall not accelerate any part of the consumer’s indebtedness or restrict or close a consumer’s account solely because the consumer has exercised in good faith rights provided by this section.

A creditor is not prohibited, however, from taking action to collect any undisputed portion of the item or bill; from deducting any disputed amount and related finance or other charges from the consumer’s credit limit on the account; or from reflecting a disputed amount and related finance or other charges on a periodic statement, provided that the creditor indicates on or with the periodic statement that payment of any disputed amount and related finance or other charges is not required pending the creditor’s compliance with this section.

If a creditor determines that a billing error occurred as asserted, it must within the applicable time limits:

- Correct the billing error and credit the consumer’s account with any disputed amount and related finance or other charges, as applicable; and
- Mail or deliver notification of the correction to the consumer.

If, after conducting a reasonable investigation, a creditor determines that no billing error occurred or that a different billing error occurred from that asserted, the creditor must within the applicable time limits:

- Mail or deliver to the consumer an explanation that sets forth the reasons for the creditor’s belief that the billing error alleged by the consumer is incorrect in whole or in part;
- Furnish copies of documentary evidence of the consumer’s indebtedness, if the consumer so requests; and
- If a different billing error occurred, correct the billing error and credit the consumer’s account with any disputed amount and related finance or other charges, as applicable.

If a creditor determines that a consumer owes all or part of the disputed amount and related finance or other charges, determine whether the credit complied with the requirements provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(g).

A creditor that has fully complied with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.13 has no further responsibilities under this section (other than as provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(g)(4)) if a consumer reasserts substantially the same billing error.

NOTE: Special credit card provisions provide additional protections for consumers, including provisions relating to unauthorized use. (12 CFR 1026.12)

Minimum Payments – 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)

For credit card accounts under an open-end credit plan, card issuers generally must disclose on periodic statements an estimate of the amount of time and the total cost (principal and interest) involved in paying the balance in full by making only the minimum payments, an estimate of the monthly payment amount required to pay off the balance in 36 months and the total cost (principal and interest) of repaying the balance in 36 months. Card issuers also must disclose a minimum payment warning and an estimate of the total interest that a consumer would save if that consumer repaid the balance in 36 months, instead of making minimum payments.

Advertising for Open-End Plans– 12 CFR 1026.16

The regulation requires that loan product advertisements provide accurate and balanced information, in a clear and conspicuous manner, about rates, monthly payments, and other loan features. The advertising rules ban several deceptive or misleading advertising practices, including representations that a rate or payment is “fixed” when in fact it can change.

If an advertisement for credit states specific credit terms, it must state only those terms that actually are or will be arranged or offered by the creditor. If any finance charges or other charges are set forth in an advertisement, the advertisement must also clearly and conspicuously state the following:

- Any minimum, fixed, transaction, activity or similar charge that is a finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4 that could be imposed; Any periodic rate that may be applied expressed as an APR as determined under 12 CFR 1026.14(b). If the plan provides for a variable periodic rate, that fact must be disclosed; and

- Any membership or participation fee that could be imposed.

If any finance charges or other charge or payment terms are set forth, affirmatively or negatively, in an advertisement for a home-equity plan subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, the advertisement also must clearly and conspicuously set forth the following:

- Any loan fee that is a percentage of the credit limit under the plan and an estimate of any other fees imposed for opening the plan, stated as a single dollar amount or a reasonable range;

- Any periodic rate used to compute the finance charge, expressed as an APR as determined under 12 CFR 1026.14(b); and

- The maximum APR that may be imposed in a variable-rate plan.

Subpart C – Closed-End Credit

Subpart C relates to closed-end credit. It contains rules on disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17–20), treatment of credit balances (12 CFR 1026.21), annual percentage rate calculations (12 CFR 1026.22), rescission rights (12 CFR 1026.23), and advertising (12 CFR 1026.24).

The TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures must be given for most closed-end transactions secured by real property for which the creditor receives an application on or after October 3, 2015. The TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures do not apply to HELOCs, reverse mortgages, or mortgages secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property. Truth in Lending disclosures (TIL disclosures) and the Consumer Handbook on Adjustable Rate Mortgages (CHARM) booklet must still be provided for certain closed-end loan transactions.

Disclosures, Generally

Timing

Generally, all disclosures provided to consumers must be made clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep ((12 CFR 1026.17(a), 1026.37(o), 1026.38(t)). However, the timing of the disclosures may change depending on the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(a), 1026.19(e)(1)(i), 1026.19(f)(1)(i), 1026.19(g)).

Disclosures in connection with non-mortgage closed-end loans and specified housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income consumers must be provided before consummation of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.3)

For most closed-end transactions secured by real property for which the creditor receives an application on or after October 3, 2015 (including construction-only loans, loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres, and credit extended to certain trusts for tax or estate planning purposes), disclosures must be provided in accordance with the timing requirements outlined in 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f) and (g). Generally, a creditor is required to mail or deliver the Loan Estimate within three business days of receipt of the consumer’s loan application and to ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before loan consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(iii), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)). If the loan is a purchase transaction, the special information booklet must also be provided within three business days of receipt of the consumer’s application (12 CFR 1026.19(g)). The specifics of these disclosure timing requirements are further discussed below, including a discussion about revised disclosures.

Mortgage loans not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (e.g., reverse mortgages, and chattel-dwelling loans) have different disclosure requirements. For reverse mortgages, disclosures must be delivered or mailed to the consumer no later than the third business day after a creditor receives the consumer’s written application (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). For chattel-dwelling mortgage loans, disclosures must be provided to the consumer prior to consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.17(b)).

FDIC Consumer Compliance Manual — March 2019

Revised disclosures are also required within three business days of consummation if certain mortgage loan terms change (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(2)). For loans like reverse mortgages, the consumer will receive the Good Faith Estimate (GFE), HUD-1 Settlement Statement (HUD-1), and Truth in Lending disclosures as required under the applicable sections of both TILA and RESPA. Consumers receive TIL disclosures for chattel-dwelling loans that are not secured by land, but the GFE and the HUD-1 are not required. Finally, certain variable rate transactions secured by a dwelling have additional disclosure obligations with specific timing requirements both prior to and after consummation (see 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) below).

Basis for Disclosures

Generally
Disclosures provided for closed-end transactions must reflect the credit terms to which the parties will be legally bound as of the outset of the credit transaction. If information required for the disclosures is unknown, the creditor may provide the consumer with an estimate, using the best information reasonably available. The disclosure must be clearly marked as an estimate.

Variable and Adjustable Rate
If the terms of the legal obligation allow the financial institution, after consummation of the transaction, to increase the APR, the financial institution must furnish the consumer with certain information on variable rates. Variable rate disclosures are not applicable to rate increases resulting from delinquency, default, assumption, acceleration, or transfer of the collateral.

Some of the more important transaction-specific variable rate disclosure requirements follow.

- Disclosures for variable rate loans must be given for the full term of the transaction and must be based on the terms in effect at the time of consummation.

- If the variable rate transaction includes either a seller buy-down that is reflected in a contract or a consumer buy-down, the disclosed APR should be a composite rate based on the lower rate for the buy-down period and the rate that is the basis for the variable rate feature for the remainder of the term.

- If the initial rate is not determined by the index or formula used to make later interest rate adjustments, as in a discounted variable rate transaction, the disclosed APR must reflect a composite rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is applied and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation (i.e., the fully indexed rate).

- If a loan contains a rate or payment cap that would prevent the initial rate or payment, at the time of the adjustment, from changing to the fully indexed rate, the effect of that rate or payment cap needs to be reflected in the disclosures.

- The index at consummation need not be used if the contract provides a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value (e.g., the contract indicates that future rate changes are based on the index value in effect for some specified period, such as 45 days before the change date). Instead, the financial institution may use any rate from the date of consummation back to the beginning of the specified period (e.g., during the previous 45-day period).

- If the initial interest rate is set according to the index or formula used for later adjustments, but is set at a value as of a date before consummation, disclosures should be based on the initial interest rate, even though the index may have changed by the consummation date.

Finance Charge, Amount Financed and APRs

Finance Charge – 12 CFR 1026.18(c)
The aggregate total amount of the finance charge must be disclosed for all loans. An itemization of the amount financed is required (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.18(c)(2) or (c)(3)), unless the loan is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (i.e., most closed-end mortgage loans).

Amount Financed – 12 CFR 1026.18(b), 1026.38(o)

Definition
The amount financed is the net amount of credit extended for the consumer’s use. It should not be assumed that the amount financed under the regulation is equivalent to the note amount, proceeds, or principal amount of the loan. The amount financed normally equals the total of payments less the finance charge.

To calculate the amount financed, all amounts and charges connected with the transaction, either paid separately or included in the note amount, must first be identified. Any prepaid, precomputed, or other finance charge must then be determined.

The amount financed must not include any finance charges. If finance charges have been included in the obligation (either prepaid or precomputed), they must be subtracted from the face amount of the obligation when determining the amount financed. The resulting value must be reduced further by an amount equal to any prepaid finance charge paid separately. The final resulting value is the amount financed.

When calculating the amount financed, finance charges (whether in the note amount or paid separately) should not be subtracted more than once from the total amount of an obligation. Charges not in the note amount and not included in the finance charge (e.g., an appraisal fee paid separately in cash on a real estate loan) are not required to be disclosed under Regulation Z and must not be included in the amount financed.

In a multiple advance construction loan, proceeds placed in a temporary escrow account and awaiting disbursement in draws to the developer are not considered part of the amount financed until actually disbursed. Thus, if the entire commitment amount is disbursed into the lender’s escrow account, the lender must not base disclosures on the assumption that all funds were disbursed immediately, even if the lender pays interest on the escrowed funds.

Calculating the Amount Financed

A consumer signs a note secured by real property in the amount of $5,435. The note amount includes $5,000 in proceeds disbursed to the consumer, $400 in precomputed interest, $25 paid to a credit reporting agency for a credit report, and a $10 service charge. Additionally, the consumer pays a $50 loan fee separately in cash at consummation. The consumer has no other debt with the financial institution. The amount financed is $4,975.

The amount financed may be calculated by first subtracting all finance charges included in the note amount ($5,435 - $400 - $10 = $5,025). The $25 credit report fee is not a finance charge because the loan is secured by real property. The $5,025 is further reduced by the amount of prepaid finance charges paid separately, for an amount financed of $5,025 - $50 = $4,975. The answer is the same whether finance charges included in the obligation are considered prepaid or precomputed finance charges.

The financial institution may treat the $10 service charge as an addition to the loan amount and not as a prepaid finance charge. If it does, the loan principal would be $5,000. The $5,000 loan principal does not include either the $400 or the $10 precomputed finance charge in the note. The loan principal is increased by other amounts that are financed that are not part of the finance charge (the $25 credit report fee) and reduced by any prepaid finance charges (the $50 loan fee, not the $10 service charge) to arrive at the amount financed of $5,000 + $25 - $50 = $4,975.

Conversely, the financial institution may treat the $10 service charge as a prepaid finance charge. If it does, the loan principal would be $5,010. The $5,010 loan principal does not include the $400 precomputed finance charge. The loan principal is increased by other amounts that are financed that are not part of the finance charge (the $25 credit report fee) and reduced by any prepaid finance charges (the $50 loan fee and the $10 service charge withheld from loan proceeds) to arrive at the same amount financed of $5,010 + $25 - $50 - $10 = $4,975.

Payment Schedule – 12 CFR 1026.18(g)

For transactions that are not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), the disclosed payment schedule must reflect all components of the finance charge. It includes all payments scheduled to repay loan principal, interest on the loan, and any other finance charge payable by the consumer after consummation of the transaction.

However, any finance charge paid separately before or at consummation (e.g., odd days’ interest) is not part of the payment schedule. It is a prepaid finance charge that must be reflected as a reduction in the value of the amount financed.

At the creditor’s option, the payment schedule may include amounts beyond the amount financed and finance charge (e.g., certain insurance premiums or real estate escrow amounts such as taxes added to payments). However, when calculating the APR, the creditor must disregard such amounts.

If the obligation is a renewable balloon payment instrument that unconditionally obligates the financial institution to renew the short-term loan at the consumer’s option or to renew the loan subject to conditions within the consumer’s control, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the longer term of the renewal period or periods. The long-term loan must be disclosed with a variable rate feature.

If there are no renewal conditions or if the financial institution guarantees to renew the obligation in a refinancing, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the shorter balloon payment term. The short-term loan must be disclosed as a fixed rate loan, unless it contains a variable rate feature during the initial loan term.

Annual Percentage Rate (Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.22

Calculating the Annual Percentage Rate – 12 CFR 1026.22

The APR must be determined under one of the following:

- The actuarial method, which is defined by Regulation Z and explained in Appendix J to the regulation.
- The U.S. Rule, which is permitted by Regulation Z and briefly explained in Appendix J to the regulation. The U.S. Rule is an accrual method that seems to have first surfaced officially in an early nineteenth century United States Supreme Court case, Story v. Livingston, 38 U.S. 359 (1839).

Whichever method is used by the financial institution, the rate calculated will be accurate if it is able to “amortize” the amount financed while it generates the finance charge under the accrual method selected. Financial institutions also may rely on minor irregularities and accuracy tolerances in the regulation, both of which effectively permit somewhat imprecise, but still legal, APRs to be disclosed.
Accuracy Tolerances

The disclosed APR on a closed-end transaction is accurate for:

- Regular transactions (which include any single advance transaction with equal payments and equal payment periods, or an irregular first payment period and/or a first or last irregular payment), if the disclosed APR is within one-eighth of 1 percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(2)).

- Irregular transactions (which include multiple advance transactions and other transactions not considered regular), if the disclosed APR is within one-quarter of 1 percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(3)).

- Mortgage transactions, if the disclosed APR is within one-eighth of 1 percentage point for regular transactions or one-quarter of 1 percentage point for irregular transactions or if:

1) The rate results from the disclosed finance charge, and:

a) The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.18(d)(1) or 1026.38(o)(2), as applicable; or

b) The disclosed finance charge is calculated incorrectly but is considered accurate for purposes of rescission, under 12 CFR 1026.23(g) or (h), whichever applies. (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4))

2) The disclosed finance charge is calculated incorrectly but is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.18(d)(1) or 1026.38(o)(2), as applicable, or 12 CFR 1026.23 (g) or (h), and either:

a) The finance charge is understated and the disclosed APR is also understated but is closer to the actual APR than the APR that would be considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4); or

b) The disclosed finance charge is overstated and the disclosed APR is also overstated but is closer to the actual APR than the APR that would be considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4).

For example, in an irregular transaction subject to a tolerance of ⅛th of 1 percentage point, if the actual APR is 9.00 percent and a $75 omission from the finance charge corresponds to a rate of 8.50 percent that is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4), a disclosed APR of 8.65 percent is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(5). However, a disclosed APR below 8.50 percent or above 9.25 percent would not be considered accurate.

Construction Loans – 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6) & Appendix D

Construction and certain other multiple advance loans pose special problems in computing the finance charge and APR. In many instances, the amount and dates of advances are not predictable with certainty since they depend on the progress of the work. Regulation Z provides that the APR and finance charge for such loans may be estimated for disclosure.

At its option, the financial institution may rely on the representations of other parties to acquire necessary information (for example, it might look to the consumer for the dates of advances). In addition, if either the amounts or dates of advances are unknown (even if some of them are known), the financial institution may, at its option, use Appendix D to the regulation to make calculations and disclosures. The finance charge and payment schedule obtained through Appendix D may be used with volume one of the CFPB’s APR tables or with any other appropriate computation tool to determine the APR. If the financial institution elects not to use Appendix D, or if Appendix D cannot be applied to a loan (e.g., Appendix D does not apply to a combined construction-permanent loan if the payments for the permanent loan begin during the construction period), the financial institution must make its estimates under 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2) and calculate the APR using multiple advance formulas.

On loans involving a series of advances under an agreement to extend credit up to a certain amount, a financial institution may treat all of the advances as a single transaction or disclose each advance as a separate transaction. If advances are disclosed separately, disclosures must be provided before each advance occurs, with the disclosures for the first advance provided before consummation.

In a transaction that finances the construction of a dwelling that may or will be permanently financed by the same financial institution, the construction-permanent financing phases may be disclosed in one of three ways listed below.

- As a single transaction, with one disclosure combining both phases.
- As two separate transactions, with one disclosure for each phase.
- As more than two transactions, with one disclosure for each advance and one for the permanent financing phase.

If two or more disclosures are furnished, buyer’s points or similar amounts imposed on the consumer may be allocated among the transactions in any manner the financial institution chooses, as long as the charges are not applied more than once. In addition, if the financial institution chooses to give two sets of disclosures and the consumer is obligated for both construction and permanent phases at the outset, both sets of disclosures must be given to the consumer initially, before consummation of each transaction occurs.
If the creditor requires interest reserves for construction loans, special Appendix D rules apply that can make the disclosure calculations quite complicated. The amount of interest reserves included in the commitment amount must not be treated as a prepaid finance charge.

If the lender uses Appendix D for construction-only loans with required interest reserves, the lender must estimate construction interest using the interest reserve formula in Appendix D. The lender’s own interest reserve values must be completely disregarded for disclosure purposes.

If the lender uses Appendix D for combination construction-permanent loans, the calculations can be much more complex. Appendix D is used to estimate the construction interest, which is then measured against the lender’s contractual interest reserves.

If the interest reserve portion of the lender’s contractual commitment amount exceeds the amount of construction interest estimated under Appendix D, the excess value is considered part of the amount financed if the lender has contracted to disburse those amounts whether they ultimately are needed to pay for accrued construction interest. If the lender will not disburse the excess amount if it is not needed to pay for accrued construction interest, the excess amount must be ignored for disclosure purposes.

360-Day and 365-Day Years – 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(3)

Confusion often arises over whether to use the 360-day or 365-day year in computing interest, particularly when the finance charge is computed by applying a daily rate to an unpaid balance. Many single payment loans or loans payable on demand are in this category. There are also loans in this category that call for periodic installment payments. Regulation Z does not require the use of one method of interest computation in preference to another (although state law may). It does, however, permit financial institutions to disregard the fact that months have different numbers of days when calculating and making disclosures. This means financial institutions may base their disclosures on calculation tools that assume all months have an equal number of days, even if their practice is to take account of the variations in months to collect interest.

For example, a financial institution may calculate disclosures using a financial calculator based on a 360-day year with 30-day months, when, in fact, it collects interest by applying a factor of 1/365 of the annual interest rate to actual days.

Disclosure violations may occur, however, when a financial institution applies a daily interest factor based on a 360-day year to the actual number of days between payments. In those situations, the financial institution must disclose the higher values of the finance charge, the APR, and the payment schedule resulting from this practice.

For example, a 12 percent simple interest rate divided by 360 days results in a daily rate of .033333 percent. If no charges are imposed except interest, and the amount financed is the same as the loan amount, applying the daily rate on a daily basis for a 365-day year on a $10,000 one year, single payment, unsecured loan results in an APR of 12.17 percent (.033333 percent x 365 = 12.17 percent), and a finance charge of $1,216.67. There would be a violation if the APR were disclosed as 12 percent or if the finance charge were disclosed as $1,200 (12 percent x $10,000).

However, if there are no other charges except interest, the application of a 360-day year daily rate over 365 days on a regular loan would not result in an APR in excess of the one eighth of one percentage point APR tolerance unless the nominal interest rate is greater than 9 percent. For irregular loans, with one-quarter of 1 percentage point APR tolerance, the nominal interest rate would have to be greater than 18 percent to exceed the tolerance.

NOTE: Notwithstanding the APR tolerance, a creditor’s disclosures must reflect the terms of the legal obligation between the parties (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(1)), and the APR must be determined in accordance with either the actuarial method or the U.S. Rule method (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(1)). A creditor may not ignore, for disclosure purposes, the effects of applying a 360-day year daily rate over 365 days. (Comment 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(3)-1.ii)

Required Deposit – 12 CFR 1026.18(r)

A required deposit, with certain exceptions, is one that the financial institution requires the consumer to maintain as a condition of the specific credit transaction. It can include a compensating balance or a deposit balance that secures the loan. The effect of a required deposit is not reflected in the APR. Also, a required deposit is not a finance charge since it is eventually released to the consumer. A deposit that earns at least 5 percent per year need not be considered a required deposit.

Transactions with TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures – Generally

NOTE: These procedures have not been updated to reflect the Know Before You Owe (KBYO) final rule issued on July 7, 2017. The 2017 TILA-RESPA rule includes an optional compliance period, which began on October 10, 2017 and is for transactions for which a creditor or mortgage broker receives an application prior to October 1, 2018. During this period, early compliance with the 2017 rule is allowed, but not required.

On December 31, 2013, the CFPB published a final rule implementing Sections 1098(2) and 1100A(5) of the Dodd-Frank Act, which directed the CFPB to publish a single, integrated disclosure for mortgage loan transactions, which includes mortgage loan disclosure requirements under TILA and sections 4 and 5 of RESPA. The amendments in the final rule, referred to as the “TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule” or “TRID,” are applicable to covered closed-end mortgage loans for which a creditor or mortgage broker receives an application on or after October 3, 2015. As a result, Regulation Z now houses the integrated forms, timing, and related disclosure requirements for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans.

The new integrated disclosures are not used to disclose information about reverse mortgages, HELOCs, chattel-dwelling loans such as loans secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property (i.e., land), or other transactions not covered by the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule. The final rule also does not apply to loans made by a creditor who makes five or fewer mortgages in a year. Creditors originating these types of mortgages must continue to use, as applicable, the GFE, HUD-1, and TIL disclosures.

Most closed-end mortgage loans are exempt from the requirement to provide the GFE, HUD-1, and servicing disclosure requirements of 12 CFR 1024.6, 1024.7, 1024.8, 1024.10, and 1024.33(a). Instead, these loans are subject to disclosure, timing, and other requirements under TILA and Regulation Z. Specifically, the aforementioned provisions do not apply to the following federally related mortgage loans:

- Loans subject to the special disclosure (TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure) requirements for certain closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), and (g); or
- Certain no-interest loans secured by subordinate liens made for the purpose of down payment or similar home buyer assistance, property rehabilitation assistance, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure avoidance or prevention. (12 CFR 1026.3(h))

Summary of Applicable Disclosure Requirements:

NOTE: In both cases, there is a partial exemption from these disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.3(h) for loans secured by subordinate liens and associated with certain housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income persons.

15 An open-end reverse mortgage receives open-end disclosures, not a GFE or HUD-1.
Creditors making closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property, and subject to the provisions of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), must provide consumers with a Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37. Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.38, the special information booklet as required by RESPA, under 12 CFR 1026.19(g), and, as applicable for ARM transactions, the CHARM booklet. The special information booklet is described in further detail below.

12 CFR 1026.19(e) requires the creditor to provide good faith estimates of the Loan Estimate disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.37 (see subpart E for information on the content, form, and format of the disclosure). The creditor generally must deliver or place in the mail the Loan Estimate no later than three business days after receiving the consumer’s application, and no later than seven business days before consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i) and (iii))

Generally, the creditor is responsible for ensuring that the Loan Estimate and its delivery meet the rule’s content, delivery, and timing requirements. (See 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 1026.37.) If a mortgage broker receives a consumer’s application, the mortgage broker may provide the Loan Estimate to the consumer on the broker’s behalf. If it does so, the mortgage broker must comply with all requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e), as well as the three-year record retention requirements in 12 CFR 1026.25(c). (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(ii))

The creditor is expected to maintain communication with mortgage brokers to ensure that the Loan Estimate and its delivery satisfy the rule’s requirements, and the creditor is legally responsible for any errors or defects. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(ii); Comment 19(e)(1)(ii) -1 and -2)

Timing – Loan Estimate – early disclosures

The Loan Estimate must be delivered or placed in the mail to the consumer no later than the third business day after the creditor or mortgage broker receives the consumer’s application for a mortgage loan. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A)) If the Loan Estimate is not provided to the consumer in person, the consumer is considered to have received the Loan Estimate three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail (this applies to electronic delivery as well). (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iv); Comment 19(e)(1)(iv)-2). Other than for transactions secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan, the Loan Estimate must be delivered or placed in the mail no later than the seventh business day before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) and (C)).

For purposes of the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures rule, an “application” is defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(3)(ii). For transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), or (g), an application consists of the submission of the following six pieces of information:

- The consumer’s name;
- The consumer’s income;
- The consumer’s social security number to obtain a credit report;
- The property address;
- An estimate of the value of the property; and
- The mortgage loan amount sought.

This definition of application is similar to the definition under Regulation X (12 CFR 1024.2(b)), except that it does not include the seventh “catch-all” element of that definition, that is, “any other information deemed necessary by the loan originator.”

An application may be submitted in written or electronic format, and includes a written record of an oral application. (Comment 2(a)(3)-1)

This definition of application does not prevent a creditor from collecting whatever additional information it deems necessary in connection with the request for the extension of credit. However, once a consumer has submitted the six pieces of information discussed above to the creditor for purposes of obtaining an extension of credit, the creditor has an application for purposes of the requirement for delivery of the Loan Estimate to the consumer and must abide by the three business day timing requirement. (Comment 2(a)(3)-1)

If the creditor determines, within the three business day period, that the consumer’s application will not or cannot be approved on the terms requested by the consumer, or if the consumer withdraws the application within that period, the creditor does not have to provide the Loan Estimate. However, if the creditor does not provide the Loan Estimate, it will not have complied with the Loan Estimate requirements if it later consummates the transaction on the terms originally applied for by the consumer. If a consumer amends an application and a creditor determines the amended application may proceed, then the creditor is required to comply with the Loan Estimate requirements, including delivering or mailing a Loan Estimate within three business days of receiving the amended or resubmitted application. (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-3)

A “business day” for purposes of providing the Loan Estimate is a day on which the creditor’s offices are open to the public for carrying out substantially all of its business functions. (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-1, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6))

NOTE: The term “business day” is defined differently for other purposes, including counting days to ensure the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure on time. (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) and (e)(1)(iv), and 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii)) For these other purposes, business day means all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. 6103(a). (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6); Comment 2(a)(6)-2; Comments 19(e)(1)(iii)-1 and 19(f)(1)(ii)-1)

Creditors are required to act in good faith and exercise due diligence in obtaining information necessary to complete the Loan Estimate. (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1) Normally, creditors may rely on the representations of other parties in obtaining information. (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i))

NOTE: There may be some information that is not reasonably available to the creditor at the time the Loan Estimate is made. In these instances, except as otherwise provided in 12 CFR 1026.19, 1026.37, and 1026.38, the creditor may use estimates even though it knows that more precise information will be available by the point of consummation. However, new disclosures may be required under 12 CFR 1026.17(f) or 1026.19. (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1) When estimated figures are used, they must be designated as such on the Loan Estimate. (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-2)

The consumer may modify or waive the seven business day waiting period after receiving the Loan Estimate if the consumer determines that the mortgage loan is needed to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency that necessitates consummating the credit transaction before the end of the waiting period. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)) Whether a consumer has a bona fide personal financial emergency is determined by the facts surrounding the consumer’s individual situation. One example is the imminent sale of the consumer’s home at foreclosure, where the foreclosure sale will proceed unless loan proceeds are made available to the consumer during the waiting period. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v); Comment 19(e)(1)(v)-1). To modify or waive the waiting period, the consumer must give the creditor a dated written statement that describes the emergency, specifically modifies or waives the waiting period, and is signed by all consumers primarily liable on the legal obligation. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)) The creditor may not provide the consumer with a pre-printed waiver form. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v))

Good faith requirement and tolerances

Creditors are responsible for ensuring that the figures stated in the Loan Estimate are made in good faith and consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time they are disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3); Comment 19(e)(3)(iii)-1 through -3) Whether or not a Loan Estimate was made in good faith is determined by calculating the difference between the estimated charges originally provided in the Loan Estimate and the actual charges paid by or imposed on the consumer in the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii)). Generally, if the charge paid by or imposed on the consumer exceeds the amount originally disclosed on the Loan Estimate, it is not in good faith. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)) As long as the creditor’s estimate is consistent with the best information reasonably available, and the creditor charges the consumer less than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, the Loan Estimate is considered to be in good faith. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i))

The general rule is that the estimated closing cost is in good faith if the charge does not exceed the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate. Unless there is an exception, depending on the specific circumstances, the creditor may not charge more than the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)). For certain charges, there are different tolerances when charges exceed the amounts disclosed.

Zero tolerance. For charges other than those that are specifically excepted, as noted below, creditors may not charge consumers more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, other than for changed circumstances that permit a revised Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (iv) The zero tolerance charges include but are not limited to the following:

- Fees for required services paid to the creditor, mortgage broker, or an affiliate of either (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i), Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-1(i)-(iii));
- Fees paid to an unaffiliated third party if the creditor did not permit the consumer to shop for a third-party service provider for a settlement service or transfer taxes. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)), Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-1(iv)-(v))

10 percent cumulative tolerance. Charges for third-party services and recording fees paid by or imposed on the consumer are grouped together and are subject to a 10 percent cumulative tolerance. This means the creditor may charge the consumer more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate for any of these charges so long as the total sum of the charges added together does not exceed the sum of all such charges disclosed on the Loan Estimate by more than 10 percent. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(A)). These charges are:

- Recording fees (Comment 19(e)(3)(ii)-4);
- Charges for required third-party services where:
  - The charge is not paid to the creditor or the creditor’s affiliate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(B)); and
  - The consumer is permitted by the creditor to shop for the third-party service, and the consumer selects a third-party service provider on the creditor’s written list of service providers. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(C); 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi); Comment 19(e)(1)(vi)-1 through 7))

Variance permitted without tolerance limits. Creditors may charge consumers more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate without any tolerance limitation for certain costs or terms, but only if the original estimated charge, or lack of an... estimated charge for a particular service, was based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)) These charges are:

- Prepaid interest; property insurance premiums; amounts placed into an escrow, impound, reserve or similar account and may be paid to the creditor or its affiliates. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(A)-(C))
- Charges paid to unaffiliated third-party service providers for services required by the creditor if the creditor permits the consumer to shop and the consumer selects a third-party service provider not on the creditor’s written list of service providers. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(D))
- Charges paid to third-party service providers for services not required by the creditor (may be paid to affiliates of the creditor). (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(E))

List of services for which a consumer may shop. In addition to the Loan Estimate, if the consumer is permitted to shop for a settlement service, the creditor, no later than three business days after receiving the application, must provide the consumer with a written list of services for which the consumer can shop. This list must:

- Identify at least one available settlement service provider for each service, and
- State that the consumer may choose a different provider of that service. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(C) and (e)(1)(vi)(C))

NOTE: When a creditor allows a consumer to shop for a third-party service and the consumer chooses a service provider not identified on the creditor’s list, the charge is not subject to a tolerance limitation.

Refunds within 60 days of consummation. If the amounts paid by the consumer at closing exceed the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate beyond the applicable tolerance threshold, the creditor must refund the excess to the consumer no later than 60 calendar days after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v))

- For charges subject to zero tolerance, any amount charged beyond the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate must be refunded to the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i))
- For charges subject to a 10 percent cumulative tolerance, to the extent the total sum of the charges added together exceeds the sum of all such charges disclosed on the Loan Estimate by more than 10 percent, the difference must be refunded to the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii))

Loan Estimate - Revisions and Corrections

Creditors generally are bound by the original Loan Estimate and must determine the estimate’s good faith by calculating the difference between the estimated charges originally provided and the actual charges paid by the consumer. For purposes of determining whether the estimates are in good faith, the creditor may use a revised estimate of a charge instead of the amount originally disclosed if the revision is due to one of the reasons set out in specific circumstances in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) through (F). Specific circumstances include:

changed circumstances – increased settlement charges.

Changed circumstances that occur after the Loan Estimate is provided to the consumer that cause estimated settlement charges to increase more than is permitted under the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)).

- A creditor may provide and use a revised Loan Estimate redisclosing a settlement charge and compare that revised estimate to the amount imposed on the consumer for purposes of determining good faith if changed circumstances cause the estimated charge to increase or, in the case of charges subject to the 10 percent cumulative tolerance under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii), cause the sum of those charges to increase by more than the 10 percent tolerance. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-1) Examples of changed circumstances affecting settlement costs include (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-2):
  - A natural disaster that damages the property or otherwise results in additional closing costs;
  - A creditor’s estimate of title insurance is no longer valid because the title insurer goes out of business; or changed circumstances – consumer eligibility. Changed circumstances that occur after the Loan Estimate is provided to the consumer that affect the consumer’s eligibility for the terms for which the consumer applied or the value of the security for the loan (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B)).
  - New information not relied on when the Loan Estimate was provided is discovered, such as a neighbor of the seller filing a claim contesting the property boundary.

NOTE: A changed circumstance permitting a revised Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) and (B) is:

- An extraordinary event beyond the control of any interested party or other unexpected event specific to the consumer or transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(1));
- Information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor relied upon when providing the original Loan Estimate and that was inaccurate or changed after the disclosures were provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(2)); or

- New information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor did not rely on when providing the original Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(3))

Change in eligibility. A creditor also may provide and use a revised Loan Estimate if a changed circumstance affected the consumer’s creditworthiness or the value of the security for the loan and resulted in the consumer being ineligible for an estimated loan term previously disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(B)-1) This may occur when a changed circumstance causes a change in the consumer’s eligibility for specific loan terms disclosed on the Loan Estimate, which in turn results in increased cost for a settlement service beyond the applicable tolerance threshold. (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-2) For example:

- The creditor relied on the consumer’s representation to the creditor of a $90,000 annual income, but underwriting determines that the consumer’s annual income is only $80,000.
- There are two co-applicants applying for a mortgage loan and the creditor relied on a combined income when providing the Loan Estimate, but one applicant subsequently becomes unemployed.

Revisions requested by the consumer. The consumer requests revisions to the credit terms or the settlement that cause the estimated charge to increase. For example, a consumer grants a power of attorney authorizing a family member to consummate the transaction on the consumer’s behalf, and the creditor provides revised disclosures reflecting the fee to record the power of attorney. (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(C)-1)

Rate locks after initial Loan Estimate. If the interest rate for the loan was not locked when the Loan Estimate was provided and, upon being locked at some later time, points or lender credits for the mortgage loan change, the creditor is required to provide a revised Loan Estimate no later than three business days after the loan was not locked when the Loan Estimate was provided and, upon being locked at some later time, points or lender credits for the mortgage loan change, the creditor is required to provide a revised Loan Estimate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1), lender credits, and any other interest rate dependent charges and terms that have changed due to the new interest rate. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(D); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(D)-1)

Expiration of Loan Estimate. If the consumer indicates an intent to proceed with the transaction more than 10 business days after the Loan Estimate was delivered or placed in the mail to the consumer, a creditor may use a revised Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(E); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(E)-1) No justification is required for the change to the original estimate of a charge other than the lapse of 10 business days.

Construction loans. In addition to the circumstances described above, creditors also may use a revised Loan Estimate where the transaction involves financing of new construction and the creditor reasonably expects that settlement will occur more than 60 calendar days after the original Loan Estimate has been provided. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(F)) Creditors may use revised Loan Estimates in this circumstance only when the original Loan Estimate clearly and conspicuously stated that at any time prior to 60 days before consummation, the creditor may issue revised disclosures. (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(F)-1)

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3) does not include technical errors, miscalculations, or underestimations of charges as reasons for which creditors are permitted to provide revised Loan Estimates.

Timing – Loan Estimate – revised disclosures

The general rule is that the creditor must deliver or place in the mail the revised Loan Estimate to the consumer no later thanthree business days after receiving the information sufficient to establish that one of the reasons for the revision has occurred. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i); Comment 19(e)(4)(i)-1)

The creditor may not provide a revised Loan Estimate on or after the date the creditor provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(ii); Comment 19(e)(4)(ii)-1.1i) Because the Closing Disclosure must be received by the consumer no later than three business days before consummation, this means the consumer must receive a revised Loan Estimate no later than four business days prior to consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(ii); Comment 19(e)(4)(ii)-1.1i)

NOTE: Generally a creditor is required to provide a revised Loan Estimate within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish the changed circumstance or other triggering event (or in the case of a rate lock, the next business day). In some circumstances, the creditor may already have provided a Closing Disclosure and thus be unable to provide a revised Loan Estimate. However, if there are less than four business days between the date the creditor would be required to provide a revised disclosure and consummation, creditors may provide consumers with a Closing Disclosure reflecting any revised charges resulting from the changed circumstance and relying on those figures (rather than the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate) for purposes of determining good faith and the applicable tolerance. Comment 19(e)(4)(ii)-1 provides illustrative examples.

Predisclosure activity (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii)(A))

A creditor or other person generally may not impose any fee on a consumer in connection with the consumer’s application for a mortgage transaction until the consumer has received the Loan Estimate and has indicated intent to proceed with the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii)(A)) This restriction includes limits on imposing:

- Application fees;
• Appraisal fees;
• Underwriting fees; and
• Other fees imposed on the consumer.

The only exception to this exclusion is for a bona fide and reasonable fee for obtaining a consumer’s credit report. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(B); Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(A)-1 through -5 and Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(B)-1)

Documentation of intent to proceed. To satisfy the record retention requirements of 12 CFR 1026.25, the creditor must document the consumer’s communication of the intent to proceed. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)) A consumer indicates intent to proceed with the transaction when the consumer communicates, in any manner, that the consumer chooses to proceed after the Loan Estimate has been delivered, unless a particular manner of communication is required by the creditor. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)) This may include:

• Oral communication in person immediately upon delivery of the Loan Estimate; or
• Oral communication over the phone, written communication via email, or signing a pre-printed form after receipt of the Loan Estimate.

A consumer’s silence is not indicative of intent to proceed. (Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(A)-2)

Written information for consumers before the Loan Estimate is provided. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(iii)) A creditor or other person may provide a consumer with estimated terms or costs prior to the consumer receiving the Loan Estimate, if the consumer clearly and conspicuously states at the top of the front of the first page of the written estimate and in font size no smaller than 12-point font “Your actual rate, payment, and costs could be higher. Get an official Loan Estimate before choosing the loan.” (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii); Comment 19(e)(2)(ii)-1) In addition, the written estimate may not have headings, content, and format substantially similar to the Loan Estimate or the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii); Comment 19(e)(2)(ii)-1)

The CFPB has provided a model of the required statement in form H-26 of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Verification of information before the Loan Estimate is provided. A creditor or other person may not condition providing the Loan Estimate on a consumer submitting documents verifying information related to the consumer’s mortgage loan application before providing the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(iii); Comment 19(e)(2)(iii)-1)

Final Disclosures (Closing Disclosure) – 12 CFR 1026.19(f)

For loans that require a Loan Estimate (i.e., most closed-end mortgage loans secured by real property) and that proceed to closing, creditors must provide a new final disclosure reflecting the actual terms of the transaction; it is called the Closing Disclosure. The form integrates and replaces the HUD-1 and the final TIL disclosure for these transactions. The creditor is generally required to ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before consummation of the loan. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii))

NOTE: If the creditor mails the disclosure six business days prior to consummation, it can assume that it was received three business days after sending. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); Comment 19(f)(1)(iii))

• The Closing Disclosure generally must contain the actual terms and costs of the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i)) Creditors may estimate disclosures using the best information reasonably available when the actual term or cost is not reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure is made. However, creditors must act in good faith and use due diligence in obtaining the information. The creditor normally may rely on the representations of other parties in obtaining the information, including, for example, the settlement agent. The creditor is required to provide corrected disclosures containing the actual terms of the transaction at or before consummation. (Comments 19(f)(1)(i)-2, -2.1, and -2.ii)

• The Closing Disclosure must be in writing and contain the information prescribed in 12 CFR 1026.38. The creditor must disclose only the specific information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.38(a) through (s), as shown in the CFPB’s form in Appendix H-25. (12 CFR 1026.38(t))

• If the actual terms or costs of the transaction change prior to consummation, the creditor must provide a corrected disclosure that contains the actual terms of the transaction and complies with the other requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f), including the timing requirements, and requirements for providing corrected disclosures due to subsequent changes. (Comment 19(f)(1)(i)-1)

• New three-day waiting period. If the creditor provides a corrected disclosure, it must provide the consumer with an additional three-business-day waiting period prior to consummation if the annual percentage rate becomes inaccurate, the loan product changes, or a prepayment penalty is added to the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii))

“Consummation” occurs when the consumer becomes contractually obligated to the creditor on the loan, not, for example, when the consumer becomes contractually obligated to a seller on a real estate transaction. The time when a consumer becomes contractually obligated to the creditor on the loan depends on applicable state law. (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(13); Comment 2(a)(13)-1) Timing and Delivery - Closing Disclosure.

Generally, the creditor is responsible for ensuring that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure form no later than three business days before consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A); Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-3) The creditor also is responsible for ensuring that the Closing Disclosure meets the content, delivery, and timing requirements. (12 CFR 1026.19(f) and 1026.38) For timeshare transactions, the creditor must ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(B))

If the Closing Disclosure is provided in person, it is considered received by the consumer on the day it is provided. If it is mailed or delivered electronically, the consumer is considered to have received the Closing Disclosure three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); Comment 19(f)(1)(ii)-2)

However, if the creditor has evidence that the consumer received the Closing Disclosure earlier than three business days after it is mailed or delivered, it may rely on that evidence and consider it to be received on that date. (Comments 19(f)(1)(iii)-1 and -2)

Multiple consumers. In transactions that are not rescindable, the Closing Disclosure may be provided to any consumer with primary liability on the obligation. (12 CFR 1026.17(d)) In rescindable transactions, the creditor must provide the Closing Disclosure separately and meet the timing requirements for each consumer who has the right to rescind under TILA (see 12 CFR 1026.23).

Settlement agents. Creditors may contract with settlement agents to have the settlement agent provide the Closing Disclosure to consumers on the creditor’s behalf, provided that the settlement agent complies with all relevant requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f). (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v); Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-3) Creditors and settlement agents also may agree to divide responsibility with regard to completing the Closing Disclosure, with the settlement agent assuming responsibility to complete some or all the Closing Disclosure. (Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-4) Any such creditor must maintain communication with the settlement agent to ensure that the Closing Disclosure and its delivery satisfy the requirements described above, and the creditor is legally responsible for any errors or defects. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v); Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-3) In transactions involving a seller, the settlement agent is required to provide the seller with the Closing Disclosure reflecting the actual terms of the seller’s transaction no later than the day of consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)(i) and (ii))

NOTE: “Business day” has a different meaning for purposes of providing the Closing Disclosure than it is for purposes of providing the Loan Estimate after receiving a consumer’s application. For purposes of providing the Closing Disclosure, the term business day means all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. 6103(a). (See 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii))

Three-business-day waiting period. The loan may not be consummated less than three business days after the Closing Disclosure is received by the consumer. If a settlement is scheduled during the waiting period, the creditor generally must postpone settlement, unless the consumer determines that the extension of credit is necessary to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency and waives the waiting period. The written waiver describes the emergency, specifically modifies or waives the waiting period, and bears the signature of all consumers who are primarily liable on the legal obligation. Pre-printed forms for this purpose are prohibited. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv))

Average charges. In general, the amount imposed on the consumer for any settlement service must not exceed the amount the settlement service provider actually received for that service. However, an average charge may be imposed instead of the actual amount received for a particular service, as long as the average charge satisfies the following conditions (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(i)-(ii); Comment 19(f)(3)(i)-1):

- The average charge is no more than the average amount paid for that service by or on behalf of all consumers and sellers for a class of transactions;
- The creditor or settlement service provider defines the class of transactions based on an appropriate period of time, geographic area, and type of loan;
- The creditor or settlement service provider uses the same average charge for every transaction within the defined class; and
- The creditor or settlement service provider does not use an average charge:
  - For any type of insurance;
  - For any charge based on the loan amount or property value; or
  - If doing so is otherwise prohibited by law.

Closing Disclosures - Revisions and Corrections (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)).

Creditors must re-disclose terms or costs on the Closing Disclosure if certain changes occur to the transaction after the Closing Disclosure was first provided that cause the disclosures to become inaccurate. There are three categories of changes that require a corrected Closing Disclosure containing all changed terms. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2))

- Changes that occur before consummation that require a new three-business-day waiting period; (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii))
Changes that occur before consummation and do not require a new three-business-day waiting period; and (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii))

Changes that occur after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii))

Changes before consummation requiring new waiting period. If one of the following occurs after delivery of the Closing Disclosure and before consummation, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure containing all changed terms and ensure that the consumer receives it no later than three business days before consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii); Comment 19(f)(2)(ii)-1)

- The disclosed APR becomes inaccurate. If the APR previously disclosed becomes inaccurate, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the corrected APR disclosure and all other terms that have changed. The APR’s accuracy is determined according to 12 CFR 1026.22. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(A))

- The loan product changes. If the loan product is changed, causing the product description disclosed to become inaccurate, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the corrected loan product and all other terms that have changed. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(B))

- A prepayment penalty is added. If a prepayment penalty is added to the transaction, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the prepayment penalty provision disclosed and all other terms that have changed. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(C))

The consumer may waive this period if the consumer is facing a bona fide personal financial emergency. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv))

Changes before consummation not requiring new waiting period; consumer’s right to inspect. For any other changes before consummation that do not fall under the three categories above (i.e., related to the APR, loan product, or the addition of a prepayment penalty), the creditor still must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure if an event occurs within 30 days of consummation that makes the disclosures inaccurate as they relate to the amount actually paid by the seller. The settlement agent must deliver or mail a corrected closing disclosure no later than 30 days from receiving information that establishes the Closing Disclosure is inaccurate and results in a change to an amount actually paid by the seller from what was previously disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)(ii))

Changes due to clerical errors. The creditor must provide a revised Closing Disclosure to correct non-numerical clerical errors no later than 60 calendar days after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iv)) An error is clerical if it does not affect a numerical disclosure and does not affect the timing, delivery, or other requirements imposed by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) or (f). (Comment 19(f)(2)(iv)-1)

Refunds related to the good faith analysis. The creditor can cure a tolerance violation of 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) or (ii) by providing a refund to the consumer and delivering or placing in the mail a corrected Closing Disclosure that reflects the refund no later than 60 calendar days after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v))

Special Information Booklet - 12 CFR 1026.19(g)

Creditors generally must provide a copy of the special information booklet, otherwise known as the home buying information booklet, to consumers who apply for a consumer credit transaction secured by real property. For loans using the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure forms, creditors provide the “Your Home Loan Toolkit: A Step-by-Step Guide,” designed by the CFPB to replace the “Shopping for Your Home Loan: Settlement Cost Booklet” as the special information booklet. This requirement is not limited to closed-end transactions and applies to most consumer credit transactions secured by real property, except in a few circumstances (see below). The special information booklet is required pursuant to Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.19(g))
V. Lending — TILA

CFR 1026.19(g)(1)) as well as Section 5 of RESPA (12 U.S.C. 2604) and 12 CFR 1024.6 of Regulation X. It is published by the CFPB to help consumers applying for federally related mortgage loans understand the nature and cost of real estate settlement services.

- If the consumer is applying for a HELOC subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, the creditor (or mortgage broker) can provide a copy of the brochure entitled “What You Should Know About Home Equity Lines of Credit” instead of the special information booklet. (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i))

- The creditor need not provide the special information booklet if the consumer is applying for a real property-secured consumer credit transaction that does not have the purpose of purchasing a one-to-four family residential property, such as a refinancing, a closed-end loan secured by a subordinate lien, or a reverse mortgage. (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(ii))

Creditors must deliver or place in the mail the special information booklet not later than three business days after receiving the consumer’s loan application. (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i))

If the creditor denies the consumer’s application or if the consumer withdraws the application before the end of the three-business-day period, the creditor need not provide the special information booklet. (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i); Comment 19(g)(1)(i)-1)

When two or more persons apply together for a loan, the creditor may provide a copy of the special information booklet to just one of them. (Comment 19(g)(1)-2)

If the consumer uses a mortgage broker, the mortgage broker must provide the special information booklet and the creditor need not do so. (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i))

Creditors generally are required to use the booklets designed by the CFPB and may make only limited changes to the special information booklet. (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(2)) The CFPB may issue revised or alternative versions of the special information booklet from time to time in the future. Creditors should monitor the Federal Register for notice of revisions. (Comment 19(g)(1)-1)

Loans Receiving Non-TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures, Generally

Creditors making closed-end loans to consumers not subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures Rule (i.e., other than loans where 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) require the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure) must provide the consumer with the Truth in Lending (TIL) disclosure, as outlined in 12 CFR 1026.17 and 1026.18. Creditors engaged in specified housing assistance programs for low- and moderate-income consumers would also provide their consumers with the TIL Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.3(h))

TIL Disclosure.

The TIL disclosure provided for these loans includes a payment schedule. (12 CFR 1026.18(g)) The disclosed payment schedule must reflect all components of the finance charge. It includes all payments scheduled to repay loan principal, interest on the loan, and any other finance charge payable by the consumer after consummation of the transaction.

However, any finance charge paid separately before or at consummation (e.g., odd days’ interest) is not part of the payment schedule. It is a prepaid finance charge that must be reflected as a reduction in the value of the amount financed.

At the creditor’s option, the payment schedule may include amounts beyond the amount financed and finance charge (e.g., certain insurance premiums or real estate escrow amounts such as taxes added to payments). However, when calculating the APR, the creditor must disregard such amounts.

If the obligation is a renewable balloon payment instrument that unconditionally obligates the financial institution to renew the short-term loan at the consumer’s option or to renew the loan subject to conditions within the consumer’s control, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the longer term of the renewal period or periods. The long-term loan must be disclosed with a variable rate feature.

If there are no renewal conditions or if the financial institution guarantees to renew the obligation in a refinancing, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the shorter balloon payment term. The short-term loan must be disclosed as a fixed rate loan, unless it contains a variable rate feature during the initial loan term.

Variable and Adjustable Rate Transactions; 12 CFR 1026.18(f), 1026.20(c) and (d)

Closed-end transactions generally

If the terms of the legal obligation allow the financial institution, after consummation of the transaction, to increase the APR, the financial institution must furnish the consumer with certain information on variable rates. In addition, variable rate disclosures are not applicable to rate increases resulting from delinquency, default, assumption, acceleration, or transfer of the collateral. Some of the more important transaction-specific variable rate disclosure requirements follow.

- Disclosures for variable rate loans must be given for the full term of the transaction and must be based on the terms in effect at the time of consummation.

- If the variable rate transaction includes either a seller buy-down that is reflected in a contract or a consumer buy-down, the disclosed APR should be a composite rate based on the lower rate for the buy-down period and the rate that is the basis for the variable rate feature for the remainder of the term.

- If the initial rate is not determined by the index or formula used to make later interest rate adjustments, as in a discounted variable rate transaction, the disclosed APR must reflect a composite rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is applied and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation (i.e., the fully indexed rate).

  o If a loan contains a rate or payment cap that would prevent the initial rate or payment, at the time of the adjustment, from changing to the fully indexed rate, the effect of that rate or payment cap needs to be reflected in the disclosures.

  o The index at consummation need not be used if the contract provides a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value (e.g., the contract indicates that future rate changes are based on the index value in effect for some specified period, such as 45 days before the change date). Instead, the financial institution may use any rate from the date of consummation back to the beginning of the specified period (e.g., during the previous 45-day period).

- If the initial interest rate is set according to the index or formula used for later adjustments, but is set at a value as of a date before consummation, disclosures should be based on the initial interest rate, even though the index may have changed by the consummation date.

Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosures

Disclosure of Post-Consummation Events - Initial Rate Change for Adjustable Rate Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.20(d)

Creditors, assignees, or servicers referred to collectively as creditors of adjustable rate mortgages, or ARMs, secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling and with terms of more than one year are generally required to provide consumers with certain information pertaining to the ARM’s initial rate change. This information must be provided in a disclosure that is separate from all other documents, and the disclosure must be provided between 210 and 240 days before the first payment at the adjusted rate is due. If the first payment at a new rate is due within the first 210 days after consummation, the creditor must provide the rate change disclosure at consummation.

Disclosures required under this section must provide consumers with information related to the timing and nature of the rate change. If the new rate pursuant to the change disclosed is not known and the creditor provides an estimate, the rate must be identified as an estimate. If the creditor is using an estimate, it must be based on the index within 15 business days prior to the date of the disclosure. The calculation is made using the index reported in the source of information that the creditor uses in the explanation of how the interest rate is determined.

Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(d) must also include, among others:

- The date of the disclosure.
- A statement explaining that the time period that the current rate has been in effect is ending, that the current rate is expiring, and that a change in the rate may result in a change in the required payment; providing the effective date of the change and a schedule of any future changes; and describing any other changes to the loan terms, features, or options taking effect on the same date (including expiration of interest-only or payment-option features).
- A table containing the current and new interest rates, the current and new payments, including the date the new payment is due, and for interest-only or negative amortization loans, the amount of the current and new payment allocated to principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable).

Note: The new payment allocation disclosed is the expected payment allocation for the first payment for which the new interest rate will apply.

- An explanation of how the interest rate is determined, including (among other things) an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate and the margin.
- Any limitations on the interest rate or payment increase for each scheduled increase and over the life of the loan. Creditors must also include a statement regarding the extent to which such limitations result in foregone interest rate increases and the earliest date such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments.
- An explanation of how the new payment is determined, including an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate, including the margin, the expected loan balance on the date of the rate adjustment, and the remaining loan term or any changes to the term caused by the rate change.
- If the creditor is using an estimated rate or payment, a statement that the actual new interest rate and new payment... will be provided to the consumer between two and four months prior to the first payment at the new rate.

- For negative amortization loans, creditors must provide a statement indicating that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and will not reduce the balance of the loan; instead, the payment will only apply to part of the interest, thereby increasing the amount of principal.

- A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer.

- The telephone number of the creditor, assignee, or servicer for use if the consumer anticipates that he or she may not be able to make the new payments.

- A statement providing specified alternatives (which include refinancing, selling the property, loan modification, and forbearance) available if the consumer anticipates not being able to make the new payment.

- A website address for either the CFPB’s or the Department of Housing and Urban Development’s (HUD) list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, the HUD toll-free telephone number to access the HUD list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, and the CFPB’s website address for state housing finance authorities contact information.

- For more information pertaining to the required format of the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(d), please see 12 CFR 1026.20(d)(3) and the model and sample forms H-4(D)(3) and (4) in Appendix H.

Disclosure of Post-Consummation Events - Rate Adjustments Resulting in Payment Changes – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)

Creditors, assignees, or servicers19 (referred to collectively as creditors) of ARMs secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling with a term greater than one year are generally required to provide consumers with disclosures prior to the adjustment of the interest rate on the mortgage,20 if the interest rate change will result in a payment change as follows:

- For ARMs where the payment changes along with a rate change, disclosures must be provided to consumers between 60 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.

- For ARMs where the payment changes in connection with a uniformly scheduled interest rate adjustment occurring every 60 days (or more frequently), the disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.

- For ARMs originated prior to January 10, 2015, in which the contract requires the adjusted interest and payment to be calculated based on an index that is available on a date less than 45 days prior to the adjustment date, disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is required.

- For ARMs where the first adjustment occurs within 60 days of consummation and the new interest rate disclosed at the time was an estimate, the disclosures must be provided as soon as practicable, but no less than 25 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.

Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) must contain specific information, which includes, among others:

- A statement explaining that the time period during which the consumer’s current rate has been in effect is ending and that the rate and payment will change; when the interest rate will change; dates when additional interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur; and any other change in loan terms or features that take effect on the same date that the interest rate and payment change, such as an expiration of interest-only treatment or payment-option feature.

- A table explaining the current and new interest rates, the current and new payments, including the date the new payment is due, and for interest-only or negative amortizing loans, the amount of the current and new payment allocated to principal, interest, and amounts for escrow (if applicable).

- An explanation of how the new interest rate is determined, including (among other things) the index or formula used to determine the new rate and the margin, and any application of previously foregone interest rate increases from past adjustments;

- Any limitations on the interest rate and payment increase for each scheduled increase for the duration of the loan. Creditors must also include a statement regarding the extent to which such limitations result in foregone interest rate increases and the earliest date such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments.

19 Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(c). Creditors, assignees, and servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, establishing a business relationship where one party agrees to provide disclosures on behalf of the other parties does not absolve all other parties from their legal obligations.

20 Exemptions to disclosure requirements are covered in the section titled, “Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)” below.
• An explanation of how the new payment is determined, including an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate, including the margin, the expected loan balance on the date of the rate adjustment, and the remaining loan term or any changes to the term caused by the rate change;

• For negative amortization loans, creditors must provide a statement indicating that the new payment will not reduce the balance of the loan, rather, the payment will only apply to part of the interest, thereby increasing the amount of principal; and

• A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer.

For more information pertaining to the required format of the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(c), please see 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(3) and the model and sample forms H-4(D)(1) and (2) in Appendix H.

Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)

Disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) are not required for ARMs with a term of one year or less. Likewise, disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) are not required if the first interest rate and payment adjustment occurs within the first 210 days and the new rate disclosed at consummation pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.20(d) was not an estimate. ARM disclosures for payment changes are exempt under 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii)(C) where the servicer is a debt collector under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) and a consumer has exercised the right under FDCPA section 805(c) to prohibit debt collector communications regarding the debt.
Closed-End Credit: Finance Charge Accuracy Tolerances

Is this a closed-end credit TILA claim asserting rescission rights?

- Yes
  - Finance charge tolerance is $35. An overstated finance charge is not considered a violation.
- No
  - Is the transaction secured by real estate or dwelling?
    - Yes
      - Did the transaction originate before 9/30/95?
        - Yes
          - Finance charge tolerance is $200 for understatements. An overstated finance charge is not considered a violation.
        - No
          - Is the transaction a refinancing?
            - Yes
              - Does the refinancing involve a consolidation or new advance?
                - Yes
                  - The finance charge shall be considered accurate if it is not more than $5 above or below the exact finance charge in a transaction involving an amount financed of $1,000 or less, or not more than $10 above or below the exact finance charge in a transaction involving an amount financed of more than $1,000.
                - No
                  - Finance charge tolerance is 1% of the loan amount or $100, whichever is greater.
            - No
              - Finance charge tolerance is one-half of 1% of the loan amount or $100, whichever is greater. An overstated finance charge is not considered a violation.
    - No
      - Is the transaction a refinancing?
        - Yes
          - Does the refinancing involve a consolidation or new advance?
            - Yes
              - The finance charge shall be considered accurate if it is not more than $5 above or below the exact finance charge in a transaction involving an amount financed of $1,000 or less, or not more than $10 above or below the exact finance charge in a transaction involving an amount financed of more than $1,000.
            - No
              - Finance charge tolerance is 1% of the loan amount or $100, whichever is greater.
        - No
          - Is the transaction a high-cost mortgage loan?
            - Yes
              - Finance charge tolerance is $200 for understatements. An overstated finance charge is not considered a violation.
            - No
              - Finance charge tolerance is one-half of 1% of the loan amount or $100, whichever is greater. An overstated finance charge is not considered a violation.

Refinancings – 12 CFR 1026.20(a)

When an obligation is satisfied and replaced by a new obligation to the original financial institution (or a holder or servicer of the original obligation) and is undertaken by the same consumer, it must be treated as a refinancing for which a complete set of new disclosures must be furnished. A refinancing may involve the consolidation of several existing obligations, disbursement of new money to the consumer, or the rescheduling of payments under an existing obligation. In any form, the new obligation must completely replace the earlier one to be considered a refinancing under the regulation. The finance charge on the new obligation must be treated as a refinancing for which a complete set of new disclosures must be furnished. A refinancing may involve the consolidation of several existing obligations, disbursement of new money to the consumer, or the rescheduling of payments under an existing obligation. In any form, the new obligation must completely replace the earlier one to be considered a refinancing under the regulation. The finance charge on the new obligation must be treated as a refinancing for which a complete set of new disclosures must be furnished. (12 CFR 1026.20(a))

The following transactions are not considered refinancings even if the existing obligation is satisfied and replaced by a new obligation undertaken by the same consumer:

- A renewal of an obligation with a single payment of principal and interest or with periodic interest payments and a final payment of principal with no change in the original terms.
- An APR reduction with a corresponding change in the payment schedule.
- An agreement involving a court proceeding.
- Changes in credit terms arising from the consumer’s default or delinquency.
- The renewal of optional insurance purchased by the consumer and added to an existing transaction, if required disclosures were provided for the initial purchase of the insurance.

However, even if it is not accomplished by the cancellation of the old obligation and substitution of a new one, a new transaction subject to new disclosures results if the financial institution:

- Increases the rate based on a variable rate feature that was not previously disclosed; or
- Adds a variable rate feature to the obligation.

If, at the time a loan is renewed, the rate is increased, the increase is not considered a variable rate feature. It is the cost of renewal, similar to a flat fee, as long as the new rate remains fixed during the remaining life of the loan. If the original debt is not canceled in connection with such a renewal, the regulation does not require new disclosures. Also, changing the index of a variable rate transaction to a comparable index is not considered adding a variable rate feature to the obligation.

Escrow Cancellation Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.20(e)

Escrow Closing Notice. Before cancelling an escrow account, an Escrow Closing Notice must be provided to any consumers for whom an escrow account was established in connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a lien on real property or a dwelling, except for reverse mortgages. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)) For this purpose, the term escrow account has the same meaning given to it as under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17(b), and the term servicer has the same meaning given to it as under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.2(b). There are two exceptions to the requirement to provide the notice:

- Creditors and servicers are not required to provide the notice if the escrow account that is being cancelled was established solely in connection with the consumer’s delinquency or default on the underlying debt obligation. (Comment 20(e)(1)-2)
- Creditors and servicers are not required to provide the notice when the underlying debt obligation for which an escrow account was established is terminated, including by repayment, refinancing, rescission, and foreclosure. (Comment 20(e)(1)-3)

For loans subject to the Escrow Closing Notice requirement, if the creditor or servicer cancels the escrow account at the consumer’s request, the creditor or servicer must ensure that the consumers receive the notice no later than three business days after the closing of the consumer’s escrow account at the creditor or servicer. If the creditor or servicer cancels the escrow account at the consumer’s request, the creditor or servicer must ensure that the consumer receives the notice no later than three business days after the closing of the consumer's escrow account. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(i)) If the creditor or servicer cancels the escrow account and the cancellation is not at the consumer’s request, the creditor or servicer must ensure that the consumer receives the notice no later than 30 business days before the close of the consumer’s escrow account. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(ii)) If the Escrow Closing Notice is not provided to the consumer in person, the consumer is considered to have received the notice three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(iii))

The creditor or servicer must disclose (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)-(2)):

- The date on which the account will be closed;
- That an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account;
- The reason why the escrow account will be closed;
- That without an escrow account, the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner’s insurance, directly, possibly in one or two large payments a year;
- A table, titled “Cost to you,” that contains an itemization of the amount of any fee the creditor or servicer imposes on the consumer in connection with the closure of the consumer’s escrow account, labeled “Escrow Closing Fee,” and a statement that the fee is for closing the escrow account;

- Under the reference “In the future”:
  - The consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid and the actions the creditor or servicer may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer’s behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than a policy that the consumer could obtain directly;
  - A telephone number that the consumer can use to request additional information about the cancellation of the escrow account;
  - Whether the creditor or servicer offers the option of keeping the escrow account open and, as applicable, a telephone number the consumer can use to request that the account be kept open; and
  - Whether there is a cut-off date by which the consumer can request that the account be kept open.

The creditor or servicer may also, at its option, disclose (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(3)):

- The creditor or servicer’s name or logo;
- The consumer’s name, phone number, mailing address, and property address;
- The issue date of the notice;
- The loan number; or
- The consumer’s account number.

In addition, the disclosures must:

- Contain a required heading that is more conspicuous than and precedes the required disclosures discussed above. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4))
- Be clear and conspicuous. This standard generally requires that the disclosures in the Escrow Closing Notice be in a reasonably understandable form and readily noticeable to the consumer. (Comment 20(e)(2)-1)
- Be written in 10-point font, at a minimum. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4))
- Be grouped together on the front side of a one-page document. The disclosures must be separate from all other materials, with the headings, content, order, and format substantially similar to model form H-29 in Appendix H to Regulation Z. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)) This requirement, however, does not preclude creditors and servicers from modifying the disclosures to accommodate particular consumer circumstances or transactions not addressed by the form or from adjusting the statement required by 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(A), concerning consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, to the circumstances of the particular consumer. (Comment 20(e)(4)-3).

Successors In Interest – 12 CFR 1026.20(f) (Effective April 19, 2018)

If, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.20(c) (rate adjustments with corresponding change in payment), 12 CFR 1026.20(d) (initial rate adjustment), and 12 CFR 1026.20(e) (escrow account cancellation notice), unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under State law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv) and the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked such acknowledgement form.

Treatment of Credit Balances – 12 CFR 1026.21

When a credit balance in excess of $1 is created in connection with a transaction (through transmittal of funds to a creditor in excess of the total balance due on an account, through rebates of unearned finance charges or insurance premiums, or through amounts otherwise owed to or held for the benefit of a consumer), the creditor is required to:

- Credit the amount of the credit balance to the consumer’s account;
- Refund any part of the remaining credit balance, upon the written request of the consumer; and
- Make a good faith effort to refund to the consumer by cash, check, or money order, or credit to a deposit account of the consumer, any part of the credit balance remaining in the account for more than 6 months, except that no further action is required if the consumer’s current location is not known to the creditor and cannot be traced through the consumer’s last known address or telephone number.

Closed-end Advertising – 12 CFR 1026.24

If an advertisement for credit states specific credit terms, it must state only those terms that actually are or will be arranged or offered by the creditor.

Disclosures required by this section must be made “clearly and conspicuously.” To meet this standard in general, credit terms need not be printed in a certain type size nor appear in any particular place in the advertisement. For advertisements for credit secured by a dwelling, a clear and conspicuous disclosure means that the required information is disclosed with equal prominence and in close proximity to the advertised rates or payments triggering the required disclosures.

If an advertisement states a rate of finance charge, it must state the rate as an “annual percentage rate,” using that term. If the APR may be increased after consummation, the advertisement must state that fact.

If an advertisement is for credit not secured by a dwelling, the advertisement must not state any other rate, except that a simple annual rate or periodic rate that is applied to an unpaid balance may be stated in conjunction with, but not more conspicuously than, the APR.

If an advertisement is for credit secured by a dwelling, the advertisement must not state any other rate, except that a simple annual rate that is applied to an unpaid balance may not state a periodic rate, other than a simple annual rate, that is applied to an unpaid balance.

“Triggering terms” – The following are triggering terms that require additional disclosures:

- The amount or percentage of any down payment;
- The number of payments or period of repayment;
- The amount of any payment; and
- The amount of any finance charge.

An advertisement stating a triggering term must also state the following terms as applicable:

- The amount or percentage of any down payment;
- The terms of repayment, which reflect the repayment obligations over the full term of the loan, including any balloon payment; and
- The “annual percentage rate,” using that term, and, if the rate may be increased after consummation, that fact.

For any advertisement secured by a dwelling, other than television or radio advertisements, that states a simple annual rate of interest and more than one simple annual rate of interest will apply over the term of the advertised loan, the advertisement must state in a clear and conspicuous manner:

- Each simple rate of interest that will apply. In variable-rate transactions, a rate determined by adding an index and margin must be disclosed based on a reasonably current index and margin.
- The period of time during which each simple annual rate of interest will apply.
- The APR for the loan.

The regulation prohibits the following seven deceptive or misleading acts or practices in advertisements for closed-end mortgage loans:

- Stating that rates or payments for loans are “fixed” when those rates or payments can vary without adequately disclosing that the interest rate or payment amounts are “fixed” only for a limited period of time, rather than for the full term of the loan;
- Making comparisons between actual or hypothetical credit payments or rates and any payment or rate available under the advertised product that are not available for the full term of the loan, with certain exceptions for advertisements for variable rate products;
- Characterizing the products offered as “government loan programs,” “government-supported loans,” or otherwise endorsed or sponsored by a federal or state government entity even though the advertised products are not government-supported or -sponsored loans;
- Displaying the name of the consumer’s current mortgage lender, unless the advertisement also prominently discloses that the advertisement is from a mortgage lender not affiliated with the consumer’s current lender;
- Making claims of debt elimination if the product advertised would merely replace one debt obligation with another;
- Creating a false impression that the mortgage broker or lender is a “counselor” for the consumer; and
- In foreign-language advertisements, providing certain information, such as a low introductory “teaser” rate, in a foreign language, while providing required disclosures only in English.

Subpart D – Miscellaneous

Subpart D contains rules on oral disclosures (12 CFR 1026.26), disclosures in languages other than English (12 CFR 1026.27), record retention (12 CFR 1026.25), effect on state laws (12 CFR 1026.28), state exemptions (12 CFR 1026.29), and rate limitations (12 CFR 1026.30).
V. Lending — TILA

Record Retention – 12 CFR 1026.25

As a general rule, the creditor must retain evidence of compliance with Regulation Z (other than advertising requirements under 12 CFR 1026.16 and 12 CFR 1026.24, and other than certain requirements for mortgage loans) for two years after the date disclosures are required to be made or action is required to be taken. (12 CFR 1026.25(a)) This includes, for example, evidence that the creditor properly handled adverse credit reports in connection with amounts subject to a billing dispute under 12 CFR 1026.13, and properly handled the refunding of credit balances under 12 CFR 1026.11 and 12 CFR 1026.21. The creditor may retain the evidence by any method that reproduces records accurately (including computer programs) (Comment 25(a)-2). A creditor must permit the enforcing agency to inspect its relevant records for compliance. (12 CFR 1026.25(b))

The record retention period for mortgage loans is generally three years. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)) A creditor must retain evidence of compliance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) for three years after the later of the date of consummation, the date disclosures are required to be made, or the date the action is required to be taken. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(i))

For Closing Disclosures, the record retention period is five years. The creditor must retain completed closing disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) or (f)(4)(i), and all documents related to such disclosures, for five years after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(ii)(A)) If a creditor sells, transfers, or otherwise disposes of its interest in a mortgage loan subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) and does not service the mortgage loan, the creditor must provide a copy of the closing disclosures to the owner or servicer of the mortgage, and the new owner or servicer must retain such disclosures for the remainder of the five-year period.

For loan originator compensation, creditors and loan originator organizations must retain records-related requirements for mortgage loan originator compensation and the compensation agreement that governs those payments for three years after the date of payment. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2))

A creditor must retain evidence to show compliance with the minimum standards for loans secured by a dwelling in 12 CFR 1026.43 for three years after consummation of a transaction covered by that section. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(3))

Relationship to State Law – TILA 111 and 12 CFR 1026.28, .29

State laws providing rights, responsibilities, or procedures for consumers or financial institutions for consumer credit contracts may be:

- Not preempted by federal law; or
- Substituted in lieu of the TILA and Regulation Z requirements.

State law provisions are preempted to the extent that they contradict the requirements in the following chapters of the TILA and the implementing sections of Regulation Z:

- Chapter 1, “General Provisions,” which contains definitions and acceptable methods for determining finance charges and annual percentage rates.
- Chapter 2, “Credit Transactions,” which contains disclosure requirements, rescission rights, and certain credit card provisions.
- Chapter 3, “Credit Advertising,” which contains consumer credit advertising rules and APR oral disclosure requirements.

For example, a state law would be preempted if it required a bank to use the terms “nominal annual interest rate” in lieu of “annual percentage rate.”

Conversely, state law provisions are generally not preempted under federal law if they call for, without contradicting chapters 1, 2, or 3 of the TILA or the implementing sections of Regulation Z, either of the following:

- Disclosure of information not otherwise required. A state law that requires disclosure of the minimum periodic payment for open-end credit, for example, would not be preempted because it does not contradict federal law.
- Disclosures more detailed than those required. A state law that requires itemization of the amount financed, for example, would not be preempted, unless it contradicts federal law by requiring the itemization to appear with the disclosure of the amount financed in the segregated closed-end credit disclosures.

The relationship between state law and chapter 4 of the TILA (“Credit Billing”) involves two parts. The first part is concerned with sections 161 (correction of billing errors) and 162 (regulation of credit reports) of the TILA; the second part addresses the remaining sections of chapter 4.

State law provisions are preempted if they differ from the rights, responsibilities, or procedures contained in sections 161 or 162. An exception is made, however, for state law that allows a consumer to inquire about an account and requires the bank to respond to such inquiry beyond the time limits provided by federal law. Such a state law would not be preempted for the extra time period.

State law provisions are preempted if they result in violations of sections 163 through 171 of chapter 4. For example, a state law that allows the card issuer to offset the consumer’s credit-card indebtedness against funds held by the card issuer would be preempted, since it would violate 12 CFR 1026.12(d).

Conversely, a state law that requires periodic statements to be sent more than 14 days before the end of a free-ride period would not be preempted, since no violation of federal law is involved.

A bank, state, or other interested party may ask the CFPB to determine whether state law contradicts chapters 1 through 3 of the TILA or Regulation Z. They also may ask if the state law is different from, or would result in violations of, chapter 4 of the TILA and the implementing provisions of Regulation Z. If the CFPB determines that a disclosure required by state law (other than a requirement relating to the finance charge, APR, or the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.32) is substantially the same in meaning as a disclosure required under the TILA or Regulation Z, generally creditors in that state may make the state disclosure in lieu of the federal disclosure.

Subpart E – Special Rules for Certain Home Mortgage Transactions

Subpart E contains special rules for mortgage transactions. 12 CFR 1026.32 requires certain disclosures and provides limitations for closed-end credit transactions and open-end credit plans that have rates or fees above specified amounts or certain prepayment penalties. 12 CFR 1026.33 requires special disclosures, including the total annual loan cost rate, for reverse mortgage transactions. 12 CFR 1026.34 prohibits specific acts and practices in connection with high-cost mortgages, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a). 12 CFR 1026.35 provides requirements for higher-priced mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1026.36 prohibits specific acts and practices in connection with an extension of credit secured by a dwelling. 12 CFR 1026.37 and 12 CFR 1026.38 set forth disclosure requirements for most closed-end transactions secured by real property, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f).

General Rules – 12 CFR 1026.31

The requirements and limitations of this subpart are in addition to, and not in lieu of, those contained in other subparts of Regulation Z. The disclosures for high-cost, reverse mortgage, and higher-priced mortgage transactions must be made clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep and in compliance with specific timing requirements.

Requirements for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32

The requirements of this section generally apply to a high-cost mortgage, which is a consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling (subject to the exemptions discussed below) that meets any one of the following three coverage tests.

- The APR will exceed the average prime offer rate (APOR), as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a)(2), applicable for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by:
  - More than 6.5 percentage points for first-lien transactions (other than as described below);
  - More than 8.5 percentage points for first-lien transactions where the dwelling is personal property and the loan amount is less than $50,000; or
  - More than 8.5 percentage points for subordinate-lien transactions.
- The total points and fees (see definition below) for the transaction will exceed:
  - For transactions with a loan amount of $20,000 or more, 5 percent of the total loan amount, with the loan amount to be adjusted annually on January 1st by the annual percentage change in the Consumer Price Index reported on the preceding June 1st; or
  - For transactions with a loan amount of less than $20,000, the lesser of 8 percent of the total transaction amount or $1,000, with the loan amount to be adjusted annually on January 1st by the annual percentage change in the Consumer Price Index reported on the preceding June 1st.

The adjusted loan amounts will be reflected in official interpretations of 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii). The official interpretation of 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii) also contains a historical list of dollar amount adjustments for transactions originated prior to January 10, 2014.

NOTE: The “total loan amount” (using the face amount of the note) for closed-end credit is calculated by taking the amount financed (see 12 CFR 1026.18(b)) and deducting any cost listed in 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(iii), (iv), or (vi) that is both included in points and fees and financed by the creditor. The “total loan amount” for open-end credit is the credit plan limit when the account is opened.

- The terms of the loan contract or open-end credit agreement permit the creditor to charge a prepayment penalty (see definition below) more than 36 months after consummation or account opening, or prepayment penalties that exceed more than two percent of the amount prepaid (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(iii)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.32(d)(6) prohibits prepayment penalties for high-cost mortgages. However, if a mortgage loan has a prepayment penalty that may be imposed more than 36 months after consummation or account opening or that is greater than two percent of the amount prepaid, the loan is a high-cost mortgage regardless of interest rate or fees. Therefore, the prepayment penalty coverage test above effectively bans transactions of the types subject to HOEPA coverage that permit creditors to charge prepayment penalties that exceed the prescribed limits.

Exemptions from HOEPA Coverage – 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(2)

- Reverse mortgage transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.33;
- A transaction that finances the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A transaction originated by a Housing Finance Agency, where the Housing Finance Agency is the creditor for the transaction; or
- A transaction originated pursuant to the United States Department of Agriculture’s Rural Development Section 502 Direct Loan Program.

Determination of APR for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)

The APR used to determine whether a mortgage is a high-cost mortgage is calculated differently than the APR that is used on TILA disclosures. Specifically, the APR for HOEPA coverage is based on the following:

- If the APR will not vary during the length of the loan or credit plan (i.e., for fixed-rate transactions), the interest rate in effect as of the date the interest rate for the transaction is set (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(i));
- If the interest rate may vary during the term of the loan or credit plan in accordance with an index, the interest rate that results from adding the maximum margin permitted at any time during the term of the loan or credit plan to the index rate in effect as of the date the interest rate for the transaction is set, or to the introductory interest rate, whichever is greater (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(ii)); or
- If the interest rate may or will vary during the term of the loan or credit plan other than as described above (i.e., as in a step-rate transaction), the maximum interest rate that may be imposed during the life of the loan or credit plan. (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(iii))

Points and Fees for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32(b)

NOTE: Points and fees calculations for high-cost mortgages depend upon whether the transaction is closed end or open end.

For a closed-end transaction, calculate the points and fees by including the following charges (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)):

- All items included in the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4(a) and (b), except that the following items are excluded:
  - Interest or the time-price differential;
- Any premiums or other charges imposed in connection with a federal or state agency program for any guaranty or insurance that protects the creditor against the consumer’s default or other credit loss (i.e., up-front and annual Federal Housing Administration (FHA) premiums, U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) funding fees, and USDA guarantee fees);
- Premiums or other charges for any guaranty or insurance that protects creditors against the consumer’s default or other credit loss and IS NOT in connection with a federal or state agency program (i.e., private mortgage insurance (PMI) premiums) as follows:
  - The entire amount of any premiums or other charges payable after consummation (i.e., monthly or annual PMI premiums); or
  - If the premium or other charge is payable at or before consummation, the portion of any such premium or other charge that is not in excess of the permissible up-front mortgage insurance premium for FHA loans, but only if the premium or charge is refundable on a pro rata basis and the refund is automatically issued upon the notification of the satisfaction of the underlying mortgage loan. The permissible up-front mortgage insurance premiums for FHA loans are published in HUD Mortgagee Letters, available online at: http://portal.hud.gov/hudportal/HUD?src=/program_offices/administration/hudclips/letters/mortgage.
- Bona fide third-party charges not retained by the creditor, loan originator, or an affiliate of either, unless the charge is required to be included under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i)(C), (iii), or (v);
- Up to two bona fide discount points payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
  - The APOR for a comparable transaction by more than one percentage point; or
  - If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than one percentage point, or
- If no discount points have been excluded above, then up to one bona fide discount point payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
• The APOR for a comparable transaction by more than two percentage points; or

• If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than two percentage points.

NOTE: In the case of a closed-end plan, a bona fide discount point means an amount equal to one percent of the loan amount paid by the consumer that reduces the interest rate or time-price differential applicable to the transaction based on a calculation that is consistent with established industry practices for determining the amount of reduction in the interest rate or time-price differential appropriate for the amount of discount points paid by the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(3))

• All compensation paid directly or indirectly by a consumer or creditor to a loan originator (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1) that can be attributed to the transaction at the time the interest rate is set unless:
  o That compensation is paid by a consumer to a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), and already has been included in points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i);
  o That compensation is paid by a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), to a loan originator that is an employee of the mortgage broker;
  o That compensation is paid by a creditor to a loan originator that is an employee of the creditor; or

• All items listed in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(7), other than amounts held for future taxes, unless ALL of the following conditions are met:
  o The charge is reasonable;
  o The creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the charge; and o The charge is not paid to an affiliate of the creditor.

• Premiers or other charges paid at or before consummation, whether paid in cash or financed, for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or for any other life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance for which the creditor is a beneficiary, or any payments directly or indirectly for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract.

• The maximum prepayment penalty that may be charged or collected under the terms of the mortgage or credit plan; and

• The total prepayment penalty incurred by the consumer if the consumer refinances an existing mortgage loan, or terminates an existing open-end credit plan in connection with obtaining a new mortgage loan, with a new mortgage transaction extended by the current holder of the existing loan, a servicer acting on behalf of the current holder, or an affiliate of either.

For an open-end credit plan, points and fees mean the following charges that are known at or before account opening: (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2))

• All items included in the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4(a) and (b), except that the following items are excluded:
  o Interest or the time-price differential;
  o Any premiums or other charges imposed in connection with a federal or state agency program for any guaranty or insurance that protects creditors against the consumer’s default or other credit loss (i.e., up-front and annual FHA premiums, VA funding fees, and USDA guarantee fees);
  o Premiums or other charges for any guaranty or insurance that protects creditors against the consumer’s default or other credit loss and IS NOT in connection with a federal or state agency program (i.e., private mortgage insurance (PMI) premiums) as follows:
    o If the premium or other charge is payable after account opening, the entire amount of such premium or other charge, or o If the premium or other charge is payable at or before account opening, the portion of any such premium or other charge that is not in excess of the permissible up-front mortgage insurance premium for FHA loans, but only if the premium or charge is refundable on a pro rata basis and the refund is automatically issued upon the notification of the satisfaction of the underlying mortgage loan.

  The permissible up-front mortgage insurance premiums for FHA loans are published in HUD Mortgagee Letters, available online at: http://portal.hud.gov/hudportal/HUD?src=/program_offices/administration/hudclips/letters/mortgagee o Bona fide third-party charges not retained by the creditor, loan originator, or an affiliate of either, unless the charge is required to be included under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)(i)(C), (iii), or (iv);
  o Up to two bona fide discount points payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
• The APOR by more than one percentage point; or
• If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than one percentage point, or o If no discount points have been excluded above, then up to one bona fide discount point payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
  • The APOR by more than two percentage points; or
  • If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than two percentage points.

NOTE: A bona fide discount point means an amount equal to one percent of the credit limit when the account is opened, paid by the consumer, that reduces the interest rate or time-price differential applicable to the transaction based on a calculation that is consistent with established industry practices for determining the amount of reduction in the interest rate or time-price differential appropriate for the amount of discount points paid by the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(3)(ii))

• All compensation paid directly or indirectly by a consumer or creditor to a loan originator (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1) that can be attributed to the transaction at the time the interest rate is set unless:
  o That compensation is paid by a consumer to a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2) and already has been included in points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.33(b)(2)(i);
  o That compensation is paid by a mortgage broker as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2) to a loan originator that is an employee of the mortgage broker; or
  o That compensation is paid by a creditor to a loan originator that is an employee of the creditor, or o That compensation is paid by a retailer of manufactured homes to its employee.

NOTE: A person is not a loan originator if the person does not take a consumer credit application or offer or negotiate credit terms available from a creditor to that consumer based on the consumer’s financial characteristics, but the person performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who does engage in such activities. An employee of a manufactured home retailer who does not take a consumer credit application, offer or negotiate credit terms, or advise a consumer on credit terms is not a loan originator. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(a), “credit terms” include rates, fees or other costs, and a consumer’s financial characteristics include any factors that may influence a credit decision, such as debts, income, assets or credit history.

• All items listed in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(7), other than amounts held for future taxes, unless ALL of the following conditions are met:
  o The charge is reasonable;

• Premiums or other charges paid at or before account opening for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or for any other life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance for which the creditor is a beneficiary, or any payments directly or indirectly for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract.

• The maximum prepayment penalty that may be charged or collected under the terms of the credit plan; and
• The total prepayment penalty incurred by the consumer if the consumer refinances an existing closed-end credit transaction with an open-end credit plan, or terminates an existing open-end credit plan in connection with obtaining a new open-end credit with the current holder of the existing transaction or plan, a servicer acting on behalf of the current holder, or an affiliate of either.

In addition to the charges listed above, points and fees for open-end credit plans also include the following items:

• Fees charged for participation in the credit plan, payable at or before account opening, as described in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(4), and

• Any transaction fee that will be charged to draw funds on the credit line, as described in 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)(viii).

Prepayment Penalty Definition – 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(6)

For closed-end credit transactions, a prepayment penalty is a charge imposed for paying all or part of the transaction’s principal before the date on which the principal is due with limited exceptions.

For open-end credit plans, a prepayment penalty is a charge imposed by the creditor if the consumer terminates the credit plan prior to the end of its term.
NOTE: Waived, bona fide third-party charges that are later imposed if the closed-end transaction is prepaid or the consumer terminates the open-end credit plan sooner than 36 months after consummation or account opening are not considered prepayment penalties.

NOTE: For closed-end transactions insured by the Federal Housing Administration and consummated before January 21, 2015, interest charged consistent with the monthly interest accrual amortization method is not a prepayment penalty, so long as the interest is charged consistent with the monthly interest accrual amortization method used for those loans. See Comment 32(b)(6)-1(iv).

High-Cost Mortgage Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.32(c)

In addition to the other disclosure requirements of Regulation Z, high-cost mortgages require certain additional information to be disclosed in conspicuous type size to consumers before consummation of the transaction or account opening. These disclosures include:

- Notice to the consumer using the required language in 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(1);

- The annual percentage rate (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(2));

- Specified information concerning the regular or minimum periodic payment and the amount of any balloon payment, if permitted under the high-cost mortgage limitations in 12 CFR 1026.32(d) (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3))

- For variable-rate transactions, a statement that the interest and monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment based on the maximum interest rate required to be included in the contract (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(4)) and

- The total amount borrowed for closed-end credit transactions or the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened for an open-end credit plan. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5))

NOTE: For closed-end credit transactions, if the amount borrowed includes charges to be financed under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10), this fact must be stated, grouped together with the disclosure of amount borrowed. The disclosure of the amount borrowed will be treated as accurate if it is not more than $100 above or below the amount required to be disclosed.

High-Cost Mortgage Limitations – 12 CFR 1026.32(d)

Certain loan terms, including negative amortization, interest rate increases after default, and prepayment penalties are prohibited for high-cost mortgages. Others, including balloon payments and due-on-demand clauses, are restricted.

- Balloon payments, defined as payments that are more than two times a regular periodic payment, are generally prohibited for high-cost mortgages. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(i)) However, balloon payments are allowed in certain limited circumstances.

  o For closed-end transactions, balloon payments are permitted when (a) the loan has a payment schedule that is adjusted to seasonal or irregular income of the consumer; (b) the loan is a “bridge” loan made in connection with the purchase of a new dwelling and matures in 12 months or less; (c) the creditor is a small creditor operating in a rural or underserved area that meets the criteria set forth in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) for small creditor rural or underserved balloon-payment qualified mortgages; or, (d) until April 1, 2016, the creditor is a small creditor that meets the criteria set forth in 1026.43(e)(6)) for temporary balloon-payment qualified mortgages. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(iii))

  o For an open-end credit plan where the terms of the plan provide for a draw period where no payment is required, followed by a repayment period where no further draws may be taken, the initial payment required after conversion to the repayment phase of the credit plan is not considered a “balloon” payment. However, if the terms of an open-end credit plan do not provide for a separate draw period and repayment period, the balloon payment limitation applies. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(iii))

- Acceleration clauses or demand features are limited and may only permit creditors to accelerate and demand repayment of the entire outstanding balance of a high-cost mortgage if:

  o There is fraud or material misrepresentation by the consumer in connection with the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(i));

  o The consumer fails to meet the repayment terms of the agreement for any outstanding balance that results in a default on the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(ii)); or

  o There is any action (or inaction) by the consumer that adversely affects the rights of the creditor’s security interest for the loan, such as the consumer failing to pay required taxes on the property. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(iii) and comments 32(d)(8)(iii)-1 and -2)

Prohibited Acts or Practices in Connection with High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.34

In addition to the requirements in 12 CFR 1026.32, Regulation Z imposes additional requirements for high-cost mortgages, several of which are discussed below.
V. Lending — TILA

Refinancing Within One Year — 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3)
A creditor or assignee cannot refinance a consumer’s high-cost mortgage into a second high-cost mortgage within the first year of the origination of the first loan, unless the second high-cost mortgage is in the consumer’s interest.

Among other requirements, a creditor extending high-cost mortgage credit subject to 12 CFR 1026.32 must not make such loans without regard to the consumer’s repayment ability as of consummation or account opening as applicable. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4))

For closed-end credit transactions that are high-cost mortgages, 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4) requires a creditor to comply with the repayment ability requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.43.

For open-end credit plans that are high-cost mortgages, a creditor may not open a credit plan for a consumer where credit is or will be extended without regard to the consumer’s repayment ability as of account opening, including the consumer’s current and reasonably expected income, employment, assets other than the collateral, and current obligations, including any mortgage-related obligations.

- For the purposes of these open-end requirements, mortgage-related obligations include, among other things, property taxes, premiums and fees for mortgage-related insurance that are required by the creditor, fees and special assessments such as those imposed by a condominium association, and similar expenses required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening and secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage transaction. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(i))

- A creditor must also verify both current obligations and the amounts of income or assets that it relies on to determine repayment ability using W-2s, tax returns, payroll receipts, financial institution records, or other third-party documents that provide reasonably reliable evidence of the consumer’s income or assets (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(ii)).

For open-end high-cost mortgages, a presumption of compliance is available but only if the creditor:

- Verifies the consumer’s repayment ability as required under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(ii));

- Determines the consumer’s repayment ability taking into account current obligations and mortgage-related obligations, using the largest required minimum periodic payment based on the assumptions that:
  - The consumer makes only required minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period; and
  - If the APR can increase, the maximum APR that is included in the contract applies to the plan at account opening and will apply during the draw and any repayment period. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(iii)(B))

- Assesses the consumer’s repayment ability, taking into account either the ratio of total debts to income or the income the consumer will have after paying current obligations. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(iii)(C))

- NOTE: No presumption of compliance will be available for an open-end high-cost mortgage transaction in which the regular periodic payments, when aggregated, do not fully amortize the outstanding principal balance except for transactions with balloon payments permitted under 12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(ii).

High-Cost Mortgage Pre-Loan Counseling — 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)

Creditors that originate high-cost mortgages must receive written certification that the consumer has obtained counseling on the advisability of the mortgage from a counselor approved by HUD, or if permitted by HUD, a state housing finance authority (specific content for the certifications can be found in 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)(iv)). Counseling must occur after the consumer receives a good faith estimate or initial TILA disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.40 (or, for transactions where neither of those disclosures are provided, the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.32(c)). Additionally, counseling cannot be provided by a counselor who is employed by, or affiliated with, the creditor. A creditor may pay the fees for counseling but is prohibited from conditioning the payment of fees upon the consummation of the mortgage transaction or, if the consumer withdraws his or her application, upon receipt of the certification. However, a creditor may confirm that a counselor provided counseling to the consumer prior to paying these fees. Finally, a creditor is prohibited from steering a consumer to a particular counselor.

Recommended Default — 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(6)

Creditors (and mortgage brokers) are prohibited from recommending or encouraging a consumer to default on an existing loan or other debt prior to, and in connection with, the consummation or account opening of a high-cost mortgage that refinances all or any portion of the existing loan or debt.

Loan Modification and Deferral Fees — 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(7)

Creditors, successors-in-interest, assignees, or any agents of these parties may not charge a consumer any fee to modify, renew, extend, or amend a high-cost mortgage, or to defer any payment due under the terms of the mortgage.

Late Fees – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)

Late payment charges for a high-cost mortgage must be permitted by the terms of the loan contract or open-end agreement and may not exceed four percent of the amount of the payment that is past due. Late payment charges are permitted only if payment is not received by the end of the 15-day period beginning on the day the payment is due or, where interest on each installment is paid in advance, by the end of the 30-day period beginning on the day the payment is due.

Creditors are also prohibited from “pyramiding” late fees—that is, charging late payments if any delinquency is attributable only to a late payment charge that was imposed due to a previous late payment, and the payment otherwise is considered a full payment for the applicable period (and any allowable grace period). If a consumer fails to make a timely payment by the due date, then subsequently resumes making payments but has not paid all past due payments, the creditor can continue to impose late payment charges for the payments outstanding until the default is cured.

Fees for Payoff Statements – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)

A creditor or servicer may not charge a fee for providing consumers (or authorized representatives) with a payoff statement on a high-cost mortgage. Payoff statements must be provided to consumers within five business days after receiving the request for a statement. A creditor or servicer may charge a processing fee to cover the cost of providing the payoff statement by fax or courier only, provided that such fee may not exceed an amount that is comparable to fees imposed for similar services provided in connection with a non-high-cost mortgage and that a payoff statement be made available to the consumer by an alternative method without charge. If a creditor charges a fee for providing a payoff statement by fax or courier, the creditor must disclose the fee prior to charging the consumer and must disclose to the consumer that other methods for providing the payoff statement are available at no cost. Finally, a creditor is permitted to charge a consumer a reasonable fee for additional payoff statements during a calendar year in which four payoff statements have already been provided without charge other than permitted processing fees.

Reverse Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.33

A reverse mortgage is a non-recourse transaction secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling that ties repayment (other than upon default) to the homeowner’s death or permanent move from, or transfer of the title of, the home. Special disclosure requirements apply to reverse mortgages.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1026.35(a)

A mortgage loan subject to 12 CFR 1026.35 (higher-priced mortgage loan) is a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling with an APR that exceeds the average prime offer rate for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by:

- 1.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a first lien on a dwelling where the amount of the principal obligation at the time of consummation does not exceed the maximum principal obligation eligible for purchase by Freddie Mac;
- 2.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a first lien on a dwelling, where the amount of the principal obligation at the time of consummation exceeds the maximum principal obligation eligible for purchase by Freddie Mac; or
- 3.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a subordinate lien on a dwelling.

Average prime offer rate means an APR that is derived from average interest rates, points, and other loan pricing terms currently offered to consumers by a representative sample of creditors for mortgage transactions that have low-risk pricing characteristics. The CFPB publishes average prime offer rates for a broad range of types of transactions in a table updated at least weekly, as well as the methodology it uses to derive these rates. These rates are available on the website of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC).

Additionally, creditors extending mortgage loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.43(c) must verify a consumer’s ability to repay as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c).

Finally, the regulation prohibits creditors from structuring a home-secured loan that does not meet the definition of open-end credit as an open-end plan to evade these requirements.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans Escrow Requirement – 12 CFR 1026.35(b)

In general, a creditor may not extend a higher-priced mortgage loan (including high-cost mortgages that also meet the definition of a higher-priced mortgage loan), secured by a first lien on a principal dwelling unless an escrow account is established before consummation for payment of property taxes and premiums for mortgage-related insurance required by the creditor.

An escrow account for a higher-priced mortgage loan need not be established for:

- a transaction secured by shares in a cooperative,
- a transaction to finance the initial construction of a dwelling.
3. Together, with its affiliates that regularly extended \textsuperscript{22} covered transactions (secured by first liens), must have had less than $2 billion in total assets \textsuperscript{23} as of the preceding December 31st (or if an application was received before April 1 of the current year, as of either of the two preceding December 31st), and

4. The creditor and its affiliates must not maintain escrow accounts for any extensions of consumer credit secured by real property or a dwelling that it or its affiliate currently services. However, such creditors (and their affiliates) are permitted to maintain escrow accounts established to comply with the rule for applications received on or after April 1, 2010, and before May 1, 2016 without losing the exemption and to offer an escrow account to accommodate distressed borrowers.

For first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans originated by a creditor that would not be required to establish an escrow account based on the above exemption, if that creditor has obtained a commitment for a higher-priced mortgage loan to be acquired by another company that is not eligible for the exemption, an escrow account must be established. Since an escrow account will be established for this loan, however, note that if the creditor that has obtained a commitment for the higher-priced mortgage loan to be acquired by a non-exempt company would like to remain eligible for the exemption above, neither the creditor nor its affiliates can service the loan on or beyond the second periodic payment under the terms of the loan.

A creditor or servicer may cancel an escrow account only upon the earlier of termination of the underlying loan, or a cancellation request from the consumer five years or later after consummation. However, a creditor or servicer is not permitted to cancel an escrow account, even upon request from the consumer, unless the unpaid principal balance of the higher-priced mortgage loan is less than 80 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan and the consumer is not currently delinquent or in default on the loan. (12 CFR \textsuperscript{22} See Comment 35(b)(2)(iii)-1.ii for discussion of "regularly extended" as it applies to affiliates in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(C).

\textsuperscript{23} The asset threshold is adjusted automatically each year, based on the year-to-year change in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers.

\textsuperscript{21} The regulation defines these two terms in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A) and (B). A rural area is a county that is neither in a metropolitan statistical area or a micropolitan statistical area that is adjacent to a metropolitan statistical area; or a census block that has not been designated as "rural" by the CFPB pursuant to the application process established in 2016. See Application Process for Designation of Rural Area under Federal Consumer Financial Law; Procedural Rule, 81 FR 11099 (Mar. 3, 2016). The provisions related to the application process ceased to have any force or effect on December 4, 2017. 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A)(3). An underserved area is a county defined by using HMDA data for the preceding year to determine whether it is a county in which no more than two creditors extended covered transactions secured by first liens on properties in the county five or more times. A property is in a rural or underserved area for a particular year if it is listed as a rural or underserved county by the CFPB, is identified as in a rural or underserved area by any automated tool on the Bureau’s website or is not designated as located in an urban area in the most recent delineation of urban areas announced by the Census Bureau by any automated address search tool that the Census Bureau provides on its public website for that purpose.
1026.35(b)(3))

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans Appraisal Requirement

– 12 CFR 1026.35(c)

General Requirements, Exception, and Safe Harbor

A creditor may not extend a higher-priced mortgage loan without first obtaining a written appraisal of the property to be mortgaged. The appraisal must be performed by a state-certified or licensed appraiser (defined in part as an appraiser who conducts the appraisal in conformity with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice (USPAP) and the requirements applicable to appraisers in Title IX of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA) and its implementing regulations). The appraisal must include a physical visit of the interior of the dwelling. The appraisal requirements do not apply to:

- Qualified mortgages (QM) under 12 CFR 1026.43 or under rules on qualified mortgages adopted by HUD or VA, or, if promulgated, by USDA or Rural Housing Service (RHS), including mortgages that meet the QM criteria for these rules and are insured, guaranteed, or administered by those agencies;
- An extension of credit equal to or less than the applicable threshold amount that is published in the official staff commentary to the regulation, which is adjusted every year as applicable to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers;
- A transaction secured by a mobile home, boat, or trailer;
- A transaction to finance the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A loan with maturity of 12 months or less, if the purpose of the loan is a “bridge” loan connected with the acquisition of a dwelling intended to become the consumer’s principal dwelling;
- A reverse mortgage transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.33(a)
- A refinancing secured by a first lien, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.20(a) (except that the creditor need not be the original creditor or a holder or servicer of the original obligation), provided that the refinancing meets the following criteria:
  - The credit risk of the refinancing is retained by the person that held the credit risk of the existing obligation and there is no commitment, at consummation, to transfer the credit risk to another person; or, the refinancing is insured or guaranteed by the same Federal government agency that insured or guaranteed the existing obligation;
  - The regular periodic payments under the refinance loan do not:
    - Cause the principal balance to increase;
    - Allow the consumer to defer repayment of principal; or
    - Result in a balloon payment, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(5)(i).
- The proceeds from the refinancing are used solely to satisfy the existing obligation and amounts attributed solely to the costs of the refinancing.
- A transaction secured by a manufactured home under the following conditions:
  - If the transaction is for a new manufactured home and land, the exemption shall only apply to the requirement that the appraiser conduct a physical visit of the interior of the new manufactured home.
  - If the transaction is for a manufactured home and not land, for which the creditor obtains one of the following and provides a copy to the consumer no later than three business days prior to consummation of the transaction:
    - For a new manufactured home, the manufacturer's invoice for the manufactured home securing the transaction, provided that the date of manufacture is no earlier than 18 months prior to the creditor's receipt of the consumer's application for credit;
    - A cost estimate of the value of the manufactured home obtained from an independent cost service provider; or
    - A valuation, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(b)(3), of the manufactured home performed by a person who has no direct or indirect interest, financial or otherwise, in the property or transaction for which the valuation is performed and has training in valuing manufactured homes.

24 The higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal requirement was adopted pursuant to an interagency rulemaking conducted by the Board, the CFPB, the FDIC, FHFA, NCUA, and OCC. The Board codified the rule at 12 CFR 226.43, and the OCC codified the rule at 12 CFR Part 34 and 12 CFR Part 164. There is no substantive difference among these three sets of rules.

25 From January 1, 2015, through December 31, 2015, the threshold amount was $25,500. See Comment 35(c)(2)(ii) – 3. Effective January 1, 2019, to December 31, 2019, the threshold is $26,700.

26 Prior to July 18, 2015, appraisal requirements do not apply to transactions secured in whole or in part by a manufactured home (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2)). This section describes how the exemption will work under an amendment to the rule that takes effect on July 18, 2015.
A creditor may obtain a safe harbor for compliance with 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii) by ordering that the appraisal be completed in conformity with USPAP and the requirements applicable to appraisers in Title IX of FIRREA and its implementing regulations, verifying that the appraiser is certified or licensed through the National Registry; and confirming that the written appraisal contains the elements listed in Appendix N of Regulation Z. In addition, the creditor must have no actual knowledge that the facts or certifications contained in the appraisal are inaccurate (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)).

Additional Appraisals

The appraisal provisions in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) also require creditors to obtain an additional written appraisal before extending a higher-priced mortgage loan in two instances:

- First, when the dwelling that is securing the higher-priced mortgage loan was acquired by the seller 90 or fewer days prior to the consumer’s agreement to purchase the property and the price of the property has increased by more than 10 percent.
- Additionally, when the dwelling was acquired by the seller between 91 and 180 prior to the consumer’s agreement to purchase the property, and the price of the property has increased by more than 20 percent.

A creditor must obtain an additional interior appraisal meeting the same requirements as the first appraisal (written report by a certified or licensed appraiser in compliance with USPAP and FIRREA based upon an interior property visit), unless the creditor can demonstrate, by exercising reasonable diligence, that the circumstances necessitating an additional appraisal do not apply. A creditor can meet the reasonable diligence requirement if it bases its determination on information contained in certain written source documents (such as a copy of the seller’s recorded deed or a copy of a property tax bill). See Appendix O of Regulation Z. If, after exercising reasonable diligence, the creditor is unable to determine whether the circumstances necessitating an additional appraisal apply, the creditor must obtain an additional appraisal.

If the creditor is required to obtain an additional written appraisal, the two required appraisals must be conducted by different appraisers. Each appraisal obtained must include a physical visit of the interior of the dwelling. In instances where two appraisals are required, creditors are allowed to charge for only one of the two appraisals.

One of the two required written appraisals must contain an analysis of the difference between the price at which the seller obtained the property and the price the consumer agreed to pay to acquire the property, an analysis of changes in market conditions between when the seller acquired the property and when the consumer agreed to purchase the property, and a review of improvements made to the property between the two dates.

The higher-priced mortgage loan additional appraisal requirements do not apply to the extension of credit that finances the acquisition of a property:

- From a local, state, or federal government agency;
- From a person who acquired title to the property through foreclosure, deed-in-lieu of foreclosure, or other similar judicial or non-judicial procedures as a result of the person’s exercise of rights as the holder of a defaulted mortgage;
- From a non-profit entity as part of a local, state, or federal government program permitted to acquire single-family properties for resale from a person who acquired title through foreclosure, deed in lieu of foreclosure, or other similar judicial or non-judicial procedures;
- From a person who acquired title to the property by inheritance or by court order as a result of a dissolution of marriage, civil union, or domestic partnership, or of partition of joint or marital assets;
- From an employer or relocation agency in connection with the relocation of an employee;
- From a servicemember who received a deployment or permanent change of station order after the servicemember purchased the property;
- Located in a federal disaster area if the requirements of Title XI of FIRREA have been waived by the federal financial institutions regulatory agencies for as long as that waiver would apply; or
- Located in a rural county as defined by the CFPB in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A).

Application Disclosures and Copy of Appraisal

Finally, creditors must provide consumers who apply for a loan covered by the appraisal requirements in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) with a disclosure providing information relating to appraisals. A creditor must provide consumers with disclosures no later than the third business day after the creditor receives an application for a higher-priced mortgage loan, or no later than the third business day after the loan requested becomes a higher-priced mortgage loan. Additionally, a creditor must provide, at no cost to the consumer, a copy of each written appraisal performed in connection with a loan covered by the appraisal requirements in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) no later than three business days prior to consummation or, if the loan will not be consummated, no later than 30 days after the creditor determines that the loan will not be consummated. 27

Prohibited Acts or Practices in Connection with Credit Secured by a Consumer’s Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.36

Loan Originator – 12 CFR 1026.36(a)

The term “loan originator” means a person who, in expectation of direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain or for direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain, performs any of the following activities:

• Takes an application, offers, arranges, assists a consumer in obtaining or applying to obtain, negotiates, or otherwise obtains or makes an extension of consumer credit for another person; or

• Through advertising or other means of communication represents to the public that such person can or will perform any of these activities.

The term “loan originator” includes an employee, agent, or contractor of the creditor or loan originator organization if the employee, agent, or contractor meets this definition. The term “loan originator” also includes a creditor that engages in loan origination activities if the creditor does not finance the transaction at consummation out of the creditor’s own resources, including by drawing on a bona fide warehouse line of credit or out of deposits held by the creditor.

The term “loan originator” does not include:

• A person who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who takes applications or offers or negotiates credit terms;

• An employee of a manufactured home retailer who does not take a consumer credit application, offer or negotiate credit terms, or advise consumers on available credit terms;

• A person that performs only real estate brokerage activity and is licensed or registered in accordance with applicable state law, unless that person is compensated by a creditor or loan originator for a consumer credit transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.36;

• A seller financer that meets the criteria established in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(4) or (a)(5); or

• A servicer, or a servicer’s employees, agents, and contractors who offer or negotiate the terms of a mortgage for the purpose of renegotiating, modifying, replacing, or subordinating principal of an existing mortgage where consumers are behind in their payments, in default, or have a reasonable likelihood of becoming delinquent or defaulting. This exception does not, however, apply to such persons if they refinance a mortgage or assign a mortgage to a different consumer.

An “individual loan originator” is a natural person who meets the definition of “loan originator.” Finally, a “loan originator organization” is any loan originator that is not an individual loan originator. A loan originator organization would include banks, thrifts, finance companies, credit unions and mortgage brokers.

Prohibited Loan Originator Compensation: Payments Based on a Term of a Transaction – 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)

With limited exceptions, loan originators cannot receive (and no person can pay directly or indirectly), compensation in connection with closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling based on a term of a transaction, the terms of multiple transactions, or the terms of multiple transactions by multiple individual loan originators. The loan originator compensation provisions do not apply to open-end home-equity lines of credit or to credit secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D).

A “term of a transaction” is any right or obligation of the parities to a credit transaction. The amount of credit extended is not a term of a transaction, provided that such compensation is based on a fixed percentage of the amount of credit extended (but may be subject to a minimum or maximum dollar amount).

NOTE: A review of whether compensation, which includes salaries, commissions, and any financial or similar incentive, is based on the terms of a transaction requires an objective analysis. If compensation would have been different if a transaction term had been different, then the compensation is prohibited. The regulation does not prevent compensating loan originators differently on different transactions, provided the difference is not based on a term of a transaction or on a proxy for a term of a transaction (a factor that consistently varies with a term or terms of the transaction over a significant number of transactions and which the loan originator has the ability to manipulate).

• An individual loan originator may receive (and a person may pay):

• Compensation in the form of a contribution to a defined contribution plan that is a designated tax-advantage plan unless the contribution is tied to the terms of the individual’s transaction(s); (12 CFR 1026.36.(d)(1)(iii))

27 Creditors may use the disclosure required under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) valuations rule to satisfy the disclosure requirements of the higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal rule for loans covered by both. After October 3, 2015, the new Loan Estimate model form appraisal language required by the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(1)(iii)) will meet the requirements of both the ECOA valuations rule (12 CFR 1002.14(a)(2)) and the higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal rule.
V. Lending — TILA

- Compensation in the form of a benefit under a defined benefit plan that is a designated tax-advantaged plan (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iii))

- Compensation under a non-deferred profits-based compensation plan provided that:
  o The compensation paid to an individual loan originator is not directly or indirectly based on the terms of the individual’s transaction(s); and o Either:
    ▪ The compensation paid to the individual loan originator does not exceed 10 percent (in aggregate) of the individual loan originator’s total compensation corresponding to the time period for which the compensation under the non-deferred profits-based compensation plan is paid; or
    ▪ The individual loan originator was the loan originator of 10 or fewer transactions during the 12 months preceding the date the compensation was determined. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iv))

For more information pertaining to permissible compensation, see the commentary to 12 CFR 1026.36(d).28

Prohibited Loan Originator Compensation: Dual Compensation – 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)

Loan originators that receive compensation directly from consumers in consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling, (except for open-end home-equity lines of credit or to loans secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan) may not receive additional compensation directly or indirectly from any other person in connection with that transaction. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(ii)(A)(J)) This prohibition includes compensation received from a third-party to the transaction to pay for some or all of the consumer’s costs. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(ii)(B)) Further, a person is prohibited from compensating a loan originator when that person “knows or has reason to know” that the consumer has paid compensation to the loan originator. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(2))

However, even if a loan originator organization receives compensation directly from a consumer, the organization can compensate the individual loan originator, subject to 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1). (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(C))

Prohibition on Steering – 12 CFR 1026.36(e)

Loan originators are prohibited from directing or “steering” consumers to loans based on the fact that the originator will receive greater compensation for the loan from the creditor than in other transactions the originator offered or could have offered to the consumer, unless the consummated transaction is in the consumer’s interest. A loan originator complies with the prohibition on steering (but not the loan originator compensation provisions) by obtaining loan options from a significant number of the creditors with which the loan originator regularly does business and, for each loan type in which the consumer has expressed interest, presenting the consumer with loan options for which the loan originator believes in good faith the consumer likely qualifies, provided that the presented loan options include all of the following:

- The loan with the lowest interest rate;
- The loan with the lowest interest rate without certain enumerated risky features (such as prepayment penalties, negative amortization, or a balloon payment in the first seven years); and
- The loan with the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees (or, if two or more loans have the same total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees, the loan with the lowest interest rate that has the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees).

The anti-steering provisions do not apply to open-end home-equity lines of credit or to loans secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan.

Loan Originator Qualification Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.36(f)

Individual loan originators and loan originator organizations must, when required under state or federal law, be registered and licensed under those laws, including the Safe and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Action of 2008 (SAFE Act).29 Loan originator organizations other than government agencies or state housing finance agencies must:

- Comply with all applicable state law requirements for legal existence and foreign qualification; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(1)); and
- Ensure that each individual loan originator who works for the loan originator organization (e.g., an employee, under a brokerage agreement) is licensed or registered to the extent the individual is required to be licensed or registered under the SAFE Act prior to acting as a loan originator in a 28 In addition to the requirements listed here, 12 CFR 1026.25(c) imposes specific record retention requirements for creditors and loan originator organizations that compensate loan originators.

29 12 CFR 1026.36(f) applies to closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling except a loan that is secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D). For purposes of 1026.36(f), a loan originator includes all creditors that engage in loan origination activities, not just those who table fund.
consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling. (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(2))

The requirements are different for loan originator organizations whose employees are not required to be licensed and are not licensed pursuant to 12 CFR 1008.103 or state SAFE Act implementing laws (including employees of depository institutions and bona fide non-profits). For their employees hired on or after January 1, 2014 (or hired before this date but not subject to any statutory or regulatory background standards at the time, or for any individual loan originators regardless of when hired that the organization believes, based on reliable information do not meet the qualification standards), loan originator employers must obtain before the individual acts as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling:

- A criminal background check through the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLSR) or, in the case of an individual loan originator who is not a registered loan originator under NMLSR, a criminal background check from a law enforcement agency or commercial service; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(A))

- A credit report from a consumer reporting agency (as defined in section 603(p) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act) secured, where applicable, in compliance with section 604(b) of FCRA; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(B)) and

- Information from the NMLSR about any administrative, civil, or criminal findings by any government jurisdiction or, in the case of an individual loan originator who is not a registered loan originator under the NMLSR, such information from the individual loan originator. (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(C))

Based on the information obtained above and any other information reasonably available, the loan originator employer must determine for such an employee prior to allowing the individual to act as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling:

- That the individual has not been convicted of, or pleaded guilty or nolo contendere to, a felony in a domestic or military court during the preceding seven-year period or, in the case of a felony involving an act of fraud, dishonesty, a breach of trust, or money laundering, at any time (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)); and

  NOTE: Whether the conviction of a crime is considered a felony is determined by whether the conviction was classified as a felony under the law of the jurisdiction under which the individual is convicted. Additionally, a loan originator organization may employ an individual with a felony conviction (or a plea of nolo contendere) as a loan originator if that individual has received consent from the FDIC, (or the Board, as applicable) the NCUA, or the Farm Credit Administration(FCA) under their own applicable statutory authority. (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(iii))

- Has demonstrated financial responsibility, character, and general fitness such as to warrant a determination that the individual loan originator will operate honestly, fairly, and efficiently.

The loan originator organization must also provide periodic training to each such employee that covers federal and state legal requirements that apply to the individual loan originator’s loan origination activities.

Name and NMLSR ID on Loan Documentation – 12 CFR 1026.36(g)

12 CFR 1026.36(g) applies to closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling except a loan that is secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D). For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(g), a loan originator includes all creditors that engage in loan origination activities, not just those who table fund.

For consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling, loan originator organizations must include certain identifying information on loan documentation provided to consumers.

The loan documents must include the loan originator organization’s name, NMLSR ID (if applicable), and the name of the individual loan originator that is primarily responsible for the origination as it appears in the NMLSR, as well as the individual’s NMLSR ID. This information is required on credit applications, the Loan Estimate, the Closing Disclosure, the note or loan contract, and the documents securing an interest in the property.

Policies and Procedures to Ensure and Monitor Compliance – 12 CFR 1026.36(j)

Depository institutions (including credit unions) must establish and maintain written policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure and monitor compliance of the depository institution, its employees, and its subsidiaries and their employees with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.36(d) (prohibited payments to loan originators), 1026.36(e) (prohibition on steering), 1026.36(f) (loan originator qualifications), and 1026.36(g) (name and NMLSR ID on loan documents). The written policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository and its subsidiaries. (12 CFR 1026.36(j))

Prohibition on Mandatory Arbitration or Waivers of Certain Consumer Rights – 12 CFR 1026.36(h)

A contract or other agreement for a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling) may not include terms that require mandatory arbitration or any other non-judicial procedure to resolve any controversy arising out of the transaction. Also, a contract or other agreement relating to such a consumer credit transaction may not be applied or interpreted to bar a consumer from bringing a claim in court under any provision of law for damages or other relief in connection with an alleged violation of any federal law. However, a creditor and a consumer could agree, after a dispute or claim under the transaction arises, to settle or use arbitration or other non-judicial procedure to resolve that dispute or claim.

Prohibition on Financing Credit Insurance – 12 CFR 1026.36(i)

Creditors are prohibited from “financing” (i.e., providing a consumer the right to defer payment beyond the monthly period in which the premium or fee is due), either directly or indirectly, premiums or fees for credit insurance in connection with a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling). This prohibition includes financing fees for credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, credit property insurance, or any other accident, loss-of-income, life, or health insurance or payment for debt cancellation or suspension. This prohibition does not apply to credit unemployment insurance where the premiums are reasonable, the creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the premiums, and the premiums are paid under a separate insurance contract and not to an affiliate of the creditor. This prohibition also does not apply to credit insurance where premiums or fees are “calculated” and paid in full “on a monthly basis” (i.e., determined mathematically by multiplying a rate by the actual monthly outstanding balance).

Negative Amortization Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.36(k)

A creditor may not extend a negative amortizing mortgage loan to a first-time borrower in connection with a closed-end transaction secured by a dwelling, other than a reverse mortgage or a transaction secured by a timeshare, unless the creditor receives documentation that the consumer has obtained homeownership counseling from a HUD certified or approved counselor. Additionally, a creditor extending a negative amortizing mortgage loan to a first-time borrower may not steer, direct, or require the consumer to use a particular counselor.

Loan Servicing Practices

Servicers of mortgage loans are prohibited from engaging in certain practices, such as pyramiding late fees. In addition, servicers are required to credit consumers’ loan payments as of the date of receipt and provide a payoff statement within a reasonable time, not to exceed seven business days of a written request.

Payment Processing – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)

For a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling, a loan servicer:

- Cannot fail to credit a periodic payment to the consumer’s loan account as of the date of receipt, except in instances where the delay will not result in a charge to the consumer or in the reporting of negative information to a consumer reporting agency.

  NOTE: For the purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(c) a periodic payment is “an amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow for any given billing cycle.” If the consumer owes late fees, other fees, or non-escrow payments but makes a full periodic payment, the servicer must credit the periodic payment as of the date of receipt.

- Cannot retain a partial payment (any amount less than a periodic payment) in a suspense or unapplied payment account without disclosing to the consumer in the periodic statement (if required) the total amount(s) held in the suspense account and applying the payment to the balance upon accumulation of sufficient funds to equal a periodic payment.

If a servicer has provided written requirements for accepting payments in writing but then accepts payments that do not conform to the written requirements, the servicer must credit the payment as of five days after receipt.

If a loan contract has not been permanently modified but the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, a periodic payment under § 1026.36(c)(1)(i) is the amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable) for a given billing cycle under the loan contract, regardless of the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program. (Comment 1026.36(c)(1)(i)-4). If a loan contract has been permanently modified, a periodic payment under § 1026.36(c)(1)(i) is an amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable) for a given billing cycle under the modified loan contract. (Comment 1026.36(c)(1)(i)-5).

In connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling, a servicer may not impose on the consumer any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency is attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a periodic payment for the applicable period and is received on its due date or within any applicable courtesy period.

Providing Payoff Statements – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3)

For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer’s dwelling, including home equity lines of credit under 12 CFR 1026.40(a), a creditor, assignee, or servicer may not fail to provide, within a reasonable time, but no more than seven business days, after receiving a written request from the consumer or person acting on behalf of the consumer, an accurate statement of the total outstanding balance that would be required to pay the consumer’s obligation in full as of a specific date.

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3), when a creditor, assignee, or servicer is not able to provide the statement within seven business days because a loan is in bankruptcy or foreclosure, because the loan is a reverse mortgage or shared appreciation mortgage, or because of natural disasters or similar circumstances, the payoff statement must be provided within a reasonable time.

TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.37 and 12 CFR 1026.38

For most closed-end consumer mortgages, creditors must provide two disclosures, the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure, to consumers for mortgage applications received on or after October 3, 2015. The Loan Estimate is a three-page form that provides disclosures to help consumers understand the key features, costs, and risks of the mortgage loan for which they are applying. This form must be delivered or placed in the mail no later than three business days after the creditor receives a consumer’s mortgage loan application. The Closing Disclosure is a five-page form that helps consumers understand all of the costs of the transaction. This form generally must be received by the consumer at least three business days before consummation. Both forms use similar language and design to make it easier for consumers to locate key information, such as the interest rate, monthly payments, and costs to close the loan.

The Loan Estimate form replaces the Good Faith Estimate designed by HUD under RESPA, and the “early” Truth in Lending disclosure designed by the Federal Reserve Board under TILA. The regulation and the Official Interpretations contain detailed instructions as to how each line on the Loan Estimate form should be completed. There are sample forms for different types of loan products. See CFPB’s TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure, Guide to the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure forms (TILA-RESPA Guide to Forms) for a detailed, step-by-step walk-through for completing the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure. The Loan Estimate form also incorporates new disclosures required by Congress under the Dodd-Frank Act.

The Closing Disclosure form replaces the HUD-1 for loan closing, which was designed by HUD under RESPA. It also replaces the revised Truth in Lending disclosure designed by the Board under TILA. The rule and the Official Interpretations contain detailed instructions as to how each line on the Closing Disclosure form should be completed. The Closing Disclosure form contains additional new disclosures required by the Dodd-Frank Act and a detailed accounting of the settlement transaction. See CFPB’s TILA-RESPA Guide to Forms for a detailed, step-by-step walk-through for completing the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure.

The rules on who provides the disclosures, timing, limits on when fees can be charged, early estimates, and limits on increases in charges are in 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), described in subpart A.

Loan Estimate – Content of Disclosures for Certain Mortgage Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.37

Loan Estimate form required (12 CFR 1026.37(o))

The Loan Estimate generally must provide consumers with a good faith estimate of credit costs and transaction terms, and satisfy timing and delivery requirements set forth in the rule.

For any transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) that are federally-related mortgage loans subject to RESPA (which will include most mortgages), creditors must use form H-24, set forth in Appendix H. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(i)) (See also 12 CFR 1024.2(b) for definition of federally related mortgage loan.)

For other loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) that are not federally related mortgage loans, the disclosures must be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to form H-24. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(ii))

The disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(iii))

Information required on the Loan Estimate form. Most disclosures on the Loan Estimate form are required to be labeled using specific nomenclature, headings, and formatting. For example, the regulation requires that the form disclose the contract sale price, labeled “Sale Price” (or if there is no seller, the estimated value of the property, labeled “Prop. Value”). Further, in some instances, the regulation directs lines on the disclosure to be left blank where there is no charge (see, e.g., 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)(v)) or sets forth the maximum number of items that may be disclosed (see, e.g., 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3)(v)). See the regulation, Form H-24, and the Regulation Z procedures for specific obligations regarding each required disclosure.

Rounding. Dollar amounts must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar where noted in the regulation, including adjustments after consummation for loan amount, interest rate, and periodic payment; and details about prepayment penalties and balloon payments, minimum and maximum amounts for principal and interest payments and range of payments, maximum mortgage insurance premiums, escrows, taxes and insurance and assessments, closing costs (loan costs and other costs), cash to close, and adjustable payment and comparisons. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A))

The per diem amount for prepaid interest paid per day and the monthly amounts required to be disclosed for escrows of homeowner’s insurance, mortgage insurance, or property taxes must not be rounded. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(B))
V. Lending — TILA

If an amount is required to be rounded but is composed of other amounts that are not required or permitted to be rounded, the unrounded amounts should be used to calculate the total, and the final sum should be rounded. Conversely, if an amount is required to be rounded and is composed of rounded amounts, the rounded amounts should be used to calculate the total. (Comment 37(o)(4)-2)

Percentage amounts may not be rounded and should be disclosed up to two or three decimals, as needed. These include the interest rate, adjustments after consummation (to the loan amount, interest rate, or periodic payment), points itemized under origination charges, adjustable interest rate and total interest percentage or "TIP." The annual percentage rate must be disclosed up to three decimal places and is not rounded. If a percentage amount is a whole number, only the whole number should be disclosed, with no decimals. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(4)(ii); Comment 37(o)(4)(ii)-1)

Page 1 of the Loan Estimate discloses general information about the creditor, the applicant(s), and the loan. It also includes a Loan Terms table with descriptions of applicable information about the loan, a Projected Payments table, a summary Costs at Closing table, and a link for consumers to obtain more information about loans secured by real property at a website maintained by the CFPB. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)-(e))

General information. Page 1 of the Loan Estimate requires the title “Loan Estimate” and the statement “Save this Loan Estimate to compare with your Closing Disclosure.” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(1), (2)) The top of page 1 also requires the name and address of the creditor. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(3)) A logo can be used for, and a slogan included along with, the creditor’s name and address, so long as the logo or slogan does not cause this information to exceed the space provided on Form H-24 for that information. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(5)(iii)) If there are multiple creditors, only the name of the creditor completing the Loan Estimate should be used. (Comment 37(a)(3)-1) If a mortgage broker is completing the Loan Estimate, the mortgage broker should make a good faith effort to disclose the name and address of the creditor as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i). However, if the name of the creditor is not yet known, this space may be left blank. (Comment 37(a)(3)-2)

Below the creditor information, the form requires the date the creditor mails or delivers the disclosures to the consumer; the name and mailing address of the consumer(s) applying for the credit; the address, including the zip code, of the property that secures or will secure the transaction, or if the address is unavailable, the location of such property, including a zip code; and the contract sale price (or if there is no seller, the estimated value of the property). (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(4)-(6))

On the top right side of the first page, the form requires the loan term to maturity (stated in years or months, or both, as applicable; and loan purpose (purchase, refinance, construction or home equity loan). (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8)-(9)) This section of the form also requires the product type (adjustable rate, step rate, or fixed rate) and, preceding the type, any features that may change the periodic payment, including negative amortization, interest only, step payment, balloon payment, or seasonal payment features, as applicable. If the product has an adjustable or step rate, or a feature that may change the periodic payment, the product disclosure must also be preceded by a disclosure of the duration of any introductory rate or payment period, and the first adjustment period, as applicable. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10) This section of the form also requires the loan type (conventional, FHA, VA, or other), and loan ID#. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(11)-(12)) Further, there must be a statement of whether the interest rate is locked for a specific time, and if so, the date and time when that period ends. It must also include a statement that the interest rate, any points, and any lender credits may change unless the interest rate has been locked, and the date and time (including the applicable time zone) at which estimated closing costs expire. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(13))

Loan Terms table.

The Loan Terms table follows the general information requirements on page 1 of the Loan Estimate. For the Loan Terms table, the creditor must disclose the loan amount (the amount of credit to be extended under the terms of the legal obligation), interest rate applicable to the transaction at consummation, and specified principal and interest payments. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1)-(3)) For each such element, the disclosure must answer the question, either affirmatively or negatively, whether the amount can increase after consummation. If the amount can increase, the loan must disclose additional information. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)) The Loan Terms table must also include information about prepayment penalties and balloon payments.

Loan amount. If the loan amount may increase after consummation, the disclosure must include the maximum principal balance for the transaction and the due date of the last payment that may cause the principal balance to increase. The disclosure must also indicate whether the maximum principal balance is potential or is scheduled to occur under the terms of the legal obligation. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(i))

Interest rate. If it is an adjustable rate transaction where the interest rate at consummation is not known, the disclosed rate is the fully indexed rate (which means the index value and margin at the time of consummation) (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2)). If the interest may increase after consummation, the creditor must disclose the frequency of interest rate adjustments, the date when the interest rate may first adjust, the maximum interest rate, and the first date when the interest rate can reach the maximum interest rate, followed by a reference to the adjustable rate table required by 12 CFR 1026.37(j) in the Closing Cost Details section of the Loan Estimate. If the loan term may increase based on an interest rate adjustment, that fact must be included, as well as the maximum possible loan term determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8). (12 CFR
Principal and interest payment. The creditor must disclose the initial periodic payment that will be due under the terms of the legal obligation, immediately preceded by the applicable unit period, and a statement referring to the payment amount that includes any mortgage insurance and escrow payments that is required to be disclosed in the Projected Payments table. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(3)) If the monthly principal and interest payment can increase after closing, the creditor must also disclose: the scheduled frequency of adjustments to the periodic principal and interest payment; the due date of the first adjusted principal and interest payment; the maximum possible periodic principal and interest payment; and the date when the periodic principal and interest payment may first equal the maximum principal and interest payment. If any adjustments to the principal and interest payment are not the result of a change to the interest rate, the creditor must reference the adjustable payment table disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.37(i). If there is a period during which only interest is required to be paid, the disclosure must also state that fact and the due date of the last periodic payment of such period. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(iii))

Prepayment penalties and balloon payments. The Loan Terms table must also state affirmatively or negatively whether the transaction includes a prepayment penalty (for these purposes, a charge imposed for paying all or part of a transaction's principal before the date on which the principal is due, other than a waived, bona fide third-party charge that the creditor imposes if the consumer prepays all of the transaction's principal sooner than 36 months after consummation) or a balloon payment (for these purposes, a payment that is more than two times a regular periodic payment). (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(4) and (5))

Projected Payments table.

The Projected Payments table is located directly below the Loan Terms table on page 1 of the Loan Estimate. The Projected Payments table shows estimates of the periodic payments that the consumer will make over the life of the loan. Creditors must disclose estimates of the following periodic payment amounts in the Projected Payments table: periodic principal and interest (or range of periodic payments); mortgage insurance; estimated escrow; and estimated total monthly payment. (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)) Creditors must also disclose estimated taxes, insurance, and assessments, even if not paid with escrow funds (and whether these items will be paid with funds from the consumer’s escrow account). (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4))

Generally, the creditor will show in one column the initial periodic payment (or range of payments if required). Depending on the features of the loan, subsequent periodic payments also may be required to be disclosed. However, no more than four separate periodic payments or ranges of payments may be disclosed, beginning with the initial periodic payment. Events that require disclosure of separate periodic payments or ranges include: changes to the periodic principal and interest payment; a scheduled balloon payment: an automatic termination of mortgage insurance or its equivalent; and the anniversary of the due date of the initial periodic payment or range of payments that immediately follows the occurrence of multiple events that change the periodic principal and interest. The regulation addresses how to disclose these events when the event occurs after the third separate periodic payment or range of payments disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1))

Each separate payment or range of payments must be itemized according to the regulation, including the amount payable for principal and interest. The regulation provides instructions for itemizing payments that include an interest only payment, payments on loans with an adjustable interest rate, and payments on a loan that has both an adjustable interest rate and a negative amortization feature. Additionally, the regulation requires that each separate periodic payment or range of payments itemize the maximum corresponding payable for mortgage insurance premiums and the amount payable into escrow (with a statement that the amount disclosed may increase over time and a calculation of the total monthly payment). (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2))

Below the estimated total monthly payment, the Projected Payments table discloses estimated taxes, insurance, and assessments. These are stated as a monthly amount and include a statement that the amount may increase over time. The creditor provides these estimates even if there will be no escrow account established for these costs. The table also requires a statement of whether the amount disclosed includes payments for property taxes or other amounts; a description of any such other amounts; and an indication of whether such amounts will be paid by the creditor using escrow account funds. It includes a statement that the consumer must separately pay the taxes, insurance, and assessments that are not paid by the creditor using escrow account funds; and a reference to the information disclosed under the subheading on the Loan Estimate titled “Initial Escrow Payment at Closing.” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4))

The creditor estimates property taxes and homeowner's insurance using the taxable assessed value of the real property securing the transaction after consummation, including the value of any improvements on the property or to be constructed on the property, if known, whether or not such construction will be financed from the proceeds of the transaction, for property taxes; and the replacement costs of the property during the initial year after the transaction, for premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property identified in 12 CFR 1026.4(b)(8). (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5))

Costs at Closing table.

This table, located at the bottom of page 1, provides disclosures on estimated Closing Costs and estimated Cash to Close. (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)) These disclosures offer the consumer a high-level summary of estimated closing costs and cash required.
V. Lending — TILA

to close (including closing costs) and reference the more detailed itemizations found on page 2 of the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(i)(E) and 1026.37(d)(1)(ii)(B))

Items that are disclosed include an estimate of Total Closing Costs, as well as the key inputs making up this total: Loan Costs, Other Costs, and Lender Credits (and the fact that total closing costs include these amounts). (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(i)) These disclosures also provide a high-level summary of the estimated amount of cash required to close, which is also itemized more specifically on page 2 of the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(ii)) The regulation provides an optional alternative Cash to Close table for transactions that do not involve a seller. The creditor may alternatively disclose, using the label “Cash to Close,” the cash to or from the consumer (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv)), a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer, and if disclosure is to the consumer, the alternative Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)). (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(2))

Page 2 of the Loan Estimate contains a good faith itemization of the “Loan Costs” and “Other Costs” associated with the loan. (12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g)) Generally, Loan Costs are those costs paid by the consumer to the creditor and third-party providers of services the creditor requires to be obtained by the consumer during the origination of the loan. (12 CFR 1026.37(f)) Other Costs include taxes, governmental recording fees, and certain other payments involved in the real estate closing process. (12 CFR 1026.37(g)) Page 2 also includes an itemized “Calculating Cash to Close” table to show the consumer how the amount of cash needed at closing is calculated. (12 CFR 1026.37(h)) In addition, for transactions with adjustable monthly payments not based on changes to the interest rate, page 2 must include an Adjustable Payment (AP) table with relevant information about how the monthly payments will change. (12 CFR 1026.37(i)) Further, for transactions with adjustable interest rates, page 2 must include an Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table with relevant information about how the interest rate will change. (12 CFR 1026.37(j))

If state law requires additional disclosures, those additional disclosures may be made on a document whose pages are separate from, and not presented as part of, the Loan Estimate. (Comments 37(f)(6)-1 and 37(g)(8)-1)

Loan Costs table. This table includes all loan costs associated with the transaction, broken down into an itemization of three types of costs:

- Origination charges the consumer will pay to each creditor and loan originator for originating and extending credit (including separate itemization for points paid to the creditor to reduce the interest rate as both a percentage of the amount of credit extended and dollar amount) (up to 13 line items); the following items should be itemized separately in the Origination Charges subheading:
  - Compensation paid directly by a consumer to a loan originator that is not also the creditor (Comments 37(f)(1)-2 and -5); or
  - Any charge imposed to pay for a loan level pricing adjustment assessed on the creditor that is passed on to the consumer as a cost at consummation and not as an adjustment to the interest rate. (Comment 37(f)(1)-5)

- Services the consumer cannot shop for (items provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker that the consumer cannot shop for and will pay for at settlement, such as appraisal fees and credit report fees) (up to 13 line items); and

- Services the consumer can shop for (such as a pest inspection fee, survey fee, or closing agent fee) (up to 14 line items) (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(2) and (3)).

Regarding origination fees, only charges paid directly by the consumer to compensate a loan originator are included in the itemization. Compensation of a loan originator paid indirectly by the creditor through the interest rate is not itemized (but is itemized on the Closing Disclosure; see below). (Comment 37(f)(1)-2)

NOTE: Items that are a component of title insurance must include the introductory description of “Title -.” (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(2)(i) and (g)(4)(i))

NOTE: The disclosure of “lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), is required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i). “Lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), represents the sum of non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits. Non-specific lender credits are generalized payments from the creditor to the consumer that do not pay for a particular fee on the disclosures provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1). Specific lender credits are specific payments, such as a credit, rebate, or reimbursement, from a creditor to the consumer to pay for a specific fee. Non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits are negative charges to the consumer. (Comment 19(e)(3)(i) -5).

The sum of these amounts must be disclosed as Total Loan Costs. The regulation includes a required order and terminology for each item. (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1)-5) If the creditor does not have enough lines for each subheading, it must disclose the remaining items as an aggregate number. (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(6)(i)) An addendum is not permitted for origination charges or charges the consumer cannot shop for that exceed the maximum number of lines but is permitted for services the consumer can shop for, provided the creditor appropriately references the addendum (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(6)(ii)).
Other Costs table. The Other Costs table captures costs established by government action, determined by standard calculations applied to ongoing fixed costs, or based on an obligation incurred by the consumer independently of any requirement imposed by the creditor. (Comment 37(g)-1) The table includes:

- Taxes and other governmental fees (recording fees and other taxes, and transfer taxes paid by the consumer, separately itemized);
- Prepays (amounts paid by the consumer before the first scheduled payment, such as homeowner insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, prepaid interest, and property taxes, plus up to 3 additional line items);
- Initial escrow payment at closing (items that the consumer will be expected to place into a reserve or escrow account at consummation to be applied to recurring periodic charges; these include homeowner’s insurance, mortgage insurance, and property taxes, plus up to 5 additional line items); and
- Other amounts the consumer is likely to pay (such as real estate agent commissions, up to 5 line items). (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1)-(4), Comment 37(g)(4)-4)

NOTE: Items that disclose any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products not required by the creditor must include the parenthetical description (optional) at the end of the label. (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4)(ii))

As with Loan Costs, the regulation includes a required order, terminology, and specific information regarding each Other Costs line item, such as the applicable time period covered by the amount paid at consummation and the total amount to be paid. Items that disclose any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products not required by the creditor must include the parenthetical description (optional) at the end of the label. (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4)(ii)) An addendum is not permitted; if the creditor does not have enough lines for each subheading, it must disclose the remaining items as an aggregate number. (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(8)) The sum of these amounts must be disclosed as a line item as Total Other Costs. (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(5)) Below this total, the sum of Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs, less any lender credits (separately itemized), must be disclosed as a line item as Total Closing Costs. (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6))

Calculating Cash to Close table. The Calculating Cash to Close table shows the consumer how the amount of cash needed at closing is calculated. (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)) The creditor must itemize the total amount of cash or other funds that the consumer must provide at consummation. The itemization includes:

- Total closing costs (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i));
- Closing costs to be financed (i.e., paid out of loan proceeds, disclosed as a negative number) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii));
- Down payment and other funds from the borrower (in a purchase transaction, the difference between purchase price of property and principal amount of loan, disclosed as a positive number; in other transactions, estimated funds from the consumer—see “funds for the borrower” below) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii));
- Deposit (in a purchase transaction, the amount that is paid to the seller or held in trust or escrow by an attorney or other party under the terms of the agreement for the sale of the property, disclosed as a negative number, and labeled “deposit;” in all other transactions, the amount of $0, labeled “deposit”) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iv));
- Funds for the borrower (determined by subtracting the principal amount of the credit extended from the total amount of existing credit being satisfied, and if the amount is a positive number, disclosed as that number, but if the amount is $0 or a negative number, it is disclosed as $0) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v));
- Seller credits (the amount the seller will pay for total loan costs and total other costs, to the extent known, disclosed as a negative number) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vi); and
- Adjustments and other credits. (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vii))
- Estimated Cash to Close is calculated and disclosed in the same table based on these amounts listed in 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i) to (vii). (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(viii))

For transactions without a seller, the creditor can use the optional alternative table and provide, under the heading Closing Cost Details, the total amount of cash or other funds that must be provided by the consumer at consummation with an itemization of the following component amounts: (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2))

- Loan amount (disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i)) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i));
- Total closing costs (disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(ii));
- Payoffs and payments – the total amount of payoffs and payments to third parties not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii));
- Cash to or from consumer – the amount of cash or other funds due from or to the consumer and a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer, calculated by the sum of the loan amount, total closing costs and payoffs and payments under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i)-(iii)), only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than the total closing costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)) and labeled “Cash to Close” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv));

- Closing costs financed – the sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i) and (iii) (loan amount and payoffs and payments), but only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than the total closing costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)), labeled “Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount).” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(v))

Adjustable Payment (AP) table.

This table is for transactions with adjustable monthly payments for reasons other than adjustments to the interest rate, or if the transaction is a seasonal payment product. The table provides consumers with relevant information about how the monthly payments will change. If the transaction does not contain such terms, the table may not be on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(i); Comment 37(i)-1).

The AP table requires answers to the following questions:

- Whether there are interest only payments, and, if so, the period during which the interest only payment would apply (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(1));
- Whether the amount of any periodic payment can be selected by the consumer as an optional payment and, if so, the period during which the consumer can select optional payments (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(2));
- Whether the loan is a step payment product and, if so, the period during which the regular periodic payments are scheduled to increase (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(3));
- Whether the loan is a seasonal payment product, and, if so, the period during which the periodic payments are not scheduled (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(4)); and
- A subheading of monthly principal and interest payments, with specified information about the first payment change and amount; frequency of subsequent changes; and maximum periodic payment that may occur during the loan term (and first date the maximum is possible) (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(5))

Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table.

For transactions with adjustable interest rates, an Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table provides consumers with relevant information about how the interest rate will change. (12 CFR 1026.37(j)) The adjustable interest rate table must be completed if the interest rate may increase after consummation. However, if the legal obligation does not permit the interest rate to adjust after consummation, this table is not permitted to appear on the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(1); Comment 37(j)-1))

The AIR table includes the following information (12 CFR 1026.37(j)):

- For non-step-rate products, the index upon which adjustments to the interest rate will be based and the margin that is added to the index to determine the interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(1));
- For step rate products, the maximum amount of any adjustments to the interest rate that are scheduled and pre-determined (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(2));
- The initial interest rate at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(3));
- The minimum/maximum interest rate for the loan, after any introductory period expires (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(4));
- The frequency of adjustments (first and subsequent adjustments) (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(5)); and
- Any limits on interest rate changes (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(6)).

Page 3: Additional information about the loan

Page 3 of the Loan Estimate contains contact information, a Comparisons table, an Other Considerations table, and, if desired, a Signature Statement for the consumer to sign to acknowledge receipt. (See 12 CFR 1026.37(k), (l), (m), and (n))

Contact information

The top of page 3 includes the name and NMLSR or License ID number for the creditor and mortgage broker, if any; and name and NMLSR or License ID of individual loan officer who is the primary contact for the consumer, along with that person’s email address and phone number. (12 CFR 1026.37(k))

Comparisons table

The Comparisons table follows the contact information and allows consumers to compare loans. Each of these disclosures must be accompanied by a specified descriptive statement. (12 CFR 1026.37(l))

The creditor must provide the:

- Total dollar amount of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment;
- Total dollar amount of principal scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment;
• Annual percentage rate using that term and the abbreviation “APR” and expressed as a percentage; and

• Total interest percentage that the consumer will pay over the life of the loan, expressed as a percentage of the amount of credit extended, using the term “Total Interest Percentage” and the abbreviation “TIP.”

The TIP calculation is the same for the Loan Estimate and for the Closing Disclosure: total interest (including prepaid interest) that the consumer will pay over the life of the loan is divided by the loan amount to arrive at the total interest percentage (TIP). 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3); 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(5). The TIP is computed assuming that the consumer makes each monthly payment in full and on time, and does not make any overpayments. 15 U.S.C. 1638(a)(19); 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3); Comment 37(l)(3)-1.

To calculate the TIP for fixed rate loans add the sum of interest payments for the full term of the loan to the amount of prepaid interest and divide that total by the loan amount. To calculate the TIP for a variable rate loan, compute the amount of interest that the consumer will pay according to the terms of the loan. If the loan has an index and margin, use the index existing at consummation. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2); Comment 17(c)(1)-10). For Adjustable Rate products under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(A), compute the TIP in accordance with comment 17(c)(1)-10. (Comment 37(l)(3)-2) Comment 17(c)(1)-10 provides guidance and examples for adjustable mortgages with discounted and premium variable-rate terms. Where the initial rate is not based upon the index used for later interest rate adjustments, the total interest should include the initial interest rate and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation. The rate at consummation need not be used if a contract provides for a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value. For example, if the contract specifies that rate changes are based on the index value in effect 45 days before the change date, creditors may use any index value in effect during the 45 day period before consummation in calculating a composite annual percentage rate. (Comment 17(c)(1)-10). For step-rate products under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(B), compute the TIP in accordance with §1026.17(c)(1) and its associated commentary. (Comment 37(l)(3)-2). For loans that have a negative amortization feature under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(A), compute the TIP using the scheduled payment, even if it is a negatively amortizing payment amount, until the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments under the terms of the legal obligation. (Comment 37(l)(3)-3).

Other Considerations

Below the Comparisons table is a section regarding “other considerations” about the loan. This section includes disclosures on appraisals, assumptions, whether homeowner’s insurance is required, applicable late payment fees, a warning about refinancing, whether the creditor intends to service the loan or transfer servicing, liability after foreclosure, and an optional statement that a revised Loan Estimate can be provided up to 60 days prior to consummation when the loan is for new construction. (12 CFR 1026.37(m))

The consumer is not required to sign the Loan Estimate. If the creditor adds a signature statement on page 3 of the Loan Estimate to confirm receipt by the consumer, it must use the model form language. If the creditor chooses not to use the confirm receipt table, it must include a statement that “You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application.” (12 CFR 1026.37(n))

Closing Disclosure – Content of Disclosures for Certain Mortgage Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.38

Closing Disclosure form required (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(i))

The Closing Disclosure generally must contain the actual terms and costs of the transaction and must satisfy timing and delivery requirements set forth in the rule.

For any loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) that are federally-related mortgage loans subject to RESPA (which will include most mortgages), creditors must use form H-25, set forth in Appendix H. (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(i)) (See also 12 CFR 1024.2(b) for definition of federally related mortgage loan.)

For other loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) that are not federally related mortgage loans, the disclosures must contain the exact same information and be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to form H-25. (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(ii))

Information required on the Closing Disclosure. As with the Loan Estimate, most disclosures on the Closing Disclosure form are required to be labeled using specific nomenclature, headings, and formatting. Similarly, in some instances, the regulation directs lines on the disclosure to be left blank where there is no charge or set forth the maximum number of items that may be disclosed. See the regulation, Form H-25, and the Regulation Z procedures for specific obligations regarding each required disclosure.

Rounding. Dollar amounts generally must not be rounded except where noted in the regulation. (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(i)) If an amount must be rounded but is composed of other amounts that are not required or permitted to be rounded, the unrounded amounts should be used to calculate the total, and the final sum should be rounded. Conversely, if an amount is required to be rounded and is composed of rounded amounts, the rounded amounts should be used to calculate the total. (Comment 38(t)(4)-2) Percentage amounts should not be rounded and are disclosed up to two or three decimals, as needed, except where noted in the regulation. If a percentage amount is a whole number, only the whole number should be disclosed, with no decimals. (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(ii))
Page 1: General information, loan terms, projected payments, and costs at closing

General information, the Loan Terms table, the Projected Payments table, and the Costs at Closing table are disclosed on the first page of the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(a), (b), (c), and (d)) These disclosures mirror the disclosures in the Loan Estimate, and there is a required statement to compare the document with the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(2)).

Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure is similar, but not identical, to the Loan Estimate. Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure provides general closing, transaction, and loan information. It also includes a Loan Terms table with descriptions of applicable information about the loan, a Projected Payments table, and a summary Costs at Closing table. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)-(d))

General information

The top of page 1 of the Closing Disclosure requires the title “Closing Disclosure” and a specified statement to compare the disclosure with the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(1) and (2)) The top of page 1 also requires general closing, transaction, and loan information.

Closing information includes the date the Closing Disclosure was delivered to the consumer, closing date, (i.e., the date of consummation), the disbursement date, settlement agent conducting the closing, file number assigned by the settlement agent, property address or location, and sale price (or appraised property value if there is no seller). (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)) For transactions without a seller for which the creditor has not obtained an appraisal, the creditor may disclose the estimated value of the property, using the estimate provided by the consumer at application or the estimate the creditor used to determine approval of the credit transaction. Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1

Transaction information includes the borrower’s name and mailing address, the seller’s name and mailing address, and the name of the creditor making the disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4))

Loan information includes the loan term, purpose, product, loan type, loan ID number (using the same number as on the Loan Estimate), and mortgage insurance case number (MIC #), if required by the creditor. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)) Other than the MIC #, this information is determined by the same definitions for those items on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation. (Comment 38(a)(5)-1)

LoanTerms table

The Loan Terms table is located under the above described general information disclosures. The information for this table is the same as that required in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(b), updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation. (12 CFR 1026.38(b))

Projected Payments table

The Projected Payments table is located directly below the Loan Terms table on page 1 of the Closing Disclosure. The information for this table is generally the same as that required in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1) through (4), updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (other than the reference to closing cost details required by 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(vi)). The estimated escrow payments disclosed on the Closing Disclosure for transactions subject to RESPA are determined under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17. For transactions not subject to RESPA, estimated escrow payments may be determined under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17 or in the manner set forth in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5). There is also a required reference to the detailed escrow account disclosures on page 4 of the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(c))

Costs at Closing table

This table, located at the bottom of page 1, provides disclosures on Closing Costs and Cash to Close. (12 CFR 1026.38(d)) These disclosures offer the consumer a high-level summary of closing costs and reference the more detailed itemizations found on pages 2 and 3 of the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(i)(E) and 1026.38(d)(1)(ii)(B))

Items that are disclosed on the Cash at Closing table include Total Closing Costs, as well as the key inputs making up this total: Loan Costs and Other Costs, less Lender Credits (and the fact that total closing costs include these amounts). (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(i)) The table also discloses Cash Required to Close. (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(ii)) For transactions without a seller, the creditor must use the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table when the alternative costs at closing table was used on the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2))

Page 2: Closing Cost Details; Loan costs and other costs

Page 2 of the Closing Disclosure contains an itemization of the “Loan Costs” and “Other Costs” associated with the loan. (12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (h)). In each case, the amounts paid by the consumer, seller, and others are separately disclosed. For items paid by the consumer or seller, amounts that are paid at closing are disclosed in a column separately from amounts paid before closing. (12 CFR 1026.38(f))

The number of items in the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables can be expanded and deleted to accommodate the disclosure of additional line items and to keep the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables on page 2 of the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(iv)(A); Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-2) However, items that are required to be disclosed even if they are not charged to the consumer (such as Points in the Origination Charges.

All loan costs associated with the transaction are listed in a table under the heading “Loan Costs,” with the items and amounts listed under four subheadings:

- Origination charges;
- Services borrower did not shop for;
- Services borrower did shop for; and
- Total loan costs. (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1)-(5)).

Items should generally be the same as disclosed on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation, except as discussed below. (12 CFR 1026.38(f))

Origination Charges. All loan originator compensation is disclosed as an origination charge, including compensation from the creditor to a third-party loan originator (which was not disclosed on the Loan Estimate). Compensation from the consumer to a third-party loan originator is designated as Borrower-Paid at Closing or before closing on the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1); Comment 38(f)(1)-2) Compensation from the creditor to a third-party loan originator is designated as Paid by Others on the Closing Disclosure. (Comment 38(f)(1)-2) This line item must also disclose the name of the loan originator ultimately receiving the payment. (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1)) A designation of “(L)” can be listed with the amount to indicate that the creditor pays the compensation at consummation. This is the same as the amount of third-party compensation included in points and fees for purposes of determining the consumer’s ability to repay the loan. Compensation to individual loan originators is not calculated or disclosed on the Closing Disclosure. (Comment 38(f)(1)-3)

Services the consumer did or did not shop for. The following are disclosed under “Services Borrower Did Not Shop For,” regardless of where it was located on the Loan Estimate:

- Items that the consumer could have shopped for, but did not.
- When a consumer chooses a provider that is on the written list of providers for a service on the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(2)) Items are re-alphabetized when an item is added to or removed from a particular subheading.

The amounts that are designated as Borrower-Paid at or before closing are subtotaled as Total Loan Costs (Borrower-Paid). (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(5)) Amounts designated as Seller-Paid or Paid by Others are not included in this subtotal (rather, they are included elsewhere in the Closing Cost Subtotal). (Comment 38(f)(5)-1; 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2))

Other Costs table

Items should generally be the same as disclosed on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation, except as discussed below. (12 CFR 1026.38(g))

Taxes and other government fees. Itemized transfer taxes paid by the consumer and by the seller are disclosed, instead of just the sum total of transfer taxes to be paid by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(1)).

Prepays. An itemization of homeowner’s insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, prepaid interest, property taxes and a maximum of three additional items (see 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)), the name of the person ultimately receiving the payment or government entity assessing the property tax, and the total of all such itemized amounts that are designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(2)).

Initial escrow payment at closing. Property taxes paid during different time periods may be disclosed as separate items. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3))

This section of the table also includes, as the last item disclosed, an Aggregate Adjustment calculated pursuant to Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17(d)(2). (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3))

Other. This section of the table includes charges for services that are required or obtained in the real estate closing by the consumer, the seller, or other party, and the name of the person ultimately receiving the payment, even if not initially disclosed on the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(4)) This includes all real estate brokerage fees, homeowner’s or condominium association charges paid at consummation, home warranties, inspection fees, and other fees that are part of the real estate closing but not required by the creditor or not disclosed elsewhere on the Closing Disclosure. (Comment 38(g)(4)-1) The amount of real estate commissions paid must be the total amount paid to any real estate brokerage as a commission, regardless of the identity of the party holding any earnest money deposit. (Comment 38(g)(4)-4)

If there are costs that are a component of title insurance services, their label must begin with “Title -“ and, if there are costs designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing for any premium paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products, they must be labeled “(optional)” (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(4)(i) and (ii))

The sum of any of these amounts that are Borrower-Paid must be disclosed as a line item as Total Other Costs (Borrower-Paid). (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(5)) Below this total, the sum of Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs (Borrower-Paid), less any lender credits (separately itemized), must be disclosed as a line item as Total Closing Costs (Borrower-Paid). (12 CFR 1026.38(g) and (h))

Page 3: Calculating cash to close, summaries of transactions, and alternatives for transactions without a seller

Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure contains the Calculating Cash to Close table and Summaries of Transactions tables. (12 CFR 1026.38(i), (j), and (k))

Calculating Cash to Close

The Calculating Cash to Close table permits the consumer to see what costs have changed from the Loan Estimate. This table contains nine items:

- Total Closing Costs;
- Closing Costs Paid before Closing;
- Closing Costs Financed;
- Down Payment/Funds from Borrower;
- Deposit;
- Funds for Borrower;
- Seller Credits;
- Adjustments and other Credits; and
- Total Cash to Close. (12 CFR 1026.38(i))

The table has three columns that disclose (1) the amount for each item as it was disclosed on the Loan Estimate, (2) the final amount for the item, and (3) an answer to the question “Did this change?” (12 CFR 1026.38(i)) Generally, the amounts disclosed in the Loan Estimate column will be the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate (or a revised Loan Estimate). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i), (5)(i), (6)(i), (7)(i), (8)(i), (9)(i))

Funds from the borrower and funds for the borrower are determined by subtracting the principal amount of the credit extended (excluding the actual amount of the closing costs that are to be paid out of loan proceeds, if any, stated as a negative number, disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(3)(ii)) from the total amount of all existing debt being satisfied in the real estate closing and disclosed as the amounts the consumer owes or is reimbursing to the seller under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v), (except for the amount of debt satisfied and disclosed as other costs in the closing costs details under 12 CFR 1026.38(g)). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv) and (j)(1)(v)) If this amount is positive, it is disclosed as $0 under the heading “Funds for Borrower.” If this amount is a negative number, it is disclosed under the heading “Funds for Borrower” stated as a negative number, and $0 must be disclosed under “Funds from Borrower.” If the amount is $0, then $0 must be disclosed under both the headings for “Funds from Borrower” and “Funds for Borrower.” (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv))

When amounts have changed, the disclosure must indicate where the consumer can find the amounts that have changed on the Loan Estimate. For example, if the Seller Credit amount changed, the creditor can indicate that the consumer should “See Seller Credits in Section L.” (Comment 38(i)-3) Other examples of language for these items are found in example form H-25(B) in Appendix H of Regulation Z.

Increases in total closing costs that exceed legal limits. When the increase in Total Closing Costs exceeds the legal limits on closing costs set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3), the form must disclose a statement that an increase in closing costs exceeds the legal limits by the dollar amount of the excess in the “Did this change?” column. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(3)) A statement directing the consumer to the Lender Credit on page 2 must also be included if a credit to the consumer at closing for the excess amount is provided by the creditor. (Comment 38(i)(1)(iii)(A)-3) The dollar amount must be the sum of all excess amounts, taking into account the different methods of calculating excesses of the limitations on increases in closing costs under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(3))

Closing Costs Paid Before Closing. The amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate column for the “Closing Costs Paid Before Closing” item is $0. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(ii)) The Final column should disclose the same amount designated as Borrower-Paid Before Closing in the Closing Costs Subtotals of the Other Costs table on page 2 of the Closing Disclosure. Under the subheading “Did this change?” if the amount disclosed here is different from the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate, include a statement of that fact; and if it is equal to the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, include a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(iii))

Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table

For transactions without a seller where the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table was used on the Loan Estimate, the Closing Disclosure must also use the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table under 12 CFR 1026.38(e). These items include:

- Loan amount;
- Total closing costs;
• Closing costs paid before closing;
• Payoffs and payments;
• Cash to or from consumer; and
• Closing costs financed.

The table has three columns that disclose (1) the amount for each item as it was disclosed on the Loan Estimate, (2) the final amount for the item, and (3) an answer to the question “Did this change?” along with a statement of whether the amount increased, decreased or is equal to the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)) Generally, the amounts disclosed in the Loan Estimate column will be the Loan Amount, Total Closing Costs, Closing Costs Paid before Closing, and the Total Payoffs and Payments. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(i), (2)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i))

Cash to or from the consumer is disclosed in the first two columns of the row labeled Cash to Close. The first column contains amounts disclosed in the Loan Estimate. The second column discloses the final amount due from or to the consumer, calculated by the sum of the amounts disclosed (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(ii), (2)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i)) as final Loan Amount, Total Closing Costs, Closing Costs Paid before Closing, and the Total Payoffs and Payments, disclosed as a positive number with the statement of whether the funds are due from or to the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(5))

Closing Costs Financed are disclosed in the third column of the row labeled Cash to Close in the Calculating Cash to Close table. This amount is calculated by the sum of the final Loan Amount (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(ii)) and the final Total Payoffs and Payments (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(ii)), but only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than or equal to the sum of borrower paid closing costs (disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2)) designated Borrower-Paid Before Closing. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(6))

Summaries of Transactions table.

The Summaries of Transactions table contains required itemizations of the borrower’s and the seller’s transactions. (12 CFR 1026.38(j)-(k)) The table discloses amounts due from or payable to the consumer and seller at closing, as applicable. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1) and (2)) A separate Closing Disclosure can be provided to the consumer and the seller that does not reflect the other party’s costs and credits by omitting specified disclosures on each separate Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(5)(v),(vi),(ix))

Additional pages may be attached to the Closing Disclosure to add lines to provide a complete listing of all items required to be shown on the Closing Disclosure and for customary recitals and information used locally in real estate closings (for example, breakdown of payoff figures, a breakdown of the consumer’s total monthly mortgage payments, an accounting of debits received and check disbursements, a statement stating receipt of funds, applicable special stipulations between consumer and seller, and the date funds are transferred). (Comment 38(j)-6)

Generally, the Summaries of Transactions table is similar to the Summary of Borrower’s Transaction and Summary of Seller’s Transaction tables on the HUD-1 Settlement Statement provided under Regulation X prior to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule taking effect. There are some modifications to the Closing Disclosure related to the handling of the disclosure of the consumer’s deposit, the disclosure of credits, and specific guidance on other matters that may not have been clear in the HUD-1 instructions.

In transactions without a seller, the Seller-Paid column for Closing Costs may be deleted on page 2, and a Payoffs and Payments table may be substituted for the Summaries of Transactions table and placed before the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table on page 3 of the closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)). For an example, see page 3 of form H-25(J) of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Borrower’s Transaction

Amounts due from the borrower. The sale price of the property, sale price of any personal property included in the sale, and total amount of closing costs designated Borrower-Paid at Closing, calculated with lender credits as a negative number pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2) and (h)(3). (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ii)-(iv)). The contract sale price of the property does not include the price of tangible personal property if the buyer and seller have agreed to a separate price for such items. Manufactured homes are not considered personal property for this disclosure. (Comment 38(j)(1)(ii)-1)

Adjustments. This includes additional items that the seller has paid prior to the real estate closing, but reimbursed by the consumer at closing. These are items such as rent the consumer will collect after closing, a tenant’s security deposit, or outstanding real estate property taxes where there is not a corresponding credit in the seller’s transaction. (Comments 38(j)(1)(v)-1 and -2)

Adjustments for items paid by seller in advance. The prorated amount of prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller, and the time periods. The taxes are labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate. (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(vi)-(ix)) If there are additional items paid by the seller and due from the consumer, they are also itemized. Examples include taxes paid in advance, flood or insurance premiums if the insurance is under the same policy, mortgage insurance for assumed loans, condominium assessments, fuel or supplies on hand, and ground rent paid in advance. (Comment 38(j)(1)(x)-1)

Itemization of amounts already paid by or on behalf of borrower. These amounts are itemized in the second part of the Summary of Transactions table. These include the following:
V. Lending — TILA

- Deposits, and if there is no deposit, this line is left blank. If the deposit was reduced to pay closing charges prior to closing, the reduction should be shown in the Closing Cost Details table designated as Borrower-Paid Before Closing. (Comments 38(j)(2)(ii)-1 and -2)

- The loan amount is the construction or purchase loan amount for a structure or purchase of a new manufactured home that is real property. For construction loans or loans for manufactured homes that are real property under state law, the loan amount for the current transaction must be disclosed, and the sales price of the land and the construction cost or the price of the manufactured home should be disclosed separately (Comment 38(j)(2)(iii)-1).

- Existing loans assumed or taken subject to are itemized with the outstanding amount of any loans that the consumer is assuming or taking title subject to. (Comment 38(j)(2)(iv)-1)

- If the seller is providing a lump sum at closing that is not otherwise itemized, to pay for loan costs and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer, this amount is labeled Seller Credit. (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(v)) When the consumer receives a generalized credit from the seller for closing costs or where the seller (typically a builder) is making an allowance to the consumer for items to purchase separately, the amount of the credit must be disclosed. However, if the Seller Credit is attributable to a specific loan cost or other cost listed in the Closing Cost Details tables, that amount should be reflected in the Seller-Paid column in the Closing Cost Details tables.

- Any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer, such as for issues identified at a walk-through of the property prior to closing, are disclosed here. (Comments 38(j)(2)(v)-1 and -2)

- Other credits are itemized with a description and the amounts paid by or on behalf of the consumer, and not otherwise disclosed. Examples of other credits include credits from a real estate agent, subordinate financing proceeds, satisfaction of existing subordinate liens by consumer, transferred escrow balances, and gift funds. (Comments 38(j)(2)(vi)-1 to -5)

Adjustments for items unpaid by seller include prorated unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at closing, along with the time period and labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate. (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(vii)-(x)) If there are additional items that have not been paid and that the consumer is expected to pay after closing but which are attributable to the time prior to closing, they are itemized here. (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(xi)). Examples include utilities used but not paid for by the seller, rent collected in advance, or interest on a loan assumption. (Comment 38(j)(2)(xi)-1)

Calculation of the borrower’s transaction is disclosed by including the Total Due from Borrower at Closing, the amount labeled Total Paid Already by or on Behalf of Borrower at Closing, if any, disclosed as a negative number, and a statement that the resulting amount is due from or to the consumer, and labeled Cash to Close. (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(3))

Items paid outside of closing are costs that are not paid from closing funds but would otherwise be part of the borrower’s transaction table should be marked as “P.O.C.” for paid outside of closing. There must also be a statement of the party making the payment, such as the consumer, seller, loan originator, real estate agent, or any other person. For an example, see form H-25(D) of Appendix H. (Comment 38(j)(4)(i)-1)

Seller’s Transaction

Amounts due to the seller include the sale price of the property, sale price of any personal property included in the sale, and a description and the amount of other items paid to the seller by the consumer pursuant to a contract, such as charges that were not disclosed on the Loan Estimate, or items paid by the seller prior to closing but reimbursed by the consumer at closing. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ii)-(iv))

Adjustments for items paid by seller in advance include the prorated amount of prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller, and the time periods. The taxes are labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(v)-(viii)) If there are additional items paid by the seller and due from the consumer, they are also itemized. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ix))

Itemization of amounts due from seller at closing are itemized in the second part of the Summary of Transactions table. These include the amount of any deposits disbursed to the seller prior to closing and seller-paid closing costs. The itemization also includes the amount of any existing loans that the consumer is assuming and the amounts of any loan secured by a first lien or a second lien on the property that will be paid off. In addition, the itemization includes seller credits, an amount that the seller will provide at the closing as a lump sum, not otherwise itemized, to pay for loan costs and other costs and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer. The amounts and a description of any and all other obligations required to be paid by the seller at closing are disclosed, including any lien-related payoffs, fees, or obligations. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(ii)-(vii))

Adjustments for items unpaid by seller include prorated unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at closing, along with the time period and labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(x)-(xii)) If there are additional items that have not been paid and that the consumer is expected to pay after closing but which are attributable to the time prior to closing, they are itemized here. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(xii))

Calculation of the seller’s transaction is disclosed by including the Total Due to Seller at Closing, the amount labeled Total Due from Seller at Closing, if any, disclosed as a negative number, and a statement that the resulting amount is due from or to the seller, and labeled Cash. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(3))

Items paid outside of closing are costs that are not paid from closing funds but that would otherwise be part of the seller’s transaction table should be marked as “P.O.C.” for paid outside of closing. There must also be a statement of the party making the payment. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(4))

Page 4: Additional information about this loan

Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure groups several required loan disclosures together, generally using specified language, including:

- Information concerning future assumption of the loan by a subsequent purchaser required by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(2) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(1));
- Whether the legal obligation contains a demand feature that can require early payment of the loan; (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(2));
- The terms of the legal obligation that impose a fee for a late payment, including the amount of time that passes before a fee is imposed and the amount of such fee or how it is calculated (as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(4)) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(3));
- Whether the regular periodic payments can cause the principal balance of the loan to increase (i.e., whether there could be negative amortization) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(4));
- The creditor’s policy regarding partial payments by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5));
- A statement that the consumer is granting a security interest in the property (along with an identification of the property) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(6)); and
- Specified information related to any escrow account held by the servicer, including specified estimated escrow costs over the first year after consummation (or a statement that an escrow account has not been established, with a description of specified estimated property costs during the first year after consummation). (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7))

If the periodic principal and interest payment may change after consummation, other than due to a change in interest rate or where the loan is a seasonal payment product, page 4 of the Closing Disclosure must also include an Adjustable Payment (AP) table. (12 CFR 1026.38(m)) If the loan’s interest rate may increase after consummation, page 4 of the Closing Disclosure must also include the Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table. (12 CFR 1026.38(n)) These are the tables required in the Loan Estimate at 12 CFR 1026.37(i) and (j), respectively, updated to reflect the terms of the loan at consummation.

Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure discloses a Loan Calculations table, as well as specified other disclosures, contact information for the CFPB for questions, and contact information for participants in the transaction, and if desired by the creditor, a signature table to confirm receipt of the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(o)-(s))

Loan Calculations table

The Loan Calculations table discloses:

- Total of Payments (total paid after all scheduled payments of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs are made);
- Finance Charge;
- Amount Financed;
- Annual Percentage Rate (APR); and;
- Total Interest Percentage (TIP) (the total amount of interest paid over the loan term as a percentage of the loan amount). (12 CFR 1026.38(o); 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3) and its commentary)

The APR and TIP amounts should be updated from the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation. The TIP calculation is set forth in 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3) and its commentary.

Note: See the discussion on calculating the TIP for the comparison table on page 3 of the Loan Estimate.

Other Disclosures table

The Other Disclosures table requires a notice regarding the lender’s obligation to provide a free copy of the appraisal (for higher-priced mortgage loans under 12 CFR 1026.35 and loans covered by the Equal Credit Opportunity Act); a specified warning about consequences of nonpayment under the contract, whether state law provides for continued consumer liability after foreclosure, a statement concerning the consumer’s ability to refinance the loan, and a statement concerning the extent that the interest on the loan can be included as a tax deduction by the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.38(p))

Contact Information table

For each of the lender, mortgage broker, real estate broker (buyer and seller), and settlement agent, the contact information table discloses the name, address, NMLS or state license ID (as applicable), contact name of an individual primary contact for the consumer (and NMLSR ID or license ID for that person), email, and phone number. (12 CFR 1026.38(r))
Mortgage Transfer Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.39

Notice of new owner – No later than 30 calendar days after the date on which a mortgage loan is acquired by or otherwise sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred 30 to a third party, the “covered person” 31 shall notify the consumer clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep, of such transfer and include:

- Identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;
- Name, address, and telephone number of the covered person;
- Date of transfer;
- Name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer’s payments on the mortgage loan;
- Location where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and
- At the option of the covered person, any other information regarding the transaction.

This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer, as well as a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling or real property. Thus, it applies to both closed-end mortgage loans and open-end home equity lines of credit. This notification is required of the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same.

Regulation Z also establishes special rules regarding the delivery of the notice when there is more than one covered person. In a joint acquisition of a loan, the covered persons must provide a single disclosure that lists the contact information for each covered person. In addition, if the multiple covered persons each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, they may provide either a single notice or separate notices. Finally, if a covered person acquires a loan and subsequently transfers it to another covered person, a single notice may be provided on behalf of both of them, as long as the notice satisfies the timing and content requirements with respect to each of them.

In addition, there are three exceptions to the notice requirement to provide the notice of sale or transfer:

- The covered person sells, assigns, or otherwise transfers legal title to the mortgage loan on or before the 30th calendar day following the date of transfer on which it acquired the mortgage loan;
- The mortgage loan is transferred to the covered person in connection with a repurchase agreement that obligates the transferring party to repurchase the mortgage loan (unless the transferring party does not repurchase the mortgage loan); or
- The covered person acquires only a partial interest in the mortgage loan and the agent or party authorized to receive the consumer’s rescission notice and resolve issues concerning the consumer’s payments on the mortgage loan does not change as a result of that transfer.

Effective April 19, 2018, if, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest the notice of sale or transfer unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under State law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgment in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv) that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked. (12 CFR 1026.39(f)).

Mortgage transfer notices – partial payment policies. If a creditor or servicer is required by Regulation Z to provide mortgage transfer notices when the ownership of a mortgage loan is being transferred, the notice must include information related to the partial payment policy that will apply to the mortgage loan. This post-consummation partial payment disclosure is required for a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling or real property, other than a reverse mortgage. (12 CFR 1026.39(a) and (d))

The partial payment disclosure must include: (12 CFR 1026.39(d)(5))

- The heading “Partial Payment” over all of the following additional information:

30 The date of transfer to the covered person may, at the covered person’s option, be either the date of acquisition recognized in the books and records of the acquiring party or the date of transfer recognized in the books and records of the transferring party.

31 A “covered person” means any person, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(22), that becomes the owner of an existing mortgage loan by acquiring legal title to the debt obligation, whether through a purchase, assignment, or other transfer, and who acquires more than one mortgage loan in any 12-month period. For purposes of this section, a servicer of a mortgage loan shall not be treated as the owner of the obligation if the servicer holds title to the loan or it is assigned to the servicer solely for the administrative convenience of the servicer in servicing the obligation. See 12 CFR 1026.39(a)(1).

Periodic Statements for Residential Mortgage Loans
– 12 CFR 1026.41

Creditors, assignees, or servicers of closed-end mortgages are generally required to provide consumers with periodic statements for each billing cycle unless the loan is a fixed rate loan and the servicer provides the consumer with a coupon book meeting certain conditions. Periodic statements must be provided by the servicer within a reasonably prompt time after the payment is due, or at the end of any courtesy period provided by the servicer for the previous billing cycle. Delivering, emailing or placing the periodic statements in the mail within four days of the close of the courtesy period of the previous billing cycle is generally acceptable. However, periodic statements are not required for:

- Reverse mortgage transactions covered under 12 CFR 1026.33;
- Mortgage loans secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan;
- Fixed-rate loans where the servicer currently provides consumers with coupon books that contain certain specified account information, contact information for the servicer, delinquency information (if applicable), and information that consumers can use to obtain more information about their account; and
- Creditors, assignees, or servicers that meet the “small servicer” exemption.

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii) define a “small servicer” and provide clarification how a small servicer will be determined. A small servicer is a servicer that: (1) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which it or an affiliate is the creditor or assignee, (2) meets the definition of a Housing Finance Agency under 24 CFR 266.5, or (3) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(f)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor. To determine whether a servicer is a small servicer, generally, a servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliate as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer has the later of six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1 to come into compliance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers’ interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

- A mortgage loan while the consumer is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code.
  Servicers, however, are required to send modified periodic statements (or coupon books) to consumers who have filed for bankruptcy, subject to certain exceptions. (See the Certain Consumers in Bankruptcy discussion below)
- Charged-off loans, if the servicer will not charge any additional fees or interest on the account and provides a periodic statement including additional disclosures related to the effects of charge-off in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6).
- A successor in interest under certain conditions: if, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation

32 Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41, as applicable. Creditors, assignees, or servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, a creditor or assignee that currently does not own the mortgage loan or mortgage servicing rights is not subject to the periodic statement requirement.
V. Lending — TILA

with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest a periodic statement unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under State law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgment in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR1024.32(c)(1)(iv) that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked. (12 CFR 1026.41(g)). (Effective April 19, 2018).

Servicers must provide consumers with the following information in the specified format on the periodic statements:

Amount Due

- The payment due date, the amount of any late payment fee, the date that late payment fees will be assessed to the consumer’s account if timely payment is not made, and the amount due, which must be shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page;

  NOTE: If the transaction has multiple payment options, the amount due under each of the payment options must be provided.

The commentary to Regulation Z clarifies how servicers must disclose the amount due on periodic statements when the mortgage loan has been accelerated, is in a temporary loss mitigation program, or has been permanently modified. The commentary states the following:

- Acceleration. If the balance of a mortgage loan has been accelerated but the servicer will accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, the explanation of amount due must list both the reinstatement amount that is disclosed as the amount due and the accelerated amount. The servicer is not required to list the monthly payment amount that would otherwise be required under 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)(i).

- The periodic statement must also include an explanation that the reinstatement amount will be accepted to reinstate the loan through the “as of [date]” or “good through [date],” as applicable, along with any special instructions for submitting the payment. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement. The explanation may include related information, such as a statement that the amount disclosed is “not a payoff amount.” (Comment 1026.41(d)(2)-1).

- Temporary loss mitigation programs. If the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program and the amount due identifies the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program, the explanation of amount due must include both the amount due according to the loan contract and the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program. The statement must also include an explanation that the amount due is being disclosed as a different amount because of the temporary loss mitigation program. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter. (Comment 1026.41(d)(2)-2).

Explanation of Amount Due Past Payment Breakdown

- The total of all payments received since the last statement and the total of all payments received since the start of the calendar year, including, for each payment, a breakdown of how the payment(s) was applied to principal, interest, escrow, and/or fees and charges, and any amount held in a suspense or unapplied funds account (if applicable);

Transaction Activity

- A list of transaction activity (including dates, a brief description, and amount) for the current billing cycle, including any credits or debits that affect the current amount due, with the date, amount, and brief description of each transaction;

Partial Payment Information

- If a statement reflects a past partial payment held in a suspense or unapplied funds account, information explaining what the consumer must do to have the payment applied to the mortgage. Information must be on the front page or a separate page of the statement or separate letter;

Contact Information

- Contact information for the servicer, including a toll-free telephone number and email address (if applicable) that the consumer may use to obtain information regarding the account. Contact information must be on the front page of the statement; and

Account Information

- Account information, including the outstanding principal balance, the current interest rate, the date after which the interest rate may change if the loan is an ARM, and any prepayment penalty, as well as the web address for CFPB’s or HUD’s list of homeownership counselors or counseling organizations and the HUD toll-free telephone number to contact the counselors or counseling organizations.

Delinquency Information

Servicers must provide consumers that are more than 45 days delinquent on past payments additional information regarding their accounts on their periodic statements. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8), the length of a consumer's delinquency is measured as of the date of the periodic statement or the date of the written notice provided under 12 CFR 1026.41(c)(3)(iv). A consumer's delinquency begins on the date an amount sufficient to cover a periodic payment of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, becomes due and unpaid, even if the consumer is afforded a period after the due date to pay before the servicer assesses a late fee. A consumer is delinquent if one or more periodic payments of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, are due and unpaid. (Comment 1026.41(d)(8)-1).

These items must be grouped together in close proximity to each other. To meet this requirement, the items to be provided in close proximity must be grouped together, and set off from other groupings of items. Items in close proximity may not have any unrelated text between them. Text is unrelated if it does not explain or expand upon the required disclosures. This may be accomplished in a variety of ways, for example, by presenting the information in boxes, or by arranging the items on the document and including spacing between the groupings. Items in close proximity may not have any unrelated text between them. Text is unrelated if it does not explain or expand upon the required disclosures. (Comment 1026.41(d)-1). Furthermore, the additional information must include:

- The length of the consumer's delinquency;

- A notification of the possible risks of being delinquent, such as foreclosure and related expenses;

- An account history for either the previous six months or the period since the last time the account was current (whichever is shorter), which details the amount past due from each billing cycle and the date on which payments were credited to the account as fully paid;

- A notice stating any loss mitigation program that the consumer has agreed to (if applicable);

- A notice stating whether the servicer has initiated a foreclosure process;

- Total payments necessary to bring the account current; and

- A reference to homeownership counseling information (see Account Information above).

The regulation does not prohibit adding to the required disclosures, as long as the additional information does not overwhelm or obscure the required disclosures. For example, while certain information about the escrow account (such as the account balance) is not required on the periodic statement, this information may be included.

The periodic statement may be provided electronically if the consumer agrees. The consumer must give affirmative consent to receive statements electronically.

For sample periodic statements, see Appendix H-30.

NOTE: Servicers may modify the sample forms for periodic statements provided in Appendix H–30 to remove language that could suggest liability under the mortgage loan agreement if such language is not applicable. For example, in the case of a confirmed successor in interest who has not assumed the mortgage loan obligation under State law and is not otherwise liable on the mortgage loan obligation, a servicer may modify the forms to:
V. Lending — TILA

- Use “this mortgage” or “the mortgage” instead of “your mortgage.”
- Use “The payments on this mortgage are late” instead of “You are late on your mortgage payments.”
- Use “This is the amount needed to bring the loan current” instead of “You must pay this amount to bring your loan current.”

(Comment 1026.41(c)-5) (Effective April 19, 2018).

Certain Consumers in Bankruptcy – 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5) and 12 CFR 1026.41(f) (Effective April 19, 2018)

Servicers must send modified periodic statements (or coupon books) to certain consumers while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in a bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)). The modified periodic statement requirements, however, are subject to certain exemptions.

Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i), a servicer is exempt from the periodic statement requirements with regard to a mortgage loan if:

- Any consumer on the loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy; and
- With regard to any consumer on the mortgage loan:
  - The consumer requests in writing that the servicer cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book;
    - The consumer’s bankruptcy plan provides that the consumer will surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, provides for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, or otherwise does not provide for the payment of the pre-bankruptcy arrearage or the maintenance of payments due under the mortgage loan;
    - A court enters an order in the bankruptcy case providing for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, lifting the automatic stay pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 362 with regard to the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, or requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book; or
    - The consumer files with the bankruptcy court a statement of intention pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 521(a) identifying an intent to surrender the dwelling and the consumer has not made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the bankruptcy case.

The bankruptcy exemption will no longer apply, however, if the consumer reaffirms personal liability for the loan or any consumer on the loan requests in writing that the servicer provide a periodic statement or coupon book, unless a court enters an order in the bankruptcy case requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book.

Servicers not meeting the above exemption must send modified periodic statements or coupon books with regard to a mortgage loan as required by 12 CFR 1026.41(f) while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in a bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy. The content of the periodic statements will vary depending on whether the consumer is a debtor in a chapter 7 or 11 bankruptcy case, or a chapter 12 or 13 bankruptcy case. Appendix H-30(E) includes a Sample Form of Periodic Statement for Consumer in Chapter 7 or Chapter 11 Bankruptcy and Appendix H-30(F) includes a Sample Form of Periodic Statement for Consumer in Chapter 12 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcy that servicers may use for consumers in bankruptcy to ensure compliance with 12 CFR 1026.41.

Servicers not meeting the above exemption must send modified periodic statements or coupon books as required by 12 CFR 1026.41(f).

Valuation Independence – 12 CFR 1026.42

Regulation Z seeks to ensure that real estate appraisers, and others preparing valuations, are free to use their independent professional judgment in assigning home values without influence or pressure from those with interests in the transactions. Regulation Z also seeks to ensure that appraisers receive customary and reasonable payments for their services. Regulation Z’s valuation rules apply to creditors and settlement services providers for consumer credit transactions secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling (“covered transaction”) and includes several provisions that protect the integrity of the appraisal process when a consumer’s principal dwelling is securing the loan. In general, the rule prohibits “covered persons” from engaging in coercion, bribery, and other similar actions designed to cause anyone who prepares a valuation to base the value of the property on factors other than the person’s independent judgment. More specifically, Regulation Z:

- Prohibits coercion and other similar actions designed to cause appraisers to base the appraised value of properties on factors other than their independent judgment;

33 This section applies to any consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling. A “covered person” means a creditor with respect to a covered transaction. A “covered transaction” means an extension of consumer credit that is or will be secured by a dwelling, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(19).
• Prohibits appraisers and appraisal management companies hired by lenders from having financial or other interests in the properties or the credit transactions;

• Prohibits creditors from extending credit based on appraisals if they know beforehand of violations involving appraiser coercion or conflicts of interest, unless the creditors determine that the values of the properties are not materially misstated;

• Prohibits a person that prepares a valuation from materially misrepresenting the value of the consumer’s principal dwelling, and prohibits a covered person other than the person that prepares valuations from materially altering a valuation. A misrepresentation or alteration is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer’s principal dwelling;

• Prohibits any covered person from falsifying a valuation or inducing a misrepresentation, falsification, or alteration of value;

• Requires that creditors or settlement service providers that have information about appraiser misconduct file reports with the appropriate state licensing authorities if the misconduct is material (i.e., likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer’s principal dwelling; and

• Requires the payment of reasonable and customary compensation to appraisers who are not employees of the creditors or of the appraisal management companies hired by the creditors.

Minimum Standards for Transactions Secured by a Dwelling (Ability to Repay and Qualified Mortgages) – 12 CFR 1026.43

Minimum standards for transactions secured by a dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43(a), (g), (h)

Creditors originating certain mortgage loans are required to make a reasonable and good faith determination at or before consummation that a consumer will have the ability to repay the loan. The ability-to-repay requirement applies to most closed-end mortgage loans; however, there are some exclusions, including:

• Home equity lines of credit;

• Mortgages secured by an interest in a timeshare plan;

• Reverse mortgages;

• A temporary bridge loan with a term of 12 months or less, such as a loan to finance the purchase of a new dwelling where the consumer plans to sell a current dwelling within 12 months or a loan to finance the initial construction of a dwelling;

• A construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; and

• An extension of credit made pursuant to a program authorized by sections 101 and 109 of the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008 (12 U.S.C. 5211; 5219).

NOTE: There are additional exclusions under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) that generally include extensions of credit by various state or federal government agencies or programs or by creditors with specific designations under such programs or extensions of credit that meet certain criteria and are extended by certain creditors that the IRS has determined are 501(c)(3) non-profits. For a full list and criteria, please see 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(iv)–(vii).

Generally, loans covered under this section (which, for purposes of the prepayment penalty provisions in 12 CFR 1026.43(g), includes reverse mortgages and temporary loans otherwise excluded35 from the ability-to-repay provisions) may not have prepayment penalties; however, there are exceptions for certain fixed-rate and step-rate qualified mortgages that are not higher-priced mortgage loans (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a)), and only if otherwise permitted by law. For such mortgages, the prepayment penalties must be limited to the first three years of the loan and may not exceed two percent for the first two years and one percent for the third year. The creditor must offer the consumer an alternative loan without such penalties that the creditor has a good faith belief that the consumer likely qualifies for, with the same term, a fixed rate or step rate, substantially equal payments, and limited points and fees (see 12 CFR 1026.43(g)).

Ability to Repay – 12 CFR 1026.43(c)

Except as provided under 12 CFR 1026.43(d) (refinancing of non-standard mortgages), (e) (qualified mortgages), and (f) (balloon payment qualified mortgages by certain creditors), creditors must consider the following eight underwriting factors when making a determination of the consumer’s ability to repay:

• The consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets (excluding the value of the dwelling and any attached real property);

35 These include a temporary or “bridge” loan with a term of 12 months or less; a construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; or an extension of credit made pursuant to a program administered by a housing finance agency; by certain community development or non-profit lenders, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(v); or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs. 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)
V. Lending — TILA

- The consumer’s current employment status if the creditor relies on the consumer’s income in determining repayment ability;
- The consumer’s monthly payment for the mortgage loan;
- The consumer’s monthly payment on any simultaneous loan (i.e., a covered transaction or HELOC that is being consummated generally at the same or similar time) secured by the same dwelling that the creditor knows or has reason to know will be made, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6);
- The consumer’s monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations, including property taxes;
- The consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support;
- The consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7); and
- The consumer’s credit history.

Creditors are required to verify this information using reasonably reliable third-party records, with specific rules for verification of income or assets and employment status. In the case of the consumer’s income or assets, the creditor must use third-party records that provide reasonably reliable evidence of such income or assets. Creditors may verify the information considered using the consumer’s income tax return transcripts issued by the IRS, copies of tax returns filed by the consumer, W-2s or similar documentation, payroll statements, financial institution records, receipts from check-cashing or fund transfer services, and records from the consumer’s employer or other specified records. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4))

Regulation Z also provides rules for how creditors must apply certain underwriting factors when determining whether a consumer has the ability to repay the mortgage. For example, creditors must calculate the monthly payment for the covered transaction using the greater of the fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, and the monthly, fully amortizing payments that are substantially equal during the loan term. However, special rules apply to mortgages with a balloon payment, interest-only loans, and negative amortization loans due to the unique characteristics of the mortgage. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5))

Finally, creditors may not evade the ability-to-repay requirements by structuring a closed-end loan secured by a dwelling as open-end credit that does not meet the definition of open-end credit plan.

Exemption from ATR Requirements for Refinancing of Non-Standard Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(d)

12 CFR 1026.43(d) provides special rules for refinancing a “non-standard mortgage” into a “standard mortgage.”

A “non-standard mortgage” is a covered transaction as defined under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) that is:
- An adjustable rate mortgage with an introductory fixed interest rate for a period of one year or longer;
- An interest-only loan; or
- A negative amortization loan.

A “standard mortgage” is a covered transaction as defined under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) with:
- Periodic payments that do not cause the principal balance to increase, do not allow the consumer to defer repayment of the principal, or do not result in balloon payments;
- Total points and fees that are not more than those allowed in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3);
- A term that does not exceed 40 years;
- An interest rate that is fixed for the first five years of the loan; and
- Proceeds that are used solely to pay off the outstanding principal on the non-standard mortgage and closing or settlement costs (that are required to be disclosed under RESPA).

Current holders of non-standard mortgages or their servicers (collectively referred to here as “holders”) can refinance non-standard mortgages into standard mortgages without considering a consumer’s ability to repay under 12 CFR 1026.43(c), if certain conditions are met.

To qualify for the exemption from the ability-to-repay requirements, the standard mortgage must have:

36 A covered transaction is a consumer credit transaction that is secured by a dwelling, including any real property attached to the dwelling. A covered transaction is not a home equity line of credit under 12 CFR 1026.40; a mortgage secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan; a reverse mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.33; a temporary or “bridge” loan with a term of 12 months or less; a construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; or an extension of credit made: pursuant to a program administered by a housing finance agency; by certain community development or non-profit lenders, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v); or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs.
A monthly payment that is “materially lower”37 than the non-standard mortgage,

The creditor must receive a written application from the consumer for the standard mortgage no later than two months after the non-standard mortgage is recast, and

On the non-standard mortgage, consumers must have made no more than one payment more than 30 days late during the preceding 12 months and must have made no late payments more than 30 days late in the preceding six months of the holder receiving the application for a standard mortgage.

For non-standard loans consummated on or after January 10, 2014, that are refinanced into standard mortgages, the exemption from the ability-to-repay requirements for the refinancing is available only if the non-standard mortgage met the repayment ability requirements under 12 CFR 1026.43(e) or the qualified mortgage requirements under 12 CFR 1026.43(e) as applicable.

If these conditions are satisfied and if the holder has considered whether the standard mortgage is likely to prevent the consumer from defaulting on the non-standard mortgage once the loan terms are recast, the holder is not required to meet the ability-to-repay requirements in 12 CFR 1026.43(e). Finally, holders refinancing a non-standard mortgage to a standard mortgage may offer consumers rate discounts and terms that are the same as (or better than) rate discounts and terms that the holder offers to new consumers, consistent with the holder’s documented underwriting practices and to the extent not prohibited by applicable laws. For example, a holder would comply with this requirement if it has documented underwriting practices that provide for offering rate discounts to consumers with credit scores above a certain threshold, even though the consumer would not normally qualify for that discounted rate.

Qualified Mortgages: Rebuttable Presumption and Safe Harbor – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)

The rule provides a presumption of compliance with the ability-to-repay requirements for creditors that originate certain types of loans called “qualified mortgages.” There are several categories of qualified mortgages, which are discussed below. Qualified mortgages afford creditors and assignees greater protection against liability under the ability-to-repay provisions. Qualified mortgages that are not higher-priced covered transactions receive a safe harbor under the ability-to-repay provisions, which means the presumption of compliance cannot be rebutted. A qualified mortgage is higher priced if the loan’s APR exceeds the APOR by 1.5 percentage points or more for first-lien loans that either fall within the general qualified mortgage definition or the temporary qualified mortgage definition for loans that are eligible to be purchased, guaranteed or insured by GSEs or federal agencies, and 3.5 percentage points for first-lien loans that fall within the small creditor balloon payment, temporary small creditor balloon payment, or small creditor portfolio qualified mortgage definitions, or for second-lien loans.

Generally, the safe harbor provides a conclusive presumption that the creditor made a good faith and reasonable determination of the consumer’s ability to repay. Qualified mortgages that are higher priced receive a rebuttable presumption of compliance rather than a safe harbor with the ability-to-repay provisions. This means that the loan is presumed to comply with the ability-to-repay provisions, but, for example, the consumer would have the opportunity to rebut that presumption in future ability-to-repay litigation.

For a qualified mortgage that is a higher-priced covered transaction, the presumption of compliance is rebuttable by showing that at consummation, the consumer’s income, debt obligations, alimony, child support, and monthly payments on the loan and mortgage-related obligations and simultaneous loans of which the creditor was aware at consummation would leave the consumer with insufficient residual income or assets (other than the value of the dwelling and real property) to meet living expenses (including recurring and material non-debt obligations that the creditor was aware of at consummation).

Requirements for Qualified Mortgages - Generally – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2) and (3)

Loans that are qualified mortgages under the general definition may not have negative amortization, interest-only payments, balloon payments, or terms exceeding 30 years. A qualified mortgage for loans greater than or equal to $100,000 may not have points and fees paid by the consumer that exceed three percent of the total loan amount (although certain “bona fide discount points” are excluded for certain loans with pricing within prescribed ranges of APOR—the average prime offer rate). The rule provides guidance on calculating points and fees and thresholds for smaller loans.38

The rule also provides a period of time for a creditor or assignee to review a transaction’s points and fees and, if points and fees

37 When comparing the payments, the holder must calculate the payment for the standard mortgage based on substantially equal, monthly, fully amortizing payments based on the maximum interest rate that may apply in the first five years. The holder must calculate the non-standard mortgage payment based on substantially equal, monthly, fully amortizing payments of principal and interest using:

- The fully indexed rate as of a reasonable period of time before or after the date on which the creditor receives the consumer’s application for the standard mortgage;

- The term of the loan remaining as of the date on which the recast occurs, assuming all scheduled payments have been made up to the recast date and the payment due on the recast date is made and credited as of that date; and

- The remaining loan amount, which is calculated differently depending on whether the loan is an adjustable rate mortgage, interest-only loan, or negative amortization loan.

38 The definition and calculation rules for points and fees are the same as those used to determine whether a closed-end mortgage is a HOEPA loan, discussed above at 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2) and fees restrictions. However, the flat 43 percent debt-to-payment ratio of mortgage obligations, alimony, and child support, also in accordance with the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets and current debt obligations, alimony and child support, also in accordance with Appendix Q.

Temporary Category of Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4)

Regulation Z provides a temporary category of qualified mortgages that—except with regard to matters that are wholly unrelated to ability to repay—satisfy the underwriting requirements of, and are therefore eligible to be purchased, guaranteed or insured by, either (1) the Government Sponsored Enterprises (Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac) while they operate under federal conservatorship or receivership; or (2) the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, or the Rural Housing Service. This temporary provision will phase out over time as the various federal agencies issue their own qualified mortgage rules or if GSE conservatorship ends, and in any event after seven years (January 10, 2021). These mortgages must satisfy certain requirements applicable to qualified mortgages, including prohibitions on negative-amortization, interest-only, and balloon payment features; maximum loan terms of 30 years; and points-and-fees restrictions. However, the flat 43 percent debt-to-income threshold for qualified mortgages does not apply.

Qualified Mortgage – Small Creditor Portfolio Loans – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)

Mortgages that are originated and held in portfolio by certain small creditors are also qualified mortgages if they meet certain requirements.

These mortgages must generally satisfy the requirements applicable to qualified mortgages, including prohibitions on negative-amortization, balloon-payment, and interest-only features; maximum loan terms of 30 years; and points-and-fees restrictions. However, while the creditor must consider and verify the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets and current debt obligations, alimony, and child support, it may do so without regard to the standards in Appendix Q. In addition, debt-to-income ratios must be considered and verified, but the 43 percent threshold for qualified mortgages under the general definition does not apply.

A small creditor that satisfies the exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) is eligible to make small creditor portfolio qualified mortgages. (In contrast to 12 CFR 1026.43(f), below, eligibility for this qualified mortgage category is not conditioned on the small creditor operating in a rural or underserved area). For a period of three years after consummation, the creditor may not transfer the loan, or the loan will lose its status as a qualified mortgage. The qualified mortgage status continues under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(ii), however, if the creditor transfers the loan to another creditor that meets the requirements to be a small lender, or when the loan is transferred due to a capital restoration plan, bankruptcy, or state or federal governmental agency order, or if the mortgage is transferred pursuant to a merger or acquisition of the creditor. A qualified mortgage can be transferred after three years without losing its status.

Small Creditor Rural or Underserved Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages and Temporary Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(f) and 1026.43(e)(6)

Balloon-payment mortgages are qualified mortgages if they are originated and held in portfolio by small creditors operating in a rural or underserved area (see 12 CFR 1026.43(f)) and meet certain other requirements. These mortgages must satisfy certain requirements applicable to qualified mortgages, including prohibitions on negative-amortization and interest-only features; maximum loan terms of 30 years; and points-and-fees restrictions. These loans must have a term of at least five years, a fixed interest rate, and meet certain basic underwriting standards; debt-to-income ratios must be considered and verified, but the 43 percent threshold for qualified mortgages under the general definition does not apply. The rule also requires that the creditor consider and verify the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets and current debt obligations, alimony, and child support, but without regard to the standards in Appendix Q. This category of qualified mortgage is not available for a loan that, at origination, is subject to a forward commitment to be acquired by a person that 39 This temporary QM rule does not apply to HUD loans or to VA loans because HUD issued its final QM rule, effective January 10, 2014 (78 Fed. Reg. 75215, December 11, 2013), and VA issued its interim final QM rule, effective May 9, 2014 (79 Fed. Reg. 26620, May 9, 2014).

A small creditor that satisfies the exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C) (higher-priced mortgage escrow requirements) is eligible to make rural or underserved balloon-payment qualified mortgages. For a period of three years after consummation, the creditor may not transfer the loan, or it will lose its status as a qualified mortgage. The qualified mortgage status continues under 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(2), however, if the creditor transfers the loan to another creditor that meets the requirements to be a small rural lender, or when the loan is transferred due to a capital restoration plan, bankruptcy, or state or federal governmental agency order, or if the mortgage is transferred pursuant to a merger or acquisition of the creditor. A qualified mortgage can be transferred after three years without losing its status.

There is also a temporary qualified mortgage category for balloon-payment mortgages that would otherwise meet the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(f), but that are originated by small creditors that do not operate in a rural or underserved area. This category is applicable to covered transactions for which the application was received before April 1, 2016. (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(6)(ii))

Subpart F – Special Rules for Private Education Loans

Subpart F relates to private education loans. It contains rules on disclosures (12 CFR 1026.46), the right to cancel the loan, (12 CFR 1026.47), and limitations on changes in terms after approval and on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans (12 CFR 1026.48).

Special Disclosure Requirements for Private Education Loans – 12 CFR 1026.46

The disclosures required under Subpart F apply only to private education loans. Except where specifically provided otherwise, the requirements and limitations of Subpart F are in addition to the requirements of the other subparts of Regulation Z.

A private education loan means an extension of credit that:

- Is not made, insured, or guaranteed under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965;
- Is extended to a consumer expressly, in whole or part, for postsecondary educational expenses, regardless of whether the loan is provided by the educational institution that the student attends; and
- Does not include open-end credit or any loan that is secured by real property or a dwelling.

A private education loan does not include an extension of credit in which the covered educational institution is the creditor if:

- The term of the extension of credit is 90 days or less, or
- An interest rate will not be applied to the credit balance and the term of the extension of credit is one year or less, even if the credit is payable in more than four installments.

Content of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.47

Disclosure Requirements

This section establishes the content that a creditor must include in its disclosures to a consumer at three different stages in the private education loan origination process:

- Application or Solicitation Disclosures – With any application or solicitation;
- Approval Disclosures – With any notice of approval of the private education loan; and
- Final Disclosures – After the consumer accepts the loan. In addition, 12 CFR 1026.48(d) requires that the disclosures must be provided at least three business days prior to disbursement of the loan funds.

Rights of the Consumer

The creditor must disclose that, if approved for the loan, the consumer has the right to accept the loan on the terms approved for up to 30 calendar days. The disclosure must inform the consumer that the rate and terms of the loan will not change during this period, except for changes to the rate based on adjustments to the index used for the loan and other changes permitted by law. The creditor must disclose that the consumer also has the right to cancel the loan, without penalty, until midnight of the third business day following the date on which the consumer receives the final disclosures.

Limitations on Private Educational Loans – 12 CFR 1026.48

This section contains rules and limitations on private education loans, including:

1. A prohibition on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans;
2. Rules governing the 30-day acceptance period and three business-day cancellation period and prohibition on disbursement of loan proceeds until the cancellation period has expired;
3. The requirement that the creditor obtain a self-certification form from the consumer before consummation; and
4. The requirement that creditors in preferred lender arrangements provide certain information to covered educational institutions.
Co-Branding Prohibited

Regulation Z prohibits creditors from using the name, emblem, mascot, or logo of a covered institution (or other words, pictures, or symbols readily identified with a covered institution) in the marketing of private education loans in a way that implies endorsement by the educational institution. Marketing that refers to an educational institution does not imply endorsement if the marketing includes a clear and conspicuous disclosure that is equally prominent and closely proximate to the reference to the institution that the educational institution does not endorse the creditor’s loans, and that the creditor is not affiliated with the educational institution. There is also an exception in cases where the educational institution actually does endorse the creditor’s loans, but the marketing must make a clear and conspicuous disclosure that is equally prominent and closely proximate to the reference to the institution that the creditor, and not the educational institution, is making the loan.

Subpart G – Special Rules Applicable To Credit Card Accounts and Open-End Credit Offered To College Students

Subpart G relates to credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (except for 12 CFR 1026.57(c), which applies to all open-end credit plans). This subpart contains rules regarding credit and charge card application and solicitation disclosures (12 CFR 1026.60), as well as hybrid prepaid-credit cards (12 CFR 1026.61). It also contains rules on evaluation of a consumer’s ability to make the required payments under the terms of an account (12 CFR 1026.51), limits the fees that a consumer can be required to pay (12 CFR 1026.52), and contains rules on allocation of payments in excess of the minimum payment (12 CFR 1026.53). It also sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as the result of a loss of a grace period (12 CFR 1026.54) and on increases in annual percentage rates, fees, and charges for credit card accounts (12 CFR 1026.55), including the reevaluation of rate increases (12 CFR 1026.59). This subpart prohibits the assessment of fees or charges for over-the-limit transactions unless the consumer affirmatively consents to the creditor’s payment of over-the-limit transactions (12 CFR 1026.56). This subpart also sets forth rules for reporting and marketing of college student open-end credit (12 CFR 1026.57). Finally, it sets forth requirements for the Internet posting of credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.58).

Evaluation of the Consumer’s Ability to Pay – 12 CFR 1026.51

Regulation Z requires credit card issuers to consider a consumer’s ability to pay before opening a new credit card account or increasing the credit limit for an existing credit card account. Additionally, the rule provides specific requirements that must be met before opening a new credit card account or increasing the credit limit on an existing account when the consumer is under the age of 21.

When evaluating a consumer’s ability to pay, credit card issuers must perform a review of a consumer’s income or assets and current obligations. Card issuers are permitted, however, to rely on information provided by the consumer. The rule does not require card issuers to verify a consumer’s statements; a card issuer may base its determination of ability to repay on facts and circumstances known to the card issuer (Comment 1026.51(a)(1)(i)-2). A card issuer may also consider information obtained through any empirically derived, demonstrably and statistically sound model that reasonably estimates a consumer’s income or assets.

Card issuers may consider any income and assets to which the consumer has a reasonable expectation of access or may limit their consideration to the consumer’s independent income and assets. The rule also requires that issuers consider at least one of the following:

- The ratio of debt obligations to income;
- The ratio of debt obligations to assets; or
- The income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations (i.e., residual income).

The rule also provides that it would be unreasonable for a card issuer not to review any information about a consumer’s income, assets, or current obligations, or to issue a credit card to a consumer who does not have any income or assets.

Because credit card accounts typically require consumers to make a minimum monthly payment that is a percentage of the total balance (plus, in some cases, accrued interest and fees), card issuers are required to consider the consumer’s ability to make the required minimum payments. Card issuers must also establish and maintain reasonable written policies and procedures to consider a consumer’s income or assets and current obligations. Because the minimum payment is unknown at account opening, the rule requires that card issuers use a reasonable method to estimate a consumer’s minimum payment. The regulation provides a safe harbor for card issuers to estimate the required minimum periodic payment if the card issuer:

1. Assumes utilization, from the first day of the billing cycle, of the full credit line that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer; and
2. Uses a minimum payment formula employed by the card issuer for the product the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer or, in the case of an existing account, the minimum payment formula that currently applies to that account, provided that:

a. If the minimum payment formula includes interest charges, the card issuer estimates those charges using an interest rate that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer for purchases or, in the case of an existing account, the interest rate that currently applies to purchases; and

b. If the applicable minimum payment formula includes mandatory fees, the card issuer must assume that such fees have been charged to the account.

Specific Requirements for Underage Consumers – 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)

Regulation Z prohibits the issuance of a credit card to a consumer who has not attained the age of 21 unless the consumer has submitted a written application and the creditor has:

- Information indicating that the underage consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum payments on the account; or

- The signature of a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who has attained the age of 21, who has the ability to repay debts (based on 12 CFR 1026.51) incurred by the underage consumer in connection with the account, and who assumes joint liability for all debts or secondary liability for any debts incurred before the underage consumer attains 21 years of age.

For credit line increases:

- If an account was opened based on the underage consumer’s independent ability to repay, in order to increase the consumer’s credit line before he or she turns 21, the issuer either must determine that the consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum payments at the time of the contemplated increase, or must obtain an agreement from a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who is 21 or older and who has the ability to repay debts to assume liability for any debt incurred on the account.

- If the account was opened based on the ability of a cosigner over the age of 21 to pay, the issuer must obtain written consent from that cosigner before increasing the credit limit.

Limitations of Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52

Limitations on Fees During First Year After Account Opening – 12 CFR 1026.52(a)

During the first year after account opening, issuers are prohibited from requiring consumers to pay fees (other than fees for late payments, returned payments, and exceeding the credit limit) that in the aggregate exceed 25 percent of the initial credit limit in effect when the account is opened. An account is considered open no earlier than the date on which the account may first be used by the consumer to engage in transactions. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this restriction also applies to fees or charges imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3). (Comments 6(b)(3)(iii)(D)-1 and 52(a)(2)-2)

NOTE: The 25 percent limitation on fees does not apply to fees assessed prior to opening the account.

Limitations on Penalty Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52(b)

TILA requires that penalty fees imposed by card issuers be reasonable and proportional to the violation of the account terms. Among other things, the regulation prohibits credit card issuers from charging a penalty fee of more than $28 for paying late or otherwise violating the account’s terms for the first violation, $39 for an additional violation of the same type during the same billing cycle or one of the next six billing cycles, or three percent of the delinquent balance on the charge card account that requires payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle if payment has not been received for two or more consecutive billing cycles unless the issuer determines that a higher fee represents a reasonable proportion of the costs it incurs as a result of that type of violation and reevaluates that determination at least once every 12 months.40 With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this provision also applies to any fee for violating the terms or other requirements of the credit feature, regardless of whether those fees are imposed on the credit or asset feature of the prepaid account. (Comment 52(b)-3)

Credit card issuers are not permitted to charge penalty fees that exceed the dollar amount associated with the consumer’s violation of the terms or other requirements of the credit card account. For example, card issuers are not permitted to charge a $39 fee when a consumer is late making a $20 minimum payment. Instead, in this example, the fee cannot exceed $20. The regulation also bans imposition of penalty fees when there is no dollar amount associated with the violation, such as fees based on “inactivity” fees based on the consumer’s failure to use the account to make new purchases, or declined transaction fees for credit transactions that the card issuer declines to authorize. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, the regulation prohibits a card issuer from imposing declined transaction fees in connection with the credit feature, regardless of whether the declined transaction fee is imposed on the credit feature or on the asset feature of the prepaid account. (Comment 52(b)(2)(i)-7) It also prohibits issuers from charging multiple penalty fees based on a single late payment or other violation of the account terms.

Payment Allocation – 12 CFR 1026.53

When different rates apply to different balances on a credit card account, issuers are generally required to allocate payments in excess of the minimum payment first to the balance with the highest APR and then to any remaining portion to the other balances in descending order based on the applicable APR.

For deferred interest programs, however, issuers must allocate excess payments first to the deferred interest balance during the last two billing cycles of the deferred interest period. In addition, during a deferred interest period, issuers are permitted (but not required) to allocate excess payments in the manner requested by the consumer.

For accounts with secured balances, issuers are permitted (but not required) to allocate excess payments to the secured balance if requested by the consumer.

Double-Cycle Billing and Partial Grace Period – 12 CFR 1026.54

Issuers are generally prohibited from imposing finance charges on balances for days in previous billing cycles as a result of the loss of a grace period. In addition, when a consumer pays some, but not all, of a balance prior to the expiration of a grace period, an issuer is prohibited from imposing finance charges on the portion of the balance that has been repaid.

Restrictions on Applying Increased Rates to Existing Balances and Increasing Certain Fees and Charges – 12 CFR 1026.55

Unless an exception applies, a card issuer must not increase an annual percentage rate or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) on a credit card account. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this restriction applies regardless of whether these fees or annual percentage rates are imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account or on the credit feature. (Comment 55(a)-3). There are some general exceptions to the prohibition against applying increased rates to existing balances and increasing certain fees or charges:

- A temporary or promotional rate or temporary fee or charge that lasts at least six months, and that is required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii), provided that the card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements. Fees and charges required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) are periodic fees for issuance or availability of an open-end plan (such as an annual fee); a fixed finance charge (and any minimum interest charge) that exceeds $1; or a charge for required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension;
- The rate is increased due to the operation of an index available to the general public and not under the card issuer’s control (i.e., the rate is a variable rate);
- The minimum payment has not been received within 60 days after the due date, provided that the card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements and adheres to certain requirements when a series of on time payments are received;
- The consumer successfully completes or fails to comply with the terms of a workout arrangement, provided that card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements and adheres to certain requirements upon the completion or failure of the arrangement; and
- The APR on an existing balance or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) has been reduced pursuant to the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) or a similar federal or state statute or regulation. The creditor is permitted to increase the rate, fee, or charge once the SCRA ceases to apply, but only to the rate, fee, or charge that applied prior to the reduction.

Regulation Z’s limitations on the application of increased rates and certain fees and charges to existing balances continue to apply when the account is closed, acquired by another institution through a merger or the sale of a credit card portfolio, or when the balance is transferred to another credit account issued by the same creditor (or its affiliate or subsidiary).

Issuers are generally prevented from increasing the APR applicable to new transactions or a fee or charge subject to 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) during the first year after an account is opened. After the first year, issuers are permitted to increase the APRs that apply to new transactions or a fee or charge subject to 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) so long as the creditor complies with the regulation’s 45-day advance notice requirement (12 CFR 1026.9).

Regulation Z’s limitations on the application of increased rates to existing balances and limitations on the increase of certain fees or charges apply upon cessation of a waiver or rebate of interest, fees, or charges if the issuer promotes the waiver or rebate.

Fees for Transactions that Exceed the Credit Limit – 12 CFR 1026.56

Consumer consent requirement

Regulation Z requires an issuer to obtain a consumer’s express consent (or opt in) before the issuer may impose any fees on a consumer’s credit card account for making an extension of credit that exceeds the account’s credit limit. Prior to providing such consent, the consumer must be notified by the issuer of any fees that may be assessed for an over-the-limit transaction. If the consumer consents, the issuer is also required to provide written confirmation (or electronic confirmation if the consumer agrees) of the consumer’s consent and a notice of the consumer’s right to revoke that consent on the front page of any periodic statement that reflects the imposition of an over-the-limit fee.

Prior to obtaining a consumer's consent to the payment of over-the-limit transactions, the issuer must provide the consumer with a notice disclosing, among other things, the dollar amount of any charges that will be assessed for an over-the-limit transaction, as well as any increased rate that may apply if the consumer exceeds the credit limit. Issuers are prevented from assessing any over-the-limit fee or charge on an account unless the consumer consents to the payment of transactions that exceed the credit limit.

Prohibited practices – Even if the consumer has affirmatively consented to the issuer’s payment of over-the-limit transactions, Regulation Z prohibits certain issuer practices in connection with the assessment of over-the-limit fees or charges. An issuer can only charge one over-the-limit fee or charge per billing cycle. In addition, an issuer cannot impose an over-the-limit fee on the account for the same transaction in more than three billing cycles. Furthermore, fees may not be imposed for the same transaction in the second or third billing cycle unless the consumer has failed to reduce the account balance below the credit limit by the payment due date in that cycle.

Regulation Z also prohibits unfair or deceptive acts or practices in connection with the manipulation of credit limits in order to increase over-the-limit fees or other penalty charges. Specifically, issuers are prohibited from engaging in three practices:

- Assessing an over-the-limit fee because the creditor failed to promptly replenish the consumer’s available credit;

- Conditioning the amount of available credit on the consumer’s consent to the payment of over-the-limit transactions (e.g., opting in to an over-the-limit service to obtain a higher credit limit); and

- Imposing any over-the-limit fee if the credit limit is exceeded solely because of the issuer’s assessment of accrued interest charges or fees on the consumer’s account.

Special Rules for Marketing to Students – 12 CFR 1026.57

Regulation Z establishes several requirements related to the marketing of credit cards and other open-end consumer credit plans to students at an institution of higher education. Including the marketing of a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card and prepaid account and a prepaid account where a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card may be added in the future, to students at an institution of higher education. (Comments 57(a)(1)-1, 57(a)(5)-1, and 57(c)-7). The regulation limits a creditor’s ability to offer a college student any tangible item to induce the student to apply for or participate in an open-end consumer credit plan offered by the creditor. Specifically, Regulation Z prohibits a card issuer from offering tangible items as an inducement:

- On the campus of an institution of higher education;

- Near the campus of an institution of higher education; or

- At an event sponsored by or related to an institution of higher education

A tangible item means physical items, such as gift cards, t-shirts, or magazine subscriptions, but does not include non-physical items such as discounts, reward points, or promotional credit terms. With respect to offers “near” the campus, the commentary to the regulation states that a location that is within 1,000 feet of the border of the campus is considered near the campus.

Regulation Z also requires card issuers to submit an annual report to the CFPB containing the terms and conditions of business, marketing, or promotional agreements with an institution of higher education or an alumni organization or foundation affiliated with an institution of higher education. Online Disclosure of Credit Card Agreements – 12 CFR 1026.58

The regulation requires that issuers post credit card agreements on their websites and to submit those agreements to the CFPB for posting on a website maintained by the CFPB. There are three exceptions for when issuers are not required to provide statements to the CFPB:

- The issuer has fewer than 10,000 open credit card accounts; or

- The agreement currently is not offered to the public and the agreement is used only for one or more private label credit card plans with credit cards usable only at a single merchant or group of affiliated merchants and that involves fewer than 10,000 open accounts; or

- The agreement currently is not offered to the public and the agreement is for one or more plans offered to test a new product offered only to a limited group of consumers for a limited time that involves fewer than 10,000 open accounts.

Reevaluation of Rate Increases – 12 CFR 1026.59

For any rate increase imposed on or after January 1, 2009, that requires 45 days advance notice, the regulation requires card issuers to review the account no less frequently than once each six months and, if appropriate based on that review, reduce the annual percentage rate. The requirement to reevaluate rate increases applies both to increases in annual percentage rates based on consumer-specific factors, such as changes in the consumer’s creditworthiness, and to increases in annual percentage rates imposed based on factors that are not specific to the consumer, such as changes in market conditions or the issuer’s cost of funds. If based on its review a card issuer is required to reduce the rate applicable to an account, the final regulation requires that the rate be reduced within 45 days after completion of the evaluation.

This review must consider either the same factors on which the increase was originally based or the factors the card issuer currently considers in determining the annual percentage rate applicable to similar new credit card accounts.

Hybrid Prepaid-Credit Cards - 12 CFR 1026.61

Generally, this section applies to credit offered in connection with a prepaid account. A prepaid card is a hybrid prepaid-credit card when it has a separate accessible credit feature or a credit feature structured as a negative balance on the asset feature of the prepaid account (except as described below). Further, a hybrid prepaid-credit card is a credit card for the purposes of this regulation with respect to those credit features.

A prepaid card is a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to a separate credit feature when it is a single device that can be used from time to time to access the separate credit feature where the following two conditions are both satisfied: (1) the card can be used to draw, transfer, or authorize the draw or transfer of credit from the separate credit feature in the course of authorizing, settling, or otherwise completing transactions conducted with the card to obtain goods or services, obtain cash, or conduct person-to-person transfers; and (2) the separate credit feature is offered by the prepaid account issuer, its affiliate, or its business partner. A separate credit feature that is accessed by a hybrid prepaid-credit card is described as a “covered separate credit feature.” A prepaid card is not a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to a separate credit feature if it does not meet the two conditions discussed above, although that separate credit feature may be subject to other provisions of Regulation Z depending on its own terms and conditions, independent of the connection to the prepaid account.

Generally, the regulation prohibits structuring a hybrid prepaid-credit card to access credit through a negative balance on the asset feature of a prepaid account. However, a prepaid card is not a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to credit extended through a negative balance on the asset feature of a prepaid account if several conditions are met. One condition is that the prepaid card cannot access credit from a covered separate credit feature that is offered by a prepaid account issuer or its affiliate. In addition, the prepaid account issuer must have an established policy and practice of either: declining to authorize any transaction for which it reasonably believes a consumer has insufficient or unavailable funds in the asset feature of the prepaid account at the time the transaction is authorized to cover the amount of the transaction; or declining to authorize such transactions except when (1) the amount of the transaction will not cause the asset feature balance to become negative by more than $10 at the time of the authorization, or (2) the issuer has received an instruction, confirmation, or request to load funds from a separate asset account to the prepaid account, but the funds have not yet settled and the amount of the transaction will not cause the asset balance to become negative at the time of the authorization by more than the incoming or requested load amount. Furthermore, under this exception, the issuer may not impose any of the following fees or charges on the asset feature of the prepaid account:

- Fees or charges for opening, issuing, or holding a negative balance on the asset feature, or for the availability of credit, whether imposed on a one-time or periodic basis;41
- Fees or charges that will be imposed only when credit is extended on the asset feature or when there is a negative balance on the asset feature; and
- Fees or charges where the amount of the fee or charge is higher when credit is extended on the asset feature or when there is a negative balance on the asset feature.

Issuers must wait at least 30 days after a prepaid account is registered before opening a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, making a solicitation or providing an application to open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card, or allowing an existing credit feature opened prior to the consumer obtaining the prepaid account to become a covered separate credit feature accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card. Issuers must obtain an application or specific request from the consumer to link such a credit feature to a prepaid account. (Comment 12(a)(1)-7.ii)

Liability and Defenses

Civil Liability – TILA Sections 129B, 129C, 130 and 131

If a creditor fails to comply with any requirements of the TILA, other than with the advertising provisions of chapter 3, it may be held liable to the consumer for:

- Actual damage, and
- Cost of any successful legal action together with reasonable attorney’s fees.

41 This provision does not prohibit fees or charges to open, issue, or hold the prepaid account generally, where the amount of the fee or charge imposed on the asset feature is not higher based on whether credit might be offered or has been accepted, whether or how much credit the consumer has accessed, or the amount of credit available.

42 This provision does not prohibit fees or charges for the actual costs of collecting the credit extended, if otherwise permitted by law.
The creditor also may be held liable for any of the following:

- In an individual action, twice the amount of the finance charge involved.

- In an individual action relating to an open-end credit transaction that is not secured by real property or a dwelling, twice the amount of the finance charge involved, with a minimum of $500 and a maximum of $5,000 or such higher amount as may be appropriate in the case of an established pattern or practice of such failure.

- In an individual action relating to a closed-end credit transaction secured by real property or a dwelling, not less than $400 and not more than $4,000.

- In a class action, such amount as the court may allow (with no minimum recovery for each class member). However, the total amount of recovery in any class actions arising out of the same failure to comply by the same creditor cannot be more than $1 million or 1 percent of the creditor’s net worth, whichever is less.

A creditor that fails to comply with section 129 of TILA, 15 U.S.C. section 1639, (requirements for certain mortgages) may be held liable to the consumer for all finance charges and fees paid by the consumer unless the creditor demonstrates that the failure was not material. A mortgage originator that is not a creditor and that fails to comply with section 129B (requirements for mortgage loan originators) also may be liable to consumers for the greater of actual damages or an amount equal to three times the total amount of direct and indirect compensation or gain to the mortgage originator in connection with the loan, plus costs, including reasonable attorney’s fees. In addition, TILA section 130(a) provides that a creditor may be liable for failure to comply with the ability-to-repay requirements of TILA section 129C(a) unless the creditor demonstrates that the failure to comply was not material.

Generally, civil actions that may be brought against a creditor may be maintained against any assignee of the creditor only if the violation is apparent on the face of the disclosure statement or other documents assigned, except where the assignment was involuntary. For high-cost mortgage loans (under 12 CFR 1026.32(a)), any subsequent purchaser or assignee is subject to all claims and defenses that the consumer could assert against the creditor, unless the assignee demonstrates that it could not reasonably have determined that the loan was a high-cost mortgage loan subject to 12 CFR 1026.32.

In specified circumstances, the creditor or assignee has no liability if it corrects identified errors within 60 days of discovering the errors and prior to the institution of a civil action or the receipt of written notice of the error from the obligor. Additionally, a creditor and assignee will not be liable for bona fide errors that occurred despite the maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid any such error.

Moreover, the TILA also provides consumers with the right to assert a violation of the TILA’s anti-steering provisions or the ability-to-repay standards for residential mortgage loan requirements “as a matter of defense by recoupment or setoff” against a foreclosure action. In general, the amount of recoupment or setoff shall be equal to the amount that the consumer would be entitled to generally under 15 U.S.C. 1640(a) for a valid claim, plus the cost to the consumer of the action (including reasonable attorney’s fees).

Refer to Sections 129B, 129C, 130 and 131 of TILA for more information.

Criminal Liability – TILA Section 112

Anyone who willingly and knowingly fails to comply with any requirement of the TILA will be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Administrative Actions – TILA Section 108

The TILA authorizes federal regulatory agencies to require financial institutions to make monetary and other adjustments to the consumers’ accounts when the true finance charge or APR exceeds the disclosed finance charge or APR by more than a specified accuracy tolerance. That authorization extends to unintentional errors, including isolated violations (e.g., an error that occurred only once or errors, often without a common cause, that occurred infrequently and randomly).

Under certain circumstances, the TILA requires federal regulatory agencies to order financial institutions to reimburse consumers when understatement of the APR or finance charge involves:

- Patterns or practices of violations (e.g., errors that occurred, often with a common cause, consistently or frequently, reflecting a pattern with a specific type or types of consumer credit).

- Gross negligence.

- Willful noncompliance intended to mislead the person to whom the credit was extended.

Any proceeding that may be brought by a regulatory agency against a creditor may be maintained against any assignee of the creditor if the violation is apparent on the face of the disclosure statement or other documents assigned, except where the assignment was involuntary under section 131 (15 U.S.C. 1641).

Specific Defenses – TILA Section 108

Defense Against Civil, Criminal, and Administrative Actions

A financial institution in violation of TILA may avoid liability by:
An error is “discovered” if it is:

- Discovering the error before an action is brought against the financial institution, or before the consumer notifies the financial institution, in writing, of the error.
- Notifying the consumer of the error within 60 days of discovery.
- Making the necessary adjustments to the consumer’s account, also within 60 days of discovery. (The consumer will pay no more than the lesser of the finance charge actually disclosed or the dollar equivalent of the APR actually disclosed.)

The above three actions also may allow the financial institution to avoid a regulatory order to reimburse the customer.

An error is “discovered” if it is:

- Discussed in a final, written report of examination.
- Identified through the financial institution’s own procedures.
- An inaccurately disclosed APR or finance charge included in a regulatory agency notification to the financial institution.

When a disclosure error occurs, the financial institution is not required to re-disclose after a loan has been consummated or an account has been opened. If the financial institution corrects a disclosure error by merely re-disclosing required information accurately, without adjusting the consumer’s account, the financial institution may still be subject to civil liability and an order to reimburse from its regulator.

The circumstances under which a financial institution may avoid liability under the TILA do not apply to violations of the Fair Credit Billing Act (chapter 4 of the TILA).

Additional Defenses Against Civil Actions

The financial institution may avoid liability in a civil action if it shows by a preponderance of evidence that the violation was not intentional and resulted from a bona fide error that occurred despite the maintenance of procedures to avoid the error.

A bona fide error may include a clerical, calculation, computer malfunction, programming, or printing error. It does not include an error of legal judgment.

Showing that a violation occurred unintentionally could be difficult if the financial institution is unable to produce evidence that explicitly indicates it has an internal controls program designed to ensure compliance. The financial institution’s demonstrated commitment to compliance and its adoption of policies and procedures to detect errors before disclosures are furnished to consumers could strengthen its defense.

In general, civil actions may be brought within one year after the violation occurred. For private education loans, civil actions may be brought within one year from the date on which the first regular payment of principal and interest is due. After that time, and if allowed by state law, the consumer may still assert the violation as a defense if a financial institution were to bring an action to collect the consumer’s debt.

A civil action for a violation of TILA section 129 (requirements for certain mortgages), 129B (residential mortgage loan origination), or 129C (minimum standards for residential mortgage loans) may be brought three years from the date of the occurrence of the violation (as compared to one year for most other TILA violations). TILA section 130(e).

Moreover, TILA provides that when a creditor, assignee, other holder or anyone acting on such a person’s on behalf initiates a foreclosure action on, or any other action to collect the debt in connection with a residential mortgage loan, a consumer may assert a violation of TILA section 129B(c)(1) or (2) or 129C(a) “as a matter of defense by recoupment or set off.” TILA section 130(k). There is no time limit on the use of this defense and the amount of recoupment or setoff is limited, with respect to the special statutory damages, to no more than three years of finance charges and fees.

Criminal actions and actions brought by regulators are not subject to the general one-year statute of limitations. Actions brought by a state attorney general to enforce a violation of section 129, 129B, 129C, 129D, 129E, 129F, 129G, 129H, or 129I, may be brought not later than 3 years after the date on which the violation occurs.

However, administrative enforcement actions under the policy guide involving erroneously disclosed APRs and finance charges may be subject to time limitations by the TILA. Those limitations range from the date of the last regulatory examination of the financial institution, to as far back as 1969, depending on when loans were made, when violations were identified, whether the violations were repeat violations, and other factors.

There is no time limitation on willful violations intended to mislead the consumer. A general summary of the various time limitations that otherwise apply follows.

- For open-end credit, reimbursement applies to violations not older than two years.
- For closed-end credit, reimbursement is generally directed for loans with violations occurring since the immediately preceding examination.

43 However, reimbursement required by regulatory action may be limited to the last examination conducted at the institution.
Rescission Rights (Open-End and Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.15 and 1026.23

TILA provides that for certain transactions secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling, a consumer has three business days after becoming obligated on the debt to rescind the transaction. The right of rescission allows consumer(s) time to reexamine their credit agreements and cost disclosures and to reconsider whether they want to place their homes at risk by offering it as security for the credit. A higher-priced mortgage loan (whether or not it is a HOEPA loan) having a prepayment penalty that does not conform to the prepayment penalty limitations (12 CFR 1026.32(c) and (d) and 12 CFR 1026.43(g), subject to certain exclusions) is also subject to a three-year right of rescission. Transactions exempt from the right of rescission include residential mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(24)) and refinancings or consolidations with the original creditor where no “new money” is advanced.

If a transaction is rescindable, consumers must be given a notice explaining that the creditor has a security interest in the consumer’s home, that the consumer may rescind, how the consumer may rescind, the effects of rescission, and the date the rescission period expires.

To rescind a transaction, a consumer must notify the creditor in writing by midnight of the third business day after the latest of three events:

- Consummation of the transaction,
- Delivery of material TILA disclosures, or
- Receipt of the required notice of the right to rescind.

For purposes of rescission, business day means every calendar day except Sundays and the legal public holidays (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6)). The term “material disclosures” is defined in 12 CFR 1026.23(a)(3) to mean the required disclosures of the APR, the finance charge, the amount financed, the total of payments, the payment schedule, and the disclosures and limitations referred to in 12 CFR 1026.32(c) and (d) and 12 CFR 1026.43(g).

The creditor may not disburse any monies (except into an escrow account) and may not provide services or materials until the three-day rescission period has elapsed and the creditor is reasonably satisfied that the consumer has not rescinded. If the consumer rescinds the transaction, the creditor must refund all amounts paid by the consumer (even amounts disbursed to third parties) and terminate its security interest in the consumer’s home.

A consumer may waive the three-day rescission period and receive immediate access to loan proceeds if the consumer has a “bona fide personal financial emergency.” The consumer must give the creditor a signed and dated waiver statement that describes the emergency, specifically waives the right, and bears the signatures of all consumers entitled to rescind the transaction. The consumer provides the explanation for the bona fide personal financial emergency, but the creditor decides the sufficiency of the emergency.

If the required rescission notice or material TILA disclosures are not delivered or if they are inaccurate, the consumer’s right to rescind may be extended from three days after becoming obligated on a loan to up to three years.

Examination Objectives

1. To appraise the quality of the financial institution’s compliance management system for the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z (12 CFR part 1026).
2. To determine the reliance that can be placed on the financial institution’s compliance management system, including internal controls and procedures performed by the person(s) responsible for monitoring the financial institution’s compliance review function for the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z.
3. To determine the financial institution’s compliance with the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z.
4. To initiate corrective action when policies or internal controls are deficient, or when violations of law or regulation are identified.
5. To determine whether the institution will be required to make adjustments to consumer accounts under the restitution provisions of the Truth in Lending Act.

Examination Procedures

General Procedures

1. Obtain information pertinent to the area of examination from the financial institution’s compliance management system program (historical examination findings, complaint information, and significant findings from compliance review and audit).

44 12 CFR 1026.15(b) and 1026.23(b)(1) were amended to include the electronic delivery of the notice of the right to rescind. If a paper notice of the right to rescind is used, a creditor must deliver two copies of the notice to each consumer entitled to rescind. However, under the final rule on electronic delivery of disclosures if the notice is in electronic form, in accordance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the E-Sign Act, only one copy to each customer is required.

45 These procedures include amendments to TILA and Regulation Z through April 2016 and the mortgage servicing amendments effective in October 2017, unless otherwise indicated. These procedures do not include the 2017 Know Before You Owe Integrated Disclosure Rule amendments nor the Prepaid Rule amendments.

46 This reflects the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.
II. Through discussions with management and review of the below documents, determine whether the financial institution’s internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance in the area under review. Identify procedures used daily to detect errors/violations promptly. Also, review the procedures used to ensure compliance when changes occur (e.g., changes in interest rates, service charges, computation methods, and software programs).

- Organizational charts
- Process flowcharts
- Policies and procedures
- Loan documentation and disclosures
- Checklists/worksheets and review documents
- Computer programs

III. Review compliance review and audit workpapers and determine whether:

- The procedures used address all regulatory provisions (see Transactional Testing section).
- Steps are taken to follow up on previously identified deficiencies.
- The procedures used include samples that cover all product types and decision centers.
- The work performed is accurate (through a review of some transactions).
- Significant deficiencies, and the root cause of the deficiencies, are included in reports to management/board.
- Corrective actions are timely and appropriate.
- The area is reviewed at an appropriate interval, based upon appropriate risks.

IV. Review the financial institution’s record retention practices to determine whether the required documentation or evidence of compliance is retained for at least:

- Two years after the disclosures were required to be made or other action was required to be taken, otherwise for the advertising requirements, requirements for mortgages subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), and certain requirements for mortgages, which are described below. (12 CFR 1026.25(a))
- Three years after the later of the date of consummation, the date disclosures are required to be made, or the date action is required to be taken, for evidence of compliance with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)-(f) (regarding closed-end loans that are secured by real property and subject to those sections) other than as set forth in 4.c below. (12 CFR 1026.25(e)(1)(ii))
- Five years after consummation for completed Closing Disclosure forms, and all documents related to these disclosures, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) or (f)(4)(i). If the loan is sold, transferred, or otherwise disposed of during that time, the creditor must provide a copy of the Closing Disclosure to the owner or servicer as part of the loan file transfer, who must retain the disclosure for the remainder of the five-year period. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(ii))
- Three years after the date of receipt of payment to show compliance with loan originator compensation requirements. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2))
- Three years after consummation to show compliance with ability-to-repay minimum standards (12 CFR 1026.43(c)-(f) and prepayment penalty restrictions (12 CFR 1026.43(g)) for loans secured by a dwelling. (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(3))

Disclosure Forms

V. Determine if the financial institution has changed any TILA disclosure forms or if there are forms that have not been previously reviewed for accuracy. If so:

- Verify the accuracy of each disclosure by reviewing the following as applicable:
  - Credit card application/solicitation disclosures (12 CFR 1026.60(b)-(e)).
  - HELOC disclosures (12 CFR 1026.40(d) and (e)).
  - Initial disclosures (12 CFR 1026.6) and, if applicable, additional HELOC disclosures (12 CFR 1026.40).
  - Periodic statement disclosures (12 CFR 1026.7 and 1026.41).
  - Statement of billing rights and change in terms notice (12 CFR 1026.9(a),(b),(c) or (g)).
  - Note and/or contract forms (including those furnished to dealers).
  - Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(c) and 12 CFR 1026.37).
  - Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(f) and 12 CFR 1026.38).
V. Lending — TILA

• Special information booklet (12 CFR 1026.19(g)).
• Other closed-end credit transaction disclosures not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) or (f) (12 CFR 1026.17(a) and 12 CFR 1026.18).
• ARM disclosures (12 CFR 1026.19(b) 1026.20(c) – (d)).
• High-cost mortgage disclosures (12 CFR 1026.32(c)).
• Reverse mortgage disclosures (12 CFR 1026.33(b)).
• Payoff statement disclosures. (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3))
• Private education loan disclosures (12 CFR 1026.47).

Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms Review Procedures

Closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, are subject to the disclosure, timing, and other requirements under the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule (TILA-RESPA or TRID). Thus, for most closed-end mortgages, including construction-only loans and loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres, creditors must provide the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure. There is a partial exemption in 12 CFR 1026.3(h) from the requirement to provide the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure if the loan is (i) a subordinate lien; (ii) a loan for home buyer assistance, such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention; (iii) a loan that does not require the payment of interest; (iv) a loan for which repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer’s principal dwelling; and (v) a loan where the total costs of the transaction are less than one percent of the loan and include fees only for recording, application, and housing counseling. For those transactions, creditors must provide other applicable TILA disclosures.

NOTE: a creditor may not use the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure forms instead of the GFE, HUD-1, and Truth in Lending forms for transactions that continue to be covered by the remaining disclosure requirements of TILA or RESPA (e.g., reverse mortgages) or before the effective date of the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule (October 3, 2015). (12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f)).

Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms – For transactions under 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)

NOTE: These procedures have not been updated to reflect the Know Before You Owe (KBYO) final rule issued on July 7, 2017. The 2017 TILA-RESPA rule includes an optional compliance period, which began on October 10, 2017 and is for transactions for which a creditor or mortgage broker receives an application prior to October 1, 2018. During this period, early compliance with the 2017 rule is allowed, but not required.

I. For a closed-end credit transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), determine whether the creditor provides disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.37 (Loan Estimate) and 12 CFR 1026.38 (Closing Disclosure). (12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 12 CFR 1026.19(f))

II. For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e), determine whether the creditor provides the good faith disclosures in the form required by 12 CFR 1026.37 and conforming to the Loan Estimate in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.19(e), 12 CFR 1026.37(o)).

III. For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f), determine whether the creditor provides the Closing Disclosure in the form required by 12 CFR 1026.38 and conforming to the Closing Disclosure attached at Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.19(f), 12 CFR 1027.38(i)).

NOTE: Use of the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure is mandatory for RESPA-covered transactions. For transactions not covered by RESPA, the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure may be considered a model form.

Loan Estimate – 12 CFR 1026.37(a) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

I. Loan Estimate. Determine whether the disclosures required for the Loan Estimate are accurately completed and include the following disclosures on the first page (12 CFR 1026.37(a)). Disclosures are detailed below according to the designated made on the Loan Estimate form:

   The statement: “Save this Loan Estimate to compare with your Closing Disclosure” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(2));
   • Name and address of creditor. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(3));
   • Date Issued. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(4));
   • Applicants. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(5));
   • Property. The property address, including zip code (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(6));
   • Sales Price/Prop. Value (estimated value where there is no seller). (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7));
   • Loan Term. Stated in years, months, or both, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8));
   • Purpose. Loan purpose, categorized as “Purchase,” “Refinance,” or “Construction.” All other loan purposes must be categorized as “Home Equity Loan” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9));
V. Lending — TILA

- Product. Product type, including the type of interest rate categorized as “Adjustable Rate,” “Step Rate,” or “Fixed Rate.” This disclosure must be preceded by the type of feature that may change the consumer’s periodic payment, such as “Negative Amortization,” “Interest Only,” “Step Payment,” “Balloon Payment,” or “Seasonal Payment,” with the duration of any introductory rate or payment period and the first adjustment period if applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)-(iii));

- Loan Type. Categorized as “Conventional,” “FHA,” “VA,” or “Other” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(11));

- Loan ID #. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(12)); and

- Rate Lock. A statement of whether the disclosed rate is locked for a specific period. If so, the date and time (including time zone) that the lock will expire, along with an accompanying statement that the interest rate, any points, and any lender credits may change unless the interest rate has been locked (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(13)).

Loan Terms — 12 CFR 1026.37(b) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Loan Terms. Determine whether, under the heading “Loan Terms,” all disclosures are completed and accurate (12 CFR 1026.37(b)):

   - Loan Amount. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1));

   - Interest Rate. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2));

   - Principal and Interest. The applicable unit period (i.e., bi-weekly, monthly, yearly) must precede the label “Principal and Interest” (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(3));

   - Prepayment Penalty. A statement of whether the loan contains a prepayment penalty, an affirmative or negative response to the question, the maximum amount of the prepayment penalty that may be imposed, and the date on which the penalty may no longer be applied. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(4), 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(7)(i)) If the date is disclosed (for an affirmative response), determine whether it is disclosed as the year in which the event occurs, counting from the date of consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(iii));

   - Balloon Payment. A statement of whether the loan contains a balloon payment, an affirmative or negative response to the question, the maximum amount of the balloon payment, and the due date of such payment. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(5), 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(7)(ii)) If the date is disclosed (for an affirmative response), determine whether it is disclosed as the year in which the event occurs, counting from the due date of the initial periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(ii)); and

   - Whether the loan amount, interest rate, or monthly principal and interest can increase after closing (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)) and, if so, the information required by 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(i)-(iii) and 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(i)-(ii).

Projected Payments — 12 CFR 1026.37(c) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Projected Payments. Determine whether, under the heading “Projected Payments” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)):

   a. All required fields in the table are completed, follow the formatting and statement requirements, are accurate, and itemize the periodic payments or range of payments together with an itemized estimate of taxes, insurance, assessments, and payments to be made with escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1) – (5));

   b. Each separate periodic payment or range of payments is itemized as follows (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)):

      i. Principal and Interest. The amount payable for principal and interest, including the term “only interest” if the payment or range of payments includes any interest only payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i));

         A. Adjustable Rate Loans. The maximum principal and interest payment must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the maximum possible interest rate. The minimum amounts must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the minimum possible interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i)(A));

         B. Adjustable Rate and Negative Amortization Loans. The maximum principal and interest amounts (after the loan term period for which the loan principal balance may increase) must be determined by assuming the maximum principal amount permitted under the terms of the legal obligation at the end of the loan term period. The minimum amounts must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the minimum possible interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i)(B));

      ii. Mortgage Insurance. The maximum amount payable for mortgage insurance premiums corresponding to the principal and interest payment disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(ii));

      iii. Escrow. The amount payable into an escrow account to pay some or all of the charges.
V. Lending — TILA

described in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iii). If estimates are used for property taxes and homeowner’s insurance, they must reflect (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)):

A. The taxable assessed value of the real property securing the transaction after consummation, including the value of any improvements on the property or to be constructed on the property if known. The disclosure must be made whether or not such construction will be financed from the proceeds of the transaction for property taxes (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(i)); and

B. The replacement costs of the property during the initial year after the transaction, defined as premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of ownership or use of property (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(ii));

iv. Total Monthly Payment. The total periodic payment, calculated as the sums disclosed as the “Principal and Interest,” “Mortgage Insurance,” and “Escrow.” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iv));

NOTE: The headings noted for the Projected Payments table must be listed under the master heading “Payment Calculation” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(i)).

a. If the amount of a periodic monthly payment may change, additional, separate periodic payments or range of payments have been disclosed. Events requiring additional disclosure(s) include: (i) the change of the periodic principal and interest payment or range of such payments, (ii) a scheduled balloon payment, (iii) the automatic termination of mortgage insurance, or (iv) the anniversary of the due date of the initial periodic payment or range of payments immediately following the occurrence of a change in the principal and interest payment or range of such payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(i));

b. The creditor has met the following in disclosing a range of payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)):

i. The creditor has disclosed both the minimum and maximum amount for both the principal and interest payment and the total periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii));

ii. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments where multiple events occur during a single year or an event occurs during the same year as the initial periodic payment or range of payments. If the event occurs during the same year as the initial periodic payment or range of payments, the creditor has disclosed the range that would apply during the year in which the events will occur (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(B));

iv. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments if the periodic principal and interest payment may adjust based on index rates at the time an interest rate adjustment may occur (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(C));

c. The creditor has not disclosed more than four separate periodic payments or ranges of payments. (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)):

i. If additional separate periodic payments or range of payments disclosures are required after the third separate periodic payment or range of payment disclosure, and the transaction does not involve a balloon payment, determine whether the creditor has disclosed the additional separate periodic payment or range of payments as a single fourth range of payments disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(i));

ii. If additional separate periodic payments or range of payments disclosures are required and the transaction involves a final balloon payment, determine whether the creditor has disclosed the additional separate periodic payment or range of payments as a single range of payments after the second separate periodic payment disclosure. Disclosure of the final balloon payment must appear as the final disclosure, under the heading “Final Payment.” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)(A), 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(iii)); and

iii. The automatic termination of mortgage insurance requires disclosure of an additional separate periodic payment or range of payments only if the total number of separate periodic payments or ranges of payments does not exceed three (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)(B));

iv. Each separate periodic payment or range of payments must be disclosed under a subheading stating the years of the loan during which that payment or range of payments will apply. The years must be disclosed in sequence of whole years from the due date of the initial periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(ii));

NOTE: See the Narrative for further discussion of requirements related to the Projected Payments table.

d. Taxes, Insurance, and Assessments. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)):

i. The sum of all mortgage-related obligations, expressed as a monthly amount, even if no escrow account for the payment of some or any of such charges will be established (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(ii));

NOTE: Mortgage-related obligations, as used here, takes the definition used in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8); however, it does not include amounts identified in 12 CFR 1026.4(b)(5). Amounts that must be disclosed as “Taxes, Insurance & Assessment” include premiums or other charges for credit life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance; premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property; or premiums or charges paid for debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage. (12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8))

ii. A statement that the mortgage-related obligations disclosed can increase over time (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(iii)). If estimates are used for property taxes and homeowner’s insurance, they must reflect (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)):

A. The taxable assessed value of the real property securing the transaction after consummation, including the value of any improvements on the property or to be constructed on the property if known. The disclosure must be made whether or not such construction will be financed from the proceeds of the transaction for property taxes (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(i)); and

B. The replacement costs of the property during the initial year after the transaction for premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of ownership or use of property (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(ii));

iii. A statement of whether the mortgage-related obligations include payments for property taxes; premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property; or as otherwise identified by 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8). The creditor must disclose whether the amounts will be paid by the creditor using escrow account funds. (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(iv));

iv. A statement that the consumer must pay separately any mortgage-related obligations that are not paid by the creditor using escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(v));

v. A reference to the escrow account information contained on page 2 of the Loan Estimate, captioned “Initial Escrow Payment at Closing” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(vi)).

Costs at Closing – 12 CFR 1026.37(d) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Costs at Closing. Determine whether, under the heading “Costs at Closing” the creditor discloses the Estimated Closing Costs (including Loan Costs and Other Costs, less Lender Credits) and the Estimated Cash to Close (including Closing Costs), based upon the calculations required by 12 CFR 1026.37(f), (g), and (h) (and found on page 2 of the Loan Estimate). (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1))

2. Optional Alternative Table for Transactions without a Seller. Determine whether, for transactions that do not involve a seller, the creditor chose to use the alternative “Cash to Close” table. If so, determine whether the amount is calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv) (Calculating Cash to Close), includes a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer; and includes a statement referring the consumer to the alternative “Calculating Cash to Close” table pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2) and the model form found in Appendix H-24(G). (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(2))

NOTE: See the Narrative for further discussion of requirements related to the Costs at Closing table.

Website Disclosure – 12 CFR 1026.37(e) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Website Reference. Determine whether the creditor discloses that the consumer may obtain general information and tools on the Bureau’s website and has included a link to the site specified in 12 CFR 1026.37(e). (12 CFR 1026.37(e))

Closing Cost Details: Loan Costs – 12 CFR 1026.37(f) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Loan Costs. Determine on page 2 whether, under the heading “Loan Costs,” the creditor makes the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.37(f)):

a. Origination charges. Accurately itemized to reflect each amount and a subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay to each creditor and loan originator for originating and extending the credit. Determine whether the points paid to the creditor to reduce the interest rate are itemized separately, as both a percentage of the amount of credit extended and a dollar amount, and using the label “% of Loan Amount (Points).” Determine whether points paid is the first item listed. If points to reduce the interest rate are not paid, this disclosure must be left blank (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1));

b. Services You Cannot Shop For. An accurate itemization, limited to 13 items, of each amount and subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay for settlement services that the consumer cannot shop for and that are provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include “Title” as an introductory description (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(2));

c. Services You Can Shop For. An accurate itemization, limited to 14 items, of each amount and subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay for settlement services that the consumer can shop for and that are provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include “Title” as an introductory description (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(3));

d. Total Loan Costs. An accurate sum of the subtotals required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) as Origination Charges, Services You Cannot Shop For and Services You Can Shop For (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(4)); and

e. Other than as noted in item 1.a. above, determine that items are ordered alphabetically by label under the applicable subheading. If there are more than the maximum allowable number of line items, determine that the remaining charges are disclosed in the aggregate in the last line as “Additional Charges.” (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(5) and (f)(6))

Closing Cost Details: Other Costs – 12 CFR 1026.37(g) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Other Costs. Determine whether the creditor makes the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.37(g));

a. Taxes and Other Government Fees. Accurately itemized to reflect amounts to be paid to state and local governments for taxes and other government fees, including subtotals for recording fees and other taxes. A separate line must be included for transfer taxes paid by the consumer. If not charged to the consumer, these fields must be left blank ((12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1));

b. Prepaids. Accurately itemized to reflect amounts to be paid by the consumer in advance of the first scheduled payment and the subtotals of all such amounts. The disclosures must follow the required order and include the number of months and the total dollar amount to be paid at consummation for homeowner’s insurance and mortgage insurance premiums; the prepaid interest to be paid at consummation, based on daily interest, number of days, interest rate, and the total to be collected; the number of months for which property taxes are to be paid; and the amount the consumer will pay at consummation. If any of these items are not charged to the consumer, the field must be left blank. A maximum of three additional items may be disclosed (including applicable time period covered by the payment at consummation and total to be paid) as Prepaids (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2));

c. Initial Escrow Payment at Closing. Accurately itemized to reflect the amounts that the consumer will be expected to place into an escrow account at consummation to be applied to recurring periodic charges and subtotals of all amounts. The disclosure must provide the amount escrowed each month, the number of months of escrow, and the total amount to be paid into the escrow account by the consumer at consummation. Homeowner’s insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, and property taxes must be separately subtotaled. If any of these items are not charged to the consumer, that field must be left blank. A maximum of five additional items may be disclosed as part of Initial Escrow Payment at Closing (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3));

d. Other. An accurate itemization of costs that the consumer is likely to pay, or has contracted with a person other than the creditor or loan originator to pay, at closing and of which the creditor is aware at the time of issuing the Loan Estimate. Determine whether the creditor has used a descriptive label for each such amount and provided the subtotal of all such amounts. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include “Title” as an introductory description and whether the parenthetical description “(optional)” is used at the end of the label for items disclosing any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products. A maximum of five items may be disclosed as “Other” (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4));

e. Total Other Costs. An accurate sum of the subtotals for Taxes and Other Government Fees, Prepaids, Initial Escrow Payment at Closing, and Other disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1) through (4) (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(5));

f. Total Closing Costs. Accurate component amounts and sum of the following (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6));

i. D+I. A sum of the Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(i)); and

ii. Lender Credits. The amount of any lender credits, disclosed as a negative number. If no such amount is disclosed, this line must be left blank (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii));

NOTE: The disclosure of “lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), is required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i). “Lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), represent the sum of non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits. Non-specific lender credits are generalized payments from the creditor to the consumer that do not pay for a particular fee on the disclosures provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1). Specific lender credits are specific payments, such as a credit, rebate, or reimbursement, from a creditor to the consumer to pay for a specific fee. Non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits are negative charges to the consumer. (Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-5).

g. Determine that items follow the alphabetical ordering and addenda restrictions of 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(7) and (g)(8).

Closing Cost Details: Calculating Cash to Close – 12 CFR 1026.37(h) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Calculating Cash to Close. Determine whether, under the heading “Calculating Cash to Close,” the creditor has accurately disclosed the total amount of cash or other funds that must be provided by the consumer at consummation, itemized into the following component amounts: (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1))

a. Total Closing Costs. The amount must be disclosed as a positive number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i));

b. Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount). The amount of any closing costs to be paid out of loan proceeds, disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii));

c. Downpayment/Funds from Borrower. Disclosed:

i. for a purchase transaction, as the amount of the difference between the purchase price of the property and the principal amount of the loan, as a positive number;

ii. for all other transactions, as the estimated funds from the consumer determined in calculating “Funds for Borrower” under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii));

d. Deposit. Disclosed:

i. for a purchase transaction, as the amount that is paid to the seller or held in trust or escrow by an attorney or other party under the terms of the agreement for the sale of the property, as a negative number;

ii. for all other transactions, disclosed as $0 (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iv));

e. Funds for Borrower. Disclosed as the amount of funds for the consumer, determined by subtracting the principal amount of the credit extended (excluding any amount disclosed as closing costs to be financed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)) from the total amount of all existing debt being satisfied in the transaction (except to the extent the satisfaction of such existing debt is disclosed as Other Costs under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v));

i. If the calculation yields a positive number, that amount is disclosed under the heading “Down Payment/Funds from Borrower,” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(B)) and $0 is disclosed under the heading “Funds for Borrower,” under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v)(A));

ii. If the calculation yields a negative amount, the creditor discloses that amount as a negative number under the heading “Funds for Borrower,” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v)) and as $0 under the heading “Down Payment/Funds from Borrower under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(B)) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v)(B));

iii. If the calculation yields “0,” then $0 is disclosed under both headings under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(B) and (h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v)(C));

f. Seller Credits. Determined by totaling the amount the seller will pay for Total Loan Costs under 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(4) and Total Other Costs under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(5), to the extent known. This must be disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vi));

g. Adjustments and Other Credits. Determined by combining the Total Loan Costs (determined under 12 CFR 1026.37(f)) and Total Other Costs (determined under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)) that are paid by persons other than the loan originator, creditor, consumer, or seller, together with any other amounts that are required to be paid by the consumer at closing pursuant to a purchase and sale contract. Must be disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vii)); and

h. Estimated Cash to Close. The sum of the amounts of the components required for Calculating Cash to Close disclosed as under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i) through (vii) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(viii)).

Closing Cost Details: Alternative Calculating Cash to Close Table for Transactions without a Seller – 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Alternative Calculating Cash to Close Table for Transactions Without a Seller. If the transaction does not involve a seller and the creditor has chosen to provide the optional Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table modeled in Appendix H-24(G), determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the total amount of cash or other funds that must be provided by the consumer as consummation, itemized into the following component amounts (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)):

   a. Loan Amount. (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i));
   b. Total Closing Costs. Disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(ii));
   c. Total Payoffs and Payments. Disclosed as the total amount of payoffs and payments to be made to third parties that are not otherwise disclosed, as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii));
   d. Cash to Close. Disclosed as the amount of cash or other funds due from or to the consumer and a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer. The amount must be calculated as the sum of the amounts disclosed under “Loan Amount,” “Total Closing Costs,” and “Total Payoffs and Payments.” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv));
   e. Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount). Disclosed as the sum of the amounts under “Loan Amount,” and “Total Payoffs and Payments.” The sum is disclosed only to the extent it is greater than “0,” and it is less than or equal to the amount disclosed under “Total Closing Costs.” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(v))

NOTE: If a creditor chooses to provide the optional Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller, the alternative table must also be used in the Closing Disclosure.

Closing Cost Details: Adjustable Payment (AP) Table – 12 CFR 1026.37(i) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Adjustable Payment (AP) Table. For loans where the periodic principal and interest payment may change after consummation based on a factor other than an interest rate adjustment, or for seasonal payment products as described in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(E), determine whether the creditor discloses a separate table under the master headings “Closing Cost Details” and “Adjustable Payment (AP) Table” that contains the following information and satisfies the following requirements:

   a. Interest Only Payments. The disclosure states yes or no to the question of whether the transaction is an interest only product under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(B) and, if the answer is yes, the disclosure states the period during which interest only periodic payments are scheduled (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(1));
   b. Optional Payments. The disclosure states yes or no to the question whether the terms of the legal obligation expressly provide that the consumer may elect to pay a specified periodic principal and interest payment in an amount other than the scheduled amount of the payment, and, if the answer is yes, the disclosure states the period during which the consumer may elect to make such payments (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(2));
   c. Step Payments. The disclosure states yes or no to the question whether the transaction is a step payment product under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(C) and, if the answer is yes, the disclosure states the period during which the regular periodic payments are scheduled to increase (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(3));
   d. Seasonal Payments. The disclosure states yes or no to the question whether the transaction is a seasonal payment product under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(E) and, if the answer is yes, the disclosure states the period during which periodic payments are not scheduled (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(4));
   e. Principal and Interest Payments. This label is immediately preceded by the applicable unit period, and the disclosures must contain the following information:

      i. The number of the payment of the first periodic principal and interest payment that may change under the terms of the legal obligation (counting from the first periodic payment due after consummation), and the amount or range of the periodic principal and interest payment for such payment, labeled ‘First Change/Amount’ (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(5)(i));
      ii. The frequency of subsequent changes to the periodic principal and interest payment, labeled “Subsequent Changes” (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(5)(ii)); and
      iii. The maximum periodic principal and interest payment that may occur during the term of the transaction, and the first periodic principal and interest payment that can reach such maximum, counting from the first periodic payment due after consummation, labeled “Maximum Payment” (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(5)(iii)).

Closing Cost Details: Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table – 12 CFR 1026.37(j) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table. If the interest rate may increase after consummation, determine whether the creditor discloses, as a separate table under the master headings “Closing Cost Details” and “Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table,” the following information and satisfies the following requirements: (12 CFR 1026.37(j))

   NOTE: The AIR table is not to appear where it is inapplicable because the interest rate does not adjust after consummation.

   a. Index + Margin. Disclosed if the interest rate may adjust and the product type is not a “Step Rate” under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(B). The disclosure must show the index upon which the adjustments to the interest rate are based and the margin that is added to the index to determine the interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(1));

   b. Interest Rate Adjustments. If the product type is a “Step Rate” and not also an “Adjustable Rate” under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(A), the disclosure must show the maximum amount of any adjustments to the interest rate that are scheduled and predetermined (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(2));

   c. Initial Interest Rate. The disclosure must show the initial interest rate at consummation of the loan transaction (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(3));

   d. Minimum and Maximum Interest Rates. The disclosure must show the minimum and maximum interest rates for the loan, after any introductory period expires (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(4));

   e. Change Frequency. The disclosure must show the month when the interest rate after consummation may first change, calculated from the date interest for the first scheduled periodic payment begins to accrue, labeled “First Change;” and the frequency of interest rate adjustments after the initial adjustment to the interest rate, labeled “Subsequent Changes” (12 CFR 1026.37(j));

   f. Limits on Interest Rate Changes. The disclosures must show the maximum possible change for the first adjustment of the interest rate after consummation, labeled “First Change;” and the maximum possible change for subsequent adjustments of the interest rate after consummation, labeled “Subsequent Changes.” (12 CFR 1026.37(j)

1. Additional Information About This Loan. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses contact and NMLS information as follows:

   a. Lender/Mortgage Broker. The name and “NMLS ID/License ID” for the creditor (“Lender”) and the mortgage broker, if any. If the creditor or mortgage broker has not been assigned an NMLS ID, the license number or other unique identifier issued to the creditor or mortgage broker by the applicable jurisdiction or regulating body must be disclosed, with the abbreviation for the state of the applicable jurisdiction or regulatory body stated before the word “License” in the label, if any (12 CFR 1026.37(k)(1));

   b. Loan Officer. The name and NMLS ID of the individual loan officer of the creditor and the mortgage broker, if any, who is the primary contact for the consumer. If the individual loan officer has not been assigned an NMLS ID, the license number or other unique identifier issued by the applicable jurisdiction or regulating body with which the loan officer is licensed and/or registered shall be disclosed, with the abbreviation for the state of the applicable jurisdiction or regulatory body stated before the word “License” in the label, if any (12 CFR 1026.37(k)(2)); and

   c. Email/Phone (respectively). The email address and telephone number of the loan officer. (12 CFR 1026.37(k)(3))

1. Comparisons. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the following information for comparison purposes and includes the statement “Use these measures to compare this loan with other loans” (12 CFR 1026.37(l)):

   a. In 5 years (12 CFR 1026.37(l)(1));

      i. The total principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment, expressed as a dollar amount, along with the statement “Total you will have paid in principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs;” and

   ii. The principal scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment, expressed as a dollar amount, along with the statement “Principal you will have paid off;”
b. Annual Percentage Rate (APR). Expressed as a percentage, and the statement “Your costs over the loan term expressed as a rate. This is not your interest rate.” (12 CFR 1026.37(l)(2)); and

c. Total Interest Percentage (TIP). The total amount of interest that the consumer will pay over the life of the loan, expressed as a percentage of the amount of credit extended and the statement “The total amount of interest that you will pay over the loan term as a percentage of your loan amount” (12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3).

Additional Information About This Loan: Other Considerations – 12 CFR 1026.37(m) (Page 3 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Other Considerations. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the following (12 CFR 1026.37(m):

a. Appraisal. For transactions subject to 15 U.S.C. 1639h or 1691(e), as implemented in this part or Regulation B, 12 CFR part 1002, respectively, a statement, labeled “Appraisal” that explains (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(1)):

i. The creditor may order an appraisal to determine the value of the property identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(6) and may charge the consumer for that appraisal;

ii. The creditor will promptly provide the consumer a copy of any appraisal, even if the transaction is not consummated; and

iii. The consumer may choose to pay for an additional appraisal of the property for the consumer's use;

b. Assumption. A statement of whether a subsequent purchaser of the property may be permitted to assume the remaining loan obligation on its original terms (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(2));

c. Homeowner's Insurance. At the option of the creditor, a statement that homeowner's insurance is required on the property and that the consumer may choose the insurance provider (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(3);

d. Late Payment. A statement detailing any charge that may be imposed for a late payment, stated as a dollar amount or percentage charge of the late payment amount, and the number of days that a payment must be late to trigger the late payment fee (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(4);

e. Refinance. The following statement: “Refinancing this loan will depend on your future financial situation, the property value, and market conditions. You may not be able to refinance this loan.” (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(5));

f. Servicing. A statement of whether the creditor intends to service the loan or transfer the loan to another servicer (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(6);

g. Liability after Foreclosure. If the purpose of the credit transaction is to refinance an extension of credit as described in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(ii), a brief statement that certain state law protections against liability for any deficiency after foreclosure may be lost, the potential consequences of the loss of such protections, and a statement that the consumer should consult an attorney for additional information (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(7)); and

h. Construction Loans. In a transaction that involves a new construction, if the creditor reasonably expects settlement will occur more than 60 days after the Loan Estimate is issued and wishes to retain the option to provide a revised disclosure, a clear and conspicuous statement that a revised disclosure may be issued any time prior to 60 days before consummation. (12 CFR 1026.37(m)(8))

Additional Information About This Loan: Confirm Receipt – 12 CFR 1026.37(n) (Page 3 of the Loan Estimate)

1. Confirm Receipt. If the creditor chooses to provide a signature statement, determine whether the creditor accurately provides the following: “By signing, you are only confirming that you have received this form. You do not have to accept this loan because you have signed or received this form.” If the creditor does not include a line for the consumer's signature, the creditor discloses the following statement (labeled “Loan Acceptance”): “You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application.” (12 CFR 1026.37(n))

Form of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.37(o)

1. Form of disclosures.47 Determine whether the creditor made the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.37 clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep, with disclosures grouped together and segregated from everything else, containing only the information required by 12 CFR 1026.37 (a) through (n), made in the same order, and positioned relative to the master headings, headings, subheadings, labels, and similar designations in the same manner, as shown in form H-24, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(1) and (2):

47 Limited changes to the disclosure forms are permitted, including substitution of “monthly” with the applicable unit period, making disclosures in languages other than English, and the creditor’s logo in the space allotted for the identification of the creditor. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(5)).
V. Lending — TILA

a. Form H-24 required. Determine whether, for a transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(c) that is a federally related mortgage loan, as defined in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.2, the creditor uses form H-24, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(i)); or

b. Substantially similar disclosures. Determine whether the creditor makes the disclosures with headings, content, and format substantially similar to form H-24, set forth in Appendix H for any other transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.37 and (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(ii))

c. Rounding - nearest dollar. Determine whether the creditor accurately rounds the following figures to the nearest whole dollar disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A)):

i. The dollar amounts for Loan Terms required by 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(7), (i.e., adjustments after consummation and details about prepayment penalty and balloon payments);

ii. The dollar amounts for Projected Payments or range of payments required by 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii) (i.e., minimum and maximum amounts of principal and interest for projected periodic payments or range of payments);

iii. The dollar amounts for Mortgage Insurance required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(ii) (i.e., itemization of maximum amount of mortgage insurance premiums);

iv. The dollar amounts for Escrow required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iii);

v. The dollar amounts for Taxes, Insurance, and Assessments required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(ii);

vi. The dollar amounts for Loan Costs required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.37(f) (i.e., Origination Charges, Services You Cannot Shop For, Services You Can Shop For, and Total Loan Costs);

vii. The dollar amounts for Other Costs required by 12 CFR 1026.37(g) (i.e., Taxes and Other Government Fees, Prepaids, Initial Escrow Payment at Closing, Other, Total Other Costs, and Total Closing Costs) except as noted for percentages;

viii. The dollar amounts for Calculating Cash to Close required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.37(h);

ix. The dollar amounts for the Adjustable Payment (AP) Table required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.37(i); and

x. The dollar amounts for Comparisons required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.37(l).

d. No rounding - dollars. Determine that the creditor did not round the following: (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A))

i. The per diem amount required by 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)(iii) (prepaid interest paid per day); and

ii. The figures disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3)(i)-(iii) (initial escrow payment at closing for homeowner’s insurance, mortgage insurance, and property taxes) and 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3)(v) (additional escrow items).

e. Loan amount. Determine that the creditor did not round the loan amount disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and truncated whole numbers at the decimal point. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(B))

f. Total periodic payment. Determine that the creditor accurately rounds the total periodic payment disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iv), if any of the component amounts of the figures disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A) are rounded to the nearest whole dollar. (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(C))

g. Percentages. Determine that the creditor does not round the following percentage amounts and discloses them using up to the required number of decimal places (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(ii)):

i. Three decimal places. The Annual Percentage Rate (APR) disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(2) is disclosed up to three decimal places, and if the amount is a whole number, the amount is truncated at the decimal point.

ii. Two to three decimal places. The following percentages are disclosed up to two or three decimal places, and if the amount is a whole number, the amount is truncated at the decimal point for:

   A. Interest rate and adjustments after consummation, disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2) and (6);

   B. Points as a percentage of the loan amount, disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1)(i);
C. Percentage of prepaid interest to be paid per day, disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)(iii);

D. Index + Margin, Initial Interest Rate, Minimum/Maximum Interest Rate, and Limits on Interest Rate Changes (as disclosed on the Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table), disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(j); and

E. Total interest percentage, disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3).(12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(ii)).

Closing Disclosure – 12 CFR 1026.38(a)

1. Determine whether the disclosures required for the Closing Disclosure are accurately completed and include the statement: “This form is a statement of final loan terms and closing costs. Compare this document with your Loan Estimate.” (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(2))

Closing Information – 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3) (Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Closing Information. Determine whether all fields required by 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3) are complete and accurate:
   a. Date Issued. Indicating the date disclosures are delivered (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(i));
   b. Closing Date. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(ii));
   c. Disbursement Date. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(iii));
   e. File #. Disclosing the identification number assigned to the transaction by the settlement agent (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(v));
   f. Property. The address or location of the property as disclosed in the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vi)); and
   g. Sale Price/Appraised Prop. Value. For transactions where there is a seller, the sale price, and where there is no seller, the appraised property value (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)(A)-(B)). If the creditor disclosed an estimated value, the creditor must use the label “Estimated Prop. Value.” (Comment 38.(a)(3)(vii)-1)

Transaction Information – 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4) (Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Transaction information. Determine whether all fields required by 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4) are complete and accurate:
   a. Borrower. The consumer’s name and mailing address (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4)(i));
   b. Seller. Where applicable, the seller’s name and mailing address (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4)(ii));
   c. Lender. The name of the creditor making the disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4)(iii)).

Loan Information – 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5) (Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Loan Information. Determine whether all fields required by 12 CFR 1026.38(5) are complete and accurate:
   a. Loan Term. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(i));
   b. Purpose. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(ii));
   c. Product. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(iii));
   d. Loan Type. (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(iv));
   e. Loan ID #: (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(v)); and
   f. MIC #: The case number for any mortgage insurance policy, if required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(vi)).

Loan Terms – 12 CFR 1026.38(b) (Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Loan Terms. Determine whether the creditor discloses, in a separate table labeled “Loan Terms,” the information required to be disclosed on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(b) reflecting the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (12 CFR 1026.38(b)).

Projected Payments – 12 CFR 1026.38(c) (Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Projected Payments. Determine whether the creditor discloses, in a separate table labeled “Projected Payments,” the projected payments or range of payments (in the same manner as required on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(b) reflecting the terms of the legal obligation at consummation. Determine whether the creditor referred to the Escrow Account disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7) and calculated the estimated escrow payments (12 CFR 1026.38(c)(1)-2):
   a. For transactions subject to RESPA, under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17 (12 CFR 1026.38(c)(1)(i)); and
   b. For transactions not subject to RESPA, either calculated under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17, or in the manner set forth in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5), (12 CFR 1026.38(c)(1)(ii)).
V. Lending — TILA

1. Costs at Closing. Determine whether the creditor discloses:

   a. Closing Costs. Disclosed as the sum of the dollar amounts disclosed on page 2 of the Closing Disclosure, pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(f)(4) (Loan Costs), 12 CFR 1026.38(g)(5) (Other Costs), and 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(3) (Lender Credits), together with a statement referring the consumer to the disclosures on page 2 (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(i)(A)-(E));

   b. Cash to Close. Disclosed as the sum of the dollar amounts calculated in accordance with the Calculating Cash to Close table (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(9)(ii)), together with a statement referring the consumer to the disclosures on page 2 (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(ii)(A) – (B)); or

   c. Cash to Close (Alternative for transactions without a seller). Disclosed as the amount calculated according to 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(5)(ii), together with a statement of whether the amount is due from or to the consumer and a reference to the Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(e), (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2)(i) – (iii)).

Closing Cost Details: Loan Costs – 12 CFR 1026.38(f) (Page 2 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Loan Costs. Determine whether the creditor disclosed all costs associated with the transaction, with columns stating whether the charge was borrower-paid at or before closing, seller-paid at or before closing, or paid by others, under the following subheadings:

   a. Origination Charges. Itemized amounts paid for charges disclosed on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1)) and the total of Borrower-Paid amounts paid at or before closing, together with:

      i. The compensation paid by the creditor to a third-party loan originator, and

      ii. The name of the third-party loan originator receiving payment (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1));

   b. Services Borrower Did Not Shop For. Itemized costs for each settlement service the creditor required but did not allow the consumer to shop for, with name of recipient, amount, and total costs designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing. Items listed in the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(3)) are disclosed here if the consumer was provided a written list of settlement service providers under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vii)(C), and the consumer selected a settlement service provider from that written list (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(2));

   c. Services Borrower Did Shop For. Itemized costs for each service required by the creditor, that the consumer shopped for in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vii)(A), with the amount, the name of recipient, and the total costs designated as Borrower-Paid at or before closing. If these items were disclosed on the Loan Estimate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(3), they are disclosed here if the consumer was provided a written list of settlement service providers and did not select a settlement service provider from that written list (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(3));

   d. Total Loan Costs (Borrower-Paid). The sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(f)(5) as Borrower-Paid for the origination charge, services the borrower did not shop for, and services the borrower did shop for (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(4));

   e. Loan Costs Subtotals. Calculation of the total borrower-paid costs at or before closing, showing each subtotal for the origination charge, services the borrower did not shop for, and services the borrower did shop for. (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(5))

Closing Cost Details: Other Costs – 12 CFR 1026.38(g) (Page 2 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Other Costs. Determine whether the creditor disclosed all costs associated with the transaction (other than those disclosed in the “Loan Costs” table) with columns stating whether the charge was borrower-paid at or before closing, seller-paid at or before closing or paid by others, including:

   a. Taxes and Other Government Fees. All taxes and government fees to be paid by the borrower at or before closing, including recording fees and transfer taxes, accurately itemized. Determine that the itemized transfer tax is accompanied by the name of the government entity assessing the transfer tax. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(1)(i)-(ii))

   b. Prepaids. Accurately itemized prepaid charges described in the borrower’s Loan Estimate as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2); the name of the person ultimately receiving the prepaid payment or the government entity assessing the property tax charged; and the total of all amounts designated as Borrower-Paid at or before closing. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(2))

   c. Initial Escrow Payment at Closing. Accurate itemizations of each escrow amount required at closing as described on the borrower’s Loan Estimate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3) (e.g., homeowner’s insurance, mortgage insurance, property taxes, etc.).
applicable aggregate adjustments pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.17(d)(2); and the total of all amounts designated as Borrower-Paid at or before closing. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3))

d. Other. All charges, accurately itemized, for services required or related to the borrower’s transaction that are in addition to the charges disclosed in the Loan Costs table (12 CFR 1026.38(f)) and in the preceding 12 CFR of the Other Costs table (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(1)-(3)), for services required or obtained in the real estate closing by the consumer, the seller, or other party and the name of the person ultimately receiving the payment; and the total of all such itemized amounts that are designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing, with the applicable designations for items that are optional or are components of title insurance services. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(4)(i)-(ii))

e. Total Other Costs (Borrower-Paid). Accurately totaled and disclosed sum of all amounts disclosed as Borrower-Paid. (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(5))

f. Other Costs Subtotals. Accurately added individual subtotals in the “Closing Cost Details – Other Costs” table disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(f) and (g). (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(6))

Calculating Cash to Close – 12 CFR 1026.38(i) (Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Calculating Cash to Close. Determine whether the creditor, for each of the following items, accurately includes the amount from the Loan Estimate, compared to the amount disclosed in the “Final” column, and provides the necessary answer to the question “Did This Change?” (with items in the latter column disclosed more prominently than other disclosures) (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(i)-(iii)):

a. Total Closing Costs. The Total Closing Costs on the Calculating Cash to Close table of the Loan Estimate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i) compared to the final “Total Closing Costs” disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(1), and:

i. If the amounts are different (unless due to rounding), the creditor has provided: (12 CFR 1026.38(h)(1)(i)-(iii))

A. A statement of that fact, and (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(1))

B. If the difference in the “Total Closing Costs” is attributable to differences in itemized charges that are included in either or both subtotals, a statement that the consumer should see the Total Loan Costs (under 12 CFR 1026.38(f)(4)) and Total Other Costs (under 12 CFR 1026.38(g)(5)) subtotals (together with references to such disclosures), as applicable; and (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(A)(2))

C. If the increase exceeds the limitations on increases in closing costs under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3), a statement that such increase exceeds the legal limits by the dollar amount. of the excess, and if any refund is provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v), a statement directing the consumer to the disclosure required under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(3). The dollar amount must equal the sum total of all excesses of the limitations on increases in closing costs under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3), taking into account the different methods of calculating excesses of the limitations on increases in closing costs under 12 CFR 1026.19(c)(3)(i) and (ii). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(3))

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(i) (i.e., amount copied over from the Loan Estimate), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(B))

b. Closing Costs Paid Before Closing. Under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the dollar amount “$0,” compared to the final amount of “Total Closing Costs” disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2) and designated as Borrower-Paid before closing, stated as a negative number, and (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(i)-(iii)):

i. If these amounts are different (unless the difference is due to rounding), the creditor has provided a statement of that fact, along with a statement that the consumer paid such amounts prior to consummation of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(iii)(A)); or if the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(i) (i.e., $0), a statement of that fact; (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(iii)(B))

c. Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount). Under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the amount disclosed on Calculating Cash to Close table on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii), compared to the actual amount of the closing costs that are to be paid out of loan proceeds, if any, stated as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(3)(i)-(iii)); and

i. If the amounts are different (unless the difference is due to rounding), a statement of that fact, along with a statement that the consumer included the closing costs in the loan amount, which increased the loan amount (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(3)(iii)(A)); or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(3)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is equal to the amount disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(3)(i) (i.e., amount copied over from the Loan Estimate), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(3)(iii)(B))

d. Down Payment/Funds from Borrower. For purchase transactions, under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the Down Payment/Funds from Buyer amount disclosed on the Calculating Cash to Close table on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii), compared to the difference between the purchase price of the property and the principal amount of the credit extended, stated as a positive number in the “Final” column. For transactions that are not purchases, the amount in the “Final” column is determined according to 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv), discussed below. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(i)-(ii))

i. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is different, unless due to rounding, from the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(i) (i.e., amount copied over from the Loan Estimate), a statement of that fact, along with a statement that the consumer increased or decreased this payment and can see further details in the “Summaries of Transactions” table (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(iii)(A)); or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(ii) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(i), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(iii)(B))

e. Deposit. Under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the Deposit amount disclosed on the Calculating Cash to Close table on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iv), compared to the amount listed as “Deposit” on the Summaries of Transactions table on the Closing Document pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(ii), stated as a negative number, (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(5)(i)-(ii)) and

i. If the amounts are different, unless due to rounding, a statement of that fact, along with a statement that the consumer increased or decreased this payment, as applicable, and that the consumer should see the details disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(ii) (i.e., in Section L in the Summaries of Transactions table) (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(5)(iii)(A)); or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(5)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(5)(i), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(5)(iii)(B))
f. Funds for Borrower. Under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the amount disclosed on the Calculating Cash to Close table on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v), compared to the amount listed in the Final column calculated pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv) (NOTE: see next item for calculation); (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(i)-(iii)), and

i. If the amounts are different, unless due to rounding, a statement of that fact, along with a statement that the consumer's available funds from the loan amount have increased or decreased, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iii)(A)); or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(i) (i.e., amount copied over from the Loan Estimate), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iii)(B))

g. Funds for Borrower. Determine whether the creditor accurately calculates the “Funds for Borrower” for non-purchase transactions and the final “Funds for Borrower” by subtracting the principal amount of the credit extended (excluding any amount disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(3)(ii)) from the total amount of all existing debt being satisfied in the real estate closing disclosed on the Summaries of Transactions table pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v) (except to the extent the satisfaction of such existing debt is disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(g)), and (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv)).

i. If the calculation yields a positive number, it is disclosed as described above in the Final Down Payment/Funds from Borrower column under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(ii)(B), and $0 is disclosed as described above in the Final Funds for Borrower column under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(ii). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv)(A))

ii. If the calculation under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv) yields a negative number, it is disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(ii), as a negative number in the Final Funds for Borrower column described above, and $0 is disclosed as described above in the Final Down Payment/Funds from Borrower column under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(ii)(B). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv)(B))

iii. If the calculation under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv) yields $0, then $0 is disclosed in both the Final Down Payment/Funds from Borrower column under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4)(ii)(B) and in the Final Funds for Borrower column described above under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(ii)(i). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(6)(iv)(C))

h. Seller Credits. Under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the amount disclosed on the Calculating Cash to Close table on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vi), compared to the amount listed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(v), stated as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(7)(i)-(ii)), and

i. If the amounts are different, unless due to rounding, a statement of that fact, along with a statement that the consumer should see the details disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(v) (i.e., in Section L in the Summaries of Transactions table) (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(7)(iii)(A)), or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(7)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(7)(i) (i.e., amount copied over from the Loan Estimate), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(7)(iii)(B))

i. Adjustments and Other Credits. Under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the amount disclosed on the Calculating Cash to Close table on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vii), compared to the amount listed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(iii) and (v) through (x) (see exam procedures below on Itemization of Amounts Due From Borrower) reduced by the total of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(vi) through (xi) (see exam procedures below on Itemization of Amounts Already Paid By or On Behalf of Borrower). (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(8)(i)-(ii))

i. If the amounts are different, unless due to rounding, a statement of that fact, along with a statement that the consumer should see the details disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(iii) and (v) through (x) (i.e., in Sections K and L in the Summaries of Transactions table) (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(8)(iii)(A)); or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(8)(ii) (i.e., amount in the Final column) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(8)(i) (i.e., amount copied over from the Loan Estimate), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(8)(iii)(B))

j. Cash to Close. Under the subheading “Loan Estimate,” the amount disclosed on the Calculating Cash to Close table on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(viii), compared to the amount listed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1) through (i)(8), and

1. Determine whether, for transactions without a seller, the creditor uses the alternative table in the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)), and if so, determine whether the creditor provides, instead of the table described in 12 CFR 1026.38(i), a separate table, “Calculating Cash to Close,” with the statement “Use this table to see what has changed from your Loan Estimate.” Determine whether the table includes:

a. Loan Amount. Disclosed on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and the final loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(b), disclosed more prominently than other disclosures in this section, with the question “Did this change?” If the amounts are different (unless due to rounding), a statement of that fact along with a statement of whether this amount increased or decreased. If there is no change, a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(i) – (iii))

b. Total Closing Costs. Disclosed on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(ii) and the final Total Closing Costs disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(1), disclosed as a negative number and disclosed more prominently than other disclosures, with the question “Did this change?” If there is no change, a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(2)) If the amounts are different (unless due to rounding):

i. A statement of that fact.

ii. If there is a change because of differences in itemized charges that are included in either or both subtotals, a statement that the consumer should look at the Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs subtotals disclosed below, together with references to those disclosures (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(2)(iii)(A)(2)); and

iii. If the increase exceeds the legal limits for increases in closing costs under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3); a statement of that fact, the dollar amount of the excess; and, if any refund is provided, a reference to the disclosure required for including the refund in a lender credit under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(3). (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(2)(A)(3))

c. Closing Costs Paid before Closing. Disclosed under the subheading “ Loan Estimate,” the amount of $0; and under the subheading “ Final,” any amount designated as Borrower-Paid before closing under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2), disclosed as a positive number.

Determine whether these disclosures are disclosed more prominently than other disclosures, with the question “Did This Change?” If so (unless the difference is due to rounding), a statement of that fact. If there is no change, a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(3))

i. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(3)(ii) is different from the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(3)(i), unless due to rounding, a statement of that fact along with a statement that the consumer paid such amounts prior to consummation (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(3)(iii)(A)); or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(3)(ii) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(3)(i), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(3)(iii)(B))

d. Total Payoffs and Payments. Includes the total payoffs and payments disclosed on the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii) and the final total amount of payoffs and payments made to third parties not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B), to the extent known, disclosed as a negative number. Determine whether these disclosures are disclosed more prominently than other disclosures with the question “Did This Change?” If so (unless the difference is due to rounding), a statement of that fact. If there is no change, a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4))

i. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(ii) is different than the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(i)(unless the difference is due to rounding), a statement that the consumer included the closing costs in the loan amount, which increased the loan amount, along with a reference to the “Payoffs and Payments” table that may be added pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(viii)(B)) (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)); or

ii. If the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(ii) is equal to the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(i), a statement of that fact. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(iii)(B))

e. Cash to Close. The estimated Cash to Close disclosed on the Loan Estimate, along with the statement of whether the estimated amount is due from or to the consumer, and a disclosure of the final amount due from or to the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(5)(i) – (ii))

f. Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount). Disclosed as the sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(ii) and (e)(4)(ii) (i.e., the amounts in the Final Column of the Loan Amount and Total Payoffs and Payments). However, the amount is disclosed only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than or equal to the sum disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(1) (Total Closing Costs) minus the sum disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2) designated as Borrower-Paid before closing. (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(6))

1. Due from Borrower at Closing. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the total amount due from the consumer at closing, calculated as the sum of items required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ii) through (x) (i.e., the items described in this procedure), excluding items paid from funds other than closing funds as described in 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(4)(i). Determine whether the creditor completes the summary of the borrower’s transaction as follows: (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1))

   a. Sale Price of Property. The amount of the contract sales price of the property being sold in a purchase real estate transaction, excluding the price of any tangible personal property if the consumer and seller have agreed to a separate price for such items (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ii));

   c. Closing Costs Paid at Closing. The total amount of closing costs disclosed that are designated Borrower-Paid at closing, calculated pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2) and (h)(3) (see procedure above regarding Closing Costs Subtotals)(12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(iv));

   d. A description and the amount of any additional items that the seller has paid prior to the real estate closing, but reimbursed by the consumer at the real estate closing, and a description and the amount of any other items owed by the consumer at the real estate closing not otherwise disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), or (j) (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v));

   e. The description “Adjustments for Items Paid by Seller in Advance” (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(vi));

   f. City/Town Taxes. The prorated amount of any prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(vii));

   g. County Taxes. The prorated amount of any prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(viii));

   h. Assessments. The prorated amount of any prepaid assessments due from the consumer to reimburse the seller at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ix)); and

   i. A description and the amount of any additional items paid by the seller prior to the real estate closing that are due from the consumer at the real estate closing (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(x)).

Borrower’s Transaction – Itemization of Amounts Paid Already By or On Behalf of Borrower at Closing (Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Paid Already by or on Behalf of Borrower at Closing. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the sum of the amounts disclosed in 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(ii) through (xi) (i.e., the items described in this procedure), excluding items paid from funds other than closing funds as described in 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(4)(i). Determine whether the creditor accurately completes the summary of borrower’s transaction as follows (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(i)):

   a. Deposit. Any amount that is paid to the seller or held in trust or escrow by an attorney or other party under the terms of the agreement for the sale of the property (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(ii));

   b. Loan Amount. The amount of the consumer's new loan amount or first user loan as disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(b) (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iii));

   c. Existing Loan(s) Assumed or Taken Subject To. The amount of any existing loans that the consumer is assuming, or any loans subject to which the consumer is taking title to the property (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iv));

   d. Seller Credit. The total amount of money that the seller will provide at the real estate closing as a lump sum not otherwise itemized to pay for loan costs as determined by 12 CFR 1026.38(f) and other costs as determined by 12 CFR 1026.38(g) and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(v));
V. Lending — TILA

e. Other Credits. A description and amount of other items paid by or on behalf of the consumer and not otherwise disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), (h), and (j)(2) (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(vi));

f. The description “Adjustments for Items Unpaid by Seller” (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(vii));

g. City/Town Taxes. The prorated amount of any unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(viii));

h. County Taxes. The prorated amount of any unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(ix));

i. Assessments. The prorated amount of any unpaid assessments due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(x)); and

j. A description and the amount of any additional items which have not yet been paid and which the consumer is expected to pay after the real estate closing, but which are attributable in part to a period of time prior to the real estate closing (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(xi)).

1. Calculation. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the total amount due from, and already paid by, the consumer at closing by the following calculation: (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(3))

a. Total Due from Borrower at Closing. The amount disclosed in the Closing Disclosure, on the line captioned “Due from Borrower at Closing” (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(3)(i));

b. Total Paid Already by or on Behalf of Borrower at Closing. The amount disclosed in the Closing Disclosure, on the line captioned “Paid Already by or on Behalf of Borrower at Closing,” if any, disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(3)(ii)); and

c. Cash to Close. A statement that the disclosed amount is due from or to the consumer, and the amount due from or to the consumer at the real estate closing, calculated by the sum of the amounts disclosed as the “Total Due from Borrower at Closing” and “Total Paid Already by or on Behalf of Borrower at Closing” (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(3)(iii)).

1. Paid Outside of Closing. Determine whether the creditor discloses other costs that are not paid out of closing costs but would otherwise be disclosed; describes the funds as “Paid Outside of Closing” or the abbreviation “P.O.C.,” and includes the name of the party making the payment. (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(4)(ii))

Summaries of Transactions: Seller’s Transaction – 12 CFR 1026.38(k) (Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Due to Seller at Closing. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the total amount due to the seller at the real estate closing, calculated as the sum of items required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ii) through (ix) (i.e., the items in this procedure), excluding items paid from funds other than closing funds as described in 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(4)(i). Determine whether the creditor accurately completes the summary of seller’s transaction as follows (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(i)):

   a. Sale Price of Property. The amount of the contract sales price of the property being sold, excluding the price of any tangible personal property if the consumer and seller have agreed to a separate price for such items (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(i));

   b. Sale Price of Any Personal Property Included in Sale. The amount of the sales price of any tangible personal property excluded from the contract sales price pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ii) (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(iii));

   c. A description and the amount of other items paid to the seller by the consumer pursuant to the contract of sale or other agreement, such as charges that were not disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37 on the Loan Estimate or items paid by the seller prior to the real estate closing but reimbursed by the consumer at the real estate closing (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(iv));

   d. The description “Adjustments for Items Paid by Seller in Advance” (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(v));

   e. City/Town Taxes. The prorated amount of any prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(vi));

   f. County Taxes. The prorated amount of any prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(vii));

g. Assessments. The prorated amount of any unpaid assessments due from the consumer to reimburse the seller at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(viii)); and

h. A description and the amount of additional items paid by the seller prior to the real estate closing that are reimbursed by the consumer at the real estate closing (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ix)).

1. Due from Seller at Closing. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the sum of the amounts disclosed in 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(ii) through 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(xiii) (i.e., the items in this procedure), excluding items paid from funds other than closing funds described in 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(4)(i). Determine whether the creditor accurately completes the summary of the seller’s transaction as follows (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(i)):

   a. Excess Deposit. The amount of any excess deposit disbursed prior to closing, (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(ii));

   b. Closing Costs Paid at Closing. The amount of closing costs designated Seller-Paid at closing and disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2) (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(iii));

   c. Existing Loan(s) Assumed or Taken Subject To. The amount of any existing loans assumed or taken subject to by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(iv));

   d. Payoff of First Mortgage Loan. The amount of a first lien loan secured by the property being sold that will be paid off at closing (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(v));

   e. Payoff of Second Mortgage Loan. The amount of any loan secured by a second lien on the property that will be paid off as part of the real estate closing (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(vi));

   f. Seller Credit. The total amount of seller funds to be provided at closing as a lump sum that has not otherwise been itemized to pay for loan costs as determined by 12 CFR 1026.38(f) and other costs as determined by 12 CFR 1026.38(g) and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(vii));

   g. A description and amount of all other items paid to be paid by the seller at closing, including any lien-related payoffs, fees, or obligations (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(viii));

   h. The description “Adjustments for Items Unpaid by Seller” (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(ix));

   i. City/Town Taxes. The prorated amount of unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(x));

   j. County Taxes. The prorated amount of any unpaid taxes due from the seller to the consumer at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(xi));

   k. Assessments. The prorated amount of any unpaid assessments due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at the real estate closing, and the time period corresponding to that amount (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(xii)); and

   l. A description and the amount of any additional items which have not yet been paid and which the consumer is expected to pay after the real estate closing, but which are attributable in part to a period of time prior to the real estate closing (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(xiii)).

1. Calculation. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses the total amount due to and from the seller at closing by the following calculation (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(3)):

   a. Total Due to Seller Closing. The amount disclosed in the Closing Disclosure, on the line captioned “Due from Seller at Closing” (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(3)(i));

   b. Total Due from Seller at Closing. The amount disclosed in the Closing Disclosure on the line captioned “Due from Seller at Closing,” disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(3)(ii));

   c. Cash. A statement that the disclosed amount is due from or to the seller and the amount due, calculated by the sum of the amounts disclosed as the “Total Due to Seller at Closing” and “Total Due from Seller at Closing” (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(3)(iii)).

Seller’s Transaction – Items Paid Outside of Closing Funds (Page 3 of Closing Disclosure)

1. Determine whether the creditor discloses other costs that are not paid out of closing funds but would otherwise be disclosed in the Summaries of Transactions: Seller’s Transaction table, describing the funds as “Paid Outside of Closing” or the abbreviation “P.O.C.,” and including the name of the party making the payment. (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(4)(i)) Payoffs and Payments Table for Transactions Without a Seller – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) (Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Payoff and Payments. For transactions without a seller, determine whether a creditor, using an optional modified Closing Disclosure (as illustrated by form H-25(J) in Appendix H), has provided alternative tables for Cash to Close, pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2), and for Calculating Cash to Close pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(e), and that the creditor itemizes the amounts of payments made at consummation to other parties from the credit extended to the consumer or funds provided by the consumer in connection with the transaction, including designees of the consumer, the payees, and a description of the purpose of such disbursements under the subheading “To;” and the total amount of such payments (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)).

Additional Information About This Loan: Loan Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(l) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Loan Disclosures. Determine whether the creditor accurately provides the required disclosures (12 CFR 1026.38(l)):

a. Assumption. Whether the loan obligations may be assumed by a subsequent purchaser (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(i));

b. Demand Feature. Whether the legal obligation includes a demand feature, and, if it does, a reference to the note or other loan contract for details (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(2));

c. Late Payment. The dollar amount or percentage charge of any fee designated as a late payment (information required on the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(4)) and the number of days after which such a charge will be triggered (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(3));

d. Negative Amortization (Increase in Loan Amount). Whether the regular period payments may cause the principal balance to increase, and:

      i. If the regular periodic payments do not cover all of the interest due, the creditor provides a statement that the borrower’s principal balance will increase, such balance will likely become larger than the original loan amount, and increases in such balance lower the consumer’s equity in the property; and

      ii. If the consumer may make regular periodic payments that do not cover all of the interest due, the creditor provides a statement that, if the consumer chooses a monthly payment option that does not cover all of the interest due, the principal balance may become larger than the original loan amount and the increases in the principal balance lower the consumer’s equity in the property. (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(4)(i)-(ii))

e. Partial Payments. Whether the creditor that accepts less than the full amount due has provided a statement that the “lender,” (using that label) may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer's loan, and:

      i. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted but not applied to a consumer's loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the lender may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer's loan;

      ii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, the lender does not accept any partial payments; and

      iii. A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new lender may have a different policy. (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5)(i)-(iv))

f. Security Interest. Whether the creditor states that the consumer is granting a security interest in the property securing the transaction, and that the borrower may lose the property if required payments are not made or otherwise fails to satisfy the requirements of the legal obligation. Determine that the creditor has included the property address and zip code (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(6));

g. Escrow Account. Whether the creditor states whether it has established, will establish, or will not establish an escrow account for the consumer in connection with the loan transaction at or before consummation;

      i. Under the reference “For now,”

         A. Whether the creditor provides a statement that an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account; whether the creditor has established or will establish, at or before consummation, an escrow account in connection with the transaction for the costs that will be paid using escrow account funds; that the creditor may be liable for penalties and interest if it fails to make a payment for any cost for which the escrow account is established; and that the consumer would have to pay such costs directly in the absence of the escrow account; (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i) and (l)(7)(i)(A)). Whether, if an escrow account is or will be established, the creditor accurately discloses the following items based upon the escrow analysis required under 12 CFR 1024.17, in tabular form:

1) The total amount that the consumer will be required to pay into the account over the first year after consummation for the payment of the charges described in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(ii) together with a descriptive name of each such charge calculated as the Monthly Escrow Payment multiplied by the number of periodic payments scheduled to be made to the escrow account during the first year after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(1))

2) The estimated amount for taxes, insurance, and assessments that the consumer is likely to pay during the first year after consummation, as described in 12 CFR 1027.37(c)(4)(ii), that are known to the creditor and that will not be paid using escrow account funds, labeled “Non-Escrowed Property Costs over Year 1,” together with a descriptive name of each such charge and a statement that the consumer may have to pay other costs that are not listed. (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(2))

3) The total amount disclosed and a reference to the disclosure made on the Closing Disclosure under the heading “Other Costs, Initial Escrow Payment at Closing,” pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3), and a statement that the payment is a cushion for the escrow account, labeled “Initial Escrow Payment.” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(3))

4) The amount the consumer will be required to pay into the escrow account with each periodic payment during the first year after consummation for payment of the charges described in the Loan Estimate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(ii), labeled “Monthly Escrow Payment.” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(4))

ii. No Escrow. If an escrow account will not be established for the consumer, determine whether there is a statement that the consumer will not have an escrow account; the reason why an escrow account will not be established; a statement that the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner's insurance, directly; a statement that the consumer may contact the creditor to inquire about the availability of an escrow account; and a table, titled “No Escrow” that itemizes the estimated total amount the consumer will pay directly for charges described in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(ii) during the first year after consummation that are known to the creditor; and a statement that, without an escrow account, the consumer must pay the identified costs, possibly in one or two large payments, labeled “Property Costs over Year 1;” along with the amount of any fee the creditor imposes on the consumer for not establishing an escrow account in connection with the transaction, labeled “Escrow Waiver Fee.” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(B))

A. Under the reference “In the future,” determine whether the creditor has disclosed under the reference “In the future:” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i))

1) A statement that the consumer's property costs may change and that, as a result, the consumer's escrow payment may change; (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A))

2) A statement that the consumer may be able to cancel any escrow account that has been established but that the consumer is responsible for directly paying all property costs in the absence of an escrow account; (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(B)) and

3) A description of the consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid and the actions the creditor may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer's behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than what the consumer could obtain directly. (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(C))
Additional Information About This Loan: Adjustable Payment (AP) Table – 12 CFR 1026.38(m) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Adjustable Payment (AP) Table. Determine whether the creditor provides the AP disclosure required for the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(i). (12 CFR 1026.38(m))

Additional Information About This Loan: Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table – 12 CFR 1026.38(n) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table. Determine whether the creditor provides the AIR disclosures required for the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(j). (12 CFR 1026.38(n))

Loan Calculations – 12 CFR 1026.38(o) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Loan Calculations. Determine whether the creditor provides a separate table and accurately discloses the following information (12 CFR 1026.38(o)):

   a. Total of Payments. Expessed as a dollar amount, and a statement that the disclosure is the total the consumer will have paid after making all payments of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs, as scheduled (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(1));

   b. Finance Charge. Expressed as a dollar amount, and the statement “The dollar amount the loan will cost you.” The finance charge and other disclosures affected by the disclosed finance charge (including the amount financed and the annual percentage rate) is accurately calculated if the amount disclosed as the finance charge:

      i. Is understated by no more than $100; or

      ii. Is greater than the amount required to be disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(2))

   c. Amount Financed. Expressed as a dollar amount, and the following statement: “The loan amount available after paying your up-front finance charge” (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(3));

   d. Annual Percentage Rate (APR). Expressed as a percentage, with the following statement: “Your costs over the loan term expressed as a rate. This is not your interest rate.” (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4));

   e. Total Interest Percentage (TIP). Expressed as a percentage; with the following statement: “The total amount of interest that you will pay over the loan term as a percentage of your loan amount.” (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(5))

Other Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(p) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Other Disclosures. Determine whether the creditor accurately provides the following disclosures:

   a. Appraisal. For transactions subject to 15 U.S.C. 1639h or 1691(e), as implemented in this part or Regulation B, 12 CFR part 1002, respectively, under the subheading “Appraisal:” (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1))

      i. If there was an appraisal of the property in connection with the loan, the creditor is required to provide the consumer with a copy at no additional cost to the consumer at least three days prior to consummation; (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)(i)) and

      ii. If the consumer has not yet received a copy of the appraisal, the consumer should contact the creditor using the information disclosed in the Closing Disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)(ii))

   b. Contract Details. A statement that the consumer should refer to the appropriate loan document and security instrument for information about nonpayment, what constitutes a default under the legal obligation, circumstances under which the creditor may accelerate the maturity of the obligation, and prepayment rebates and penalties. (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(2))

   c. Liability after Foreclosure. A brief statement of whether, and the conditions under which, the consumer may remain responsible for any deficiency after foreclosure under applicable state law, a brief statement that certain protections may be lost if the consumer refinances or incurs additional debt on the property, and a statement that the consumer should consult an attorney for additional information. (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(3))

   d. Refinance. The statement required on the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(5) that “Refinancing this loan will depend on your future financial situation, the property value, and market conditions. You may not be able to refinance this loan.” (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(4))

   e. Tax Deductions. A statement that, if the extension of credit exceeds the fair market value of the property, the interest on the portion of the credit extension that is greater than the fair market value of the property is not tax deductible for Federal income tax purposes and a statement that the consumer should consult a tax adviser for further information. (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(5))
f. Loan Acceptance. If the creditor does not provide a line for the consumer's signature, the creditor must include with the other disclosures the same statement required in the Loan Estimate that “You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application.” This is the same requirement as in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(n)(2). (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(2))

Questions Notice – 12 CFR 1026.38(q) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Questions. Determine whether the creditor provides a separate questions notice. The creditor must include a prominent question mark, a statement directing the consumer to use the contact information for questions, and a reference to CFPB’s website for more information and to submit a complaint, and a link to www.consumerfinance.gov/mortgage-closing (12 CFR 1026.38(q)(1)-(3)).

Contact Information – 12 CFR 1026.38(r) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

1. Contact Information. Determine whether the creditor provides the required contact information for each lender, mortgage broker, consumer's real estate broker, seller's real estate broker, and settlement agent participating in the transaction; the name of the person, address, NMLS ID number, or if none, state and License ID; the name of the natural person who is the primary contact for the consumer at each entity, identified as “Contact,” along with that person’s Contact NMLS ID or Contact License ID, email address, and phone number. (12 CFR 1026.38(r)(1)-(7))

1. Confirm Receipt. Determine whether, if the creditor chooses to provide a signature statement, the creditor discloses, above the signature line, the statement “By signing, you are only confirming that you have received this form. You do not have to accept this loan because you have signed or received this form.” (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(1))

   NOTE: If the creditor does not provide a line for the consumer’s signature, the creditor must include the following statement, labeled “Loan Acceptance:” “You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application.” (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(2))

Form of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)

1. Determine whether the creditor follows the format and content of form H-25, set forth in Appendix H, changes formatting only if there is an exception, including acceptable modifications in Appendix H for transactions without a seller, and complies with the following rounding rules for dollar amounts and percentages:

   a. Rounding - nearest dollar. The following dollar amounts are rounded to the nearest whole dollar:

      i. The dollar amounts for Loan Terms (required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(b)) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6) and (7) (i.e., adjustments after consummation and details about prepayment penalty and balloon payments);

      ii. The dollar amounts for projected payments or range of payments required by 12 CFR 1026.38(c) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii) (i.e., minimum and maximum amounts of principal and interest for projected periodic payments or range of payments);

      iii. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(e) (Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller) and 12 CFR 1026.38(i) (Calculating Cash to Close table) under the subheading “Loan Estimate;”

      iv. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(m) (adjustable payment table); and

      v. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(c) (projected payments) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(C) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iv) (i.e., total monthly payment).

   b. Percentages. The percentage amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(b) (i.e., loan terms), (f)(1)(i) (i.e., origination charges), (g)(2)(iii) (i.e., prepaids), (l)(3) (i.e., late payment), (n) (i.e., adjustable interest rate table), and (o)(5)(i.e., total interest percentage or TIP) are not rounded and are disclosed up to two or three decimal places. The percentage amount required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4) (APR) is not rounded and is disclosed up to three decimal places. Amounts that are whole numbers are disclosed truncated at the decimal point.

   c. Loan amount. The dollar amount of the loan amount (required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(b) as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1)) is disclosed as an unrounded number, except that if the amount is a whole number, then the amount disclosed is truncated at the decimal point. (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(1)-(5))
Content Of Forms Not Subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)-(f) - Forms Review and Timing Requirements

Content of Forms Not Subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)-(f) - General (12 CFR 1026.18)

1. Determine that the disclosures are clear, conspicuous, and grouped together or segregated as required, in a form the consumer may keep.
   a. For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.18(s), the terms “Finance Charge” and “Annual Percentage Rate” and corresponding rates or amounts should be more conspicuous than other terms, except for the creditor’s identity. (12 CFR 1026.17(a)(2))
   b. For reverse mortgages subject to 1024.33 in Regulation X, the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.33(b).
   c. For private student loans, the term “Annual Percentage Rate” and corresponding rate must be less conspicuous than the term “finance charge” and the corresponding amount, as well as less conspicuous than the interest rate, the notice of the right to cancel, and creditor’s identity. (12 CFR 1026.17(a)(2))

2. For a closed-end transaction not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), determine whether the disclosures are accurately completed and include the following disclosures as applicable.
   a. Identity of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.18(a))
   b. Amount financed (12 CFR 1026.18(b))
   c. Itemization of amount financed (12 CFR 1026.18(c))
   d. Brief description of the APR (12 CFR 1026.18(e))
   e. Variable rate information (12 CFR 1026.18(f)(1) or (2))
   f. Payment schedule (12 CFR 1026.18(g))
   g. Brief description of the total of payments (12 CFR 1026.18(h))
   h. Demand feature (12 CFR 1026.18(i))
   i. Description of total sales price in a credit sale (12 CFR 1026.18(j))
   j. Prepayment penalties or rebates (12 CFR 1026.18(k))
   k. Late payment amount or percentage (12 CFR 1026.18(l))
   l. Description for security interest (12 CFR 1026.18(m))
   m. Insurance conditions for finance charge exclusions (12 CFR 1026.4(d) and 12 CFR 1026.18(n))
   n. Statement concerning certain security interest charges (12 CFR 1026.4(c) and 12 CFR 1026.18(o))
   o. Statement referring to the contract (12 CFR 1026.18(p))
   p. Statement regarding assumption of the note (12 CFR 1026.18(q))
   q. Statement regarding required deposits (12 CFR 1026.18(r))
   r. Interest rate and payment summary for mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.18(s))

3. Determine that for transactions other than transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), the creditor discloses the number, amounts, and timing of payments scheduled to repay the obligation (other than for a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.18(s))48. (12 CFR 1026.18(g))

4. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)), determine that the creditor discloses the following information about the interest rate and payments, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.18(s)):
   a. Interest Rates
      i. For a fixed-rate mortgage, the interest rate at consummation. (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(A))
      ii. For an adjustable-rate or step-rate mortgage (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(B)):
         A. The interest rate at consummation and the period of time until the first interest rate adjustment may occur, labeled as the “introductory rate and monthly payment;”
         NOTE: As set forth in comment 18(s)-1, if periodic payments are not due monthly, the creditor should use the appropriate term, such as “quarterly” or “annually.”
         B. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the first five years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due and the earliest date on which that rate may apply, labeled as “maximum during first five years;” and 48 For example, home construction loans that are secured by real property or a dwelling are subject to §1026.18(s) and not §1026.18(g). See comment App. D-6 of Regulation Z.

C. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the life of the loan and the earliest date on which that rate may apply, labeled as “maximum ever.”

iii. For a loan that provides for payment increases occurring without regard to an interest rate adjustment (as described in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)(B)), the interest rate in effect at the time the first such payment increase is scheduled to occur and the date on which the increase will occur, labeled as “first adjustment” if the loan is an adjustable-rate mortgage or, otherwise, labeled as “first increase.” (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(C)) iv. For a negative amortization loan (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)):

A. The interest rate at consummation and, if it will adjust after consummation, the period of time for which it applies, and the label “introductory” or “intro;”

B. The maximum interest rate that could apply when the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments under the terms of the legal obligation;

C. If the minimum required payment will increase before the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments under the terms of the legal obligation;

D. If a second increase in the minimum required payment may occur before the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments, the maximum interest rate that could apply at the time of the second payment increase and the date the increase is scheduled to occur.

v. Introductory rate for an amortizing adjustable-rate mortgage, if the interest rate at consumption is less than the fully indexed rate, the following (placed in a box directly beneath the table required by 12 CFR 1026.18 (s)(1) of the regulation, in a format substantially similar to Model Clause H–4(I) in the regulation’s Appendix H):

A. The interest rate that applies at consummation and the period of time for which it applies;

B. A statement that, even if market rates do not change, the interest rate will increase at the first adjustment and a designation of the place in sequence of the month or year, as applicable, of such rate adjustment (e.g., “in the third year”); and

C. The fully-indexed rate.

b. Payments for Amortizing Loans

i. Principal and interest payments. If all periodic payments will be applied to accrued interest and principal, for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)):

A. The corresponding periodic principal and interest payment, labeled as “principal and interest;”

B. If the periodic payment may increase without regard to an interest rate adjustment, the payment that corresponds to the first such increase and the earliest date on which the increase could occur;

C. If an escrow account is established, an estimate of the amount of taxes and insurance, including any mortgage insurance payable with each periodic payment; and

D. The sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)(A) and (C) or (s)(3)(i)(B) and (C), as applicable, labeled as “total estimated monthly payment.”

ii. Interest-only payments. If the loan is an interest-only loan, for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i), the corresponding periodic payment and (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(ii)):

A. If the payment will be applied to only accrued interest, the amount applied to interest, labeled as “interest payment,” and a statement that none of the payment is being applied to principal;

B. If the payment will be applied to accrued interest and principal, an itemization of the amount of the first such payment applied to accrued interest and to principal, labeled as 49 Note: this category includes interest-only loans, as set forth in comment §1026.18(s)(2)(i)(C)-1.

50 Because model forms and clauses published by the CFPB are safe harbors, this rate may also be labeled “Maximum Ever,” pursuant to §1026.18(s)(2)(i)(B)(3).

51 The term “negative amortization loan” means a loan, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 that provides for a minimum periodic payment that covers only a portion of the accrued interest, resulting in negative amortization. (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(7)(v)) “interest payment” and “principal payment,” respectively;

C. The escrow information described in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)(C); and

D. The sum of all amounts required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(ii)(A) and (C) or (s)(3)(ii)(B) and (C), as applicable, labeled as “total estimated monthly payment.”

iii. Payments for negative amortization loans. If the loan is a negative amortization loan (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(4)):

A. The minimum periodic payment required until the first payment increase or interest rate increase, corresponding to the interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)(A);

B. The minimum periodic payment that would be due at the first payment increase and the second, if any, corresponding to the interest rates described in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)(C) and (D);

C. A statement that the minimum payment pays only some interest, does not repay any principal, and will cause the loan amount to increase;

D. The fully amortizing periodic payment amount at the earliest time when such a payment must be made, corresponding to the interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)(B); and

E. If applicable, in addition to the payments in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(4)(i) and (ii), for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii), the amount of the fully amortizing periodic payment, labeled as the “full payment option,” and a statement that these payments pay all principal and all accrued interest.

iv. Balloon payments. For loans with balloon payments (defined as a payment that is more than two times a regular periodic payment) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(5)):

A. Except as provided below, the balloon payment is disclosed separately from other periodic payments disclosed in the table (i.e., is outside the table and in a manner substantially similar to Model Clause H–4(J) in Appendix H to the regulation);

B. If the balloon payment is scheduled to occur at the same time as another payment required to be disclosed in the table, the balloon payment must be disclosed in the table.

5. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) that is a negative amortization loan, determine that the following information is disclosed (in close proximity to the table required in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(1), with headings, content, and format substantially similar to Model Clause H–4(G) in Appendix H to this part) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(6)):

a. The maximum interest rate, the shortest period of time in which such interest rate could be reached, the amount of estimated taxes and insurance included in each payment disclosed, and a statement that the loan offers payment options, two of which are shown; and

b. The dollar amount of the increase in the loan’s principal balance if the consumer makes only the minimum required payments for the maximum possible time and the earliest date on which the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments, assuming that the maximum interest rate is reached at the earliest possible time.

6. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)), determine that the creditor disclosed a statement that there is no guarantee the consumer can refinance the transaction to lower the interest rate or periodic payments. (12 CFR 1026.18(t)(1))

NOTE: The statement required by 12 CFR 1026.18(t)(1) should be in a form substantially similar to Model Clause H–4(K) in Appendix H to the regulation. (12 CFR 1026.18(t)(2))

7. Determine all variable rate loans (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) with a maturity greater than one year, secured by a principal dwelling are given the following disclosures at the time of application. (12 CFR 1026.19(b))
V. Lending — TILA

a. Consumer Handbook on Adjustable Rate Mortgages or substitute

b. Statement that interest rate payments and or terms can change

c. The index/formula and a source of information

d. Explanation of the interest rate/payment determination and margin

e. Statement that the consumer should ask for the current interest rate and margin

f. Statement that the interest rate is discounted, if applicable

g. Frequency of interest rate and payment changes

h. Rules relating to all changes

i. Either a historical example based on 15 years, or the initial rate and payment with a statement that the periodic payment may substantially increase or decrease together with a maximum interest rate and payment

j. Explanation of how to compute the loan payment, giving an example

k. Demand feature, if applicable

l. Statement of content and timing of adjustment notices

m. Statement that other variable rate loan program disclosures are available, if applicable

Disclosure of Post Consummation Events - Rate Adjustments – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)-(d)

8. Determine that for any closed-end adjustable-rate mortgage with a maturity date greater than one year and secured by a principal dwelling, the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides the following initial rate adjustment disclosures (for disclosure timing requirements, see Timing Requirements below): (12 CFR 1026.20(d)(2))

a. The date of the disclosure;

b. An explanation that under the terms of the consumer’s adjustable rate mortgage, the time frame that the current rate has been in effect, when the current rate is scheduled to expire, the effective date of the new rate, when additional future interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur and any other changes to loan terms, features, and options taking effect on the same date, and how the rate change may affect the payment and other loan terms;

c. A table explaining the current interest rate and payment, the new interest rate and payment, and the date the first new payment is due;

NOTE: For interest-only and negative amortization adjustable-rate mortgages, the table must include how the current and new rates and payment will be allocated to interest, principal, and escrow (if applicable). See 12 CFR 1026.20(d)(2)(iii)(C) for more on payment allocation disclosure requirements.

d. An explanation of how the interest rate is determined, including the specific index or formula used and a source of information about that index or formula, and the type and amount of any adjustment, including a margin and an explanation that a margin is the addition of a certain number of percentage points to the index;

e. Any limits on the interest rate or payment increases at each interest rate adjustment and over the life of the loan (as applicable), including the extent to which such limits result in the creditor, assignee, or servicer foregoing any increase in the interest rate and the earliest date that such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments, subject to those limits;

f. An explanation of how the new payment was determined, including the index or formula used to determine the new interest rate;

g. Any adjustments to the index or formula used to determine the new payment, such as the addition of a margin;

h. The expected loan balance on the date of the interest rate adjustment;

i. The remaining loan term expected on the date of the interest rate adjustment and any changes to the term that may have occurred due to the interest rate change;

j. If an estimated rate payment is provided, a statement that another disclosure with the actual interest rate will be provided to the consumer between two and four months prior to the first payment at the adjusted level is due, and that the creditor is using an estimated rate;

k. If applicable, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and will not reduce the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and that only part of the interest will be paid, which will add to the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization as a result of the interest rate adjustment, the statement must set forth the payment required to fully amortize the remaining balance at the new interest rate over the remainder of the loan term;

1. A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer;

m. A telephone number of the creditor, assignee, or servicer to call if the consumer anticipates not being able to make the new payment;

n. A statement listing alternatives that consumers may pursue if they anticipate not being able to make the new payment;

o. A web address to access either the CFPB or the Department of Housing and Urban Development’s (HUD) approved list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, the HUD toll-free number to access the HUD list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, and the Bureau website to access state housing finance authorities’ contact information.

9. Determine that for any closed-end adjustable-rate mortgage with a maturity date greater than one year, secured by a principal dwelling, the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides the following rate adjustment disclosures for rate adjustments with a corresponding payment change (for disclosure timing requirements see Timing Requirements below): (12 CFR 1026.20(c))

NOTE: A creditor, assignee or servicer subject to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) that has received the consumer’s notification to cease communication pursuant to FDCPA section 805(c) is exempt from this requirement.

a. An explanation that under the terms of the consumer’s adjustable rate mortgage, the time frame that the current rate has been in effect is ending and the interest rate and payment will change, the effective date of the new rate, when additional future interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur and any other changes to loan terms, features, and options taking effect on the same date, such as the expiration of interest-only or payment-option features; a table explaining the current interest rate and payment, the new interest rate and payment, and the date the first new payment is due;

NOTE: For interest-only and negatively amortizing payments, the table must include how the current and new rates and payment will be allocated to interest, principal, and escrow (if applicable). See 12 CFR 1026.20(d)(2)(iii)(c) for more on payment allocation disclosure requirements.

b. An explanation of how the interest rate is determined, including the specific index or formula used and a source of information about that index or formula, and the type and amount of any adjustment, including a margin and an explanation that a margin is the addition of a certain number of percentage points to the index, and any application of previously foregone interest rate increases from past rate adjustments;

c. Any limits on the interest rate or payment increases at each interest rate adjustment and over the life of the loan (as applicable), including the extent to which such limits result in the creditor, assignee, or servicer foregoing any increase in the interest rate and the earliest date that such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments, subject to those limits;

d. An explanation of how the new payment is determined, including the index or formula used to determine the new interest rate;

e. Any adjustments to the index or formula used to determine the new payment, such as the addition of a margin or the application of any previously foregone interest rate increases from past interest rate adjustments;

f. The expected loan balance on the date of the interest rate adjustment;

NOTE: The expected loan balance on the date of the interest rate adjustment shall reflect the adjustment of the interest rate and any negative amortization due to the adjustment.

g. The remaining loan term expected on the date of the interest rate adjustment and any changes to the term that may have occurred due to the interest rate change;

h. If applicable, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and will not reduce the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and that only part of the interest will be paid, which will add to the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization as a result of the interest rate adjustment, the statement must set forth the payment required to fully amortize the remaining balance at the new interest rate over the remainder of the loan term;

i. A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer;
NOTE: Model and sample disclosures H-4(D)(1) through (4) containing all necessary information can be found in Appendix H. The disclosures required under section 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) generally should be in the form of a table and in the same order as, and with headings and format substantially similar to, the model disclosures (12 CFR 1026.20(c)(3) and (d)(3)).

NOTE: When examining a creditor, an assignee, or a servicer that continues to own the loan, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (the creditor, assignee, or servicer, as applicable) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

Escrow Cancellation Notice – 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)

1. Escrow cancellation notice. For a closed-end loan secured by a first lien on real property or a dwelling (other than a reverse mortgage) where an escrow account (as defined under 1024.17(b)) is cancelled, determine whether: (12 CFR 1026.20(e))

a. The creditor or servicer provided an Escrow Closing Notice with the following clearly and conspicuously disclosed: (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)

i. A statement informing the consumer of the date on which the consumer will no longer have an escrow account;

ii. A statement that an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account;

iii. A statement of the reason why the escrow account will be closed;

iv. A statement that without an escrow account, the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner's insurance, directly, possibly in one or two large payments a year; and

v. A table, titled “Cost to you,” that contains an itemization of the amount of any fee the creditor or servicer imposes on the consumer in connection with the closure of the consumer's escrow account, labeled “Escrow Closing Fee,” and a statement that the fee is for closing the escrow account; (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(i))

vi. Information under the reference “In the future” that includes: (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii))

A. A statement of the consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid and the actions the creditor or servicer may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer's behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than a policy that the consumer could obtain directly; (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(A))

B. A statement with a telephone number that the consumer can use to request additional information about the cancellation of the escrow account; (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(B))

C. A statement of whether the creditor or servicer offers the option of keeping the escrow account open and, as applicable, a telephone number the consumer can use to request that the account be kept open; and (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(C))

D. A statement of whether there is a cut-off date by which the consumer can request that the account be kept open. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(D))

2. Form. The disclosure meets the formatting requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4) and is substantially similar to model form H-29 in Appendix H. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4))

3. Timing. The creditor or servicer ensures that the consumer receives the Escrow Closing Notice in the following time periods:

i. If the cancellation is upon the consumer’s request, no later than three business days before the closure of the consumer’s escrow account; (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(i))

ii. If cancellation is other than upon the consumer’s request, no later than 30 business days before the closure of the consumer’s escrow account. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(ii))

NOTE: If the disclosures are not provided in person, the consumer is considered to have received the disclosures three business days after they are delivered or placed in the mail. (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(iii))

Successors In Interest – 12 CFR 1026.20(f) (effective April 19, 2018)

1. If, upon confirmation, a servicer provided a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), determine whether the servicer provided to a confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by the following (if applicable): 12 CFR 1026.20(c) (rate adjustments with corresponding change in payment), 12 CFR 1026.20(d) (initial rate adjustment), or 12 CFR 1026.20(e) (escrow account cancellation notice), once the confirmed successor in interest either assumed the mortgage loan obligation under State law or provided the servicer an executed acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv) that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked.

High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32

1. Determine that the disclosures required for high-cost mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.32) clearly and conspicuously include the items below. (12 CFR 1026.32(c), see Form H-16 in Appendix H)

   a. The required statement “you are not required to complete this agreement merely because you have received these disclosures or have signed a loan application. If you obtain this loan, the lender will have a mortgage on your home. You could lose your home, and any money you have put into it, if you do not meet your obligations under the loan.”

   a. The APR.

   b. Amount of the regular monthly (or other periodic) payment and the amount of any balloon payment. The regular payment should include amounts for voluntary items, such as credit life insurance or debt-cancellation coverage, only if the consumer has previously agreed to the amount (See the commentary to 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)).

   a. d. Statement that the interest rate may increase and monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment, based on the maximum interest rate allowed under the contract, if applicable. The amount borrowed. For a closed-end mortgage, the amount borrowed is the total amount borrowed, as reflected by the face amount of the note; and where the amount borrowed includes premiums or other charges for optional credit insurance or debt-cancellation coverage (grouped together with the amount borrowed), that fact shall be stated. For an open-end credit plan, the amount borrowed is the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened.

Notice of Transfer – 12 CFR 1026.39

1. For any open-end loan secured by a principal dwelling or for any closed-end mortgage loan secured by a dwelling or real property that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to the covered person, determine that the covered person notifies the borrower clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep of such transfer, including (12 CFR 1026.39):

   a. An identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;

   b. The name, address, and telephone number of the covered person who owns the mortgage loan;

   c. The date of transfer (either the date of acquisition recognized in the books and records of the covered person or that of the transferring party) identified by the covered person;

   d. The name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer’s payments on the mortgage loan;

   e. Where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and,

   f. At the option of the covered person, any other relevant information regarding the transaction.

   g. If there are multiple covered persons, contact information for each of them, unless one of them has been authorized to receive the consumer’s notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer’s payments on the loan.

   i. If the loan is a closed-end consumer mortgage loan secured by a dwelling or real property, other than a reverse mortgage transaction subject to section 12 CFR 1026.33 of this part, the following information about the covered person’s partial payment policy, under the subheading “Partial Payment”:

   ii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term “lender,” may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer’s loan;

   iii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted, but not applied to a consumer's loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the covered person, using the term “lender,” may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer's loan;

iv. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term “lender,” does not accept any partial payments; and

v. A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new covered person, using the term “lender,” may have a different policy.

NOTE: The format of the disclosure illustrated by form H-25 of Appendix H may be used (for the information required to be disclosed by section 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5)). The text on that form may be modified to suit the format of the covered person's disclosure under section 12 CFR 1026.39. Any modifications must be appropriate and not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure. (Comment 12 CFR 1026.39(d)(5)-1.)

NOTE: This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer, except as noted above. This notification is required of the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same. In addition, if more than one consumer is liable on the obligation, the covered person may mail or deliver the disclosure notice to any consumer who is primarily liable. And, if an acquisition involves multiple covered persons who each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, each covered person has a duty to ensure that disclosures related to its acquisition are accurate and provided in a timely manner unless an exception in 12 CFR 1026.39(c) applies. The parties may, but are not required to, provide a single notice that satisfies the timing and content requirements applicable to each covered person. (Commentary 12 CFR 1026.39(b)(5)-2)

NOTE: Each covered person must provide the notice of transfer or sale to confirmed successors in interest unless the exemption under 12 CFR 1026.39(f) applies. (Effective April 19, 2018).

Treatment of Credit Balances – 12 CFR 1026.21

1. If an account’s credit balance is in excess of $1, determine whether the creditor:
   a. Credited the amount of the credit balance to the consumer's account;
   b. Refunded any part of the remaining credit balance, upon the written request of the consumer; and
   c. Made a good faith effort to refund to the consumer by cash, check, or money order, or credit to a deposit account of the consumer, any part of the credit balance remaining in the account for more than 6 months, unless the consumer’s location was not known to the creditor and could not be traced through the consumer’s last known address or telephone number.

Private Education Loans – 12 CFR 1026.46 – 12 CFR 1026.48

1. For private education loans subject to Subpart F, ensure that the required disclosures are accurate (12 CFR 1026.47) and contain the following information:
   a. Application or solicitation disclosures disclose the following:
      i. Interest rate, including:
         A. Rate or range, and if the rate depends in part on a determination of the borrower’s creditworthiness or other factors, a statement to that effect;
         B. Whether rate is fixed or variable;
         C. If rate may increase after consummation, any limitations, or lack thereof, and if the limitation is imposed by law, that fact. Also, the creditor must state that the consumer’s actual rate may be higher or lower than that disclosed, if applicable; and
         D. Whether the rate will typically be higher if the loan is not co-signed or guaranteed.
      ii. Fees and default or late payment costs.
      iii. Repayment terms, including:
         A. Term of the loan, which is the period during which regularly scheduled payments of principal and interest will be due.
         B. Deferral options, or if consumer does not have the option to defer, that fact.
         C. For each available deferral option applicable, information as to:
            1) Whether interest will accrue during deferral period; and
            2) If interest accrues, whether payment of interest may be deferred and added to the principal balance; and
D. A statement that, if the consumer files bankruptcy, the consumer may still be required to repay the loan.

iv. Cost estimates, based on an example of the total cost of the loan, calculated using:
   A. The highest interest rate and including all applicable finance charges, B. An amount financed of $10,000, or $5,000, if the creditor offers loans less than $10,000; and
   C. Calculated for each payment option.

v. Eligibility (e.g., any age or school enrollment eligibility requirements).

vi. Alternatives to private education loans, including:
   A. A statement that the consumer may qualify for federal student loans,
   B. The interest rates available for each program available under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, and whether the rate is variable or fixed;
   C. A statement that the consumer may obtain additional information regarding student federal financial assistance from his school or U.S. Department of Education, including an appropriate website; and
   D. A statement that a covered educational institution may have school specific educational loan benefits and terms not detailed in the loan disclosure forms.

vii. A statement that if the loan is approved, that the loan will be available for 30 days and the terms will not change, except for changes to the interest rate in the case of a variable rate and other changes permitted by law.

viii. A statement that before consummation, the borrower must complete a self-certification form obtained from the student’s institution of higher education.

b. For approval disclosures, the following information is required under 12 CFR 1026.47(b):
   i. Interest rate, information, including:
      A. Interest rate applicable to the loan
   B. Whether the interest rate is variable or fixed; and
   C. If the interest rate may increase after consummation, any limitations on the rate adjustments, or lack thereof.

   ii. Fees and default or late payment costs, including:
      A. An itemization of the fees or range of fees required to obtain the loan; and
      B. Any fees, changes to the interest rate, and adjustments to principal based on the consumer’s defaults or late payments.

   iii. Repayment terms, including:
      A. Principal amount;
      B. Term of the loan;
      C. A description of the payment deferral option chosen by the consumer, if applicable, and any other payment deferral options that the consumer may elect at a later time;
      D. Any payments required while the student is enrolled at the educational institution, based on the deferral option chosen by the consumer;
      E. Amount of any unpaid interest that will accrue while the student is enrolled in school, based upon the deferral option chosen by the consumer;
      F. A statement that if the consumer files for bankruptcy, that the consumer may still be required to pay back the loan;
      G. An estimate of the total amount of payments calculated based upon:
         1) The interest rate applicable to the loan (compliance with 12 CFR 1026.18(h) constitutes compliance with this requirement);
         2) The maximum possible rate of interest for the loan, or, if a maximum rate cannot be determined, a rate of 25 percent.
         3) If a maximum rate cannot be determined, the estimate of the total amount for repayment must include a statement that there is no maximum rate and that the total amount for repayment disclosed is an estimate.

H. The maximum monthly payment based on the maximum rate of interest for the loan, or, if a maximum rate of interest cannot be determined, a rate of 25 percent. If a maximum cannot be determined, a statement that there is no maximum rate and that the monthly payment amount disclosed is an estimate and will be higher if the applicable interest rate increases.

iv. Alternatives to private education loans, including:
   A. A statement that the consumer may qualify for federal student loans,
   B. The interest rates available for each program available under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, and whether the rate is variable or fixed; and
   C. A statement that the consumer may obtain additional information regarding student federal financial assistance from his school or U.S. Department of Education, including an appropriate website.

v. A statement that the consumer may accept the terms of the loan until the acceptance period under 12 CFR 1026.48(c)(1) has expired. The statement must include:
   A. The specific date on which the acceptance period expires, based on the date upon which the consumer receives the disclosures required under this subsection for the loan;
   B. The method or methods by which the consumer may communicate the acceptance (written, oral, or by electronic means; and
   C. A statement that except for changes to the interest rate and other changes permitted by law, the rates and the terms of the loan may not be changed by the creditor during the 30-day acceptance period.

c. After the consumer has accepted the loan in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.48(c)(1), final disclosures must disclose the information required under 12 CFR 1026.47(c) and the following:
   i. Interest rate, including:
      A. Interest rate applicable to the loan
      B. Whether the interest rate is variable or fixed; and
      C. If the interest rate may increase after consummation, any limitations on the rate adjustments, or lack thereof.

   ii. Fees and default or late payment costs, including:
      A. An itemization of the fees or range of fees required to obtain the loan; and
      B. Any fees, changes to the interest rate, and adjustments to principal based on the consumer’s defaults or late payments.

   iii. Repayment terms, including:
      A. Principal amount;
      B. Term of the loan;
      C. A description of the payment deferral option chosen by the consumer, if applicable, and any other payment deferral options that the consumer may elect at a later time;
      D. Any payments required while the student is enrolled at the educational institution, based on the deferral option chosen by the consumer;
      E. Amount of any unpaid interest that will accrue while the student is enrolled in school, based upon the deferral option chosen by the consumer;
      F. A statement that if the consumer files for bankruptcy, that the consumer may still be required to pay back the loan;
      G. An estimate of the total amount of payments calculated based upon:
         1) The interest rate applicable to the loan (compliance with 12 CFR 1026.18(h) constitutes compliance with this requirement);
         2) The maximum possible rate of interest for the loan, or, if a maximum rate cannot be determined, a rate of 25 percent;
         3) If a maximum rate cannot be determined, the estimate of the total amount for repayment must include a statement that there is no maximum rate and that the

The total amount for repayment disclosed is an estimate.

H. The maximum monthly payment based on the maximum rate of interest for the loan, or, if a maximum rate of interest cannot be determined, a rate of 25 percent. If a maximum cannot be determined, a statement that there is no maximum rate and that the monthly payment amount disclosed is an estimate and will be higher if the applicable interest rate increases.

iv. In a text more conspicuous than any other required disclosure, except for the finance charge, the interest rate, and the creditor’s identify the following disclosures:

A. A statement that the consumer has the right to cancel the loan, without penalty, at any time before the midnight of the third business day following the date on which the consumer receives the final loan disclosures. The statement must include the specific date on which the cancellation period expires and that the consumer may cancel by that date. (12 CFR 1026.47(c)(4)(i))

B. A statement that the loan proceeds will not be disbursed until the cancellation period expires. (12 CFR 1026.47(c)(4)(ii))

C. The method or methods by which the consumer may cancel; (12 CFR 1026.47(c)(4)(ii))

D. If the creditor permits cancellation by mail, the statement specifying that the consumer’s mailed request will be deemed timely if placed in the mail not later than the cancellation date specified on the disclosures. (12 CFR 1026.47(c)(4)(ii))

Open-End Credit Forms Review Procedures

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.61(a) sets forth the definition of hybrid prepaid-credit card. A covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(15)(ii) if the covered separate credit feature is an open-end credit plan that is not home-secured.

1. Determine that the creditor made the disclosures clearly and conspicuously. (12 CFR 1026.5(a))

2. Determine that the creditor made the applicable disclosures in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep, except (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1)(ii)): a. The following disclosures need not be written: Disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) of charges that are imposed as part of an open-end (not home-secured) plan that are not required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) and related disclosures of charges under 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iii)(B); disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi); disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.9(d) when a finance charge is imposed at the time of the transaction; and disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.56(b)(1)(i).

b. The following disclosures need not be in a retainable form: Disclosures that need not be written under paragraph 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1)(ii)(A) of this section; the alternative summary billing-rights statement under 12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2); the credit and charge card renewal disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.9(e); the payment requirements under 12 CFR 1026.10(b), except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13); home-equity disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.40(d); and disclosures for credit and charge card applications and solicitations under 12 CFR 1026.60.

c. The disclosures required by this subpart may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). The disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60, 12 CFR 1026.40, and 12 CFR 1026.16 may be provided to the consumer in electronic form without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act in the circumstances set forth in those sections.

3. Determine that the terminology used in providing the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.5 is consistent. (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(ii))

4. Determine that, for home-equity plans subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, the terms finance charge and annual percentage rate (APR), when required to be disclosed with a corresponding amount or percentage rate, shall be more conspicuous than any other required disclosure. The terms need not be more conspicuous when used for periodic statement disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(4) and for advertisements under 12 CFR 1026.16. (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(ii))

5. Determine that, if disclosures are required to be presented in a tabular format pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(3), that the term penalty APR shall be used, as applicable. (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(ii))

NOTE: The term penalty APR need not be used in reference to the annual percentage rate that applies with the loss of a promotional rate, assuming the annual percentage rate that applies is not greater than the annual percentage rate that applies.
would have applied at the end of the promotional period; or if the annual percentage rate that applies with the loss of a promotional rate is a variable rate, the annual percentage rate is calculated using the same index and margin as would have been used to calculate the annual percentage rate that would have applied at the end of the promotional period. If credit insurance or debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage is required as part of the plan, the term required shall be used and the program shall be identified by its name. If an annual percentage rate is required to be presented in a tabular format pursuant to paragraph (a)(3)(i) or (a)(3)(iii) of this section, the term fixed, or a similar term, may not be used to describe such rate unless the creditor also specifies a time period that the rate will be fixed and the rate will not increase during that period, or if no such time period is provided, the rate will not increase while the plan is open.

6. Determine whether the credit offered in connection with a prepaid account is subject to this regulation as set forth in 12 CFR 1026.61(a)(2)(i). (12 CFR 1026.61(a)(2)(i))

Credit and Charge Card Application and Solicitation Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.60

1. Determine that the credit card solicitation or application disclosures were made clearly and conspicuously on or with a solicitation or an application. (12 CFR 1026.60)

2. For the disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) through (5) (except for (b)(1)(iv)(B) and (b)(7) through (15), determine that the creditor made the disclosures required for 12 CFR 1026.60(c), (d)(2), (e)(1) and (f) in the form of a table with headings, content, and format substantially similar to the applicable tables found in G-10 in Appendix G. (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i))

NOTE: Review any fees or charges imposed on the asset feature of a prepaid account that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(3), (b)(13), and (b)(14). Those fees or charges must be included in the disclosures on or with an application or solicitation to the extent those fees or charges fall within the categories of fees or charges required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.60(b).

3. Determine that the table required by 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i) contains only the information required or permitted by that section. If the creditor provides other information, determine that such information appears outside the table. (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(ii))

4. Determine that the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(B), (b)(1)(iv)(C), and (b)(6) are placed directly beneath the table required by 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i). (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iii))

5. When a tabular format is required, determine that the following disclosures are disclosed in bold text (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iv)):

   a. Annual percentage rate required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(1) of this section,
   b. Introductory rate required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section,
   c. Rate that will apply after a premium initial rate expires required to be disclosed under paragraph (b)(1)(iii) of this section, and
   d. Fee or percentage amounts or maximum limits on fee amounts required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraphs (b)(2), (b)(4), (b)(8) through (b)(13).

NOTE: Bold text shall not be used for the amount of any periodic fee disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) of this section that is not an annualized amount, and other APRs or fee amounts disclosed in the table. (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iv))

7. Determine that the card issuer discloses, on or with an solicitation or application: (12 CFR 1026.60(b))

   a. Annual percentage rate. Each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on an outstanding balance for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer, expressed as an annual percentage rate. When more than one rate applies for a category of transactions, determine that the range of balances to which each rate is applicable is also disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1))

   NOTE: The APR for purchases disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) shall be in at least 16-point type, except for the following: Oral disclosures of the annual percentage rate for purchases; or a penalty rate that may apply upon the occurrence of one or more specific events.

   i. Variable rate information. If a rate is a variable rate, determine that the card issuer discloses the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined. Determine that the card issuer identifies the type of index or formula that is used in setting the rate. Determine that the value of the index and the amount of the margin that are used to calculate the variable rate are not disclosed in the table. Determine further that any applicable limitations on rate increases are not included in the table. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(i)) ii. Discounted initial rate. If the initial rate is an introductory rate, determine that the card issuer discloses in the table the introductory rate, the time period during which the introductory rate will remain in effect, and the term “introductory” or “intro” in immediate proximity to the introductory rate. Determine further that the card issuer discloses, as applicable, either the variable or fixed rate that would otherwise apply to the account. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(ii))

iii. Premium initial rate. If the initial rate is temporary and is higher than the rate that will apply after the temporary rate expires, determine that the card issuer discloses the premium initial rate and the time period during which the premium initial rate will remain in effect. Determine that the premium initial rate for purchases is in at least 16-point type. Determine that the issuer discloses in the table the rate that will apply after the premium initial rate expires, in at least 16-point type. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iii))

iv. Penalty rates. Except as for provided introductory rate or employee preferential rate requirements (discussed below), if a rate may increase as a penalty for one or more events specified in the agreement, such as a late payment or an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit, determine that the card issuer discloses the increased rate that may apply, a brief description of the event or events that may result in the increased rate, and a brief description of how long the increased rate will remain in effect. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(A))

v. Introductory rate. If the issuer discloses an introductory rate in the table or in any written or electronic promotional materials accompanying applications or solicitations (and subject to paragraph (c) or (e) of 12 CFR 1026.60), determine that the issuer briefly discloses, directly beneath the table, the circumstances, if any, under which the introductory rate may be revoked, and the type of rate that will apply after the introductory rate is revoked. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(B))

vi. Employee preferential rates. If the issuer discloses in the table a preferential APR for which only employees of the card issuer, employees of a third party, or other individuals with similar affiliations with the card issuer or third party are eligible, determine that the issuer briefly discloses directly beneath the table the circumstances under which such preferential rate may be revoked and the rate that will apply after such preferential rate is revoked. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(C))

vii. Rates that depend on consumer’s creditworthiness. If a rate cannot be determined at the time disclosures are given because the rate depends, at least in part, on a later determination of the consumer’s creditworthiness, determine that the card issuer discloses the specific rates or the range of rates that could apply and a statement that the rate for which the consumer may qualify at account opening will depend on the consumer’s creditworthiness, and other factors if applicable. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(v))

NOTE: If the rate that depends, at least in part, on a later determination of the consumer’s creditworthiness is a penalty rate, as described in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv), the card issuer at its option may disclose the highest rate that could apply, instead of disclosing the specific rates or the range of rates that could apply. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(vi))

viii. APRs that vary by state. Determine that the card issuer does not list annual percentage rates for multiple states in the table. Note, however, that issuers imposing annual percentage rates that vary by state may, at the issuer’s option, disclose in the table the specific annual percentage rate applicable to the consumer’s account; or the range of the annual percentage rates, if the disclosure includes a statement that the annual percentage rate varies by state and refers the consumer to a disclosure provided with the table where the annual percentage rate applicable to the consumer’s account is disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(vi))

b. Fees for issuance or availability. Determine that the card issuer discloses any annual or other periodic fee, expressed as an annualized amount, or any other fee that may be imposed for the issuance or availability of a credit or charge card, including any fee based on account activity or inactivity. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(2))

NOTE: A charge card issuer must disclose the applicable items in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(2), (4), (7) through (12), and (15). For a covered separate credit feature that is a charge card account accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61, a charge card issuer also must disclose the applicable items in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(3), (13), and (14).

c. Fixed finance charge; minimum interest charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any fixed finance charge that could be imposed during a billing cycle, as well as a brief description of that charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any minimum interest charge if it exceeds $1.00 that could be imposed during a billing cycle, and a brief description of the charge. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(3))
d. Transaction charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any transaction charge imposed for the use of the card for purchases. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(4))

e. Grace period. Determine that the issuer discloses the date by which or the period within which any credit extended for purchases may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate and any conditions on the availability of the grace period. If no grace period is provided, determine that this fact is disclosed. In disclosing in the tabular format a grace period that applies to all types of purchases, determine that the issuer uses the phrase “How to Avoid Paying Interest on Purchases” as the heading for the row describing the grace period. If a grace period is not offered on all types of purchases, in disclosing this fact in the tabular format, determine that the issuer uses the phrase “Paying Interest” as the heading for the row describing this fact.

NOTE: If the length of the grace period varies, the card issuer may disclose the range of days, the minimum number of days, or the average number of days in the grace period, if the disclosure is identified as a range, minimum, or average. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(5))

f. Balance computation method. Determine that the creditor disclosed the name of the balance computation method that is used to determine the balance on which the finance charge is computed, or an explanation of the method used if it is not listed. In determining which balance computation method to disclose, the creditor should have assumed that the credit extended will not be repaid within any grace period. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(6))

g. Statement on charge card payments. Determine that the creditor discloses a statement that charges incurred by use of the charge card are due when the periodic statement is received. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(7))

h. Cash advance fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for an extension of credit in the form of cash or its equivalent. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(8))

i. Late payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a late payment. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(9))

j. Over-the-limit fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for exceeding the credit limit. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(10))

k. Balance transfer fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed to transfer a balance. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(11))

l. Returned payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a returned payment. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(12))

m. Required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage. Determine that the fee imposed required insurance, debt cancellation or suspension coverage is disclosed if the insurance, debt cancellation or coverage is required as part of the plan. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(13))

n. Available credit. Determine whether total of required fees for the issuance or availability of credit and/or security deposit debited to the account at account opening equal or exceed 15 percent of minimum credit limit for the account. If so, determine that the creditor disclosed, as applicable, the available credit remaining after the fees and/or security deposit are debited to the account. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(14))

o. Website reference. Determine that the creditor disclosed a reference to the website established by the CFPB and a statement that the consumers may obtain on the website information about shopping for and using credit cards. (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(15))

Requirements for Home Equity Plans – 12 CFR 1026.40

1. Determine that the following home equity disclosures were made clearly and conspicuously, at the time of application. (12 CFR 1026.40)

   a. Home equity brochure

   b. Statement that the consumer should retain a copy of the disclosure

   c. Statement of the time the specific terms are available

   d. Statement that terms are subject to change before the plan opens

   e. Statement that the consumer may receive a full refund of all fees

   f. Statement that the consumer’s dwelling secures the credit

   g. Statement that the consumer could lose the dwelling

   h. Creditors right to change, freeze, or terminate the account

   i. Statement that information about conditions for adverse action are available upon request
V. Lending — TILA

j. Payment terms including the length of the draw and repayment periods, how the minimum payment is determined, the timing of payments, and an example based on $10,000 and a recent APR

k. A recent APR imposed under the plan and a statement that the rate does not include costs other than interest (fixed rate plans only)

l. Itemization of all fees paid to creditor

m. Estimate of any fees payable to third parties to open the account and a statement that the consumer may receive a good faith itemization of third-party fees

n. Statement regarding negative amortization, as applicable

o. Transaction requirements

p. Statement that the consumer should consult a tax advisor regarding the deductibility of interest and charges under the plan

q. For variable rate home equity plans, disclose the following:

   i. That the APR, payment, or term may change
   ii. The APR excludes costs other than interest
   iii. Identify the index and its source
   iv. How the APR will be determined
   v. Statement that the consumer should request information on the current index value, margin, discount, premium, or APR vi. Statement that the initial rate is discounted and the duration of the discount, if applicable
   vii. Frequency of APR changes viii. Rules relating to changes in the index, APR, and payment amount ix. Lifetime rate cap and any annual caps, or a statement that there is no annual limitation
   x. The minimum payment requirement, using the maximum APR, and when the maximum APR may be imposed xi. A historical example, based on a $10,000 balance, reflecting all significant plan terms
   xii. Statement that rate information will be provided on or with each periodic statement.

2. For home-equity plans subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the terms finance charge and annual percentage rate, when required to be disclosed with a corresponding amount or percentage rate, are more conspicuous than any other required disclosure.

   NOTE: The terms need not be more conspicuous when used for periodic statement disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(4) and for advertisements under 12 CFR 1026.16. (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(ii))

Account Opening Initial Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.6

1. The following requirements apply only to home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40. Determine that the creditor discloses, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.6(a)):

   a. Finance charge. The circumstances under which a finance charge will be imposed and an explanation of how it will be determined, including: a statement of when finance charges begin to accrue, and an explanation of whether or not any time period exists within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge; a disclosure of each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge, the range of balances to which it is applicable, and the corresponding annual percentage rate; an explanation of the method used to determine the balance on which the finance charge may be computed; and, an explanation of how the amount of any finance charge will be determined, including a description of how any finance charge other than the periodic rate will be determined. (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1))

   If a creditor offers a variable-rate plan, determine that the creditor discloses: the circumstances under which the rate(s) may increase; any limitations on the increase; and the effect(s) of an increase. When different periodic rates apply to different types of transactions, determine that the types of transactions to which the periodic rates shall apply shall also be disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1))

   b. Other charges. The amount of any charge other than a finance charge that may be imposed as part of the plan, or an explanation of how the charge will be determined. (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(2))

   c. Home-equity plan information. The following disclosures, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(3)):

   i. A statement of the conditions under which the creditor may take certain action, as described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(4)(i), such as terminating the plan or changing the terms.
ii. The payment information described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(5)(i) and (ii) for both the draw period and any repayment period.

iii. A statement that negative amortization may occur as described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(9).

iv. A statement of any transaction requirements as described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(10).

v. A statement regarding the tax implications as described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(11).

vi. A statement that the annual percentage rate imposed under the plan does not include costs other than interest as described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(6) and (d)(12)(ii).

vii. The variable-rate disclosures described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(12)(viii), (d)(12)(x), (d)(12)(xi), and (d)(12)(xii), as well as the disclosure described in 12 CFR 1026.40(d)(5)(iii), unless the disclosures provided with the application were in a form the consumer could keep and included a representative payment example for the category of payment option chosen by the consumer.

d. Security interests. The fact that the creditor has or will acquire a security interest in the property purchased under the plan, or in other property identified by item or type. (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(4))

e. Statement of billing rights. A statement that outlines the consumer’s rights and the creditor’s responsibilities under 12 CFR 1026.12(c) and 12 CFR 1026.13 and that is substantially similar to the statement found in Model Form G–3 or, at the creditor’s option, G–3(A), in Appendix G to this part. (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(5))

2. For open-end (not home-secured) plans determine that the creditor provided the account-opening disclosures specified in 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i) through (b)(2)(v) (except for 12 CFR 1026.6 (b)(2)(i)(D)(2)) and 12 CFR 1026.6 (b)(2)(vii) through (b)(2)(xiv) in the form of a table with the headings, content, and format substantially similar to any of the applicable tables in G–17 in Appendix G. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1))

3. For open-end (not home-secured) plans, determine that the following disclosures are disclosed in bold text (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)(i)):

a. Any APR required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i);

b. Any introductory rate permitted to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2)(i)(B) or required to be disclosed under paragraph (b)(2)(i)(F) of this section;

c. Any rate that will apply after a premium initial rate expires permitted to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2)(i)(C) or required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2)(i)(F); and

d. Any fee or percentage amounts or maximum limits on fee amounts disclosed pursuant to paragraphs (b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iv), (b)(2)(vi) through (b)(2)(xii).

4. Determine that bold text is not used for: The amount of any periodic fee disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) of this section that is not an annualized amount, and other annual percentage rates or fee amounts disclosed in the table. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1))

5. Determine that only the information required or permitted by 12 CFR 1026.6 (b)(2)(i) through (b)(2)(v) (except for (b)(2)(i)(D)(2)) and (b)(2)(vii) through (b)(2)(xiv) are provided in the table. Disclosures required by paragraphs (b)(2)(ii)(D)(2), (b)(2)(i)(D)(3), (b)(2)(vi) and (b)(2)(xv) of this section shall be placed directly below the table required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1). (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)(iii))

NOTE: Disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) through (b)(5) that are not otherwise required to be in the table and other information may be presented with the account agreement or account-opening disclosure statement, provided such information appears outside the required table.

6. For creditors that impose fees referred to in 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(vii) through (b)(2)(xi) that vary by state and that provide the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b) in person at the time the open-end (not home-secured) plan is established in connection with financing the purchase of goods or services determine that the creditor discloses in the account-opening table either:

a. The specific fee applicable to the consumer’s account, or

b. The range of fees, a statement that the amount of the fee varies by state, and a reference to the account agreement or other disclosure provided with the account-opening table where the amount of the fee applicable to the consumer’s account is disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)(iii))

NOTE: A creditor is not permitted to list fees for multiple states in the account-opening summary table (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)(iii)).

c. If the amount of any fee required to be disclosed under this section is determined on the basis of a percentage of another amount, the percentage used and the identification of the amount against which the percentage is applied may be disclosed instead of the amount of the fee. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1)(iv))
V. Lending — TILA

7. The following requirements apply to open-end (not home-secured). Determine that the creditor discloses in the appropriate format, as applicable:

   Review any fees or charges imposed on a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61. A creditor is required to disclose under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) any fees or charges imposed on the asset feature that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) to the extent those fees fall within the categories of fees or charges required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2).

   a. Annual percentage rate. Each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on an outstanding balance for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer, expressed as an APR. When more than one rate applies for a category of transactions, determine that the creditor discloses the range of balances to which each rate is applicable. Ensure that the APR for purchases disclosed pursuant to this paragraph is in at least 16-point type, except for a penalty rate that may apply upon the occurrence of one or more specific events. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i))

   b. Variable rate information. If the rate is a variable rate, determine that the creditor also disclosed the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined (i.e., identify the type of index or formula used in setting the rate). (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(A))

   c. Discounted initial rate. If the initial rate is an introductory rate, determine that the creditor disclosed that the rate would otherwise apply to the account. Where the rate is not tied to an index or formula, determine that the creditor disclosed the rate that will apply after the introductory rate expires. For a variable rate account, determine that the creditor disclosed a rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(B))

   d. Premium initial rate. If the initial rate is temporary and is higher than the rate that will apply after the temporary rate expires, determine that the creditor disclosed the premium initial rate. Determine that the premium rate for purchases is in at least 16-point type. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(C))

   e. Penalty rates. Except for introductory rates and employee preferential rates (discussed below), if the rate is a penalty rate, determine that the creditor disclosed as part of the APR disclosure the increased rate that may apply, a brief description of the event or events that may result in the increased rate, and a brief description of how long the increased rate will remain in effect. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(D)(1))

   f. Introductory rates. If the creditor discloses in the table an introductory rate, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(ii), determine that the creditor briefly disclosed directly beneath the table the circumstances under which the introductory rate may be revoked, and the rate that will apply after the introductory rate is revoked. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(D)(2))

   g. Employee preferential rates. If the creditor discloses in the table a preferential APR for which only employees of the creditor, employees of a third party, or other individuals with similar affiliations with the creditor or third party are eligible, determine that the creditor briefly disclosed directly beneath the table the circumstances under which the preferential rate may be revoked, and the rate that will apply after the preferential rate is revoked. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(D)(3))

   h. Point of sale where APRs vary by state or based on creditworthiness. If the creditor imposes an APR that varies by state or based on the consumer’s creditworthiness and provides required disclosures in person at the time the open-end (not home-secured) plan is established in connection with financing the purchase of goods or services, determine that the creditor discloses either (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(E)):

      i. The specific APR applicable to the consumer’s account, or

      ii. The range of the APRs, if the disclosure includes a statement that the APR varies by state or will be determined based on the consumer’s creditworthiness and refers the consumer to the account agreement or other disclosure provided with the account-opening table where the AP applicable to the consumer’s account is disclosed. Determine that the creditor does not list APRs for multiple states in the account opening table.

   i. Credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan. Determine that the issuer discloses in the table (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(F)):

      i. Any introductory rate, and

      ii. Any rate that would apply upon expiration of a premium initial rate.

   j. Fees for issuance or availability. Determine that the credit disclosed any annual or periodic fee that may be imposed for the issuance or availability of an open-end plan (including any fee based on account activity or inactivity); how frequently the fee will be imposed; and the annualized amount of the fee. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii))
k. Fixed finance charge and minimum interest charge. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fixed finance charge and any minimum interest charge if it exceeds $1.00 that could be imposed during a billing cycle, and a brief description of the charge. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(iii))

l. Determine that the creditor disclosed any non-periodic fee that relates to opening the plan. A creditor must disclose that the fee is a one-time fee. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii)(B))

m. Transaction charges. Determine that the creditor discloses any transaction charge imposed by the creditor for use of the open-end plan for purchases. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(iv))

n. Grace period. The date by which or the period within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate and any conditions on the availability of the grace period. If no grace period is provided, that fact must be disclosed. If the length of the grace period varies, the creditor may disclose the range of days, the minimum number of days, or the average number of the days in the grace period, if the disclosure is identified as a range, minimum, or average. In disclosing in the tabular format a grace period that applies to all features on the account, the phrase “How to Avoid Paying Interest” shall be used as the heading for the row describing the grace period. If a grace period is not offered on all features of the account, in disclosing this fact in the tabular format, the phrase “Paying Interest” shall be used as the heading for the row describing this fact. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(v))

o. Balance computation method. Determine that the creditor disclosed in the account opening disclosures the name of the balance computation method that is used to determine the balance on which the finance charge is computed for each feature, or an explanation of the method used if it is not listed, along with a statement that an explanation of the methods required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4)(i)(D). In determining which balance computation method to disclose, the creditor should have assumed that the credit extended will not be repaid within any grace period. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(vi))

p. Cash advance fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for an extension of credit in the form of cash or its equivalent. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(vii))

q. Late payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a late payment. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(viii))

r. Over-the-limit fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for exceeding the credit limit. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ix))

s. Balance transfer fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed to transfer a balance. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(x))

t. Returned payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a returned payment. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(xi))

u. Required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage. Determine that the fee imposed for required insurance, debt cancellation or suspension coverage is disclosed if the insurance, debt cancellation or coverage is required as part of the plan. Creditors must also cross reference additional information about the insurance or coverage as applicable. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(xii))

v. Available credit. Determine whether total of required fees for the issuance or availability of credit and/or security deposit debited to the account at account opening equal or exceed 15 percent of the credit limit for the account. If so, determine that the creditor disclosed, as applicable, the available credit remaining after the fees and/or security deposit are debited to the account. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(xiii))

w. Website reference. For issuers of credit cards that are not charge cards, determine that the creditor disclosed a reference to the website established by the CFPB and a statement that the consumers may obtain on the website information about shopping for and using credit cards. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(xiv))

x. Billing error rights reference. Determine that the creditor disclosed a statement that information about consumers’ right to dispute transactions is included in the account-opening disclosures. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(xv))

y. Charges and finance charges. For charges imposed as part of open-end (not home-secured) plan, the circumstances under which the charge may be imposed, including the amount of the charge or explanation of how the charge is determined. For finance charges, a statement of when finance charges begin to accrue, including an explanation of whether or not any time period exists within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge. If such a time period is provided, a creditor may, at its option and without disclosure, impose no finance charge when payment is received after the time period’s expiration. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3)(i))
z. Disclosure of rates for open-end (not home-secured) plans. Determine that the creditor disclosed, as applicable, for each periodic rate that may be used to calculate interest (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4)(i)):
   i. The rate (expressed as a periodic rate and a corresponding APR),
   ii. The range of balances to which the rate is applicable,
   iii. The type of transaction to which the periodic rate applies, iv. An explanation of the method used to determine the balance to which the rate is applied.

aa. Variable-rate Accounts. For interest rate changes that are tied to increases in an index or formula (variable-rate accounts) determine that the following are specifically set forth in the account agreement (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4)(ii)):
   i. The fact that the annual percentage rate may increase.
   ii. How the rate is determined, including the margin.
   iii. The circumstances under which the rate may increase.
   iv. The frequency with which the rate may increase.
   v. Any limitation on the amount the rate may change.
   vi. The effect(s) of an increase.
   vii. Except as specified in paragraph (b)(4)(ii)(H) of this section, a rate is accurate if it is a rate as of a specified date and this rate was in effect within the last 30 days before the disclosures are provided.

bb. Rate changes not due to index or formula. For interest rate changes that are specifically set forth in the account agreement and not tied to increases in an index or formula, determine that the creditor discloses (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4)(iii)):
   i. The initial rate (expressed as a periodic rate and a corresponding APR), ii. How long the initial rate will remain in effect and the specific events that cause the initial rate to change.
   iii. The rate (expressed as a periodic rate and a corresponding APR) that will apply when the initial rate is no longer in effect and any limitation on the time period the new rate will remain in effect.
   iv. The balances to which the new rate will apply.
   v. The balances to which the current rate at the time of the change will apply.

cc. Voluntary credit insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension. Determine that the creditor disclosed the applicable disclosures if the creditor offers optional credit insurance, or debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(5)(i))

dd. Security interests. Determine that the creditor disclosed the fact that the creditor has or will acquire a security interest in the property purchased under the plan, or in other property identified by item or type. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(5)(ii))

e. Statement of billing rights. Determine that the creditor disclosed a statement that outlines the consumer’s rights and the creditor’s responsibilities. (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(5)(iii))

Periodic Statement Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.7

1. Rules affecting home-equity plans. For home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the creditor disclosed on the periodic statement items 1 through 10 below (12 CFR 1026.7(a)):

   NOTE: The requirements of 12 CFR 1026.7(a) apply only to home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40. Alternatively, a creditor subject to the rules affecting home-equity plans may, at its option, comply with any of the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.7(b); however, any creditor that chooses not to provide a disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(7) must comply with 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(6).

   a. Previous balance. The account balance outstanding at the beginning of the billing cycle. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(1))
   b. Identification of transactions. An identification of each credit transaction in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.8. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(2))
   c. Credits. Any credit to the account during the billing cycle, including the amount and the date of crediting. The date need not be provided if a delay in accounting does not result in any finance or other charge. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(3))
   d. Periodic rates. Each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge, the range of balances to which it is applicable, and the corresponding annual percentage rate. If different periodic rates apply to different types of transactions, the types of transactions to which the periodic rates apply shall also be disclosed. For variable-rate plans, the fact that the periodic rate(s) may vary. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(4))

NOTE: If no finance charge is imposed when the outstanding balance is less than a certain amount, the creditor is not required to disclose that fact, or the balance below which no finance charge will be imposed

NOTE: Further, an annual percentage rate that differs from the rate that would otherwise apply and is offered only for a promotional period need not be disclosed except in periods in which the offered rate is actually applied.

e. Balance on which finance charge computed. The amount of the balance to which a periodic rate was applied and an explanation of how that balance was determined. When a balance is determined without first deducting all credits and payments made during the billing cycle, the fact and the amount of the credits and payments shall be disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(5))

f. Amount of finance charge and other charges. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(6))

i. Finance charges. The amount of any finance charge debited or added to the account during the billing cycle, using the term finance charge. Determine that the components of the finance charge are individually itemized and identified to show the amount(s) due to the application of any periodic rates and the amounts(s) of any other type of finance charge.

NOTE: If there is more than one periodic rate, the amount of the finance charge attributable to each rate need not be separately itemized and identified. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(6)(i)) ii. Other charges. The amounts, itemized and identified by type, of any charges other than finance charges debited to the account during the billing cycle. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(6)(ii))

NOTE: Creditors may comply with paragraphs (a)(6) of 12 CFR 1026.7, or with paragraph (b)(6) of 12 CFR 1026.7, at their option.

g. Annual percentage rate. At a creditor’s option, when a finance charge is imposed during the billing cycle, the annual percentage rate(s) determined under 12 CFR 1026.14(c) using the term annual percentage rate. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(7))

h. Grace period. The date by which or the time period within which the new balance or any portion of the new balance must be paid to avoid additional finance charges. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(8))

i. Address for notice of billing errors. The address to be used for notice of billing errors. Alternatively, the address may be provided on the billing rights statement permitted by 12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2). (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(9))

j. Closing date of billing cycle; new balance. The closing date of the billing cycle and the account balance outstanding on that date. (12 CFR 1026.7(a)(10))

2. Rules affecting open-end (not home-secured) plans. The requirements of paragraph (b) of this section (1 through 14 below) apply only to plans other than home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40. For applicable plans, determine that the creditor discloses on the periodic statement (12 CFR 1026.7(b)):

a. Previous balance. The account balance outstanding at the beginning of the billing cycle. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(1))

b. Identification of transactions. An identification of each credit transaction in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.8. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(2))

c. Credits. Any credit to the account during the billing cycle, including the amount and the date of crediting. The date need not be provided if a delay in crediting does not result in any finance or other charge. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(3))

d. Periodic rates. Each periodic rate that may be used to compute the interest charge expressed as an annual percentage rate and using the term Annual Percentage Rate, along with the range of balances to which it is applicable. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(4))

NOTE: If no interest charge is imposed when the outstanding balance is less than a certain amount, the creditor is not required to disclose that fact, or the balance below which no interest charge will be imposed. The types of transactions to which the periodic rates apply shall also be disclosed. For variable-rate plans, the fact that the APR may vary; and

A promotional rate, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(i), is required to be disclosed only in periods in which the offered rate is actually applied.

e. Balance on which finance charge computed. The amount of the balance to which a periodic rate was applied and an explanation of how that balance was determined, using the term Balance Subject to Interest Rate. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(5))
f. Charges imposed. The amounts of any charges imposed as part of a plan as stated in 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3), grouped together, in proximity to transactions identified under paragraph (b)(2) of this section, substantially similar to Sample G–18(A) in Appendix G to this part. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(6))

i. Interest. Finance charges attributable to periodic interest rates, using the term Interest Charge, must be grouped together under the heading Interest Charged, itemized and totaled by type of transaction, and a total of finance charges attributable to periodic interest rates, using the term Total Interest, must be disclosed for the statement period and calendar year to date, using a format substantially similar to Sample G–18(A).

ii. Fees. Charges imposed as part of the plan other than charges attributable to periodic interest rates must be grouped together under the heading Fees, identified consistent with the feature or type, and itemized, and a total of charges, using the term Fees, must be disclosed for the statement period and calendar year to date, using a format substantially similar to Sample G–18(A).

a. Change-in-terms and increased penalty rate summary for open-end (not home-secured) plans. Creditors that provide a change-in-terms notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(c), or a rate increase notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g), on or with the periodic statement, must disclose the information in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A) and (c)(2)(iv)(B) (if applicable) or 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i) on the periodic statement in accordance with the format requirements in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D), and 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i). See Forms G–18(F) and G–18(G). (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(7))

b. Grace period. The date by which or the time period within which the new balance or any portion of the new balance must be paid to avoid additional finance charges. If such a time period is provided, a creditor may, at its option and without disclosure, impose no finance charge if payment is received after the time period’s expiration. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(8))

c. Address for notice of billing errors. The address to be used for notice of billing errors. Alternatively, the address may be provided on the billing rights statement permitted by 12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2). (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(9))

d. Closing date of billing cycle; new balance. The closing date of the billing cycle and the account balance outstanding on that date disclosed in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13). (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(10))

e. Due date; late payment costs. With the exception of periodic statements provided solely for charge cards, other than covered separate credit features that are charge card accounts accessible by hybrid prepaid-credit cards as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61, and periodic statements provided for a charged-off account where payment of the entire account balance is due immediately, determine that the creditor disclosed (in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13)) for a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan:

i. The due date for a payment (the due date must be the same day of the month for each billing cycle). (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(11)(i)(A))

ii. The amount of any late payment fee and any increased periodic rate(s) (expressed as an annual percentage rate(s)) that may be imposed on the account as a result of a late payment. If a range of late payment fees may be assessed, verify that the card issuer either states a range of fees or the highest fee and an indication that the fee imposed could be lower. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(11)(i)(B))

NOTE: If the rate may be increased for more than one feature or balance, the card issuer may state the range of rates or the highest rate that could apply and at the issuer’s option an indication that the rate imposed could be lower.

NOTE: Further, with the exception of the negative or no amortization disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii), the repayment disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12) (as listed in step 12 below) are not required for:

iii. Charge card accounts that require payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle;

iv. A billing cycle immediately following two consecutive billing cycles in which the consumer paid the entire balance in full, had a zero outstanding balance or had a credit balance; and

v. A billing cycle where paying the minimum payment due for that billing cycle will pay the entire outstanding balance on the account for that billing cycle.

f. Given those exceptions above, determine that the card issuer disclosed on the periodic statement 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12):

i. The following statement with a bold heading: “Minimum Payment Warning:” If you make only the minimum payment each period, you will pay... more in interest and it will take you longer to pay off your balance’’ (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(A));

ii. The minimum payment repayment estimate, as described in Appendix M1 to this part.

NOTE: If the minimum payment repayment estimate is less than two years, determine that the card issuer disclosed the estimate in months. Otherwise, the estimate must be disclosed in years and rounded to the nearest whole year (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(B));

iii. The minimum payment total cost estimate, as described in Appendix M1 to this part, rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer’s option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(C));

iv. A statement that the minimum payment repayment estimate and the minimum payment total cost estimate are based on the current outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement. A statement that the minimum payment repayment estimate and the minimum payment total cost estimate are based on the assumption that only minimum payments are made and no other amounts are added to the balance (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(D));

v. A toll-free telephone number where the consumer may obtain from the card issuer information about credit counseling services (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(E)); and

A. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer’s option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(i));

B. A statement that the card issuer estimates that the consumer will repay the outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement in three years if the consumer pays the estimated monthly payment for three years (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(ii));

C. The total cost estimate for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part. The total cost estimate for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer’s option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(iii)); and

D. The savings estimate for repayment in 36 months, as described in appendix M1 to this part. The savings estimate for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer’s option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(iv)).

NOTE: The disclosures (A through D above) required for 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1) do not apply to a periodic statement in any of the following circumstances:

1) The minimum payment repayment estimate that is disclosed on the periodic statement pursuant to paragraph (b)(12)(i)(B) of this section after rounding is three years or less;

2) The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part, rounded to the nearest whole dollar or nearest cent that is calculated for a particular billing cycle is less than the minimum payment required for the plan for that billing cycle; and

3) A billing cycle where an account has both a balance in a revolving feature where the required minimum payments for this feature will not amortize that balance in a fixed amount of time specified in the account agreement and a balance in a fixed repayment feature where the required minimum payment for this fixed repayment feature will amortize that balance in a fixed amount of time specified in the account agreement which is less than 36 months.

vii. If negative or no amortization occurs when calculating the minimum payment estimate as described in Appendix M1, determine that the card issuer provides the following disclosures on each periodic statement instead of the disclosures set forth in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i) (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)):

A. ‘‘Minimum Payment Warning: Even if you make no more charges using this card, if you make only the minimum payment each month we estimate you will never pay off the balance shown on this statement because your payment will be less than the interest charged each month” (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(A));

B. “If you make more than the minimum payment each period, you will pay less in interest and pay off your balance sooner” (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(B));

C. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the creditor’s option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(C));

D. A statement that the card issuer estimates that the consumer will repay the outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement in three years if the consumer pays the estimated monthly payment each month for three years (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(D)); and

E. A toll-free telephone number where the consumer may obtain from the card issuer information about credit counseling services consistent with 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv). (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(E))

viii. Verify that the items required to be disclosed, as addressed in the procedures in step 12 above (required by 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)) are disclosed in accordance with the format requirements of 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13) and are substantially similar to the samples provided in Appendix G of Regulation Z.

ix. Determine that a card issuer provides (to the extent available from the United States Trustee or a bankruptcy administrator) through the disclosed toll-free telephone number the name, street address, telephone number, and website address for at least three organizations that have been approved by the United States Trustee or a bankruptcy administrator to provide credit counseling services in either the state in which the billing address for the account is located or the state specified by the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv)(A))

x. Determine that the card issuer at least annually updates the credit counseling information it discloses for consistency with the information available from the United States Trustee or a bankruptcy administrator. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv)(B))

g. Determine that the card issuer provided periodic statement disclosures according to the following format requirements (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13)):

i. The due date is disclosed on the front of the first page of the periodic statement and that the amount of the late payment fee and the APR(s) are stated in close proximity thereto.

ii. The ending balance and the repayment disclosures (required by paragraph (b)(12) of 12 CFR 1026.7 are disclosed closely proximate to the minimum payment due.

iii. The due date, late payment fee and APR, ending balance, minimum payment due, and repayment disclosures are grouped together.

NOTE: Sample G-18(D) in appendix G of Regulation Z sets forth an example of how these terms may be grouped.

h. For accounts with an outstanding balance subject to a deferred interest or similar program, determine that the creditor disclosed the date by which that outstanding balance must be paid in full in order to avoid the obligation to pay finance charges on such balance on the front of any page of each periodic statement issued during the deferred interest period beginning with the first periodic statement issued during the deferred interest period that reflects the deferred interest or similar transaction. The disclosure provided pursuant to this paragraph must be substantially similar to Sample G–18(H) in Appendix G to this part. (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(14))

Subsequent Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.9

1. Determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered the billing rights statement at least once per calendar year, at intervals of not less than 6 months or more than 18 months, customers and whether the institution used the short form notice with each periodic statement. (12 CFR 1026.9(a)(1))

NOTE: As an alternative to the annual billing rights statement (12 CFR 1026.9(a)(1)), the creditor may mail or deliver, on or with each periodic statement, a statement substantially similar to Model Form G–4 or Model Form G–4(A) in Appendix G to this part, as applicable. Creditors offering home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40 may use either Model Form, at their option. (12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2))

2. If, 30 days after mailing or delivering the account-opening disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) or (b)(3)(ii)(A), the creditor adds a credit feature or furnishes a credit access device (other than as a renewal, resupply, or the original issuance of a credit card, or except with regard to checks that access a credit card account) on the same finance charge terms, determine that the creditor discloses, before the consumer uses the feature or device for the first time, that it is for use in obtaining credit under the terms previously disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(1))

3. Determine that, except with regard to checks that access a credit card account, whenever a credit feature is added or a credit access device is mailed or delivered to the consumer, and the finance charge terms for the feature or device differ from disclosures previously given, the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) or (b)(3)(ii)(A) that are applicable to the added feature or device are given before the consumer uses the feature or device for the first time. (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(2))

4. Checks that access a credit card account. For open-end plans not subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, if checks that can be used to access a credit card account are provided more than 30 days after account-opening disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(b) are mailed or delivered, or are provided within 30 days of the account-opening disclosures and the finance charge terms for the checks differ from the finance charge terms previously disclosed, determine that the creditor discloses on the front of the page containing the checks the following terms in the form of a table with the headings, content, and form substantially similar to Sample G–19 in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)):

a. If a promotional rate applies to the checks, determine that the creditor discloses:

i. The promotional rate and the time period during which the promotional rate will remain in effect (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(1));

ii. The type of rate that will apply (such as whether the purchase or cash advance rate applies) after the promotional rate expires, and the annual percentage rate that will apply after the promotional rate expires. For a variable-rate account, a creditor must disclose an annual percentage rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements set forth in paragraph (b)(3)(ii) of this 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(2)); and

iii. The date, if any, by which the consumer must use the checks in order to qualify for the promotional rate. If the creditor will honor checks used after such date but will apply an annual percentage rate other than the promotional rate, the creditor must disclose this fact and the type of annual percentage rate that will apply if the consumer uses the checks after such date (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(3)).

b. If any APR required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i) is a variable rate, determine that the creditor also disclosed the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined. Determine that the creditor identified the type of index or formula used in setting the rate. Determine that the creditor does not disclose the value of the index and the amount of the margin that are used to calculate the variable rate in the table and that any applicable limitations on rate increases are not included in the table (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(ii)).

c. If no promotional rate applies to the checks, determine that the creditor discloses:

i. The type of rate that will apply to the checks and the applicable annual percentage rate. For a variable-rate account, a creditor must disclose an annual percentage rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(ii). (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(B))

d. Determine that the creditor discloses:

i. Any transaction fees applicable to the checks disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(iv). (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(C))

ii. Whether or not a grace period is given within which any credit extended by the use of the checks may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate. When disclosing whether there is a grace period, the phrase “How to Avoid Paying Interest on Check Transactions” shall be used as the row heading when a grace period applies to credit extended by the use of the checks. When disclosing the fact that no grace period exists for credit extended by use of the checks, the phrase “Paying Interest” shall be used as the row heading. (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(D))

NOTE: The disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i) must be accurate as of the time the disclosures are mailed or delivered. A variable APR is accurate if it was in effect within 60 days of when the disclosures are mailed or delivered. (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(ii))

5. Determine, for home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40:

a. Whenever any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) is changed or the required minimum periodic payment is increased, the creditor mailed or delivered written notice of the change at least 15 days prior to the effective date of the change. If the consumer agreed to the change, determine that notice was provided before the change went into effect. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(i))
V. Lending — TILA

b. If the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit that the creditor mailed or delivered notice of the action not later than three business days after such action is taken. The notice must contain the specific reasons for the action. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(iii))

NOTE: Notice is not required when the change involves a reduction of any component of a finance charge or other charge or when the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(iii))

6. For plans other than home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B), (c)(2)(iii) and (c)(2)(v), when a significant change in account terms as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii) is made, determine that the creditor provides a written notice of the change at least 45 days prior to the effective date of the change to each consumer who may be affected. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A))

7. The 45-day timing requirement, however, does not apply if the consumer has agreed to a particular change as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B). For these instances, however, determine that the creditor provided a notice in accordance with the timing requirements of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A)).

8. For open-end (not home-secured) plans, determine that increases in the rate applicable to a consumer’s account due to delinquency, default or as a penalty described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g) that are not due to a change in the contractual terms of the consumer’s account are disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g) instead of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2). (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A))

9. When a notice of change in terms is required, determine that it is mailed or delivered no later than the effective date of the change, if the consumer agrees to the particular change. 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B) applies only when a consumer substitutes collateral or when the creditor can advance additional credit only if a change relatively unique to that consumer is made, such as the consumer’s providing additional security or paying an increased minimum payment amount. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B))

NOTE: The 45-day timing requirements discussed in step f above does not apply in certain narrow circumstances, as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii)(B). The following are not considered agreements between the consumer and the creditor for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii)(B):

a. The consumer’s general acceptance of the creditor’s contract reservation of the right to change terms;

b. The consumer’s use of the account (which might imply acceptance of its terms under state law);

c. The consumer’s acceptance of a unilateral term change that is not particular to that consumer, but rather is of general applicability to consumers with that type of account; and,

d. The consumer’s request to reopen a closed account or to upgrade an existing account to another account offered by the creditor with different credit or other features. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B))

10. The 45-day advance notice requirement applies to changes to the following terms (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii)):

a. APR increases (including each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on outstanding balances for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer) and other APR changes (including variable rate information, discounted or premium initial rates, or penalty rates that may be applied to the account);

b. Fees for issuance or availability, including any fee based upon account activity or inactivity;

c. Fixed finance charge or minimum interest charge, if it exceeds $1.00;

d. Transaction charge for purchases;

e. Grace period;

f. Balance computation method;

g. Cash advance fee;

h. Late payment fee;

i. Over-the-limit fee;

j. Balance transfer fee;

k. Returned payment fee;

l. Required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage; and

m. Increase in required minimum periodic payment, or the acquisition of a security interest.

11. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi), if a creditor increases any component of a charge, or introduces a new charge, required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) that is not a significant change in account terms as described in paragraph (c)(2)(ii) of this 12 CFR, determine that the creditor either (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iii)):
a. Complies with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i), or

b. Provides notice of the amount of the charge before the consumer agrees to or becomes obligated to pay the charge, at a time and in a manner that a consumer would be likely to notice the disclosure of the charge, either in writing or orally.

12. Ensure that the written change-in-terms notice contains the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)):

a. A summary of the changes made to terms required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4), a description of any increase in the required minimum payment, and a description of any security interests being acquired by the creditor.

b. A statement that changes are being made to the account.

c. For accounts other than credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan subject to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B), a statement indicating that the consumer has the right to opt out of the changes, if applicable, and a reference to the opt-out right provided in the notice, if applicable.

d. The date the changes will become effective.

e. If applicable, a statement that the consumer may find additional information about the summarized changes, and other changes, in the notice.

f. In the case of a rate change, other than a penalty rate, a statement that if a penalty rate currently applies to the consumer’s account, the new rate described in the notice will not apply to the consumer’s account until the consumer’s account balances are no longer subject to the penalty rate.

g. If the change in terms being disclosed is an increase in the APR, the balances to which the increased rate will apply. If applicable, creditors should disclose a statement identifying the balances to which the current rate will apply as of the effective date of the change.

h. If the change in terms being disclosed is an increase in an annual percentage rate for a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, a statement of no more than four principal reasons for the rate increase, listed in their order of importance.

NOTE: The disclosed reasons must accurately describe the principal factors actually considered by the card issuer in increasing the rate. (Comment 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)-11)

13. In addition to the disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A), if a card issuer makes a significant change in account terms on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the creditor provides the following information on the notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B)):

NOTE: This information is not required to be provided in the case of an increase in the required minimum periodic payment, an increase in a fee as a result of a reevaluation of a determination made under 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i) or an adjustment to the safe harbors in 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii) to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index, a change in an annual percentage rate applicable to a consumer’s account, an increase in a fee previously reduced consistent with 50 U.S.C. app. 527 (Servicemembers Civil Relief Act) or similar federal or state statute or regulation if the amount of the increased fee does not exceed the amount of that fee prior to the reduction, or when the change results from the creditor not receiving the consumer’s required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment.

a. A statement that the consumer has the right to reject the change or changes prior to the effective date of the changes, unless the consumer fails to make a required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment;

b. Instructions for rejecting the change or changes, and a toll-free telephone number that the consumer may use to notify the creditor of the rejection; and

c. If applicable, a statement that if the consumer rejects the change or changes, the consumer’s ability to use the account for further advances will be terminated or suspended.

14. Changes resulting from failure to make minimum periodic payment within 60 days from due date for credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan.

For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(C)):

a. If the significant change required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) of this section is an increase in an annual percentage rate or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) based on the consumer’s failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to paragraph (c)(2)(i) of this section states that the increase will cease to apply to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days of provision of the notice, if the creditor receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase.

b. If the significant change required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) is an increase in a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) based on the consumer’s failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) also states the reason for the increase.

15. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is in a tabular format (except for a summary of any increase in the required minimum periodic payment, a summary of a term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2), or a description of any security interest being acquired by the creditor), with headings and format substantially similar to any of the account-opening tables found in G–17 in Appendix G. Determine that the table discloses the changed term and information relevant to the change, if that relevant information is required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2). Determine that the new terms are described in the same level of detail as required when disclosing the terms under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2). (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(1))

16. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) (change in terms) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.6(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is disclosed on the front of any page of the statement. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) immediately follows the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(2) through 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(7) and, if applicable, 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(8), (c)(2)(iv)(B), and (c)(2)(iv)(C), of this section, and is substantially similar to the format shown in Sample G-20 or G-21 in Appendix G to this part. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(3))

17. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice or segregated on a separate page from other information given with the notice. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(3))

NOTE: The summary of changes required to be in a table pursuant to paragraph (c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) of this section may be on more than one page, and may use both the front and reverse sides, so long as the table begins on the front of the first page of the notice and there is a reference on the first page indicating that the table continues on the following page.

18. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) immediately follows the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(2) through 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(7) and, if applicable, 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(8), (c)(2)(iv)(B), and (c)(2)(iv)(C), of this section, and is substantially similar to the format shown in Sample G-20 or G-21 in Appendix G to this part. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(3))

19. For open-end plans (other than home equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40), note that a creditor is not required to provide notice under this section if (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)):

a. The change involves:

i. Charges for documentary evidence;

ii. A reduction of any component of a finance or other charge;

iii. A suspension of future credit privileges (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi) of this section) or termination of an account or plan;

iv. When the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding;

v. When the change is an extension of the grace period; or

vi. The change is applicable only to checks that access a credit card account and the changed terms are disclosed on or with the checks in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(A));

b. The change is an increase in an APR upon the expiration of a specified period of time, provided that (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)):

i. Prior to commencement of that period, the creditor disclosed in writing to the consumer, in a clear and conspicuous manner, the length of the period and the APR or fee that would apply after expiration of the period;

ii. The disclosure of the length of the period and the APR or fee that would apply after expiration of the period are set forth in close proximity and in equal prominence to the first listing of the disclosure of the rate or fee that applies during the specified period of time; and

iii. The APR or fee that applies after that period does not exceed the rate disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1) or, if the rate disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1) was a variable rate, the rate following any such increase is a variable rate determined by the same formula (index and margin) that was used to calculate the variable rate disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1);

21. Determine that the disclosures contained in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) through (b)(7) are provided if the account is renewed and (1) the card issuer imposes an annual or other periodic fee for the renewal or (2) the card issuer has changed or amended any term of the account required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) that has not previously been disclosed to the consumer. Additionally, the disclosure provided upon renewal must disclose how and when the cardholder may terminate the credit to avoid paying the renewal fee, if any. (12 CFR 1026.9(e))

22. For plans other than home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40 (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)), determine that the creditor provides a written notice to each consumer who may be affected when (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1)):

a. A rate is increased due to the consumer’s delinquency or default; or
b. A rate is increased as a penalty for one or more events specified in the account agreement, such as making a late payment or obtaining an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit.

23. Whenever any notice is required to be given pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section, determine that the creditor provided written notice of the increase in rates at least 45 days prior to the effective date of the increase. The notice must be provided after the occurrence of the events described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1)(i) and (g)(1)(ii) that trigger the imposition of the rate increase. (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(2))

24. If a creditor is increasing the rate due to delinquency or default or as a penalty, determine that the creditor provided the following information on the notice sent pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i)(A)): a. A statement that the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate, as applicable, has been triggered;
b. The date on which the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will apply;
c. The circumstances under which the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate, as applicable, will cease to apply to the consumer’s account, or that the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will remain in effect for a potentially indefinite time period;
d. A statement indicating to which balances the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will be applied;

25. For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, if the rate increase required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section is an increase pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4) based on the consumer’s failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section also states that the increase will cease to apply to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days of provision of the notice, if the creditor receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase. (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i)(B))

26. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (Increase in rates due to delinquency or default or as a penalty) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the disclosure described in paragraph (g)(3)(i) is in the form of a table and provided on the front of any page of the periodic statement, above the notice described in paragraph (c)(2)(iv) of this section if that notice is provided on the same statement. (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(ii)(A))

27. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (increase in rates) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice. Ensure that only information related to the increase in the rate to a penalty rate is included with the notice.

NOTE: This notice may be combined with a notice described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv) or (g)(4) (A statement indicating to which balances the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will be applied) of this section. (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(ii)(B))

28. Exception for Decreases in the Credit Limit. If a creditor does not provide the 45-day notice under 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) prior to increasing the rate for obtaining an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit, determine that the creditor provides at least 45 days in advance of imposing the penalty rate a notice, in writing, that includes (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)):

a. A statement that the credit limit on the account has or will be decreased.

b. The date on which the penalty rate will apply, if the outstanding balance exceeds the credit limit as of that date;

c. A statement that the penalty rate will not be imposed on that date, if the outstanding balance does not exceed the credit limit as of that date;

d. The circumstances under which the penalty rate, if applied, will cease to apply to the account, or that the penalty rate, if applied, will remain in effect for a potentially indefinite period of time;

e. A statement indicating to which balances the penalty rate may be applied; and

f. If applicable, a description of any balances to which the current rate will continue to apply as of the effective date of the rate increase, unless the consumer fails to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment.

In addition to this notice, determine that the creditor does not increase the applicable rate to the penalty rate if the outstanding balance does not exceed the credit limit on the date set forth in the notice. (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i))

29. If a notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is in the form of a table and provided on the front of any page of the periodic statement (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(iii)(A)); or,

30. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice. Determine that only information related to the reduction in credit limit is included with the notice, except that this notice may be combined with a notice described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv) or (g)(1). (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(iii)(B))

31. When the consumer is given the right to reject a significant change to an account term prior to the effective date of the change, determine whether the consumer was given the option to reject the change by notifying the creditor of the rejection before the effective date of the change. (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(1))

32. If the creditor was notified of the rejection of a significant change to an account term, determine that the creditor did not:
   a. Apply the charge to the account;
   b. Impose a fee or charge or treat the account as in default solely as a result of the rejection; or
   c. Require repayment of the balance on the account using a method that is LESS beneficial to the consumer than one of the following methods:
      i. The method of repayment for the account on the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection;
      ii. An amortization period of not less than five years, beginning no earlier than the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection; or
      iii. A required minimum periodic payment that includes a percentage of the balance that is equal to no more than twice the percentage required on the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection. (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(2))

NOTE: These requirements do not apply if the creditor has not received the consumer’s required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment and the creditor has provided timely change in terms disclosures. (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(3))

33. Determine that a statement of the maximum interest rate that may be imposed during the term of the obligation is made for any dwelling-secured loan in which the APR may increase during the plan. (12 CFR 1026.30(b))

34. For any open-end mortgage loan (credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer) that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to the covered person, determine that the covered person notifies the borrower in writing of such transfer, including (12 CFR 1026.39):
   a. An identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;
   b. The name, address, and telephone number of the covered person who owns the mortgage loan;
   c. The date of transfer (either the date of acquisition recognized in the books and records of the covered person or that of the transferring party) identified by the covered person;
   d. The name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer’s payments on the mortgage loan;
   e. Where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and
   f. At the option of the covered person, any other relevant information regarding the transaction.
   g. If there are multiple covered persons, contact information for each of them, unless one of them has been authorized to receive the consumer’s notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer’s payments on the loan. (12 CFR 1026.39(d)-(e))

NOTE: This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer. This notification is required by the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same. In addition, if more than one consumer is liable on the obligation, the covered person may mail or deliver the disclosure notice to any consumer who is primarily liable. And, if an acquisition involves multiple covered persons who each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, each covered person has a duty to ensure that disclosures related to its acquisition are accurate and provided in a timely manner unless an exception in 12 CFR 1026.39(c) applies. The parties may, but are not required to, provide a single notice that satisfies the timing and content requirements applicable to each covered person. (Comment 12 CFR 1026.39(b)(5) – 2)

Disclosure Requirements for Over-the-Limit Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.56

1. Determine that the oral, written or electronic “opt-in” notice includes all of the following applicable items (and not any information not specified in or otherwise permitted) (12 CFR 1026.56(e)(1)):
   a. Fees. The dollar amount of any fees or charges assessed by the card issuer on a consumer’s account for an over-the-limit transaction;
   b. APR(s). Any increased periodic rate(s) (expressed as an APR(s)) that may be imposed on the account as a result of an over-the-limit transaction; and
   c. Disclosure of opt-in right. An explanation of the consumer’s right to affirmatively consent to the card issuer’s payment of over-the-limit transactions, including the method(s) by which the consumer may consent.

2. Determine that the written notice informing the consumer of the right to revoke consent following the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge describes that right, including the method(s) by which the consumer may revoke consent. (12 CFR 1026.56(e)(2))

Reverse Mortgage Forms Review Procedures (Both Open- and Closed-End)

1. Determine that the disclosures required for reverse mortgage transactions are substantially similar to the model form in Appendix K and include the items below (12 CFR 1026.33):
   a. A statement that the consumer is not obligated to complete the reverse mortgage transaction merely because he or she has received the disclosures or signed an application.
   b. A good faith projection of the total cost of the credit expressed as a table of “total annual loan cost rates” including payments to the consumer, additional creditor compensation, limitations on consumer liability, assumed annual appreciation, and the assumed loan period.
   c. An itemization of loan terms, charges, the age of the youngest borrower, and the appraised property value.
   d. An explanation of the table of total annual loan costs rates.

   NOTE: Forms that include or involve current transactions, such as change in terms notices, periodic billing statements, rescission notices, and billing error communications, are verified for accuracy when the file review worksheets are completed.

Timing Requirements

1. Timing Requirements – Open-End Credit. Review financial institution policies, procedures, and systems to determine, either separately or when completing the actual file review, whether the applicable disclosures listed below are furnished when required by Regulation Z. Take into account products that have different features, such as closed-end loans or credit card accounts that are fixed or variable rate.
   a. Credit card application and solicitation disclosures. On or with the application (12 CFR 1026.60(b))
   b. Adding a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card to a prepaid account. Ensure that a card issuer does not do any of the following until 30 days after the prepaid account has been registered: (1) open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card; (2) make a solicitation or provide an application to open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card; or (3) allow an existing credit feature that was opened prior to the consumer obtaining the prepaid account to become a covered separate credit feature accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card. (12 CFR 1026.61(c))
   c. HELOC disclosures. At the time the application is provided or within three business days under certain circumstances. (12 CFR 1026.40(b))
   d. Open-end credit initial disclosures. Before the first transaction is made under the plan. (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(1))
   e. Card Holder Agreement. Verify that the card issuer sends to the cardholder or otherwise make available to the cardholder a copy of the cardholder’s agreement in electronic or paper form no later than 30 days after the issuer receives the cardholder’s request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)). Determine that the issuer has adequate procedures for ensuring that this requirement is met.
   f. Periodic statement disclosures for open-end credit under 12 CFR 1026.7. Required if at the end of a billing cycle, the account has a debit or credit balance of $1 or more or if a finance charge has been imposed (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(2)(i)). Also, the creditor must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements for credit card accounts are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the payment due date and the date on which any grace period expires (for non-credit card open-end credit, there is a 21 day rule if there is a grace period and a 14-day rule if there is no grace period). (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(2)(ii)(B)(2))
   g. Statement of billing rights. At least once per year. (12 CFR 1026.9(a))
   h. Supplemental credit devices. Before the first transaction under the plan. (12 CFR 1026.9(b))
   i. Open-end credit change in significant terms as a result of a change in contractual terms. 45 days prior to the effective change date. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2))
   j. Open-end change in terms or rates due to delinquency or default or as a penalty. 45 days prior to the effective change date. (12 CFR 1026.9(g))
   k. Finance charge imposed at time of transaction. Prior to imposing any fee. (12 CFR 1026.9(d))
1. Disclosures upon renewal of credit or charge card.
30 days or one billing cycle, whichever is less before the delivery of the periodic statement on which the renewal fee is charged, or at least 30 days prior to the scheduled renewal date if the creditor has changed or amended any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) that has not previously been disclosed to the consumer. (12 CFR 1026.9(e))

m. Change in credit account insurance provider.
Certain information 30 days before the change in provider occurs and certain information 30 days after the change in provider occurs. The institution may provide a combined disclosure 30 days before the change in provider occurs. (12 CFR 1026.9(f))

2. Timing Requirements – Closed-End Credit Secured by a Dwelling

a. Closed-end credit disclosures for transactions not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) must be made before consummation. (12 CFR 1026.17(b))

b. Disclosures for reverse mortgages. Several disclosure timing requirements apply to reverse mortgages subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 and RESPA:

i. Determine whether the creditor provides early TIL disclosures within three business days after receiving the consumer’s written application. The creditor is required to deliver or mail the early disclosures no later than three business days after receiving the consumer’s application and at least seven business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.17(b)). No fees may be charged before the consumer receives the early disclosures except for credit report fees (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). If the APR stated in the early disclosures is not considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22 when compared to the APR at consummation, determine whether the creditor provided corrected disclosures of all changed terms, including the APR, that the consumer received no later than the third business day before consummation and that the creditor delivered or placed in the mail the corrected disclosures no later than the seventh business day before consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(2)(i))

ii. Determine whether the creditor provides the disclosures required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.33 (and found in paragraph d of the model form in Appendix K) either three days prior to consummation (for a closed-end transaction) or prior to the first transaction (for an open-end credit plan). (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(2))

NOTE: For closed-end credit transactions secured by a dwelling not subject to the TILA-RESPA rule, the prohibition on charging fees (other than credit report fees) before the consumer receives the early TIL disclosure is more limited than the prohibition for closed-end credit transactions secured by a dwelling that are subject to TILA-RESPA. (12 CFR 1026.19(a)) For TILA-RESPA closed-end transactions, creditors are prohibited from charging fees (other than credit report fees) prior to receipt of disclosures and an intent to proceed with the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2))

c. Disclosures for high-cost mortgages. Three business days prior to consummation or account opening. If such disclosures became inaccurate due to a change by the creditor, ensure that the creditor provided new, accurate disclosures no later than three business days prior to consummation or account opening. (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1))

d. Disclosures for initial rate change to an adjustable-rate mortgage securing a principal dwelling with terms of more than one year:

i. For adjustable-rate mortgages, creditors, assignees, or servicers are generally required to provide information regarding the first interest rate change to consumers between 210 and 240 days prior to the date the first payment at the new rate is due;

NOTE: If the first payment change occurs within the first 210 days, creditors, assignees, or servicers are required to provide the disclosure at consummation. (12 CFR 1026.20(d))

NOTE: When examining a creditor that continues to own the loan, an assignee, or a servicer, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (the creditor, assignee, or servicer, as applicable) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

e. Additional disclosures for adjustable-rate mortgages securing a principal dwelling with a term of more than one year, where a rate change affects the amount of payment:

i. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment changes with a rate change, disclosures must be provided to consumers between 60 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate is due;

ii. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment change is caused by a rate change that is uniformly scheduled every 60 days (or more frequently), disclosures must be provided to consumers between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate;

iii. For adjustable-rate mortgages originated prior to January 10, 2015, where the interest rate and payment are calculated based on an index that is available less than 45 days prior to the change, disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate is due; and

iv. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment adjustment occurs within 60 days of consummation and the new interest rate after adjustment provided at consummation was an estimate, disclosure are required as soon as practicable, but no later than 25 days prior to the first payment at the new rate is due. (12 CFR 1026.20(c))

NOTE: The requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(c) do not apply to: ARMS with terms of one year or less; first interest rate adjustment to an ARM if the first adjusted payment is due within 210 days after consummation and the new interest rate disclosed at consummation was not an estimate; or the creditor, assignee or servicer when the servicer is subject to the Fair Debt Collections Practices Act (FDCPA) and the consumer has notified the servicer to cease communication under section 805(c) of the FDCPA. (12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii))

f. Notice of new creditor. –On or before the 30th calendar day following the acquisition (12 CFR 1026.39).

g. For private education loans subject to Subpart F (12 CFR 1026.46), determine that:

i. Application or solicitation disclosures were provided on or with any application or solicitation (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(1)(i));

ii. Approval disclosures were provided before consummation on or with any notice of approval provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(2)); and

iii. Final disclosures were provided after the consumer accepts the loan and at least three business days prior to disbursing the private education loan funds. (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(3))

h. Determine that the issuer provides a written over-the-limit notice prior to the assessment of any over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer’s account. (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(1)(i))

i. Determine that, if a consumer consents to the card issuer’s payment of any over-the-limit transaction by oral or electronic means, the card issuer provides the required written notice immediately prior to obtaining that consent. (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(1)(ii))

j. Determine that the notice confirming the consumer’s consent is provided no later than the first periodic statement sent after the consumer has consented to the card issuer’s payment of over-the-limit transactions. The creditor must not assess an over-the-limit fee on the consumer’s account without first providing written confirmation. (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(2))

k. Determine that the notice providing the consumer notice in writing of the right to revoke consent following the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge is provided on the front of any page of each periodic statement that reflects the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer’s account. (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(3))

l. Determine that the notice providing the consumer notice in writing of the right to revoke consent following the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge is provided on the front of any page of each periodic statement that reflects the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer’s account. (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(3))

m. Notice to restrict credit. For home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, whenever any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) is changed or the required minimum periodic payment is increased, determine that the creditor mails or delivers written notice of the change to the consumer. If the change has been agreed to by the consumer, determine that the notice is given before the effective date of the change. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(i))

Mortgage Loans Secured by Real Property—Early Disclosures (Loan Estimates) – 12 CFR 1026.19(e)

Provision of Disclosures

1. For closed-end consumer loans secured by real property, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, determine whether the creditor provides the consumer with good faith estimates on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR
1. Determine whether the creditor delivers or places in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the third business day after receiving the consumer’s application. As defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(3), an application consists of the submission for purposes of obtaining an extension of credit of the consumer’s name, income, social security number to obtain a credit report, the property address, an estimate of the value of the property, and the mortgage loan amount sought. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A))

NOTE: When a consumer uses an online application system that allows the information to be saved, the timing requirements for the Loan Estimate are not triggered until the application is submitted.

2. Determine whether the creditor delivers or places in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the seventh business day before consummation (other than for transactions secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan). (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B))

NOTE: Business day is defined differently for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A) and (B). For 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A), business day is defined based on whether the creditor’s offices are open to the public for carrying on substantially all of its business functions on that day. For 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B), a business day is all days except Sundays and federal holidays. (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6))

3. Determine whether the consumer waived the waiting period before consummation under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) by providing a dated written statement describing a bona fide personal financial emergency, specifically modifying or waiving the waiting period, and signed by all the consumers who are primarily liable on the obligation. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v))

NOTE: Preprinted forms for this purpose are prohibited.

Shopping for Settlement Service Providers

1. Determine whether a creditor permits a consumer to shop for a settlement service and, if so, identifies the settlement services the consumer is permitted to shop for. If so, determine whether the creditor provides a written list identifying at least one available provider for each settlement service for which the consumer may shop and stating that the consumer may choose a different provider for that service. Determine that the creditor provides the written list separately from initial Loan Estimate but in accordance with the same timing requirements. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi))

Pre-Disclosure Activity

1. Fee restriction. Determine that the creditor does not charge any fees before the consumer receives the Loan Estimate and before the consumer indicated to the creditor an intent to proceed with the transaction, except for bona fide and reasonable credit report fees. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A))

2. Disclaimer on early estimates. Determine whether a creditor that provides a consumer with a written estimate of terms or costs specific to that consumer before the consumer receives the Loan Estimate clearly and conspicuously states on the first page in no smaller than 12-point font “Your actual rate, payment, and costs could be higher. Get an official Loan Estimate before choosing a loan,” and that the estimate does not use a format or content substantially similar to the Loan Estimate (form H-24 or H-25 of Appendix H). (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii))

3. Verification of information. Determine whether the creditor requires a consumer to submit documents verifying information related to the consumer’s application before providing the creditor provides the Loan Estimate. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(iii))

Permissible variations

1. Determine whether the creditor disclosed estimated closing costs in good faith and consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosures are provided. The estimated closing costs are in good faith if the amount charged to the consumer at closing does not exceed the estimated closing costs disclosed on the Loan Estimate, unless the following exceptions apply: (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3))

10 Percent Cumulative Increase Permitted

1. Determine whether the creditor has appropriately increased estimated third party costs or recording fees in good faith.
Estimates for third party services or a recording fee are in good faith if:

a. The aggregate charges do not exceed the aggregate estimate for those charges by more than 10 percent (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(A));

b. The third party service charge is not paid to the creditor or affiliate of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(B)); and

c. The creditor permits the consumer to shop for the third party service. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(C))

Variations Permitted for Certain Charges

1. An estimate of the following is in good faith if it is consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time it is disclosed, regardless of whether the amount paid by the consumer exceeds the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)):

a. Prepaid interest (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(A));

b. Property insurance premiums (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(B));

c. Amounts placed into an escrow, impound, reserve, or similar account (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(C));

d. Charges paid to unaffiliated third-party service providers the consumer selected that are not on the list provided by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(D)); and

e. Charges paid for third-party services not required by the creditor. These charges may be paid to affiliates of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(E)).

Revised Loan Estimates

1. Determine whether the creditor provides a revised estimate of a charge for any of the following reasons (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)):

a. Changed circumstances. Changed Circumstances that cause the estimated settlement charges to increase or, in the case of estimated charges identified in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii), cause the aggregate amount of such charges to increase by more than 10 percent. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)) For purposes of this and the following procedure, “changed circumstance” means:

i. An extraordinary event beyond the control of any interested party or other unexpected event specific to the consumer or transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(1));

ii. Information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor relied upon when providing the Loan Estimate and that was inaccurate or changed after the disclosures were provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(2)); or

iii. New information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor did not rely on when providing the original Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(3)).

b. Changed circumstance affecting eligibility. The consumer is ineligible for an estimated charge previously disclosed because a changed circumstance affected the consumer's creditworthiness or the value of the security for the loan. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B))

c. Revisions requested by the consumer. The consumer requests revisions to the credit terms or the settlement that cause an estimated charge to increase. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(C))

d. Interest rate dependent charges. The points or lender credits change because the interest rate was not locked when the Loan Estimate was provided. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(D))

2. Determine whether, within three business days after the interest rate is locked, the creditor provides a revised version of the Loan Estimate to the consumer with the revised interest rate, the points disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1), lender credits, and any other interest rate dependent charges and terms.

3. Determine whether the consumer indicated an intent to proceed with the transaction more than 10 business days after the Loan Estimate is provided. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(E))

4. Determine whether a creditor issuing a revised Loan Estimate in a new construction loan states clearly and conspicuously that at any time prior to 60 days before consummation, the creditor may issue revised disclosures. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(F))

Provision and Receipt of Revised Disclosures

1. Determine whether the creditor provides a revised Loan Estimate within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised estimate and not later than four business days prior to consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4))

NOTE: If not provided to the consumer in person, the revised disclosure is considered to have been received three business days after the creditor delivers or places the revised disclosure in the mail. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4))
Special Information Booklet at Time of Application

1. For purchase loans using the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure, determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered a copy of the special information booklet, titled “Your Home Loan Toolkit — A Step-by-Step Guide,” which was designed by the CFPB to replace the “Shopping for Your Home Loan: Settlement Cost Booklet.” The booklet is required by Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.19(g)) as well as section 5 of RESPA and section 12 CFR 1024.6 of Regulation X. The booklet must be delivered or placed in the mail within three business days after receiving the consumer’s application for a purchase transaction, unless the creditor denies the application before the end of the three-business-day period.

NOTE: If the consumer uses a mortgage broker, the mortgage broker must provide the special information booklet and the creditor need not do so. (12 CFR 1026.19(g))

Mortgage Loans Secured by Real Property—Final Disclosures (Closing Disclosures) — 12 CFR 1026.19(f)

Provision of Closing Disclosures

1. Determine whether, for closed-end consumer loans secured by real property, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 or loans otherwise excepted under 12 CFR 1026.3(h), the creditor provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38), reflecting the actual terms of the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i))

NOTE: There is a partial exemption in 12 CFR 1026.3(h) from the requirement to provide the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure if the loan is (i) a subordinate lien, (ii) a loan for buyer assistance such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention, (iii) a loan that does not require the payment of interest, (iv) a loan for which repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer’s principal dwelling, and (v) a loan where the total costs of the transaction are less than one percent of the loan and include fees only for recording, application and housing counseling. For those transactions, creditors must comply with all other applicable portions of TILA, including the disclosure requirements required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.18.

2. Determine whether the creditor ensures that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before consummation (except for transactions secured by a timeshare, which the creditor must ensure the consumer receives no later than consummation). (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii))

NOTE: If the creditor mails the disclosure six business days prior to consummation, it can assume that it was received three business days after sending, and therefore three business days prior to consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); see Comment 19(f)(1)(iii) “Business day” for purposes of the Closing Disclosure is the rescission-based business day definition, and means all calendar days except Sundays and legal public holidays. (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A))

3. Determine whether the consumer waived the waiting period before consummation by providing a dated written statement describing a bona fide personal financial emergency, specifically modifying or waiving the waiting period and signed by all the consumers who are primarily liable on the obligation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv))

NOTE: Preprinted forms for this purpose are prohibited. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv))

4. If a settlement agent provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure, determine whether the creditor ensures that the disclosures were provided in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.19(f). (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v))

Subsequent Changes

1. Determine whether the creditor provides a corrected Closing Disclosure where a disclosure has become inaccurate before consummation, so that the consumer receives a corrected Closing Disclosure at or before consummation. Determine whether the creditor permits the consumer to inspect the corrected disclosure during the business day prior to consummation.

NOTE: the corrected Closing Disclosure must be completed to set forth items known to the creditor at the time of this inspection but may omit from inspection items related only to the seller’s transaction. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i))

2. Determine whether the creditor provides a corrected Closing Disclosure and a new three-business-day waiting period before consummation if:

a. The APR disclosed in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4) becomes inaccurate, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.22 (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(A));

b. The loan product is changed, causing the information disclosed in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(iii) to become inaccurate (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(B)); or

c. A prepayment penalty is added, causing the statement regarding a prepayment penalty required under 12 CFR 1026.38(b) to become inaccurate. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(C))

3. Determine whether, when an event in connection with the settlement causes the Closing Disclosure to become inaccurate during the 30-day period following consummation, and that inaccuracy results in a change to an amount actually paid by the consumer from the amount disclosed, the creditor delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures not later than 30 days from receiving the information to establish that the event occurred. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii))

NOTE: A creditor does not violate 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) if the disclosures contain non-numeric clerical errors, provided the creditor delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures no later than 60 days after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iv))

4. Determine whether the creditor charged the consumer for any amounts that exceeded the estimated charges beyond the applicable permissible variations set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) (no variation permitted for the charge) and (ii) (charge subject to a 10 percent aggregate limit). For any such charges, determine if the creditor refunds the excess amounts no later than 60 days after consummation and delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures reflecting the refund no later than 60 days after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v))

Charges Disclosed

1. Determine whether the creditor or settlement service provider imposes a charge on the consumer for more than the settlement service provider actually received. If the creditor charges the average charge for settlement services, determine whether the creditor meets the following:

   a. The average charge is no more than the average amount paid for that service by or on behalf of all consumers and sellers for a class of transactions (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(A));

   b. The class of transactions is defined by appropriate period of time, geographic area, and type of loan (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(B));

   c. The same average charge is used for every transaction within the class (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(C)); and

   d. The average charge is not used for any type of insurance or any charge based on the loan amount or property value, and is not otherwise prohibited by law. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(D))

Transactions Involving a Seller

1. Determine whether the settlement agent provides the seller with the Closing Disclosure no later than the day of consummation and, if during the 30-day period following consummation, an event in connection with the settlement of the transaction occurs that causes disclosures to become inaccurate and the inaccuracy results in a change to the amount actually paid by the seller from that disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)(i), the settlement agent has delivered or placed in the mail corrected disclosures not later than 30 days after receiving information sufficient to establish that such an event has occurred. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4))

No Fee

1. Determine whether a creditor or servicer imposes a fee on any person as part of settlement costs or otherwise for preparing or delivering Closing Disclosures. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(5))

Electronic Disclosures

1. Assess compliance for an institution’s electronic disclosure requirements.

E-Sign Act

1. Disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). The E-Sign Act does not mandate that institutions or consumers use or accept electronic records or signatures. It permits institutions to satisfy any statutory or regulatory requirements by providing the information electronically after obtaining the consumer’s affirmative consent. Before consent can be given, consumers must be provided with the following information:

   a. Any right or option to have the information provided in paper or non-electronic form;

   b. The right to withdraw the consent to receive information electronically and the consequences, including fees, of doing so;

   c. The scope of the consent (for example, whether the consent applies only to a particular transaction or to identified categories of records that may be provided during the course of the parties’ relationship);

   d. The procedures to withdraw consent and to update information needed to contact the consumer electronically; and

   e. The methods by which a consumer may obtain, upon request, a paper copy of an electronic record after consent has been given to receive the information electronically and whether any fee will be charged.

2. The consumer must consent electronically or confirm consent electronically in a manner that “reasonably demonstrates that the consumer can access information in the electronic form that will be used to provide the information that is the subject of the consent.” After the consent, if an institution changes the hardware or software requirements such that a consumer may be prevented from accessing and retaining information electronically, the institution must notify the consumer of the new requirements and must allow the consumer to withdraw consent without charge.

3. If the financial institution makes its disclosures available to consumers in electronic form, determine that the forms comply with the appropriate sections – 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1); 12 CFR 1026.15(b); 12 CFR 1026.16(c); 12 CFR 1026.17(a)(1); 12 CFR 1026.17(g); 12 CFR 1026.19(c); 12 CFR 1026.23(b)(1); 12 CFR 1026.24(d); 12 CFR 1026.31(b); 12 CFR 1026.40(a)(3); and 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(v).

4. Card issuers may provide credit card agreements in electronic form under 12 CFR 1026.58(d) and (e) without regard to the consumer notice and consent requirements of section 101(c) of the E-Sign Act. (12 CFR 1026.58(f))

Annual Report to the CFPB – 12 CFR 1026.57

1. If the card issuer was a party to one or more college credit card agreements in effect at any time during a calendar year, verify that the card issuer submits to the CFPB an annual report regarding those agreements in the form and manner prescribed by the CFPB. (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(1))

NOTE: A college credit card agreement is any business, marketing, or promotional agreement between a card issuer and an institution of higher education (or an affiliated alumni organization or foundation) in connection with which credit cards are issued to college students at that institution of higher education. (12 CFR 1026.57(a)(5)). See Comment 57(a)(5)-1 for specifics on where a covered separate credit feature may be added.

2. The annual report to the CFPB must include the following (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(2)):

   a. Identifying information about the card issuer and the agreements submitted, including the issuer’s name, address, and identifying number (such as an RSSD ID number or tax identification number); (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(1))

   b. A copy of any college credit card agreement to which the card issuer was a party that was in effect at any time during the period covered by the report;

   c. A copy of any memorandum of understanding in effect at any time during the period covered by the report between the card issuer and an institution of higher education or affiliated organization that directly or indirectly relates to the college credit card agreement or that controls or directs any obligations or distribution of benefits between any such entities;

   d. The total dollar amount of any payments pursuant to a college credit card agreement from the card issuer to an institution of higher education or affiliated organization during the period covered by the report, and the method or formula used to determine such amounts;

   e. The total number of credit card accounts opened pursuant to any college credit card agreement during the period covered by the report; and

   f. The total number of credit card accounts opened pursuant to any such agreement that were open at the end of the period covered by the report.

3. If the card issuer is subject to reporting, determine if the card issuer submits its annual report for each calendar year to the CFPB by the first business day on or after March 31 of the following calendar year. (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(3))

The Submission of Agreements to the CFPB – 12 CFR 1026.58(c)

1. For card issuers that issue credit cards under a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the card issuer makes quarterly submissions to the CFPB in the form and manner specified by the CFPB that contain:

   a. Identifying information about the card issuer and the agreements submitted, including the issuer’s name, address, and identifying number (such as an RSSD ID number or tax identification number) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(i));

   b. The credit card agreements that the card issuer offered to the public as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter that the card issuer has not previously submitted to the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(ii));

   c. Any credit card agreement previously submitted to the CFPB that was amended during the preceding calendar quarter and that the card issuer offered to the public as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter as described in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(3) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(iii)); and

   d. Notification regarding any credit card agreement previously submitted to the CFPB that the issuer is withdrawing, as described in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(4), (c)(5), (c)(6), and (c)(7) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(iv)).

2. Verify that quarterly submissions were sent to the CFPB no later than the first business day on or after January 31, April 30, July 31, and October 31, of each year. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1))

3. If a credit card agreement that previously has been submitted to the CFPB is amended, verify that the card issuer submits the entire amended agreement to the CFPB, in the form and manner specified by the CFPB, by the first quarterly submission deadline after the last day of the
5. If an issuer that previously qualified for the private label credit card exception qualifies for the exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the CFPB with respect to that agreement until the issuer notifies the CFPB that the agreement is being withdrawn. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(6)(iii))

NOTE: A card issuer is not required to submit to the CFPB a credit card agreement if, as of the last business day of the calendar quarter, the agreement is offered as part of a product test offered to only a limited group of consumers for a limited period of time, is used for fewer than 10,000 open accounts, and is not offered to the public other than in connection with such a product test. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(i))

10. If an agreement that previously qualified for the product testing exception ceases to qualify, determine that the card issuer submits the agreement to the CFPB no later than the first quarterly submission deadline after the date as of which the agreement ceased to qualify. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(ii))

11. If an agreement that did not previously qualify for the product testing exception qualifies for the exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the CFPB with respect to that agreement until the issuer notifies the CFPB that the agreement is being withdrawn. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(iii))

12. Verify that each agreement contains the provisions of the agreement and the pricing information in effect as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(A))

13. Verify that agreements do not include any personally identifiable information relating to any cardholder, such as name, address, telephone number, or account number. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(B))

14. Verify that agreements are presented in a clear and legible font. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(D))

15. Verify that pricing information is set forth in a single addendum to the agreement that contains only the pricing information. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(A))

NOTE: With respect to information other than the pricing information that may vary between cardholders depending on creditworthiness, state of residence, or other factors, issuers may, but are not required to, include that information in a single addendum (the optional variable terms addendum) to the agreement separate from the pricing addendum (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(iii)).

16. If pricing information varies from one cardholder to another depending on the cardholder’s creditworthiness or state of residence or other factors, verify that the pricing information is disclosed either by setting forth all the possible variations (such as purchase APRs of 13 percent, 15 percent, 17 percent, and 19 percent) or by providing a range of possible variations (such as purchase APRs ranging from 13 percent to 19 percent). (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(B))

17. If a rate included in the pricing information is a variable rate, verify that the issuer identifies the index or formula used in setting the rate and the margin. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(C))

18. If rates vary from one cardholder to another, verify that the issuer discloses such rates by providing the index and the possible margins (such as the prime rate plus 5 percent, 8 percent, 10 percent, or 12 percent) or range of margins (such as the prime rate plus from 5 to 12 percent). (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(C))

NOTE: The value of the rate and the value of the index are not required to be disclosed.

19. Determine that issuers do not provide provisions of the agreement or pricing information in the form of change-in-terms notices or riders (other than the pricing information addendum and the optional variable terms addendum). (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iv))

20. Determine that changes in provisions or pricing information are integrated into the text of the agreement, the pricing information addendum or the optional variable terms addendum, as appropriate. (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iv))

The Posting of Agreements Offered to the Public – 12 CFR 1026.58(d)

1. Determine that the card issuer posts and maintains on its publicly available website the credit card agreements that the issuer is required to submit to the CFPB under 12 CFR 1026.58(c). (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(1))

2. With respect to an agreement offered solely for accounts under one or more private label credit card plans (and the issuer does not post and maintain the agreements on its publicly available website), determine that the issuer posts and maintains the agreement on the publicly available website of at least one of the merchants where cards issued under each private label credit card plan with 10,000 or more open accounts may be used. (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(1))

3. Verify that agreements posted pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.58(d) conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB specified in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8). (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(2))

4. Determine that agreements are posted in an electronic format that is readily usable by the general public. (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(3))

5. Verify that agreements are placed in a location on its website that is prominent and readily accessible by the public and accessible without submission of personally identifiable information. (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(3))

6. Determine that the card issuer updates the agreements posted on its website at least as frequently as the quarterly schedule required for submission of agreements to the CFPB under 12 CFR 1026.58(c). (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(4))

NOTE: If the issuer chooses to update the agreements on its website more frequently, the agreements posted on the issuer’s website may contain the provisions of the agreement and the pricing information in effect as of a date other than the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter.

The Posting of Agreements for “Open” Accounts – 12 CFR 1026.58(e)

1. With respect to any open (i.e., the cardholder can obtain extensions or there is an outstanding balance on the account that has not been charged off) credit card account, determine that the card issuer either:

   a. Posts and maintains the cardholder’s agreement on its website; or

   b. Promptly provides a copy of the cardholder’s agreement to the cardholder upon the cardholder’s request. (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(i) and (ii)).

2. If the card issuer makes an agreement available upon request, ensure that the issuer provides the cardholder with the ability to request a copy of the agreement both by:

   a. Using the issuer’s website, such as by clicking on a clearly identified box to make the request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)), and

   b. Calling a readily available telephone line the number for which is displayed on the issuer’s website and clearly identified as to purpose. (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii) and (e)(2))

3. If an issuer does not maintain a website from which cardholders can access specific information about their individual accounts determine that the issuer makes agreements available upon request by providing the cardholder with the ability to request a copy of the agreement by calling a readily available telephone line the number for which is (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(2)): a. Displayed on the issuer’s website and clearly identified as to purpose; or

   b. Included on each periodic statement sent to the cardholder and clearly identified as to purpose.
4. Verify that the card issuer sends to the cardholder or otherwise make available to the cardholder a copy of the cardholder’s agreement in electronic or paper form no later than 30 days after the issuer receives the cardholder’s request. (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii))

5. Determine that agreements posted on the card issuer’s website or made available upon the cardholder’s request conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB specified in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8). (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(i))

6. If the card issuer posts an agreement on its website or otherwise provides an agreement to a cardholder electronically, verify that the agreement is posted or provided in an electronic format that is readily usable by the general public and is placed in a location that is prominent and readily accessible to the cardholder. (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(ii))

7. If agreements posted or otherwise provided contain personally identifiable information relating to the cardholder, such as name, address, telephone number, or account number, ensure that the issuer takes appropriate measures to make the agreement accessible only to the cardholder or other authorized persons. (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iii))

8. Determine that agreements posted or otherwise provided set forth the specific provisions and pricing information applicable to the particular cardholder. (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iv))

9. Determine that provisions and pricing information are complete and accurate as of a date no more than 60 days prior to (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iv)):

   a. The date on which the agreement is posted on the card issuer’s website under 12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(i);

   b. The date the cardholder’s request is received under 12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii) or (e)(2).

   NOTE: Card issuers may provide credit card agreements in electronic form under 12 CFR 1026.58(d) and (e) without regard to the consumer notice and consent requirements of section 101(c) of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). (12 CFR 1026.58(f))

Advertising (Open- and Closed-End)

1. For open- and closed-end loans, sample advertising copy, including any electronic advertising, since the previous examination and verify that the terms of credit are accurate, clear, balanced, and conspicuous. If triggering terms are used, determine that the required disclosures are made (12 CFR 1026.16 and 12 CFR 1026.24).

   a. For advertisements for closed-end credit:

      i. If a rate of finance charge was stated, determine that it was stated as an APR.

      ii. If an APR will increase after consummation, verify that a statement to that fact is made.

      iii. Determine whether there are deceptive or misleading statements or practices.

   b. Determine that the creditor does not offer college students any tangible item to induce such students to apply for or open an open-end consumer credit plan offered by such creditor, if such offer is made:

      i. On the campus of an institution of higher education;

      ii. Near the campus of an institution of higher education; or

      iii. At an event sponsored by or related to an institution of higher education. (12 CFR 1026.57(c))

   c. If an open-end credit advertisement refers to an APR as “fixed” (or similar term), determine 1) that the advertisement also specifies a time period that the rate will be fixed and 2) that the rate will not increase during that period. (12 CFR 1026.16(f))

   d. If an open-end credit advertisement used the word “fixed” or a similar word and no time period is specified in which the rate will be fixed, determine that the rate will not increase while the plan is open. (12 CFR 1026.16(f))

   e. For any advertisement of an open-end (not home-secured) plan, if an APR or fee that may be applied to the account is an introductory rate or introductory fee, determine that the term introductory or intro is in immediate proximity to each listing of the introductory rate or introductory fee in a written or electronic advertisement. (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(3))

   f. For any advertisement of an open-end (not home-secured) plan, if any APR or fee that may be applied to the account is a promotional rate under 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(i) or any fee that may be applied to the account is a promotional fee under 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(iv), determine that the following information is stated in a clear and conspicuous manner in the advertisement (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(4)):

      i. When the promotional rate or promotional fee will end and
ii. The annual percentage rate that will apply after the end of the promotional period.

NOTE: If such rate is variable, determine that the annual percentage rate complies with the accuracy standards in 12 CFR 1026.60(c)(2), 12 CFR 1026.60(d)(3), 12 CFR 1026.60(e)(4), or 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(1)(ii), as applicable. If such rate cannot be determined at the time disclosures are given because the rate depends at least in part on a later determination of the consumer’s creditworthiness, determine that the advertisement discloses the specific rates or the range of rates that might apply. (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(4)(ii)). Further, if the promotional rate or fee is stated in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that the information in 12 CFR 1026.16 (g)(4)(i), and, as applicable, (g)(4)(ii), or (g)(4)(iii) are also stated in a prominent location closely proximate to the first listing of the promotional rate or promotional fee.

g. If a deferred interest offer is advertised for an open-end account not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the deferred interest period is stated in a clear and conspicuous manner in the advertisement. If the phrase “no interest” or similar term regarding the possible avoidance of interest obligations under the deferred interest program is stated, determine that the term “if paid in full” is also stated in a clear and conspicuous manner preceding the disclosure of the deferred interest period in the advertisement. If the deferred interest offer is included in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that the deferred interest period and, if applicable, the term “if paid in full” are stated in immediate proximity to each statement of “no interest,” “no payments,” “deferred interest,” “same as cash,” or similar term regarding interest or payments during the deferred interest period. (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(3))

h. If any deferred interest offer is advertised for an open-end account not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the (h)(4)(i) and (h)(4)(ii) language (of 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4) ) is stated in the advertisement and is similar to Sample G–24 in Appendix G. If the deferred interest offer is included in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that this information is stated in a prominent location closely proximate to the first statement of “no interest,” “no payments,” “deferred interest,” “same as cash,” or similar term regarding interest or payments during the deferred interest period. (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4))

NOTE: The requirements in 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4) apply to any advertisement of an open-end credit plan not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 (requirements for home equity plans) 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(1). However, the requirements do not apply to an envelope or other enclosure in which an application or solicitation is mailed, or to a banner advertisement or pop-up advertisement linked to an application or solicitation provided electronically. (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(5))

Transactional Testing

NOTE: When verifying APR accuracies, use the OCC’s APR calculation model or other calculation tool acceptable to your regulatory agency.

1. Review the financial institution’s closed-end and open-end transactions to ensure accuracy and completeness.

Closed-End Credit Transactional Testing Procedures

1. For each type of closed-end loan being tested, determine the accuracy of the disclosures by comparing the disclosures to the contract and other financial institution documents. (12 CFR 1026.17)

2. Determine whether the required disclosures were made before consummation of the transaction and ensure the presence and accuracy of the items below, as applicable. (12 CFR 1026.18)

   a. Creditor and loan originator name with Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLS) IDs on required documents as required under 12 CFR 1026.36

   b. Amount financed

   c. Itemization of the amount financed (RESPA GFE may substitute)

   d. Finance charge

   e. APR

   f. Variable rate information as follows for loans not secured by a principal dwelling or secured by a principal dwelling with terms of one year or less:

      i. Circumstances which permit rate increase

      ii. Limitations on the increase (periodic or lifetime)

      iii. Effect of the increase

      iv. Hypothetical example of new payment terms that would result from an increase

   g. Payment schedule including the number, amount, and timing of payments.

   h. Total of payments

   i. Demand feature

   j. Total sale price (credit sale)
V. Lending — TILA

k. Prepayment
l. Late payment
m. Security interest
n. Insurance and debt cancellation
o. Certain security interest charges
p. Contract reference
q. Assumption policy
r. Required deposit
s. Interest rate and payment summary for mortgage transactions
t. No-guarantee-to-refinance statement

3. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides disclosures in connection with the initial interest rate adjustment pursuant to the contract and for rate changes that result in corresponding changes in payment.

4. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer includes the appropriate content (as identified in the Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms Review Procedures section above).

5. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides the disclosures consistent with timing requirements (see Timing Requirements section of the procedures above).

NOTE: The accuracy of the adjusted interest rates and indexes should be verified by comparing them with the contract and early disclosures. Refer to the Additional Variable Rate Testing section of these examination procedures.

6. Determine, for each type of closed-end rescindable loan being tested, the appropriate number of copies of the rescission notice are provided to each person whose ownership interest is or will be subject to the security interest. The creditor must deliver two copies of the notice of right to rescind to each consumer entitled to rescind. The rescission notice must disclose the items below. (12 CFR 1026.23(b)(1))

   a. Security interest taken in the consumer’s principal dwelling
   b. Consumer’s right to rescind the transaction
   c. How to exercise the right to rescind, with a form for that purpose, designating the address of the creditor’s place of business
   d. Effects of rescission
   e. Date the rescission period expires.

7. Ensure funding was delayed until the rescission period expired. (12 CFR 1026.23(c))

8. Determine if the consumer has waived the three-day right to rescind since the previous examination. If applicable, test rescission waivers. (12 CFR 1026.23(e))

9. Determine whether the maximum interest rate in the contract is disclosed for any consumer credit contract secured by a dwelling if the APR may increase after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.30(a))

10. For private student loans with a right to cancel, review cancellation requests to determine if they were properly handled. (12 CFR 1026.47(c))

Minimum Standards for Transactions Secured by a Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43

1. Determine whether the financial institution is a creditor that originates covered transactions. Covered transactions are transactions secured by a dwelling, including any real property attached to a dwelling. They do not do not include: home equity lines of credit; timeshare loans (except for the prepayment penalty provisions in 12 CFR 1026.43(g)); reverse mortgages; temporary, “bridge,” or construction loans of 12 months or less; renewable or non-renewable construction loans of 12 months or less; and an extension of credit under a program administered by a Housing Finance Agency (defined in 24 CFR 266.5), by community development or non-profit lenders specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v), or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs. (12 CFR 1026.43(a))

2. Determine if a loan is a streamline refinance under 12 CFR 1026.20(a) and Commentary 12 CFR 1026.20(a) and whether it qualifies under 12 CFR 1026.43(d), below.

Refinancing Non-Standard Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(d)

1. Determine whether a creditor that has refinanced a non-standard mortgage defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(i) (an ARM with an introductory rate fixed for a year or more, an interest-only loan, or a negative amortization loan) into a standard mortgage as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(ii) has considered whether the standard mortgage likely will prevent a default by the consumer once the loan is recast. In addition, determine that the following conditions are met (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(3)):
a. At the time of the refinance, the creditor for the standard mortgage is the current holder of the existing non-standard mortgage or the servicer acting on behalf of the current holder (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(i));

b. The monthly payment for the standard mortgage is materially lower (a payment reduction of 10 percent or more is sufficient) than the monthly payment for the non-standard mortgage using the payment calculation rules in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(5) (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(ii));

c. The creditor received the consumer’s written application for the standard mortgage no later than two months after the non-standard mortgage had recast (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(iii));

d. The consumer had made no more than one payment more than 30 days late on the non-standard mortgage during the 12 months immediately before the creditor receives the consumer’s written application for the standard mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(iv));

e. The consumer had made no payments more than 30 days late during the six months immediately before the creditor received the consumer’s written application for the standard mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(v)); and

f. If the non-standard mortgage was consummated on or after January 10, 2014, the non-standard mortgage was made in accordance with the ability to repay or the qualified mortgage requirements (12 CFR 1026.43(c) or (e)). (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(vi))

2. Determine whether the creditor considered the following, at a minimum, in determining the consumer’s ability to repay: (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2))

a. The consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets (other than the value of the dwelling, including any real property attached to the dwelling, that secures the loan); (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(ii))

b. If the creditor relies on employment income, the consumer’s current employment status; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(ii))

c. The consumer’s monthly payment on the covered transaction, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5); (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iii)) (see g. below)

d. The consumer’s monthly payment on any simultaneous loan that the creditor knows or has reason to know will be made, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6); (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iv))

e. The consumer’s monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(v))

f. The consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vi))

g. The consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7) and 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vii) and (viii)); and

h. The consumer’s credit history (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(viii)).

3. Determine whether the creditor verified the information it relied upon when considering the eight factors listed above using reasonably reliable third-party records, except that special rules apply for verification of income or assets, employment, and current debt obligations that are not shown on the consumer’s credit report.

Income and Assets, Employment and Debt Obligations

1. Determine that the creditor verified the information that it relied on using reliable third-party records except that:

a. A creditor may verify a consumer’s employment status orally if the creditor prepares a written record of the information obtained orally; and (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(i))

b. A creditor that relies on a credit report to verify a consumer’s current obligations need not independently verify obligations that the consumer lists on the application that are not in the consumer’s credit report. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(ii))
V. Lending — TILA

2. Determine whether the creditor verified the income or assets it relied upon, by using third-party records that provide reasonably reliable evidence, (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)) such as:
   a. A tax-return transcript issued by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS); (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4))
   b. Copies of tax returns the consumer filed with the IRS or a state taxing authority; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(i))
   c. IRS Form W-2s or similar IRS forms used for reporting wages or tax withholding; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(ii))
   d. Payroll statements, including military Leave and Earnings Statements; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(iii))
   e. Financial institution records; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(iv))
   f. Records from the consumer’s employer or a third party that obtained information from the employer; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(v))
   g. Records from a federal, state, or local government agency stating the consumer’s income from benefits or entitlements; (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(vi))
   h. Receipts from the consumer’s use of check cashing services; and (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(vii))
   i. Receipts from the consumer’s use of a funds transfer service. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(viii))

3. For employment status, if the creditor orally verified employment status, determine whether the creditor prepared a written record of the information obtained orally. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(ii))

Monthly Payment Calculation

1. Determine whether the creditor calculated the monthly payment (except for balloon payment, interest-only and negative amortization loans) by using:
   a. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and monthly, fully amortizing payments that are substantially equal. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5))
   b. For a loan with a balloon payment:
      i. The maximum payment in the payment schedule, including any balloon payment, for a higher-priced covered transaction. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(A)(2))
   c. For an interest-only loan:
      i. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and
      ii. Substantially equal, monthly payments of principal and interest that will repay the loan amount over the term of the loan remaining as of the date the loan is recast. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(B))
   d. For a negative amortization loan:
      i. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and
      ii. Substantially equal, monthly payments of principal and interest that will repay the maximum loan amount as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(7) over the term of the loan remaining as of the date the loan is recast. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(C))

Monthly Payment Calculation for Simultaneous Loans

1. Determine whether the creditor calculated the monthly payment on any simultaneous loan that was used to determine the consumer’s repayment ability, including any mortgage-related obligations, as follows:
   a. For a simultaneous loan that is a covered transaction, using the payment calculation rules for covered transactions, described above (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6)(i)); or
   b. For a home equity line of credit, by using the periodic payment required under the terms of the plan and the amount of credit drawn at or before consummation of the covered transaction. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6)(ii)).

Monthly Debt-to-Income Ratio or Residual Income

1. When a creditor considers the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio, determine whether the creditor considered the ratio of the consumer’s total monthly debt obligations to the consumer’s total monthly income. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(ii)(A))
   a. Total monthly debt obligations means the total of: the monthly payment on the covered transaction (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iii) and (c)(5)), simultaneous loans (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iv) and (c)(6)), mortgage-related obligations (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(v)), and current debt obligations, alimony, and child support (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vi)).

b. Total monthly income means the total of the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income, including any income from assets (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(i) and (4)).

2. If a creditor considers the consumer’s monthly residual income, determine whether the creditor considered the consumer’s remaining income after subtracting the consumer’s total monthly debt obligations from the consumer’s total monthly income. (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(ii)(B)) Total monthly debt obligations and total monthly income are defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) and (B).

Qualified Mortgages — 12 CFR 1026.43(e)

1. Determine whether the creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a loan that is a qualified mortgage, including a higher-priced qualified mortgage, under the general qualified mortgage definition in 12 CFR 1026.43(e) or by making loans that are qualified mortgages because they are made pursuant to rules promulgated by HUD or VA pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §1639c(b) for loans insured or guaranteed loans by those agencies.52 (12 CFR 1026.43(e))

2. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4), (5), (6), or (f) (all discussed below), a qualified mortgage is a covered transaction:

a. That provides for regular, substantially equal, periodic payments, except for the effect any interest rate change after consummation has on adjustable-rate mortgages or step-rate mortgages (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)) that do not:

i. Result in an increase of the principal balance (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(A)), or

ii. Allow balloon payments or deferment of principal payments (except for balloon-payment qualified mortgages described in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) and (e)(6)); (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(B) and (C)).

b. For which the loan term does not exceed 30 years (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(ii));

c. For which the total points and fees (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i)):

i. do not exceed the applicable thresholds of: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(ii)(B))

A. $107,747 or over: 3 percent of the total loan amount (see 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(4)(i));

B. $64,648 or over but less than $107,747: $3,232;

C. $21,549 or over but less than $64,648: 5 percent of the total loan amount;

D. $13,368 or over but less than $21,549: $1,077; or

E. Less than $13,468: 8 percent of the total loan amount.

NOTE: These numbers will be annually adjusted for inflation on January 1.

ii. For transactions consummated on or before January 10, 2021, if the creditor or assignee determined after consummation that the points and fees exceeded the applicable threshold, the loan is not precluded from being a qualified mortgage if:

A. The loan otherwise meets the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), (e)(4), (e)(5), (e)(6), or (f), as applicable;

B. The creditor or assignee paid to the consumer certain amounts, described below, within 210 days after consummation and prior to any of the following events:

1) The consumer institutes an action in connection with the loan;

2) The consumer provides a written notice to the creditor, assignee, or servicer that the transaction’s total points and fees exceed the applicable threshold; or

3) The consumer becomes 60 days past due on the legal obligation; and

C. The amount paid to the consumer is not less than the sum of the following:

1) The dollar amount by which the transaction’s total points and fees exceeds the applicable limit, and

2) Interest on the amount of excess points and fees, calculated using the contract interest rate applicable during the period from consummation until the payment is made to the consumer; and

D. The creditor or assignee, as applicable, maintains and follows policies and procedures for post-consummation review of points and fees for making the above-described payments to consumers. (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(3)(iii) and (iv))

NOTE: The points and fees cure provision applies to the points and fees limits for all of the qualified mortgage types defined in Regulation Z.

d. For which the creditor underwrites the loan, taking into account the monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations, using: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv))

i. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the first 5 years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due; and

ii. Periodic payments of principal and interest that will repay either:

A. The outstanding principal balance over the remaining term of the loan. This should be calculated as of the date the interest rate adjusts to the maximum interest rate that may apply during the first 5 years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due, assuming the consumer will have made all required payments as due prior to that date; or

B. The loan amount over the loan term;

e. For which the creditor considers and verifies at or before consummation the following: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(v))

i. The consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan, in accordance with Appendix Q and 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(i) and (c)(4); and

ii. The consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support in accordance with Appendix Q and 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vi) and (c)(3); and

f. For which the ratio of the consumer’s total monthly debt to total monthly income at the time of consummation does not exceed 43 percent. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi), the ratio of the consumer’s total monthly debt to total monthly income is determined: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi))

i. In accordance with the standards in Appendix Q; (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(A)), except

ii. The creditor calculates the consumer’s monthly payment on: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(B))

A. The covered transaction, including the monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations, in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv) (see also a.4 above) and

B. Any simultaneous loan that the creditor knows or has reason to know will be made, in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iv) and (c)(6) (see also h. in “Ability to Repay” above).

Temporary Category of Qualified Mortgages

1. Determine whether the creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making loans that

a. Meet the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i) through (iii) (i.e., have substantially equal, periodic payments; restrictions on loan features; a maximum 30-year term; and points and fees—generally limited to a 3 percent threshold); and are

b. Eligible (except with regard to matters wholly unrelated to ability to repay) to be purchased, guaranteed, or insured by the listed federal government sponsored entities or agencies.}

53 The temporary QM rule is available for transactions consummated on or before January 10, 2021. The rule does not apply to HUD loans or to VA loans because they are qualified mortgages pursuant to 12 U.S.C. section 1639c(b)(3)(B)(ii)(I)-(II), which authorizes HUD and VA to promulgate QM rules. HUD issued its final QM rule, effective January 10, 2014 (78 Fed. Reg. 75215, December 11, 2013), and VA issued its interim final QM rule, effective May 9, 2014 (79 Fed. Reg. 26620, May 9, 2014).

54 Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac), operating under the conservatorship or receivership of the Federal Housing Finance Agency pursuant to section 1367(a) of the Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act and Soundness Act of 1992 (12 U.S.C. 4617a(a)), or any limited-life regulatory entity succeeding the charter of either the Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac pursuant to section 1367(i) of the Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992 (12 U.S.C. 4617(i)); the U.S. Department of Agriculture pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1472(h); or the Rural Housing Service. These special rules in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4) are available only for covered transactions consummated on or before January 10, 2021. This provision expires on the effective date of a rule issued by each respective agency pursuant to its authority under TILA §129C(b)(3)(ii) to define a qualified mortgage. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs have issued final rules governing qualified mortgages under their programs and therefore the temporary provisions of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4) do not apply to FHA and VA loans.
Small Creditor Portfolio Loan Qualified Mortgages
– 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage as follows:

   a. The creditor satisfies the creditor requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B), and (C), which require that: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(D))

      i. During the preceding calendar year (or, if the application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor and its affiliates together extended no more than 2,000 first-lien covered transactions that were sold, assigned or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person; and

      ii. As of the end of the preceding calendar year (or if the application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, as of either of the two preceding December 31st), the creditor and its affiliates that regularly extended first-lien covered transactions, together had total assets of less than $2 billion (this threshold will adjust annually).

   b. The creditor makes a loan that meets the requirements for a qualified mortgage in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), other than 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi), and without regard to the standards in Appendix Q: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(A)), and

   c. Considers at or before consummation, the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income and verifies the debt obligations and income used to determine that ratio in accordance with the repayment ability requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7), except that the calculation of the payment for determining the consumer’s total monthly debt obligations in 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) is determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv) (based on the maximum interest rate in the first five years after the date the first periodic payment is due) instead of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5) (fully indexed rate); (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(B))

   d. The loan was not subject to a forward commitment at consummation, except to a person that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii) (B) and (C) (i.e., small creditors) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(C)).

2. Determine whether the small creditor portfolio mortgage does not have a qualified mortgage status because it was subject to a forward commitment at consummation, or the creditor has transferred it in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:

   a. Three years or more after consummation;

   b. To a creditor that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(D) of this section (i.e., small creditors under 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C));

   c. Made pursuant to a capital restoration plan or other action under 12 U.S.C. 1831o, or to actions or instructions of a conservator, receiver, or bankruptcy trustee, or to orders by or agreements with a state or federal governmental agency with jurisdiction to examine the creditor; or

   d. Made pursuant to a merger of the creditor and another person or the acquisition of the creditor by another person, or the creditor’s acquisition of another person. (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)).

Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages Made by Certain Small Creditors
– 12 CFR 1026.43(f)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that provides for a balloon payment as follows:

   a. The creditor satisfies the creditor requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C), which require that: (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(vi))

   b. The creditor makes a loan that meets the requirements for a qualified mortgage in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), other than 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi), and without regard to the standards in Appendix Q: (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(A)), and

   c. Considers at or before consummation, the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan, in accordance with the general repayment ability standards; and the consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support in accordance with the general repayment ability standards (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(B))
V. Lending — TILA

i. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor extended a first-lien covered transaction on a property that is located in a “rural” or “underserved” area;

ii. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor, together with its affiliates, extended no more than 2,000 first-lien covered transactions (that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person); and

iii. As of the preceding December 31st (or if an application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, as of either of the two preceding December 31sts), the creditor and its affiliates that regularly extended first-lien covered transactions, together had total assets of less than $2 billion (this threshold will adjust annually).

b. The creditor makes a loan that meets the requirements for a qualified mortgage in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(A) (substantially equal payments or ARMs or step-rate mortgages that do not increase the principal balance), (e)(2)(ii) (loan term 30 years or less), (e)(2)(iii) (points and fees under certain thresholds), and (e)(2)(v) (income, assets, and obligations are considered and verified), but without regard to the standards in Appendix Q: (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iv)(A));

c. The creditor determines that the consumer can make all of the scheduled payments under the loan and the monthly payments for all mortgage-related obligations (excluding the balloon payment) from the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets (other than the dwelling that secures the loan); (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(ii))

d. The creditor considers at or before consummation, the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income and verifies the debt obligations and income used to determine that ratio in accordance with the repayment ability requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7), except that the calculation of the payment for determining the consumer’s total monthly debt obligations in 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) is based on the scheduled payments for the balloon-payment qualified mortgage in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iv)(A), together with the consumer’s monthly payments for all mortgage-related obligations other than the balloon payment; (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iii))

e. The legal obligation provides for:

i. Scheduled payments that are substantially equal, calculated using an amortization period that does not exceed 30 years, with

ii. An interest rate that does not increase over the term of the loan, and

iii. A loan term of five years or longer; (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iv)(A)-(C))

f. The loan was not subject to a forward commitment at consummation, except to a person that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C) (i.e., small creditors operating in rural or underserved counties).

2. Determine whether the balloon-payment qualified mortgage does not have qualified mortgage status because it was subject to a forward commitment at consummation, or the creditor has transferred it in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:

a. Three years or more after consummation;

b. To a creditor that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(vi) of this section (i.e., meets the definition of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A)-(C), establishing criteria for small creditors operating in rural or underserved counties);

c. Made pursuant to a capital restoration plan or other action under 12 U.S.C. 1831o, or to actions or instructions of a conservator, receiver or bankruptcy trustee, or to orders by or agreements with a state or federal governmental agency with jurisdiction to examine the creditor; or

d. Due to a merger of the creditor with another person or the acquisition of the creditor by another person or another person by the creditor. (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(2)(i) and (iv))

NOTE: If a balloon-payment qualified mortgage has lost its qualified mortgage status, the creditor must have complied with the general ability-to-repay requirements under 12 CFR 1026.43(c).

Temporary Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages Made by Small Creditors – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(6)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that meets the requirements of the small creditor balloon-payment qualified mortgage definition in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) (above), except that the creditor requirement in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A) (operate in a rural or underserved area) does not apply.

NOTE: This temporary qualified mortgage category applies only to loans for which the application was received before April 1, 2016.

Prepayment Penalties – 12 CFR 1026.43(g)

1. Determine whether a mortgage is a covered transaction (which excludes HELOCs and timeshares but, for purposes of the prepayment penalty provisions, includes reverse mortgages, temporary loans, and loans made by certain community development, non-profit, and other lenders otherwise excluded from ability-to-repay provisions under 12 CFR 1026.43(a)). If yes, then the loan may not have a prepayment penalty unless:
   a. It is a qualified mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), (e)(4), (e)(5), (e)(6), or (f);
   b. The prepayment penalty is otherwise allowed by law;
   c. The mortgage has an APR that cannot increase after consummation; and
   d. The loan is not a higher-priced mortgage loan, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a). (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(1)).

   NOTE: Covered transactions are generally prohibited from having prepayment penalties unless certain conditions are met.

2. Determine if the prepayment penalty improperly exceeds the following percentages of the outstanding balance prepaid:
   a. 2 percent during the first two years following consummation;
   b. 1 percent during the third year following consummation; and
   c. 0 percent thereafter. (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(2))

3. Determine whether a creditor offering a consumer a mortgage with a prepayment penalty has also offered the consumer an alternative without a prepayment penalty and the alternative: (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3))
   a. Has an APR that cannot increase after consummation and has the same type of interest rate (fixed or step rate) as the loan with a prepayment penalty;
   b. Has the same loan term as the loan with a prepayment penalty;

4. Determine whether a creditor offering a loan with a prepayment penalty through a mortgage broker:
   a. Presents the mortgage broker an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3) (see c. above); and
   b. Establishes by agreement that the mortgage broker must present to the consumer an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty offered by the creditor that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(g) (see c. above); or another creditor, if the other creditor offers a lower interest rate or a lower total dollar amount of discount points and origination points or fees. (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(4))

5. Determine whether a creditor that is a loan originator, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1), who presents a covered transaction with a prepayment penalty offered by another person to whom the loan would be assigned after consummation also presents the consumer an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(g), offered by the assignee; or another person offering a lower interest rate or a lower total dollar amount of origination discount points and points or fees. (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(5))

Evasion of Minimum Standards for Loans Secured By a Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43(h)

1. Determine whether the creditor has structured credit secured by a dwelling that does not meet the definition of open-end credit in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20) as an open-end plan to evade the requirements for minimum standards for loans secured by a dwelling.

1. Determine whether the financial institution originates consumer credit transactions subject to Subpart E of Regulation Z; specifically, high-cost mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32), reverse mortgages (12 CFR 1026.33), and “higher-priced mortgage loans” (12 CFR 1026.35).
2. In addition to reviewing high-cost mortgages, reverse mortgages, and higher-priced mortgage loans for compliance with requirements in other subparts of Regulation Z (for example, disclosure timing requirements under 12 CFR 1026.19(a)), review such mortgages to ensure the following:

   a. Required disclosures are provided to consumers in addition to, not in lieu of, the disclosures contained in other subparts of Regulation Z. (12 CFR 1026.31(a))

   b. Disclosures are clear and conspicuous, in writing, and in a form that the consumer may keep. (12 CFR 1026.31(b))

   c. Disclosures are furnished at least three business days prior to consummation or account opening of a high-cost mortgage or a closed-end reverse mortgage transaction (or at least three business days prior to the first transaction under an open-end reverse mortgage). (12 CFR 1026.31(c))

   d. Disclosures reflect the terms of the legal obligation between the parties. (12 CFR 1026.31(d))

   e. If the transaction involves more than one creditor, that only one creditor provided the disclosures. Where the obligation involves multiple consumers, ensure that the disclosures were provided to any consumer who is primarily liable on the obligation. Further, for rescindable transactions, verify that the disclosures were provided to each consumer who has the right to rescind. (12 CFR 1026.31(e))

   f. The APR is accurately calculated and disclosed in accordance with the requirements and within the tolerances allowed in 12 CFR 1026.22 for closed-end credit transactions and 12 CFR 1026.6(a) for open-end credit plans. (12 CFR 1026.31(g))

3. For high-cost mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32), ensure that, in addition to other required disclosures, the creditor discloses the following at least three business days prior to consummation or account opening (See model disclosure at App. H-16):

   a. Notice containing the prescribed language. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(1))

   b. The APR. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(2))

   c. Regular payment and balloon payment. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)).

   d. For a closed-end credit transaction, the amount of regular loan payment and the amount of any balloon payment. The disclosed regular payment should be treated as accurate if it is based on an amount borrowed that is deemed accurate under 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5). (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3))

   e. For an open-end credit plan:

      i. An example showing the first minimum periodic payment for the draw period, the first minimum periodic payment for any repayment period, and the balance outstanding at the beginning of any repayment period. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(A))

         NOTE: The example must be based on the assumption that the consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening and does not obtain any additional extensions of credit, that the consumer makes only the minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period, and that the APR used to calculate the example payments remains the same during the draw period and any repayment period. Creditors must provide the minimum period payment example based on the APR, except that if an introductory APR applies, the creditor must use the rate that will apply to the plan after the introductory rate expires. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(A)-(C))

      ii. If the credit contract provides for a balloon payment, a disclosure of that fact and an example showing the amount of the balloon payment based on the assumptions described in the note above. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(B))

      iii. A statement that the example payments show the first minimum periodic payments at the current annual percentage rate if the consumer borrows the maximum credit available when the account is opened and does not obtain any additional extensions of credit, or substantially similar statement. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(C))

      iv. A statement that the example payments are not the consumer’s actual payments and that the actual minimum periodic payments will depend on the amount the consumer borrows, the interest rate applicable to that period, and whether the consumer pays more than the required minimum periodic payment, or a substantially similar statement. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(D))

   f. For variable rate transactions, a statement that the interest rate and monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment allowed under the contract based on the maximum rate required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.30. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(4))

   g. For a closed-end credit transaction, the total amount the consumer will borrow (the face amount of the note) and if this amount includes financed charges that are not prohibited under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10), that fact. This disclosure should be treated as accurate if within $100 of the actual amount borrowed. For an open-end credit plan, the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened. (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5))

4. For high-cost mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32), ensure that the creditor follows these additional rules concerning the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.32(c):

a. Determine if a new disclosure is required if, subsequent to providing the additional disclosure but prior to consummation or account opening, the creditor changes any terms that make the disclosures inaccurate. For example, if a consumer finances the payment of premiums or other charges as permitted under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10) and, as a result, the monthly payment differs from the payment previously disclosed, re-disclosure is required and a new three-day waiting period applies. (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(i))

b. Determine if a creditor provides new disclosures by telephone when the consumer initiates a change in terms, then prior to or at consummation or account opening the creditor must provide new written disclosures and both parties must sign a statement that these new disclosures were provided by telephone at least three days prior to consummation or account opening. (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(ii))

c. If a consumer waives the right to a three-day waiting period to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency, the consumer’s waiver must be a dated written statement (not a pre-printed form) describing the emergency and bearing the signature of all the consumers entitled to the waiting period (a consumer can waive only after receiving the required disclosures and prior to consummation or account opening). (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(iii))

5. For high-cost mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32) determine that the creditor has not included any of the following loan terms:

a. A payment schedule that provides for a balloon payment (with exceptions). (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(i)-(iii))

b. Negative amortization. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(2))

c. Advance payments from the proceeds of more than 2 periodic payments. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(3))

d. Increased interest rate after default. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(4))

e. A rebate of interest, arising from a loan acceleration due to default, calculated by a method less favorable than the actuarial method. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(5))

f. Prepayment penalty as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(6).

g. A due-on-demand clause that permits the creditor to terminate the loan in advance of maturity and accelerate the balance, except in cases of fraud or material misrepresentation by the consumer, failure by the consumer to meet the repayment terms of the agreement for any outstanding balance, or action or inaction by the consumer that adversely affects the creditor’s security interest in the loan. (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8))

6. For high-cost mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.32, determine that the creditor is not engaged in the following acts and practices:

a. Home improvement contracts – Paying a contractor under a home improvement contract from the proceeds of a mortgage unless certain conditions are met. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(1))

b. Notice to assignee – Selling or otherwise assigning a high-cost mortgage without furnishing the required statement to the purchaser or assignee. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(2))

c. Refinancing within one year of extending credit – Within one year of making a high-cost mortgage, a creditor may not refinance any high-cost mortgage to the same consumer into another high-cost mortgage that is not in the consumer’s interest. This also applies to assignees that hold or service the high-cost mortgage. Commentary to 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3) has examples applying the refinancing prohibition and addressing "consumer’s interest." (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3))

d. Extending high-cost mortgage credit without regard to the consumer’s repayment ability. (Temporary or bridge loans with a term of 12 months or less are exempt from this requirement.) (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)):

i. For closed-end credit transactions that are high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor is complying with the repayment ability requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.43

ii. For open-end credit plans that are high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor is not extending credit without regard to the consumer’s repayment ability as of account opening, including the consumer’s current and reasonably expected income, current obligations, assets other than collateral, and employment. A creditor must determine repayment ability for open-end high-cost mortgages by:

A. Verifying amounts of income or assets that it relies on to determine repayment ability, including expected income or assets, by the consumer’s Internal Revenue Service Form W-2, tax returns, payroll receipts, financial institution records, or other third-party documents that provide reasonably reliable evidence of the consumer’s income or assets.

B. Verifying the consumer’s current obligations, including any mortgage-related obligations that are required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening and secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage.

iii. Alternatively determines whether the creditor complies with the repayment ability requirement by:

A. Verifying repayment ability as described above;

B. Determining the consumer’s repayment ability by using the largest required minimum periodic payment based on the assumptions that:

1) The consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening with no additional extensions of credit;

2) The consumer makes only required minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period

3) If the annual percentage rate can increase during the plan, the maximum percentage rate that is included in the contract; and

C. Assessing the consumer’s repayment ability, taking into account at least one of the following: the ratio of total debt obligations to income (including any mortgage-related obligations that are required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening, and are secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage transaction, or the income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)).

e. Pre-loan counseling – Determine whether the creditor extending a high-cost mortgage received written certification confirming that the consumer received approved home ownership counseling after receiving the initial GFE or, for open-end credit plans, the initial TILA disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.40, or if neither of those disclosures are provided, after receiving the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.32(c). (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)). Requirements include:

i. Verify that home ownership counseling was not provided by an employee or affiliate of the creditor

ii. If the creditor paid fees associated with homeownership counseling, confirm that the payment was not contingent upon the consumer obtaining the high-cost mortgage or receipt of a counseling certification

iii. Verify that the counseling certificate contains the name of the consumer, date of counseling, name and address of the counselor, and statements required by 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)(iv).

7. Late Fees – For high-cost mortgages, confirm that late payment charges are disclosed in the terms of the loan contract or open-end credit agreement and that such fees do not exceed four percent of the amount past due. No such charge may be imposed more than once for a single late payment. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8))

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans: Appraisals

1. For higher-priced mortgage loans secured by principal dwelling that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2), determine whether, before consummation, the creditor obtained a written appraisal from a state-licensed or certified appraiser that included a physical visit to the interior of the dwelling. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3))

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) exempts several types of loans from the appraisal requirements, including qualified mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.43.

8. Determine whether the creditor is deemed to comply with the requirement by:

a. Ordering that the appraiser perform the appraisal in conformity with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice and title XI of FIRREA and any 55 The higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal requirement was adopted pursuant to an interagency rulemaking conducted by the Board, the CFPB, the FDIC, FHFA, NCUA and OCC. The Board codified the rule at 12 CFR 226.43, and the OCC codified the rule at 12 CFR Part 34 and 12 CFR Part 164. There is no substantive difference among these three sets of rules.

implementing regulations. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)(A))

b. Verifying through the National Registry that the appraiser who signed the appraiser’s certification was a certified or licensed appraiser in the state in which the appraised property is located as of the date the appraiser signed the appraiser’s certification. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)(B))

c. Confirming that the appraisal includes elements set forth in Appendix N. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(ii)(3)(C))

d. Having no actual knowledge contrary to the facts or certifications contained in the written appraisal.

9. Assess whether the creditor exercised reasonable diligence in determining if a second interior appraisal was necessary. A creditor can exercise reasonable diligence by basing its determination on written source documents such as:

a. A copy of the recorded deed from the seller.

b. A copy of a property tax bill.

c. A copy of any owner’s title insurance policy obtained by the seller.

d. A copy of the RESPA settlement statement from the seller’s acquisition.

e. A property sales history report or title report from a third-party reporting service.

f. Sales price data recorded in multiple listing services.

g. Tax assessment records or transfer tax records obtained from local governments.

h. A written appraisal performed in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(i) for the same transaction.

i. A copy of a title commitment report detailing the seller’s ownership of the property.

j. A property abstract (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(i) and (vi); see Appendix O).

10. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii), determine whether an additional written interior appraisal from a state certified or licensed appraiser was both required and performed because the seller acquired the property 180 days or less before the consumer’s purchase agreement, and the sales price increased:

a. Greater than 10 percent over the previous purchase price, if acquired 90 or fewer days prior to the consumer’s purchase agreement; or (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(i)(A)) or

b. Greater than 20 percent over the previous purchase price, if acquired 91 to 180 days prior to the consumer’s purchase agreement. (12 CFR 1026.35(C)(4)(i)(B))

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii) provides for eight exemptions from the second appraisal requirement, such as for extensions of credit to finance the acquisition of property from a local, state, or federal government agency.

11. For higher-priced mortgage loans (that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii)) where the creditor is required to obtain a second interior appraisal:

a. Confirm that the creditor obtained an appraisal from a different state certified or licensed appraiser than the one who conducted the first appraisal. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(iii))

b. Confirm that the creditor charged the consumer for only one of the appraisals. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(v))

NOTE: Reviewing the Closing Disclosure or HUD-1 may assist in identifying whether a second appraisal fee was charged to the consumer.

c. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2), determine that the creditor provided a written disclosure in a timely manner informing consumers that an appraisal may be necessary and that there is a cost associated with the appraisal, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5).

i. Disclosures must be provided to consumers within three business days after receipt of an application for a higher-priced mortgage loan. A creditor can meet this requirement by placing the disclosure in the mail within three business days after receipt of the application for a higher-priced mortgage loan. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)(ii))

ii. If the loan becomes a higher-priced mortgage loan during the application process, but after initial receipt of the application, a creditor has three business days from the time the loan became a higher-priced mortgage loan to provide the necessary disclosure. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)(iii))

d. Confirm that the creditor provided consumers with a free copy of any written appraisal performed in connection with a higher-priced mortgage loan that is not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2). (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6))
V. Lending — TILA

i. Determine whether the creditor is providing consumers with a copy of their appraisal(s) no later than three business days prior to consummation of the loan; (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(ii)(A)) or

ii. If the loan is not consummated, determine whether the creditor is providing consumers with a copy of the appraisal(s) within 30 days after determining that the loan will not be consummated. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(ii)(B))

NOTE: The creditor can satisfy this disclosure requirement by providing the disclosure required in Regulation B, 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(2), related to a free copy of the appraisal. (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)). However, unlike the waiver provision in Regulation B, a consumer may not waive the timing requirement to receive a copy of the appraisal under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(i). In addition, the creditor must use the earliest applicable timing requirement to comply with each regulation’s appraisal/valuation disclosure requirements.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans: Escrow Accounts

1. For most higher-priced mortgage loans secured by a first lien on a principal dwelling escrow accounts must be established before consummation for property taxes and premiums for mortgage-related insurance required by the creditor. (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(1))

2. For higher-priced mortgage loans where the creditor did not establish an escrow account, determine whether the transaction or the creditor would fall into an exemption. (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2))

   a. Is the transaction secured by shares in a cooperative (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(A));
   b. Is the transaction to finance the initial construction of the dwelling (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(B));
   c. Is the transaction a temporary or “bridge” loan with a term less than 12 months (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(C));
   d. Is the transaction a reverse mortgage transaction under 12 CFR 1026.33 (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(D));

   NOTE: There is a limited exemption for transactions secured by a dwelling in a condominium, planned unit development, or other “common interest community” where a dwelling ownership requires participation in a governing association that is obligated to maintain a master insurance policy insuring all dwellings. In these common interest communities, creditors must maintain an escrow account for the payment of taxes only. (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii))

   e. Does the creditor, or loan originator, qualify for an exemption under 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A)-(D):

   i. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), it extended a covered transaction (defined in section 1026.43(b)(1)) secured by a first lien on a property located in an area that meets the definition of “rural” or “underserved” as laid out in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv);

   ii. Together with any affiliates, it did not extend more than 2,000 covered transactions (secured by first liens, that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person) in the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years);

   iii. It and its affiliates that regularly extended covered transactions together had less than the annually adjusted $2 billion threshold in total assets as of the preceding December 31st, or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, of either of the two proceeding December 31sts ; and

   iv. Neither the creditor nor its affiliate maintains an escrow account of the type described in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(1) for any extension of consumer credit secured by real property or a dwelling that the creditor or its affiliate currently services, other than:

      A. Escrow accounts established for first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans on or after April 1, 2010, and before May 1, 2016; or
      B. Escrow accounts established after consummation as an accommodation to distressed consumers to assist such consumers in avoiding default or foreclosure.

   NOTE: The asset threshold will adjust automatically each year, based on the year-to-year change in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers, not seasonally adjusted, for each 12-month period ending in November, with rounding.
3. Evasion of requirements: Ensure that the creditor does not structure a higher-priced mortgage loan as an open-end plan (“spurious open-end credit”) to evade the requirements of Regulation Z. (12 CFR 1026.35(d))

Prohibited Payments to Loan Originators – 12 CFR 1026.36(d) and (e)

1. Determine that, in connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling, no loan originator receives and no person pays to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, compensation that is based on:

   NOTE: The term “loan originator” means, a person who, in expectation of direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain or for direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain: takes an application, offers, arranges, assists a consumer in obtaining or applying to obtain, negotiates, or otherwise obtains or makes an extension of consumer credit for another person; or through advertising or other means of communication represents to the public that such person can or will perform any of these activities. The term “loan originator” includes an employee, agent, or contractor of the creditor or loan originator organization if the employee, agent, or contractor meets this definition. The term “loan originator” also includes a creditor that engages in loan origination activities if the creditor does not finance the transaction at consummation out of the creditor’s own resources, including by drawing on a bona fide warehouse line of credit or out of deposits held by the creditor.

   NOTE: A person is not a loan originator who does not take a consumer credit application or offer or negotiate credit terms available from a creditor to that consumer based on the consumer’s financial characteristics, but who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who does engage in such activities. An employee of a manufactured home retailer who does not take a consumer credit application offer, or negotiate credit terms, or advise a consumer on credit terms is not a loan originator. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(a), “credit terms” include rates, fees or other costs, and a consumer’s financial characteristics include any factors that may influence a credit decision, such as debts, income, assets or credit history.

2. Determine that a loan originator that receives a contribution to a defined contribution, tax-advantaged plan that meets the applicable requirements of the Internal Revenue Code does not receive a contribution that is directly or indirectly based on the terms of the individual loan originator’s transactions. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iii))

3. Determine whether an individual loan originator receives compensation pursuant to a non-deferred, profits-based compensation plan only if:

   a. The compensation paid to an individual loan originator is not directly or indirectly based on the terms of that individual loan originator’s transactions that are subject to 12 CFR 1026.36(d); and

   b. At least one of the following conditions is satisfied:

      i. The compensation paid to an individual loan originator does not, in the aggregate, exceed 10 percent of the individual loan originator’s total compensation corresponding to the time period for which the compensation under the non-deferred profits-based compensation plan is paid; or

      ii. The individual loan originator was a loan originator for ten or fewer transactions consummated during the 12-month period preceding the date of the compensation determination. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iv))

Prohibition on Dual Compensation

1. If any loan originator receives compensation directly from a consumer in a closed-end consumer credit transaction

   a. A term of a transaction, the terms of multiple transactions by an individual loan originator, or the terms of multiple transactions by multiple individual loan originators (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)), or

   NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1) only, a “term of a transaction” is any right or obligation of the parties to a credit transaction. The amount of credit extended is not a term of a transaction or a proxy for a term of a transaction, provided that compensation received by or paid to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, is based on a fixed percentage of the amount of credit extended; however, such compensation may be subject to a minimum or maximum dollar amount. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(ii))

   b. A proxy for a term of a transaction. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i))

56 12 CFR 1026.36(d) and (e) do not apply to a home-equity line of credit subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 or to a loan that is secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D). (12 CFR 1026.36(b))

57 Compensation includes salaries, commissions, and any financial or similar incentive, such as an annual or periodic bonus or awards of merchandise, services, trips, or similar prizes. See 12 CFR §1026.36(a)(3) and comment 1026.36(a)-5.

58 A factor that is not itself a term of a transaction is a proxy for a term of the transaction if the factor consistently varies with that term over a significant number of transactions, and the loan originator has the ability, directly or indirectly, to add, drop, or change the factor in originating the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)) secured by a dwelling, determine that (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)):

a. No loan originator receives compensation, directly or indirectly, from any person other than the consumer in connection with the transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(1)) except that a loan originator organization may receive compensation from a consumer and pay compensation to its individual loan originator; and

b. No person who knows or has reason to know of the consumer-paid compensation to the loan originator (other than the consumer) pays any compensation to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, in connection with the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(2))

NOTE: Loan originator organizations are permitted to compensate their employees if the organization receives compensation directly from a consumer, subject to the prohibition on payments to loan originators in 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1).

Prohibition on Steering

1. Determine that, in connection with a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling, a loan originator does not direct or “steer” a consumer to consummate a transaction based on the fact that the originator will receive greater compensation from the creditor in that transaction than in other transactions the originator offered or could have offered to the consumer, unless the consummated transaction is in the consumer’s interest. (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(1))

NOTE: The rule provides a safe harbor to facilitate compliance with the prohibition on steering in 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1). The loan originator is deemed to comply with the anti-steering prohibition if the consumer is presented with loan options that meet all of the following conditions for each type of transaction in which the consumer expressed an interest:

a. The loan originator obtains loan options from a significant number of the creditors with which the originator regularly does business and, for each type of transaction in which the consumer expressed an interest, presents the consumer with loan options that include (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)): i. The loan with the lowest interest rate; (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(A))

ii. The loan with the lowest interest rate without negative amortization, a prepayment penalty, interest-only payments, a balloon payment in the first seven years of the life of the loan, a demand feature, shared equity, or shared appreciation; or, in the case of a reverse mortgage, a loan without a prepayment penalty, or shared equity or shared appreciation; and (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(B))

iii. The loan with the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees (or, if two or more loans have the same total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees, the loan with the lowest interest rate that has the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees). (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(C))

b. The loan originator has a good faith belief that the options (presented to the consumer that are set forth, above) are loans for which the consumer likely qualifies. (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(ii))

c. For each type of transaction, if the originator presents to the consumer more than three loans, the originator highlights the loans that satisfy options 1.i, 1.ii, and 1.iii above. (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(iii))

NOTE: If the requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.36(e) are met, the loan originator can, without steering, present fewer than three loans. (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(4))

Loan Originator Qualifications\(^{60}\) and Documentation – 12 CFR 1026.36(f) and (g)

1. Determine whether the loan originator organization complies with all applicable state law requirements for legal existence and foreign qualification. (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(1))

2. Determine whether the loan originator organization ensures that individual loan originators who work for it (e.g., employees, under a brokerage agreement) are licensed or registered as required by the Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act of 2008 (SAFE Act), its implementing regulations (12 CFR §1007 and §1008), and any state SAFE Act law. (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(2))

3. For individual loan originators who are its employees and who are not required to be licensed and are not licensed as a loan originator under section 1008.103 or state SAFE Act implementing law, determine whether the loan originator organization, prior to allowing the individual to act as a loan originator:

\(^{59}\) The term “type of transaction” refers to whether: (i) A loan has an APR that cannot increase after consummation; (ii) A loan has an APR that may increase after consummation; or (iii) A loan is a reverse mortgage. (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(2)) \(^{60}\) For the purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(f) and (g), all creditors are loan originators.

a. Obtained a copy of the individual’s background check through the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLS) or a criminal background check from a law enforcement agency or commercial service; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(A))

b. Obtained a credit report from a consumer reporting agency in compliance with FCRA section 604(b); (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(B))

c. Obtained information from the NMLS or from the individual as applicable, about administrative, civil, or criminal findings against the individual; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(C))

d. Determined on the basis of obtained information or any other information reasonably available that the individual has not been convicted of, plead guilty or nolo contendere to a felony in a domestic or military court during the preceding seven year period; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(1))

e. Determined on the basis of obtained information or any other information reasonably available that the individual has not been convicted of, plead guilty or nolo contendere to a felony involving an act of fraud, dishonesty, breach of trust, or money laundering, at any time; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(2)(iii))

f. Confirmed that if the individual has a felony conviction and is employed as an individual loan originator, that the FDIC (or FRB, as applicable), NCUA, or Farm Credit Administration has provided consent to employ the individual under their own statutory authorities; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(2)(iii))

g. Confirmed that the individual demonstrated financial responsibility, character, and general fitness such as to warrant a determination that the individual loan originator will operate honestly, fairly, and efficiently; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(B))

h. Provides periodic training covering federal and state law requirements that apply to the individual loan originator’s loan origination activities. (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(iii))

NOTE: Paragraph (c) only applies to an individual loan originator hired on or after January 1, 2014 (or an individual loan originator the loan originator organization hired before this date but for whom there were no applicable statutory or regulatory background standards in effect at the time of hire or used to screen the individual) or an individual loan originator regardless of when hired who, based on reliable information known to the loan originator organization, likely does not meet the qualification standards.

4. Verify that the loan originator organization and individual loan originator include their names and NMLS IDs on all required loan documentation, including: (12 CFR 1026.36(g))

a. The credit application;

b. The disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f);

c. The note or loan contract; and

d. The security instrument.

Policies and Procedures for Depository Institutions to Ensure and Monitor Compliance – 12 CFR 1026.36(j)

1. Verify that loan originator organizations that are depositories (including credit unions) have established and maintain written policies and procedures reasonably designed (i.e., appropriate to the nature, size, complexity and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository and its subsidiaries) to ensure that the depository, its subsidiaries and their collective employees comply with the loan originator requirements of 12 CFR 1026.36(d)-(g). (12 CFR 1026.36(j))

Prohibition on Mandatory Arbitration Clauses and Waiver of Certain Consumer Rights – 12 CFR 1026.36(h)

1. Verify that the contract or other agreement for a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling) does not include terms that require arbitration or any other non-judicial procedure to resolve any controversy or settle any claims arising out of the transaction. (12 CFR 1026.36(h)(1))

2. Verify that the contract or other agreement relating to a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling) has not been applied or interpreted to bar a consumer from bringing a claim in court pursuant to any provision of law for damages or other relief in connection with any alleged violation of any federal law. (12 CFR 1026.36(h)(2))

Prohibition on Financing Credit Insurance – 12 CFR 1026.36(i)

1. Determine that the creditor does not finance, directly or indirectly, premiums or fees for credit insurance (including credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or any other accident, loss-of-income, life, or health insurance or direct or indirect payment for debt cancellation/suspension) on the transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by a principal dwelling). (12 CFR 1026.36(i))

NOTE: Credit unemployment insurance is not subject to this prohibition where the premiums are reasonable, the creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the premiums, and the premiums are paid under a separate insurance contract and are not paid to an affiliate of the creditor. Additionally, this prohibition does not apply to credit insurance that is paid in full monthly.

Negative Amortization Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.36(k)

1. Verify that the creditor received documentation that first-time borrowers received pre-loan counseling from a HUD certified or approved counselor on each negative amortizing mortgage loan to prior to originating the loan. (12 CFR 1026.36(k))

NOTE: This restriction does not apply to reverse mortgages covered under 12 CFR 1026.33 or transactions secured by a timeshare plan. For more information, please see the commentary to 12 CFR 1026.36(k).

Servicing Requirements for Certain Home Mortgages Subject to Subpart E

1. Determine if the servicer is a small servicer under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii). The following steps 2-5 regarding periodic statements for closed-end loans secured by a dwelling are not applicable if the servicer is a small servicer.

NOTE: A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers’ interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

2. Determine whether the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides consumers with reasonably prompt periodic statements for closed-end loans secured by a dwelling. (12 CFR 1026.41).

NOTE: “Consumer” includes a confirmed successor in interest as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27). (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11)). If there is a confirmed successor in interest, determine whether the exemption from the requirement to provide a periodic statement to the confirmed successor in interest applies as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(g). (Effective April 19, 2018).

This requirement does not apply to reverse mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.33; timeshare plans; fixed-rate loans where the servicer currently provides consumers with coupon books that contain account payment, fees, and contact information specified under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(3); small servicers under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4); or, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5), for mortgages while the consumer is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the US Code. Servicers, however, must provide modified periodic statements and coupon books to certain consumers in bankruptcy as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(f) (see questions below). Servicers are exempt from providing periodic statements for charged-off mortgage loans if the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6) are met (see questions below).

NOTE ALSO: When examining a creditor or assignee that continues to own the loan, or a servicer, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the examined entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (a creditor, assignee, or servicer) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

2. Verify that the periodic statements contain:

a. The payment due date; the amount of any late payment fee, and the date on which that fee will be imposed; and the amount due (the latter shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page and, if the transaction has multiple payment options, the amount due under each of the payment options), grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1))

• If the balance of a mortgage loan was accelerated but the servicer was willing to accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, verify that the amount due on the periodic statement identified only the lesser amount that the servicer would have accepted to reinstate the loan. (Comment 1026.41(d)(1)-1);
• If the consumer had agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, verify that the amount due identified either the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program or the amount due according to the loan contract. (Comment 1026.41(d)(1)-2).

• If the loan contract had been permanently modified, verify that the amount due identified only the amount due under the modified loan contract. (Comment 1026.41(d)(1)-3).

NOTE: Servicers may modify the sample forms for periodic statements provided in Appendix H–30 to remove language that could suggest liability under the mortgage loan agreement if such language is not applicable. For example, in the case of a confirmed successor in interest who has not assumed the mortgage loan obligation under State law and is not otherwise liable on the mortgage loan obligation, a servicer may modify the forms to:

• Use “this mortgage” or “the mortgage” instead of “your mortgage.”

• Use “The payments on this mortgage are late” instead of “You are late on your mortgage payments.”

• Use “This is the amount needed to bring the loan current” instead of “You must pay this amount to bring your loan current.”

b. The monthly payment amount, including a breakdown of how it will be applied to principal, interest, and escrow, and if a mortgage loan has multiple payment options along with information regarding how each payment will affect the principal, a breakdown of each of the payment options; the total sum of any fees or charges imposed since the last statement; and any payment amount past due, grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page. (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2))

• If the balance of a mortgage loan was accelerated but the servicer was willing to accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, verify that the explanation of amount due on the periodic statement listed both the reinstatement amount and the accelerated amount. Verify that the periodic statement also included an explanation that the reinstatement amount would be accepted through the “as of [date],” as applicable along with any special instructions for submitting the payment. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement. (Comment 1026.41(d)(2)-1).

NOTE: The servicer is not required to list the monthly payment amount that would otherwise be required under 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)(i). (Comment 1026.41(d)(2)-1).

c. The total of all payments received since the last statement, including a breakdown showing how the payment was applied to principal, interests, escrow, fees, and charges, and any amount sent to a suspense or unapplied funds account grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3)(i))

d. The total of all payments received for the calendar year, including a breakdown of how those payments were applied to principal, interest, escrow, fees, and charges and any amount currently held in a suspense or unapplied funds account, grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3)(ii))

e. A list of transaction activity that occurred since the last statement, including the date, amount, and brief description of the transaction. Transaction activity includes any activity that caused a credit or debit to the amount currently due; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(4))

f. For statements where a partial payment was received and the creditor or servicer held the partial payment in a suspense or unapplied funds account, information explaining what must be done for the funds to be applied to the balance, located on the front page or a separate page of the statement or in a separate letter; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(5))

g. A toll-free number, and if applicable, an email address, that consumers may use to obtain account information located on the front page; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(6))
V. Lending — TILA

h. The amount of the outstanding principal balance; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(i))

i. The current interest rate for the mortgage; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(ii))

j. The date that the interest may change (if applicable); (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(iii))

k. Information regarding whether the loan contains a prepayment penalty; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(iv))

l. The web address to the CFPB or HUD’s list of homeownership counselors or counseling organizations and HUD’s toll-free telephone number to obtain contact information for counselors or counseling organizations; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(v))

m. For consumers more than 45 days delinquent, determine that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides on the first page, on a separate page of the statement, or in a separate letter:

   i. The length of the consumer’s delinquency (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(i)) ii. A notification of the possible risks, such as foreclosure, and expenses that may occur if the consumer does not become current; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(ii))

   iii. An account history showing the shorter of the previous six months or from the time the account was last current, the amount of payment that is past due from each billing cycle; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iii))

   NOTE: If any payment was accepted as a full payment, the creditor or servicer must show that the payment was credited to the consumer’s account and the date that the payment was credited.

   iv. A notice indicating any loss mitigation program that the consumer has agreed to; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iv))

   v. A notice of whether the servicer has initiated foreclosure proceedings; (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(v))

   vi. The total payment amount needed to bring the account current; and (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(vi))

3. Effective April 19, 2018, unless the servicer is otherwise exempt as noted below, while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code, or if such consumer had discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan pursuant Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13, determine whether the servicer provided a modified periodic statement or coupon book in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.41(f). Specifically, the periodic statement:

   a. May omit the information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1)(i) and (d)(8)(i), (ii), and (v). The requirement in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1)(iii) of this section that the amount due must be shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page shall not apply. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(1));

   b. Must include the following bankruptcy notices:

      i. A statement identifying the consumer’s status as a debtor in bankruptcy or the discharged status of the mortgage loan; and

      ii. A statement that the periodic statement is for informational purposes only. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(2));

   c. For chapter 12 and chapter 13 consumers:

      i. May omit (in addition to information listed in 12 CFR 1026.41(f)(1)) the information in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iii), (iv), (vi), and (vii). (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(i));

      ii. May limit the amount due information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1) to the date and amount of the post-petition payments due and any post-petition fees and charges imposed by the servicer. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(ii));

      iii. May limit the explanation of amount due information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2) to:

         1. The monthly post-petition payment amount, including a breakdown showing how much, if any, would be applied to principal, interest, and escrow;

         2. The total sum of any post-petition fees or charges imposed since the last statement; and

      iv. Must include all payments that the servicer received since the last statement, including all post-petition and pre-petition payments, payments of post-petition fees and charges, and all post-petition fees and charges that the servicer imposed since the last statement. The brief description of the activity need not identify the source of any payments. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(iv));

v. Must disclose the following pre-petition arrearage information, if applicable, grouped in close proximity to each other and located on the first page of the statement or on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter:

1. The total of all pre-petition payments received since the last statement;

2. The total of all pre-petition payments received since the beginning of the consumer’s pre-petition arrearage; and

3. The current balance of the consumer’s pre-petition arrearage. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(v)).

vi. Must include, as applicable:

1. A statement that the amount due includes only post-petition payments and does not include other payments that may be due under the terms of the consumer’s bankruptcy plan;

2. If the consumer’s bankruptcy plan requires the consumer to make the post-petition mortgage payments directly to a bankruptcy trustee, a statement that the consumer should send the payment to the trustee and not to the servicer;

3. A statement that the information disclosed on the periodic statement may not include payments the consumer has made to the trustee and may not be consistent with the trustee’s records;

4. A statement that encourages the consumer to contact the consumer’s attorney or the trustee with questions regarding the application of payments; and

5. If the consumer is more than 45 days delinquent on post-petition payments, a statement that the servicer has not received all the payments that became due since the consumer filed for bankruptcy. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(vi)).

NOTE:

- Multiple obligors. The servicer may provide the modified statement to any or all of the primary obligors, even if a primary obligor to whom the servicer provides the modified statement is not a debtor in bankruptcy. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(4)). (Effective April 19, 2018)

- Coupon books. A servicer that provides a coupon book instead of a periodic statement must include in the coupon book (or on a separate page enclosed with the coupon book) the disclosures set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(f)(2) and (f)(3)(vi), as applicable. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(5)). (Effective April 19, 2018)

- Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i), a servicer is exempt from providing a periodic statement to certain consumers in bankruptcy if:

  o Any consumer on the mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code or has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan pursuant to Chapter 7 (11 U.S.C. 727), Chapter 11 (11 U.S.C. 1141), Chapter 12 (11 U.S.C. 1228), or Chapter 13 (11 U.S.C. 1328); and o With regard to any consumer on the mortgage loan:

    ■ The consumer requests in writing that the servicer cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book;

    ■ The consumer’s bankruptcy plan provides that the consumer will surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, provides for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, or otherwise does not provide for, as applicable, the payment of pre-bankruptcy arrearage or the maintenance of payments due under the mortgage loan;

    ■ A court enters an order in the bankruptcy case providing for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, lifting the automatic stay pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 362 with regard to the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, or requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book; or

    ■ The consumer files with the court overseeing the bankruptcy case a statement of intention pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 521(a) identifying an intent to surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan and a consumer has not made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the consumer’s bankruptcy case. (Effective April 19, 2018)

A servicer ceases to qualify for the exemption pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i) with respect to a mortgage loan if the consumer reaffirms personal liability for the loan or any consumer on the loan requests in writing that the servicer provide a periodic statement or coupon book, unless a court enters an order in the bankruptcy case requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book. (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(ii)) (Effective April 19, 2018).

4. If the servicer has ceased providing periodic statements for charged-off mortgage loans, determine whether the following exemption requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) are met:
   a. The servicer charged off the loan in accordance with loan-loss provisions and has not charged any additional fees or interest on the account; and
   b. The servicer provided, within 30 days of charge-off or the most recent periodic statement, a periodic statement, clearly and conspicuously labeled “Suspension of Statements & Notice of Charge Off—Retain This Copy for Your Records.” The periodic statement clearly and conspicuously explained the following (as applicable):
      i. The mortgage loan was charged off and the servicer will not charge any additional fees or interest on the account;
      ii. The servicer will no longer provide the consumer a periodic statement for each billing cycle;
      iii. The lien on the property remains in place and the consumer remains liable for the mortgage loan obligation and any obligations arising from or related to the property, which may include property taxes;
      iv. The consumer may be required to pay the balance on the account in the future, for example, upon sale of the property;
      v. The balance on the account is not being canceled or forgiven; and
      vi. The loan may be purchased, assigned, or transferred.

   NOTE: If a servicer fails at any time to treat a mortgage loan that is exempt under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) as charged off or charges any additional fees or interest on the account, the servicer must resume providing a periodic statement. (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(ii)(A)). A servicer may not retroactively assess fees or interest on the account for the period of time during which the exemption in paragraph 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) applied. (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(ii)(B)).

5. For high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor or servicer does not charge any fee to modify, renew, extend, or amend a high-cost mortgage, or to defer any payment due under the terms of the mortgage. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(7))

6. For high-cost mortgages, determine whether the creditor or servicer charged a late payment greater than 4 percent of the payment past due. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)(i))

7. For high-cost mortgages, determine that the creditor or servicer did not impose any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency was attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a full payment for the applicable period and is paid on its due date or within any applicable grace period (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)(iii)).

8. For high-cost mortgages, determine whether the creditor or servicer assessed any fees for providing consumers with a payoff statement related to the high-cost mortgage. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9))

   NOTE: Creditors or servicers are permitted to assess a processing fee if the payoff statement is provided by courier or by fax, the fee is comparable to fees for similar services provided for non-high-cost mortgages, and the creditor or servicer discloses that payoff statements are available by an alternative method free of charge. Additionally, within a calendar year, if the creditor or servicer has already provided four payoff statements in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9), it may assess fees for additional statements.

9. For high-cost mortgages, determine that the creditor or servicer is providing payoff statements within five business days after receiving a request from the consumer (or consumer’s authorized representative). (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)(v))

10. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are subject to the escrow account requirements, ensure the creditor or servicer maintains the consumer’s escrow account for a minimum of five years after consummation of the loan, unless: (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3))

   a. The creditor or servicer terminated the escrow account upon termination of the underlying debt obligation (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(i)(A)); or
   b. The creditor or servicer terminated the escrow account upon request from the consumer, no earlier than five years after consummation of the loan. (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(i)(B))

   NOTE: Upon request from the consumer, the creditor or servicer must verify that the unpaid principal balance of the higher-priced mortgage loan is less than 80 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan and that the consumer is not delinquent or in default on the loan, prior to cancelling the escrow account. (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(ii))
11. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling, determine that the creditor or servicer credited consumer’s periodic payments as of the date the payment was received or ensured that any delay in crediting did not result in any charge to the consumer or in the reporting of any negative information to a consumer reporting agency. (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)-(9) and 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(i))

12. For consumers performing under a permanent loan modification of a consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling, determine whether the creditor or servicer credited the payments according to the terms of the modified loan contract. (Comment 1026.36(c)(1)(i)-5).

NOTE: For consumers performing under temporary loss mitigation programs, a creditor must continue to credit payments according to the loan contract and could, if appropriate, credit the payments as partial payments. (Comment 1026.36(c)(1)(i)-4).

13. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling, determine whether the creditor or servicer uses a suspense or unapplied payment account for partial payments.

   c. For creditors or servicers that use suspense or unapplied payment accounts for consumers’ partial payments, verify that the creditor or servicer discloses to consumers that amount held in the suspense account on the periodic statement required by 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3) if one is required (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(ii)(A)); and

   d. Verify that creditors or servicers credit a periodic payment to the consumer’s account once the amount in the suspense account equals a periodic payment. (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(ii)(B))

14. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling, and for creditors or servicers that accept non-conforming payments from consumers, verify that the creditor or servicer credited the non-conforming payment to the consumer’s account as of five days after receipt of the payment. (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(iii))

15. Determine whether there were any of the following prohibited acts or practices in connection with credit secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36(c)):

   e. Imposing on the consumer any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency was attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a periodic payment for the applicable period and is received on its due date or within any applicable courtesy period (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(2)); or

16. For consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by a dwelling), verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provided, within a reasonable time, but no later than seven business days after receiving a written request from the consumer or person acting on behalf of the consumer, an accurate statement of the total outstanding balance that would be required to pay the consumer’s obligation in full as of a specific date except when a delay is because a loan is in bankruptcy or foreclosure, the loan is a reverse or shared appreciation mortgage, or because of a natural disaster, in which case the payoff statement must be provided within a reasonable period of time. (12 CFR 1026.36(b) and (c)(3))

Valuation Independence

1. Determine that the covered person did not attempt to directly or indirectly cause the value assigned to the consumer’s principal dwelling to be based on any factor other than the independent judgment of a person that prepares valuations. Examples of such attempts include (12 CFR 1026.42(c)):

   a. Seeking to influence a person that prepares a valuation to report a minimum or maximum value for the consumer’s principal dwelling;

   b. Withholding or threatening to withhold timely payment to a person that prepares a valuation or performs valuation management functions because the person does not value the consumer’s principal dwelling at or above a certain amount;

   c. Implying to a person that prepares valuations that current or future retention of the person depends on the amount at which the person estimates the value of the consumer’s principal dwelling;

   d. Excluding a person that prepares a valuation from consideration for future engagement because the person reports a value for the consumer’s principal dwelling that does not meet or exceed a predetermined threshold; and

   e. Conditioning the compensation paid to a person that prepares a valuation on consummation of the covered transaction.
