Subject: RIN 3064-AE01 Increased Capital Requirements for Banks

I'm writing in support of the proposal to have big banks double the amount of capital they are required to have on hand. It's a travesty to allow these banks to continue doing business the same way they did before they caused a worldwide economic crisis. This crisis occurred because of less regulation, lax oversight and risk taking, and we need to return to the old standards, especially the Glass-Steagall Act.

I'm tired of hearing how banks need less regulation in order to compete globally, especially when they're already making record profits. These banks have become too big a sector of our economy and they need more control, not less. They are still taking big risks, such as the "London Whale" incident at J.P. Morgan, and this has to be stopped. To require them to increase capital on hand is the minimum that should be done.
