Subject: Disclosure of Financial and Other Information by FDIC-Insured State Nonmember Banks; Comment Request

I understand that when the federal regulators adopted this regulation in 1988, the public did not have readily available access to a bank's financial information from which to analyze the financial condition of a bank. Now, in the digital age, this information and more is instantly available on the FDIC website. It is certainly consistent with the objectives of Section 2222 of the Economic Growth and Regulatory Reporting Paperwork Reduction Act of 1996, which included the elimination of unnecessary regulations, that I support the removal of this requirement. Thank you!

Kindest regards,
