

Jumelia Abrahamson
Director of Programs at University Neighborhood Housing Program, a community-based nonprofit in the Bronx, NY and longtime resident of the Norwood section of the Bronx.

April 6, 2020

Comments regarding “Reforming the Community Reinvestment Act Regulatory Framework”
RE: RIN 1557-AE34, Federal Register Number 3064-AF22 Docket ID OCC-2018-0008

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing regarding the OCC and FDIC’s Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPR) seeking input on proposed changes to the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA). I have worked all of my professional life in the Bronx – directly with Bronx residents and local financial institutions. I’ve organized multiple resource fairs and financial literacy seminars for 11 years. Many of the initiatives I’ve helped organize in the Bronx, bring large and small banks to local events as a direct result of CRA credits. These have included meet and greet with community residents, seminars around bank account opening and applying to credit repair products or first-time homebuyer mortgages. I also, have been a Bronx resident for numerous years and because of the countless pockets of bank desert, my weekly trips to the bank/ATM took extra time to plan. I have to walk over 8 blocks to get to the nearest branch because in my community all the branches are located on commercial strips. It is sometimes hard to find an ATM for my bank and at times that costs me high fees.

I strongly oppose much of the ideas presented in the NPR that would significantly weaken the CRA, leading to less investment, fewer loans and bank branches, and less meaningful investments that would benefit the very people the law was designed to help: low-income people, people of color and communities of color - people like my family, my neighbors and my friends in the Bronx- hardworking Black and Hispanic people of modest means. Moreover, I think that the CRA reform should be suspended at this time of crisis. So many people in the Bronx are sick with this virus, our hospitals are overwhelmed and people have lost their jobs. Now is not the time to make big regulatory changes.

Too many low-income people, immigrants, and people of color in New York City still lack sufficient access to loans to purchase homes, improve their homes, and start and maintain businesses. Smaller nonprofits struggle to access grants and loans to build and preserve much-needed deep and permanent affordable housing and to support community development. 15% of Black households and 18% of Hispanic households in the NY region are completely unbanked, which is over 5 times the rate of white households. Meanwhile, many low-income tenants and tenants of color are being harassed and displaced when banks lend to unscrupulous landlords.

All of this underscores the need to preserve and strengthen the CRA, making sure that the right priorities are reflected. In that context, we have deep concerns about much of the proposal:

1. The proposal maintains a one-metric / one-ratio approach, despite hundreds of comments opposing it during the first comment period. It values dollars over impact, quantity over quality, thus minimizing the role of community input and community needs and incentivizing larger deals over smaller, more impactful ones. This means fewer loans to first-time homebuyers, low-income homeowners, and small businesses; fewer financing options for smaller nonprofits to build and preserve deep affordable housing; fewer grants to nonprofits for tenant organizing or direct services.
2. There is no mention of race. Understanding that the CRA is a color-blind law, the regulators should be doing everything possible to increase access to banks and banking for people of color through affirmative obligations and strengthening the fair lending component of the exam. But the proposal does none of that, and some of the proposed changes that value dollars over quality could inadvertently lead to fewer branches, fewer services, less housing, and less lending and banking to people of color.
3. The proposal expands what counts for CRA credit with activities that benefit larger businesses and higher-income families, as well as activities that barely benefit lower-income people or communities and others that could displace these communities. By creating arbitrary numerical goals to reach and by expanding the universe of CRA qualified activities, banks will have no incentive to put the time and effort it takes to reach lower-income borrowers and small businesses, or to work with local nonprofit developers who are doing the more complex, more impactful projects. Worse, banks can get credit for activities that could harm or displace LMI communities, such as opportunity zone financing for athletic stadiums or luxury housing; high-cost credit card loans to LMI borrowers; and the long-standing practice of financing bad-acting landlords who harass and displace tenants. This means less affordable housing for very low-income New Yorkers who already lack sufficient housing; fewer loans to small businesses that already struggle to access financing; fewer home loans to low- and moderate-income borrowers.
4. The proposal greatly expands where banks can get CRA credit, allowing banks to invest more outside of local assessment areas, which minimizes local community needs and partnerships. Under the new proposal, banks can get a low or failing grade in half of their assessment areas and still pass their CRA exam if they meet their target dollar goals for the entire bank. The bank-level evaluation combines CRA-qualified dollars loaned invested in all the assessment areas combined, as well as qualified activities anywhere, regardless of assessment area. While some of these areas may need investment, that investment cannot come at the expense of the obligation to meet local needs. Further, all investments, regardless of location, should be analyzed for their impact on historically redlined communities.

This is the wrong approach.

Any reform must include OUR principles to preserve and strengthen the CRA

1. Banks should be evaluated on the quantity, quality and impact of their activities within the local communities they serve and based on the needs of these local communities. This cannot be done with a one-ratio evaluation that simply looks at dollars invested.
 - Incentivize high quality, responsive activities that lift historically redlined people – people of color and low- and moderate-income people – out of poverty and help reduce wealth and income disparities.
 - Downgrade banks that finance activities that cause displacement and harm.
2. Community input and community needs must be at the heart of the CRA. Strong community needs assessment and community engagement should inform community needs and how examiners evaluate how well banks are meeting those needs.
3. Assessment areas must maintain local obligations. The CRA must maintain the current place-based commitment banks have to local communities. Banks should have additional assessment areas where they do considerable business (make loans / take deposits) outside of their branch network. These types of reforms must maintain or increase quality reinvestment where it is needed, including high need “CRA hot spots” such as New York City, while also directing capital to under-banked regions. I’m well aware of the history in the Bronx when buildings were abandoned and banks were closing. Things are different today – but I know that the creation of the Community Reinvestment Act helped to make some of those good changes happen. Branches still matter in brown and black neighborhoods, like the Bronx, where Alternative Financial Services \(AFS\) out number bank branches. And where branches are mainly clustered in commercial strips, leaving a huge vacuum in the rest of the borough.

Conclusion

Meaningful CRA reform could boost lending and access to banking for underserved communities by incentivizing high quality, high impact activities based on local needs, while discouraging and downgrading for displacement and activities that cause harm. Transparent and consistent exams would support these goals.

The proposal does the opposite of what it claims to do for banks or the community: It is less transparent, more complicated, and will ultimately lead to less investment and less meaningful investment. The formula to calculate the target metric is complicated and relies upon data banks don’t currently collect. Further, it no longer uses publicly available data for home lending, small business lending, and deposits, thus reducing the ways the public can verify and provide feedback on bank performance in those categories.

The OCC and FDIC should abandon this proposal and go back to the table with the Federal Reserve to come up with a plan that preserves the core of the CRA, truly addresses its shortcomings, and modernizes it to incorporate today's banking world. We are going to need strong bank partnerships in a post-COVID Bronx – let's wait until the crisis is over to make significant changes to the CRA and make sure banks can be part of the rebuilding the Bronx and our country will need.

Thank you for your attention to our comments.

Sincerely,

Jumelia Abrahamson
347-514-0154
60 Oregon Ave, Bronxville, NY 10708
Jumelia@unhp.org