I. Manual Introduction

Introduction

The Consumer Compliance Examination Manual (Manual) is designed as a reference tool for Compliance examination staff to use when conducting Compliance and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) examinations and other supervisory activities. The detailed procedures presented in the Manual are not intended to replace sound judgment and discretion on the part of examination staff. Instead, the materials are designed to promote uniformity in the examination process and as a reference tool for examiners.

Organization of the Manual

The Manual is divided into 12 sections as described below and is organized so that information is presented based on regulation rather than process. The Manual incorporates examination policies and procedures in effect as of the most recent update, which is noted in the footnote in each subsection. The Manual begins with the risk focused, process oriented examination procedures (Section II) and sample templates to use during the examination (Section III). Sections IV through X cover specific rules and regulations, divided into general topics. The Manual concludes by covering the Community Reinvestment Act examination (Section XI) and samples of the various performance evaluations (Section XII) to be used. Each Section of the Manual is discussed below.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations

Overview of Compliance Examinations

Introduction

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) promotes compliance with federal consumer protection laws, fair lending statutes and regulations, and the Community Reinvestment Act through supervisory and outreach programs. The FDIC conducts three types of supervisory activities to review an institution's compliance management system: consumer compliance examinations, visitations, and investigations.

Consumer compliance examinations are the primary means the FDIC uses to determine whether a financial institution is meeting its responsibility to comply with the requirements and proscriptions of federal consumer protection laws and regulations. The consumer compliance examination review period or scope typically covers bank activities conducted over a discrete period of time from the start date of the prior examination through the start date of the current examination. The FDIC conducts visitations for a variety of reasons: to review the compliance posture of newly-chartered institutions or those converting to state non-member status; to review progress on corrective actions or compliance with an enforcement action in the interval between examinations; or to investigate problems brought to the attention of the FDIC. Visitations are usually targeted events aimed at specific operational areas, or an entire compliance management system (CMS) previously identified as significantly deficient. Consumer compliance examinations and visitations may also be considered during the review of an application submitted to the FDIC (e.g., application for deposit insurance or establishing a branch). Finally, investigations are conducted primarily to follow-up on particular consumer inquiries or complaints, including fair lending complaints.

This section provides a general overview of the FDIC compliance examination. The purposes of compliance examinations are to:

- assess the quality of an FDIC-supervised institution's CMS (see "Evaluating the Compliance Management System") for implementing federal consumer protection statutes and regulations;
- review compliance with relevant laws and regulations; and
- initiate effective supervisory action when elements of an institution's CMS are deficient and/or when violations of law are found.

Examination Approach

In general, FDIC consumer compliance examinations of supervised institutions blend risk-focused and process-oriented approaches. Risk-focusing involves using information gathered about a financial institution to direct FDIC examiner resources to those operational areas where compliance errors present the greatest potential risks of having a negative impact on bank customers, resulting in consumer harm (See the Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm section of this manual at page II-2.1 for additional information.) Concentrating on the institution's internal control infrastructure and methods, or the "process" used to ensure compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations, both acknowledges that the ultimate responsibility for compliance rests with the institution and encourages examination efficiency. These examinations are conducted at periodic intervals established by FDIC policy.

In addition, for certain institutions that exhibit elevated or unique risks of consumer harm (See the Complex Bank Supervision Program section of this manual at page II-15.1 for additional information), the FDIC has implemented a Complex Bank Supervision Program that employs a continuous supervisory strategy. These institutions often have complex business models, offer nontraditional products or services, and/or rely heavily on third-party relationships.

Determining Risk

Risk-focusing involves:

- developing a compliance risk profile for an institution using various sources of information about its products, services, markets, organizational structure, operations, and past supervisory performance;
- assessing the quality of an institution's CMS in light of the inherent risks associated with the level and complexity of its business operations and product and service offerings; and
- testing selected transactions based on risk such as when an operational area is determined to have a high risk of consumer harm and the institution's compliance management efforts appear weak.

Evaluating the Compliance Management System

Compliance examinations start with a top-down, risk-focused process to comprehensively analyze and review an institution's CMS. The compliance examiner considers:

Board and Management Oversight

- Commitment to and oversight of the institution's CMS;
- Level of resources dedicated toward compliance functions;
- Due diligence and oversight of third parties to ensure compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations, and appropriate oversight of third parties' compliance

II. Compliance Examinations - Overview of Compliance Examinations

responsibilities;

- Anticipation and responsiveness to changes in applicable laws and regulations, market conditions, and products and services offered;
- Due diligence reviews performed in advance of product changes, considering the entire lifecycle of the product or service, and after implementation of changes;
- Comprehension and identification of compliance risks, including emerging risks, in the institution's financial products, services, and other activities;
- Management of identified risks, including self-assessments; and
- Identification of and responsiveness to compliance risk management deficiencies and violations of law or regulations, including remediation.

Compliance Program

- Appropriateness of the institution's policies and procedures to address the risk in the products, services, and activities of the institution;
- Adequacy of third-party relationship program management;
- Degree to which compliance training is current and tailored to risk and staff responsibilities;
- Sufficiency of monitoring and, if applicable, audit to encompass compliance risks throughout the institution; and
- Responsiveness and effectiveness of the consumer complaint resolution process.

Based on the results of this review, the examiner may conclude that weaknesses in the institution's CMS may result in current or future noncompliance with federal consumer protection laws, regulations, or policy statements, thereby resulting in potential consumer harm. The examiner must determine, based on this analysis, whether transaction testing is warranted to further study particular risk in an entire operational area or regulation, or only a limited aspect of an area or regulation.

The FDIC examination approach appropriately recognizes that the Board of Directors and management of a financial institution are responsible for complying with all federal consumer protection laws and regulations. While the formality and complexity of the CMS will vary greatly among institutions, the FDIC expects the Board of Directors and management of each institution to have a system in place to effectively manage its compliance risk, consistent with the size and complexity of its products, services, and markets.

Managing the examination based on risk maximizes examiner efficiency and may reduce the on-site examination presence or examination timeframe, while emphasizing areas requiring elevated supervisory attention. By focusing on the CMS, examiners will be able to identify the root causes of deficiencies and suggest appropriate corrective actions designed to address the problem and prevent recurrence.

Applicability and Adaptability to Large and Small Institutions

In order to provide as much relevant and useful guidance as possible, the procedures detailed in this Manual include instructions for reviewing the various elements of a CMS, such as written policies and procedures, monitoring and/or audit, and training. When these elements are in place at an institution being examined, the examiner will use the guidance to evaluate their effectiveness. However, the fact that certain elements of a CMS are described in these examination procedures is not intended to suggest that all institutions must maintain a CMS that includes all of these elements. Many institutions do not. There is no reason for them to, if their operations do not warrant it. Conclusions about the adequacy of a bank's CMS must be based on the effectiveness of those elements that are in place, taken as a whole, for that bank's particular operations.

For example, assume two institutions – a large, complex bank and a small, non-complex bank – each has a record of strong compliance with all regulations that apply to the products and services it offers. Because of the complex nature of its operations, the large bank's CMS includes comprehensive external audits and formalized training from third-party vendors. The smaller bank's CMS includes no internal or external audits and no formalized training except for the compliance officer, who trains bank staff individually when needed. After reviewing all relevant material available, the examiner finds no significant deficiencies in the small bank's CMS and no reason to believe that the adoption of an audit function or formalized training is necessary to ensure ongoing compliance. The examiner would not criticize the small bank for the absence of audit (or formal training). Nor should the examiner feel obliged to assign a higher rating to the larger bank simply because its CMS has more elements than the smaller bank. This is because each bank has a CMS that is adequate for the compliance responsibilities that are incumbent upon it due to its operating environment.

The descriptions of CMS elements provided in the Manual will assist the examiner in evaluating the element if one exists and in suggesting content if he or she determines that management should consider adopting an element.

Role of the Compliance Examiner

Compliance examiners play a crucial role in the supervisory process. The compliance examination, and follow-up

II. Compliance Examinations - Overview of Compliance Examinations

supervisory attention to an institution's compliance program deficiencies and violations, helps to ensure that consumers and businesses obtain the benefits and protections afforded them under federal law. To this end, an examiner's efforts should help the financial institution improve its compliance posture and prevent future violations.

Primarily, examiners must:

- establish an examination scope focused on areas of highest consumer harm risk;
- evaluate an institution's CMS;
- conduct transaction testing where risks intersect with weaknesses in the CMS or uncertainties about aspects of that system; and
- report findings to the Board of Directors and management of the institution.

As part of the examination process, examiners are expected to:

- take a reasoned, common sense approach to examining and use sound judgment when making decisions;
- maintain ongoing communication with financial institution management throughout an examination;
- assist an institution to help itself improve performance by providing management with sound supervisory recommendations for enhancing its CMS;
- share experiences and knowledge of a successful CMS; and
- provide guidance regarding the various consumer protection and fair lending laws and regulations.

Overview of the Examination Process

Compliance examinations primarily involve three stages: pre-examination planning; review and analysis, both off-site and on-site; and communicating findings to institution management via meetings and a Report of Examination.

Pre-examination Planning

Pre-examination planning involves gathering information available in FDIC records and databases, contacting the financial institution to review and narrow the draft request for information and documents, and delivering a letter to the institution requesting specific information and documents for detailed analysis by the examination team (see Section III). Proper examination preparation and planning maximizes an examination team's time and resources.

Review and Analysis

During the review and analysis phase of an examination, an examiner thoroughly evaluates an institution's CMS to assess its quality and effectiveness, and documents system weaknesses and violations of federal consumer protection laws and regulations, if any. The Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) starts by analyzing information about the type, level, and complexity of the institution's operations, and begins to develop the scope of the examination and plan for resource deployment to areas of highest risk. The EIC also preliminarily assesses the potential risk of consumer harm based upon the information available at the time of pre-examination planning.

The scope of an examination will be preliminarily established prior to entering the financial institution, and should be refined through the results of examiner discussions with management, the compliance officer (or staff assigned), and the internal auditor. Consistent with the FDIC's approach, examination resources are focused on addressing the areas of highest consumer harm risk. Additionally, there may be some cases where the EIC may include additional areas in the examination scope even though consumer harm risk is not exhibited. An examiner may also limit the scope of the compliance review based on reliable procedures and controls in place. Similarly, the examiner may expand the review based on, for example, management's view about compliance, a lack of necessary procedures or controls, the presence of violations, the identification of potential or actual consumer harm, or the presence of new or significantly amended regulations. The compliance review continues with an evaluation of the:

- commitment of the Board of Directors, management, and staff to compliance;
- qualifications of the compliance officer or designated staff;
- scope and effectiveness of compliance policies and procedures;
- effectiveness of training;
- thoroughness of monitoring and any internal/external reviews or audits; and
- responsiveness of the Board of Directors and management to the findings of internal/external reviews and to the findings of the previous examination.

An examiner must consider the size, level, and complexity of an institution's operations when evaluating the adequacy of an institution's CMS.

The examination procedures outlined in this Manual are designed to enable an examiner to identify and measure compliance risk; make an assessment of an institution's compliance infrastructure and methods for identifying, monitoring, and controlling compliance risk and potential consumer harm; and determine the transaction testing needed to assess the integrity of the CMS. The number of transactions selected and the type of sampling used should be relative to the perceived risk of consumer harm and the need to assess the level of compliance in an activity or function.

II. Compliance Examinations - Overview of Compliance Examinations

At the conclusion of the review and analysis phase, an examiner:

- summarizes all findings regarding the strengths and weaknesses of an institution's CMS;
- determines the cause(s) of programmatic deficiencies or Level 3 or Level 2 violations and relates them to the underlying root causes as well as specific weakness(es) in the institution's CMS; and
- identifies actions necessary to address deficiencies or violations.

Determining the cause(s) of a program deficiency or violation is critical to recommending solutions that will successfully address problem areas and strengthen an institution's compliance posture for the future.

Communicating Findings

Examiners must discuss findings and supervisory recommendations with management and obtain a commitment for corrective action. These discussions will be held during the course of the examination and at an exit meeting with management and/or the Board of Directors.

The results of the examination will also be communicated to the Board of Directors and management of the institution in a Report of Examination. The Report of Examination provides an account of the strengths and weaknesses of a CMS during the review period. It is more than an exception-based document and should add value to the institution's compliance efforts.

Distinguishing Between Laws, Regulations, and Supervisory Guidance

Supervisory communications should distinguish clearly and accurately between the requirements of laws and regulations, which are legally binding and enforceable, and supervisory guidance, which is not itself enforceable but sets forth information including the factors the FDIC considers when exercising its supervisory authority.

As articulated in the Interagency Statement Clarifying the Role of Supervisory Guidance dated September 17, 2018 (FIL-49-2018), unlike a law or regulation, supervisory guidance does not have the force and effect of law, and the agencies do not take enforcement actions based on supervisory guidance. Rather, supervisory guidance outlines the agencies' supervisory expectations or priorities and articulates the agencies' general views regarding appropriate practices for a given subject area.

Examiners will not criticize a supervised financial institution for a "violation" of supervisory guidance. Rather, any citations will be for violations of law, regulation, or non-compliance with enforcement orders or other enforceable conditions. During examinations and other supervisory activities, examiners may identify deficiencies in compliance risk management, or other areas that do not constitute violations of law or regulation. In some situations, examiners may reference (including in writing) supervisory guidance to provide examples of appropriate consumer protection practices, and other actions for addressing compliance with laws or regulations.

Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm

Introduction

The FDIC has a risk-focused consumer compliance examination approach, based on the potential for compliance errors to have an adverse impact on banking customers. The following guidance is provided to assist compliance examiners in understanding the impact of consumer harm¹ on examination and supervisory responsibilities. In addition, this guidance communicates to examiners information about bank activities or omissions that can frequently result in consumer harm. Examination activities promote and confirm FDIC-supervised institutions' compliance with federal consumer protection and fair lending laws, the Community Reinvestment Act, and the regulations that implement these requirements. Effective supervision focuses on the areas requiring elevated supervisory attention and promotes the efficient use of resources.

What is Consumer Harm?

The FDIC's consumer compliance examination process is risk-focused based on the potential for consumer harm. "Consumer Harm" is an actual or potential injury or loss to a consumer, whether such injury or loss is economically quantifiable (e.g., overcharge) or non-quantifiable (e.g., discouragement). It may be caused by a financial institution's violation of a federal consumer protection law or regulation directly or through a third party or reflects weaknesses in a financial institution's compliance management system. Consumer Harm may occur in a variety of ways, including:

1. Quantifiable harm – Economic harm to a consumer where the injury or loss can be measured. For example, a consumer may suffer monetary harm as a result of deceptive marketing practices that entices a consumer to purchase a product without having accurate information regarding the benefits, costs, or terms of the product in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Similarly, if a bank employs a pricing structure that allows significant discretion, without effective monitoring or controls, resulting in a protected class of borrowers being charged higher prices on average than similarly situated non-protected borrowers in violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, then the higher prices paid by the protected class of borrowers over similarly situated non-protected borrowers is quantifiable consumer harm.

2. Non-quantifiable harm – Injury or loss to the consumer that cannot be measured, or is very difficult to measure, yet the consumer may suffer some form of economic or other harm. For example, a consumer could be injured economically when a financial institution unfairly denies the consumer credit or discourages an application on a prohibited basis in violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, however calculating a monetary value for the injury may be challenging. Another example may be a bank that imposes additional, unlawful requirements on consumers before the bank is willing to consider the consumers' billing disputes or requirements that are not accurately divulged in the bank's error resolution disclosures. The practices could discourage a consumer from filing a dispute. Consumer harm exists, but may be difficult to identify and/or quantify.
3. Potential harm – Involves financial institution activities (or failure to take action) that create the possibility that a consumer may be harmed. An example of potential consumer harm is a violation of the regulations that implement the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 where the financial institution failed to require flood insurance on a residence at loan closing. The consumer has not suffered actual loss but is exposed to potential economic loss should a flood occur.

Consumer harm is a broad concept and the examples provided here are not exhaustive. Among key points are that consumer harm is not limited to monetary loss, can be quantifiable or non-quantifiable, can be actual harm or potential harm, and may be caused by activities conducted through third-party relationships.

How does Consumer Harm Impact Examination Activities?

The concept of consumer harm is an important consideration in all examination and enforcement efforts, including examination strategies, examination scoping activities, assessment of the CMS, content of examination reports, supervisory actions, and communications with bankers. The FDIC's mission of promoting public confidence in the financial system is best served through a supervisory approach focused on identifying, addressing, and preventing consumer harm.

- Identification – Supervisory and examination activities are driven by a focus on identifying the inherent risk of consumer harm that may occur in a financial institution's business activity. Inherent risk is the compliance risk associated with product and service offerings, practices, or other activities that could directly or indirectly result in significant consumer harm or noncompliance with consumer protection rules and regulations. For example, a new loan product, a change to deposit account terms, or a third party relationship all represent inherent risk.
- Addressing identified risks – When inherent risks of consumer harm are identified, examiners will ensure the institution takes appropriate action to address or mitigate these risks. Corrective action for violations of law and regulations should remediate consumer harm when it occurs and remove underlying incentives to engage in practices harmful to consumers. Where there is a violation of law or regulation, the extent and severity of consumer harm informs the type and scope of enforcement action sought to correct the violation.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm

- Prevention –Mitigating factors are the strength of the compliance management system (CMS) to mitigate inherent risk. Examples of mitigating factors include strong management controls, effective training programs, and on-going monitoring efforts. Supervisory efforts should encourage institutions to have an effective CMS to avoid and mitigate risks of consumer harm. To support that effort, examination and other staff communicate information and best practices in a variety of settings to assist institutions in managing risks of consumer harm when conducting their business. Identifying, addressing, and preventing consumer harm is an important consideration in all examination and enforcement activities, as identified in the following diagram and discussed below.

Supervisory Strategies

The FDIC’s supervisory strategies are designed to promote compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations in FDIC-supervised institutions. Activities used to implement FDIC supervisory strategies include examinations, targeted reviews, visitations, investigations, and offsite analysis of how the bank manages its consumer compliance responsibilities. The timing and frequency of these activities can be adjusted based upon indications of risk of consumer harm, such as consumer complaints, referral from other divisions or agencies, changes in the institutions’ products, services, or markets, or reliance on third parties to offer products and services to consumers. Supervisory strategies should be flexible to respond to indications of increasing or decreasing risk of consumer harm.

Examination Scoping Activities

All applicable federal consumer compliance laws and regulations are considered in connection with any bank compliance examination through the risk scoping process. However, the FDIC’s supervisory approach apportions resources to areas of higher risk for consumer harm rather than to uncovering technical issues in meeting regulatory requirements. This approach also results in the identification of the most serious violations of federal consumer compliance laws and regulations during the examination. If financial institutions understand the potential for consumer harm and choose to develop and implement institution-specific plans, policies, and processes to prevent and mitigate consumer harm based on their risk profiles, it may assist institutions in avoiding risk and promoting compliance with the federal consumer protection regulations.

Examiners have several tools available to assist them in identifying risks of consumer harm. Examiners evaluate risks of consumer harm through an analysis of an institution’s historical CMS, the products and services currently offered, the markets served, and existing and new third-party relationships. Examiner judgment is the most critical aspect of properly evaluating an institution’s risk profile. The FDIC’s approach tailors the examination to focus primarily on those areas that present the highest risk of consumer harm, as examiners are unable to review all aspects of an institution’s CMS at any given examination. The pre-examination planning process, which includes review of the pre-exam questionnaire with bank management and preparation of the automated Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR), guides examiners in requesting the information necessary to identify areas of the greatest risk of potential consumer harm.

In scoping examinations, examiners consider the inherent risks associated with product and service offerings or other activities that could directly or indirectly result in consumer harm. Inherent risk refers to the risk that a product, service, practice, or other activity would pose if no controls or other mitigating factors were in place. Examiners also focus on whether a bank is effectively and independently managing or mitigating the risk of consumer harm that comes from the products and services the institution offers and markets in which they serve. After considering an institution’s inherent risks, and the strength of its CMS, residual risk exposure may remain.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Evaluating Impact of Consumer Harm

Residual risk refers to the risk exposure that remains after identifying the level of inherent risk and factoring in the strength of the mitigating factors to control that risk. The guiding principle is a risk scoping formula: inherent risk – mitigating factors = residual risk. For example, a bank introduces a new overdraft program with no due diligence, no monitoring or auditing, and numerous customer inquiries. This example represents a high risk product without effective CMS elements to mitigate inherent risk; therefore, a higher level of residual risk remains, and this product warrants review and transaction testing during an examination. As part of the examination scoping process, examiners focus on areas where residual risk is elevated and not on areas where risk is well-controlled and residual risk of consumer harm is low.

Examination Procedures

Examination procedures are drafted and implemented in a manner to guide examiners in assessing the risk of consumer harm in the conduct of the examination. Well-crafted examination procedures that are focused on risks and potential for consumer harm promote the efficient use of resources, identification of root causes of deficiencies, and allocation of resources to areas presenting the highest risk, while avoiding unnecessary review of areas with little or no risk of consumer harm. As an example, examination procedures regarding overdraft programs differentiate the type and extent of review based on the type of overdraft program offered (e.g., automated versus ad hoc) and further reserves more detailed transaction testing to situations where examiners have identified specific risks or weaknesses.

Consumer Compliance Examination Ratings

The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council's Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System (CC Rating System), which is a supervisory policy for evaluating financial institutions' adherence to consumer compliance requirements, includes a section titled Violations of Law and Consumer Harm.² The CC Rating System emphasizes the importance of institution' compliance management systems, with emphasis on compliance risk management practices designed to manage consumer compliance risk, support compliance, and prevent consumer harm. Examiners consider this section as they assess institutions' compliance with the federal consumer protection laws and regulations.

Report Presentation

The Report of Examination plays an important role in communicating the FDIC's assessment of the CMS to the institution. The FDIC classifies violations of federal consumer laws based, in part, on the level of risk of consumer harm. In the event violations are identified in the Report of Examination, this classification process serves to communicate to banks the FDIC's conclusions about the severity, extent, or potential consumer harm caused by the violation. The expectation is that FDIC-supervised institutions will prioritize corrective action and on-going management of their CMS to correct errors and mitigate risks of consumer harm.

Supervisory Actions

Effective supervision includes requiring institutions to take corrective action when weaknesses in the CMS or violations are identified. Appropriate corrective action considers the overall effectiveness of the institution's CMS, the root cause(s) of the deficiencies as well as the extent and impact of consumer harm. When there is a violation of law or regulation that results in consumer harm, the FDIC will seek corrective action, which may include restitution to consumers as part of an appropriate enforcement action. Civil money penalties (CMPs) may also be assessed to sanction an institution or an institution-affiliated party according to the degree of culpability. Other factors examiners consider include intent and severity of the violation of law or regulation, breach of fiduciary duty, and/or whether a practice is unsafe or unsound. CMPs are also assessed to deter future misconduct.

Communication and Technical Assistance

Communication and technical assistance to supervised institutions is an important component of the FDIC's supervisory approach in preventing consumer harm by supporting institutions' efforts to maintain an effective CMS.

Communication is especially important during periods of regulatory change and transition. The FDIC communicates through a number of channels, including national and regional bankers' teleconferences on emerging topics; speaking engagements at national, regional, state, and local conferences and conventions; a web-based regulatory calendar; Supervisory Insights Journal articles; regional newsletters; banker and bank director trainings and online technical assistance videos; meetings with industry trade groups; and issuance of guidance through Financial Institution Letters. Communicating the focus of FDIC examination efforts and supervisory priorities through these diverse channels assists bankers in identifying and reviewing key areas of concern and addressing deficiencies promptly, prior to and unrelated to a specific examination activity. In addition, examiners can provide certain types of technical assistance to community bankers during the course of an examination that may enable an institution to reduce the risk of consumer harm in the operation of its business. These communication and technical assistance efforts provide bankers with tools to address issues that may pose risk of consumer harm.

Compliance Management System

Introduction

Financial institutions operate in a dynamic environment influenced by industry consolidation, convergence of financial services, emerging technology, and market globalization. To remain profitable in such an environment, financial institutions continuously assess and modify their product and service offerings and operations in the context of a business strategy. At the same time, new legislation may be enacted to address developments in the marketplace.

All these forces combine to create inherent risk. To address this risk, a financial institution must develop and maintain a sound compliance management system (CMS) that is integrated into the overall risk management strategy of the institution. Ultimately, consumer compliance should be part of the daily routine of management and employees of a financial institution.

This chapter discusses the elements of an effective compliance management system—Board of Directors (Board) and management oversight and the consumer compliance program.

Compliance Management System

A CMS is how an institution:

- learns about its consumer compliance responsibilities;
- ensures that employees understand these responsibilities;
- ensures that requirements are incorporated into business processes;
- reviews operations to ensure responsibilities are carried out and requirements are met; and
- takes corrective action and updates materials as necessary.

An effective CMS is commonly comprised of two interdependent elements:

- Board and management oversight; and
- Consumer compliance program

When both elements are strong and working together, an institution will be successful at managing its consumer compliance responsibilities and risks now and in the future.

Financial institutions are required to comply with federal consumer protection laws and regulations, and are ultimately responsible for such compliance including the use of third-party providers. Noncompliance can result in monetary penalties, litigation, and formal enforcement actions. The responsibility for ensuring that an institution and its third-party providers are in compliance appropriately rests with the Board and management of the institution. Therefore, every FDIC-supervised institution must have an effective CMS adapted to its unique business strategy.

Board and Management Oversight

The Board of a financial institution is ultimately responsible for developing and administering a CMS that ensures compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations. To a large degree, the success of an institution's CMS is founded on the actions taken by its Board and management. Key actions that Board and management may take to demonstrate their commitment to maintaining an effective CMS and to set a positive climate for compliance include:

- demonstrating clear and unequivocal expectations about consumer compliance, not only within the institution, but also to third-party providers;
- adopting clear policy statements;
- appointing a compliance officer with authority and accountability;
- allocating resources to compliance functions commensurate with the level and complexity of the institution's operations;
- anticipating and evaluating changes in the institution's operating environment and implementing responses across impacted lines of business;
- identifying compliance risk in the institution's products, services, and other activities, and responding to deficiencies and violations;
- conducting periodic compliance audits; and
- providing for recurrent reports by the compliance officer to the Board.

Leadership on consumer compliance by the Board and management sets the tone in an organization. The Board and management should discuss compliance topics during their meetings. They should include compliance matters in their communications to institution personnel and the general public. Institution management and staff should have a clear understanding that compliance is important to the Board and management, and that they are expected to incorporate compliance in their daily operations.

Policy statements on compliance topics provide a framework for the institution's procedures and provide clear communication to management and employees of the Board's intentions toward compliance.

Regardless of size or institution complexity, the first step Board and management should take in providing for the administration of the compliance program is the designation of a compliance officer. In developing the organizational structure of the compliance program, Board and management

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Compliance Management System must grant a compliance officer sufficient authority and independence to:

- cross departmental lines;
- have access to all areas of the institution's operations; and
- effect corrective action.

A compliance committee, as an alternative to or in addition to a full-time compliance officer, could be formed consisting of the compliance officer, representatives from various departments, and member(s) of management or the Board. However, the ultimate responsibility of overall compliance with all statutes and regulations resides with the Board.

A qualified compliance officer will have knowledge and understanding of all consumer protection laws and regulations that apply to the business operations of the financial institution. The compliance officer should also have general knowledge of the overall operations of the institution and interact with all of the departments and branches to keep abreast of changes (e.g., new products, services or business practices; personnel turnover) that may require action to manage perceived risk. In larger or more complex institutions the compliance officer may devote all of his or her time to compliance activities. In smaller or less complex institutions, where staffing is limited, a full-time compliance officer may not be necessary; instead, the compliance responsibilities may be divided between various individuals by type of regulation, such as loan-related or deposit-related regulations. In some instances, several banks may share a compliance officer.

A compliance officer's general responsibilities, regardless of the size or complexity of the institution's operations, include:

- developing compliance policies and procedures;
- training management and employees in consumer protection laws and regulations;
- reviewing policies and procedures for compliance with applicable laws and regulations and the institution's stated policies and procedures;
- assessing emerging issues or potential liabilities;
- coordinating responses to consumer complaints;
- reporting compliance activities and audit/review findings to the Board; and
- ensuring that corrective actions are implemented in a timely fashion and are effective at preventing recurrence.

When more than one individual is responsible for compliance matters, responsibility and accountability must be clearly defined.

To be effective at overseeing compliance and maintaining a strong compliance posture, a compliance officer must be provided with ongoing training, as well as sufficient time and adequate resources to do the job. The compliance officer may utilize third-party service providers or consultants to help administer the compliance program or audit functions. However, the compliance officer should perform sufficient due diligence to verify that the provider is qualified, because ultimately the institution's Board and management are responsible for identifying and controlling compliance risks arising from third-party relationships, to the same extent as if the third-party activity was handled within the institution.

If an institution engages the services of a third party, the Board and management must ensure that the third-party operations, products, services, and activities are reviewed for compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations. An effective compliance risk management process will vary depending on the complexity and risk potential of the third-party relationship, but generally includes risk assessment, due diligence in selecting the third-party provider, appropriate contract structuring and review, and sufficient oversight of third-party activities, including adequate quality control over products or services provided.

Consumer Compliance Program

A sound compliance program is essential to the efficient and successful operation of the institution, much as a business plan. A compliance program includes the following components:

- Policies and procedures
- Training
- Monitoring and/or Audit
- Consumer complaint response

A financial institution should generally establish a formal, written compliance program. In addition to being a planned and organized effort to guide the institution's compliance activities, a written program represents an essential source document that will serve as a training and reference tool for all employees. A well planned, implemented, and maintained compliance program will prevent or reduce regulatory violations and provide cost efficiencies, and is a sound business step. However, a compliance program is not static. The compliance program must be dynamic and constantly amended on an ongoing basis to focus resources where they are needed most based upon risks to the institution.

It is expected that no two compliance programs will be the same, and that the formality of a program will be dictated by numerous considerations, including:

- institution's size, number of branches, and organizational structure;
- business strategy of the institution (e.g., community bank versus regional; or retail versus wholesale bank);

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Compliance Management System

- complexity of products and services offered;
- staff experience and training;
- type and extent of third-party relationships;
- location of the institution—its main office and branches; and
- other influences, such as whether the institution is involved in interstate or international banking.

The formality of the consumer compliance program is not as important as its effectiveness. This is especially true for small institutions where the program may not be in writing but an effective monitoring system has been established that ensures overall compliance. However, during periods of expansion or turnover of staff, a written compliance program becomes more important because individuals with the particular knowledge or experience may no longer be with the institution or available for contact.

Regardless of the degree of formality, all financial institutions are expected to manage their compliance programs proactively to ensure continuing compliance. Compliance efforts require an ongoing commitment from all levels of management and should be a part of an institution's daily business operations.

Policies and Procedures

Consumer compliance policies and procedures generally should be described in a document and reviewed and updated as the financial institution's business and regulatory environment changes. Policies should be established that include goals and objectives and appropriate procedures for meeting those goals and objectives. Generally, the degree of detail or specificity of procedures will vary in accordance with the complexity of the issue or transactions addressed.

An institution's policies and procedures should provide personnel with all the information needed to perform a business transaction. This may include applicable regulation cites and definitions, sample forms with instructions, institution policy, and, where appropriate, directions for routing, reviewing, retaining, and destroying transaction documents. For example, loan application procedures should be established so that institution personnel consistently treat all applicants equitably and fairly. These procedures should incorporate and clearly convey to staff the regulatory requirements and the institution's lending policy, including the institution's nondiscriminatory lending criteria. Similarly, contracts with third parties should set clear expectations for adherence to relevant laws and regulations, and management should ensure that sufficient policies and procedures are in place to control the risks associated with a particular third party.

Compliance policies and procedures are the means to ensure consistent operating guidelines that support the institution in complying with applicable federal consumer protection laws and regulations, both directly and through the use of third-party providers. Also, these criteria will provide standards by which compliance officers and line managers may review business operations.

Training

Education of a financial institution's Board, management, and staff is essential to maintaining an effective compliance program. Line management and staff should receive timely, specific, comprehensive training in laws and regulations, and internal policies and procedures that directly affect their jobs.

The compliance officer should be responsible for compliance training and establish a regular training schedule for Directors, management, and staff, as well as for third-party service providers, where appropriate. Training can be conducted in-house or through external training programs or seminars. Once personnel have been trained on a particular subject, a compliance officer should periodically assess employees on their knowledge and comprehension of the subject matter.

An effective compliance training program is frequently updated with current, complete, and accurate information on products and services and business operations of the institution, consumer protection laws and regulations, internal policies and procedures, and emerging issues in the public domain. For example, loan officers, as well as other front-line personnel regularly interacting with loan applicants, should be fully informed about the loan products and services offered by the institution and thoroughly knowledgeable about all aspects of the applicable consumer credit protection laws and regulations.

Monitoring and/or Audit

Monitoring is a proactive approach by the institution to identify procedural or training weaknesses in an effort to preclude regulatory violations.

An audit is an independent assessment and validation of an institution's system of internal controls, operations, and compliance risk management framework. It complements the institution's monitoring system. Audits can be performed internally or by an external entity, as long as the individuals that perform audit activities are independent of the areas being audited.

Every institution should have monitoring and/or audit functions that are appropriate for their size, complexity, and risk profile. Each function plays an important but different role in supporting a strong CMS. It should not be assumed that if an institution has a strong monitoring function in place, risks are appropriately mitigated. For many institutions, it is necessary to have both.

Monitoring:

An effective monitoring system includes regularly scheduled

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Compliance Management System

reviews of:

- disclosures and calculations for various product offerings;
- document filing and retention procedures;
- posted notices, marketing literature, and advertising;
- various state usury and consumer protection laws and regulations;
- third-party service provider operations; and
- internal compliance communication systems that update and revise the applicable laws and regulations to management and staff.

Institutions that include a compliance officer in the planning, development, and implementation of business propositions increase the likelihood of success of its compliance monitoring function.

Changes to regulations or changes in business operations, products, or services should trigger a review of established consumer compliance procedures. Modifications that are necessary should be made expeditiously to minimize compliance risk, and applicable personnel in all affected operating units should be advised of the changes.

Monitoring also includes reviews at the transaction level during the normal, daily activities of employees in every operating unit of the institution. This might include, for example, verification of an annual percentage rate, or a second review of a loan application, before the transaction is completed. Monitoring at this level helps establish management and staff accountability and identifies potential problems in a timely manner.

Compliance officers should monitor employee performance to ensure that they are following established internal consumer compliance policies and procedures. The frequency and volume of employee turnover at an institution should be factored into the schedule for reviews. Such reviews are especially critical after problems have been noted during past audits or examinations, regulation changes, new products are introduced, mergers occur, or when additional branch locations are opened.

Audit:

The Board of the institution should determine the scope of an audit and the frequency with which audits are conducted. The scope and frequency of an audit should consider such factors as:

- expertise and experience of various institution personnel;
- organization and staffing of the compliance function;
- volume of transactions;

- complexity of products offered;
- number and type of consumer complaints received;
- number and type of branches;
- acquisition or opening of additional branch(es);
- size of the institution;
- organizational structure of the institution;
- outsourcing of functions to third-party service providers, including a review of agreements signed or made between the institution and vendors;
- degree to which policies and procedures are defined and detailed in writing; and
- magnitude/frequency of changes to any of the above.

An audit may be conducted once a year, or may be ongoing where all products and services, all applicable operations, and all departments and branches are addressed on a staggered basis. An audit may be performed “in-house” or may be contracted to an outside firm or individual, such as a consultant or accountant. A financial institution that outsources the audit should make certain that the auditor is well-versed in consumer compliance, and that the audit program is based on current law and regulation, as well as comprehensive in scope. Generally, a strong consumer compliance audit will incorporate vigorous transaction testing.

Regardless of whether audits are conducted by institution personnel or by a contractor, the audit findings should be reported directly to the Board or a committee of the Board. A written consumer compliance audit report should include:

- scope of the audit (including departments, branches, product types and third-party relationships reviewed);
- deficiencies or modifications identified;
- number of transactions sampled by category of product type; and
- descriptions of, or suggestions for, corrective actions and time frames for correction.

Board and management response to the audit report should be prompt. The compliance officer should receive a copy of all consumer compliance audit reports and act to address noted deficiencies and required changes to ensure full compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations. Management should also establish follow-up procedures to verify, at a later date, that the corrective actions were lasting and effective.

Consumer Complaint Response

An institution should be prepared to handle consumer complaints promptly. Procedures should be established for addressing complaints, and individuals or departments responsible for handling them should be designated and known to all institution personnel to expedite responses.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations - Compliance Management System

Examiners should also discuss with management how complaints are identified and defined, as consumer inquiries may also highlight areas with increased risk of consumer harm and/or regulatory compliance concerns.

Complaints may be indicative of a compliance weakness in a particular function or department. Therefore, a compliance officer should be aware of the complaints received and act to ensure a timely resolution. A compliance officer should determine the cause of the complaint and take action to improve the institution's business practices, as appropriate.

An institution should also monitor complaints to and/or about third parties that are providing services on behalf of the institution.

Pre-Examination Planning (PEP)

Introduction

The objective of the pre-examination planning process is to collect necessary information to understand an institution and the risks of consumer harm prior to the start of an examination. This information allows the Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) and the examination team to plan and conduct the examination, to develop the scope of the examination, and to accomplish supervisory objectives in an efficient and effective manner.

This chapter discusses the three phases of the pre-examination planning process and usage of the Pre-Examination Planning System (FOCUS PEP), which is a web-based automated system used to generate the various pre-examination planning documents. The pre-examination planning process involves the following three phases:

1. Information Package (IP)
2. Pre-Examination Planning Phase 1 (PEP-1)
3. Pre-Examination Planning Phase 2 (PEP-2)

Information Package (IP)

The examination planning process begins with the Field Supervisor (FS) or the Supervisory Examiner (SE) calling the institution's management to inform them of the projected start date of the examination or visitation, explaining that an IP will be sent, and discussing how the IP will be provided.¹ The FS or SE submits the IP to the institution no less than 90 calendar days before the projected start date of the examination.² The IP is designed to increase banker awareness of the examination process prior to the examination; to promote open communication with examination staff; and to ensure that the institution's management team knows what to expect during the examination and where to go in the event their expectations are not met. The FS or SE explains that the IP includes a list of interview questions, which will help the EIC develop an examination plan and an information and document request list tailored specifically to the institution's activities. The interview questions are provided early so the institution's management team can prepare to discuss them with the EIC and can invite the appropriate persons to participate in the pre-examination interview that occurs several weeks before the examination start date. The institution may elect to provide written responses to the pre-examination interview questions; however, the FS, SE, EIC, or other examination staff should not request or require written responses from the institution.

¹ The FS or SE is responsible for scheduling and developing a timeline of activities and, therefore, responsible for the initial communication with the institution. Other FS or SE duties, such as setting up the secure exchange of information with the institution or actually submitting the IP to the institution, can be delegated to other appropriate staff.

² Exceptions to this timing requirement can occur on a limited basis when the FS or SE is unable to contact institution management due to unforeseen difficulties. In such circumstances, the FS or SE should send the IP as soon as possible and document reasons for the delay.

After contacting institution management, the FS, SE, or designee submits the IP to the institution according to the previously stated timing requirements. To facilitate efficient and secure exchange of information, the FS or SE should determine the institution's willingness to use applications, such as the Enterprise File Exchange (EFX), that provide a secure method for financial institutions to exchange information with the FDIC.³ When the institution is willing to use such applications, the FS, SE, or designee should initiate a session and electronically submit the IP to the institution. When the institution is unwilling to use secure applications for the electronic exchange of examination-related information, the FS, SE, or designee should use an alternative delivery method (e.g., encrypted e-mail, express mail courier service) that meets the security measures discussed in the FDIC's policies for the exchange, use, and storage of information.⁴ Each field office will establish procedures to ensure the FS, SE, or designee (1) provides the IP to the institution in a timely manner; (2) records the IP sent date in the System of Uniform Reporting of Compliance and CRA Examinations (FOCUS); and (3) if applicable, records any reasons for timing delays in FOCUS.

The IP module in FOCUS PEP is used to produce the IP, which includes a standardized introductory letter that provides an overview of the examination process; discusses various resources available that explain the examination process; identifies the appropriate communication channels for any concerns about the examination process or the resultant ratings; and provides contact information for the FS and/or the SE.

The IP letter has been standardized and automated within FOCUS PEP and should be consistently used by all field offices without changes. A sample IP letter is included in this Manual (see Section III). If electronically submitting the IP to the institution, the FS, SE, or designee should convert the IP letter to an Adobe portable document format (.pdf). Supervisors should also follow any national or regional instructions governing the use of electronic signatures for examination-related documents. In the absence of such instructions, a supervisor can either use his or her typed name as an electronic signature, using the same font as the body of the letter, or use Adobe's "Fill & Sign" feature.

³ Refer to examination instructions about EFX and offsite examination capabilities for user guides and other reference materials.

⁴ Examination staff must understand and comply with the directives, memoranda, and guidance governing the use and security of confidential examination information.

II. Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

Lastly, as part of the examination planning process, the FS or SE schedules examiners for PEP-1 and PEP-2. In particular, the FS or SE will select the EIC and schedule sufficient dedicated time for the EIC to conduct all activities of PEP-1 and PEP-2 prior to the examination start date. As a general rule, the EIC (or Acting EIC) should conduct PEP activities to have sufficient time to learn about the institution and prepare an examination plan tailored to the institution's areas of highest risk. Other examiners may conduct PEP activities on a limited basis when scheduling conflicts arise or limited staffing resources exist. Additionally, if examiners other than the EIC will perform the CRA or fair lending reviews, then those staff members should be scheduled sufficient dedicated time, when possible, to perform CRA- and fair lending-related examination planning activities so that the results are available for the EIC's review and consideration.

Data Validations: For the largest Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) reporters (over 500 LAR lines) and/or Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) reporters, validation testing should be conducted in advance of scheduled fair lending and CRA examinations. This approach will allow the institution to resolve any data errors so the examination can proceed without significant delay. In addition, validation testing must be conducted for HMDA Outlier reviews prior to the start of the examination. For examinations of all other reporters, the validation testing will generally be conducted during the examination. However, a field office has the option to perform a data validation prior to the examination start date for other institutions if the field office has sufficient resources to complete it. The HMDA validations should be conducted following the FDIC HMDA validation procedures, considering the scale and complexity of the institution's mortgage lending activities and an overall assessment of the institution's prior practices and compliance risk profile.

A HMDA/CRA Validation Letter is to be provided to institutions when data validations occur prior to any examination. A data validation letter has been standardized and included in the IP module of FOCUSPEP and should be used consistently. This letter is either sent with or after the IP to allow sufficient time for the data validation process. The letter should be sent using the same secure delivery method established for providing the IP. If HMDA Data Analysts will be used for the validation process, the FS or SE should communicate this with the institution, either verbally or in the letter.

Pre-Examination Planning Phase 1 (PEP-1)

The risk assessment of the institution begins during PEP-1. Every institution has inherent risk based on strategic plans, products and services offered, past supervisory actions, business activity, and other factors. PEP-1 starts the process of identifying and documenting risk based on the institution's structure, supervisory history, financial performance, and market area. The various activities performed during PEP-1 are meant to promote critical thinking about the possible inherent risks in the institution being examined.

PEP-1 consists of the following activities:

- Gathering information about the institution from both internal and external sources;
- Contacting the institution to conduct the pre-examination interview (PEP interview);
- Preparing and sending the Entry Letter to the institution along with the Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR) that primarily requests CMS-related information and documents; and
- Beginning Section 1 of the Assessment of Risk of Consumer Harm (ARCH) and Section 1 of the Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions memo (FLSC). This activity is optional during PEP-1. The ARCH and FLSC can be started to the extent possible and when time or examination scheduling permits; however, most work on the ARCH will occur during PEP-2 and most work on the FLSC will occur during PEP-2 and the examination.

The EIC should begin PEP-1 no less than 45 calendar days prior to the scheduled start date of the examination. However, institutions must have at least 30 calendar days to complete the CIDR and provide requested documents. Longer time periods may be necessary based on the institution's size, resources, and complexity. The EIC should communicate with the institution's management during the PEP interview to determine a sufficient amount of time to provide the requested materials. This timeframe is also discussed in the Entry Letter.

Gathering Available Information

The EIC should first concentrate on gathering as much of the information as possible from FDIC records and databases and from publicly available sources before obtaining information from the financial institution. The following is a list of some key documents and information the EIC should obtain for review because of their relevance to the financial institution's compliance posture.

FDIC Records and Databases

- Data Gathering Tool, which compiles institution, examination, supervisory, and financial information from multiple FDIC systems and databases;
- Prior ARCH, FLSC, and other information from FOCUS or the Regional Automated Document Distribution (RADD);
- Previous Reports of Examination (ROEs) and supporting workpapers for compliance, risk management, trust, and information technology;
- Prior corrective actions (such as restitution) and responses to ROEs;

II. Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

- Supervisory plans (for large and/or complex institutions, or others, as available);
- CRA Performance Evaluations;
- Demographic data for CRA assessment area(s) or market area(s);
- Uniform Bank Performance Reports (UBPRs) and Reports of Condition and Income (Call Reports);
- FDIC monitoring reports;
- Complaint and correspondence files; and
- Applications in process.

External Sources

- Previous years' HMDA and CRA data disclosure reports;
- Content of the financial institution's website;
- Public records, such as securities filings;
- Newspaper or website articles that raise potential examination-related issues; and
- Community contacts (for CRA evaluations).

PEP Interview

The PEP interview questions are maintained in the Compliance Pre-Examination Request Package (C-PREP) module of FOCUS PEP and updated on a periodic basis. The EIC will contact the institution and arrange a PEP interview to be conducted either by telephone, a secure communication platform (such as Microsoft Teams or another FDIC-approved system), or through an in-person discussion. The purpose of the interview is to gather current information to understand the institution's risk profile, size, complexity, and the types of products or services offered. The interview questions are provided to the institution with the IP discussed previously. Staff cannot require the institution to provide written answers to the interview questions in advance. If the institution elects to provide written answers, the EIC is still expected to conduct an interview to verify and clarify responses received. While examiners cannot add, revise, or delete interview questions in FOCUS PEP, the EIC should tailor interview questions based on what is learned about the institution through the internal and external data gathering process. This demonstrates that the EIC has performed research to become familiar with the institution. The EIC should also ask any necessary follow-up or additional questions during the PEP interview to understand the institution's profile and to determine inherent risk.

The EIC should also use the interview as an opportunity to answer the institution's questions about the examination process and to discuss the timing and logistics of the examination, including anticipated on-site and off-site activities. Additionally, the EIC should determine the applicability of the FDIC's e-Exam Policy, should confirm previously discussed electronic document/data access requirements and delivery method(s) with the institution's management; and determine off-site examination capabilities. If the institution does not image documents or has had difficulty creating scanned images of records needed for FDIC examinations, the EIC may consider alternative options such as conducting an on-site review of these records or visiting the institution to scan the documents. The PEP interview also provides an opportunity to identify the institution's staff members who will need to be available to the examination team during the examination. This will allow the institution to take steps to ensure, to the extent possible, that those persons are available when needed.

Director Involvement: During the PEP interview, the EIC should also inform management that members of the institution's Board of Directors are welcome to participate in regularly scheduled meetings with examiners or to schedule individual meetings with the EIC, if desired. The EIC should emphasize that such participation is purely voluntary and that a lack of participation will not be viewed negatively. As stated in the memorandum announcing this initiative, "The primary objectives are to improve communication with outside Directors, increase Director knowledge of the examination process, provide an opportunity for Directors to discuss their views with examiners on banking-related matters, and give examiners the opportunity to gain further insight into the experience levels and leadership qualities of bank management."

CIDR and Entry Letter

The C-PREP module in FOCUS PEP is used to produce the Entry Letter and Electronic Data Download Instructions and the CIDR. These documents must be tailored, as appropriate, for each institution.

After conducting the information gathering and PEP interview outlined above, the EIC (or a designee with whom he or she communicates closely) is required to use C-PREP to customize and create the CIDR based on an institution's products and services. The interview responses must be input to FOCUS PEP to ensure the CIDR is tailored to request only what is necessary to conduct the examination. C-PREP filters the CIDR to make available certain items based on the institution's responses to the PEP interview questions. The CIDR created during PEP-1 primarily requests information and documents to assess the CMS, as well as information and some documents to understand the characteristics of products or services offered. The majority of transaction-level documentation will be requested during PEP-2. The institution's response to the initial CIDR will provide the EIC with enough information to properly scope the examination and to identify products, services, and regulations (PSRs) on the ARCH that exhibit inherent risk not sufficiently mitigated by the institution's CMS (i.e., residual risks). These residual risks will be the basis for requesting transaction testing-related documentation (e.g., disclosures and loan files) during PEP-2. Also, requesting fair lending-related information through the CIDR will allow the examiner conducting the fair lending review to complete the majority of Section 1 of the FLSC prior to the start of the examination. Thus, the EIC should ensure all applicable fair lending-related information is requested through the CIDR so the examiner conducting the fair lending review has access to this information during the scoping process.

II. Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

When completing the CIDR and requesting items such as minutes, training records, or reports, the EIC indicates the timeframe for the review (e.g., since the previous examination, in the past year, in the last two years). This will help the institution avoid the submission of voluminous information or data not relevant to the examination. Additional information about how to use C-PREP can be obtained from the user guide available within FOCUSPEP.

The Entry Letter and CIDR should be provided to the institution in either a paper-based format or an electronic format using the secure delivery method previously established for the examination process. As discussed previously, if electronically providing the Entry Letter to the institution, the EIC (or designee) should convert it to an Adobe portable document file (.pdf). The EIC (or designee) should also follow any national or regional instructions governing the use of electronic signatures for examination-related documents. In the absence of such instructions, the EIC (or designee) can either use his or her typed name as an electronic signature, using the same font as the body of the letter, or use Adobe's "Fill & Sign" feature.

The Entry Letter instructs the institution on how to deliver the materials to the EIC or examination team and in what format. As previously discussed, institutions must have at least 30 calendar days to complete the CIDR and provide requested documents. The timing of the request and the turnaround must ensure that the institution has sufficient time to assemble the requested information and the examination team has sufficient time to adequately review the materials. The FDIC prefers the use of applications, such as EFX, that provide a secure method for financial institutions to exchange examination files and information electronically with the FDIC. However, where appropriate and with supervisor approval, the EIC may visit the institution prior to the official start date either to pick up the documents or to review any documents that are confidential or too bulky to duplicate.

ARCH and FLSC – Section 1

The ARCH documents the scope of the examination and assists with prioritization of efforts, time, and resources toward those PSRs with the highest residual risk of consumer harm. The FLSC documents the fair lending review conducted in accordance with the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council's Fair Lending Examination Procedures. After conducting the PEP interview and recording the institution's responses in FOCUSPEP, the ARCH and FLSC can be created in FOCUSPEP. In an effort to make the PEP process more efficient, Section 1 of the ARCH and FLSC have been coordinated with and linked to the PEP interview. Several responses for Section 1 of the ARCH and FLSC will pre-populate based on what is entered into C-PREP from the PEP interview. However, the EIC should review the pre-populated questions and answers to ensure they are correct.

The EIC has the option to begin Section 1 of the ARCH and FLSC during PEP-1 using available information gathered.⁵ A series of questions helps document various risks identified during examination planning. The ARCH was developed to engage examiner's critical thinking skills and to focus examination resources on areas presenting the highest degree of consumer harm risk. Additional information about preparing the ARCH is included in this Manual (see Section II – Review and Analysis). Examiners can also find information about how to use the ARCH and FLSC modules in the user guides available within FOCUSPEP.

Pre-Examination Planning Phase 2 (PEP-2)

During PEP-2, the EIC will conduct an initial assessment of the institution's CMS to determine how effective the CMS is in identifying, addressing, and mitigating the potential for consumer harm. This information will primarily be obtained from the institution's responses to the PEP interview and the CIDR. The EIC will continue the process of identifying and documenting inherent risk during PEP-2 based on the institution's business model and operations. The areas that indicate a moderate or high level of potential consumer harm risk not mitigated by the strength of the CMS will potentially require further evaluation during the examination. In PEP-2, the EIC will finalize the ARCH examination scope and establish specific areas for review or transaction testing.

PEP-2 consists of the following activities:

- Reviewing the CIDR responses and requested items;
- Completing the ARCH and completing the majority of FLSC Section 1;
- Requesting additional documents for PSR transaction testing or the fair lending review; and
- Getting the ARCH approved.

Supervisors will ensure sufficient time is scheduled prior to the examination start date for PEP-2. The amount of time needed to complete PEP-2 will vary based on the size and complexity of the institution. Each field office will establish procedures to ensure that PEP-2 starts early enough to provide sufficient time for the institution to gather additional documents for transaction testing.

Review CIDR Responses and Requested Items

⁵ As indicated previously, if an examiner other than the EIC will perform the fair lending review, then that staff member also has the option to begin parts of the FLSC during PEP-1 if time and examination scheduling permits it.

II. Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

The EIC and examination team will review the information and documents provided by the institution in response to the CIDR. If documents necessary to complete the ARCH or to assess fair lending risk, such as Board meeting minutes or monitoring/audit reports, are not provided in response to the CIDR, examination team members may go to the institution during PEP-2 to review this information as time, resources, and travel requirements permit. Follow-up contact with the institution's personnel during PEP-2 is encouraged to properly answer any questions and to determine the most appropriate examination scope.

Based on the information provided by the institution, the EIC will complete the ARCH. This will involve finalizing Section 1 of the ARCH, as necessary, but will primarily involve completing Sections 2, 3, and 4. Section 3 of the ARCH has also been coordinated with and linked to the PEP interview and the majority of responses will pre-populate. The EIC will identify the PSRs that warrant transaction testing and any additional documentation needed for the examination. Also, based on the fair lending-related information obtained through the CIDR, the examiner conducting the fair lending review should be able to complete the majority of Section 1 of the FLSC prior to the start of the examination. Additional information about completing the ARCH is included in this Manual (see Section II – Review and Analysis).

Transaction Testing (TT) Request

The EIC will prepare and send a TT Request to the institution based on the scope of the examination and has the option of using the C-PREP module to develop it. The fair lending examiner may work with the EIC to determine if additional fair lending-related documents need to be requested.

Documents requested during PEP-2 will largely be transaction-level documentation such as loan files, disclosures, notices, periodic statements, or system parameters, needed for the anticipated examination scope and the CRA, HMDA, and fair lending reviews. When requesting these documents, the EIC indicates the timeframe for the review period (e.g., since the previous examination, in the past year, in the last two years) and the sample sizes. This will help the institution avoid the submission of voluminous information or data not relevant to the examination. These items will generally be made available electronically through the use of secure applications like EFX or other off-site examination tools, as agreed to by the institution and the EIC, or held at the institution for the examination.

The EIC will provide the TT Request to the institution's designated contact, using the secure delivery method previously established for the examination process. Based on the size, complexity, and resources of the institution, examiner judgment should be exercised regarding the approximate number of days the institution needs to gather the requested documents. Additionally, it is important that the EIC communicate to the institution which documents are needed at the start of the examination. This communication will help the institution prioritize the TT Request and allow the institution additional time to gather lower priority documents during the examination.

If the ARCH is changed to add a PSR subsequent to sending the TT Request to the institution, the EIC has the option to request necessary documents for the additional PSR(s) after the examination starts instead of sending another TT Request. If, however, a PSR is deleted after sending the TT Request to the institution, the EIC should discuss this during the entrance meeting with the institution's management team and explain why the area will not be reviewed.

ARCH Approval

The EIC will finalize the ARCH using information obtained during PEP-2 to determine residual consumer harm risk and to establish the scope of the compliance examination. The completed ARCH will be submitted to the FS and all appropriate SEs to ensure that all territory managers can access the ARCH for review and approval. Each field office will establish procedures to ensure the ARCH is approved by the appropriate FS or SE prior to the examination start date.

If information is discovered during the examination that requires material changes to the originally approved ARCH, the EIC describes the changes in a scope amendment that is submitted to the FS and all appropriate SEs for review and approval. Material changes are generally defined as a PSR change. This may occur when the EIC determines an approved PSR will not be reviewed or when the EIC identifies a new PSR not identified during PEP.

PEP Record Retention

To ensure consistency in record retention, PEP documents should be maintained as follows:

- The IP, HMDA/CRA Validation, and Entry letters should be stored in the correspondence folder in RADD;
- PEP interview questions and answers should be completed within C-PREP and the completed document maintained as an examination workpaper in RADD;
- The completed CIDR with institution responses should be retained as an examination workpaper in RADD;
- The final, approved ARCH should be stored as an examination document in FOCUS;
- The TT Request list should be retained as an examination workpaper in RADD; and
- The final, approved FLSC should be stored as an examination document in FOCUS. Note: Any supporting documents used in the fair lending

II. Compliance Examinations — Pre-Examination Planning

review should be retained in accordance with DCP's Standardized Workpaper Job Aid: FOCUS vs. RADD Minimum Documentation Requirements.

Review and Analysis

Introduction

The FDIC’s consumer compliance examination process assesses how well a financial institution manages compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations. The review period or scope typically covers bank activities conducted over a discrete period of time from the start date of the prior examination through the start date of the current examination. The review and analysis phase of the consumer compliance examination starts with a top-down, comprehensive evaluation of the compliance management system (CMS) used by the financial institution to identify, monitor, and manage its compliance responsibilities and risks. The procedures outlined below guide the examiner through an assessment of an institution’s CMS and assist the examiner in identifying specific areas of weakness for further analysis. Many procedures listed in this section can be performed at the field office or other location prior to the start of the examination, if materials are available.

Off-Site Review and Analysis

The Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) reviews and analyzes the material gathered from FDIC, third parties, and the institution in response to the Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR) in order to develop the scope memorandum and plan the examination. This review and analysis should be broad enough to obtain an understanding of the organizational structure of the institution, its related activities, and compliance risks associated with each of its activities.

The review should be used to preliminarily determine whether the institution’s Board of Directors (Board) and management identify, understand, and adequately control the elements of risks facing the financial institution. In general, management and Directors are expected to have a clearly defined system of risk management controls governing the institution’s compliance operations, including those activities conducted by affiliates and third party vendors. During this review the EIC should consider what types of questions should be asked during the examination to test whether the institution’s written policies and procedures accurately reflect actual operations.

Risk Scope Memorandum

The goal of a risk-focused, process-oriented examination is to direct resources toward areas with higher degrees of risk of consumer harm. To accomplish this goal, the examiner must assess the financial institution’s CMS as it applies to key operational areas and evaluate the risk of non-compliance with applicable laws and regulations. This process is documented by the examiner in a scoping memorandum, the Assessment of Risk of Consumer Harm (ARCH), which is reviewed and approved by the supervisor. The ARCH is developed during the pre-examination planning process and utilizes historical data, information obtained from the interview with the institution, and documents and information submitted by the institution in response to the CIDR. The ARCH describes the focus of the examination, including issues to be investigated and the products, services, or regulations that exhibit inherent risk not sufficiently mitigated by the institution’s CMS. The identified areas with residual risk will be further reviewed or transaction tested during the examination.

During the examination, the EIC should obtain approval for any material changes to the scope of the examination. The EIC describes the changes in a scope amendment that is submitted to the Field Supervisor and all appropriate Supervisory Examiners for review and approval.

The final ARCH should be posted to the System of Uniform Reporting of Compliance and CRA Examinations (FOCUS), making it available to all staff and management during the exam review and for future internal use, especially for the start of the subsequent examination.

Developing a Risk Profile

Every institution has inherent risk based on strategic plans, products and services offered, past supervisory actions, business activity, and other factors. The ARCH will document the identified areas of inherent risk by considering the following:

- Institution Structure:
 - Significant factors or changes
 - Mergers or acquisitions
 - Significant growth since prior examination
 - De Novo status
- Supervisory History:
 - Current and past enforcement actions
 - Reimbursement history
 - History of compliance with fair lending laws and regulations
 - Current and prior regulator ratings and supervisory recommendations
 - Consumer-related litigation
 - Consumer complaints
- Operational Areas - Product/Service/Regulation (PSR) Risk:
 - Major product lines
 - New or revised products/services/regulations
 - Applicable regulations
 - Recent case law
 - Growth in operations
 - Complexity of operations

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- Third party affiliations

Institution Structure: A key component of a financial institution’s risk profile is its structure and business model. An examiner will consider the nature and complexity of, or any changes to, the organizational, management, and ownership structure; business strategy; market areas and customers served; delivery channels; any subsidiaries or affiliates that offer products or services or support operations; branching activities; any unique or niche characteristics; and any significant changes in the institution’s balance sheet composition or income.

Supervisory History: The financial institution’s past consumer compliance performance is an important consideration when developing its risk profile. Historic effectiveness of the CMS, including the results of previous examinations and management’s record of taking corrective measures, will impact its risk profile and ultimately the scope of the examination. The most recent consumer compliance history should be given the most weight. The EIC will be able to locate performance risk information in various areas, including the FDIC’s correspondence and enforcement records for the subject institution. The most recent Risk Management report and workpapers may contain additional information on the institution’s performance risk (e.g., comments regarding institution management).

Operational Areas – PSR Risk: The nature and scope of a financial institution’s activities is a critical consideration in the identification of inherent risk. PSR risks can exist in the following operational areas:

- Lending
- Deposits
- Retail Investment and Insurance Sales
- Privacy and Consumer Information
- Advertising, Marketing, and Social Media
- Debt Collection
- Third-Party Relationships
- Other Products
- Other Regulations or Supervisory Guidance

The institution’s products and services impact the institution’s risk depending upon the financial institution’s size, market share, and portfolio concentration. The complexity of products offered and the associated likelihood of error should be considered. Third-party relationships can present heightened risk, particularly for product delivery, but also for any operation, product, service, or activity provided or conducted by a third party on behalf of the institution. Finally, the institution’s strategic plan for growth and for the introduction of new products or services should also be taken into account.

Regulation risk measures the possible consequences to the institution and its customers of noncompliance with specific regulatory provisions. Regulation risk recognizes that the impact of noncompliance differs depending on the consumer law or regulation. For the public, it is the measurement of relative adverse financial impact or other harm that noncompliance may produce. For the institution, regulation risk is the measurement of legal, reputation, and financial harm that noncompliance may produce. For example, the financial harm both to the institution and to consumers associated with violations of the Truth in Lending Act (Regulation Z) requiring reimbursements far exceeds the consequences of an isolated undocumented check hold. The level of regulation risk is affected by such factors as:

- Potential financial and/or reputation harm to consumers;
- Potential legal, reputation, and financial harm to an institution;
- New laws, regulations, or amendments thereof; and
- The amount of transaction activity subject to a specific regulation.

In order to properly assess a financial institution’s risk, the EIC or designee also reviews the following aspects of the CMS, which may or may not mitigate the identified inherent risks:

- Board and Management Oversight
- Compliance Program
 - Policies and Procedures
 - Training
 - Monitoring and/or Audit Procedures
 - Complaint Response

Taking into consideration the conclusions drawn in each of the preceding components, and any other pertinent information, the examiner should identify and assess the inherent risk within the institution’s PSRs. When the institution’s inherent risk is not sufficiently mitigated by its CMS, residual risk is present. To develop a risk profile of the institution and set the examination scope, the examiner should keep the risk scoping formula in mind (Inherent Risk– Mitigating Factors=Residual Risk).

The areas with residual risk should be further reviewed or transaction tested during the examination. The result of the EIC’s assessment of risk and the specific issues to be investigated and areas to be targeted with transaction testing should be addressed in the ARCH, which is discussed in the next section.

It is important to remember that one element of a financial institution’s consumer compliance efforts may influence another area. Be aware of relationships and their mutual impact. For example, if the initial review of institution practices identifies a lack of audit of loan denials, the examiner should look to see whether monitoring procedures are in place to mitigate the impact of the lack of audit procedures. The existence of monitoring procedures may lead the examiner to determine that the absence of an audit does not raise the institution's risk profile. Conversely, if the initial review of institution policies and procedures identifies well-organized, appropriate, and up-to-date written guidelines for deposit compliance management, the examiner should also consider the institution's record of oversight in this area. If deposit compliance has historically suffered from poor management oversight, then the existence of written procedures should be given less weight when determining the risk profile. It is important to accurately identify inherent risk and weight any mitigating factors that reduce the risk. This process requires the use of sound examiner judgment.

Developing the ARCH

The EIC should begin the risk scoping process by gathering information about the institution from both internal and external sources. The EIC uses information, such as prior consumer compliance and risk management reports of examination, correspondence, and available complaint information, to prepare for the pre-examination planning interview with the institution. Once the pre-examination planning interview is complete and the institution provides responses to the CIDR, the EIC can complete the ARCH. Follow-up contact with institution personnel during pre-examination planning is encouraged, if warranted, to properly determine the most appropriate examination scope.

The ARCH is divided into five sections and begins with an overview of the institution and examination, including current examination information, financial data, and previous examination supervisory comments. Examiners start the risk assessment process by describing the institution's structure and supervisory history in Section 1, followed by an initial assessment of the CMS in Section 2. Examiners identify inherent risks in Section 3 by answering a series of questions about the institution's operations, followed by an analysis of whether each inherent risk is low, mitigated, or results in residual risk of consumer harm. Examiners identify areas that result in residual risk as a PSR that will be reviewed as part of the scope of the examination. The PSRs are summarized in a table in Section 4, where examiners also document additional scope information. Sections 1-4 should be completed and approved by a supervisor or delegated designee prior to the start of the examination. Section 5 should be completed and approved if material changes to the scope of the examination are warranted.

Examiner judgment is a critical aspect of properly evaluating an institution's risk profile. The ARCH allows examiners to use their judgment to focus and prioritize resources on areas (products, services, or regulations) that present the highest risk of consumer harm. The questions in the ARCH do not cover every potential risk but rather set out a basic framework to assist examiners in assessing and documenting an institution's risk of consumer harm. Examiners are not limited to these questions and should consider all relevant facts when evaluating the institution's risk profile.

The ARCH is completed within DCP's Pre-Examination Planning System and the final, approved ARCH must be uploaded and maintained in FOCUS.

Examination Activities: On-site and Off-site Decisioning:

The FDIC has established standard consumer compliance consideration factors to ensure consistency in local decision-making when determining which examination activities should be completed on-site versus off-site. Each examination will be tailored to the risks identified during the planning process; however, all examinations are expected to have an on-site presence. This risk-focused approach encourages flexibility in application and relies on examiner judgment (in consultation with field management) to conduct the most effective and efficient examination that facilitates examiners assessing institutions' compliance with consumer protection laws and the Community Reinvestment Act. The appropriate mix of on-site and off-site examination activities will depend upon many factors, including the bank's business model, risk profile, and complexity; loan file imaging and technological capabilities; institution space/working accommodations; banker feedback; training needs; on-site/off-site plans of RMS and other agencies (CFPB, state authority, etc.), when applicable; ability to collaborate on joint activities; and the need to establish ongoing and effective communication with bank management at each examination, among other considerations. The list below provides a general outline of certain examination activities that can be conducted on-site or off-site. However, examiners should consider the risk profile of the institution and the other factors provided above when determining which activities should be performed on-site versus off-site. When making determinations regarding off-site activities, examiners should further assess the aforementioned factors to decide whether to perform such activities in a field office or virtual environment.

NOTE: The activities listed below are not intended to be all-inclusive, nor is this direction meant to limit or constrain examiner judgment in conducting on-site activities when warranted.

Examiners may perform the following portions of the examination off-site, keeping in mind the risk profile of the institution:

- Conducting pre-examination planning and scoping activities
- Completing portions of low-risk fair lending and Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) reviews

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- Conducting portions of Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) evaluations, particularly for Small Banks and Intermediate Small Banks
- Reviewing policies/procedures; Board/committee packages and meeting minutes; risk assessments; and audit reports/workpapers
- Utilizing Regional Office and Washington Office specialist and Subject Matter Expert resources, including consumer compliance technology specialists, fair lending examination specialists, examination specialists, and other exam team members for out-of-territory exams when their assistance doesn't require being on-site
- Reviewing loan files and deposit disclosures to the extent technology allows
- Completing training benchmarks where on-site performance is not necessary for effective training or clearly not required
- Training for large groups of pre- or newly-commissioned examiners via a training team [note: collaborative spaces in the field office can serve as an effective forum for group training sessions]
- Assessing and transaction testing for portions of lower-complexity/lower-risk areas
- Reviewing online bank systems, such as e-OSCAR, rewards checking, automated overdraft programs, credit bureau reporting, and escrow account administration, unless technology limitations require on-site review
- Writing the Report of Examination and finalizing examination workpapers

Examiners are generally expected to perform the following portions of the examination on-site:

- Conducting key meetings, including exit/Board meetings, and significant conversations with bank officers about potential consumer harm, possible downgrades, enforcement actions, significant fair lending discussions (e.g. criteria interviews), Unfair or Deceptive Acts or Practices concerns, and the CMS interview for higher-risk institutions.
- Training and instilling FDIC culture for pre-commissioned examiners and interns [note: this can be done with a combination of off-site in the field office and on-site at the bank]
- Observing situations that could lead to further investigation/examination activities (e.g. detecting internal control weaknesses, potential fraud, dominant officer situation, etc.)
- Training on first-time significant benchmarks to provide a more collaborative and hands-on development experience

[note: the trainee and coach should generally work on-site together, in the bank and/or field office, as appropriate, while completing the benchmark]

- Working side-by-side for Acting EIC assignments [note: Signing EIC and Acting EIC should be together to complete relevant portions of the exam for the EIC to observe and coach the Acting EIC on examination oversight either in the bank and/or field office]
- Conducting transaction testing for high-risk PSRs, or when remote access is not available

Examination Review and Analysis

Throughout the review and analysis phase of the examination, the examiner should have discussions with management, the compliance officer, Directors, and other personnel to develop an understanding of how management approaches its consumer compliance responsibilities. These discussions will enable the examiner to determine whether and to what extent the financial institution has a CMS that is integrated into its daily operations.

Entrance Meeting with Senior Management

During the pre-examination planning stage, the EIC should schedule a meeting with senior management (e.g., the president, chief executive officer, compliance officer, and if they wish, members of the Board). This meeting should take place as soon as possible after beginning the examination and should facilitate the discussion of various administrative items and the scope of the examination. Matters to be discussed during the entrance meeting include:

- An overview of the examination process, including the use of information collected during pre-examination planning and its impact on the scope of the examination
- The names of FDIC examiners on the examination and whether they will be working on-site or off-site
- Anticipated length of the examination
- Activities expected to be conducted on-site and off-site, and communicating that adjustments may be made based on risk
- The EIC's accessibility throughout the examination to discuss any issues relating to the examination and/or FDIC policy and practices and communication preferences
- The identity of the individual(s) who is/are the primary contact person(s) for examination related issues and communication preferences for both on-site and off-site examiners
- Any issues identified during off-site review and analysis, particularly areas of significant risk of consumer harm that will be receiving close attention

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- The materials requested during pre-examination planning that were not provided by the financial institution prior to the examination start date
- An explanation of the closing management meeting procedures
- The date of the next Board/trustees meeting (Management should be advised that depending upon the examination findings, the FDIC may need to attend the regularly scheduled meeting or call for a special Board meeting.)
- Any issues related to the CRA evaluation and fair lending review

Examiners should use a written agenda to document the issues covered at the entrance meeting, and file a copy in the examination workpapers

Ongoing Communication

Communication between financial institution management, Board, institution staff, and FDIC examination staff is a major component of an effective examination or visitation. Open communication should be maintained with management during the course of the examination. To the extent possible, all issues of concern should be discussed with management as they arise. This allows management time to provide additional relevant information or to begin correcting problems where appropriate.

The financial institution's Directors/trustees are encouraged to participate in regularly scheduled meetings with examiners. However, examination findings should be discussed with management prior to discussing with Board members. Also, the EIC should notify the financial institution's management as early as possible of any plans to meet with the Board to present examination findings. This will provide Directors/trustees with an opportunity to forego meetings during the examination, if that is their preference.

Review of the CMS

Based on information gleaned from the discussions with institution management and staff, along with the off-site review and analysis, the examiner should:

- Determine the quality of the institution's CMS, including the degree to which management has taken a proactive approach to compliance and whether management can demonstrate its ability to assure compliance with federal consumer laws and regulations
- Assess whether the CMS is effective at facilitating compliance
- Identify potential deficiencies in the CMS and areas of greatest risk of consumer harm
- Determine where transaction testing is necessary

The following sections include question lists that are intended to serve only as general guidance for the matters to be addressed during the examiner's dialogue with institution personnel. The sections are organized by elements of the CMS and should be considered in conjunction with each of the different operational areas of the institution to come to a conclusion about the strength of each element overall. The questions will not apply to every examination scenario and should be customized to each situation. Examiner judgment must be used to determine whether additional pertinent questions should be asked. Because all the facets of a CMS are interrelated, certain themes will be repeated in the question lists for multiple sections. Throughout the examination process, the examiner should refer to the FDIC Laws, Regulations, and Related Acts as well as any pertinent outstanding FDIC guidance regarding the regulatory or policy requirements of each area under review.

NOTE: The Examination Checklists/Workpapers are not to be given to institution management to complete.

Applicable Statutes and Regulations

The CMS must adequately address (through oversight, policies and procedures, training, monitoring and/or audit, and complaint response) all areas related to the following Federal consumer laws, regulations, rules, and policy statements:

Lending

Truth in Lending
Real Estate Settlement Procedures

- Prior Reports of Examination, including Consumer Compliance, Risk Management, and specialty examinations (with a focus on the management component of each)
- Minutes of the meetings of the Board, Compliance Committee, Discount Committee, etc.
- New, modified or amended compliance-related policies, procedures, and other internal memoranda
- All files related to the receipt and resolution of compliance-related consumer complaints archived by the institution or the FDIC, including information from the FDIC's automated complaint tracking system managed by the FDIC's Consumer Response Unit

- Written management and Board response and follow-up to internal monitoring and to internal and external audits, if applicable
- Agreements with third parties to provide products or services, such as an outside vendor to provide compliance services and educational materials or with a networking broker/dealer to provide brokerage services
- Institution organizational chart and management résumés
- Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, managers, etc.

Procedures

1. Review Board and committee meeting minutes. Review of these documents should give the examiner an indication of the following:

- Extent of Board oversight/involvement in assuring compliance with consumer protection and fair lending laws and regulations by the institution and, as applicable, by third-party providers
- Training of Directors and management regarding consumer compliance and fair lending issues
- Rationale for implementing new policies or procedures or modifying existing ones
- Any negative comments on rejected loan applications during Loan Committee or any other meeting (such records must be traced to the specific loan file to assure that no unlawful disparate treatment or discrimination was involved in the denial)
- Consideration of new loan or deposit products and strategies for their implementation
- Consideration of new software or software vendors
- Consideration of third parties for compliance audit, if applicable
- Approval of, and rationale for, branch openings and closings
- Whether the Board documented a review of the prior Consumer Compliance Report of Examination (ROE) that included, as applicable: a discussion of recommendations for policy changes, an adoption of those revisions, and a report regarding corrective action and subsequent testing for identified violations

2. Based on the material reviewed during pre-examination planning and the examination, and based on discussions with management, answer the following questions:

- What is the institution's business strategy and what are the compliance implications of that strategy (for example, elevated risk due to rapidly growing subprime lending, cutting-edge e-banking activities, etc.)?

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- What particular compliance-related areas does management feel are weak or in need of review?
- Have the Board and management worked to foster a positive climate for compliance?
- Has management allocated the appropriate level of resources to compliance?
- Does the institution have a designated compliance officer and/or Compliance Committee? If not, is the absence of an officer or committee significant in light of the institution's resources and risk profile?
- Has management ensured that the compliance officer(s) and/or Compliance Committee has the appropriate level of authority and accountability to effectively administer the institution's CMS?
- Has management responded appropriately and promptly to consumer complaints?
- Has management responded appropriately to deficiencies noted and suggestions made at previous examinations and audits?
- How does management stay abreast of changes in regulatory requirements and other compliance issues? Is this method appropriate in light of the institution's resources and risk profile?
- How does management ensure that the institution's staff stays abreast of changes?
- How does management ensure that compliance is considered as part of new product and service development, marketing, and advertising?
- How does management ensure that due diligence is performed prior to changing third-party product or service providers, such as software vendors or third-party audit providers?
- What is the level of management's knowledge of compliance issues?
- Does the review of the Board and/or Compliance Committee minutes indicate a reasonable level of Board involvement?
- Is the Board aware that it is ultimately responsible for the institution's CMS?

3. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution's performance related to this area. Is management oversight generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Evaluating the Consumer Compliance Program

Policies and Procedures

Examiners are to determine whether the institution's policies and procedures are appropriate to the risk in the products, services, and markets of the institution. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to policies and procedures, including the institution's business strategy, product offering, branches, third party relationships, etc.
- Compliance-related policies and other written compliance procedures
- Board minutes, Compliance Committee minutes, and other committee minutes, as applicable
- Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, senior managers, etc.

Policies and procedures, whether written or unwritten, should cover all of the areas listed below. A financial institution may have other policies or procedures related to compliance not listed here that should be included in the examiner's review, depending on the institution's activities and risk profile.

- Compliance Policy – This may be a single document or a compilation of various documents each relating to specific areas of institution activity. In addition to specific guidance on daily compliance activities, the policy should provide for an adequate level of responsibility and authority for the compliance officer, Compliance Committee, and individual employees.
- Lending – Often, institutions will have separate policies for various lending types such as consumer, real estate, commercial, agricultural, etc. All should be reviewed during pre-examination planning.
- Deposits – Institutions often have separate policies for Regulation DD, Regulation E, Regulation CC, and Part 329.
- Electronic Banking – The adequacy of e-banking policies should be assessed in light of the level of activity in which the institution is engaged.
- Privacy – Institution privacy policies and procedures vary widely, depending on the level of information sharing involved.
- Non-Deposit Products – Policies and procedures must provide adequate guidance for the sale of investment and insurance products by institution employees (including loan officers who sell insurance during the loan process), dual employees, and on-site non-employee brokers.
- Branch Closing Policy – Section 42 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act requires every financial institution that has one or more branch locations to maintain a branch closing policy.
- Truth in Lending Policy – Applicable to institutions as defined under section 1503(3) of the SAFE Act, 12 U.S.C. 5102(3). These may be incorporated into the Loan Policy or as stand-alone policies. For these institutions, written policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository institution and its subsidiaries. They specifically must address lender compensation, prohibition on steering, and the requirements under the SAFE Act.

- Fair Credit Reporting Act – Policies and procedures must provide adequate guidance for the adequate reporting of consumer information, complaint resolution of consumer information, and safeguarding of consumer information.
- Overdraft Programs – Institutions providing overdraft programs should adopt written policies and procedures adequate to address the credit, operational, and other risks associated with these types of programs.

In order to ensure an accurate assessment of the institution's CMS, each policy and procedure must be reviewed during pre-examination planning or the examination unless all the following are true:

- 1) The policy was reviewed at the prior FDIC consumer compliance examination
- 2) The review of the policy at the prior examination found no deficiencies
- 3) No changes or amendments have been made since the policy was last reviewed
- 4) There have been no significant regulatory or operational changes pertinent to the area covered by the policy since the prior examination.

1. Conduct sufficient documentation reviews and management discussions to answer the following questions.

- What areas of compliance do the written policies or procedures cover?
- Which policies or procedures are unwritten?
- Is the use of unwritten policies/procedures adequate for the institution's needs?
- Do the policies give effective guidance to institution employees?
- Are policies and procedures structured and implemented in such a way as to ensure fair and equitable treatment of all consumers?
- Do the policies assign compliance responsibility? Are the assignments logical and reasonable given the time and resources available to those employees?
- Do the policies provide appropriate authority to employees responsible for identifying and correcting deficiencies?
- Are the policies and procedures established in such a way as to ensure a smooth transition in the case of key personnel turnover?

- Are policies, procedures, and standardized forms periodically reviewed and updated in response to regulatory changes and changes in the institutions risk profile? How frequent are the reviews?
- Does the Board review and approve all changes to policies and procedures? If not, is the level of approval appropriate given the examiner-determined institution risk profile?
- Are there any practices that have become policy by virtue of the frequency of their occurrence? If so, do these practices conflict with formal policies or procedures?

NOTE: Additional guidance for the review of loan and appraisal policies is located in the Fair Lending Examination Procedures.

2. Determine whether the institution's policies and procedures provide the appropriate level of guidance for all employees and include clearly defined goals and objectives.

3. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution's performance related to this area. Are policies and procedures considered generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Training

Examiners will determine whether consumer compliance training is current and tailored to risk of the institution and staff responsibilities. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to training
 - Compliance-related training documentation
 - Examiner notes from discussions with compliance officer, managers, etc.
1. Review the institution's training records and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:
- Does every employee receive appropriate training given his or her compliance responsibilities?
 - Do third party service providers receive appropriate training?
 - How often is training conducted? Is the frequency of training acceptable?
 - Is the training program continuously updated to incorporate accurate, complete information on new products and services, regulatory changes, emerging issues, etc.?
 - Is the effectiveness of the training evaluated by management through delayed testing, before-and-after work product reviews, or other means?

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- Regardless of whether staff training is conducted primarily in-house or is out-sourced, does management evaluate whether the institution's training needs are being met? As EIC, do you agree or disagree with management's conclusions?

2. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution's performance related to this area. Is the institution's training considered generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Monitoring and/or Audit

Examiners should determine the sufficiency of the monitoring and, if applicable, audit to encompass consumer compliance risks throughout the institution. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to monitoring
- Compliance-related policies and other written compliance procedures
- Documentation of the results of monitoring activities
- Formal and/or informal reports to management of the findings, corrective actions, and related follow-up from monitoring procedures
- Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, manager, etc.

Conduct documentation review and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:

- What monitoring systems are in place for loan transactions? Deposit transactions? Investment and insurance sales activities?
- Is every transaction subject to monitoring? If not, what is the level of transactional review? Is the level of monitoring adequate?
- Does monitoring include a review of the performance by third party product or service providers?
- Are the appropriate personnel conducting the monitoring (i.e. someone with daily involvement in the monitored area and who has received adequate training)?
- How are errors that are identified during the monitoring process documented?
- How are the errors corrected?
- Is there appropriate follow-up when errors are identified (i.e. refresher training, disciplinary action)?

2. Determine whether the institution's monitoring efforts encompass all applicable regulations.

3. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution's performance related to this area. Is the institution's monitoring effort generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Evaluating the Audit Function:

Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to the audit function
- Audit policy, external audit agreement, or other written audit guidelines
- Compliance-related internal and external audit reports, responses, and follow-up
- Internal and external audit workpapers
- Institution organizational chart
- Board minutes, Compliance Committee minutes, and other committee minutes, as applicable
- Examiner notes from discussions with audit staff, compliance officer, managers, etc.

Exception: Do not request fair lending self-testing reports (or results). If, however, a financial institution voluntarily provides documentation of its fair lending self-testing, review the findings as part of the fair lending examination.

NOTE: A financial institution's audit or review of loan files, internal policies, and training material may indicate difference in the treatment of applicants that could constitute a violation of the fair lending laws.

1. Conduct documentation review and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:

- Are internal audits conducted? How often and by whom?
- If internal audits are conducted, is the auditor independent of the transaction being audited? If not, is this considered acceptable considering the institution's resources and risk profile?
- Are external audits conducted? How often and by whom?
- Are internal/external audits comprehensive in scope? If audits are not comprehensive, do they cover all areas of significant risk? Do they include reviews at every branch location and of significant third party relationships?
- Are audit findings compiled in writing? Do they identify the nature and circumstances (i.e., cause, time period, etc.) of the identified exceptions? Do they provide management enough information to (1) determine cause and (2) formulate an appropriate corrective action?
- Are internal/external audits of sufficient quality?

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

- Are the audit findings communicated to the Board either directly or through the compliance committee?
 - Have audit report findings been appropriately addressed by the Board and senior management in a timely manner and include corrective actions and follow-up efforts?
 - Are written audit reports readily available for examiner review?
2. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution's performance related to this area. Is the audit function generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Consumer Complaint Response

Examiners are to determine the responsiveness and effectiveness of the consumer complaint resolution process. Material to be reviewed during completion of this section will include, at a minimum:

- The examiner-determined risk profile of the financial institution as it relates to consumer complaints
 - Consumer complaint policy or other written compliance procedures regarding complaints
 - All files related to the receipt and resolution of compliance-related consumer complaints archived by the institution or the FDIC, including information from the FDIC's automated complaint tracking system (EPIC)
 - Board minutes, Compliance Committee minutes, and other committee minutes, as applicable
 - Examiner notes from discussions with the compliance officer, managers, etc.
1. Conduct documentation review and have sufficient discussions with management to answer the following questions:
- Has the institution implemented policies and procedures to handle consumer complaints about the institution and, as applicable, third party providers?
 - If policies and procedures are in place, do they comply with all regulatory requirements regarding complaints (maximum time limits for response, documentation requirements, etc.)?
 - If the institution has received consumer complaints, have all complaints been resolved satisfactorily?
 - Cross-referencing the complaints to all other areas of the CMS, does the type or quantity of complaints suggest any other areas in need of in-depth review?
 - Does the institution review complaints to determine whether improvements or changes to products or operations should be made?

2. Develop and document a preliminary assessment of the institution's performance related to this area. Are the institution's consumer complaint response processes generally strong, adequate, or weak? On what is this assessment based?

Transaction Sampling and Testing

After analyzing the CMS elements in relationship to each of the institution's inherent risks, the EIC will identify PSRs with residual risks and decide what transaction sampling and testing is necessary. The number of transactions and the particular regulatory requirements to be reviewed should be carefully tailored to weaknesses identified in the CMS as it relates to specific PSRs. For example, if there is a weakness in monitoring the calculation of Annual Percentage Rates in open-end credit transactions, then a sample of those calculations should be tested. It would not be necessary to test all Truth in Lending Act requirements.

The severity of CMS weakness and inherent risk will dictate the intensity of transaction testing; greater weakness and higher risk will generally lead to the review of more transactions. If the examiner finds a moderate degree of risk, then sufficient testing should be done to support a conclusion.

Depending on the importance of an element, the examiner may find it appropriate to conduct a limited review of a couple of transactions to support a favorable conclusion. In certain cases, however, management's admission that a violation occurred is sufficient to warrant the citation without transaction testing. This also negates the need to list specific transactions in the ROE.

When transaction sampling and testing are conducted for PSRs exhibiting higher levels of residual risk, the examiner should tailor the actual sample and test to the identified weakness. If an inherent risk is sufficiently mitigated by the strength of the CMS, then minimal residual risk of consumer harm exists and transaction testing is not considered necessary.

Consultation Policy

Consultations and communication between field, regional, and Washington staff members help maintain the quality and consistency of consumer compliance, fair lending, and CRA examinations and supervision. Information communicated informally or through consultations alerts senior DCP officials to significant, unusual or emerging supervisory issues, which ensures that these issues receive appropriate and timely consideration. Current information from examiners in the field also helps the FDIC and interagency groups develop more realistic policies and regulations.

Examination staff should consult with regional or field office management or staff if they find an unusual issue or problem. In turn, regional or field office management and staff are encouraged to consult with Washington subject matter experts, particularly with respect to findings, issues, or potential violations requiring guidance with respect to new regulations, or involving emerging/sensitive policy concerns.

Certain situations, because of their sensitivity or potential impact, mandate that the regional and/or Washington office(s) be consulted. Actions that require either approval or concurrence under delegated authority or DCP policy also require formal documentation.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Review and Analysis

If a consultation results in an outcome inconsistent with the examiner's recommendation, then the examiner and the review examiner should ensure that the language of the ROE or CRA Performance Evaluation is consistent with the final outcome.

Communicating Findings

At the conclusion of an FDIC risk-focused, consumer compliance and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) examination or review¹, compliance examination staff communicates supervisory findings to institutions describing the strengths and weaknesses of an institution's compliance management system (CMS), assessing adherence to the consumer protection laws and regulations, and describing potential or actual consumer harm. Typically, such findings are conveyed during a meeting with the institution's management and/or the Board of Directors/Trustees (Board) at the conclusion of a consumer compliance examination, and also in the Report of Examination (ROE).

Examiners communicate Matters Requiring Board Attention (MRBAs) when significant issues are identified requiring an institution's Board and management to take prompt corrective action on behalf of the institution and elevated supervisory attention is necessary. Examiners also provide recommendations to management when issues are identified that have a lower risk of consumer harm and are correctable by management in the normal course of business. If institutions take recommended actions, their CMS generally improves, and subsequent supervisory attention may not be necessary.

Exit Meeting

An exit meeting is held with management at the conclusion of a consumer compliance and CRA examination or review. When practical, at least two FDIC representatives should be present at the exit meeting. Attendance by financial institution representatives other than management is at the discretion of management. These participants may include: consultants, agents, counsel, accountants, holding company officers, directors, and employees who work directly with consumer protection laws or CRA. The presence of the aforementioned representatives should only be during segments that pertain to their area of responsibility. Third party participants must be under contract with the bank, with appropriate confidentiality language, in order to attend the exit meeting.

During concurrent examinations with Risk Management Supervision (RMS), DCP's Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) coordinates with RMS examiners to schedule the exit and Board meetings in an effort to ensure that all necessary attendees are present and that the bank's and FDIC staff's time is used efficiently. Reasonable requests from management, such as for separate meetings, are considered and accommodated, if practical.

Examination findings, including consumer compliance and CRA ratings, are not final until the appropriate reviews are conducted by review staff, and/or the Regional or Washington Offices, as applicable. Prior to the exit meeting, Regional Offices generally consult with examiners and approve enforcement action recommendations.

The exit meeting is used to:

- Summarize review or examination findings. All critical issues are discussed. If significant issues arise subsequently, they are discussed with management either in person, virtually, or by telephone. If management presents significant, new information at the exit meeting, additional review by the examiner may be required. In such instances, the examination process is left open for further review of applicable regulatory issues and the institution's records. A second meeting with management may be necessary to discuss any additional matters.
- Discuss, when appropriate, positive findings to acknowledge the effectiveness of the institution's consumer compliance or CRA efforts.
- Provide recommendations to address noted weaknesses or deficiencies.
- Recommend actions that would strengthen or enhance the financial institution's CMS, as applicable.
- Obtain management's response(s) and commitment(s) for corrective action for deficiencies identified in the CMS, including recommendations, and for cited violations and the resulting consumer harm.
- Advise management of recommended consumer compliance and CRA ratings, as well as any recommendations for formal or informal enforcement actions.

The agenda for the exit meeting lists the discussion items in the order of their significance in relation to the overall conclusions. The agenda also includes a tentative listing of Level 3 and Level 2 violations, and to the extent possible, draft copies of the pertinent violation sections of the ROE. At the exit meeting, examiners also provide management with a copy of the Level 1 violations, if applicable. A copy of the agenda is provided to management and included in the examination workpapers.

Board Meeting

The purpose of a meeting with the financial institution's Board is to convey the pertinent findings of the examination directly to persons ultimately responsible for the operating policies and procedures of the institution. Board meetings are conducted after the exit meeting with management, and are planned for regularly scheduled Board meetings, whenever possible. When significant issues requiring consultation with the Regional Office are present, the FDIC's Consultation Policy is followed prior to scheduling the Board meeting.

Board meetings must be attended by at least a quorum of Directors/Trustees. The EIC, Field Supervisor, Supervisory Examiner, and/or Review Examiner or senior member of the Regional Office staff attend, as deemed appropriate.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Communicating Findings

Board meetings may be appropriate in a variety of situations, but are required under one or more of the following circumstances:

- An informal or formal enforcement action is recommended
- The proposed consumer compliance rating is “3,” “4,” or “5”
- The proposed composite CRA rating, state rating, or multi-state rating is “Needs to Improve” or “Substantial Noncompliance”
- The institution’s management or Board requests such a meeting

A Board meeting is not required for:

- Visitations;
- Consumer Complaint Investigations; or
- Other Special Reviews.

Report of Examination

Introduction

The ROE is a consumer compliance examination’s principal document of record. It communicates the results of an examination to the Board and management of the financial institution. The ROE highlights the strengths and weaknesses of a financial institution’s CMS and cites violations (if any) in order of significance. The ROE may also include pages that inform the institution about MRBAs, compliance with enforcement actions, or other matters. The ROE offers recommendations for addressing deficiencies and improving future compliance management performance.² Compliance examiners develop the ROE’s content and its findings based on bank information reviewed during the supervisory process, FDIC examination policies and procedures, and examiner experience and professional judgment.

Format of the Report of Examination

The ROE is a standalone document that is organized as follows:

- Transmittal Letter
- Report Cover
- Examiner’s Comments and Conclusions
 - Consumer Compliance Examination Scope and Rating
 - Compliance Management System
 - Board and Management Oversight
 - Compliance Program

- Optional headers to address significant findings (if applicable), such as Third Party Oversight, Fair Lending, etc.
- Violations of Law and Consumer Harm
- Community Reinvestment Act Scope and Rating (if applicable)
- Enforcement Action(s) (if applicable, including proposed enforcement actions)
- Matters Requiring Board Attention (if applicable)
- Recommendation(s)
- Meeting with Management
- Meeting with Board of Directors (if applicable)
- Matters Requiring Board Attention (if applicable)
- Compliance with Enforcement Actions (if applicable)
- Level 3/High Severity Violations (if applicable)
- Level 2/Medium Severity Violations (if applicable)
- Other Matters (if applicable)
- Compliance - Supervisory Section (if applicable)

Transmittal Letter

A transmittal letter accompanies a ROE to a financial institution’s Board. The transmittal letter requires the institution, within a timeframe established by the applicable Regional Office, to send a letter or letters to the appropriate FDIC office notifying it, in sufficient detail, of the actual resolution of the MRBAs, recommendations, and Level 3 and Level 2 violations.

Appropriate staff at the Regional Office reviews an institution’s response and determines whether the response sufficiently addresses the issues. The Regional Office maintains a tracking system to ensure responses are received and corrective actions are completed in a timely manner. In cases where an enforcement action is pursued against an institution, examination staff will follow established monitoring procedures.

Content of the Report of Examination

The guiding principle for completing the ROE is that it contains all information that is necessary and useful for the institution’s Board and management to understand the scope and conclusions of the examination and any corrective actions that may be necessary to achieve compliance or address consumer harm. The ROE should aid the Board and management in developing an action plan to address any findings or supervisory concerns. Examiners exercise judgment and discretion when determining ² Best practices may be communicated to an institution verbally. There is no supervisory expectation that an institution should implement suggested best practices.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Communicating Findings

the amount of information and detail to include in the ROE. Factors examiners could consider when determining the amount of detail include significant CMS structure or management changes, significant changes in business strategy that impact the consumer harm risk profile, changes in ratings or adverse ratings, CMS weaknesses, violations resulting in significant consumer harm, civil money penalties, de novo or charter conversion status, complex or unusual programs or products, or management disagreement with ratings.³

Examiner's Comments and Conclusions

Consumer Compliance Examination Scope and Rating

This section of the ROE provides information regarding the date and scope of the compliance examination, including the fair lending review. Additionally, this section contains a table that discloses the consumer compliance ratings for the current and prior examination, as applicable. The table also includes the applicable rating definition for the current examination.

Compliance Management System

This section of the ROE includes the EIC's comments and conclusions regarding the overall quality of the institution's CMS and the Board and management's ability to effectively meet its compliance responsibilities. This section discusses the EIC's comments and conclusions relative to each of the two elements of a CMS: Board and management oversight and the compliance program. Both positive and negative aspects of the institution's management of its compliance responsibilities are discussed, while focusing on analysis rather than stating known facts about the bank's CMS.

Fair lending matters are incorporated into the ROE. Fair lending findings are incorporated into the CMS section of the ROE, as appropriate. If warranted, a separate fair lending section may be included in the ROE, with reference to the appropriate CMS section.

Violations of Law and Consumer Harm

This section of the ROE summarizes the relationship between violations identified and the deficiencies in the CMS. This section also summarizes the consumer harm that resulted from such deficiencies. Generally, examiners consider the collective significance and frequency of all infractions and any mitigating factors.

Violations are categorized as Level 3/High Severity, Level 2/Medium Severity, and Level 1/Low Severity. Only violations at Levels 3 and 2 that are of high or medium severity are discussed in this section of the ROE. Level 1 violations will not be mentioned in the examiner's comments and conclusions pages of the ROE.

If applicable, this section will include information about restitution of any type, and briefly state the total amount of restitution when reliable estimates have been determined, or estimates based upon the examiner's calculations, including the assumptions on which the estimates are based. Finally, a reference to the violation page(s) is included.

Community Reinvestment Act Scope and Rating

If a concurrent CRA evaluation was conducted, this section provides information regarding the scope of the CRA evaluation and any notable weaknesses identified. This section also includes a table with the current and previous CRA ratings, the definition of the current CRA rating, and the current and previous CRA rating components for Intermediate Small Bank and Large Bank evaluations, if applicable. Finally, a reference to the CRA Performance Evaluation is included.

Matters Requiring Board Attention

This section addresses matters requiring board attention, as applicable, and includes a reference to the separate MRBA page.

Recommendation(s)

This section summarizes all examiner recommendations that were not fully addressed during the examination, as applicable, including violation-, CRA-, and fair lending-related recommendations. If no recommendations were provided or all recommendations were fully addressed during the examination, this section will note that, as applicable.

Enforcement Action(s)

This section includes a brief comment summarizing any proposed enforcement action(s) and/or the institution's actions with regard to any outstanding enforcement action(s). For outstanding enforcement action(s), the adequacy of the steps taken by the institution to comply with each provision will be discussed on separate "Compliance with Enforcement Actions" pages.

When an EIC recommends an informal or formal enforcement action against an institution, the provisions of the proposed enforcement action as well as the reasons for the recommendation should be discussed with the Board and management and documented in the Meeting with Management and Meeting with the Board of Directors sections of the Examiner's Comments and Conclusions pages in the ROE.

This section of the ROE describes the exit meeting with management.

Meeting with Board of Directors

This section of the ROE describes the meeting with the Board members.

Matters Requiring Board Attention

The MRBA page is only included in the ROE for items that are significant and require prompt corrective action and elevated supervisory attention. MRBAs are intended to ³ These factors are meant to be an illustrative example and are not all-inclusive.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Communicating Findings

clearly convey to an institution's Board and management issues of the highest degree of supervisory concern. MRBAs could include violations of consumer protection laws; CMS weaknesses that, if left unaddressed, could adversely affect the institution; activities that resulted in consumer harm; or emerging issues that impact the institution and require proactive attention to mitigate risks.

If a matter that requires the Board and management's attention is included as a provision in a proposed enforcement action, it should not be duplicated on the MRBA page.

Compliance with Enforcement Actions

The Compliance with Enforcement Actions page is only included when applicable and discusses how management has addressed weaknesses identified in the action. The guidance in this section applies to both formal and informal actions. The page will start with a brief overview of the facts leading to the issuance of an action.

Each provision should be followed with the examiner's assessment of the adequacy of the steps taken by the institution to comply with the provision. For example, an assessment of a new policy might say "The updated Compliance Policy is comprehensive and tailored to the bank's product offerings." Examiners should not use conclusory statements of opinion such as "The institution is in compliance/noncompliance with this provision." Comments should indicate whether any time limits set forth in actions have been met.

At the first examination/visitation after the issuance of a formal or informal action, the provisions of the action will generally appear verbatim on this page. At subsequent examinations/visitations, the examiner need only address provisions of an ongoing nature and those that remain outstanding. In all cases, a summary of the institution's actions with regard to the enforcement action will be included on the examiner's comments and conclusions page along with the examiner's recommendation to terminate, continue, or change the enforcement action.

Violations

The violations page(s), when applicable, serve as the institution's official record of violations identified during an examination.

Level 3 and Level 2 violations are described in the ROE and are listed in order of severity with management's response to each violation. Level 1 violations are recorded as a list on the Level 1 Violations page. The Level 1 Violations page is left with management at the conclusion of the exit meeting but is not included in the ROE or mentioned in the examiner's comments and conclusions pages of the ROE.

Descriptions of the Level 3 and Level 2 violations in the violations pages readily call attention to the general nature and magnitude of these matters. Examiner's recommendations to address the violations along with management's responses will be included on the violations pages. Where no violation was found for a particular level of violation, the associated violations page is omitted.

The FDIC relies on examiner professional judgment in categorizing the level of violations. Examiners make reasonable efforts to appropriately categorize violations; however, the key purpose of the categorization system is to communicate to institutions the FDIC's level of concern regarding each of the violations cited, and for institutions to appropriately prioritize efforts to correct violations cited.

Violations that have been self-identified by a bank and fully corrected before the start of the examination (including remedial action, if appropriate) generally are not cited on the violations pages or recorded in FOCUS.⁴ Examiners confirm that the bank identified the root cause of the violation and that the corrective action gives reasonable assurance that the violation will not recur.

Note: The self-identification of violations is the result of a proactive approach to identify weaknesses in an effort to facilitate the early detection of regulatory violations and limit the scope of consumer harm. Self-identification reflects a robust and effective CMS that includes adequate monitoring and/or audit functions and effective responses to consumer complaints. Examiners consider self-identification of violations, along with prompt and full corrective action, including remediation of consumer harm, as applicable, as a strength of the bank's CMS when its corrective action is the result of proactive measures resulting from the bank's CMS functions. Examiners do not consider violations identified by way of supervisory activities between examination cycles (e.g. visitations or other regulator-initiated engagement), litigation, investigations by other agencies, or other means outside of the bank's CMS functions, as self-identified or a strength of the CMS, although promptly addressing issues identified through these channels will be considered positively.

Level 3/High Severity Violations

Violations of the highest concern that have resulted in significant harm to consumers or members of a community are classified as Level 3/High Severity. These violations typically result in a request or a requirement that the institution provide restitution in excess of $10,000 (in aggregate), or include, for example, pattern or practice violations of anti-discrimination provisions, including redlining or widespread discouragement.

Level 2/Medium Severity Violations

Violations of moderate concern reflecting systemic, recurring, or repetitive errors that represent a failure of the bank to meet a key purpose of an underlying regulation or statute are classified as Level 2/Medium Severity. These violations may have had a small, but negative impact on consumers or have the potential to have a negative impact if uncorrected. Level 2 violations may ⁴ FOCUS is FDIC's system of record for all consumer compliance and CRA examination activities. It stores both examination data and documents including the consumer compliance examination's ROE and the CRA Performance Evaluation.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Communicating Findings

also include those resulting in potential restitution in an amount below the Level 3 threshold.

Level 1/Low Severity Violations

Violations of the lowest concern that are isolated or sporadic, or systemic violations that are unlikely to affect consumers or the underlying purposes of an applicable regulation or statute are classified as Level 1/Low Severity. These violations are typically due to individual instances of failure to follow established procedures or minor errors in the implementation of reasonable procedures to comply with the obligations of a regulation or statute.

Other Matters

The Other Matters page, if used, discusses matters that arise during an examination that may not rise to the level of a violation of law or regulation regarding which the FDIC has examination authority. Other matters may include apparent violations that are referred to another agency, or details to support a potential risk that is included on the examiner's comments and conclusions pages.

Compliance - Supervisory Section

The purpose of the Supervisory Section is to provide the FDIC Regional Office, Washington Office, and other banking regulators with confidential or controversial information. It also provides information to succeeding examiners on supervisory and examination activities relating to the institution. The Supervisory Section is not included in the ROE transmitted to the institution. Examples of information important to report on this page include:

- Planned changes in key management positions or compliance personnel that are not widely known in the institution
- Pending litigation on a consumer protection matter that is not widely known in the institution
- Tentative plans or strategies that are not widely known in the institution that may affect the frequency or scope of future compliance examinations
- An explanation as to why civil money penalties are not imposed for Flood Insurance violations involving pattern or practice violations
- Bank's compliance with the Interstate Banking and Branching Efficiency Act of 1994

This page is omitted when there are no issues to discuss, or all information is accessible in FOCUS, or the examination workpapers.

Review of the Report of Examination

The EIC or Review Examiner, as directed by regional policy, completes and uploads the following documents into FOCUS for review:

- Transmittal Letter

- Report Cover
- Examiner's Comments and Conclusions
- CRA Performance Evaluation (if applicable)
- Matters Requiring Board Attention (if applicable)
- Compliance with Enforcement Actions (if applicable)
- Level 3/High Severity Violations (if applicable)
- Level 2/Medium Severity Violations (if applicable)
- Level 1/Low Severity Violations (if applicable)
- Other Matters (if applicable)
- Compliance - Supervisory Section (if applicable)
- Final examination scoping documents for compliance and fair lending.

The EIC ensures that all FOCUS submission requirements are met, which includes completing all applicable screens and recording the appropriate violation code for all levels of violations cited during the examination or visitation.

During the review process, Review Examiners identify any gaps, inconsistencies, or unsupported or unexplained conclusions contained in the ROE or any other document informing the institution of an FDIC material supervisory determination. The assigned Review Examiner and the EIC shall fully support the facts identified with supporting information before the ROE or document is submitted to the institution.

Generally, examiners conduct Board meetings before forwarding the ROE to FDIC's Regional or Washington Office for review. However, in special circumstances, examiners may conduct the meeting after forwarding the report for review. If this occurs, the EIC will prepare a memorandum to the Regional Office summarizing the pertinent issues from the Board's discussion for inclusion in the ROE.

The FDIC communicates with the financial institution if, during the review process, the examiner's recommended rating is downgraded or the examiner's conclusions are changed in a way that adversely affects the financial institution.

After the ROE is signed, it is delivered to the Board of the financial institution.

Documenting the Examination

Introduction

Examination documentation should demonstrate a clear trail of decisions and supporting logic within a given area. Documentation should provide a written record of the examiner's decisions and analysis and provide support for assertions of fact or opinion in the Consumer Compliance Report of Examination (ROE). A well-constructed examination documentation file will provide sufficient data to reconstruct the examiner's decision process for each step of the examination. This includes support for the examiner's decision to include or exclude a regulation or area of review from the scope of the examination, as well as providing documentation of significant findings, including Level 3 and Level 2 violations.

It is vitally important that appropriate, relevant workpapers are maintained within the applicable storage medium to support:

- Review of the ROE;
- Expanded explanations of Level 3 and Level 2 violations in the event of subsequent enforcement action or appeals of supervisory determinations;
- Development of a supervisory plan;
- A current risk profile; and
- Developing the scope of future examinations and limiting future information and document requests of the institution.

Documenting Findings

1. The Assessment of Risk of Consumer Harm (ARCH) is used to identify and documents inherent risk. Some areas of risk will be eliminated from further review during pre-examination planning based on their low level of inherent and/or residual risk. Section 3 of the ARCH should explain why areas are eliminated from review. Comments should be concise but specific enough to indicate why consumer harm risk is low and how CMS factors mitigate the inherent risk.
2. The ARCH also is also used to identify and documents the areas with moderate or high level of potential consumer harm risk that are not mitigated by the strength of the CMS. Section 3 of the ARCH also establishes specific products, services, or regulations (PSRs) for review or transaction testing. As discussed in this manual, PSRs are based on residual consumer harm risk and only PSRs exhibiting such residual risk are included in the examination scope.

There may be certain situations in which transaction testing or other review procedures will be necessary but is not predicated upon residual consumer harm risk. Training and development needs are one example.

These types of reviews should be addressed in Section 4 of the ARCH but in the Other Areas for Review section rather than as a PSR.

3. An Examiner Summary workpaper should be prepared for each area selected for transaction testing or other review procedures. The Examiner Summary should support examination findings, conclusions, and supervisory recommendations and discuss applicable strengths and weaknesses relevant to inherent risk and how effectively the bank is identifying, addressing, and preventing consumer harm. The Examiner Summary, in conjunction with the ARCH and the ROE, will allow subsequent readers to clearly identify the scope of work performed and the basis for the examiner's conclusion.

Include:

- A statement indicating the scope of the review and describing the examination procedures used. Copies of the procedures, marked to indicate the portions used, may be substituted for the description.
- Examiner Summaries should include (1) significant findings and their impact on the CMS rating and (2) any deficiencies or violations noted during the examination that are not contained in the ROE.
- Generally, the examiner should maintain all discussion notes and all copies of bank documentation obtained during the examination. Exceptions can be made for irrelevant material or bulky items that have limited audit trail value. A copy of any document which is being directly criticized, or which supports a criticism made during the examination, must be maintained in the workpapers.

Again, Examiner Summaries are only necessary for areas selected for transaction testing or other review procedures.

4. When a violation of a specific regulation has been identified, then:
 - Ensure the appropriate workpapers are fully completed and that supporting documentation is attached. The use of standardized workpapers is required. The examiner is required to download the most current version of the standardized workpaper prior to the start of the current examination. The workpaper and documentation should be sufficient to enable an examiner having no previous connection with the examination to ascertain the evidence supporting the significant conclusions, judgments, cited violations, and compliance with any outstanding enforcement action.
 - Assign a violation code to each violation identified during the examination. All violation codes,

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Documenting the Examination

regardless of whether or not they were detailed in the ROE, should be uploaded through the Framework for the Oversight of Compliance and CRA Activities User Suite (FOCUS) at the completion of the examination.

5. Ensure the workpapers include clear and legible notes from discussions with management. All responses to examiner questions should be readily attributable to specific members of management. Specific comments made by management that are relevant to a significant finding should be marked or highlighted accordingly.
6. Attach to the relevant workpapers the documents supporting each finding noted in the ROE.

For example:

- A copy of the relevant portion of the bank's compliance policy which stipulates procedures that are in contradiction to the procedures actually performed.
- Copies of notes and related disclosure statements for violations of Regulation Z, Truth in Lending.
- Copies of adverse action notifications for violations of Fair Credit Reporting Act and/or Regulation B, Equal Credit Opportunity.
- Copies of completed hold notices where the financial institution failed to make $200 available at the start of the next business day in violation of Regulation CC, Expedited Funds Availability.

NOTE: For any violations cited as systemic or a pattern or practice, the examiner need only attach enough copied documents to support this conclusion. Additionally, any violations cited in the ROE that contain examples of specific transactions should have corresponding evidence in the examination file. Furthermore, any violation that results in the imposition of a civil money penalty should be supported with all applicable documentation.

Filing Workpapers

The EIC is responsible for ensuring that all appropriate documents are uploaded according to national standardized workpapers filing schema for the areas reviewed during the examination and ensuring the documents are complete and legible. The EIC can assign this responsibility to team members, as appropriate (e.g., the examiner reviewing an area could be assigned responsibility to upload the appropriate documents in that specific review).

The EIC (or designee) should:

- Review workpapers to ensure that they are accurate, legible, and complete.
- Determine that appropriate bank documentation, where applicable, has been attached and retained in the workpapers.
- Confirm that mandatory workpapers are appropriately organized and uploaded to electronic storage.
- Close the examination in the electronic storage database after the EIC has been informed that the RE review process is complete.

General Procedures

1. The EIC, or designee, should upload workpapers into the electronic storage database:
 - a. Check to make sure that you are not overwriting a more current version of the document;
 - b. Do a quality control check to ensure that the documents are legible and that all pages have been included (front and back).
2. Workpapers are generally not changed after the conclusion of an examination. However, if revising a workpaper in any manner after the completion of an examination is necessary, such revisions should be clearly documented on the workpaper.
3. Some checklists in this manual have been incorporated into the national standardized workpapers and are required to be completed in conjunction with the review of an area. In situations where the national standardized workpapers have not incorporated the checklists within the manual, or if a checklist is obtained elsewhere, the completion of these checklists is optional. The examiner has the option of completing relevant portions of the checklists or using them merely as a guide. If used, they should be maintained in the workpapers, as they help document the procedures performed during the examination.
4. Documents added into the electronic storage database are only those not required to be uploaded to FOCUS.

Retention

Retain workpapers for a period of at least two years or until the next examination, whichever is later. Retain workpapers for longer periods in the following instances, until corrective action or other resolution is complete:

- Truth in Lending violations requiring reimbursement;
- Fair lending violations resulting in referrals to the Department of Justice or Department of Housing and Urban Development;

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Documenting the Examination

- Any type of enforcement action that has been placed on or remains outstanding against the financial institution;
- A criminal referral has been made regarding the institution or any of its directors, trustees, management, or employees; and
- Other reasons, at the discretion of the Regional Director or Field Supervisor, for which the retention of documents and workpapers is required.

Consult the FDIC Records Schedule directives for further information.

FOCUS

FOCUS is the system of record for the compliance and CRA examination program and is extensively used by compliance field supervisors, examiners, review examiners, and Washington Office staff. FOCUS is used to support reporting requirements, provides substantial task support for staff, and is a management support and decision tool. Among other functions, FOCUS:

- Generates examination schedules that are used to support workload projections by incorporating quarter planning and benchmark hours;
 - Provides information to facilitate the pre-exam process;
 - Captures examination summary information;
 - Attaches examination documents for divisional sharing and historical reference;
- Tracks information through the consultation process; and
 - Facilitates the reporting of examination data for legislatively mandated reporting.

Information in FOCUS should be complete, accurate, and timely.

- Examiners and reviewers should ensure that the most current versions of documents are attached and labeled correctly. For example, and when applicable:
 - Transmittal Letter;
 - Cover Page;
 - Examiner's Comments and Conclusions;
 - CRA Performance Evaluation;
 - Supervisory Comments;
 - Level 1, Level 2, and Level 3 Violations Pages;
 - Final examination scoping documents for compliance and fair lending (i.e., ARCH and FLSC).
- Examiners and reviewers should ensure that all required information fields are completed at the conclusion of the examination;
- Supervisors should plan examinations and visitations in advance and indicate the quarter for which the activity is planned; and
- EIC, or designees, should update required dates, such as the Examination Date, as soon as possible.

Investigations and Visitations

Investigations

Consumer Complaints

Consumer complaint investigations are generally handled by Consumer Response Unit staff. Examiners will be requested to assist if deemed necessary. As with all sensitive matters, close cooperation between staff in the field office, region, and Washington is essential to a prompt and appropriate resolution of a complaint.

Enforcement Actions

To obtain information or evidence necessary to support an enforcement action, a formal investigation may be conducted pursuant to Section 10(c) of the FDI Act. Through such an investigation, administrative subpoenas may be issued for information or testimony. Orders of Investigation must be developed in cooperation with the Legal Division, which shares delegated authority for this process.

Visitations

Introduction

Visitations are usually targeted events aimed at specific operational or regulatory areas, but can also focus on compliance management systems that require more than the normal level of supervisory attention. Visitations are conducted by the FDIC to review the compliance posture of an institution that is newly chartered, involved in a recent or proposed merger, or recently converted to state nonmember status; to review an institution's progress on corrective actions since its last examination; to ascertain an institution's compliance with an enforcement action; and to investigate problems brought to the FDIC's attention.

Conducting a Visitation

Visitations can be scheduled at any time at the discretion of Regional Office management.

Visitations may be expanded to a regular consumer compliance/CRA examination with the Examiner-in-Charge's recommendation and Regional Office management's concurrence. This recommendation should be considered in situations where:

- Significant deficiencies are noted in a financial institution's compliance management system or CRA policies or procedures;
- Significant noncompliance is noted particularly regarding previously criticized areas; or
- Significant noncompliance with an informal or formal enforcement action is noted.

Regional Office management may change an institution's compliance rating if interim events, visitations, investigations, or similar situations result in finding that the assigned rating is no longer suitable and that a different level of supervisory concern is warranted. Ratings may be moved up or down. Decisions to change a rating must be based on a review that considers whether the institution's compliance with consumer protection and civil rights statutes and regulations display weaknesses requiring special supervisory attention and which are cause for more than a normal degree of supervisory concern. Any change must be carefully documented, and the bank should be notified of the change and the basis for it.

General Visitation Procedures

1. Perform appropriate review and analysis procedures prior to the commencement of the visitation. Review should include documents in electronic storage facilities that have been received from the bank since the previous examination activity, such as progress reports. Tailor the visitation to address the compliance deficiencies or concerns identified, or the matters under review. An Assessment of Risk and Consumer Harm (ARCH) is not required.
2. Notify the institution of the date of the visitation.
3. Conduct the visitation. An initial meeting with management should define the scope of the visitation.
4. If applicable, prepare a list of violations. Examiners will use the violations pages from the Report of Examination and include these pages with the Report of Visitation submitted to the Regional Office.
5. Consult as appropriate or required.
6. Conduct a closing meeting with management and, if the situation warrants, a meeting with the Board. Leave a copy of the violations list with management.

Preparing the Report of Visitation

1. Prepare Report of Visitation (Compliance) using the Report of Visitation Cover and Report of Visitation template. Additional pages may include, as applicable:
 - Matters Requiring Board Attention
 - Compliance with Enforcement Actions
 - The financial institution must receive, either in the Report of Visitation, Report of Examination, or both, a discussion of compliance with the provisions of an outstanding enforcement action.
 - Level 3/High Severity Violations
 - Level 2/Medium Severity Violations
 - Level 1/Low Severity Violations
 - The Level 1 Violations page is left with management at the conclusion of the exit meeting but is not included or discussed in the Report of Visitation.
 - Other Matters
 - Compliance - Supervisory Section

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Investigations and Visitations

- Include recommendation to the Regional Office on whether to remove or retain reporting requirements contained within outstanding formal or informal enforcement actions (if not included on the report).
- 2. Forward the Report of Visitation to the review staff designated by Regional Office management.
- 3. Update all appropriate FOCUS data fields, and ensure that all FOCUS submission requirements are met.
- 4. Regional review staff will review the Report of Visitation. At the discretion of the Regional Office management, visitation findings will be forwarded to the financial institution by either of the following:
 - Transmittal letter only; or
 - Transmittal letter and Report of Visitation.

Documenting Visitation Findings

Standardized workpapers must be completed for applicable areas reviewed during each visitation

Enforcement Actions

Introduction

The FDIC may initiate informal or formal action when an insured depository institution is found to be in an unsatisfactory condition. Informal actions represent the final supervisory step before formal enforcement proceedings are initiated. The FDIC has broad enforcement powers under the Federal Deposit Insurance (FDI) Act to issue formal enforcement actions.

This section provides a brief summary of the types of informal and formal actions that the FDIC has the authority to issue. When considering an enforcement action, the consultation policy should be followed.

Types of Enforcement Actions

Informal actions are voluntary commitments made by the Board of Directors/trustees of a financial institution. They are designed to correct identified deficiencies and ensure compliance with federal and state banking laws and regulations. Informal actions are neither publicly disclosed nor legally enforceable.

The most common informal enforcement actions used by the FDIC are the following:

- Board Resolution: Informal commitments developed and adopted by a financial institution's Board of Directors/trustees, often at the request of an FDIC Regional Director, directing the institution's personnel to take corrective action regarding specific noted deficiencies. The FDIC is not a party to the resolution, but approves and accepts the resolution as a means to initiate corrective action.
- Memorandum of Understanding: Informal agreement between an institution and the FDIC that is drafted by the Regional Office staff to address and correct identified weaknesses in an institution's compliance or CRA posture. A Memorandum of Understanding is generally used in place of a Board Resolution when the FDIC has reason to believe that a Board Resolution would not adequately address the deficiencies noted during the examination.

Formal enforcement actions are those taken pursuant to the powers granted to the FDIC's Board of Directors under Section 8 of the FDI Act. Each situation and circumstance determines the most appropriate action(s) to be taken. It is of note that formal enforcement actions are publicly available records.

Formal actions used in connection with compliance matters may include the following:

- Termination of Insurance: Section 8(a).

- Cease-and-Desist Order: Section 8(b): Issued to halt violations of laws or regulations as well as to require affirmative action to correct any condition resulting from such violations. By ordering an institution or an institution affiliated party (IAP), including an individual officer or director of an institution, to cease and desist from practices and/or take affirmative actions, the FDIC may prevent the problems facing the institution from reaching such serious proportions as to require more severe enforcement actions. If an institution voluntarily agrees to the entry of a Cease-and-Desist Order, it is entitled a "Consent Order."
- Order for Restitution: Section 8(b)(6): Issued to require an institution or IAP to disgorge any unjust enrichment to consumers and/or take other affirmative action to redress consumer harm.
- Temporary Cease-and-Desist Order: Section 8(c): Issued in the most severe situations to halt particularly egregious practices pending a formal hearing on permanent Cease-and-Desist Orders issued pursuant to Section 8(b).
- Removal and Prohibition Order: Section 8(e)(1): The FDIC has the authority to order the removal of an IAP, i.e., director, officer, employee, controlling stockholder other than a bank holding company, or agent for an insured depository institution. The prohibition may be for specific activities or may be industry-wide.
- Temporary Suspension Order: Section 8(e)(3): The FDIC may order the temporary suspension of an IAP pending a hearing on an Order of Removal if the individual's continued participation poses an immediate threat to the institution or to the interests of the institution's depositors.
- Suspension Order: Section 8(g): Issued to IAPs who are charged with felonies involving dishonesty or a breach of trust pending the disposition of the criminal charges.
- Civil Money Penalties: Section 8(i)(2): CMPs are assessed to sanction an institution, IAP, or an individual for a violation, breach of a fiduciary duty, and/or practice. They are also assessed to deter future occurrences. In the case of a CMP assessed to an institution or IAP, twelve factors that measure the breadth and severity of the problem are considered, including consumer harm, cooperation, and supervisory history. Additionally, the asset size of the institution is taken into account. In the case of a CMP assessed to an individual, a similar analysis is performed. The FDIC utilizes separate matrices for institutions and individuals. In both cases, the CMP matrices are guidance intended to promote consistency in the assessment of CMPs. The matrices aid the examiner in determining the appropriateness and/or level of CMPs. Each CMP matrix is included at the end of this section.

Annual publication of adjustments to civil money penalties will occur by January 15 of each calendar year. The FDIC will publish notice in the Federal Register of the maximum penalties that may be assessed after January 15 of that year.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Enforcement Actions

When recommending or assessing a CMP, the CMP amount recommended or assessed will reflect the most recent inflation-adjusted CMP amounts.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Truth In Lending Restitution Verification

Truth in Lending (TIL) Restitution Verification

Examination Objectives

1. Determine during PEP whether the prior Report of Examination included a request for restitution pursuant to Section 108(e) of the Truth in Lending Act.
2. Become familiar with the nature of the violations and the extent of the file search necessary to identify affected loans.
3. Review the correspondence file to determine if the financial institution has reported completion of the restitutions or if there are any unresolved issues pending, such as a formal request for relief from restitution.
4. Perform the following examination procedures during PEP in those instances where the number of loans subject to restitution is relatively small and requesting the institution to provide relevant documentation would not be burdensome.

The objectives are to:

- Determine that a complete file search was conducted.
- Verify that restitution calculations and worksheets from the financial institution are accurate and conform with violations cited.
- Verify that restitutions were made to all entitled customers and dispersed correctly.

Verification Procedures

The following procedures are to be used when reviewing an institution's compliance with restitution requested as a result of Truth in Lending (TIL) / Regulation Z violations subject to restitution cited at the previous compliance examination.

1. Identify the person(s) responsible for making the calculations and providing restitution.
2. Discuss the method used to determine which loans were subject to restitution.
3. Determine that an appropriate file search and any subsequent restitutions were completed in accordance with direction received from the FDIC through the prior Compliance Report of Examination and transmittal letter sent to the financial institution.

4. Consider the following items when determining the scope of the review:
 - Number of affected loans identified;
 - Effectiveness of overall compliance program;
 - Management's willingness to correct prior violations;
 - Nature of violations; and
 - Time constraints.
5. Review restitution documentation for accuracy.
6. Review restitution documentation for the following items:
 - Restitution calculations;
 - Canceled restitution checks (When reviewing canceled checks be sure to look at the endorsement(s) on the back of the checks to ensure the checks have been endorsed by the appropriate individual(s)); and
 - Verify, through a sample of checks, the validity of the endorsement signature.
7. Compare the list of restitution exceptions, maintained in the prior Compliance Examination workpapers, with the file search and actual restitutions made by the financial institution.
8. If either the file search or restitutions were not handled correctly, immediately inform the Field Supervisor and the Regional Office.
9. The examiner must complete appropriate workpapers, in accordance with instructions, and attach them to the appropriate documentation of the financial institution's restitution calculations.

Appeals

Introduction

Section 309(a) of the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994 (Public Law 103-325, 108 Stat.2160) (Riegle Act) required the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) to establish an independent intra-agency appellate process to review material supervisory determinations made at insured depository institutions that it supervises. The Guidelines for Appeals of Material Supervisory Determinations (“guidelines”) describe the types of determinations that are eligible for review and the process by which appeals will be considered and decided. The procedures set forth in these guidelines establish an appeals process for the review of material supervisory determinations by the Supervision Appeals Review Committee (“SARC”).

The following individuals comprise the three (3) voting members of the SARC: (1) One inside FDIC Board member, either the Chairperson, the Vice Chairperson, or the FDIC Director (Appointive), as designated by the FDIC Chairperson (this person would serve as the Chairperson of the SARC); and (2) one deputy or special assistant to each of the inside FDIC Board members who are not designated as the SARC Chairperson. The General Counsel is a non-voting member of the SARC. The FDIC Chairperson may designate alternate member(s) to the SARC if there are vacancies so long as the alternate member was not involved in making or affirming the material supervisory determination under review. A member of the SARC may designate and authorize the most senior member of his or her staff within the substantive area of responsibility related to cases before the SARC to act on his or her behalf.

Institutions Eligible To Appeal

The guidelines apply to the insured depository institutions that the FDIC supervises (i.e., insured State nonmember banks, insured branches of foreign banks, and state savings associations) and to other insured depository institutions with respect to which the FDIC makes material supervisory determinations.

Determinations Subject To Appeal

An institution may appeal any material supervisory determination pursuant to the procedures set forth in these guidelines. Material supervisory determinations include:

- a. CAMELS ratings under the Uniform Financial Institutions Rating System;
- b. IT ratings under the Uniform Interagency Rating System for Data Processing Operations;
- c. Trust ratings under the Uniform Interagency Trust Rating System;
- d. CRA ratings under the Revised Uniform Interagency Community Reinvestment Act Assessment Rating System;
- e. Consumer compliance ratings under the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System;
- f. Registered transfer agent examination ratings;
- g. Government securities dealer examination ratings;
- h. Municipal securities dealer examination ratings;
- i. Determinations relating to the adequacy of loan loss reserve provisions;
- j. Classifications of loans and other assets in dispute the amount of which, individually or in the aggregate, exceed 10 percent of an institution’s total capital;
- k. Determinations relating to violations of a statute or regulation that may affect the capital, earnings, or operating flexibility of an institution, or otherwise affect the nature and level of supervisory oversight accorded an institution;
- l. Truth in Lending (Regulation Z) restitution;
- m. Filings made pursuant to 12 CFR 303.11(f), for which a Request for Reconsideration has been granted, other than denials of a change in bank control, change in senior executive officer or board of directors, or denial of an application pursuant to section 19 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (“FDI Act”), 12 U.S.C. §1829 (which are contained in 12 CFR §308, subparts D, L, and M, respectively), if the filing was originally denied by the DCP Director, Deputy Director or Associate Director; and
- n. Decisions to initiate informal enforcement actions (such as memoranda of understanding);
- o. Determinations regarding the institution’s level of compliance with formal enforcement action; however, if the FDIC determines that the lack of compliance with an existing formal enforcement action requires additional enforcement action, the proposed new enforcement action is not appealable;
- p. Matters requiring board attention; and
- q. Any other supervisory determination (unless otherwise not eligible for appeal) that may affect the capital, earnings, operating flexibility, or capital category for prompt corrective action purposes of an institution, or otherwise affect the nature and level of supervisory oversight accorded an institution.

Material supervisory determinations do not include:

- a. Decisions to appoint a conservator or receiver for an insured depository institution;
- b. Decisions to take prompt corrective action pursuant to section 38 of the FDI Act, 12 U.S.C. §1831o;

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Appeals

- c. Determinations for which other appeals procedures exist (such as determinations of deposit insurance assessment risk classifications and payment calculations); and
- d. Formal enforcement-related actions and decisions, including determinations and the underlying facts and circumstances that form the basis of a recommended or pending formal enforcement action.

A formal enforcement-related action or decision commences, and becomes unappealable, when the FDIC initiates a formal investigation under 12 U.S.C. §1820(c) or provides written notice to the institution of a recommended or proposed formal enforcement action under applicable statutes or published enforcement-related policies of the FDIC, including written notice of a referral to the Attorney General pursuant to the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (“ECOA”) or a notice to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (“HUD”) for violations of the ECOA or the Fair Housing Act (“FHA”). For the purposes of these Guidelines, remarks in a Report of Examination do not constitute written notice of a recommended or proposed enforcement action. A formal enforcement-related action or decision does not affect the appeal of any material supervisory determination that is pending under these Guidelines.

Additional SARC Rights

- a. In the case of any written notice from the FDIC to the institution of a recommended or proposed formal enforcement action, including a draft consent order, is not pursued within 120 days of the written notice, SARC appeal rights will be made available pursuant to these guidelines. The FDIC may extend this 120-day period, with the approval of the SARC Chairperson, if the FDIC notifies the institution that the relevant Division Director is seeking formal authority to take an enforcement action.
- b. In the case of a referral to the Attorney General for violations of the ECOA, if the Attorney General returns the matter to the FDIC and the FDIC does not initiate an enforcement action within 120 days of the date the referral is returned, SARC appeal rights will be made available pursuant to these guidelines.
- c. In the case of providing the notice to HUD for violations of the ECOA or the FHA, if the FDIC does not initiate an enforcement action within 120 days of the date the notice is provided, SARC appeal rights will be made available under these guidelines.
- d. Written notification of SARC rights will be provided to the institution within 10 days of a determination that such rights have been made available.
- e. The FDIC and an institution may mutually agree to extend the timeframes in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) if the parties deem it appropriate in order to reach a mutually agreeable solution.

Good Faith Resolution

An institution should make a good faith effort to resolve any dispute concerning a material supervisory determination with the on-site examiner and/or the appropriate Regional Office. The on-site examiner and the Regional Office will promptly respond to any concerns raised by an institution regarding a material supervisory determination. Informal resolution of disputes with the on-site examiner and/or the appropriate Regional Office is encouraged, but seeking such a resolution is not a condition to filing a request for review with the Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection or an appeal to the SARC under these guidelines.

Filing a Request for Review With the FDIC Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection

An institution may file a request for review of a material supervisory determination with the Director, Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection, 550 17th Street, NW, Room F-4076, Washington, DC 20429, within 60 calendar days following the institution’s receipt of a report of examination containing a material supervisory determination or other written communication of a material supervisory determination. A request for review must be in writing and must include:

- a. A detailed description of the issues in dispute, the surrounding circumstances, the institution’s position regarding the dispute and any arguments to support that position (including citation of any relevant statute, regulation, policy statement or other authority), how resolution of the dispute would materially affect the institution, and whether a good faith effort was made to resolve the dispute with the on-site examiner and the Regional Office; and
- b. A statement that the institution’s board of directors has considered the merits of the request and has authorized that it be filed.

The Division Director will review the appeal for consistency with the policies, practices, and mission of the FDIC and the overall reasonableness of, and the support offered for, the positions advanced. The Division Director will issue a written determination on the request for review, setting forth the grounds for that determination, within 45 days of receipt of the request. No appeal to the SARC will be allowed unless an institution has first filed a timely request for review with the appropriate Division Director.

Appeal to the SARC

An institution that does not agree with the written determination rendered by the Division Director must appeal that determination to the SARC within 30 calendar days from the date of that determination. The Director's determination will inform the institution of the 30-day time period for filing with the SARC and will provide the mailing address for any appeal the institution may wish to file. Failure to file within the 30-day time limit may result in denial of the appeal by the SARC. If the Division Director recommends that an institution receive relief that the Director lacks delegated authority to grant, the Director may, with the approval of the Chairperson of the SARC, transfer the matter directly to the SARC without issuing a determination. Notice of such a transfer will be provided to the institution. The Division Director may also request guidance from the SARC Chairperson as to procedural or other questions relating to any request for review.

Filing with the SARC

An appeal to the SARC will be considered filed if the written appeal is received by the FDIC within 30 calendar days from the date of the Division Director's written determination or if the written appeal is placed in the U.S. mail within that 30-day period. If the 30th day after the date of the Division Director's written determination is a Saturday, Sunday, or Federal holiday, filing may be made on the next business day. The appeal should be sent to the address indicated on the Division Director's determination being appealed.

Contents of Appeal

The appeal should be labeled to indicate that it is an appeal to the SARC and should contain the name, address, and telephone number of the institution and any representative, as well as a copy of the Division Director's determination being appealed. If oral presentation is sought, that request should be included in the appeal. Only matters previously reviewed at the division level, resulting in a written determination or direct referral to the SARC, may be appealed to the SARC. Evidence not presented for review to the Division Director may be submitted to the SARC only if authorized by the SARC Chairperson. The institution should set forth all of the reasons, legal and factual, why it disagrees with the Division Director's determination. Nothing in the SARC administrative process shall create any discovery or other such rights.

Burden of Proof

The burden of proof as to all matters at issue in the appeal, including timeliness of the appeal if timeliness is at issue, rests with the institution.

Oral Presentation

The SARC may, in its discretion, whether or not a request is made, determine to allow an oral presentation. The SARC generally grants a request for oral presentation if it determines that oral presentation is likely to be helpful or would otherwise be in the public interest. Notice of the SARC's determination to grant or deny a request for oral presentation will be provided to the institution. If oral presentation is held, the institution will be allowed to present its positions on the issues raised in the appeal and to respond to any questions from the SARC. The SARC may also require that FDIC staff participate as the SARC deems appropriate.

Dismissal and Withdrawal

An appeal may be dismissed by the SARC if it is not timely filed, if the basis for the appeal is not discernable from the appeal, or if the institution moves to withdraw the appeal. An appeal may be rejected if the right to appeal has been cut off.

Scope of Review and Decision

The SARC will review the appeal for consistency with the policies, practices and mission of the FDIC and the overall reasonableness of and the support offered for the positions advanced. The SARC will notify the institution, in writing, of its decision concerning the disputed material supervisory determination(s) within 45 days from the date the SARC meets to consider the appeal, which meeting will be held within 90 days from the date of the filing of the appeal. SARC review will be limited to the facts and circumstances as they existed prior to, or at the time the material supervisory determination was made, even if later discovered, and no consideration will be given to any facts or circumstances that occur or corrective action taken after the determination was made. The SARC may reconsider its decision only on a showing of an intervening change in the controlling law or the availability of material evidence not reasonably available when the decision was issued.

Publication of Decisions

SARC decisions will be published as soon as practicable, and the published decisions will be redacted to avoid disclosure of exempt information. In cases in which redaction is deemed to be insufficient to prevent improper disclosure, published decisions may be presented in summary form. Published SARC decisions may be cited as precedent in appeals to the SARC. Annual reports on Division Directors' decisions with respect to institutions' requests for review of material supervisory determinations also will be published.

SARC Guidelines Generally

Appeals to the SARC will be governed by these guidelines. The SARC will retain the discretion to waive any provision of the guidelines for good cause. The SARC may adopt supplemental rules governing its operations; order that material be kept confidential; and consolidate similar appeals.

Limitation on Agency Ombudsman

The subject matter of a material supervisory determination for which either an appeal to the SARC has been filed, or a final SARC decision issued is not eligible for consideration by the Ombudsman.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations — Appeals

Coordination With State Regulatory Authorities

In the event that a material supervisory determination subject to a request for review is the joint product of the FDIC and a State regulatory authority, the Director, Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection, will promptly notify the appropriate State regulatory authority of the request, provide the regulatory authority with a copy of the institution's request for review and any other related materials, and solicit the regulatory authority's views regarding the merits of the request before making a determination. In the event that an appeal is subsequently filed with the SARC, the SARC will notify the institution and the State regulatory authority of its decision. Once the SARC has issued its determination, any other issues that may remain between the institution and the State authority will be left to those parties to resolve.

Effect on Supervisory or Enforcement Actions

The use of the procedures set forth in these guidelines by any institution will not affect, delay, or impede any formal or informal supervisory or enforcement action in progress or affect the FDIC's authority to take any supervisory or enforcement action against that institution.

Effect on Applications or Requests for Approval

Any application or request for approval made to the FDIC by an institution that has appealed a material supervisory determination that relates to, or could affect the approval of, the application or request will not be considered until a final decision concerning the appeal is made unless otherwise requested by the institution.

Prohibition on Examiner Retaliation

The FDIC has an experienced examination workforce and is proud of its professionalism and dedication. FDIC policy prohibits any retaliation, abuse, or retribution by an agency examiner or any FDIC personnel against an institution. Such behavior against an institution that appeals a material supervisory determination constitutes unprofessional conduct and will subject the examiner or other personnel to appropriate disciplinary or remedial action. Institutions that believe they have been retaliated against are encouraged to contact the Regional Director for the appropriate FDIC region. Any institution that believes or has any evidence that it has been subject to retaliation may file a complaint with the Director, Office of the Ombudsman, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, 550 17th Street NW, Washington, DC 20429, explaining the circumstances and the basis for such belief or evidence and requesting that the complaint be investigated and appropriate disciplinary or remedial action taken. The Office of the Ombudsman will work with the appropriate Division Director to resolve the allegation of retaliation.

Examination and Visitation Frequency

The FDIC conducts examinations of institutions it supervises at intervals established by FDIC policy. Generally, newly chartered insured institutions or institutions that changed charters and are newly supervised by the FDIC receive a visitation within the first 12 months of operation/conversion and a full-scope examination within the first 24 months. To foster open dialogue and early communication during the initial stage of operations as a FDIC-supervised institution, the institution's supervisory region will arrange an introductory meeting with management prior to the initial visitation. After the first examination, the institution will follow the Standard Examination Frequency Schedule. The FDIC will conduct examinations at other institutions at intervals outlined in the Standard Examination Frequency Schedule that sets examination intervals by an institution's total asset size and the ratings assigned during the most recent Compliance examination and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) evaluation.

When scheduling an examination, the objectives are to:

- Target examinations and supervisory efforts where risk of consumer harm is greatest;
- Allocate appropriate examination resources; and
- Conduct concurrent examinations, when requested by the bank, if practical.

Examination and Visitation Frequency

This Manual presents the Initial Examination Frequency Schedule below in Table 1, the Standard Examination Frequency Schedule for institutions with total assets of $350 million or less in Table 2, and the Standard Examination Frequency Schedule for institutions with total assets of greater than $350 million in Table 3. Examinations become subject to the greater than $350 million threshold when an institution's reported total assets are in excess of $350 million as of December 31 for the prior two calendar years. The examination interval is measured as the period between the date one examination report was transmitted to the institution and the start date of the subsequent examination at the same institution.

Regional and/or field management may schedule visitations at its discretion. Typically, Consumer Compliance and CRA ratings will not change at a visitation, but if the visitation does result in a rating change, the Standard Examination Frequency Schedule noted below will still apply. Regional and/or field management may also schedule examinations earlier than the standard schedule when warranted dependent upon supervisory concern or other factors. For example, for institutions rated "Needs to Improve" or "Substantial Noncompliance" for CRA, field management, at its discretion, may schedule a targeted CRA examination or a concurrent Compliance and CRA examination based upon the risk factors involved.

Additionally, under certain circumstances, field management will need to be proactive in manually adding a supervisory activity to avoid potentially lengthy gaps in examinations. This could occur, for example, when a Compliance and CRA Examination for an institution with assets of $350 million or less results in a "3" Consumer Compliance rating and a "Satisfactory" or "Outstanding" CRA rating and field management schedules a Compliance-only examination at the 12-month point. If the Compliance-only examination results in an upgrade to the rating, the institution would not, per the following table, be subject to another examination until the next Compliance and CRA activity. Consequently, field management should manually schedule another Compliance-only activity to occur between the 30-36-month timeframe.

Under the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, a financial institution with aggregate assets of $250 million or less may be subject to more or less frequent CRA examinations because of a determination of "reasonable cause." Examples of "reasonable cause" may include, among other things, identification of significant fair lending violations during a Compliance-only examination that would affect overall CRA performance, receipt of credible complaints indicating deterioration in the bank's CRA performance, or requests from affiliated institutions to be examined concurrently.

Concurrent Examinations

The FDIC conducts concurrent Compliance/CRA, risk management, and specialty examinations to accommodate the preferences of the bank, unless doing so would be impractical or inefficient. Examinations of banks subject to Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) supervision will be coordinated with the requirements of Section 1025(e) of the Dodd-Frank Act.

Consumer Compliance Ratings

Introduction

The FDIC assigns consumer compliance ratings to institutions it supervises pursuant to the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System (CC Rating System) approved by the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) in 2016 and effective on March 31, 2017. The CC Rating System is a supervisory policy for evaluating financial institutions' adherence to consumer protection requirements. It is composed of guidance and definitions which are contained in this section of the manual.

The primary purpose of the CC Rating System is to ensure that regulated financial institutions are evaluated in a comprehensive and consistent manner and that supervisory resources are appropriately focused on areas exhibiting risk of consumer harm and on institutions that warrant elevated supervisory attention. The CC Rating System serves as a useful tool for summarizing the compliance position of individual institutions.

Under the CC Rating System, each financial institution is assigned a consumer compliance rating. The CC Rating System is based upon a scale of 1 through 5 in increasing order of supervisory concern.

FFIEC Guidance on the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System¹

FFIEC member agencies (Agencies) promote compliance with federal consumer protection laws and regulations through supervisory and outreach programs.² The Agencies engage in consumer compliance supervision to assess whether a financial institution is meeting its responsibility to comply with these requirements.

The CC Rating System provides a general framework for assessing risks during the supervisory process using certain compliance factors and assigning an overall consumer compliance rating to each federally regulated financial institution.³ The primary purpose of the CC Rating System is to ensure that regulated financial institutions are evaluated in a comprehensive and consistent manner, and that supervisory resources are appropriately focused on areas exhibiting risk of consumer harm and on institutions that warrant elevated supervisory attention.

The CC Rating System is composed of guidance and definitions. The guidance provides examiners with direction on how to use the definitions when assigning a consumer compliance rating to an institution. The definitions consist of qualitative descriptions for each rating category and include compliance management system (CMS) elements reflecting risk control processes designed to manage consumer compliance risk and considerations regarding violations of laws, consumer harm, and the size, complexity, and risk profile of an institution. The consumer compliance rating reflects the effectiveness of an institution's CMS to ensure compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations and reduce the risk of harm to consumers.

Principles of the Interagency CC Rating System

The Agencies developed the following principles to serve as a foundation for the CC Rating System.

Risk-based. Recognize and communicate clearly that CMS vary based on the size, complexity, and risk profile of supervised institutions.

Transparent. Provide clear distinctions between rating categories to support consistent application by the Agencies across supervised institutions. Reflect the scope of the review that formed the basis of the overall rating.

Actionable. Identify areas of strength and direct appropriate attention to specific areas of weakness, reflecting a risk-based supervisory approach. Convey examiners' assessment of the effectiveness of an institution's CMS, including its ability to prevent consumer harm and ensure compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations.

Incent Compliance. Incent the institution to establish an effective consumer compliance system across the institution and to identify and address issues promptly, including self-identification and correction of consumer compliance weaknesses. Reflect the potential impact of any consumer harm identified in examination findings.

Five-Level Rating Scale

The CC Rating System is based upon a numeric scale of 1 through 5 in increasing order of supervisory concern. Thus, 1 represents the highest rating and consequently the lowest degree of supervisory concern, while 5 represents the lowest rating and the most critically deficient level of performance, ¹ Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System, 81 Fed. Reg. 79473, (Nov. 14, 2016).

² The FFIEC members are the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the National Credit Union Administration, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the State Liaison Committee.

³ The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3302(3)) defines financial institution. Additionally, as a member of the FFIEC, the CFPB will also use the CC Rating System to assign a consumer compliance rating, as appropriate for nonbanks, for which it has jurisdiction regarding the enforcement of Federal consumer financial laws as defined under the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank Act) (12 U.S.C. 5481 et seq.).

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Consumer Compliance Rating System and therefore, the highest degree of supervisory concern.⁴ Ratings of 1 or 2 represent satisfactory or better performance. Ratings of 3, 4, or 5 indicate performance that is less than satisfactory. Consistent with the previously described Principles, the rating system incents a financial institution to establish an effective CMS across the institution, to self-identify risks, and to take the necessary actions to reduce the risk of non-compliance and consumer harm.

- The highest rating of 1 is assigned to a financial institution that maintains a strong CMS and takes action to prevent violations of law and consumer harm.
- A rating of 2 is assigned to a financial institution that maintains a CMS that is satisfactory at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution's products and services and at substantially limiting violations of law and consumer harm.
- A rating of 3 reflects a CMS deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution's products and services and at limiting violations of law and consumer harm.
- A rating of 4 reflects a CMS seriously deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution's products and services and/or at preventing violations of law and consumer harm. "Seriously deficient" indicates fundamental and persistent weaknesses in crucial CMS elements and severe inadequacies in core compliance areas necessary to operate within the scope of statutory and regulatory consumer protection requirements and to prevent consumer harm.
- A rating of 5 reflects a CMS critically deficient at managing consumer compliance risk in the institution's products and services and/or at preventing violations of law and consumer harm. "Critically deficient" indicates an absence of crucial CMS elements and a demonstrated lack of willingness or capability to take the appropriate steps necessary to operate within the scope of statutory and regulatory consumer protection requirements and to prevent consumer harm.

CC Rating System Categories and Assessment Factors

CC Rating System – Categories

The CC Rating System is organized under three broad categories:

1. Board and Management Oversight,
2. Compliance Program, and

3. Violations of Law and Consumer Harm.

The Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions below list the assessment factors considered within each category, along with narrative descriptions of performance.

The first two categories, Board and Management Oversight and Compliance Program, are used to assess a financial institution's CMS. As such, examiners should evaluate the assessment factors within these two categories commensurate with the institution's size, complexity, and risk profile. All institutions, regardless of size, should maintain an effective CMS. The sophistication and formality of the CMS typically will increase commensurate with the size, complexity, and risk profile of the entity.

Additionally, compliance expectations contained within the narrative descriptions of these two categories extend to third-party relationships into which the financial institution has entered. There can be certain benefits to financial institutions engaging in relationships with third parties, including gaining operational efficiencies or an ability to deliver additional products and services, but such arrangements also may expose financial institutions to risks if not managed effectively. The prudential agencies, the CFPB, and some states have issued guidance describing expectations regarding oversight of third-party relationships.⁵ While an institution's management may make the business decision to outsource some or all of the operational aspects of a product or service, the institution cannot outsource the responsibility for complying with laws and regulations or managing the risks associated with third-party relationships.

As noted in the Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions, examiners should evaluate activities conducted through third-party relationships as though the activities were performed by the institution itself. Examiners should review a financial institution's management of third-party relationships and servicers as part of its overall compliance program.

The third category, Violations of Law and Consumer Harm, includes assessment factors that evaluate the dimensions of any identified violation or consumer harm. Examiners should weigh each of these four factors – root cause, severity, duration, and pervasiveness – in evaluating relevant violations of law and any resulting consumer harm.

Board and Management Oversight – Assessment Factors

Under Board and Management Oversight, the examiner should assess the financial institution's board of directors and management, as appropriate for their respective roles and responsibilities, based on the following assessment factors:

⁴The Agencies do not consider an institution's record of performance under the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) in conjunction with assessing an institution under the CC Rating System since institutions are evaluated separately under the CRA.

⁵For FDIC guidance describing potential risks arising from third-party relationships and outlining risk management principles that may be tailored to suit the complexity and risk potential of a financial institution's significant third-party relationships, see FIL-44-2008.

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Consumer Compliance Rating System

- oversight of and commitment to the institution's CMS;
- effectiveness of the institution's change management processes, including responding timely and satisfactorily to any variety of change, internal or external, to the institution;
- comprehension, identification, and management of risks arising from the institution's products, services, or activities; and
- self-identification of consumer compliance issues and corrective action undertaken as such issues are identified.

Compliance Program – Assessment Factors

Under Compliance Program, the examiner should assess other elements of an effective CMS, based on the following assessment factors:

- whether the institution's policies and procedures are appropriate to the risk in the products, services, and activities of the institution;
- the degree to which compliance training is current and tailored to risk and staff responsibilities;
- the sufficiency of the monitoring and, if applicable, audit to encompass compliance risks throughout the institution; and
- the responsiveness and effectiveness of the consumer complaint resolution process.

Violations of Law and Consumer Harm – Assessment Factors

Under Violations of Law and Consumer Harm, the examiner should analyze the following assessment factors:

- the root cause, or causes, of any violations of law identified during the examination;
- the severity of any consumer harm resulting from violations;
- the duration of time over which the violations occurred; and
- the pervasiveness of the violations.

As a result of a violation of law, consumer harm may occur. While many instances of consumer harm can be quantified as a dollar amount associated with financial loss, such as charging higher fees for a product than was initially disclosed, consumer harm may also result from a denial of an opportunity. For example, a consumer could be harmed when a financial institution denies the consumer credit or discourages an application in violation of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act,⁶ whether or not there is resulting financial harm.

This category of the Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions defines four factors by which examiners can assess violations of law and consumer harm.

Root Cause. The Root Cause assessment factor analyzes the degree to which weaknesses in the CMS gave rise to the violations. In many instances, the root cause of a violation is tied to a weakness in one or more elements of the CMS. Violations that result from critical deficiencies in the CMS evidence a critical absence of management oversight and are of the highest supervisory concern.

Severity. The Severity assessment factor of the Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions weighs the type of consumer harm, if any, that resulted from violations of law. More severe harm results in a higher level of supervisory concern under this factor. For example, some consumer protection violations may cause significant financial harm to a consumer, while other violations may cause negligible harm, based on the specific facts involved.

Duration. The Duration assessment factor considers the length of time over which the violations occurred. Violations that persist over an extended period of time will raise greater supervisory concerns than violations that occur for only a brief period of time. When violations are brought to the attention of an institution's management and management allows those violations to remain unaddressed, such violations are of the highest supervisory concern.

Pervasiveness. The Pervasiveness assessment factor evaluates the extent of the violation(s) and resulting consumer harm, if any. Violations that affect a large number of consumers will raise greater supervisory concern than violations that impact a limited number of consumers. If violations become so pervasive that they are considered to be widespread or present in multiple products or services, the institution's performance under this factor is of the highest supervisory concern.

Self-Identification of Violations of Law and Consumer Harm

Strong compliance programs are proactive. They promote consumer protection by preventing, self-identifying, and addressing compliance issues in a proactive manner. Accordingly, the CC Rating System provides incentives for such practices through the definitions associated with a 1 rating.

The Agencies believe that self-identification and prompt correction of violations of law reflect strengths in an institution's CMS. A robust CMS appropriate for the size, complexity and risk profile of an institution's business often will prevent violations or will facilitate early detection of

II. Consumer Compliance Examinations – Consumer Compliance Rating System

potential violations. This early detection can limit the size and scope of consumer harm. Moreover, self-identification and prompt correction of serious violations represents concrete evidence of an institution's commitment to responsibly address underlying risks. In addition, appropriate corrective action, including both correction of programmatic weaknesses and full redress for injured parties, limits consumer harm and prevents violations from recurring in the future. Thus, the CC Rating System recognizes institutions that consistently adopt these strategies as reflected in the Consumer Compliance Rating Definitions.

Evaluating Performance Using the CC Rating Definitions

The consumer compliance rating is derived through an evaluation of the financial institution's performance under each of the assessment factors described above. The consumer compliance rating reflects the effectiveness of an institution's CMS to identify and manage compliance risk in the institution's products and services and to prevent violations of law and consumer harm, as evidenced by the financial institution's performance under each of the assessment factors.

The consumer compliance rating reflects a comprehensive evaluation of the financial institution's performance under the CC Rating System by considering the categories and assessment factors in the context of the size, complexity, and risk profile of an institution. It is not based on a numeric average or any other quantitative calculation. Specific numeric ratings will not be assigned to any of the 12 assessment factors. Thus, an institution need not achieve a satisfactory assessment in all categories in order to be assigned an overall satisfactory rating. Conversely, an institution may be assigned a less than satisfactory rating even if some of its assessments were satisfactory.

The relative importance of each category or assessment factor may differ based on the size, complexity, and risk profile of an individual institution. Accordingly, one or more category or assessment factor may be more or less relevant at one financial institution as compared to another institution. While the expectations for compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations are the same across institutions of varying sizes, the methods for accomplishing an effective CMS may differ across institutions.

The evaluation of an institution's performance within the Violations of Law and Consumer Harm category of the CC Rating Definitions considers each of the four assessment factors: Root Cause, Severity, Duration, and Pervasiveness. At the levels of 4 and 5 in this category, the distinctions in the definitions are focused on the root cause assessment factor rather than Severity, Duration, and Pervasiveness. This approach is consistent with the other categories where the difference between a 4 and a 5 is driven by the institution's capacity and willingness to maintain a sound consumer compliance system.

In arriving at the final rating, the examiner must balance potentially differing conclusions about the effectiveness of the financial institution's CMS over the individual products, services, and activities of the organization. Depending on the relative materiality of a product line to the institution, an observed weakness in the management of that product line may or may not impact the conclusion about the institution's overall performance in the associated assessment factor(s). For example, serious weaknesses in the policies and procedures or audit program of the mortgage department at a mortgage lender would be of greater supervisory concern than those same gaps at an institution that makes very few mortgage loans and strictly as an accommodation. Greater weight should apply to the financial institution's management of material products with significant potential consumer compliance risk.

An institution may receive a less than satisfactory rating even when no violations were identified, based on deficiencies or weaknesses identified in the institution's CMS. For example, examiners may identify weaknesses in elements of the CMS in a new loan product. Because the presence of those weaknesses left unaddressed could result in future violations of law and consumer harm, the CMS deficiencies could impact the overall consumer compliance rating, even if no violations were identified.

Similarly, an institution may receive a 1 or 2 rating even when violations were present, if the CMS is commensurate with the risk profile and complexity of the institution. For example, when violations involve limited impact on consumers, were self-identified, and resolved promptly, the evaluation may result in a 1 or 2 rating. After evaluating the institution's performance in the two CMS categories, Board and Management Oversight and Compliance Program, and the dimensions of the violations in the third category, the examiner may conclude that the overall strength of the CMS and the nature of observed violations viewed together do not present significant supervisory concerns.

Assignment of Ratings by Supervisor(s)

The prudential regulators will continue to assign and update, as appropriate, consumer compliance ratings for institutions they supervise, including those with total assets of more than $10 billion.⁷ As a member of the FFIEC, the CFPB will also use the CC Rating System to assign a consumer compliance rating, as appropriate, for institutions with total assets of more than $10 billion, as well as for nonbanks for which it has jurisdiction regarding the enforcement of Federal consumer financial laws as defined under the Dodd-Frank Act.⁸ The prudential regulators will take into consideration any material supervisory information provided by the CFPB, as that information relates to covered supervisory activities or covered examinations.⁹ Similarly, the CFPB will take into consideration any material supervisory information provided by prudential regulators in appropriate supervisory situations.

State regulators maintain supervisory authority to conduct examinations of state-chartered depository institutions and licensed entities. As such, states may assign consumer compliance ratings to evaluate compliance with both state and federal laws and regulations. States will collaborate and consider material supervisory information from other state and federal regulatory agencies during the course of examinations.

⁸ 12 U.S.C. 5481 et seq. A financial institution with assets over $10 billion may receive a consumer compliance rating by both its primary prudential regulator and the CFPB. The rating is based on each agency's review of the institution's CMS and compliance with the federal consumer protection laws falling under each agency's jurisdiction.

⁹ The prudential regulators and the CFPB signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Supervisory Coordination dated May 16, 2012 (MOU) intended to facilitate the coordination of supervisory activities involving financial institutions with more than $10 billion in assets as required under the Dodd-Frank Act.

Expedited Funds Availability Act/Regulation CC

The Expedited Funds Availability Act (12 U.S.C. § 4001 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation CC, 12 C.F.R. § 229.10, requires a financial institution to make available for withdrawal cash deposits made in person to an employee of the bank, electronic payments, and certain check deposits not later than the business day after the banking day on which the bank received the deposit. The financial institution must make available for withdrawal funds deposited in an account by cash not made in person to an employee of the bank and checks not deposited in person not later than the second business day after the banking day on which the funds are deposited. In addition, the financial institution must make the lesser of the applicable dollar amount provided in § 229.10(c)(1)(vii)(A) or the customer's daily aggregate deposits of checks not subject to the next-day availability rules under § 229.10(c)(1)(ii) through (vi) available on the next business day.

As a condition to making the funds available for withdrawal in accordance with this section, the financial institution may require the use of a special deposit slip or envelope for certain checks. If the institution requires the use of such special deposit slip, § 229.10(c)(3)(ii) requires the financial institution to either provide the special deposit slip or deposit envelope to its customers or inform them of how the special deposit slip or envelope may be prepared or obtained. Financial institutions must make the special deposit slip or envelope reasonably available.

The Expedited Funds Availability Act (12 U.S.C. § 4001 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation CC, 12 C.F.R. § 229.12(b), requires a financial institution to make funds deposited in an account for local and certain other checks available for withdrawal not later than the second business day following the banking day on which funds are deposited. The Federal Reserve Board of Governors adopted check-processing requirements that have effectively eliminated the distinction in the requirements for the availability of funds for withdrawal between local and non-local checks. Thus, local and nonlocal checks should be treated the same in terms of funds availability under Regulation CC except as permitted in § 229.12(d) through (f).

EFAA 229.13

The Expedited Funds Availability Act (12 U.S.C. § 4001 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation CC, 12 C.F.R. § 229.13, requires a financial institution to follow certain procedures for exceptions related to new accounts, large deposits, redeposited checks, repeated overdrafts, reasonable cause to doubt collectability, and emergency conditions as prescribed by § 229.13(a) through (f). When the financial institution extends the time of deposits subject to exceptions in § 229.13(b) through (e), the financial institution must provide the depositor with a notice in accordance with § 229.13(g)(1) through (g)(4). The financial institution must also retain a record of each notice provided pursuant to the reasonable cause exception under § 229.13(e) with a brief statement of the facts giving rise to the financial institution's reason to doubt the collectability of the check in accordance with § 229.13(g)(5). Finally, § 229.13(h) requires that, if a financial institution

The Expedited Funds Availability Act (12 U.S.C. § 4001 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation CC, 12 C.F.R. § 229.14, requires a financial institution to begin to accrue interest on funds deposited into interest-bearing accounts no later than the business day on which the financial institution receives provisional credit for the funds.

The Expedited Funds Availability Act (12 U.S.C. § 4001 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation CC, 12 C.F.R. § 229.15 (a) and (b), requires a financial institution to provide disclosures clearly and conspicuously in writing. The disclosures must be in a form the consumer can keep apart from the exceptions in § 229.15(a) (these exceptions are otherwise covered in § 229.18). The disclosures shall be grouped together and not contain information unrelated to the disclosures required by subpart B of Regulation CC. In addition, the disclosure must contain uniform references to the day of availability.

The Expedited Funds Availability Act (12 U.S.C. § 4001 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation CC, 12 C.F.R. § 229.16(a) through (c), requires a financial institution to provide a disclosure before opening a new account and upon request as required by §§ 229.17 and 229.18(d), describing the financial institution's policy as to when funds deposited in an account are available for withdrawal, reflecting the policy followed by the financial institution in "most cases." The specific availability policy disclosure must include, as applicable, the items listed under § 229.16(b)(1) through (b)(5). A financial institution that has a policy of making deposited funds available for withdrawal sooner than required must meet the disclosure and notice requirements of § 229.16(c).

This notice must be provided before negative information is furnished, or within 30 days after furnishing the negative information. After the notice is provided, a financial institution may submit additional negative information to a nationwide consumer reporting agency with respect to the same transaction, extension of credit, account, or customer without providing additional notice to the customer. A financial institution is not liable for failing to provide the required notice if, at the time of the failure, the financial institution maintained reasonable policies and procedures to comply with the requirements of this section or reasonably believed it was prohibited by law from contacting the consumer.

Section 623(b) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(b)), requires furnishers of information to consumer reporting agencies to follow certain procedures set forth in § 623(b) upon notice of a dispute with regard to the completeness or accuracy of any information provided to a consumer reporting agency. Further, § 1022.43 of Regulation V, 12 C.F.R. § 1022.43, requires a financial institution that meets the definition of "furnisher" and that receives a direct dispute from a consumer to conduct a reasonable investigation of the direct dispute if it relates to the information specified in § 1022.43(a)(1) through (a)(4), unless specifically exempted by § 1022.43(b). The financial institution must conduct the investigation in accordance with the requirements in § 1022.43(e). If the financial institution determines that the dispute is frivolous or irrelevant, it must notify the consumer of that determination not later than five business days after making the determination, by mail or, if authorized by the consumer for that purpose, by any other means available to the furnisher. The notice must include the reasons for such determination and identify any information required to investigate the disputed information.

FCRA 1022.21(a)(1);24(a);25(a)

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation V, 12 C.F.R. §§ 1022.21(a)(1), 1022.24(a), and 1022.25(a), prohibits a financial institution, unless an exception set forth in § 1022.21(c) applies, from using eligibility information about a consumer that the institution receives from an affiliate, to make a solicitation for marketing purposes to the consumer, unless:

- (i) It is clearly and conspicuously disclosed to the consumer in writing or, if the consumer agrees, electronically, in a concise notice that the institution may use eligibility information about that consumer received from an affiliate to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer;
- (ii) The consumer is provided a reasonable and simple opportunity and method to “opt out,” or prohibit the institution from using eligibility information to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer; and
- (iii) The consumer has not opted out.

FCRA 1022.21(a)(3)

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation V, 12 C.F.R. § 1022.21(a)(3), requires that the notice in § 1022.21(a)(1) be provided:

- (i) By an affiliate that has or has previously had a pre-existing business relationship with the consumer; or
- (ii) As part of a joint notice from two or more members of an affiliated group of companies, provided that at least one of the affiliates on the joint notice has or has previously had a pre-existing business relationship with the consumer.

FCRA 1022.22(a)(5)

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation V, 12 C.F.R. § 1022.22(a)(5), requires a financial institution to give a consumer a new opt-out notice if, after all continuing relationships with the financial institution or its affiliate(s) are terminated, the consumer subsequently establishes another continuing relationship with the financial institution or its affiliate(s) and the consumer’s eligibility information is to be used to make a new solicitation. The new opt-out notice must apply, at a minimum, to eligibility information obtained in connection with the new continuing relationship. Consistent with § 1022.22(b), the consumer’s decision not to opt out after receiving the new opt-out notice would not override a prior opt-out election by the consumer that applies to eligibility information obtained in connection with a terminated relationship, regardless of whether the new opt-out notice applies to eligibility information obtained in connection with the terminated relationship.

FCRA 1022.22(b)

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation V, 12 C.F.R. § 1022.22(b), requires that the election of a consumer to opt out must be effective for a period of at least five years beginning when the consumer's opt-out election is received and implemented, unless the consumer revokes the opt-out in writing or, if the consumer agrees, electronically.

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation V, 12 C.F.R. § 1022.23(a)(2), requires that if two or more consumers jointly obtain a product or service, the opt-out notice must explain how an opt-out direction by a joint consumer will be treated. An opt-out direction by a joint consumer may be treated as applying to all of the associated joint consumers, or each joint consumer may be permitted to opt out separately. If each joint consumer is permitted to opt out separately, one of the joint consumers must be permitted to opt out on behalf of all joint consumers and the joint consumers must be permitted to exercise their separate rights to opt out in a single response. Further, it is impermissible to require all joint consumers to opt out before implementing any opt-out direction.

The renewal notice must be provided by the affiliate that provided the previous opt-out notice, or its successor, or as part of a joint renewal notice from two or more members of an affiliated group of companies, or their successors, that jointly provided the previous opt-out notice. The renewal opt-out notice must be clear, conspicuous, and concise, accurately disclose the required information listed in §1022.27(b)(1) through (b)(8), and follow the timing requirements noted in § 1022.7(c). The opt-out period may not be shortened by sending a renewal notice to the consumer before expiration of the opt-out-period, even if the consumer does not renew the opt-out.

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. § 1681 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation V, 12 C.F.R. § 1022.73(a), requires the risk-based pricing notice required by § 1022.72(a) or (c) to include the information specified in § 1022.73 (a)(1)(i) through (a)(1)(ix), and the risk-based pricing notice required by § 1022.72(d) to include the information specified in paragraphs § 1022.73(a)(2)(i) through (a)(2)(ix).

Whether the consumers have the same address or not, the person must provide a separate notice to each consumer, if a notice includes a credit score(s). Each separate notice must contain only the credit score(s) of the consumer to whom the notice is provided, and not the credit score(s) of the other consumer. If the consumers have the same address, and the notice does not include a credit score(s), a person may satisfy the requirements of § 1022.75(c)(1) by providing a single notice addressed to both consumers.

Further, the amount of insurance must be at least equal to the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the designated loan or the maximum limit of coverage available for the particular type of property securing the loan.

The Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. §§ 4001-4129), as implemented by part 339 of the FDIC Rules and Regulations, 12 C.F.R. § 339.3(c), requires that, effective July 1, 2019, an institution must accept private flood insurance, as defined in § 339.2, in satisfaction of the flood insurance purchase requirement in § 339.3(a) if the policy meets the coverage requirements in § 339.3(a). The institution may accept a policy that is not issued under the NFIP and that does not meet the definition of private flood insurance if the policy meets the requirements under § 339.3(c)(3)(i) through (c)(3)(iv). Additionally, the institution may accept a plan issued by a mutual aid society, as defined in § 339.2, if the plan meets the requirements under § 339.3(c)(4)(i) through (c)(4)(iv).

The Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. §§ 4001-4129), as implemented by part 339 of the FDIC Rules and Regulations, 12 C.F.R. § 339.5(a), requires an FDIC-supervised institution, or a servicer acting on its behalf, to require the escrow of all premiums and fees for any flood insurance required under § 339.3(a) for any designated loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home that is made, increased, extended, or renewed on or after January 1, 2016, except as provided by § 339.5(a)(2) or 339.5(c).

If, at any time during the term of a designated loan, it is determined that an exception under § 339.5(a)(2) does not apply, then the FDIC-supervised institution or its servicer must require the escrow of all premiums and fees for any flood insurance required under § 339.3(a) as soon as reasonably practicable. The flood insurance premiums and fees are required to be deposited in an escrow account on behalf of the borrower. This escrow account will be subject to escrow requirements adopted pursuant to § 10 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (12 U.S.C. § 2609). Following receipt of a notice from the Administrator of FEMA or other provider of flood insurance that premiums are due, the FDIC-supervised institution, or servicer acting on its behalf, must pay the amount owed to the insurance provider from the escrow account by the premium due date.

Such notice must be provided for any loan subject to § 339.5(d), using language similar to the model clause in Appendix B of part 339. Homeowners Protection Act

HPA 3(a)-(g)

Section 3 of the Homeowner's Protection Act of 1998 (12 U.S.C. § 4902(a)-(g)), requires a mortgage servicer to cancel private mortgage insurance (PMI) when the borrower submits a request in writing to the servicer, has a good payment history, is current on payments, and meets certain previously established qualifications. Additionally, the servicer is required to terminate PMI on the earliest date that both: (1) the mortgage principal is scheduled to reach 78% of the original value of the secured property; and (2) the borrower is current on mortgage payments.

For high-risk non-conforming loans, the servicer is required to terminate borrower-paid PMI when the mortgage principal is scheduled to reach 77% of the original value of the secured property. This section also prohibits the servicer from requiring PMI beyond the first day of the month immediately following the date that is the midpoint of the loan's amortization period if the loan payments are current, and prohibits additional payments or premiums for PMI 30 days after the insurance is cancelled or terminated.

The servicer must return all unearned PMI premiums to the borrower within 45 days after canceling or terminating PMI coverage. Further, if there is a modification of the terms or conditions of a loan, the cancellation date, termination date, or final termination date must be recalculated to reflect the modified terms and conditions.

HPA 4(a)(1)-(2)

Section 4(a)(1) and (2) of the Homeowner's Protection Act of 1998 (12 U.S.C. § 4903(a)(1)-(2)), requires initial disclosures in writing at the time of consummation for non-exempt residential mortgage transactions that will require private mortgage insurance. Specific information is required on the initial disclosures for fixed rate and adjustable rate residential mortgage transactions, as detailed in § 4903(a)(1)(A) and § 4903(a)(1)(B), respectively, detailing the borrower's rights to cancel this private mortgage insurance. Further, at the time the transaction is consummated, a written notice must be provided for high-risk residential mortgage transactions that states private mortgage insurance will not be required beyond the midpoint of the loan's amortization schedule, if the loan payments are current on that date.

HPA 4(a)(3)

Section 4(a)(3) of the Homeowner's Protection Act of 1998 (12 U.S.C. § 4903(a)(3)), requires annual written statements for residential mortgage transactions that require private mortgage insurance (PMI). HPA 5(a)

Section 5(a) of the Homeowner's Protection Act of 1998 (12 U.S.C. § 4904(a)), requires the servicer to notify the borrower in writing not later than 30 days after the private mortgage insurance (PMI) is cancelled or terminated. The notice shall disclose that the PMI has terminated and the borrower no longer has PMI, and that no further premiums, payments, or other fees are due or payable by the borrower in connection with the PMI.

Section 5(b)(1) and (2) of the Homeowner's Protection Act of 1998 (12 U.S.C. § 4904(b)(1) and (2)), requires the servicer to provide a written notice to the borrower if a mortgage servicer determines that a mortgage will not qualify for cancellation or termination of private mortgage insurance. The notice shall disclose the grounds on which the determination was made. If an appraisal was used, the servicer must give the results of the appraisal to the borrower.

With respect to the denial of a requested cancellation, the notice required under this section must be provided not later than 30 days following the later of: (1) the date the borrower's request for cancellation is received; or (2) the date on which the borrower satisfies any evidence or certification requirements. If the requirements of an automatic termination are not met, the notice is due not later than 30 days after the scheduled termination date.

A creditor that reduces the interest rate on a servicemember's obligations, or a servicemember and spouse jointly, is required to forgive interest in excess of 6 percent, and to reduce any periodic payment due from a servicemember by the amount of interest forgiven. The interest rate reduction must be applied retroactively to the date on which the servicemember is called to military service. Note that for mortgage loans, trust deeds, or other security in the nature of a mortgage, § 2203(b) of the Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008, extends the 6 percent interest rate cap to one year after the end of the period of military service.

Unfair & Deceptive Acts or Practices (Section 5 of FTC Act)

UDAP Section 5(No Subsection–Unfair)

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914 (15 U.S.C. § 45) prohibits unfair acts or practices. An act or practice is “unfair” where it (1) causes or is likely to cause substantial injury to consumers; (2) cannot be reasonably avoided by consumers; and (3) is not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition. Public policy may also be considered in the analysis of whether a particular act or practice is unfair.

UDAP Section 5(No Subsection–Deceptive)

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914 (15 U.S.C. § 45) prohibits deceptive acts or practices. To determine whether a representation, omission, or practice is “deceptive,” a three-part test is used. First, the representation, omission, or practice must mislead or be likely to mislead the consumer. Second, the consumer’s interpretation of the representation, omission, or practice must be reasonable under the circumstances. Lastly, the misleading representation, omission, or practice must be material.

Unfair, Deceptive, Abusive Acts or Practices (Section 1036 of Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act)

Note: This category only includes the violation code for abusive. See the UDAP category for the deception and unfairness violation codes.

UDAAP Section 1036(a)(1)(B)

Section 1036(a)(1)(B) of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (12 U.S.C. § 5536(a)(1)(B)) prohibits any covered person or service provider from engaging in, among other things, abusive acts or practices in connection with a consumer financial product or service. As provided in section 1031(d) of the Act, an act or practice is abusive if it: (1) materially interferes with the ability of a consumer to understand a term or condition of a consumer financial product or service; or (2) takes unreasonable advantage of: (A) a lack of understanding on the part of the consumer of the material risks, costs, or conditions of the product or service; (B) the inability of the consumer to protect the interests of the consumer in selecting or using a consumer financial product or service; or (C) the reasonable reliance by the consumer on a covered person to act in the interests of the consumer.

[UDAAP Section 1036(a)(1)(B)]

Complex Bank Supervision Program

The Complex Bank Supervision Program (Program) is a continuous supervisory strategy for institutions that exhibit elevated or unique risks of consumer harm. These institutions often employ complex business models, offer nontraditional products/services, and/or rely heavily on third-party relationships. The Program involves:

- A tailored supervisory strategy specific to an institution's risk profile;
- Two-way, proactive communication between the institution and examination staff;
- An examiner serving as a primary contact who responds to regulatory questions, provides feedback, and clarifies guidance;
- Effective collaboration with bank management to identify potential risks earlier than point-in-time examinations, and to address and mitigate issues with the potential for significant consumer harm;
- An aligned supervisory approach with the Division of Risk Management Supervision; and
- Coordinated supervision with other regulators.

The Program consists of a three-tiered supervisory approach based on an institution's risk profile and may include ongoing monitoring, risk assessments, supervisory plans, targeted reviews, and dedicated/designated staff. For each tier, examiners create a supervisory strategy tailored to the institution that recognizes the unique characteristics of the business model and product offerings. Institutions with total assets of $10 billion or more are generally included in the Program. Institutions with assets less than $10 billion that exhibit elevated risk may also be included in the Program to ensure appropriate supervisory oversight.

- Tier I institutions pose elevated risk that warrant additional supervisory oversight. Generally, all institutions with assets of $10 billion or more will be assigned to this tier. The supervisory approach for Tier I institutions includes assigning a point of contact (POC) and generally conducting annual risk assessments. Consideration for targeted visits or other interim supervisory activities will be based on the outcome of the risk assessments. The regular examination frequency and traditional examination procedures apply to these institutions. POCs will communicate to bank management the results of the risk assessment and any targeted reviews or interim supervisory activities.

- Tier II institutions exhibit a higher risk for consumer harm due to a variety of factors. These may include a significant third-party reliance, nontraditional business model, complex corporate governance or organizational structure, predominant use of technology for product delivery, national customer base, or a historically high volume of consumer complaints. In addition to targeted supervisory activities, the regular examination frequency applies to Tier II institutions. A designated examiner in charge (EIC) will be assigned to Tier II institutions. The EIC assesses the risk of the institution, determines the supervisory strategy, establishes the scope of each supervisory activity, and provides a Planned Supervisory Activities letter to the institution's Board of Directors that summarizes the upcoming supervisory events. Staff will communicate supervisory findings at the conclusion of any supervisory activity with the institution's management and/or Board of Directors.
- Tier III institutions pose the highest risk of consumer harm. These institutions exhibit many characteristics of Tier II banks. Furthermore, the operations of institutions in this tier are of such magnitude, they pose the greatest risk of widespread consumer harm and require dedicated oversight. In addition to targeted supervisory activities, the regular examination frequency applies to Tier III institutions. Tier III institutions will be supervised by a dedicated EIC and a dedicated team member(s). The EIC assesses the risk of the institution, determines the supervisory strategy, establishes the scope of each targeted supervisory activity, and provides a Planned Supervisory Activities letter to the institution's Board of Directors that briefly summarizes the upcoming supervisory events. Staff will communicate supervisory findings at the conclusion of any supervisory activity with the institution's management and/or Board of Directors.

Dear [Name]:

We are planning to conduct a [CHOOSE ONE: Consumer Compliance OR Consumer Compliance and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA)] examination of your institution in the upcoming quarter. The purpose of this letter is to provide you with information about the examination process and a list of available resources.

EXAMINATION PROCESS

Our upcoming examination will assess how your institution complies with various consumer protection laws and regulations. Examiners will evaluate your institution's compliance management system (CMS) using a risk-based approach that involves: developing a compliance risk profile of your institution's products, services, markets, organizational structure, operations, and past supervisory performance; identifying inherent risks associated with the level and complexity of your business operations; and testing selected transactions when an area has a high risk of consumer harm and CMS efforts appear weak.

Examiners will evaluate your institution using the Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System, which is organized under three broad categories: board and management oversight, compliance program, and violations of law and consumer harm. The first two categories, board and management oversight and compliance program, are used to assess your institution's CMS. The third category, violations of law and consumer harm, includes assessment factors that evaluate the dimensions of any identified violation or consumer harm.

Examiners will also review your institution's ability to appropriately assess, measure, monitor, and control the risks associated with significant third-party relationships. Additionally, examiners will review and follow-up on violations, recommendations, and Matters Requiring Board Attention, as applicable, identified at your previous Consumer Compliance examination. Information related to the examination process, including examination procedures and definitions of consumer harm, can be found in the FDIC Consumer Compliance Examination Manual, which is available at www.fdic.gov/regulations/compliance/manual.

[ONLY INCLUDED WHEN CRA EXAMINATION SCHEDULED: The CRA is intended to encourage depository institutions to help meet the credit needs of the communities in which they operate, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, consistent with safe and sound banking operations. The FDIC has adopted interagency examination procedures for the following types of institutions: Small Institutions, Intermediate Small Institutions, Large Retail Institutions, Limited Purpose and Wholesale Institutions, and Institutions under Strategic Plans. More information about the CRA examination procedures and the asset size thresholds can be found at www.ffiec.gov/cra.]

Pre-Examination Interview

The Examiner-in-Charge (EIC) will conduct a pre-examination interview prior to the projected start date of your examination. The purpose of the interview is to ensure that we understand your institution's operations, as well as the products and services offered. It further allows us to tailor any information and document requests appropriately and plan for the examination efficiently.

The FDIC's approach to examinations continues to offer opportunities to conduct some examination activities off-site. During this interview, the EIC will discuss the FDIC's supervisory approach to examinations, including possible on-site and off-site activities, and the use of technology. The EIC will also coordinate how meetings will be handled, how information requests should be submitted, and how findings will be conveyed.

Enclosed is a list of the questions the EIC will use to conduct the interview. We encourage you to review these questions in advance and invite appropriate institution personnel to participate in the interview. We are not requesting that you prepare written responses to these questions. After this interview, you will receive a Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR) to complete and return to the EIC, who will use the responses to help determine the scope of the examination. Once the EIC has determined the products, services, and regulations to review, we will provide a subsequent request for specific transactional level information.

FDICconnect and Enterprise File Exchange (EFX)

During the pre-examination interview, the EIC will discuss the methods available for exchanging examination information and will determine your willingness and ability to provide documentation electronically via FDICconnect's Enterprise File Exchange (EFX) application or alternative applications. Representatives of your institution should already have access privileges for FDICconnect. Users may access the system and the instructions at www.fdicconnect.gov. If you need assistance accessing or using FDICconnect, please e-mail FDICConnect@fdic.gov or call 877-275-3342 and select option 4.

EFX is a secure application within FDICconnect that allows FDIC-insured institutions to exchange examination-related documentation with the FDIC and State banking authorities. Users may access EFX via the EFX link in FDICconnect from the Business Center Menu under "Electronic File Transmission Options" or you may copy and paste the following link into your browser: <https://efx.fdic.gov/>. For optimal user experience, Google Chrome is the preferred browser. Additional information about EFX is provided in FIL-63-2019, which is available at <https://www.fdic.gov/news/news/financia/2019/fil19063.html>. FIL-63-2019 includes an EFX quick reference guide for bank users. Another resource you may find helpful is an EFX training video available on YouTube. At this time, we encourage you to confirm your ability to log into FDICconnect and EFX so that you may resolve any issues well ahead of the due date for electronic file submissions. If you need assistance with EFX, please e-mail EFXProduction@fdic.gov.

Off-Site Examination Capabilities

In addition to EFX, the EIC will inquire about other technologies that may enhance our ability to conduct examination activities off-site. The four primary categories of technologies we may consider utilizing are: (1) web-based remote access applications that would allow examiners to access your imaged loan files and other documents; (2) Microsoft Teams; (3) the bank's Microsoft tenant account; and (4) third-party sharing applications. We encourage you to inform us about any available options you would like us to consider.

We also encourage you to let the EIC know during the pre-examination planning interview if your institution does not image documents or has had difficulty creating scanned images of records needed for FDIC examinations. At your request, we will lend your institution a high-speed document scanner to facilitate the creation of electronic files to upload to EFX.

REFERENCE RESOURCES

Listed below are some of the resources available to assist bank management in understanding and managing the examination process.

FDIC Website

The FDIC's website includes a Banker Resource Center to assist supervised financial institutions. In particular, www.fdic.gov/resources/bankers/ contains the following:

- Supervisory Topics: Information and resources to support financial institutions' safe and sound practices in the areas of consumer compliance, CRA, fair lending, third-party relationships, and more.
- General Information: Access to educational programs, publications, forms, financial data, and other information to support general operations of FDIC-insured financial institutions. This includes technical assistance videos, laws and regulations, minority depository institutions program information, and other useful supervisory resources.

Technical Assistance

FDIC examiners can provide you with certain types of technical assistance related to consumer compliance. Information about the technical assistance offered by the FDIC is available at www.fdic.gov/regulations/resources/director/Technical.pdf.

COMMUNICATION WITH FDIC

We strive to maintain open communication throughout the examination process. Ongoing communication between the examination staff and bank management is a critical element of effective bank supervision. We encourage all Board members to participate with bank management in the examination process, which can provide an opportunity to discuss compliance-related banking matters.

III. Templates — Sample Letter for Pre-Examination Information Packet

Your institution is supervised by the [Name] Field Office, which is part of the FDIC's [Name] Region. The EIC is your primary point of contact; however, if you wish to provide feedback or have concerns during the examination, we encourage you to contact the Field Supervisor, Supervisory Examiner, or Regional Office. In the event these efforts are not successful, you may contact the Division Director at DirectorDCP@fdic.gov. The FDIC provided this communication channel to FDIC-supervised institutions in FIL-51-2016, which is available at www.fdic.gov/news/news/financial/2016/fil16051.html.

FDIC Office of the Ombudsman

The FDIC Office of the Ombudsman is a confidential, neutral, and independent source of information and assistance to anyone affected by the FDIC in its regulatory, resolution, receivership, or asset disposition activities. If you have concerns about your interactions with the FDIC, you may contact them with questions. Information about the Office of the Ombudsman is available at www.fdic.gov/regulations/resources/ombudsman/.

At the end of the examination, you will receive a Post-Examination Survey from the Office of the Ombudsman. We encourage financial institutions to provide feedback on the examination process, Report of Examination, and other supervisory processes by completing this survey. Your feedback is confidential and responses are not attributable to your institution unless you specifically request follow-up from FDIC senior leadership. Honest and candid feedback helps ensure the FDIC's supervisory programs are fair, balanced, and objective.

FDIC Appeals Process

If disagreements or other concerns arise, we encourage bank management to communicate their concerns with the EIC, field office management, or the appropriate regional office staff. Division-level informal reviews are also available. If informal efforts to resolve disagreements are not successful, you may pursue a formal request as explained in the Supervision Appeals Review Committee (SARC) Guidelines available at www.fdic.gov/regulations/laws/sarc/sarcguidelines.html.

If you have questions regarding the information in this letter, please contact me at [phone number] or through e-mail at [e-mail address].

Sincerely,

IV. Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Introduction

This overview provides a basic and abbreviated discussion of federal fair lending laws and regulations. It is adapted from the Interagency Policy Statement on Fair Lending issued in March 1994.

Lending Discrimination Statutes and Regulations

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) prohibits discrimination in any aspect of a credit transaction. It applies to any extension of credit, including extensions of credit to small businesses, corporations, partnerships, and trusts.

The ECOA prohibits discrimination based on:

- Race or color;
- Religion;
- National origin;
- Sex;
- Marital status;
- Age (provided the applicant has the capacity to contract);
- The applicant's receipt of income derived from any public assistance program; or
- The applicant's exercise, in good faith, of any right under the Consumer Credit Protection Act.

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's Regulation B, found at 12 CFR part 1002, implements the ECOA. Regulation B describes lending acts and practices that are specifically prohibited, permitted, or required. Official staff interpretations of the regulation are found in Supplement I to 12 CFR part 1002.

The Dodd–Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 further amended the ECOA and covers:

- Data collection for loans to minority-owned and women-owned businesses (awaiting final regulation);
- Legal action statute of limitations for ECOA violations is extended to five years (effective July 21, 2010); and
- A disclosure of the consumer's ability to receive a copy of any appraisal(s) and valuation(s) prepared in connection with first-lien loans secured by a dwelling is to be provided to applicants within 3 business days of receiving the application (effective January 18, 2014).

NOTE: Further information regarding the technical requirements of fair lending are incorporated into the sections ECOA V 7.1 and FCRA VIII 6.1 of this manual.

The Fair Housing Act (FHA) prohibits discrimination in all aspects of "residential real-estate related transactions," including but not limited to:

- Making loans to buy, build, repair, or improve a dwelling;
- Purchasing real estate loans;
- Selling, brokering, or appraising residential real estate; or
- Selling or renting a dwelling.

The FHA prohibits discrimination based on:

- Race or color;
- National origin;
- Religion;
- Sex;
- Familial status (defined as children under the age of 18 living with a parent or legal custodian, pregnant women, and people securing custody of children under 18); or
- Handicap.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) regulations implementing the FHA are found at 24 CFR Part 100. Because both the FHA and the ECOA apply to mortgage lending, lenders may not discriminate in mortgage lending based on any of the prohibited factors in either list.

Under the ECOA, it is unlawful for a lender to discriminate on a prohibited basis in any aspect of a credit transaction, and under both the ECOA and the FHA, it is unlawful for a lender to discriminate on a prohibited basis in a residential real-estate-related transaction. Under one or both of these laws, a lender may not, because of a prohibited factor:

- Fail to provide information or services or provide different information or services regarding any aspect of the lending process, including credit availability, application procedures, or lending standards.

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

- Discourage or selectively encourage applicants with respect to inquiries about or applications for credit.
- Refuse to extend credit or use different standards in determining whether to extend credit.
- Vary the terms of credit offered, including the amount, interest rate, duration, or type of loan.
- Use different standards to evaluate collateral.
- Treat a borrower differently in servicing a loan or invoking default remedies.
- Use different standards for pooling or packaging a loan in the secondary market.

A lender may not express, orally or in writing, a preference based on prohibited factors or indicate that it will treat applicants differently on a prohibited basis. A violation may still exist even if a lender treated applicants equally.

A lender may not discriminate on a prohibited basis because of the characteristics of

- An applicant, prospective applicant, or borrower.
- A person associated with an applicant, prospective applicant, or borrower (for example, a co-applicant, spouse, business partner, or live-in aide).
- The present or prospective occupants of either the property to be financed or the characteristics of the neighborhood or other area where property to be financed is located.

Finally, the FHAct requires lenders to make reasonable accommodations for a person with disabilities when such accommodations are necessary to afford the person an equal opportunity to apply for credit.

Types of Lending Discrimination

The courts have recognized three methods of proof of lending discrimination under the ECOA and the FHAct:

- Overt evidence of disparate treatment;
- Comparative evidence of disparate treatment; and
- Evidence of disparate impact.

Disparate Treatment

The existence of illegal disparate treatment may be established either by statements revealing that a lender explicitly considered prohibited factors (overt evidence) or by differences in treatment that are not fully explained by legitimate nondiscriminatory factors (comparative evidence).

Overt Evidence of Disparate Treatment. There is overt evidence of discrimination when a lender openly discriminates on a prohibited basis.

Example: A lender offered a credit card with a limit of up to $750 for applicants aged 21-30 and $1500 for applicants over 30. This policy violated the ECOA's prohibition on discrimination based on age.

There is overt evidence of discrimination even when a lender expresses — but does not act on — a discriminatory preference:

Example: A lending officer told a customer, “We do not like to make home mortgages to Native Americans, but the law says we cannot discriminate and we have to comply with the law.” This statement violated the FHAct's prohibition on statements expressing a discriminatory preference as well as Section 1002.4(b) of Regulation B, which prohibits discouraging applicants on a prohibited basis.

Comparative Evidence of Disparate Treatment. Disparate treatment occurs when a lender treats a credit applicant differently based on one of the prohibited bases. It does not require any showing that the treatment was motivated by prejudice or a conscious intention to discriminate against a person beyond the difference in treatment itself.

Disparate treatment may more likely occur in the treatment of applicants who are neither clearly well-qualified nor clearly unqualified. Discrimination may more readily affect applicants in this middle group for two reasons. First, if the applications are “close cases,” there is more room and need for lender discretion. Second, whether or not an applicant qualifies may depend on the level of assistance the lender provides the applicant in completing an application. The lender may, for example, propose solutions to credit or other problems regarding an application, identify compensating factors, and provide encouragement to the applicant. Lenders are under no obligation to provide such assistance, but to the extent that they do, the assistance must be provided in a nondiscriminatory way.

Example: A non-minority couple applied for an automobile loan. The lender found adverse information in the couple's credit report. The lender discussed the credit report with them and determined that the adverse information, a judgment against the couple, was incorrect because the judgment had been vacated. The non-minority couple was granted their loan. A minority couple applied for a similar loan with the same lender. Upon discovering adverse information in the minority couple's credit report, the lender denied the loan application on the basis of the adverse information without giving the couple an opportunity to discuss the report.

The foregoing is an example of disparate treatment of similarly situated applicants, apparently based on a prohibited factor, in the amount of assistance and information the lender provided.

If a lender has apparently treated similar applicants differently on the basis of a prohibited factor, it must provide an explanation for the difference in treatment. If the lender's explanation is found to be not credible, the agency may find that the lender discriminated.

Redlining is a form of illegal disparate treatment in which a lender provides unequal access to credit, or unequal terms of credit, because of the race, color, national origin, or other prohibited characteristic(s) of the residents of the area in which the credit seeker resides or will reside or in which the residential property to be mortgaged is located. Redlining may violate both the FHAct and the ECOA.

Disparate Impact

When a lender applies a racially or otherwise neutral policy or practice equally to all credit applicants, but the policy or practice disproportionately excludes or burdens certain persons on a prohibited basis, the policy or practice is described as having a “disparate impact.”

Example: A lender's policy is not to extend loans for single family residences for less than $60,000.00. This policy has been in effect for ten years. This minimum loan amount policy is shown to disproportionately exclude potential minority applicants from consideration because of their income levels or the value of the houses in the areas in which they live.

The fact that a policy or practice creates a disparity on a prohibited basis is not alone proof of a violation. When an Agency finds that a lender's policy or practice has a disparate impact, the next step is to seek to determine whether the policy or practice is justified by “business necessity.” The justification must be manifest and may not be hypothetical or speculative.

Factors that may be relevant to the justification could include cost and profitability. Even if a policy or practice that has a disparate impact on a prohibited basis can be justified by business necessity, it still may be found to be in violation if an alternative policy or practice could serve the same purpose with less discriminatory effect. Finally, evidence of discriminatory intent is not necessary to establish that a lender's adoption or implementation of a policy or practice that has a disparate impact is in violation of the FHAct or ECOA.

These procedures do not call for examiners to plan examinations to identify or focus on potential disparate impact issues. The guidance in this Introduction is intended to help examiners recognize fair lending issues that may have a potential disparate impact. Guidance in the Appendix to the Interagency Fair Lending Examination Procedures provides details on how to obtain relevant information regarding such situations along with methods of evaluation, as appropriate.

General Guidelines

These procedures are intended to be a basic and flexible framework to be used in the majority of fair lending examinations conducted by the FFIEC agencies. They are also intended to guide examiner judgment, not to supplant it. The procedures can be augmented by each agency as necessary to ensure their effective implementation. While these procedures apply to many examinations, agencies routinely use statistical analyses or other specialized techniques in fair lending examinations to assist in evaluating whether a prohibited basis was a factor in an institution's credit decisions. Examiners should follow the procedures provided by their respective agencies in these cases.

For a number of aspects of lending — for example, credit scoring and loan pricing — the “state of the art” is more likely to be advanced if the agencies have some latitude to incorporate promising innovations. These interagency procedures provide for that latitude.

Any references in these procedures to options, judgment, etc., of “examiners” means discretion within the limits provided by that examiner's agency. An examiner should use these procedures in conjunction with his, or her, own agency's priorities, examination philosophy, and detailed guidance for implementing these procedures. These procedures should not be interpreted as providing the examiner greater latitude than his, or her, own agency would. For example, if an agency's policy is to review compliance management systems in all of its institutions, an examiner for that agency must conduct such a review rather than interpret Part II of these interagency procedures as leaving the review to the examiner's option.

The procedures emphasize racial and national origin discrimination in residential transactions, but the key principles are applicable to other prohibited bases and to nonresidential transactions.

Finally, these procedures focus on analyzing institution compliance with the broad, nondiscrimination requirements of the ECOA and the FHAct. They do not address such explicit or technical compliance provisions as the signature rules or adverse action notice requirements in Sections 1002.7 and 1002.9, respectively, of Regulation B.

Part I — Examination Scope Guidelines Background

Consistent with the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council Interagency Fair Lending Examination Procedures, FDIC examiners evaluate fair lending risk during the scoping process by completing three general steps:

1. Examiners develop an institutional overview to assess an

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

institution's inherent fair lending risk. As part of this process, examiners become familiar with an institution's structure and management, supervisory history, loan portfolio, and credit and market operations. Once examiners understand a financial institution's lending operations they can identify the level of inherent risk. Inherent risk for fair lending is broad-based and would impact a range of products if no controls or other mitigating factors were in place to control the risk. Inherent risk arises from the general conditions or the environment in which the institution operates. The risk could be present based on an institution's structure, supervisory history, the composition of the loan portfolio, and the credit and market operations

2. If an examiner believes that an institution has more than minimal inherent fair lending risk, the examiner should then identify the product(s) or product group(s) to review. The products or product groups selected may differ based on the type of discrimination. For example, for purposes of pricing, an examiner may select HMDA loans for further review, while for underwriting, the examiner may select consumer loans. Examiners are not expected to review all products for discrimination risk if there is more than minimal inherent risk. Rather, examiners should use their judgment and consider the following when deciding which loan products warrant further review. Examiners would then identify any discrimination risk factors and assess an institution's compliance management system (CMS) for fair lending. Understanding the strength of an institution's CMS is necessary to properly assess whether an institution has sufficiently mitigated applicable discrimination risk factors. If there is minimal inherent risk, no additional analysis is necessary and the fair lending review can conclude.

3. For those discrimination risk factors that have not been fully mitigated, examiners compile a list of potential focal points and identify which should be pursued as a focal point.

The FDIC has developed the Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions Memorandum (FLSC) to implement a standard nationwide format for documenting the scope and conclusions of fair lending reviews. FLSC has been adopted as a means of focusing the examiner's attention to the areas that pose the greatest unmanaged fair lending risk to the institution. It incorporates the Interagency Fair Lending Examination Procedures¹ and assists in documenting the types of fair lending risks that are present; the controls that management has put in place to manage the risk; the effectiveness of these controls; why the particular focal point(s) are chosen; the level of review conducted; and the results of any additional analysis that was conducted. The FLSC is included in section IV-3.1 of this manual.

The scope of an examination encompasses the loan product(s), market(s), decision center(s), time frame, and prohibited basis and control group(s) to be analyzed during the examination. These procedures refer to each potential combination of those elements as a "focal point." Setting the scope of an examination involves, first, identifying all of the potential focal points that appear worthwhile to examine. Then, from among those, examiners select the Focal Point(s) that will form the scope of the examination, based on risk factors, priorities established in these procedures or by their respective agencies, the record from past examinations, and other relevant guidance. This phase includes obtaining an overview of an institution's compliance management system as it relates to fair lending.

When selecting focal points for review, examiners may determine that the institution has performed "self-tests" or "self-evaluations" related to specific lending products. The difference between "self-tests" and "self-evaluations" is discussed in the Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination section of the Appendix. Institutions must share all information regarding "self-evaluations" and certain limited information related to "self-tests." Institutions may choose to voluntarily disclose additional information about "self-tests." Examiners should make sure that institutions understand that voluntarily sharing the results of self-tests will result in a loss of confidential status of these tests. Information from "self-evaluations" or "self-tests" may allow the scoping to be streamlined. Refer to Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination in the Appendix for additional details.

Scoping may disclose the existence of circumstances — such as the use of credit scoring or a large volume of residential lending — which, under an agency's policy, call for the use of regression analysis or other statistical methods of identifying potential discrimination with respect to one or more loan products. Where that is the case, the agency's specialized procedures should be employed for such loan products rather than the procedures set forth below.

Setting the intensity of an examination means determining the breadth and depth of the analysis that will be conducted on the selected loan product(s). This process entails a more involved analysis of the institution's compliance risk management processes, particularly as it relates to selected products, to reach an informed decision regarding how large a sample of files to review in any transactional analyses performed and whether certain aspects of the credit process deserve heightened scrutiny.

Part I of these procedures provides guidance on establishing the scope of the examination. Part II (Compliance Management Review) provides guidance on determining the intensity of the examination. There is naturally some interdependence between these two phases. Ultimately the scope and intensity of the examination will determine the record of performance that serves as the foundation for agency conclusions about institutional compliance with fair lending obligations. The examiner should employ these procedures to arrive at a well-reasoned and practical conclusion about how to conduct a particular institution's examination of fair lending performance.

In certain cases where an agency already possesses information which provides examiners with guidance on priorities and risks for planning an upcoming examination, such information may expedite the scoping process and make it unnecessary to carry out all of the steps below. For example, the report of the previous fair lending examination may have included recommendations for the focus of the next examination. However, examiners should validate that the institution's operational structure, product offerings, policies, and risks have not changed since the prior examination before condensing the scoping process.

The scoping process can be performed either off-site, onsite, or both, depending on whatever is determined appropriate and feasible. In the interest of minimizing burdens on both the examination team and the institution, requests for information from the institution should be carefully thought out so as to include only the information that will clearly be useful in the examination process. Finally, any off-site information requests should be made sufficiently in advance of the on-site schedule to permit institutions adequate time to assemble necessary information and provide it to the examination team in a timely fashion. (See "Potential Scoping Information" in the Appendix for guidance on additional information that the examiner might wish to consider including in a request).

Examiners should focus the examination based on:

- An understanding of the credit operations of the institution;
- The risk that discriminatory conduct may occur in each area of those operations; and
- The feasibility of developing a factually reliable record of an institution's performance and fair lending compliance in each area of those operations.

Understanding Credit Operations

Before evaluating the potential for discriminatory conduct, the examiner should review sufficient information about the institution and its market to understand the credit operations of the institution and the representation of prohibited basis group residents within the markets where the institution does business. The level of detail to be obtained at this stage should be sufficient to identify whether any of the risk factors in the steps below are present. Relevant background information includes:

- The types and terms of credit products offered, differentiating among broad categories of credit such as residential, consumer, or commercial, as well as product variations within such categories (fixed vs. variable, etc.).
- Whether the institution has a special purpose credit program, or other program that is specifically designed to assist certain underserved populations.
- The volume of, or growth in, lending for each of the credit products offered.
- The demographics (i.e., race, national origin, etc.) of the credit markets in which the institution is doing business.
- The institution's organization of its credit decision-making process, including identification of the delegation of separate lending authorities and the extent to which discretion in pricing or setting credit terms and conditions is delegated to various levels of managers, employees or independent brokers or dealers.
- The institution's loan officer or broker compensation program.
- The types of relevant documentation/data that are available for various loan products and what is the relative quantity, quality and accessibility of such information (i.e., for which loan product(s) will the information available be most likely to support a sound and reliable fair lending analysis).
- The extent to which information requests can be readily organized and coordinated with other compliance examination components to reduce undue burden on the institution. (Do not request more information than the exam team can be expected to utilize during the anticipated course of the examination.)

In thinking about an institution's credit markets, the examiner should recognize that these markets may or may not coincide with an institution's Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) assessment area(s). Where appropriate, the examiner should review the demographics for a broader geographic area than the assessment area.

Where an institution has multiple underwriting or loan processing centers or subsidiaries, each with fully independent credit-granting authority, consider evaluating each center and/or subsidiary separately, provided a sufficient number of loans exist to support a meaningful analysis. In determining the scope of the examination for such institutions, examiners should consider whether:

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

- Subsidiaries should be examined. The agencies will hold a financial institution responsible for violations by its direct subsidiaries, but not typically for those by its affiliates (unless the affiliate has acted as the agent for the institution or the violation by the affiliate was known or should have been known to the institution before it became involved in the transaction or purchased the affiliate's loans). When seeking to determine an institution's relationship with affiliates that are not supervised financial institutions, limit the inquiry to what can be learned in the institution and do not contact the affiliate without prior consultation with agency staff.
- The underwriting standards and procedures used in the entity being reviewed are used in related entities not scheduled for the planned examination. This will help examiners to recognize the potential scope of policy-based violations.
- The portfolio consists of applications from a purchased institution. If so, for scoping purposes, examiners should consider the applications as if they were made to the purchasing institution. For comparison purposes, applications evaluated under the purchased institution's standards should not be compared to applications evaluated under the purchasing institution's standards.
- The portfolio includes purchased loans. If so, examiners should look for indications that the institution specified loans to purchase based on a prohibited factor or caused a prohibited factor to influence the origination process.
- A complete decision can be made at one of the several underwriting or loan processing centers, each with independent authority. In such a situation, it is best to conduct on-site a separate comparative analysis at each underwriting center. If covering multiple centers is not feasible during the planned examination, examiners should review their processes and internal controls to determine whether or not expanding the scope and/or length of the examination is justified.
- Decision-making responsibility for a single transaction may involve more than one underwriting center. For example, an institution may have authority to decline mortgage applicants, but only the mortgage company subsidiary may approve them. In such a situation, examiners should learn which standards are applied in each entity and the location of records needed for the planned comparisons.
- Applicants can be steered from the financial institution to the subsidiary or other lending channel and vice versa, and what policies and procedures exist to monitor this practice.
- Any third parties², such as brokers or contractors, are involved in the credit decision and how responsibility is allocated among them and the institution. The institution's familiarity with third party actions may be important, for an institution may be in violation if it participates in transactions in which it knew or reasonably ought to have known other parties were discriminating.

As part of understanding the financial institution's own lending operations, it is also important to understand any dealings the financial institution has with affiliated and non-affiliated mortgage loan brokers and other third party lenders.

These brokers may generate mortgage applications and originations solely for a specific financial institution or may broadly gather loan applications for a variety of local, regional, or national lenders. As a result, it is important to recognize what impact these mortgage brokers and other third party lender actions and application processing operations have on the lending operations of a financial institution. Because brokers can be located anywhere in or out of the financial institution's primary lending or CRA assessment areas, it is important to evaluate broker activity and fair lending compliance related to underwriting, terms, and conditions, redlining, and steering, each of which is covered in more depth in sections of these procedures. Examiners should consult with their respective agencies for specific guidance regarding broker activity.

If the institution is large and geographically diverse, examiners should select only as many markets or underwriting centers as can be reviewed readily in depth, rather than selecting proportionally to cover every market. As needed, examiners should narrow the focus to the Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) or underwriting center(s) that are determined to present the highest discrimination risk. Examiners should use Loan Application Register (LAR) data organized by underwriting center, if available. After calculating denial rates between the control and prohibited basis groups for the underwriting centers, examiners should select the centers with the highest fair lending risk. This approach would also be used when reviewing pricing or other terms and conditions of approved applicants from the prohibited basis and control groups. If underwriting centers have fewer than five racial or national origin denials, examiners should not examine for racial discrimination in underwriting. Instead, they should shift the focus to other loan products or prohibited bases, or examination types such as a pricing examination.

However, if examiners learn of other indications of risks that favor analyzing a prohibited basis with fewer transactions than the minimum in the sample size tables, they should consult with their supervisory office on possible alternative methods of analysis. For example, there is strong reason to examine a pattern in which almost all of 19 male borrowers received low rates but almost all of four female borrowers received high rates, even though the number of each group is fewer than the stated minimum. Similarly, there would be strong reason to examine a pattern in which almost all of 100 control group applicants were approved but all four prohibited basis group applicants were not, even though the number of prohibited basis denials was fewer than five.

Evaluating the Potential for Discriminatory Conduct

Step One: Develop an Overview

Based on his or her understanding of the credit operations and product offerings of an institution, an examiner should determine the nature and amount of information required for the scoping process and should obtain and organize that information. No single examination can reasonably be expected to evaluate compliance performance as to every prohibited basis, in every product, or in every underwriting center or subsidiary of an institution. In addition to information gained in the process of Understanding Credit Operations, above, the examiner should keep in mind the following factors when selecting products for the scoping review:

- Which products and prohibited bases were reviewed during the most recent prior examination(s) and, conversely, which products and prohibited bases have not recently been reviewed?
- Which prohibited basis groups make up a significant portion of the institution's market for the different credit products offered?
- Which products and prohibited basis groups the institution reviewed using either a voluntarily disclosed self-test or a self-evaluation?

Based on consideration of the foregoing factors, the examiner should request information for all residential and other loan products considered appropriate for scoping in the current examination cycle. In addition, wherever feasible, examiners should conduct preliminary interviews with the institution's key underwriting personnel and those involved with establishing the institution's pricing policies and practices. Using the accumulated information, the examiner should evaluate the following, as applicable:

- Underwriting guidelines, policies, and standards.
- Descriptions of credit scoring systems, including a list of factors scored, cutoff scores, extent of validation, and any guidance for handling overrides and exceptions. (Refer to Part A of the "Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring" section of the Appendix for guidance.)

- Applicable pricing policies, risk-based pricing models, and guidance for exercising discretion over loan terms and conditions.
- Descriptions of any compensation system, including whether compensation is related to, loan production or pricing.
- The institution's formal and informal relationships with any finance companies, subprime mortgage or consumer lending entities, or similar institutions.
- Loan application forms.
- Home Mortgage Disclosure Act – Loan Application Register (HMDA-LAR) or loan registers and lists of declined applications.
- Description(s) of databases maintained for loan product(s) to be reviewed.
- Records detailing policy exceptions or overrides, exception reporting and monitoring processes.
- Copies of any consumer complaints alleging discrimination and related loan files.
- Compliance program materials (particularly fair lending policies), training manuals, organization charts, as well as record keeping, monitoring protocols, and internal controls.
- Copies of any available marketing materials or descriptions of current or previous marketing plans or programs or pre-screened solicitations.

Step Two: Identify Compliance Program Discrimination Risk Factors

Review information from agency examination work papers, institutional records and any available discussions with management representatives in sufficient detail to understand the organization, staffing, training, recordkeeping, auditing, policies and procedures of the institution's fair lending compliance systems. Review these systems and note the following risk factors:

- C1. Overall institution compliance record is weak.
- C2. Prohibited basis monitoring information required by applicable laws and regulations is nonexistent or incomplete.
- C3. Data and/or recordkeeping problems compromised reliability of previous examination reviews.
- C4. Fair lending problems were previously found in one or more institution products or in institution subsidiaries.

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

- C5. The size, scope, and quality of the compliance management program, including management’s involvement, designation of a compliance officer, and staffing is materially inferior to programs customarily found in institutions of similar size, market demographics, and credit complexity.
- C6. The institution has not updated compliance policies and procedures to reflect changes in law or in agency guidance.
- C7. Fair lending training is nonexistent or weak.

Consider these risk factors and their impact on particular lending products and practices as you conduct the product specific risk review during the scoping steps that follow. Where this review identifies fair lending compliance system deficiencies, give them appropriate consideration as part of the Compliance Management Review in Part II of these procedures.

Step Three: Review Residential Loan Products

Although home mortgages may not be the ultimate subject of every fair lending examination, this product line must at least be considered in the course of scoping every institution that is engaged in the residential lending market.

Divide home mortgage loans into the following groupings: home purchase, home improvement, and refinancings. Subdivide those three groups further if an institution does a significant number of any of the following types or forms of residential lending, and consider them separately:

- Government-insured loans
- Mobile home or manufactured housing loans
- Wholesale, indirect, and brokered loans
- Portfolio lending (including portfolios of Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac rejections)

In addition, determine whether the institution offers any conventional “affordable” housing loan programs special purpose credit programs or other programs that are specifically designed to assist certain borrowers, such as underserved populations and whether their terms and conditions make them incompatible with regular conventional loans for comparative purposes. If so, consider them separately.

If previous examinations have demonstrated the following, then an examiner may limit the focus of the current examination to alternative underwriting or processing centers or to other residential products that have received less scrutiny in the past:

- A strong fair lending compliance program.

- No record of discriminatory transactions at particular decision centers or in particular residential products.
- No indication of a significant change in personnel, operations, or underwriting or pricing policies at those centers or in those residential products.
- No unresolved fair lending complaints, administrative proceedings, litigation, or similar factors.
- No discretion to set price or credit terms and conditions in particular decision centers or for particular residential products.

Step Four: Identify Residential Lending Discrimination Risk Factors

Review the lending policies, marketing plans, underwriting, appraisal and pricing guidelines, broker/agent agreements and loan application forms for each residential loan product that represents an appreciable volume of, or displays noticeable growth in, the institution’s residential lending.

- Review also any available data regarding the geographic distribution of the institution’s loan originations with respect to the race and national origin percentages of the census tracts within its assessment area or, if different, its residential loan product lending area(s).
- Conduct interviews of loan officers and other employees or agents in the residential lending process concerning adherence to and understanding of the above policies and guidelines as well as any relevant operating practices.
- In the course of conducting the foregoing inquiries, look for the following risk factors (factors are numbered alphanumerically to coincide with the type of factor, e.g., “O” for “overt”; “P” for “pricing,” etc.).

NOTE: For risk factors below that are marked with an asterisk (*), examiners need not attempt to calculate the indicated ratios for racial or national origin characteristics when the institution is not a HMDA reporter. However, consideration should be given in such cases to whether or not such calculations should be made based on gender or racial-ethnic surrogates.

Overt indicators of discrimination such as:

- O1. Including explicit prohibited basis identifiers in the institution’s written or oral policies and procedures (underwriting criteria, pricing standards, etc.).
- O2. Collecting information, conducting inquiries or imposing conditions contrary to express requirements of Regulation B.
- O3. Including variables in a credit scoring system that constitute a basis or factor prohibited by Regulation B or, for residential loan scoring systems, the FHAct. (If a credit scoring system scores age, refer to Part E of the Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring section of the Appendix.)

- O4. Statements made by the institution’s officers, employees, or agents which constitute an express or implicit indication that one or more such persons have engaged or do engage in discrimination on a prohibited basis in any aspect of a credit transaction.
- O5. Employee or institutional statements that evidence attitudes based on prohibited basis prejudices or stereotypes.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment in Underwriting such as:

- U1. *Substantial disparities among the approval/denial rates for applicants by monitored prohibited basis characteristic (especially within income categories).
- U2. *Substantial disparities among the application processing times for applicants by monitored prohibited basis characteristic (especially within denial reason groups).
- U3. *Substantially higher proportion of withdrawn/incomplete applications from prohibited basis group applicants than from other applicants.
- U4. Vague or unduly subjective underwriting criteria.
- U5. Lack of clear guidance on making exceptions to underwriting criteria, including credit scoring overrides.
- U6. Lack of clear loan file documentation regarding reasons for any exceptions to standard underwriting criteria, including credit scoring overrides.
- U7. Relatively high percentages of either exceptions to underwriting criteria or overrides of credit score cutoffs.
- U8. Loan officer or broker compensation based on loan volume (especially loans approved per period of time).
- U9. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in loan processing or in approving/denying residential loans.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment in Pricing (interest rates, fees, or points) such as:

- P1. Financial incentives for loan officers or brokers to charge higher prices (including interest rate, fees and points). Special attention should be given to situations where financial incentives are accompanied by broad pricing discretion (as in P2), such as through the use of overages or yield spread premiums.
- P2. Presence of broad discretion in loan pricing (including interest rate, fees and points), such as through overages, underages or yield spread premiums. Such discretion may be present even when institutions provide rate sheets and fees schedules, if loan officers or brokers are permitted to deviate from those rates and fees without clear and objective criteria.

- P3. Use of risk-based pricing that is not based on objective criteria or applied consistently.
- P4. *Substantial disparities among prices being quoted or charged to applicants who differ as to their monitored prohibited basis characteristics.
- P5. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in residential loan pricing.
- P6. *In mortgage pricing, disparities in the incidence or rate spreads³ of higher-priced lending by prohibited basis characteristics as reported in the HMDA data.
- P7. *A loan program that contains only borrowers from a prohibited basis group, or has significant differences in the percentages of prohibited basis groups, especially in the absence of a Special Purpose Credit Program under ECOA.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment by Steering such as:

- S1. Lack of clear, objective and consistently implemented standards for (i) referring applicants to subsidiaries, affiliates, or lending channels within the institution (ii) classifying applicants as “prime” or “sub-prime” borrowers, or (iii) deciding what kinds of alternative loan products should be offered or recommended to applicants (product placement).
- S2. Financial incentives for loan officers or brokers to place applicants in nontraditional products (i.e., negative amortization, “interest only”, “payment option” adjustable rate mortgages) or higher cost products.
- S3. For an institution that offers different products based on credit risk levels, any significant differences in percentages of prohibited basis groups in each of the alternative loan product categories.
- S4. *Significant differences in the percentage of prohibited basis applicants in loan products or products with specific features relative to control group applicants. Special attention should be given to products and features that have potentially negative consequences for applicants (i.e., non-traditional mortgages, prepayment penalties, lack of escrow requirements, or credit life insurance).
- S5. *For an institution that has one or more sub-prime mortgage subsidiaries or affiliates, any significant differences, by loan product, in the percentage of prohibited basis applicants of the institution compared to the percentage of prohibited basis applicants of the subsidiary(ies) or affiliate(s).

³ Regulation C, Section 203.4(a)(12)

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

- S6. *For an institution that has one or more lending channels that originate the same loan product, any significant differences in the percentage of prohibited basis applicants in one of the lending channels compared to the percentage of prohibited basis applicants of the other lending channel.
- S7. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in residential loan pricing or product placement.
- S8. *For an institution with sub-prime mortgage subsidiaries, a concentration of those subsidiaries' branches in minority areas relative to its other branches.

Indicators of potential discriminatory Redlining such as:

- R1. *Significant differences, as revealed in HMDA data, in the number of applications received, withdrawn, approved not accepted, and closed for incompleteness or loans originated in those areas in the institution's market that have relatively high concentrations of minority group residents compared with areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.
- R2. *Significant differences between approval/denial rates for all applicants (minority and non-minority) in areas with relatively high concentrations of minority group residents compared with areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.
- R3. *Significant differences between denial rates based on insufficient collateral for applicants from areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents and those areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.
- R4. *Significant differences in the number of originations of higher-priced loans or loans with potentially negative consequences for borrowers, (i.e., non-traditional mortgages, prepayment penalties, lack of escrow requirements) in areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents compared with areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.
- R5. Other patterns of lending identified during the most recent CRA examination that differ by the concentration of minority residents.
- R6. Explicit demarcation of credit product markets that excludes MSAs, political subdivisions, census tracts, or other geographic areas within the institution's lending market or CRA assessment areas and having relatively high concentrations of minority residents.

- R7. Difference in services available or hours of operation at branch offices located in areas with concentrations of minority residents when compared to branch offices located in areas with concentrations of non-minority residents.
- R8. Policies on receipt and processing of applications, pricing, conditions, or appraisals and valuation, or on any other aspect of providing residential credit that vary between areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents and those areas with relatively low concentrations of minority residents.
- R9. The institution's CRA assessment area appears to have been drawn to exclude areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents.
- R10. Employee statements that reflect an aversion to doing business in areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents.
- R11. Complaints or other allegations by consumers or community representatives that the institution excludes or restricts access to credit for areas with relatively high concentrations of minority residents. Examiners should review complaints against the institution filed either with their agency or the institution; the CRA public comment file; community contact forms; and the responses to questions about redlining, discrimination, and discouragement of applications, and about meeting the needs of racial or national origin minorities, asked as part of obtaining local perspectives on the performance of financial institutions during prior CRA examinations.
- R12. An institution that has most of its branches in predominantly non-minority neighborhoods at the same time that the institution's sub-prime mortgage subsidiary has branches which are located primarily in predominantly minority neighborhoods.

Indicators of potential disparate treatment in Marketing of residential products, such as:

- M1. Advertising patterns or practices that a reasonable person would believe indicate prohibited basis customers are less desirable.
- M2. Advertising only in media serving non-minority areas of the market.
- M3. Marketing through brokers or other agents that the institution knows (or has reason to know) would serve only one racial or ethnic group in the market.
- M4. Use of marketing programs or procedures for residential loan products that exclude one or more regions or geographies within the institutions assessment or marketing area that have significantly higher percentages of minority group residents than does the remainder of the assessment or marketing area.

M5. Using mailing or other distribution lists or other marketing techniques for pre-screened or other offerings of residential loan products that:

- Explicitly exclude groups of prospective borrowers on a prohibited basis; or
- Exclude geographies (e.g., census tracts, ZIP codes, etc.) within the institution's marketing area that have significantly higher percentages of minority group residents than does the remainder of the marketing area.

M6. *Proportion of prohibited basis applicants is significantly lower than that group's representation in the total population of the market area.

M7. Consumer complaints alleging discrimination in advertising or marketing loans.

Step Five: Organize and Focus Residential Risk Analysis

Review the risk factors identified in Step 4 and, for each loan product that displays risk factors, articulate the possible discriminatory effects encountered and organize the examination of those loan products in accordance with the following guidance. For complex issues regarding these factors, consult with agency supervisory staff.

- Where overt evidence of discrimination, as described in factors O1-O5, has been found in connection with a product, document those findings as described in Part III, B, besides completing the remainder of the planned examination analysis.
- Where any of the risk factors U1-U9 are present, consider conducting an underwriting comparative file analysis as described in Part III, C.
- Where any of the risk factors P1-P7 are present, consider conducting a pricing comparative file analysis as described in Part III, D.
- Where any of the risk factors S1-S8 are present, consider conducting a steering analysis as described in Part III, E.
- Where any of the risk factors R1-R12 are present, consider conducting an analysis for redlining as described in Part III, G.
- Where any of the risk factors M1-M7 are present, consider conducting a marketing analysis as described in Part III, H.
- Where an institution uses age in any credit scoring system, consider conducting an examination analysis of that credit scoring system's compliance with the requirements of Regulation B as described in Part III, I.

Step Six: Identify Consumer Lending Discrimination Risk Factors

For any consumer loan products selected in Step One for risk analysis, examiners should conduct a risk factor review similar to that conducted for residential lending products in Steps Three through Five, above. Examiners should consult with agency supervisory staff regarding the potential use of surrogates to identify possible prohibited basis group individuals.

NOTE: The term surrogate in this context refers to any factor related to a loan applicant that potentially identifies that applicant's race, color, or other prohibited basis characteristic in instances where no direct evidence of that characteristic is available. Thus, in consumer lending, where monitoring data is generally unavailable, a Hispanic or Asian surname could constitute a surrogate for an applicant's race or national origin because the examiner can assume that the institution (which can rebut the presumption) perceived the person to be Hispanic or Asian. Similarly, an applicant's given name could serve as a surrogate for his or her gender. A surrogate for a prohibited basis group characteristic may be used to set up a comparative analysis with control group applicants or borrowers.

Examiners should then follow the rules in Steps Three through Five, above and identify the possible discriminatory patterns encountered and consider examining those products determined to have sufficient risk of discriminatory conduct.

Step Seven: Identify Commercial Lending Discrimination Risk Factors

Where an institution does a substantial amount of lending in the commercial lending market, most notably small business lending and the product has not recently been examined or the underwriting standards have changed since the last examination of the product, the examiner should consider conducting a risk factor review similar to that performed for residential lending products, as feasible, given the limited information available. Such an analysis should generally be limited to determining risk potential based on risk factors U4- U8; P1-P3; R5-R7; and M1-M3.

If the institution makes commercial loans insured by the Small Business Administration (SBA), determine from agency supervisory staff whether SBA loan data (which codes race and other factors) are available for the institution and evaluate those data pursuant to instructions accompanying them.

For large institutions reporting small business loans for CRA purposes and where the institution also voluntarily geocodes loan denials, look for material discrepancies in ratios of approval-to-denial rates for applications in areas with high concentrations of minority residents compared to areas with concentrations of non-minority residents.

Articulate the possible discriminatory patterns identified and consider further examining those products determined to have sufficient risk of discriminatory conduct in accordance with the procedures for commercial lending described in Part III, F.

Step Eight: Complete the Scoping Process

To complete the scoping process, the examiner should review the results of the preceding steps and select those focal points that warrant examination, based on the relative risk levels identified above. In order to remain within the agency's resource allowances, the examiner may need to choose a smaller number of focal points from among all those selected on the basis of risk. In such instances, set the scope by first, prioritizing focal points on the basis of (i) high number and/or relative severity of risk factors; (ii) high data quality and other factors affecting the likelihood of obtaining reliable examination results; (iii) high loan volume and the likelihood of widespread risk to applicants and borrowers; and (iv) low quality of any compliance program and, second, selecting for examination review as many focal points as resources permit.

Where the judgment process among competing focal points is a close call, information learned in the phase of conducting the compliance management review can be used to further refine the examiner's choices.

Part II — Compliance Management Review

The Compliance Management Review enables the examination team to determine:

- The intensity of the current examination based on an evaluation of the compliance management measures employed by an institution.
- The reliability of the institution's practices and procedures for ensuring continued fair lending compliance.

Generally, the review should focus on:

- Determining whether the policies and procedures of the institution enable management to prevent, or to identify and self-correct, illegal disparate treatment in the transactions that relate to the products and issues identified for further analysis under Part I of these procedures.
- Obtaining a thorough understanding of the manner by which management addresses its fair lending responsibilities with respect to (a) the institution's lending practices and standards, (b) training and other application-processing aids, (c) guidance to employees or agents in dealing with customers, and (d) its marketing or other promotion of products and services.

To conduct this review, examiners should consider institutional records and interviews with appropriate management personnel in the lending, compliance, audit, and legal functions. The examiner should also refer to the Compliance Management Analysis Checklist contained in the Appendix to evaluate the strength of the compliance programs in terms of their capacity to prevent, or to identify and self-correct, fair lending violations in connection with the products or issues selected for analysis. Based on this evaluation:

- Set the intensity of the transaction analysis by minimizing sample sizes within the guidelines established in Part III and the Fair Lending Sample Size Tables in the Appendix, to the extent warranted by the strength and thoroughness of the compliance programs applicable to those focal points selected for examination.
- Identify any compliance program or system deficiencies that merit correction or improvement and present these to management in accordance with Part IV of these procedures.

Where an institution performs a self-evaluation or has voluntarily disclosed the report or results of a self-test of any product or issue that is within the scope of the examination and has been selected for analysis pursuant to Part I of these procedures, examiners may streamline the examination, consistent with agency guidance, provided the self-test or self-evaluation meets the requirements set forth in Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination located in the Appendix.

Part III — Examination Procedures⁴

Once the scope and intensity of the examination have been determined, assess the institution's fair lending performance by applying the appropriate procedures that follow to each of the examination focal points already selected.

A. Verify Accuracy of Data

Prior to any analysis and preferably before the scoping process, examiners should assess the accuracy of the data being reviewed. Data verifications should follow specific protocols (sampling, size, etc.) intended to ensure the validity of the review. For example, where an institution's LAR data is relied upon, examiners should generally validate the accuracy of the institution's submitted data by selecting a sample of LAR entries and verifying that the information noted on the LAR was reported according to instructions by comparing information contained in the loan file for each sampled loan. If the LAR data are inconsistent with the information contained in the loan files, depending on the nature of the errors, examiners may not be able to proceed with a fair lending analysis until the LAR data have been corrected by the institution. In cases where inaccuracies impede the examination, examiners should direct the institution to take action to ensure data integrity (data scrubbing, monitoring, training, etc.).

NOTE: While the procedures refer to the use of HMDA data, other data sources should be considered, especially in the case of non-HMDA reporters or institutions that originate loans but are not required to report them on a LAR.

B. Documenting Overt Evidence of Disparate Treatment

Where the scoping process or any other source identifies overt evidence of disparate treatment, the examiner should assess the nature of the policy or statement and the extent of its impact on affected applicants by conducting the following analysis.

Step 1. Where the indicator(s) of overt discrimination are found in or based on a written policy (for example, a credit scorecard) or communication, determine and document:

- a. The precise language of the apparently discriminatory policy or communication and the nature of the fair lending concerns that it raises.
- b. The institution's stated purpose in adopting the policy or communication and the identity of the person on whose authority it was issued or adopted.
- c. How and when the policy or communication was put into effect.
- d. How widely the policy or communication was applied.
- e. Whether and to what extent applicants were adversely affected by the policy or communication.

Step 2. Where any indicator of overt discrimination was an oral statement or unwritten practice, determine and document:

- a. The precise nature of both the statement, or practice, and of the fair lending concerns that they raise.
- b. The identity of the persons making the statement or applying the practice and their descriptions of the reasons for it and the persons authorizing or directing the use of the statement or practice.
- c. How and when the statement or practice was disseminated or put into effect.
- d. How widely the statement or practice was disseminated or applied.
- e. Whether and to what extent applicants were adversely affected by the statement or practice.

Assemble findings and supporting documentation for presentation to management in connection with Part IV of these procedures.

C. Transactional Underwriting Analysis — Residential and Consumer Loans.

Step 1. Set Sample Size

- a. For each focal point selected for this analysis, two samples will be utilized: (i) prohibited basis group denials and (ii) control group approvals, both identified either directly from monitoring information in the case of residential loan applications or through the use of application data or surrogates in the case of consumer applications.
- b. Refer to Fair Lending Sample Size Tables, Table A in the Appendix and determine the size of the initial sample for each focal point, based on the number of prohibited basis group denials and the number of control group approvals by the institution during the twelve month (or calendar year) period of lending activity preceding the examination.

In the event that the number of denials and/or approvals acted on during the preceding 12 month period substantially exceeds the maximum sample size shown in Table A, reduce the time period from which that sample is selected to a shorter period. (In doing so, make every effort to select a period in which the institution's underwriting standards are most representative of those in effect during the full 12 month period preceding the examination.)

- c. If the number of prohibited basis group denials or control group approvals for a given focal point that were acted upon during the 12 month period referenced in 1.b., above, do not meet the minimum standards set forth in the Sample Size Table, examiners need not attempt a transactional analysis for that focal point. Where other risk factors favor analyzing such a focal point, consult with agency supervisory staff on possible alternative methods of judgmental comparative analysis.
- d. If agency policy calls for a different approach to sampling (e.g., a form of statistical analysis, a mathematical formula, or an automated tool) for a limited class of institutions, examiners should follow that approach.

Step 2. Determine Sample Composition

- a. To the extent the institution maintains records of loan outcomes resulting from exceptions to its credit underwriting standards or other policies (e.g., overrides to credit score cutoffs), request such records for both approvals and denials, sorted by loan product and branch or decision center, if the institution can do so.

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

Include in the initial sample for each focal point all exceptions or overrides applicable to that focal point.

- b. Using HMDA/LAR data or, for consumer loans, comparable loan register data to the extent available, choose approved and denied applications based on selection criteria that will maximize the likelihood of finding marginal approved and denied applicants, as discussed below.
- c. To the extent that the above factors are inapplicable or other selection criteria are unavailable or do not facilitate selection of the entire sample size of files, complete the initial sample selection by making random file selections from the appropriate sample categories in the Sample Size Table.

Step 3. Compare Approved and Denied Applications

Overview: Although a creditor's written policies and procedures may appear to be nondiscriminatory, lending personnel may interpret or apply policies in a discriminatory manner. In order to detect any disparate treatment among applicants, the examiner should first eliminate all but "marginal transactions" (see 3.b. below) from each selected focal point sample. Then, a detailed profile of each marginal applicant's qualifications, the level of assistance received during the application process, the reasons for denial, the loan terms, and other information should be recorded on an Applicant Profile Spreadsheet. Once profiled, the examiner can compare the target and control groups for evidence that similarly qualified applicants have been treated differently as to either the institution's credit decision or the quality of assistance provided.

a. Create Applicant Profile Spreadsheet

Based upon the institution's written and/or articulated credit standards and loan policies, identify categories of data that should be recorded for each applicant and provide a field for each of these categories on a worksheet or computerized spreadsheet. Certain data (income, loan amount, debt, etc.) should always be included in the spreadsheet, while the other data selected will be tailored for each loan product and institution based on applicable underwriting criteria and such issues as branch location and underwriter. Where credit bureau scores and/or application scores are an element of the institution's underwriting criteria (or where such information is regularly recorded in loan files, whether expressly used or not), include a data field for this information in the spread sheet.

In order to facilitate comparisons of the quality of assistance provided to target and control group applicants, respectively, every work sheet should provide a "comments" block appropriately labeled as the site for recording observations from the file or interviews regarding how an applicant was, or was not, assisted in overcoming credit deficiencies or otherwise qualifying for approval.

b. Complete Applicant Profiles

From the application files sample for each focal point, complete applicant profiles for selected denied and approved applications as follows:

- A principal goal is to identify cases where similarly qualified prohibited basis and control group applicants had different credit outcomes, because the agencies have found that discrimination, including differences in granting assistance during the approval process, is more likely to occur with respect to applicants who are not either clearly qualified or unqualified (i.e., "marginal" applicants). The examiner-in-charge should, during the following steps, judgmentally select from the initial sample only those denied and approved applications which constitute marginal transactions. (See Appendix on Identifying Marginal Transactions for guidance)
- If few marginal control group applicants are identified from the initial sample, review additional files of approved control group applicants. This will either increase the number of marginal approvals or confirm that marginal approvals are so infrequent that the marginal denials are unlikely to involve disparate treatment.
- The judgmental selection of both marginal-denied and marginal-approved applicant loan files should be done together, in a "back and forth" manner, to facilitate close matches and a more consistent definition of "marginal" between these two types of loan files.
- Once the marginal files have been identified, the data elements called for on the profile spreadsheet are extracted or noted and entered.
- While conducting the preceding step, the examiner should simultaneously look for and document on the spreadsheet any evidence found in marginal files regarding the following:
 - the extent of any assistance, including both affirmative aid and waivers or partial waivers of credit policy provisions or requirements, that appears to have been provided to marginal-approved control group applicants which enabled them to overcome one or more credit deficiencies, such as excessive debt-to-income ratios; and
 - the extent to which marginal-denied target group applicants with similar deficiencies were, or were not, provided similar affirmative aid, waivers or other forms of assistance.

c. Review and Compare Profiles

- For each focal point, review all marginal profiles to determine if the underwriter followed institution lending policies in denying applications and whether the reason(s) for denial were supported by facts documented in the loan file and properly disclosed to the applicant pursuant to Regulation B. If any (a) unexplained deviations from credit standards, (b) inaccurate reasons for denial or (c) incorrect disclosures are noted, (whether in a judgmental underwriting system, a scored system or a mixed system) the examiner should obtain an explanation from the underwriter and document the response on an appropriate workpaper.

NOTE: In constructing the applicant profiles to be compared, examiners must adjust the facts compared so that assistance, waivers, or acts of discretion are treated consistently between applicants. For example, if a control group applicant's DTI ratio was lowered to 42% because the institution decided to include short-term overtime income and a prohibited basis group applicant who was denied due to "insufficient income" would have had his ratio drop from 46% to 41% if his short-term overtime income had been considered, then the examiners should consider 41%, not 46%, in determining the benchmark.

- For each reason for denial identified within the target group, rank the denied prohibited basis applicants, beginning with the applicant whose qualification(s) related to that reason for denial were least deficient. (The top-ranked denied applicant in each such ranking will be referred to below as the "benchmark" applicant.)
- Compare each marginal control group approval to the benchmark applicant in each reason-for-denial ranking developed in step (b), above. If there are no approvals who are equally or less qualified, then there are no instances of disparate treatment for the institution to account for. For all such approvals that appear no better qualified than the denied benchmark applicant
 - identify the approved loan on the worksheet or spreadsheet as an "overlap approval," and
 - compare that overlap approval with other marginal prohibited basis denials in the ranking to determine whether additional overlaps exist. If so, identify all overlapping approvals and denials as above.
- Where the focal point involves use of a credit scoring system, the analysis for disparate treatment is similar to the procedures set forth in (c) above, and should focus primarily on overrides of the scoring system itself. For guidance on this type of analysis, refer to Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring, Part C in the Appendix.

Step 4. If there is some evidence of violations in the underwriting process but not enough to clearly establish the existence of a pattern or practice, the examiner should expand the sample as necessary to determine whether a pattern or practice does or does not exist.

Step 5. Discuss all findings resulting from the above comparisons with management and document both the findings and all conversations on an appropriate worksheet.

D. Analyzing Potential Disparities in Pricing and Other Terms and Conditions.

Depending on the intensity of the examination and the size of the borrower population to be reviewed, the analysis of decisions on pricing and other terms and conditions may involve a comparative file review, statistical analysis, a combination of the two, or other specialized technique used by an agency. Each examination process assesses an institution's credit-decision standards and whether decisions on pricing and other terms and conditions are applied to borrowers without regard to a prohibited basis.

The procedures below encompass the examination steps for a comparative file review. Examiners should consult their own agency's procedures for detailed guidance where appropriate. For example, when file reviews are undertaken in conjunction with statistical analysis, the guidance on specific sample sizes referenced below may not apply.

Step 1. Determine Sample Selection

Examiners may review data in its entirety or restrict their analysis to a sample depending on the examination approach used and the quality of the institution's compliance management system. The Fair Lending Sample Size Tables in the Appendix provide general guidance about appropriate sample sizes. Generally, the sample size should be based on the number of prohibited basis group and control group originations for each focal point selected during the 12 months preceding the examination and the outcome of the compliance management system analysis conducted in Part II. When possible, examiners should request specific loan files in advance and request that the institution have them available for review at the start of the examination.

Step 2. Determine Sample Composition and Create Applicant Profiles

Examiners should tailor their sample and subsequent analysis to the specific factors that the institution considers when determining its pricing, terms, and conditions. For example, while decisions on pricing, and other terms and conditions are part of an institution's underwriting process, general underwriting criteria should not be used in the analysis if they are not relevant to the term or condition to be reviewed. Additionally, consideration should be limited to factors which examiners determine to be legitimate.

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

While the period for review should be 12-months, prohibited basis group and control group borrowers should be grouped and reviewed around a range of dates during which the institution's practices for the term or condition being reviewed were the same. Generally, examiners should use the loan origination date or the loan application date.

Identify data to be analyzed for each focal point to be reviewed and record this information for each borrower on a spreadsheet to ensure a valid comparison regarding terms and conditions. For example, in certain cases, an institution may offer slightly differentiated products with significant pricing implications to borrowers. In these cases, it may be appropriate to group these procedures together for the purposes of evaluation.

Step 3. Review Terms and Conditions; Compare with Borrower Outcomes

- a. Review all loan terms and conditions (rates, points, fees, maturity variations, LTVs, collateral requirements, etc.) with special attention to those which are left, in whole or in part, to the discretion of loan officers or underwriters. For each such term or condition, identify (a) any prohibited basis group borrowers in the sample who appear to have been treated unfavorably with respect to that term or condition and (b) any control group borrowers who appear to have been treated favorably with respect to that term or condition. The examiner's analysis should be thoroughly documented in the workpapers.
- b. Identify from the sample universe any control group borrowers who appear to have been treated more favorably than one or more of the above-identified prohibited basis group borrowers and who have pricing or creditworthiness factors (under the institution's standards) that are equal to or less favorable than the prohibited basis group borrowers.
- c. Obtain explanations from the appropriate loan officer or other employee for any differences that exist and reanalyze the sample for evidence of discrimination.
- d. If there is some evidence of violations in the imposition of terms and conditions but not enough to clearly establish the existence of a pattern or practice, the examiner should expand the sample as necessary to determine whether a pattern or practice does or does not exist.
- e. Discuss differences in comparable loans with the institution's management and document all conversations on an appropriate worksheet. For additional guidance on evaluating management's responses, refer to Part A, 1 – 5, Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment in the Appendix.

E. Steering Analysis

An institution that offers a variety of lending products or product features, either through one channel or through multiple channels, may benefit consumers by offering greater choices and meeting the diverse needs of applicants. Greater product offerings and multiple channels, however, may also create a fair lending risk that applicants will be illegally steered to certain choices based on prohibited characteristics.

Several examples illustrate potential fair lending risk:

- An institution that offers different lending products based on credit risk levels may present opportunities for loan officers or brokers to illegally steer applicants to the higher-risk products.
- An institution that offers nontraditional loan products or loan products with potentially onerous terms (such as prepayment penalties) may present opportunities for loan officers or brokers to illegally steer applicants to certain products or features.
- An institution that offers prime or sub-prime products through different channels may present opportunities for applicants to be illegally steered to the sub-prime channel.

The distinction between guiding consumers toward a specific product or feature and illegal steering centers on whether the institution did so on a prohibited basis, rather than based on an applicant's needs or other legitimate factors. It is not necessary to demonstrate financial harm to a group that has been "steered." It is enough to demonstrate that action was taken on a prohibited basis regardless of the ultimate financial outcome. If the scoping analysis reveals the presence of one or more risk factors S1 through S8 for any selected focal point, consult with agency supervisory staff about conducting a steering analysis as described below.

Step 1. Clarify what options are available to applicants

Through interviews with appropriate personnel of the institution and review of policy manuals, procedure guidelines and other directives, obtain and verify the following information for each product-alternative product pairing or grouping identified above:

- a. All underwriting criteria for the product or feature and their alternatives that are offered by the institution or by a subsidiary or affiliate. Examples of products may include stated income, negative amortization, and options ARMs. Examples of terms and features include prepayment penalties and escrow requirements. The distinction between a product, term, and feature may vary institution to institution. For example, some institutions may consider “stated income” a feature, while others may consider that a distinct product.

- b. Pricing or other costs applicable to the product and the alternative product(s), including interest rates, points, and all fees.

Step 2. Document the policies, conditions, or criteria that have been adopted by the institution for determining how referrals are to be made and choices presented to applicants.

- a. Obtain not only information regarding the product or feature offered by the institution and alternatives offered by subsidiaries/affiliates, but also information on alternatives offered solely by the institution itself.
- b. Obtain any information regarding a subsidiary of the institution directly from that entity, but seek information regarding an affiliate or holding company subsidiary only from the institution itself.
- c. Obtain all appropriate documentation and provide a written summary of all discussions with loan personnel and managers.
- d. Obtain documentation and/or employee estimates as to the volume of referrals made from or to the institution, for each product, during a relevant time period.
- e. Resolve to the extent possible any discrepancies between information found in the institution’s documents and information obtained in discussions with loan personnel and managers by conducting appropriate follow-up interviews.
- f. Identify any policies and procedures established by the institution and/or the subsidiary or affiliate for (i) referring a person who applies to the institution, but does not meet its criteria, to another internal lending channel, subsidiary or affiliate; (ii) offering one or more alternatives to a person who applies to the institution for a specific product or feature, but does not meet its criteria; or (iii) referring a person who applies to a subsidiary or affiliate for its product, but who appears qualified for a loan from the institution, to the institution; or referring a person who applies through one internal lending channel for a product, but who appears to be qualified for a loan through another lending channel to that particular lending channel.
- g. Determine whether loan personnel are encouraged, through financial incentives or otherwise, to make referrals, either from the institution to a subsidiary/affiliate or vice versa. Similarly, determine whether the institution provides financial incentives related to products and features.

Step 3. Determine how referral decisions are made and documented within the institution.

Determine how a referral is made to another internal lending channel, subsidiary, or affiliate. Determine the reason for referral and how it is documented.

Step 4. Determine to what extent individual loan personnel are able to exercise personal discretion in deciding what loan products or other credit alternatives will be made available to a given applicant.

Step 5. Determine whether the institution’s stated policies, conditions, or criteria in fact are adhered to by individual decision makers. If not, does it appear that different policies or practices are actually in effect?

Enter data from the prohibited basis group sample on the spread sheets and determine whether the institution is, in fact, applying its criteria as stated. For example, if one announced criterion for receiving a “more favorable” prime mortgage loan was a back end debt ratio of no more than 38%, review the spread sheets to determine whether that criteria was adhered to. If the institution’s actual treatment of prohibited basis group applicants appears to differ from its stated criteria, document such differences for subsequent discussion with management.

Step 6. To the extent that individual loan personnel have any discretion in deciding what products and features to offer applicants, conduct a comparative analysis to determine whether that discretion has been exercised in a nondiscriminatory manner.

Compare the institution’s or subsidiary/affiliate’s treatment of control group and prohibited basis group applicants by adapting the “benchmark” and “overlap” technique discussed in Part III, Section C of these procedures. For purposes of this Steering Analysis, that technique should be conducted as follows:

- a. For each focal point to be analyzed, select a sample of prohibited basis group applicants who received “less favorable” treatment (e.g., referral to a finance company or a subprime mortgage subsidiary or counteroffers of less favorable product alternatives).

NOTE: In selecting the sample, follow the guidance of Fair Lending Sample Size Tables, Table B in the Appendix and select “marginal applicants” as instructed in Part III, Section C, above.

- b. Prepare a spread sheet for the sample which contains data entry categories for those underwriting and/or referral criteria that the institution identified in Step 1.b as used in reaching underwriting and referral decisions between the pairs of products.
- c. Review the “less favorably” treated prohibited basis

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

group sample and rank this sample from least qualified to most qualified.

- d. From the sample, identify the best qualified prohibited basis group applicant, based on the criteria identified for the control group, above. This applicant will be the “benchmark” applicant. Rank order the remaining applicants from best to least qualified.
- e. Select a sample of control group applicants. Identify those who were treated “more favorably” with respect to the same product-alternative product pair as the prohibited basis group. (Again refer to the Sample Size Table B and marginal applicant processes noted above in selecting the sample.)
- f. Compare the qualifications of the benchmark applicant with those of the control group applicants, beginning with the least qualified member of that sample. Any control group applicant who appears less qualified than the benchmark applicant should be identified on the spreadsheet as a “control group overlap.”
- g. Compare all control group overlaps with other, less qualified prohibited basis group applicants to determine whether additional overlaps exist
- h. Document all overlaps as possible disparities in treatment. Discuss all overlaps and related findings (e.g., any differences between stated and actual underwriting and/or referral criteria) with management, documenting all such conversations.

Step 7. Examiners should consult with their agency’s supervisory staff if they see a need to contact control group or prohibited basis group applicants to substantiate the steering analysis.

F. Transactional Underwriting Analysis — Commercial Loans.

Overview: Unlike consumer credit, where loan products and prices are generally homogenous and underwriting involves the evaluation of a limited number of credit variables, commercial loans are generally unique and underwriting methods and loan pricing may vary depending on a large number of credit variables. The additional credit analysis that is involved in underwriting commercial credit products will entail additional complexity in the sampling and discrimination analysis process. Although ECOA prohibits discrimination in all commercial credit activities of a covered institution, the agencies recognize that small businesses (sole proprietorships, partnerships, and small, closely-held corporations) may have less experience in borrowing. Small businesses may have fewer borrowing options, which may make them more vulnerable to discrimination. Therefore, in implementing these procedures, examinations should generally be focused on small business credit (commercial applicants that had gross revenues of $1,000,000 or less in the preceding fiscal year), absent some evidence that a focus on other commercial products would be more appropriate.

Step 1. Understand Commercial Loan Policies

For the commercial product line selected for analysis, the examiner should first review credit policy guidelines and interview appropriate commercial loan managers and officers to obtain written and articulated standards used by the institution in evaluating commercial loan applications.

NOTE: Examiners should consult their own agencies for guidance on when a comparative analysis or statistical analysis is appropriate, and follow their agencies procedures for conducting such a review/analysis.

Step 2. Conduct Comparative File Review

- a. Select all (or a maximum of ten) denied applications that were acted on during the three month period prior to the examination. To the extent feasible, include denied applications from businesses that are (i) located in minority and/or integrated geographies or (ii) appear to be owned by women or minority group members, based on the names of the principals shown on applications or related documents. (In the case of institutions that do a significant volume of commercial lending, consider reviewing more than ten applications.)
- b. For each of the denied commercial applications selected, record specific information from loan files and through interviews with the appropriate loan officer(s), about the principal owners, the purpose of the loan, and the specific, pertinent financial information about the commercial enterprise (including type of business — retail, manufacturing, service, etc.), that was used by the institution to evaluate the credit request. Maintenance or use of data that identifies prohibited basis characteristics of those involved with the business (either in approved or denied loan applications) should be evaluated as a potential violation of Regulation B.
- c. Select ten approved loans that appear to be similar with regard to business type, purpose of loan, loan amount, loan terms, and type of collateral, as the denied loans sampled. For example, if the denied loan sample includes applications for lines of credit to cover inventory purchases for retail businesses, the examiner should select approved applications for lines of credit from retail businesses.
- d. For each approved commercial loan application selected, obtain and record information parallel to that obtained for denied applications.
- e. The examiner should first compare the credit criteria considered in the credit process for each of the approved and denied applications to established underwriting standards, rather than comparing files directly.

- f. The examiner should identify any deviations from credit standards for both approved and denied credit requests, and differences in loan terms granted for approved credit requests.
- g. The examiner should discuss each instance where deviations from credit standards and terms were noted, but were not explained in the file, with the commercial credit underwriter. Each discussion should be documented.

Step 3. Conduct Targeted Sampling

- a. If deviations from credit standards or pricing are not sufficiently explained by other factors either documented in the credit file or the commercial underwriter was not able to provide a reasonable explanation, the examiner should determine if deviations were detrimental to any protected classes of applicants.
- b. The examiner should consider employing the same techniques for determining race and gender characteristics of commercial applicants as those outlined in the consumer loan sampling procedures.
- c. If it is determined that there are members of one or more prohibited basis groups among commercial credit requests that were not underwritten according to established standards or received less favorable terms, the examiner should select additional commercial loans, where applicants are members of the same prohibited basis group and select similarly situated control group credit requests in order to determine whether there is a pattern or practice of discrimination. These additional files should be selected based on the specific applicant circumstance(s) that appeared to have been viewed differently by lending personnel on a prohibited basis.
- d. If there are not enough similarly situated applicants for comparison in the original sample period to draw a reasonable conclusion, the examiner should expand the sample period. The expanded sample period should generally not go beyond the date of the prior examination.

Sampling Guidelines

- a. Generally, the task of selecting an appropriate expanded sample of prohibited basis and control group applications for commercial loans will require examiner judgment. The examiner should select a sample that is large enough to be able to draw a reasonable conclusion.
- b. The examiner should first select from the applications that were acted on during the initial sample period, but were not included in the initial sample, and select applications from prior time periods as necessary.

- c. The expanded sample should include both approved and denied, prohibited basis and control group applications, where similar credit was requested by similar enterprises for similar purposes.

G. Analysis of Potential Discriminatory “Redlining”

Overview: For purposes of this analysis, traditional “redlining” is a form of illegal disparate treatment in which an institution provides unequal access to credit, or unequal terms of credit, because of the race, color, national origin, or other prohibited characteristic(s) of the residents of the area in which the credit seeker resides or will reside or in which the residential property to be mortgaged is located. Redlining may also include “reverse redlining,” the practice of targeting certain borrowers or areas with less advantageous products or services based on prohibited characteristics.

The redlining analysis may be applied to determine whether, on a prohibited basis:

- an institution fails or refuses to extend credit in certain areas;
- an institution targets certain borrowers or certain areas with less advantageous products;
- an institution makes loans in such an area but at a restricted level or upon less-favorable terms or conditions as compared to contrasting areas; or
- an institution omits or excludes such an area from efforts to market residential loans or solicit customers for residential credit.

This guidance focuses on possible discrimination based on race or national origin. The same analysis could be adapted to evaluate relative access to credit for areas of geographical concentration on other prohibited bases — for example, age.

NOTE: It is true that neither the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) nor the Fair Housing Act (FHA) specifically uses the term “redlining.” However, federal courts as well as agencies that have enforcement responsibilities for the FHA, have interpreted it as prohibiting institutions from having different marketing or lending practices for certain geographic areas, compared to others, where the purpose or effect of such differences would be to discriminate on a prohibited basis. Similarly, the ECOA would prohibit treating applicants for credit differently on the basis of differences in the racial or ethnic composition of their respective neighborhoods.

Like other forms of disparate treatment, redlining can be proven by overt or comparative evidence. If any written or oral policy or statement of the institution (see risk factors R6-

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

10 in Part I, above) suggests that the institution links the racial or national origin character of an area with any aspect of access to or terms of credit, the examiners should refer to the guidance in Section B of this Part III, on documenting and evaluating overt evidence of discrimination.

Overt evidence includes not only explicit statements, but also any geographical terms used by the institution that would, to a reasonable person familiar with the community in question, connote a specific racial or national origin character. For example, if the principal information conveyed by the phrase “north of 110th Street” is that the indicated area is principally occupied by Hispanics, then a policy of not making credit available “north of 110th Street” is overt evidence of potential redlining on the basis of national origin.

Overt evidence is relatively uncommon. Consequently, the redlining analysis usually will focus on comparative evidence (similar to analyses of possible disparate treatment of individual customers) in which the institution’s treatment of areas with contrasting racial or national origin characters is compared.

When the scoping process (including consultation within an agency as called for by agency procedures) indicates that a redlining analysis should be initiated, examiners should complete the following steps of comparative analysis:

1. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution’s CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that have a racial or national origin character;
2. Determine whether any minority area identified in Step 1 appears to be excluded, under-served, selectively excluded from marketing efforts, or otherwise less-favorably treated in any way by the institution;
3. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution’s CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that are non-minority in character and that the institution appears to treat more favorably;
4. Identify the location of any minority areas located just outside the institution’s CRA assessment area and market area for residential products, such that the institution may be purposely avoiding such areas;
5. Obtain the institution’s explanation for the apparent difference in treatment between the areas and evaluate whether it is credible and reasonable; and
6. Obtain and evaluate other information that may support or contradict interpreting identified disparities to be the result of intentional illegal discrimination.

These steps are discussed in detail below.

Using Information Obtained During Scoping

Although the six tasks listed are presented below as examination steps in the order given above, examiners should recognize that a different order may be preferable in any given examination. For example, the institution’s explanation (Step 5) for one of the policies or patterns in question may already be documented in the CRA materials reviewed (Step 1) and the CRA examiners may already have verified it, which may be sufficient for purposes of the redlining analysis.

As another example, as part of the scoping process, the examiners may have reviewed an analysis of the geographic distribution of the institution’s loan originations with respect to the racial and national origin composition of census tracts within its CRA assessment or residential market area. Such analysis might have documented the existence of significant discrepancies between areas, by degree of minority concentration, in loans originated (risk factor R1), approval/denial rates (risk factor R2), and/or rates of denials because of insufficient collateral (risk factor R3). In such a situation in which the scoping process has produced a reliable factual record, the examiners could begin with Step 5 (obtaining an explanation) of the redlining analysis below.

In contrast, when the scoping process only yields partial or questionable information, or when the risk factors on which the redlining analysis is based on complaints or allegations against the institution, Steps 1-4 must be addressed.

Comparative analysis for redlining

Step 1. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution’s CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that are of a racial or national origin minority character.

NOTE: The CRA assessment area can be a convenient unit for redlining analysis because information about it typically already is in hand. However, the CRA assessment area may be too limited. The redlining analysis focuses on the institution’s decisions about how much access to credit to provide to different geographical areas. The areas for which those decisions can best be compared are areas where the institution actually marketed and provided credit and where it could reasonably be expected to have marketed and provided credit. Some of those areas might be beyond or otherwise different from the CRA assessment area.

If there are no areas identifiable for their racial or national origin minority character within the institution’s CRA assessment area or reasonably expected market area for residential products, a redlining analysis is not appropriate. (If there is a substantial but dispersed minority population, potential disparate treatment can be evaluated by a routine comparative file review of applicants.)

This step may have been substantially completed during scoping, but unresolved matters may remain. (For example, several community spokespersons may allege that the institution is redlining, but disagree in defining the area). The examiners should:

- a. Describe as precisely as possible why a specific area is recognized in the community (perceptions of residents, etc.) and/or is objectively identifiable (based on census or other data) as having a particular racial or national origin minority character.
 - The most obvious identifier is the predominant race or national origin of the residents of the area. Examiners should document the percentages of racial or national origin minorities residing within the census tracts that make up the area. Analyzing racial and national origin concentrations in quartiles (such as 0 to <=25%, >25% to <= 50%, >50% to <= 75%, and >75%) or based on majority concentration (0 to <=50%, and >50%) may be helpful. However, examiners should bear in mind that it is illegal for the institution to consider a prohibited factor in any way. For example, an area or neighborhood may only have a minority population of 20%, but if the area's concentration appears related to lending practices, it would be appropriate to use that area's level of concentration in the analysis. Contacts with community groups can be helpful to learn whether there are such subtle features of racial or ethnic character within a particular neighborhood.
 - Geographical groupings that are convenient for CRA may obscure racial patterns. For example, an underserved, low-income, predominantly minority neighborhood that lies within a larger low-income area that primarily consisted of non-minority neighborhoods may seem adequately served when the entire low-income area is analyzed as a unit. However, a racial pattern of underservice to minority areas might be revealed if the low-income minority neighborhood shared a border with an underserved, middle-income, minority area and those two minority areas were grouped together for purposes of analysis.
- b. Describe how the racial or national origin character changes across the suspected redlining area's various boundaries.
- c. Document or estimate the demand for credit, within the minority area. This may include the applicable demographics of the area, including the percentage of homeowners, the median house value, median family income, or the number of small businesses, etc. Review the institution's non-originated loan applications from the suspected redlined areas. If available, review aggregate institution data for loans originated and applications received from the suspected redlined areas. Community contacts may also be helpful in determining the demand for such credit. If the minority area does not have a significant amount of demand for such credit, the area is not appropriate for a redlining analysis.

Step 2. Determine whether any minority area identified in Step 1 is excluded, under-served, selectively excluded from marketing efforts, or otherwise less-favorably treated in any way by the institution.

The examiners should begin with the risk factors identified during the scoping process. The unfavorable treatment may have been substantially documented during scoping and needs only to be finished in this step. If not, this step will verify and measure the extent to which HMDA data show the minority areas identified in Step 1 to be underserved and/or how the institution's explicit policies treat them less favorably.

- a. Review prior CRA lending test analyses to learn whether they have identified any excluded or otherwise under-served areas or other significant geographical disparities in the institution's lending. Determine whether any of those are the minority areas identified in Step 1.
- b. Learn from the institution itself whether, as a matter of policy, it treats any separate or distinct geographical areas within its marketing or service area differently from other areas. This may have been done completely or partially during scoping analysis related to risk factors R5-R9. The differences in treatment can be in marketing, products offered, branch operations (including the services provided and the hours of operation), appraisal practices, application processing, approval requirements, pricing, loan conditions, evaluation of collateral, or any other policy or practice materially related to access to credit. Determine whether any of those less-favored areas are the minority areas identified in Step 1.
- c. Obtain from the institution: (i) its reasons for such differences in policy, (ii) how the differences are implemented, and (iii) any specific conditions that must exist in an area for it to receive the particular treatment (more favorable or less favorable) that the institution has indicated.

Step 3. Identify and delineate any areas within the institution's CRA assessment area and reasonably expected market area for residential products that are non-minority in character and that the institution appears to treat more favorably.

To the extent not already completed during scoping:

- a. Document the percentages of control group and of racial or national origin minorities residing within the census tract(s) that comprise(s) the non-minority area.

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

- b. Document the nature of the housing stock in the area.
- c. Describe, to the extent known, how the institution's practices, policies, or its rate of lending change from less-to more-favorable as one leaves the minority area at its various boundaries. (Examiners should be particularly attentive to instances in which the boundaries between favored and disfavored areas deviate from boundaries the institution would reasonably be expected to follow, such as political boundaries or transportation barriers.)
- d. Examiners should particularly consider whether, within a large area that is composed predominantly of racial or national origin minority households, there are enclaves that are predominantly non-minority or whether, along the area's borders, there are irregularities where the non-minority group is predominant. As part of the overall comparison, examiners should determine whether credit access within those small non-minority areas differs from credit access in the larger minority area.

Step 4. Identify the location of any minority areas located just outside the institution's CRA assessment area and market area for residential products, such that the institution may be purposely avoiding such areas.

Review the analysis from prior CRA examinations of whether the assessment area appears to have been influenced by prohibited factors. If there are minority areas that the institution excluded from the assessment area improperly, consider whether they ought to be included in the redlining analysis. Analyze the institution's reasonably expected market area in the same manner.

Step 5. Obtain the institution's explanation for the apparent difference in treatment between the areas and evaluate whether it is credible and reasonable.

This step completes the comparative analysis by soliciting from the institution any additional information not yet considered by the examiners that might show that there is a nondiscriminatory explanation for the apparent disparate treatment based on race or ethnicity.

For each matter that requires explanation, provide the institution full information about what differences appear to exist in how it treats minority and non-minority areas, and how the examiners reached their preliminary conclusions at this stage of the analysis.

- a. Evaluate whether the conditions identified by the institution in Step 2 as justifying more favorable treatment pursuant to institutional policy existed in minority neighborhoods that did not receive the favorable treatment called for by institutional policy. If there are minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask the institution to explain why the areas were treated differently despite the similar conditions.

- b. Evaluate whether the conditions identified by the institution in Step 2 as justifying less favorable treatment pursuant to institutional policy existed in non-minority neighborhoods that received favorable treatment nevertheless. If there are non-minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask the institution to explain why those areas were treated differently, despite the similar conditions.
- c. Obtain explanations from the institution for any apparent differences in treatment observed by the examiners but not called for by the institution's policies:
 - If the institution's explanation cites any specific conditions in the non-minority area(s) to justify more favorable treatment, determine whether the minority area(s) identified in Step 1 satisfied those conditions. If there are minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask the institution to explain why the areas were treated differently despite the similar conditions.
 - If the institution's explanation cites any specific conditions in the minority area(s) to justify less favorable treatment, determine whether the non-minority area(s) had those conditions. If there are non-minority areas for which those conditions existed, ask the institution to explain why those areas were treated differently, despite the similar conditions.
- d. Evaluate the institution's responses by applying appropriate principles selected from the Appendix on Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment.

Step 6. Obtain and evaluate specific types of other information that may support or contradict a finding of redlining.

As a legal matter, discriminatory intent can be inferred simply from the lack of a legitimate explanation for clearly less-favorable treatment of racial or national origin minorities. Nevertheless, if the institution's explanations do not adequately account for a documented difference in treatment, the examiners should consider additional information that might support or contradict the interpretation that the difference in treatment constituted redlining.

- a. Comparative file review. If there was a comparative file review conducted in conjunction with the redlining examination, review the results; or, if it is necessary and feasible to do so to clarify what appears to be discriminatory redlining, compare denied applications from within the suspected redlining area to approved applications from the contrasting area.

- Learn whether there were any denials of fully qualified applicants from the suspected redlining area. If so, that may support the view that the institution was avoiding doing business in the area.
- Learn whether the file review identified instances of illegal disparate treatment against applicants of the same race or national origin as the suspected redlining area. If so, that may support the view that the institution was avoiding doing business with applicants of that group, such as the residents of the suspected redlining area. Learn whether any such identified victims applied for transactions in the suspected redlining area.
- If there are instances of either of the above, identify denied non-minority residents, if any, of the suspected redlining area and review their application files to learn whether they appear to have been treated in an irregular or less favorable way. If so, that may support the view that the character of the area rather than of the applicants themselves appears to have influenced the credit decisions.
- Review withdrawn and incomplete applications for the suspected redlining area, if those can readily be identified from the HMDA-LAR, and learn whether there are reliable indications that the institution discouraged those applicants from applying. If so, that may support the view that the institution was avoiding conducting business in the area and may constitute evidence of a violation of Section 1002.4(b) of Regulation B. Conversely, if the comparisons of individual transactions show that the institution treated minority and non-minority applicants within and outside the suspected redlining area similarly, that tends to contradict the conclusion that the institution avoided the areas because it had minority residents.

b. Interviews of third parties. The perspectives of third parties will have been taken into account to some degree through the review of available materials during scoping. Later in the examination, in appropriate circumstances, information from third parties may help determine whether the institution's apparent differences in treatment of minority and non-minority areas constitute redlining.

- Identify persons (such as housing or credit counselors, home improvement contractors, or real estate and mortgage brokers) who may have extensive experience dealing with credit applicants from the suspected redlined area.

- After obtaining appropriate authorization and guidance from your agency, interview those persons to learn of their first-hand experiences related to:
 - oral statements or written indications by an institution's representatives that loan applications from a suspected redlined area were discouraged;
 - whether the institution treated applicants from the suspected redlining area as called for in its own procedures (as the examiners understand them) and/or whether it treated them similarly to applicants from non-minority areas (as the examiners are familiar with those transactions);
 - any unusual delays or irregularities in loan processing for transactions in the suspected redlining area; and
 - differences in the institution's pricing, loan conditions, property valuation practices, etc., in the suspected redlining area compared to contrasting areas.

Also, learn from the third parties the names of any consumers they described as having experienced the questionable behavior recounted by the third party, and consider contacting those consumers.

If third parties witnessed specific conduct by the institution that indicates the institution wanted to avoid business from the area or prohibited basis group in question, this would tend to support interpreting the difference in treatment as intended. Conversely, if third parties report proper treatment or positive actions toward such area or prohibited basis group, this would tend to contradict the view that the institution intended to discriminate.

c. Marketing. A clear exclusion of the suspected redlining area from the institution's marketing of residential loan products supports the view that the institution did not want to do business in the area. Marketing decisions are affirmative acts to include or exclude areas. Disparities in marketing between two areas may reveal that the institution prefers one to the other. If sufficiently stark and supported by other evidence, a difference in marketing to racially different areas could itself be treated as a redlining violation of the Fair Housing Act. Even below that level of difference, marketing patterns can support or contradict the view that disparities in lending practices were intentional.

- Review materials that show how the institution has marketed in the suspected redlined area and in non-minority areas. Begin with available CRA materials and discuss the issues with CRA examiners, then review other materials as appropriate. The materials may include, for example, the institution's guidance for the geographical distribution of pre-approved solicitations for credit cards or home equity lines of credit, advertisements in local media or business or telephone directories, business development calls to real estate brokers, and calls by telemarketers.

- e. Peer performance. Market share analysis and other comparisons to competitors are insufficient by themselves to prove that an institution engaged in illegal redlining. By the same token, an institution cannot justify its own failure to market or lend in an area by citing other institutions' failures to lend or market there.

However, an institution's inactivity in an underserved area where its acknowledged competitors are active would tend to support the interpretation that it intends to avoid doing business in the area. Conversely, if it is as active as other institutions that would suggest that it intends to compete for, rather than avoid, business in the area.

- Develop a list of the institution's competitors.
 - Learn the level of lending in the suspected redlining area by competitors. Check any public evaluations of similarly situated competitors obtained by the CRA examiners as part of evaluating the performance context or obtain such evaluations independently.
- f. Institution's record. Request from the institution information about its overall record of serving or attempting to serve the racial or national origin minority group with which the suspected redlining area is identified. The record may reveal intent to serve that group that tends to contradict the view that the institution intends to discriminate against the group.

NOTE: For any information that supports interpreting the situation as illegal discrimination, obtain and evaluate an explanation from the institution as called for in Part IV. If the institution's explanation is that the disparate results are the consequence of a specific, neutral policy or practice that the institution applies broadly, such as not making loans on homes below a certain value, review the guidance in the Special Analyses section of the Appendix under Disproportionate Adverse Impact Violations and consult agency managers.

H. Analysis of Potential Discriminatory Marketing Practices.

When scoping identifies significant risk factors (M1-M7) related to marketing, examiners should consult their agency's supervisory staff and experts about a possible marketing discrimination analysis. If the supervisory staff agrees to proceed, the examiners should collect information as follows:

Step 1. Identify the institution's marketing initiatives.

- a. Pre-approved solicitations
- Determine whether the institution sends out pre-approved solicitations:
 - For home purchase loans,
 - For home improvement loans, or
 - For refinance loans.
 - Determine how the institution selects recipients for such solicitations
 - Learn from the institution its criteria for such selections.
 - Review any guidance or other information the institution provided credit reporting companies or other companies that supply such lists.
- b. Media Usage
- Determine in which newspapers and broadcast media the institution advertises.
 - Identify any racial or national origin identity associated with those media.
 - Determine whether those media focus on geographical communities of a particular racial or national origin character.
 - Learn the institution's strategies for geographic and demographic distribution of advertisements.
 - Obtain and review copies of the institution's printed advertising and promotional materials.
 - Determine what criteria the institution communicates to media about what is an attractive customer or an attractive area to cultivate business.
 - Determine whether advertising and marketing are the same to racial and national origin minority areas as compared to non-minority areas.
- c. Self-produced promotional materials
- Learn how the institution distributes its own promotional materials, both methods and geographical distribution.
 - Learn what the institution regards as the target audience(s) for those materials.
- d. Realtors, brokers, contractors, and other intermediaries

- Determine whether the institution solicits business from specific realtors, brokers, home improvement contractors, and other conduits.
 - Learn how the institution decides which intermediaries it will solicit.
 - Identify the parties contacted and determine the distribution between minority and non-minority areas.
 - Obtain and review the types of information the institution distributes to intermediaries.
 - Determine how often the institution contacts intermediaries.
 - Determine what criteria the institution communicates to intermediaries about the type of customers it seeks or the nature of the geographic areas in which it wishes to do business.
- e. Telemarketers or predictive dialer programs
 - Learn how the institution identifies which consumers to contact, and whether the institution sets any parameters on how the list of consumers is compiled.

Step 2. Determine whether the institution’s activities show a significantly lower level of marketing effort toward minority areas or toward media or intermediaries that tend to reach minority areas.

Step 3. If there is any such disparity, document the institution’s explanation for it.

For additional guidance, refer to Part C of the Special Analyses section in the Appendix.

I. Credit Scoring.

If the scoping process results in the selection of a focal point that includes a credit or mortgage scored loan product, refer to the Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring section of the Appendix.

If the institution utilizes a credit scoring program which scores age for any loan product selected for review in the scoping stage, either as the sole underwriting determinant or only as a guide to making loan decisions, refer to Part E of the Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring section of the Appendix.

J. Disparate Impact Issues.

These procedures have thus far focused primarily on examining comparative evidence for possible unlawful disparate treatment. Disparate impact has been described briefly in the Introduction. Whenever an examiner believes that a particular policy or practice of an institution appears to have a disparate impact on a prohibited basis, the examiner should refer to Part A of the Special Analyses section of the Appendix or consult with agency supervisory staff for further guidance.

Part IV — Obtaining and Evaluating Responses From the Institution and Concluding the Examination

Step 1. Present to the institution’s management for explanation:

- a. Any overt evidence of disparate treatment on a prohibited basis.
- b. All instances of apparent disparate treatment (e.g., overlaps) in either the underwriting of loans or in loan prices, terms, or conditions.
- c. All instances of apparent disparate treatment in the form of discriminatory steering, redlining, or marketing policies or practices.
- d. All instances where a denied prohibited basis applicant was not afforded the same level of assistance or the same benefit of discretion as an approved control group applicant who was no better qualified with regard to the reason for denial.
- e. All instances where a prohibited basis applicant received conspicuously less favorable treatment by the institution than was customary from the institution or was required by the institution’s policy.
- f. Any statistically significant average difference in either the frequency or amount of pricing disparities between control group and prohibited basis group applicants.
- g. Any evidence of neutral policies, procedures or practices that appear to have a disparate impact or effect on a prohibited basis.

Explain that unless there are legitimate, nondiscriminatory explanations (or in the case of disparate impact, a compelling business justification) for each of the preliminary findings of discrimination identified in this Part, the agency could conclude that the institution is in violation of the applicable fair lending laws.

Step 2. Document all responses that have been provided by the institution, not just its “best” or “final” response. Document each discussion with dates, names, titles, questions, responses, any information that supports or undercuts the institution’s credibility, and any other information that bears on the issues raised in the discussion(s).

Step 3. Evaluate whether the responses are consistent with previous statements, information obtained from file review, documents, reasonable banking practices, and other sources, and satisfy common-sense standards of logic and credibility.

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Laws and Regulations

- a. Do not speculate or assume that the institution's decision-maker had specific intentions or considerations in mind when he or she took the actions being evaluated. Do not, for example, conclude that because you have noticed a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for a denial (such as an applicant's credit weakness), that no discrimination occurred unless it is clear that, at the time of the denial, the institution actually based the denial on that reason.
- b. Perform follow-up file reviews and comparative analyses, as necessary, to determine the accuracy and credibility of the institution's explanations.
- c. Refer to Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment in the Appendix for guidance as to common types of responses.
- d. Refer to the Disproportionate Adverse Impact Violations portion of the Special Analyses section of the Appendix for guidance on evaluating the institution's responses to apparent disparate impact.

Step 4. If, after completing Steps 1–3 above, you conclude that the institution has failed to adequately demonstrate that one or more apparent violations had a legitimate nondiscriminatory basis or were otherwise lawful, prepare a documented list or discussion of violations, or a draft examination report, as prescribed by agency directives.

Step 5. Consult with agency supervisory staff regarding whether (a) any violations should be referred to the Departments of Justice or Housing and Urban Development and (b) enforcement action should be undertaken by your agency.

Appendix

Introduction

This Appendix offers a full range of information that might conceivably be brought to bear in an examination. In that sense, it is a “menu” of resources to be considered and selected from, depending on the nature and scope of the examination being conducted.

Compliance Management Analysis Checklist

This checklist is for use in conjunction with Part II of these procedures as a device for examiners to evaluate the strength of an institution’s compliance program in terms of its capacity to prevent, and to identify and self-correct fair lending violations in connection with the products or issues selected for analysis. The checklist is not intended to be an absolute test of an institution’s compliance management program. Programs containing all or most of the features described in the list may nonetheless be flawed for other reasons; conversely, a compliance program that encompasses only a portion of the factors listed below may nonetheless adequately support a strong program under appropriate circumstances. In short, the examiner must exercise his or her best judgment in utilizing this list and in assessing the overall quality of an institution’s efforts to ensure fair lending compliance.

If the transactions within the proposed scope are covered by a listed preventive measure, and the answer is “Yes”, check the box in the first column. You may then reduce the intensity (mainly the sample size) of the planned comparative file review to the degree that the preventive measures cover transactions within the proposed scope. Document your findings in sufficient detail to justify any resulting reduction in the intensity of the examination.

You are not required to learn whether preventive measures apply to specific products outside the proposed scope. However, if the information you have obtained shows that the measure is a general practice of the institution, and thus applies to all loan products, check the box in the second column in order to assist future examination planning.

Preventive Measures

Determine whether policies and procedures exist that tend to prevent illegal disparate treatment in the transactions you plan to examine. There is no legal or agency requirement for institutions to conduct these activities. The absence of any of these policies and practices is never, by itself, a violation.

7. Use a prohibited basis in any pre-screened solicitation?
8. Provide financial incentives for loan officers to place applicants in nontraditional products or higher-risk products?

IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

2. Compliance Audit Function: Does the Institution Attempt to Detect Prohibited Disparate Treatment by Self-Test or Self-Evaluation?

NOTE: A self-test is any program, practice or study that is designed and specifically used to assess the institution's compliance with the ECOA and the Fair Housing Act. It creates data or factual information that is not otherwise available and cannot be derived from loan, application or other records related to credit transactions (12 CFR 1002.15(b)(1) and (24 CFR 100.141). The report, results, and many other records associated with a self-test are privileged unless an institution voluntarily discloses the report or results or otherwise forfeits the privilege. See 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a) for a complete listing of the types of information covered by the privilege. A self-evaluation, while generally having the same purpose as a self-test, does not create any new data or factual information, but uses data readily available in loan or application files and other records used in credit transactions and, therefore, does not meet the self-test definition. See Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination in this Appendix for more information about self-tests and self-evaluations.

While you may request the results of self-evaluations, you should not request the results of self-tests or any of the information listed in 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a). If an institution discloses the self-test report or results to its regulator, it will lose the privilege. The following items are intended to obtain information about the institution's approach to self-testing and self-evaluation, not the findings. Complete the checklist below for each self-evaluation and each self-test, where the institution voluntarily discloses the report or results. Evaluating the results of self-evaluations and voluntarily disclosed self-tests is described in Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination in the Appendix.

Mark the box if the answer is "yes" for the transactions within the scope.

	Within the proposed scope	Lender-wide
a. Are the transactions reviewed by an independent analyst who:
1. Is directed to report objective results?
2. Has an adequate level of expertise?
3. Produces written conclusions?
b. Does the institution's approach for self-testing or self-evaluation call for:
1. Attempting to explain major patterns shown in the HMDA or other loan data?
2. Determining whether actual practices and standards differ from stated ones and basing the evaluation on the actual practices?
3. Evaluating whether the reasons cited for denial are supported by facts relied on by the decision maker at the time of the decision?
4. Comparing the treatment of prohibited basis group applicants to control group applicants?
5. Obtaining explanations from decision makers for any unfavorable treatment of the prohibited basis group that departed from policy or customary practice?

IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

	Within the proposed scope	Lender- wide
6. Covering significant decision points in the loan process where disparate treatment or discouragement might occur, including:
The approve/deny decision?
Pricing?
Other terms and conditions?
7. Covering at least as many transactions as examiners would independently, if using the Fair Lending Sample Size Tables for a product with the application volumes of the product to be evaluated?
8. Maintaining information concerning personal characteristics collected as part of a self-test separately from application or loan files?
9. Timely analysis of the data?
10. Taking appropriate and timely corrective action?
c. In the institution's plan for comparing the treatment of prohibited basis group applicants with that of control group applicants:
1. Are control and prohibited basis groups based on a prohibited basis found in ECOA or the FHAct and defined clearly to isolate that prohibited basis for analysis?
2. Are appropriate data to be obtained to document treatment of applicants and the relative qualifications vis-à-vis the requirement in question?
3. Will the data to be obtained reflect the data on which decisions were based?
4. Does the plan call for comparing the denied applicants' qualifications related to the stated reason for denial with the corresponding qualifications for approved applicants?
5. Are comparisons designed to identify instances in which prohibited basis group applicants were treated less favorably than control group applicants who were no better qualified?
6. Is the evaluation designed to determine whether control and prohibited basis group applicants were treated differently in the processes by which the institution helped applicants overcome obstacles and by which their qualifications were enhanced?
7. Are responses and explanations to be obtained for any apparent disparate treatment on a prohibited basis or other apparent violations of credit rights?
8. Are reasons cited by credit decision makers to justify or explain instances of apparent disparate treatment to be verified?

IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

	Within the proposed scope	Lender- wide
d. For self-tests under ECOA that involved the collection of applicant personal characteristics, did the institution:
1. Develop a written plan that describes or identifies the:
Specific purpose of the self-test?
Methodology to be used?
Geographic area(s) to be covered?
Type(s) of credit transactions to be reviewed?
Entity that will conduct the test and analyze the data?
Timing of the test, including start and end dates or the duration of the self-test?
Other related self-test data that is not privileged?
2. Disclose at the time applicant characteristic information is requested, that:
The applicant will not be required to provide the information?
The creditor is requesting the information to monitor its compliance with ECOA?
Federal law prohibits the creditor from discriminating on the basis of this information or on the basis of an applicant's decision not to furnish the information?
If applicable, certain information will be collected based on visual observation or surname if not provided by the applicant?

3. Corrective Measures

	Within the proposed scope	Lender-wide
a. Determine whether the institution has provisions to take appropriate corrective action and provide adequate relief to victims for any violations in the transactions you plan to review.
1. Who is to receive the results of a self-evaluation or voluntarily disclosed self-test?
2. What decision process is supposed to follow delivery of the information?
3. Is feedback to be given to staff whose actions are reviewed?
4.. What types of corrective action may occur?
5. Are customers to be:
Offered credit if they were improperly denied?
Compensated for any damages, both out of pocket and compensatory?
Notified of their legal rights?
b. Other corrective action:
1. Are institutional policies or procedures that may have contributed to the discrimination to be corrected?
2. Are employees involved to be trained and/or disciplined?
3. Is the need for community outreach programs and/or changes in marketing strategy or loan products to better serve minority segments of the institution's market to be considered?
4. Are audit and oversight systems to be improved in order to ensure there is not recurrence of any identified discrimination?

IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

Considering Automated Underwriting and Credit Scoring

These procedures are designed to help an examiner draw and support fair lending conclusions in situations involving automated underwriting or credit scoring.

A. Structure and Organization of the Scoring System

Determine the utilization of credit scoring at the institution including

1. For each customized credit scoring model or scorecard for any product, or for any credit scoring model used in connection with a product held in portfolio, identify and obtain:
 - a. The number and inter-relationship of each model or scorecard applied to a particular product;
 - b. The purposes for which each scorecard is employed (e.g., approval decision, set credit limits, set pricing, determine processing requirements, etc.);
 - c. The developer of each scorecard used (e.g., in-house department, affiliate, independent vendor name) and describe the development population utilized;
 - d. The types of monitoring reports generated (including front-end, back-end, account management and any disparate impact analyses), the frequency of generation and recent copies of each;
 - e. All policies applicable to the use of credit scoring;
 - f. Training materials and programs on credit scoring for employees, agents and brokers involved in any aspect of retail lending;
 - g. Any action taken to revalidate or re-calibrate any model or scorecard used during the exam period and the reason(s) why;
 - h. The number of all high-side and low-side overrides for each type of override occurring during the exam period and any guidance given to employees on their ability to override;
 - i. All cutoffs used for each scorecard throughout the examination period and the reasons for the cutoffs and any change made during the exam period;
 - j. All variables scored by each product's scorecard(s) and the values that each variable may take; and
 - k. The method used to select for disclosure those adverse action reasons arising from application of the model or scorecard.
2. For each judgmental underwriting system that includes as an underwriting criterion a standard credit bureau or secondary market credit score, identify:
 - a. The vendor of each credit score and any vendor recommendation or guidance on the usage of the score relied upon by the institution;

- b. The institution's basis for using the particular bureau or secondary market score and the cutoff standards for each product's underwriting system and the reasons for the cutoffs and any changes to the same during the exam period;
- c. The number of exceptions or overrides made to the credit score component of the underwriting criteria and the basis for those exceptions or overrides, including any guidance given to employees on their ability to depart from credit score underwriting standards; and
- d. Types of monitoring reports generated on the judgmental system or its credit scoring component (including front-end, back-end, differential processing and disparate impact analysis), the frequency of generation and recent copies of each.

B. Adverse Action Disclosure Notices

Determine the methodology used to select the reasons why adverse action was taken on a credit application denied on the basis of the applicant's credit score. Compare the methodology used to the examples recited in the Commentary to Regulation B and decide acceptability against that standard. Identify any consumer requests for reconsideration of credit score denial reasons and review the action taken by management for consistency across applicant groups.

Where a credit score is used to differentiate application processing, and an applicant is denied for failure to attain a judgmental underwriting standard that would not be applied if the applicant had received a better credit score (thereby being considered in a different—presumably less stringent—application processing group), ensure that the adverse action notice also discloses the bases on which the applicant failed to attain the credit score required for consideration in the less stringent processing group.

C. Disparate Treatment in the Application of Credit Scoring Programs

1. Determine what controls and policies management has implemented to ensure that the institution's credit scoring models or credit score criteria are not applied in a discriminatory manner, in particular:
 - a. Examine institution guidance on using the credit scoring system, on handling overrides and on processing applicants and how well that guidance is understood and observed by the targeted employees and monitored for compliance by management; and
 - b. Examine institution policies that permit overrides or that provide for different processing or underwriting requirements based on geographic identifiers or borrower score ranges to assure that they do not treat protected group applicants differently than other similarly situated applicants.
2. Evaluate whether any of the bases for granting credit to control group applicants who are low-side overrides are applicable to any prohibited basis denials whose credit score was equal to or greater than the lowest score among the low-side overrides. If such cases are identified, obtain and evaluate management’s reason for why such different treatment is not a fair lending violation.

3. Evaluate whether any of the bases for denying credit to any prohibited basis applicants who are high-side overrides are applicable to any control group approvals whose credit score was equal to or less than the highest score among the prohibited basis high-side overrides. If such cases are identified, obtain and evaluate management’s reason for why such different treatment is not a fair lending violation.
4. If credit scores are used to segment applicants into groups that receive different processing or are required to meet additional underwriting requirements (e.g., “tiered risk underwriting”), perform a comparative file review, or confirm the results and adequacy of management’s comparative file review, that evaluates whether all applicants within each group are treated equally.

D. Disparate Impact and Credit Scoring Algorithms

Consult with agency supervisory staff to assess potential disparate treatment issues relating to the credit scoring algorithm.

E. Credit Scoring Systems that Include Age

Regulation B expressly requires the initial validation and periodic revalidation of a credit scoring system that considers age. There are two ways a credit scoring system can consider age: 1) the system can be split into different scorecards depending on the age of the applicant; and 2) age may be directly scored as a variable. Both features may be present in some systems. Regulation B requires that all credit scoring systems that consider age in either of these ways must be validated (in the language of the regulation, empirically derived, demonstrably and statistically sound (EDDSS)).

1. Age-Split Scorecards: If a system is split into only two cards and one card covers a wide age range that encompasses elderly applicants (applicants 62 or older), the system is treated as considering, but not scoring, age. Typically, the younger scorecard in an age-split system is used for applicants under a specific age between 25 and 30. It de-emphasizes factors such as the number of trade lines and the length of employment, and increases the negative weight of any derogatory information on the credit report. Systems such as these do not raise the issue of assigning a negative factor or value to the age of an elderly applicant. However, if age is directly scored as a variable (whether or not the system is age-split), or if elderly applicants are included in a card with a narrow age range in an age-split system, the system is treated as scoring age.
2. Scorecards that Score Age: If a scorecard scores age directly, in addition to meeting the EDDSS requirement, the creditor must ensure that the age of an elderly applicant is not assigned a negative factor or value. (See the staff commentary at 12 CFR 1002.2(p) and 1002.6(b)(2)). A negative factor or value means utilizing a factor, value, or weight that is less favorable than the creditor’s experience warrants or is less favorable than the factor, value, or weight assigned to the most favored age group below the age of 62 (12 CFR 1002.2(v)).

F. Examination for Empirical Derivation and Statistical Soundness

Regulation B requires credit scoring systems that use age to be empirically derived, and demonstrably and statistically sound. This means that they must fulfill the requirements of 12 CFR 1002.2(p)(1)(i) - (iv). Obtain documentation provided by the developer of the system and consult the agency’s most recent guidance for making that determination.

Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment

A. Responses to Comparative Evidence of Disparate Treatment

The following are responses that an institution may offer — separately or in combination — to attempt to explain that the appearance of illegal disparate treatment is misleading, and that no violation has in fact occurred. The responses, if true, may rebut the appearance of disparate treatment. The examiners must evaluate the validity and credibility of the responses.

1. The institution’s personnel were unaware of the prohibited basis identity of the applicant(s)

If the institution claims to have been unaware of the prohibited basis identity (race, etc.) of an applicant or neighborhood, ask it to show that the application in question was processed in such a way that the institution’s staff that made the decisions could not have learned the prohibited basis identity of the applicant.

If the product is one for which the institution maintains prohibited basis monitoring information, assume that all employees could have taken those facts into account. Assume the same when there was face-to-face contact between any employee and the consumer.

If there are other facts about the application from which an ordinary person would have recognized the applicant’s prohibited basis identity (for example, the surname is an easily recognizable Hispanic one), assume that the institution’s staff drew the same conclusions. If the racial character of a community is in question, ask the institution to provide persuasive evidence why its staff would not know the racial character of any community in its service area.

2. The difference in treatment was justified by differences in the applicants (applicants not “similarly situated”)

IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

Ask the institution to account for the difference in treatment by pointing out a specific difference between the applicants' qualifications, or some factor not captured in the application but that legitimately makes one applicant more or less attractive to the institution, or some non-prohibited factor related to the processing of their applications. The difference identified by the institution must be one that is important enough to justify the difference in treatment in question, not a meaningless difference.

The factors commonly cited to show that applicants are not similarly situated fall into two groups: those that can be evaluated by how consistently they are handled in other transactions, and those that cannot be evaluated in that way.

a. Verifying “not similarly situated” explanations by consistency

The appearance of disparate treatment remains if a factor cited by the institution to justify favorable treatment for a control group applicant also exists for an otherwise similar prohibited basis applicant who was treated unfavorably. Similarly, the appearance of disparate treatment remains if a factor cited by the institution to justify unfavorable treatment for a prohibited basis applicant also exists for a control group applicant that got favorable treatment. If this is not so, ask the institution to document that the factor cited in its explanation was used consistently for control group and prohibited basis applicants.

- Among the responses that should be evaluated this way are:
 - Customer relationship. Ask the institution to document that a customer relationship was also sometimes considered to the benefit of prohibited basis applicants and/or that its absence worked against control group customers.
 - “Loan not saleable or insurable.” If file review is still in progress, be alert for loans approved despite the claimed fatal problem. At a minimum, ask the institution to be able to produce the text of the secondary market or insurer's requirement in question.
 - Difference in standards or procedures between branches or underwriters. Ask the institution to provide transactions documenting that each of the two branches or underwriters applied its standards or procedures consistently to both prohibited basis and control group applications it processed, and that each served similar proportions of the prohibited basis group.
 - Difference in applying the same standard (difference in “strictness”) between underwriter, branches, etc. Ask the institution to provide transactions documenting that the stricter employee, branch, etc., was strict for both prohibited basis and control group applicants and that the other was lenient for both, and that each served similar proportions of the prohibited basis group. The best evidence of this would be prohibited basis applicants who received favorable treatment from the lenient branch and control group applicants who received less favorable treatment from the “strict” branch.

- Standards or procedures changed during period reviewed. Ask the institution to provide transactions documenting that during each period the standards were applied consistently to both prohibited basis and control group applicants.
 - Employee misunderstood standard or procedure. Ask the institution to provide transactions documenting that the misunderstanding influenced both prohibited basis and control group applications. If that is not available, find no violation if the misunderstanding is a reasonable mistake.
- b. Evaluating “not similarly situated” explanations by other means.
- If consistency cannot be evaluated, consider an explanation favorably even without examples of its consistent use if:
 - The factor is documented to exist in (or be absent from) the transactions, as claimed by the institution;
 - The factor is one a prudent institution would consider and is consistent with the institution's policies and procedures;
 - File review found no evidence that the factor is applied selectively on a prohibited basis (in other words, the institution's explanation is “not inconsistent with available information”); and
 - The institution's description of the transaction is generally consistent and reasonable.
 - Some factors that may be impossible to compare for consistency are:
 - Unusual underwriting standard. Ask the institution to show that the standard is prudent. If the standard is prudent and not inconsistent with other information, accept this explanation even though there is no documentation that it is used consistently.
 - “Close calls.” The institution may claim that underwriters' opposite decisions on similar applicants reflects legitimate discretion that the examiners should not second guess. That is not an acceptable explanation for identical applicants with different results, but is acceptable when the applicants have differing strengths and weaknesses that different underwriters might reasonably weigh differently. However, do not accept the explanation if other files reveal that these “strengths” or “weaknesses” are counted or ignored selectively on a prohibited basis.

- “Character loan.” Expect the institution to identify a specific history or specific facts that make the applicant treated favorably a better risk than those treated less favorably.
- “Accommodation loan.” There are many legitimate reasons that may make a transaction appealing to an institution apart from the familiar qualifications demanded by the secondary market and insurers. For example, a consumer may be related to or referred by an important customer, be a political or entertainment figure who would bring prestige to the institution, be an employee of an important business customer, etc. It is not illegal discrimination to make a loan to an otherwise unqualified control group applicant who has such attributes while denying a loan to an otherwise similar prohibited basis applicant without them. However, be skeptical when the institution cites reasons for “accommodations” that an ordinary prudent institution would not value.
- “Gut feeling.” Be skeptical when institutions justify an approval or denial by a general perception or reaction to the consumer. Such a perception or reaction may be linked to a racial or other stereotype that legally must not influence credit decisions. Ask whether any specific event or fact generated the reaction. Often, the institution can cite something specific that made him or her confident or uncomfortable about the consumer. There is no discrimination if it is credible that the institution indeed considered such a factor and did not apply it selectively on a prohibited basis.

c. Follow up customer contacts

- If the institution’s explanation of the handling of a particular transaction is based on consumer traits, actions, or desires not evident from the file, consider obtaining agency authorization to contact the consumer to verify the institution’s description. Such contacts need not be limited to possible victims of discrimination, but can include control group applicants or other witnesses.

3. The different results stemmed from an inadvertent error

If the institution claims an identified error such as miscalculation or misunderstanding caused the favorable or unfavorable result in question, evaluate whether the facts support the assertion that such an event occurred.

If the institution claims an unidentified error caused the favorable or unfavorable result in question, expect the institution to provide evidence that discrimination is inconsistent with its demonstrated conduct, and therefore that discrimination is the less logical interpretation of the situation. Consider the context (as described below).

4. The apparent disparate treatment on a prohibited basis is a misleading portion of a larger pattern of random inconsistencies

Ask the institution to provide evidence that the unfavorable treatment is not limited to the prohibited basis group and that the favorable treatment is not limited to the control group. Without such examples, do not accept an institution’s unsupported claim that otherwise inexplicable differences in treatment are distributed randomly.

If the institution can document that similarly situated prohibited basis group applicants received the favorable treatment in question approximately as frequently and in comparable degree as the control group applicants, conclude there is no violation.

NOTE: Transactions are relevant to “random inconsistency” only if they are “similarly situated” to those apparently treated unequally.

5. Loan terms and conditions

The same analyses described in the preceding sections with regard to decisions to approve or deny loans also apply to pricing differences. Risks and costs are legitimate considerations in setting prices and other terms and conditions of loan products. However, generalized reference by the institution to “cost factors” is insufficient to explain pricing differences.

If the institution claims that specific borrowers received different terms or conditions because of cost or risk considerations, ask the institution to be able to identify specific risk or cost differences between them.

If the institution claims that specific borrowers received different terms or conditions because they were not similarly situated as negotiators, consider whether application records might provide relevant evidence. If the records are not helpful, consider seeking authorization to contact consumers to learn whether the institution in fact behaved comparably toward prohibited basis and control group consumers. The contacts would be to learn such information as the institution’s opening quote of terms to the consumer and the progress of the negotiations.

If the institution responds that an average price difference between the control and prohibited basis groups is based on cost or risk factors, ask it to identify specific risk or cost differences between individual control group applicants with the lowest rates and prohibited basis group applicants with the highest rates that are significant enough to justify the pricing differences between them. If the distinguishing factors cited by the institution are legitimate and verifiable as described in the sections above, remove those applications from the average price calculation. If the average prices for the remaining control group and prohibited basis group members still differ more than minimally, consult agency supervisory staff about further analysis. Findings or violations based on disparate treatment or disparate impact regarding cost or risk factors should be discussed with agency supervisory staff.

B. Responses to Overt Evidence of Disparate Treatment

1. Descriptive references vs. lending considerations

A reference to race, gender, etc., does not constitute a violation if it is merely descriptive — for example, “the applicant was young.” In contrast, when the reference reveals that the prohibited factor influenced the institution’s decisions and/or consumer behavior, treat the situation as an apparent violation to which the institution must respond.

2. Personal opinions vs. lending considerations

If an employee involved with credit availability states unfavorable views regarding a racial group, gender, etc., but does not explicitly relate those views to credit decisions, review that employee’s credit decisions for possible disparate treatment of the prohibited basis group described unfavorably. If there are no instances of apparent disparate treatment, treat the employee’s views as permissible private opinions. Inform the institution that such views create a risk of future violations.

3. Stereotypes related to credit decisions

There is an apparent violation when a prohibited factor influences a credit decision through a stereotype related to creditworthiness — for example, a loan denial because “a single woman could not maintain a large house.” If the stereotyped beliefs are offered as “explanations” for unfavorable treatment, regard such unfavorable treatment as apparent illegal disparate treatment. If the stereotype is only a general observation unrelated to particular transactions, review that employee’s credit decisions for possible disparate treatment of the prohibited basis group in question. Inform the institution that such views create a risk of future violations.

4. Indirect reference to a prohibited factor

If negative views related to creditworthiness are described in non-prohibited terms, consider whether the terms would commonly be understood as surrogates for prohibited terms. If so, treat the situation as if explicit prohibited basis terms were used. For example, an institution’s statement that “It’s too risky to lend north of 110th Street” might be reasonably interpreted as a refusal to lend because of race if that portion of the institution’s lending area north of 110th Street were predominantly black and the area south, white.

5. Lawful use of a prohibited factor

a. Special Purpose Credit Program (SPCP)

If an institution claims that its use of a prohibited factor is lawful because it is operating an SPCP, ask the institution to document that its program conforms to the requirements of Regulation B. An SPCP must be defined in a written plan that existed before the institution made any decisions on loan applications under the program. The written plan must:

- demonstrate that the program will benefit persons who would otherwise be denied credit or receive credit on less favorable terms; and
- state the time period the program will be in effect or when it will be re-evaluated.

No provision of an SPCP should deprive people who are not part of the target group of rights or opportunities they otherwise would have. Qualified programs operating on an otherwise-prohibited basis will not be cited as a violation.

NOTE: Advise the institution that an agency finding that a program is a lawful SPCP is not absolute security against legal challenge by private parties. Suggest that an institution concerned about legal challenge from other quarters use exclusions or limitations that are not prohibited by ECOA or the FHAct, such as “first-time home buyer.”

b. Second review program

Such programs are permissible if they do no more than ensure that lending standards are applied fairly and uniformly to all applicants. For example, it is permissible to review the proposed denial of applicants who are members of a prohibited basis group by comparing their applications to the approved applications of similarly qualified individuals who are in the control group to determine if the applications were evaluated consistently.

Ask the institution to demonstrate that the program is a safety net that merely attempts to prevent discrimination, and does not involve underwriting terms or practices that are preferential on a prohibited basis.

Statements indicating that the mission of the program is to apply different standards or efforts on behalf of a particular racial or other group constitute overt evidence of disparate treatment. Similarly, there is an apparent violation if comparative analysis of applicants who are processed through the second review and those who are not discloses dual standards related to the prohibited basis.

c. Affirmative marketing/advertising program:

Affirmative advertising and marketing efforts that do not involve application of different lending standards are permissible under both the ECOA and the FHAct.

For example, special outreach to a minority community would be permissible.

Identifying Marginal Transactions

These procedures are intended to assist an examiner in identifying denied and approved applications that were not either clearly qualified or unqualified, i.e., marginal transactions.

A. Marginal Denials

Denied applications with any or all the following characteristics are “marginal.” Such denials are compared to marginal approved applications. Marginal denied applications include those that:

- Were close to satisfying the requirement that the adverse action notice said was the reason for denial;
- Were denied by the institution’s rigid interpretation of inconsequential processing requirements;
- Were denied quickly for a reason that normally would take a longer time for an underwriter to evaluate;
- Involved an unfavorable subjective evaluation of facts that another person might reasonably have interpreted more favorably (for example, whether late payments actually showed a “pattern,” or whether an explanation for a break in employment was “credible”);
- Resulted from the institution’s failure to take reasonable steps to obtain necessary information;
- Received unfavorable treatment as the result of a departure from customary practices or stated policies. For example, if it is the institution’s stated policy to request an explanation of derogatory credit information, a failure to do so for a prohibited basis applicant would be a departure from customary practices or stated policies even if the derogatory information seems to be egregious;
- Were similar to an approved control group applicant who received unusual consideration or service, but were not provided such consideration or service;
- Received unfavorable treatment (for example, were denied or given various conditions or more processing obstacles) but appeared fully to meet the institution’s stated requirements for favorable treatment (for example, approval on the terms sought);
- Received unfavorable treatment related to a policy or practice that was vague, and/or the file lacked documentation on the applicant’s qualifications related to the reason for denial or other factor;
- Met common secondary market or industry standards even though failing to meet the institution’s more rigid standards;

- Had a strength that a prudent institution might believe outweighed the weaknesses cited as the basis for denial;
- Had a history of previously meeting a monthly housing obligation equivalent to or higher than the proposed debt; and/or
- Were denied for an apparently “serious” deficiency that might easily have been overcome. For example, an applicant’s total debt ratio of 50 percent might appear grossly to exceed the institution’s guideline of 36 percent, but this may in fact be easily corrected if the application lists assets to pay off sufficient non-housing debts to reduce the ratio to the guideline, or if the institution were to count excluded part-time earnings described in the application.

B. Marginal Approvals

Approved applications with any or all of the following characteristics are “marginal.” Such approvals are compared to marginal denied applications. Marginal approvals include those:

- Whose qualifications satisfied the institution’s stated standard, but very narrowly;
- That bypassed stated processing requirements (such as verifications or deadlines);
- For which stated creditworthiness requirements were relaxed or waived;
- That, if the institution’s own standards are not clear, fell short of common secondary market or industry lending standards;
- That a prudent conservative institution might have denied;
- Whose qualifications were raised to a qualifying level by assistance, proposals, counteroffers, favorable characterizations or questionable qualifications, etc.; and/or
- That in any way received unusual service or consideration that facilitated obtaining the credit.

Potential Scoping Information

As part of the scoping process described in Part I of the procedures, examiners will need to gather documents and information to sufficiently identify their focal points for review. Below is a list of suggested information that examiners may wish to gather internally, as well as from the institution itself.

A. Internal Agency Documents and Records

1. Previous examination reports and related work papers for the most recent Compliance / CRA and Safety and Soundness Examinations.
2. Complaint information.
3. Demographic data for the institution’s community.

IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

Comment: The examiner should obtain the most recent agency demographic data, for information on the characteristics of the institution's assessment/market areas.

B. Information from the institution

Comment: Prior to beginning a compliance examination, the examiner should request the institution to provide the information outlined below. This request should be made far enough in advance of the on-site phase of the examination to facilitate compliance by the institution. In some institutions, the examiner may not be able to review certain of this information until the on-site examination. The examiner should generally request only those items that correspond to the time period(s) being examined.

Fair Lending Sample Size Tables
Table A Underwriting (Accept/Deny) Comparisons
	Sample 1 Prohibited Basis Denials			Sample 2 Control Group Approvals
Number of Denials or Approvals	5–50	51–150	>150	20–50	51–250	>250
Minimum to Review	All	51	75	20	51	100
Maximum to Review	50	100	150	5x prohibited basis sample (up to 50)	5x prohibited basis sample (up to 125)	5x prohibited basis sample (up to 300)
Table B Terms and Conditions Comparisons
	Sample 1 Prohibited Basis Approvals			Sample 2 Control Group Approvals
Number of Approvals	5–25	26–100	>150	20–50	51–250	>250
Minimum to Review	All	26	50	20	40	60
Maximum to Review	25	50	75	5x prohibited basis sample (up to 50)	5x prohibited basis sample (up to 75)	5x prohibited basis sample (up to 100)

Explanatory Notes to Sample Size Tables

1. Examiners should not follow Table B when conducting a pricing review that involves a regression analysis. Consult with agency supervisory staff for specific protocol in these cases.
2. When performing both underwriting and terms and conditions comparisons, use the same control group approval sample for both tasks.
3. If there are fewer than 5 prohibited basis denials or 20 control group approvals, refer to “Sample Size” instructions in the procedures.
4. “Minimum” and “maximum” sample sizes: select a sample size between the minimum and maximum numbers identified above. Examiners should base the size of their review on the level of risk identified during the preplanning and scoping procedures. Once the sample size has been determined, select individual transactions judgmentally. Refer to procedures.
5. If two prohibited basis groups (e.g., black and Hispanic) are being compared against one control group, select a control group that is 5 times greater than the larger prohibited basis group sample, up to the maximum.
6. Where the institution’s discrimination risk profile identifies significant discrepancies in withdrawal/incomplete activity between control and prohibited basis groups, or where the number of marginal prohibited basis group files available for sampling is small, an examiner may consider supplementing samples by applying the following rules:

- If prohibited basis group withdrawals/incompletes occur after the applicant has received an offer of credit that includes pricing terms, this is a reporting error under Regulation C (the institution should have reported the application as approved but not accepted) and therefore these applications should be included as prohibited basis group approvals in a terms and conditions comparative file analysis.
- If prohibited basis group incompletes occur due to lack of an applicant response with respect to an item that would give rise to a denial reason, then include them as denials for that reason when conducting an underwriting comparative file analysis.

IV. Fair Lending — Appendix

1. Institution's Compliance Program (For examinations that will include analysis of the institution's compliance program.)

- a. Organization charts identifying those individuals who have lending responsibilities or compliance, HMDA or CRA responsibilities, together with job descriptions for each such position.
- b. Lists of any pending litigation or administrative proceedings concerning fair lending matters.
- c. Results of self-evaluations or self-tests (where the institution chooses to share self-test results), copies of audit or compliance reviews of the institution's program for compliance with fair lending laws and regulations, including both internal and independent audits.

NOTE: The request should advise the institution that it is not required to disclose the report or results of any self-tests of the type protected under amendments to ECOA and the FHAct programs.

- d. Complaint file.
- e. Any written or printed statements describing the institution's fair lending policies and/or procedures.
- f. Training materials related to fair lending issues including records of attendance.
- g. Records detailing policy exceptions or overrides, exception reporting and monitoring processes.

2. Lending Policies / Loan Volume

- a. Internal underwriting guidelines and lending policies for all consumer and commercial loan products.

Comment: If guidelines or policies differ by branch or other geographic location, request copies of each variation.

- b. A description of any credit scoring system(s) in use now or during the exam period.

Comment: Inquire as to whether a vendor or in-house system is used; the date of the last verification; the factors relied on to construct any in-house system and, if applicable, any judgmental criteria used in conjunction with the scoring system.

- c. Pricing policies for each loan product, and for both direct and indirect loans.

Comment: The institution should be specifically asked whether its pricing policies for any loan products include the use of "overages". The request should also ask whether the institution offers any "sub-prime" loan products or otherwise uses any form of risk-based pricing. A similar inquiry should be made regarding the use of any cost-based pricing. If any of these three forms are or have been in use since the last exam, the institution should provide pricing policy and practice details for each affected product, including the institution's criteria for differentiating between each risk or cost level and any policies regarding overages. Regarding indirect lending, the institution should be asked to provide any forms of agreement (including compensation) with brokers/dealers, together with a description of the roles that both the institution and the dealer/broker play in each stage of the lending process.

- d. A description of each form of compensation plan for all lending personnel and managers.
- e. Advertising copy for all loan products.
- f. The most recent HMDA / LAR, including unreported data if available.

Comment: The integrity of the institution's HMDA-LAR data should be verified prior to the pre-examination analysis.

- g. Any existing loan registers for each non-HMDA loan product.

Comment: Loan registers for the 3 month period preceding the date of the examination, together with any available lists of declined loan applicants for the same period should be requested. Registers / lists should contain, to the extent available, the complete name and address of loan applicants and applicable loan terms, including loan amount, interest rate, fees, repayment schedule and collateral codes.

- h. A description of any application or loan-level data bases maintained, including a description of all data fields within the database or that can be linked at the loan-level.
- i. Forms used in the application and credit evaluation process for each loan product.

Comment: At a minimum, this request should include all types of credit applications, forms requesting financial information, underwriter worksheets, any form used for the collection of monitoring information, and any quality control or second review forms or worksheets.

- j. Lists of service providers.

Comment: Service providers may include: brokers, realtors, real estate developers, appraisers, underwriters, home improvement contractors and private mortgage insurance companies. Request the full name and address and geographic area served by each provider. Also request documentation as to any fair lending requirements imposed on, or commitments required of, any of the institution's service providers.

- k. Addresses of any Internet Site(s)

Comment: Internet "Home Pages" or similar sites that an institution may have on the Internet may provide information concerning the availability of credit, or means for obtaining it. All such information must comply with the nondiscrimination requirements of the fair lending laws. In view of the increasing capability to conduct transactions on the Internet, it is extremely important for examiners to review an institution's Internet sites to ensure that all of the information or procedures set forth therein are in compliance with any applicable provisions of the fair lending statutes and regulations.

3. Community Information
 - a. Demographic information prepared or used by the institution.
 - b. Any fair lending complaints received and institution responses thereto.

Special Analyses

These procedures are intended to assist examiners who encounter disproportionate adverse impact violations, discriminatory pre-application screening and possible discriminatory marketing.

A. Disproportionate Adverse Impact Violations

When all five conditions below exist, consult within your agency to determine whether to present the situation to the institution and solicit the institution's response. Note that condition 5 can be satisfied by either of two alternatives.

The contacts between examiners and institutions described in this section are information-gathering contacts within the context of the examination and are not intended to serve as the formal notices and opportunities for response that an agency's enforcement process might provide. Also, the five conditions are not intended as authoritative statements of the legal elements of a disproportionate adverse impact proof of discrimination; they are paraphrases intended to give examiners practical guidance on situations that call for more scrutiny and on what additional information is relevant.

NOTE: Even if it appears likely that a policy or criterion causes a disproportionate adverse impact on a prohibited basis (condition 3), consult agency supervisory staff if the policy or criterion is obviously related to predicting creditworthiness and is used in a way that is commensurate with its relationship to creditworthiness, or is obviously related to some other basic aspect of prudent lending, and there appears to be no equally effective alternative for it. Examples are reliance on credit reports or use of debt-to-income ratio in a way that appears consistent with industry standards and with a prudent evaluation of credit risk.*

Conditions

1. A specific policy or criterion is involved.

The policy or criterion suspected of producing a disproportionate adverse impact on a prohibited basis should be clear enough that the nature of action to correct the situation can be determined.

NOTE: Gross HMDA denial or approval rate disparities are not appropriate for disproportionate adverse impact analysis because they typically cannot be attributed to a specific policy or criterion.*
2. The policy or criterion on its stated terms is neutral for prohibited bases.
3. The policy or criterion falls disproportionately on applicants or borrowers in a prohibited basis group.

The difference between the rate at which prohibited basis group members are harmed or excluded by the policy or criterion and the rate for control group members must be large enough that it is unlikely that it could have occurred by chance. If there is reason to suspect a significant disproportionate adverse impact may exist, consult with agency supervisory staff as appropriate.
4. There is a causal relationship between the policy or criterion and the adverse result.

The link between the policy or criterion and the harmful or exclusionary effect must not be speculative. It must be clear that changing or terminating the policy or criterion would reduce the disproportion in the adverse result.
5. Either a or b:
 - a. The policy or criterion has no clear rationale, or appears to exist merely for convenience or to avoid a minimal expense, or is far removed from common sense or standard industry underwriting considerations or lending practices.

The legal doctrine of disproportionate adverse impact provides that the policy or criterion that causes the impact must be justified by "business necessity" if the institution is to avoid a violation. There is very little authoritative legal interpretation of that term with regard to lending, but that should not stop examiners from making the preliminary inquiries called for in these procedures. For example, the rationale is generally not clear for basing credit decisions on factors such as location of residence, income level (per se rather than relative to debt), and accounts with a finance company. If prohibited basis group applicants were denied loans more frequently than control group applicants because they failed an institution's minimum income requirement, it would appear that the first four conditions plus 5a existed; therefore, the examiners should consult within their agency about obtaining the institution's response, as described in the next section below.
 - b. Alternatively, even if there is a sound justification for the policy, it appears that there may be an equally effective alternative for accomplishing the same objective with a smaller disproportionate adverse impact.

The law does not require an institution to abandon a policy or criterion that is clearly the most effective method of accomplishing a legitimate business objective. However, if an alternative that is approximately equally effective is available that would cause a less severe adverse impact, the policy or criterion in question may constitute a violation.

At any stage of the analysis of possible disproportionate adverse impact, if there appears to be such an alternative, and the first four conditions exist, consult within the agency how to evaluate whether the alternative would be equally effective and would cause a less-severe impact. If the conclusion is that it would, solicit a response from the institution, as described in the next section below.

Obtaining the institution's response

If the first four conditions plus either 5a or 5b appear to exist, consult with agency supervisory staff about whether and how to inform the institution of the situation and solicit the institution's response. The communication with the institution may include the following:

- The specific neutral policy or criterion that appears to cause a disproportionate adverse impact.
- How the examiners learned about the policy.
- How widely the examiners understand it to be implemented.
- How strictly they understand it to be applied.
- The prohibited basis on which the impact occurs.
- The magnitude of the impact.
- The nature of the injury to individuals.
- The data from which the impact was computed.
- The communication should request that the institution provide any information supporting the business justification for the policy and request that the institution describe any alternatives it considered before adopting the policy or criterion at issue.

Evaluating and following up on the response

The analyses of “business necessity” and “less discriminatory alternative” tend to converge because of the close relationship of the questions of what purpose the policy or criterion serves and whether it is the most effective means to accomplish that purpose.

Evaluate whether the institution's response persuasively contradicts the existence of the significant disparity or establishes a business justification. Consult with agency supervisory staff, as appropriate.

Discriminatory Pre-Application Screening

Obtain an explanation for any:

- Withdrawals by applicants in prohibited basis groups without documentation of consumer intent to withdraw;
- Denials of applicants in prohibited basis groups without any documentation of applicant qualifications; or
- On a prohibited basis, selectively quoting unfavorable terms (for example, high fees or down payment requirements) to prospective applicants, or quoting unfavorable terms to all prospective applicants but waiving such terms for control group applicants. (Evidence of this might be found in withdrawn or incomplete files.)

Obtain explanations for any delays between application and action dates on a prohibited basis

If the institution cannot explain the situations, examiners should consider obtaining authorization from their agency to contact the consumers to verify the institution's description of the transactions. Information from the consumer may help determine whether a violation occurred.

In some instances, such as possible “prescreening” of applicants by institution personnel, the results of the procedures discussed so far, including interviews with consumers, may be inconclusive in determining whether a violation has occurred. In those cases, examiners should, if authorized by their agency, consult with agency supervisory staff regarding the possible use of “testers” who would pose as apparently similarly situated applicants, differing only as to race or other applicable prohibited basis characteristic, to determine and compare how the institution treats them in the application process.

C. Possible Discriminatory Marketing

1. Obtain full documentation of the nature and extent, together with management's explanation, of any:
 - Prohibited basis limitations stated in advertisements;
 - Code words in advertisements that convey prohibited limitations; or
 - Advertising patterns or practices that a reasonable person would believe indicate prohibited basis consumers are less desirable or are only eligible for certain products.
2. Obtain full documentation as to the nature and extent, together with management's explanation, for any situation in which the institution, despite the availability of other options in the market:
 - Advertises only in media serving either minority or non-minority areas of the market;
 - Markets through brokers or other agents that the institution knows, or could reasonably be expected to know, to serve only one racial or ethnic group in the market; or

- Utilizes mailing or other distribution lists or other marketing techniques for pre-screened or other offerings of residential loan products* that:
 - Explicitly exclude groups of prospective borrowers on a prohibited basis; or
 - Exclude geographies (e.g., census tracts, ZIP codes, etc.) within the institution’s marketing area that have demonstrably higher percentages of minority group residents than does the remainder of the marketing area, but which have income and other credit-related characteristics similar to the geographies that were targeted for marketing; or
- Offer different products to such geographies, especially if sub-prime products are primarily marketed to racial or ethnic minorities.

NOTE: Pre-screened solicitation of potential applicants on a prohibited basis does not violate ECOA. Such solicitations are, however, covered by the FHAct. Consequently, analyses of this form of potential marketing discrimination should be limited to residential loan products.*

3. Evaluate management’s response particularly with regard to the credibility of any nondiscriminatory reasons offered as explanations for any of the foregoing practices. Refer to Evaluating Responses to Evidence of Disparate Treatment elsewhere in this Appendix for guidance.

Using Self-Tests and Self-Evaluations to Streamline the Examination

Institutions may find it advantageous to conduct self-tests or self-evaluations to measure or monitor their compliance with ECOA and Regulation B. A self-test is a program, practice or study that is designed and specifically used to assess the institution’s compliance with fair lending laws that creates data not available or derived from loan, application or other records related to credit transactions (12 CFR 1002.15(b)(1) and 24 CFR 100.140-100.148). For example, using testers to determine whether there is disparate treatment in the pre-application stage of credit shopping may constitute a self-test. The information set forth in 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a) is privileged unless an institution voluntarily discloses the report or results or otherwise forfeits the privilege. A self-evaluation, while generally having the same purpose as a self-test, does not create any new data or factual information, but uses data readily available in loan or application files and other records used in credit transactions and, therefore, does not meet the self-test definition.

Examiners should not request any information privileged under 12 CFR 1002.15(b)(2) and 24 CFR 100.142(a), related to self-tests. If the institution discloses the results of any self-tests, or has performed any self-evaluations, and examiners can confirm the reliability and appropriateness of the self-tests or self-evaluations (or even parts of them), they need not repeat those tasks.

NOTE: When the term self-evaluation is used below, it is meant to include self-tests where the institution has voluntarily disclosed the report or results.

If the institution has performed a self-evaluation of any of the product(s) selected for examination, obtain a copy thereof and proceed through the remaining steps of this section on Streamlining the Examination.

Determine whether the research and analysis of the planned examination would duplicate the institution’s own efforts. If the answers to Questions A and B below are both Yes, each successive Yes answer to Questions C through L indicates that the institution’s work up to that point can serve as a basis for eliminating examination steps.

If the answer to either Question A or B is No, the self-evaluation cannot serve as a basis for eliminating examination steps. However, examiners should still consider the self-evaluation to the degree possible in light of the remaining questions and communicate the findings to the institution so that it can improve its self-evaluation process.

- A. Did the transactions covered by the self-evaluation occur not longer ago than two years prior to the examination? If the self-evaluation covered more than two years prior to the examination incorporate only results from transactions in the most recent two years.

- B. Did it cover the same product, prohibited basis, decision center, and stage of the lending process (for example, underwriting, setting of loan terms) as the planned examination?

- C. Did the self-evaluation include comparative file review?

NOTE: One type of “comparative file review” is statistical modeling to determine whether similar control group and prohibited basis group applicants were treated similarly. If an institution offers self-evaluation results based on a statistical model, consult appropriately within your agency.

- D. Were control and prohibited basis groups defined accurately and consistently with ECOA and/or the FHAct?
- E. Were the transactions selected for the self-evaluation chosen so as to focus on marginal applicants or, in the alternative, selected randomly?
- F. Were the data analyzed (whether abstracted from files or obtained from electronic databases) accurate? Were those data actually relied on by the credit decision makers at the time of the decisions?

To answer these two questions and Question G below, for the institution’s control group sample and each of its prohibited basis group samples, request to review 10% (but not more than 50 for each group) of the transactions covered by the self-evaluation. For example, if the institution's self-evaluation reviewed 250 control group and 75 prohibited basis group transactions, plan to verify the data for 25 control group and seven prohibited basis group transactions.

- G. Did the 10% sample reviewed for Question F also show that customer assistance and institution judgment that assisted or enabled applicants to qualify were recorded systematically and accurately and were compared for differences on any prohibited bases?
- H. Were prohibited basis group applicants' qualifications related to the underwriting factor in question compared to corresponding qualifications of control group approvals? Specifically, for self-evaluations of approve/deny decisions, were the denied applicants' qualifications related to the stated reason for denial compared to the corresponding qualifications for approved applicants?
- I. Did the self-evaluation sample cover at least as many transactions at the initial stage of review as examiners would initially have reviewed using the sampling guidance in these procedures?

If the institution's samples are significantly smaller than those in the sampling guidance but its methodology otherwise is sound, review additional transactions until the numbers of reviewed control group and prohibited basis group transactions equal the minimums for the initial stage of review in the sampling guidance.

- J. Did the self-evaluation identify instances in which prohibited basis group applicants were treated less favorably than control group applicants who were no better qualified?

- K. Were explanations solicited for such instances from the persons responsible for the decisions?
- L. Were the reasons cited by credit decision makers to justify or explain instances of apparent disparate treatment supported by legitimate, persuasive facts or reasoning?

If the questions above are answered "Yes", incorporate the findings of the self-evaluation (whether supporting compliance or violations) into the examination findings. Indicate that those findings are based on verified data from the institution's self-evaluation. In addition, consult appropriately within the agency regarding whether or not to conduct corroborative file analyses in addition to those performed by the institution.

If not all of the questions in the section above are answered "Yes", resume the examination procedures at the point where the institution's reliable work would not be duplicated. In other words, use the reliable portion of the self-evaluation and correspondingly reduce independent comparative file review by examiners. For example, if the institution conducted a comparative file review that compared applicants' qualifications without taking account of the reasons they were denied, the examiners could use the qualification data abstracted by the institution (if accurate) but would have to construct independent comparisons structured around the reasons for denial.

FAIR LENDING SCOPE AND CONCLUSIONS (FLSC)

General Instructions

During a fair lending review, examiners evaluate a financial institution's compliance with the anti-discriminatory provisions of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) and the Federal Housing Act (FHA) in accordance with the Interagency Fair Lending Examination Procedures. Examiners document their evaluation of fair lending risk by completing the Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions Memorandum (FLSC).

The FLSC is divided into five sections and begins with a series of questions and Examiner Summary sections to develop an institution overview and document the assessment of inherent fair lending risks. If more than minimal inherent risk exists, examiners identify specific product(s) to assess applicable discrimination risk factors and whether any factors help mitigate those risks. If residual risk exists and additional analysis is warranted, examiners identify potential focal point(s) and conduct an in-depth analysis. If an in-depth analysis is conducted, examiners document the steps taken to perform the review. Examiners also document the overall conclusions of the fair lending review, including any findings or recommendations, and considerations for the next examination.

Section 1 of the FLSC is where examiners document the institution overview and the assessment of inherent risk for fair lending. If more than minimal inherent risk exists, examiners will then select products for further analysis and document in Section 2 the evaluation of all applicable discrimination risk factors and whether any factors help mitigate discrimination risk. Examiners may determine that residual risk exists and an in-depth analysis is warranted. In such cases, examiners document in Section 3 all potential focal points, as well as the focal point(s) selected for an in-depth analysis. In Section 4, examiners document the steps taken to perform the focal point analysis or that an underwriting or pricing focal point was converted to a Fair Lending Visitation. The conclusions of the fair lending review are documented in Section 5.

Examiners complete various sections of the FLSC based on the level of analysis conducted:

- Section 1 must be completed for all examinations. To the extent possible, the majority of Section 1 should be completed during the pre-examination planning process.
- Section 2 is completed if there is more than minimal inherent risk.
- Section 3 is completed if examiners conclude there is residual risk and one or more focal points are selected.
- Section 4 is completed only if a focal point is selected and approved.
- Section 5 must be completed for all examinations.

Section 1: Develop an Institution Overview

Section 1 of the FLSC is where examiners document the institution overview and any inherent fair lending risk. Section 1 contains seven subsections titled: Bank and Examination Information; Structure and Management; Supervisory History; Compliance Management System; Loan Portfolio; Population Demographics and Credit and Market Operations (with five specific areas relating to Underwriting, Pricing, Steering, Marketing, and Redlining).

The subsections in Section 1 contain questions that examiners answer when assessing inherent risk. The questions do not cover every potential inherent fair lending risk, but rather set out a basic framework that could be supplemented with additional information identified by examiners based on the overall risk profile of the bank. Further, a certain number of “yes” or “no” responses to the questions in Section 1 does not determine the need for a specific level of review. Instead, the questions are meant to ensure that examiners document various risks considered during the fair lending review. Examiners provide supporting detail regarding their evaluation of inherent risk for each subsection within the Examiner Summary sections in Section 1.

Section 1 will include a description of inherent fair lending risk identified at the bank, but examiners will not describe any mitigating factors for potential discrimination risk factors, or the results of any product-specific analysis in Section 1. The analysis of any applicable discrimination risk factors, mitigating factors, and results from analyses conducted using fair lending tools are documented in Section 2 of the FLSC.

The following fields represent the information collected by the examiner in Section 1 of the FLSC:

Compliance Management System

The Compliance Management System subsection will include a description of the bank's compliance management system (CMS) as it relates to fair lending (e.g., Board and management oversight, policies and procedures, training, monitoring or audits, and consumer complaint response) and note any changes since the previous examination.

NOTE: Examiners document in Section 1 a description of the bank's CMS as it relates to fair lending. For example, examiners may describe how the bank's compliance officer reviews all underwriting exceptions on a quarterly basis. Otherwise, examiners should not document in Section 1 any assessment of the bank's CMS. For example, examiners would not describe how the compliance officer's review of underwriting exceptions helps mitigate risk. If more than minimal inherent risk exists, examiners will then document in Section 2 all applicable discrimination risk factors, including an assessment of the effectiveness of the bank's CMS in mitigating those discrimination risks.

Compliance Management System		Response
8.	Does the bank maintain fair lending-related policies and procedures?
9.	Do the Board, management, and employees receive fair lending training?
10.	Does the bank conduct fair lending-related monitoring?
11.	Have there been any internal or external fair lending audits conducted since the previous examination?
12.	Have there been any fair lending risk assessments completed since the previous examination?
13.	Do any Board minutes, policies and procedures, training material, or other CMS-related documents relating to any aspect of credit operations include overtly discriminatory statements?

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions Memorandum

Examiner Summary	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Describe the bank's compliance management system (CMS) as it relates to fair lending and highlight any changes since the previous examination. This should include a description of specific CMS elements that relate to fair lending, such as steps the bank takes to control risks in the credit application and decision-making process, the property valuation process, the pricing of credit, resolving consumer complaints, and oversight of third-party relationships. • Note: Examiners document in Section 1 a description of the bank's CMS as it relates to fair lending. A description of the effectiveness of the bank's CMS in mitigating fair lending risk is documented in Section 2, as applicable.

Loan Portfolio

The Loan Portfolio subsection will include a description of the bank's loan product offerings and summarize pertinent details regarding loan portfolio composition or loan growth since the previous examination. Examiners will indicate whether any new loan products or programs were introduced since the previous examination, and describe any third-party lending relationships (e.g., indirect lending, broker arrangements, secondary market loans). Examiners will describe any inherent fair lending risks relating to the bank's loan portfolio.

Within the Loan Portfolio subsection there are two tables that reflect pertinent information about the bank's loan portfolio composition and loan activity. The first table, "Change in Loan Composition since the Previous Examination," reflects differences in the number and percentage of loans by Call Report categories between the previous examination and the current examination.

The second table, "Loan Activity" reflects the bank's loan activity in-between two date ranges. Since examiners will likely review lending for a one-year period, this table would reflect lending for the 12 months preceding the examination start date. Examiners will enter in the applicable dates that the table data will reflect and extract the information from the bank's loan trial balance.

While the use of the "Loan Activity" table is optional, examiners should provide a description of any loan portfolio changes since the previous examination within the Examiner Summary. For example, examiners could note significant growth in a particular product line. In addition, if more than minimal inherent risk exists in Section 1, knowing the loan volume may assist an examiner when selecting products for further review in Section 2 or determining which focal point(s) to evaluate in Section 3. If this particular table is not completed by the examiners, documentation of the bank's loan volume and composition would need to be captured and evaluated by some other means.

Loan Portfolio		Response
14.	Has the bank introduced any new loan products, programs, services, or features (e.g., escrow, private mortgage insurance, add-ons, skip-a-payment), including any offered through a third party, since the previous examination?
15.	Has the bank experienced significant growth in any particular loan product type?
16.	Excluding loan participations, has the bank purchased any loans or loan portfolios since the previous examination?
17.	Are any of the bank's loan products or programs offered, originated, or serviced through, or jointly with, a third party?

IV. Fair Lending — Fair Lending Scope and Conclusions Memorandum

18.	Has the bank offered any loss mitigation options (e.g., loan modifications, payment forbearance plans, short sales, or deeds-in-lieu of foreclosure) to mortgage borrowers since the previous examination?
19.	Does the bank operate a Special Purpose Credit Program (as defined by ECOA), either internally or through a third party?
20.	Does the bank offer any of the following products?
	a) Non-traditional loans (e.g., interest-only, excluding construction loans; negative amortization; step payment; seasonal payment)

The Credit and Market Operations – Underwriting subsection will include a description of the bank's method of underwriting for each product type offered and note any differences by lending channel, as well as the role of any third party.

Examiners will describe any inherent fair lending risks relating to the bank's underwriting. As noted above, examiners will not document any mitigating factors to potential discrimination risk factors or any product-specific analyses in Section 1. Any analysis, such as a denial disparity calculation, or strengths of the CMS that mitigate the presence of significant disparities, would be documented in Section 2.

Credit and Market Operations – Steering

Examiners should document any inherent risks relating to the potential for steering to occur.

Credit and Market Operations - Steering		Response
48. If after completing the institution overview and assessing the level of inherent risk, the examiner concludes that the institution exhibits minimal inherent fair lending risk, no further analysis is required. In such instances, the examiner only completes Sections 1 and 5 of the FLSC. However, if the examiner believes that the institution has more than minimal inherent fair lending risk, the examiner should select one or more products and evaluate any applicable discrimination risk factors and assess whether any factors mitigate those risks. Examiners document the analysis of applicable discrimination risks and any mitigating factors in Section 2 of the FLSC.

The decision to end the scoping process after completing Section 1 must be clearly supported and documented in the FLSC and is only appropriate if the institution exhibits minimal inherent fair lending risk.

Section 1 Checkpoint		Response
70.	Based on the information in the institution overview, does the bank exhibit more than minimal inherent fair lending risk?
	If yes, proceed to Section 2 "Identification of Discrimination Risk Factors" to document the product(s) that warrant further analysis.
	If no, proceed to Section 5 "Fair Lending Conclusions and Recommendations" to document the conclusions of the fair lending review and any findings or recommendations.

Section 2: Identification of Discrimination Risk Factors

Once examiners determine there is more than minimal inherent risk, Section 2 of the FLSC is where examiners document any applicable discrimination risks and mitigating factors for the product(s) selected for further analysis. If mitigating factors exist, examiners document how the mitigating factors help reduce identified discrimination risk or whether residual risk remains after considering the mitigating factors.

Documenting the Evaluation of Risk When No Discrimination Risk Factor is Identified

If a discrimination risk factor is not applicable for the product(s) selected for further analysis, examiners need not determine whether the risk is mitigated. That is, if a discrimination risk factor is not applicable, the examiner does not check the box for the discrimination risk factor and does not document any mitigating factors. For example, if the examiner does not identify discrimination risks with respect to guidance on making exceptions to underwriting criteria, the examiner would not check the box for U5: Lack of clear guidance on making exceptions to underwriting criteria, including credit scoring overrides. Further, there would be no need to describe any mitigating factors relating to this risk, as the discrimination risk factor was not applicable.

After assessing each of the applicable discrimination risk factors and any mitigating factors, examiners determine if enough residual risk exists to warrant the selection of one or more focal points. Examiners document in Section 3 all potential focal points that could be reviewed and then document the focal point(s) selected for an in-depth analysis.

If the examiner determines that the discrimination risk factors identified in Section 2 were sufficiently mitigated, the examiner would then document in Section 5 the conclusions of the fair lending review.

Section 2 Checkpoint		Response
71.	Based on the applicable discrimination risks for each product evaluated, does residual risk warrant the selection of one or more potential focal points to consider for an in-depth analysis?
	If yes, proceed to Section 3 "Description of Potential Focal Points" and obtain Field Supervisor or designee approval to proceed with analysis of selected focal point(s).
	If no, proceed to Section 5 "Fair Lending Conclusions and Recommendations" to document the conclusions of the fair lending review and any findings or recommendations.

Section 3: Description of Potential Focal Points

Section 3 of the FLSC is where examiners describe the potential focal point(s) that could warrant further analysis during the examination. From the list of potential focal points, FOCUS provides an option to select the focal point(s) chosen for analysis. Specifically, examiners would select “Y” for “Selected As Focal Point?” and then input the numbers for “Control Group Sample Size” and “Target Group Sample Size” for any focal point selected for an in-depth analysis. See image below.

NOTE: Examiners do not document sample sizes if the potential focal points are not selected for an in-depth analysis. Sample sizes are only captured for any selected focal points.

Section 4: Description of Focal Point Analysis

Section 4 of the FLSC is where examiners document the details of how the analysis was conducted for each focal point. This section will include a summary of the methodology used to conduct the analysis. For example, if a comparative file review was conducted, examiners would describe the steps taken to complete the comparative file analysis (e.g., explain how the loan sample was selected, the creation of the applicant profile spreadsheet, the identification of benchmark applicants, and the corresponding analysis). These summaries would include information discovered during the examination, including responses or details provided by bank staff or management. Examiners should also reference any statistical analyses conducted or fair lending-related consultations opened during the examination. If an underwriting or pricing focal point is pursued through statistical analysis, examiners should document this in the section by stating “The (underwriting/pricing) focal point was converted to a separate Fair Lending Visitation.”

Section 5: Fair Lending Conclusions and Recommendations

Section 5 of the FLSC is where examiners summarize the results of the fair lending review and document all fair lending-related conclusions and recommendations. The discussion should include, as applicable:

- Support for stopping the scoping process after completing Section 1 or 2 of the FLSC
- Overall conclusions of the fair lending analysis and support for the conclusions
- Recommendations provided to bank management
- Recommendations discussed in the report of examination
- Considerations for the next examination

The length of the conclusion section will vary depending on the depth of the fair lending analysis conducted, conclusions of the review, and the nature of any findings or recommendations. If fair lending violations were cited, examiners should summarize those violations. Examiners will not discuss technical violations, such as issues with timing of adverse action notifications, in the FLSC. If no violations were cited, but recommendations were provided to the bank, examiners would summarize these recommendations (including an explanation as to how and to whom the recommendation was communicated). Recommendations to strengthen the bank's fair lending program based on risks identified during scoping, in instances where the focal point was pursued through a Fair Lending Visit, should also be summarized. Alternatively, for situations where the scoping sections of the FLSC were completed, but no focal points were selected, examiners would provide clear support for the decision not to select a focal point.

Truth in Lending Act¹

Introduction

The Truth in Lending Act (TILA), 15 U.S.C. 1601 et seq., was enacted on May 29, 1968, as title I of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (Pub. L. 90-321). The TILA, implemented by Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026), became effective July 1, 1969.

The TILA was first amended in 1970 to prohibit unsolicited credit cards. Additional major amendments to the TILA and Regulation Z were made by the Fair Credit Billing Act of 1974, the Consumer Leasing Act of 1976, the Truth in Lending Simplification and Reform Act of 1980, the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act of 1988, and the Home Equity Loan Consumer Protection Act of 1988.

Regulation Z also was amended to implement section 1204 of the Competitive Equality Banking Act of 1987, and in 1988, to include adjustable-rate mortgage loan disclosure requirements. All consumer leasing provisions were deleted from Regulation Z in 1981 and transferred to Regulation M (12 CFR 1013).

The Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act of 1994 (HOEPA) amended the TILA. The law imposed new disclosure requirements and substantive limitations on certain closed-end mortgage loans bearing rates or fees above a certain percentage or amount. The law also included new disclosure requirements to assist consumers in comparing the costs and other material considerations involved in a reverse mortgage transaction and authorized the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board) to prohibit specific acts and practices in connection with mortgage transactions.

The TILA amendments of 1995 dealt primarily with tolerances for real estate secured credit. Regulation Z was amended on September 14, 1996, to incorporate changes to the TILA. Specifically, the revisions limit lenders' liability for disclosure errors in real estate secured loans consummated after September 30, 1995. The Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act of 1996 further amended the TILA. The amendments were made to simplify and improve disclosures related to credit transactions.

The Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (the E-Sign Act), 15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq., was enacted in 2000 and did not require implementing regulations. On November 9, 2007, amendments to Regulation Z and the official commentary were issued to simplify the regulation and provide guidance on the electronic delivery of disclosures consistent with the E-Sign Act.

In July 2008, Regulation Z was amended to protect consumers in the mortgage market from unfair, abusive, or deceptive lending and servicing practices. Specifically, the change applied protections to a newly defined category of “higher-priced mortgage loans” (HPML) that includes virtually all closed-end subprime loans secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling. The revisions also applied new protections to mortgage loans secured by a dwelling, regardless of loan price, and required the delivery of early disclosures for more types of transactions. The revisions also banned several advertising practices deemed deceptive or misleading. The Mortgage Disclosure Improvement Act of 2008 (MDIA) broadened and added to the requirements of the Board’s July 2008 final rule by requiring early Truth in Lending disclosures for more types of transactions and by adding a waiting period between the time when disclosures are given and consummation of the transaction. In 2009, Regulation Z was amended to address those provisions. The MDIA also requires disclosure of payment examples if the loan’s interest rate or payments can change, as well as disclosure of a statement that there is no guarantee the consumer will be able to refinance in the future. In 2010, Regulation Z was amended to address these provisions, which became effective on January 30, 2011.

In December 2008, the Board adopted two final rules pertaining to open-end (not home-secured) credit. The first rule involved Regulation Z revisions and made comprehensive changes applicable to several disclosures required for: applications and solicitations, new accounts, periodic statements, change in terms notifications, and advertisements. The second was a rule published under the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act and was issued jointly with the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) and the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), which sought to protect consumers from unfair acts or practices with respect to consumer credit card accounts. Before these rules became effective, however, the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 (Credit CARD Act) amended the TILA and established a number of new requirements for open-end consumer credit plans. Several provisions of the Credit CARD Act are similar to provisions in the Board’s December 2008 TILA revisions and the joint FTC Act rule, but other portions of the Credit CARD Act address practices or mandate disclosures that were not addressed in these rules. In light of the Credit CARD Act, the Board, the NCUA, and the OTS withdrew the substantive requirements of the joint FTC Act rule. On July 1, 2010, compliance with the provisions of the Board's rule that were not impacted by the Credit CARD Act became effective.

The Credit CARD Act provisions became effective in three stages. The provisions effective first (August 20, 2009) required creditors to increase the amount of notice consumers receive before the rate on a credit card account is increased or a significant change is made to the account's terms. These amendments also allowed consumers to reject such increases and changes by informing the creditor before the increase or change goes into effect. The provisions effective next (February 22, 2010) involved rules regarding interest rate increases, over-the-limit transactions, and student cards. Finally, the provisions effective last (August 22, 2010) addressed the reasonableness and proportionality of penalty fees and charges and reevaluation of rate increases.

In 2009, Regulation Z was amended following the passage of the Higher Education Opportunity Act (HEOA) by adding disclosure and timing requirements that apply to lenders making private education loans.

In 2009, the Helping Families Save Their Homes Act amended the TILA to establish a new requirement for notifying consumers of the sale or transfer of their mortgage loans. The purchaser or assignee that acquires the loan must provide the required disclosures no later than 30 days after the date on which it acquired the loan.

In 2010, the Board further amended Regulation Z to prohibit payment to a loan originator that is based on the terms or conditions of the loan, other than the amount of credit extended. The amendment applies to mortgage brokers and the companies that employ them, as well as to mortgage loan officers employed by depository institutions and other lenders. In addition, the amendment prohibits a loan originator from directing or "steering" a consumer to a loan that is not in the consumer's interest to increase the loan originator's compensation.

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act) amended the TILA to include several provisions that protect the integrity of the appraisal process when a consumer's home is securing the loan. The rule also requires that appraisers receive customary and reasonable payments for their services. The appraiser and loan originator compensation requirements had a mandatory compliance date of April 6, 2011.

The Dodd-Frank Act generally granted rulemaking authority under the TILA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB). Title XIV of the Dodd-Frank Act included a number of amendments to the TILA, and in 2013, the CFPB issued rules to implement them. Prohibitions on mandatory arbitration and waivers of consumer rights, as well as requirements that lengthen the time creditors must maintain an escrow account for higher-priced mortgage loans, were generally effective June 1, 2013. Most of the remaining amendments to Regulation Z were effective in January 2014.² These amendments include ability-to-repay requirements for mortgage loans, appraisal requirements for higher-priced mortgage loans, a revised and expanded test for high-cost mortgages, as well as additional restrictions on those loans, expanded requirements for servicers of mortgage loans, refined loan originator compensation rules and loan origination qualification standards, and a prohibition on financing credit insurance for mortgage loans. The amendments also established new record retention requirements for certain provisions of the TILA. On October 22, 2014, the CFPB issued a final rule providing an alternative small servicer definition for nonprofit entities and amended the ability-to-repay exemption for nonprofit entities. The final rule also provided a temporary cure mechanism for the points and fees limit that applies to qualified mortgages, with a sunset date of January 10, 2021. The final rule was effective on November 3, 2014, except for one provision that became effective on October 3, 2015. On October 2, 2015, the CFPB revised the definitions of small creditor and rural and underserved areas, which affect the availability of some special provisions and exemptions to Regulation Z's Ability-to-Repay, high-cost mortgage, and HPML escrow requirements. The final rule was effective January 1, 2016.³ In March 2016, the CFPB issued an interim final rule exercising the expanded authority granted to the CFPB by the Helping Expand Lending Practices in Rural Communities Act to exempt small creditors that operate in rural or underserved areas.⁴ The interim final rule was effective March 31, 2016.

In 2013, the CFPB also revised several open-end credit provisions in Regulation Z. The CFPB revised the general limitation on the total amount of account fees that a credit card issuer may require a consumer to pay. Effective March 28, 2013, the limit is 25 percent of the credit limit in effect when the account is opened and applies only during the first year after account opening. The CFPB also amended Regulation Z to remove the requirement that card issuers consider the consumer's independent ability to pay for applicants who are 21 or older and to permit issuers to consider income and assets to which such consumers have a reasonable expectation of access. This change was effective May 3, 2013, with a mandatory compliance date of November 4, 2013.

² The amendment to 12 CFR 1026.35(e) was effective July 24, 2013; the amendments to 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii), 1026.36(a), (b), and (j), and commentary to 12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2), 1026.35, and 1026.36(a), (b), (d), and (f) in Supp. I to Part 1026, were effective January 1, 2014.

In 2013, the CFPB further amended Regulation Z as well as Regulation X, the regulation implementing the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA), to fulfill the mandate in the Dodd-Frank Act to integrate the mortgage disclosures under TILA and RESPA sections 4 and 5. Regulation Z now contains two new forms required for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans. The Loan Estimate is provided within three business days from application, and the Closing Disclosure is provided to consumers three business days before loan consummation. These disclosures must be used for mortgage loans for which the creditor or mortgage broker receives an application on or after October 3, 2015.⁵

In 2016, the CFPB amended Regulation Z as well as Regulation E, the regulation implementing the Electronic Fund Transfer Act (EFTA), to extend protections to prepaid accounts. In Regulation E, tailored provisions governing disclosures, limited liability and error resolution, and periodic statements were adopted for prepaid accounts, along with new requirements regarding the posting and submission of prepaid account agreements. In Regulation Z, coverage of the term "credit card" was expanded to include "hybrid prepaid-credit card" as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61. The amendments to Regulation Z further regulate credit features that may be offered in conjunction with prepaid accounts. Together these amendments are known as the "Prepaid Rule." The Bureau further amended the Prepaid Rule in January 2018 to modify the definition of "business partner," in addition to making other changes, and extend the effective date of the Prepaid Rule, as amended, to April 1, 2019.

In 2017, the Bureau amended and clarified several provisions of Regulation Z (82 Fed. Reg. 37656) (August 11, 2017),⁶ including creating tolerances for the Total of Payments disclosure, amending and clarifying the application of the good faith standard under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3) and related tolerances, and clarifying disclosure provisions related to construction loans. Mandatory compliance with most provisions of the amended rule began on October 1, 2018. In 2018, the Bureau further amended the rule to address when Closing Disclosures may be used to reset tolerances (83 Fed. Reg. 19159) (May 2, 2018).⁷ These provisions became effective June 1, 2018. On August 4, 2016, the CFPB issued a final rule to further clarify, revise, and amend provisions of Regulation Z and Regulation X (81 Fed. Reg. 72160) (October 19, 2016).⁸ The amendments in the final rule are referenced in this document as the "2016 Servicing Rule." The 2016 Servicing Rule establishes definitions of successor in interest and confirmed successor in interest in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27), and provides that a confirmed successor in interest is a "consumer" for purposes of the mortgage servicing provisions in Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11)).⁹ The 2016 Servicing Rule also adopts a general definition of delinquency that applies to all of the servicing provisions in Regulation X and the provisions regarding periodic statements for mortgage loans in Regulation Z. Furthermore, the 2016 Servicing Rule clarifies, revises, or amends provisions of Regulation Z relating to:

- Interest rate adjustment notices for adjustable-rate mortgages (ARMs) (12 CFR 1026.20);
- Prompt crediting of mortgage payments and responses to requests for payoff amounts (12 CFR 1026.36(c));
- Periodic statements for mortgage loans 12 CFR 1026.41, including requiring servicers to provide certain consumers in bankruptcy a modified periodic statement or coupon book; and
- Small servicers (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)).

The 2016 Servicing Rule took effect on October 19, 2017, except the provisions related to successors in interest and periodic statements for consumers in bankruptcy, which took effect on April 19, 2018.

The CFPB concurrently issued an interpretive rule under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) to clarify the interaction of the FDCPA and specified mortgage servicing rules in Regulations X and Z. (81 Fed. Reg. 71977) (October 19, 2016).¹⁰ This 2016

⁵ The effective date for the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule was extended to October 3, 2015 by a final rule published in the Federal Register on July 24, 2015. (80 Fed. Reg. 43911). Other provisions of the rule were effective on October 3, 2015, regardless of whether an application was received on that date.

⁸ (81 Fed. Reg. 72160) (October 19, 2016).

⁹ The 2016 Servicing Rule included the following changes to Regulation Z for successors in interest: 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11) and (27), 1026.20(f), 1026.39(f), and 1026.41(g). The 2016 Servicing Rule also changed several sections of the Official Interpretations of Regulation X, published in commentary.

FDCPA interpretive rule constitutes an advisory opinion for purposes of the FDCPA and provides safe harbors from liability for servicers acting in compliance with it.

In 2018, the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act (EGRRCPA)¹¹ amended several provisions of TILA, including: (1) the addition of a new safe-harbor qualified mortgage category for portfolio mortgages of certain insured depository institutions and insured credit unions; (2) modification of the waiting period requirements for high-cost mortgage loan consummation under certain conditions; (3) clarification of “customary and reasonable” as they pertain to fee appraisers who voluntarily donate appraisal services to certain charitable organizations; and (4) student loan protections in the event of bankruptcy or death of the student or non-student obligor. The EGRRCPA also amended TILA to exclude manufactured or modular housing retailers and their employees from loan originator compensation requirements when specific conditions are met, and amended the Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act (SAFE Act) regarding employment transition of certain loan originators. These provisions were generally effective on May 24, 2018, except for the student loan protections, which became effective on November 24, 2018, and the SAFE Act changes, which became effective on November 24, 2019. On November 16, 2019, the Bureau issued an interpretive rule on the SAFE Act changes, with an effective date of November 24, 2019.¹²

In 2020 and 2021, the Bureau issued four final rules amending the qualified mortgage (also referred to as QM) provisions of Regulation Z. The first final rule extended the January 10, 2021 sunset date of a temporary qualified mortgage definition for certain loans eligible for purchase or guarantee by the Government Sponsored Enterprises (GSEs) until the mandatory compliance date of final amendments to the general qualified mortgage definition.¹³ The second final rule (the General QM Final Rule) amended the general qualified mortgage definition, primarily by replacing its 43 percent debt-to-income ratio limit with a limit based on the loan’s pricing.¹⁴ The third final rule (the Seasoned QM Final Rule) created a new category of qualified mortgages—known as “seasoned qualified mortgages”—for first-lien, fixed-rate covered transactions that have met certain performance requirements over a seasoning period of at least 36 months, are held in portfolio by the originating creditor or first purchaser until the end of the seasoning period, comply with general restrictions on product features and points and fees, and meet certain underwriting requirements.¹⁵ The fourth final rule extended the mandatory compliance date of the General QM Final Rule until October 1, 2022.¹⁶ As a result of the fourth final rule, the temporary qualified mortgage definition, commonly known as the GSE Patch, will expire on October 1, 2022 or the date the applicable GSE exits conservatorship, whichever comes first.¹⁷

Format of Regulation Z

The rules creditors must follow differ depending on whether the creditor is offering open-end credit, such as credit cards or home-equity lines, or closed-end credit, such as car loans or mortgages.

Subpart A (12 CFR 1026.1 through 1026.4) of the regulation provides general information that applies to open-end and closed-end credit transactions. It sets forth definitions 12 CFR 1026.2 and stipulates which transactions are covered and which are exempt from the regulation (12 CFR 1026.3). It also contains the rules for determining which fees are finance charges (12 CFR 1026.4).

Subpart B (12 CFR 1026.5 through 1026.16) relates to open-end credit. It contains rules on account-opening disclosures 12 CFR 1026.6 and periodic statements (12 CFR 1026.7-8). It also describes special rules that apply to credit card transactions, treatment of payments 12 CFR 1026.10 and credit balances 12 CFR 1026.11, procedures for resolving credit billing errors 12 CFR 1026.13, annual percentage rate (APR) calculations 12 CFR 1026.14, rescission rights 12 CFR 1026.15, and advertising (12

Reg. 71977) (October 19, 2016) (hereinafter 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule). The interpretations contained in this interpretive rule are included in Regulation X comments 30(d)-1 and 39(d)-2; Regulation Z comment 2(a)(11)-4.ii.

Subpart C (12 CFR 1026.17 through 1026.24) relates to closed-end credit. It contains rules on disclosures 12 CFR 1026.17-20, treatment of credit balances 12 CFR 1026.21, annual percentage rate calculations (12 CFR 1026.22), rescission right (12 CFR 1026.23), and advertising (12 CFR 1026.24).

Subpart D (12 CFR 1026.25 through 1026.30) contain rules on record retention 12 CFR 1026.25, oral disclosures 12 CFR 1026.26, disclosures in languages other than English 12 CFR 1026.27, effect on state laws 12 CFR 1026.28, state exemptions 12 CFR 1026.29, and rate limitations (12 CFR 1026.30).

Subpart E (12 CFR 1026.31 through 1026.45) contains special rules for mortgage transactions. The rules require certain disclosures and provide limitations for closed-end credit transactions and open-end credit plans that have rates or fees above specified amounts or certain prepayment penalties (12 CFR 1026.32). Special disclosures are also required, including the total annual loan cost rate, for reverse mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.33). The rules also prohibit specific acts and practices in connection with high-cost mortgages, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a), (12 CFR 1026.34); in connection with closed-end higher-priced mortgage loans, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a), (12 CFR 1026.35); and in connection with an extension of credit secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36). This subpart also sets forth disclosure requirements, effective October 3, 2015, for certain closed-end transactions secured by real property, or a cooperative unit, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) 12 CFR 1026.37-38, disclosures for mortgage transfers 12 CFR 1026.39, and disclosure requirements for periodic statements for residential mortgage loans (12 CFR 1026.41). In addition, it contains minimum standards for transactions secured by a dwelling, including provisions relating to ability to repay and qualified mortgages (12 CFR 1026.43). This subpart includes the small servicer exemption found in (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)).

Subpart F (12 CFR 1026.46 through 1026.48) relates to private education loans. It contains rules on disclosures 12 CFR 1026.46, limitations on changes in terms after approval 12 CFR 1026.48, the right to cancel the loan 12 CFR 1026.47, and limitations on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans (12 CFR 1026.48).

Subpart G (12 CFR 1026.51 through 1026.61) relates to credit card accounts, including covered separate credit features accessible by hybrid prepaid-credit cards, under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (except for 12 CFR 1026.57(c), which applies to all open-end credit plans). This subpart contains rules regarding disclosures provided on or with credit and charge card applications and solicitations (12 CFR 1026.60). It also contains rules regarding hybrid prepaid-credit cards (12 CFR 1026.61). Subpart G contains rules on evaluation of a consumer's ability to make the required payments under the terms of an account 12 CFR 1026.51, limits the fees that a consumer can be required to pay 12 CFR 1026.52, and contains rules on allocation of payments in excess of the minimum payment (12 CFR 1026.53). It also sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as the result of a loss of a grace period 12 CFR 1026.54, and on increases in annual percentage rates, fees, and charges for credit card accounts 12 CFR 1026.55, including the reevaluation of rate increases (12 CFR 1026.59). This subpart prohibits the assessment of fees or charges for over-the-limit transactions unless the consumer affirmatively consents to the creditor's payment of over-the-limit transactions (12 CFR 1026.56). This subpart also sets forth rules for reporting and marketing of college student open-end credit (12 CFR 1026.57). Finally, it sets forth requirements for the Internet posting of credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.58).

Several appendices contain information such as the procedures for determinations about state laws, state exemptions and issuance of official interpretations, special rules for certain kinds of credit plans, model disclosure forms, standards for determining ability to pay, and the rules for computing annual percentage rates in closed-end credit transactions and total-annual-loan-cost rates for reverse mortgage transactions.

Official interpretations of the regulation are published in a commentary. Good faith compliance with the commentary protects creditors from civil liability under the TILA. In addition, the commentary includes more detailed information on disclosures or other actions required of creditors. It is virtually impossible to comply with Regulation Z without reference to and reliance on the commentary.

NOTE: The following narrative does not discuss all the sections of Regulation Z but rather highlights only certain sections of the regulation and the TILA.

Truth in Lending Act Narrative

Subpart A – General

This subpart contains general information regarding both open-end and closed-end credit transactions. It sets forth definitions 12 CFR 1026.2 and sets out which transactions are covered and which are exempt from the regulation (12 CFR 1026.3). It also contains the rules for determining which fees are finance charges (12 CFR 1026.4).

V. Lending — TILA

Purpose of the TILA and Regulation Z

The TILA is intended to ensure that credit terms are disclosed in a meaningful way so consumers can compare credit terms more readily and knowledgeably. Before its enactment, consumers were faced with a bewildering array of credit terms and rates. It was difficult to compare loans because they were seldom presented in the same format. Now, all creditors must use the same credit terminology and expressions of rates. In addition to providing a uniform system for disclosures, the act:

- Protects consumers against inaccurate and unfair credit billing and credit card practices;
- Provides ability to repay requirements and other limitations applicable to credit cards;
- Provides consumers with rescission rights;
- Provides for rate caps on certain dwelling-secured loans;
- Imposes limitations on home equity lines of credit (HELOCs) and certain closed-end home mortgages;
- Provides minimum standards for most dwelling-secured loans; and
- Delineates and prohibits unfair or deceptive mortgage lending practices.

The TILA and Regulation Z do not, however, tell financial institutions how much interest they may charge or whether they must grant a consumer a loan.

Summary of Coverage Considerations – 12 CFR 1026.1 and 1026.2

Lenders should carefully consider several factors when deciding whether a loan is subject to Truth in Lending disclosures or other Regulation Z requirements. The coverage considerations under Regulation Z are addressed in more detail in the commentary to Regulation Z. For example, broad coverage considerations are included under 12 CFR 1026.1(c) of the regulation and relevant definitions appear in (12 CFR 1026.2).

The 2016 Servicing Rule adds a definition of successor in interest. Successor in interest means a person to whom an ownership interest in a dwelling securing a closed-end consumer credit transaction is transferred from a consumer, provided that the transfer is:

- A transfer by devise, descent, or operation of law on the death of a joint tenant or tenant by the entirety;
- A transfer to a relative resulting from the death of the consumer;
- A transfer where the spouse or children of the consumer become an owner of the property;
- A transfer resulting from a decree of a dissolution of marriage, legal separation agreement, or an incidental property settlement agreement, by which the spouse of the consumer becomes an owner of the property; or
- A transfer into an inter vivos trust in which the consumer is and remains a beneficiary and which does not relate to a transfer of rights of occupancy in the property.

12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27)(i)

Confirmed successor in interest means a successor in interest once a servicer has confirmed the successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in the dwelling (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27)(ii)).

Under 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11), a confirmed successor in interest is a consumer for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.20(c) through (e), 1026.36(c), 1026.39, and 1026.41.

Further, a servicer that is debt collector under the FDCPA with respect to a mortgage loan does not violate the prohibition in FDCPA section 805(b) on communicating with third parties by communicating with a confirmed successor in interest in compliance with the mortgage servicing rules because “consumer” for purposes of FDCPA section 805 includes any person who meets the definition in this part of confirmed successor in interest (Comment 2(a)(11)-4.ii).¹⁸

Exempt Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.3

The following transactions are exempt from Regulation Z:

- Credit extended primarily for a business, commercial, or agricultural purpose;

¹⁸ See also the 2016 FDCPA Interpretive Rule (81 Fed. Reg. 71977, 71979).

- Credit extended to other than a natural person (including credit to government agencies or instrumentalities);

NOTE: Credit extended to trusts established for tax or estate planning purposes or to land trusts is considered to be extended to a natural person for purposes of the definition of “consumer” (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11), Comment 2(a)(11)-3). Credit in excess of an annually adjusted threshold not secured by real property or by personal property used or expected to be used as the principal dwelling of the consumer;¹⁹

- Public utility credit;
- Credit extended by a broker-dealer registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC), involving securities or commodities accounts;
- Home fuel budget plans not subject to a finance charge; and
- Certain student loan programs.

However, when a credit card is involved, generally exempt credit (e.g., business purpose credit) is subject to the requirements that govern the issuance of credit cards and liability for their unauthorized use. Credit cards must not be issued on an unsolicited basis and, if a credit card is lost or stolen, the cardholder must not be held liable for more than $50 for the unauthorized use of the card (Comment 3-1).

When determining whether credit is for consumer purposes, the creditor must evaluate all of the following:

- Any statement obtained from the consumer describing the purpose of the proceeds.
 - For example, a statement that the proceeds will be used for a vacation trip would indicate a consumer purpose.
 - If the loan has a mixed-purpose (e.g., proceeds will be used to buy a car that will be used for personal and business purposes), the lender must look to the primary purpose of the loan to decide whether disclosures are necessary. A statement of purpose from the consumer will help the lender make that decision.

- A checked box indicating that the loan is for a business purpose, absent any documentation showing the intended use of the proceeds could be insufficient evidence that the loan did not have a consumer purpose.
- The consumer’s primary occupation and how it relates to the use of the proceeds. The higher the correlation between the consumer’s occupation and the property purchased from the loan proceeds, the greater the likelihood that the loan has a business purpose. For example, proceeds used to purchase dental supplies for a dentist would indicate a business purpose.
- Personal management of the assets purchased from proceeds. The lower the degree of the borrower’s personal involvement in the management of the investment or enterprise purchased by the loan proceeds, the less likely the loan will have a business purpose. For example, money borrowed to purchase stock in an automobile company by an individual who does not work for that company would indicate a personal investment and a consumer purpose.
- The size of the transaction. The larger the size of the transaction, the more likely the loan will have a business purpose. For example, if the loan is for a $5 million real estate transaction, that might indicate a business purpose.
- The amount of income derived from the property acquired by the loan proceeds relative to the borrower’s total income. The lesser the income derived from the acquired property, the more likely the loan will have a consumer purpose. For example, if the borrower has an annual salary of $100,000 and receives about $500 in annual dividends from the acquired property, that would indicate a consumer purpose.

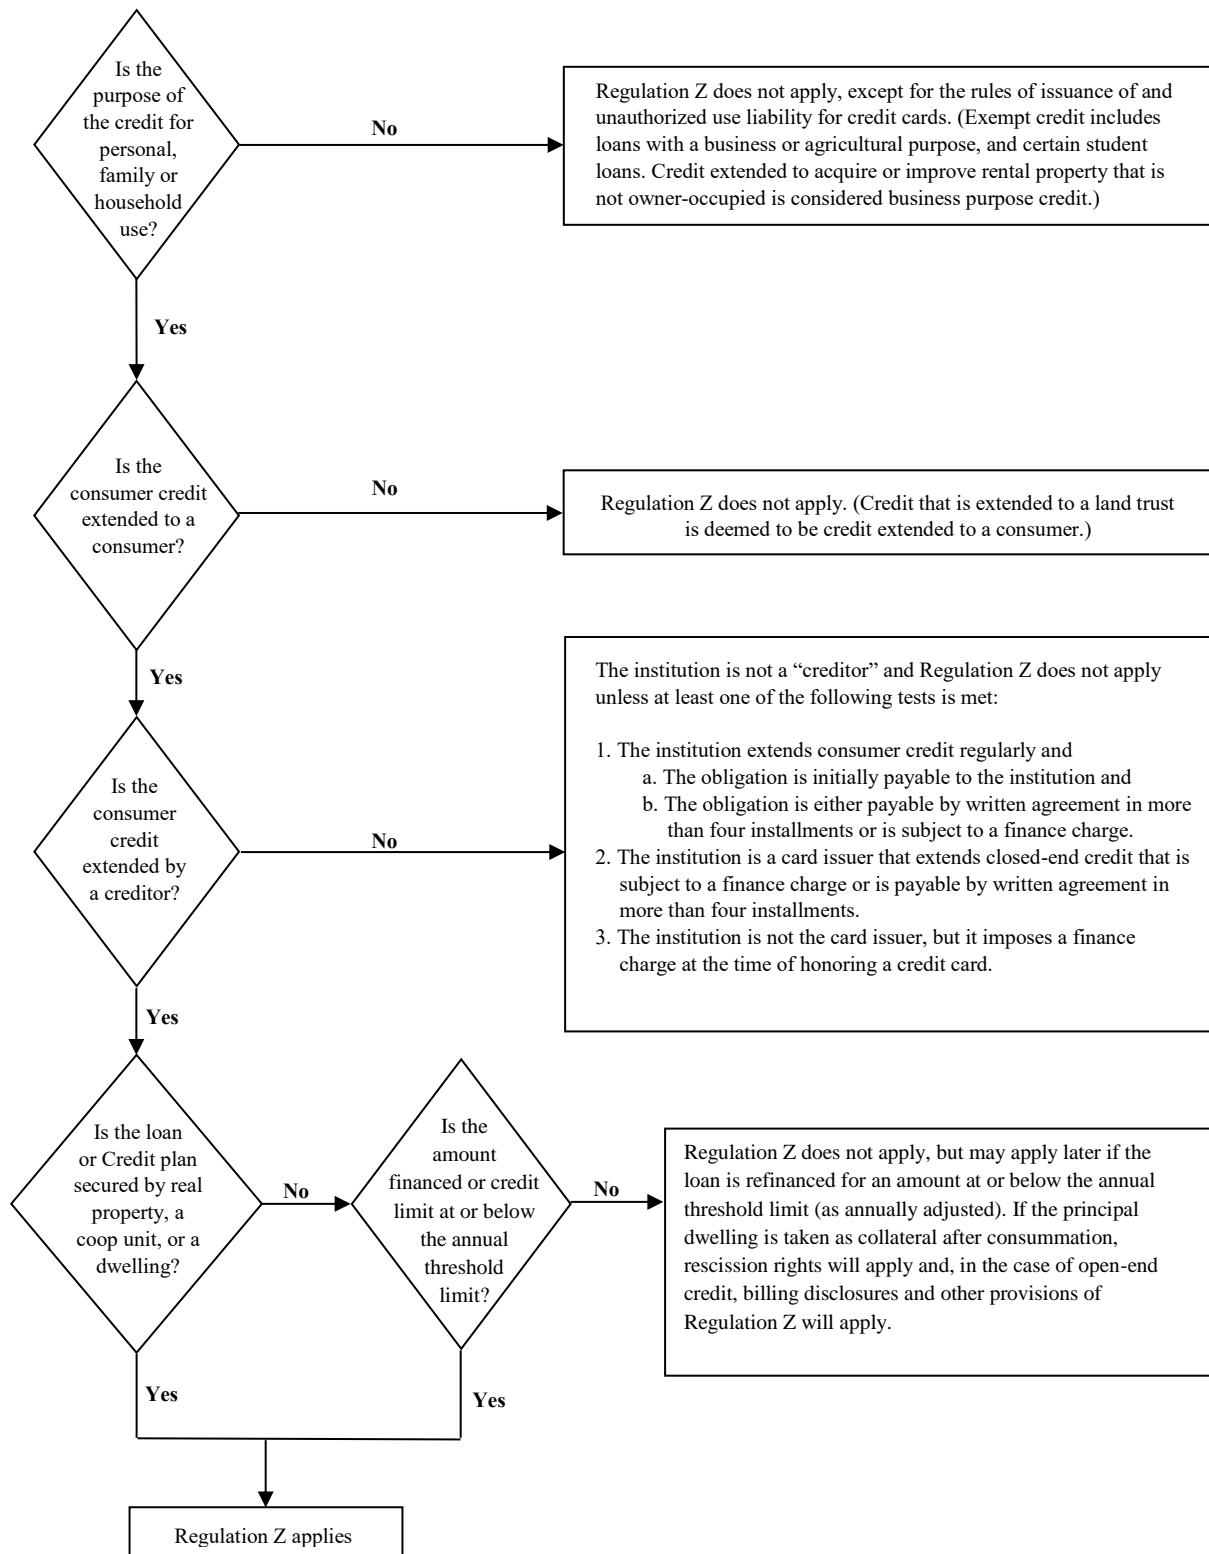

Creditors should consider all five factors before determining that disclosures are not necessary. Normally, no one factor by itself is sufficient reason to determine the applicability of Regulation Z. In any event, the financial institution may routinely furnish disclosures to the consumer. Disclosure under such circumstances does not control whether the transaction is covered but can assure protection to the financial institution and compliance with the law.

Coverage Considerations under Regulation Z

Determination of Finance Charge and Annual Percentage Rate (APR)

Finance Charge (Open-End and Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.4

The finance charge is a measure of the cost of consumer credit represented in dollars and cents. Along with APR disclosures, the disclosure of the finance charge is central to the uniform credit cost disclosure envisioned by the TILA.

The finance charge does not include any charge of a type payable in a comparable cash transaction. Examples of charges payable in a comparable cash transaction may include taxes, title, license fees, or registration fees paid in connection with an automobile purchase. In addition, with respect to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, the finance charge does not include a charge imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account to the extent the amount of the charge does not exceed comparable charges imposed on prepaid accounts in the same prepaid account program that do not have a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card.

Finance charges include any charges or fees payable directly or indirectly by the consumer and imposed directly or indirectly by the financial institution either as an incident to or as a condition of an extension of consumer credit. The finance charge on a loan always includes any interest charges and often, other charges. Regulation Z includes examples, applicable both to open-end and closed-end credit transactions, of what must, must not, or need not be included in the disclosed finance charge (12 CFR 1026.4(b)).

Accuracy Tolerances (Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.18(d) and 1026.23(g) and (h)

Regulation Z provides finance charge tolerances for legal accuracy that should not be confused with those provided in the TILA for reimbursement under regulatory agency orders. As with disclosed APRs, if a disclosed finance charge were legally accurate, it would not be subject to reimbursement.

Under the TILA and Regulation Z, finance charge disclosures for open-end credit must be accurate since there is no tolerance for finance charge errors. However, both the TILA and Regulation Z permit various finance charge accuracy tolerances for closed-end credit.

Tolerances for the finance charge in a closed-end transaction, other than a mortgage loan, are generally $5 if the amount financed is less than or equal to $1,000 and $10 if the amount financed exceeds $1,000. For transactions that are subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (i.e., transactions subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule), the tolerances applicable to finance charges are also applicable to the total of payments disclosure. Tolerances for certain transactions consummated on or after September 30, 1995, are noted below.

- Credit secured by real property or a dwelling (closed-end credit only (12 CFR 1026.18(d)):
 - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is not understated by more than $100.
 - Overstatements are not violations.
- Rescission rights after the three-business-day rescission period (closed-end credit only 12 CFR 1026.23(g)):
 - Tolerances for accuracy, General Rule – One-half of 1 percent tolerance:
 - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is not understated by more than one-half of 1 percent of the credit extended or $100, whichever is greater.
 - The total of payments for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) is considered accurate for purposes of this section if it is understated by no more than one-half of 1 percent of the face amount of the note or $100, whichever is greater.
 - The disclosed finance charge and the total payments are considered accurate if the amount disclosed was greater than the amount required to be disclosed (i.e., the amount disclosed overstated the actual finance charge or total of payments).
 - Tolerances for accuracy, Refinancings – One percent tolerance, for the initial and subsequent refinancings of residential mortgage transactions when the new loan is made at a different financial institution. (Excludes high-cost mortgage loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.32, transactions in which there are new advances, and new consolidations.):
 - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is not understated

- by more than 1 percent of the credit extended or $100, whichever is greater,
- The total of payments for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) is considered accurate for purposes of this section if it is understated by no more than 1 percent of the face amount of the note or $100, whichever is greater.
 - The disclosed finance charge and the total payments are considered accurate if the amount disclosed was greater than the amount required to be disclosed (i.e., the amount disclosed overstated the actual finance charge or total of payments).
- Rescission rights in foreclosure (12 CFR 1026.23(h)):
 - Right to rescind. After the initiation of foreclosure on the consumer’s principal dwelling that secures the obligation, the consumer can rescind if
 - A mortgage broker fee that should have been included in the finance charge was not included; or
 - The creditor did not provide the properly completed appropriate model form in Appendix H, or a substantially similar notice of rescission.
 - Tolerance for disclosures. After the initiation of foreclosure on the consumer’s principal dwelling that secures the credit obligation:
 - The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate if it is understated by no more than $35.
 - The total of payments for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) is considered accurate for purposes of this section if it is understated by no more than $35.
 - The disclosed finance charge and the total of payments are considered accurate if the amount disclosed was greater than the amount required to be disclosed (i.e., the amount disclosed overstated the actual finance charge or total of payments).

NOTES:

- Normally, the finance charge tolerance for a rescindable transaction is either 0.5 percent of the credit transaction or, for certain refinancings, 1 percent of the credit transaction. However, in the event of a foreclosure, the consumer may exercise the right of rescission if the disclosed finance charge is understated by more than $35.
- Tolerances for the total of payments disclosure as discussed in 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(1) are similar to the tolerances applicable to the finance charge. Special tolerances apply to the disclosure of the total of payments for purposes of the right of rescission, for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f). (12 CFR 1026.23(g)(1)(ii), (g)(2)(ii)).
- See the “Finance Charge Tolerances” charts within these examination procedures for help in determining appropriate finance charge tolerances.

Calculating the Finance Charge (Closed-End Credit)

One of the more complex tasks under Regulation Z is determining whether a charge associated with an extension of credit must be included in, or excluded from, the disclosed finance charge. The finance charge initially includes any charge that is, or will be, connected with a specific loan. Charges imposed by third parties are finance charges if the financial institution requires use of the third party. Charges imposed by settlement or closing agents are finance charges if the bank requires the specific service that gave rise to the charge and the charge is not otherwise excluded. The “Finance Charge Tolerances” charts within this document briefly summarize the rules that must be considered under (12 CFR 1026.4).

Prepaid Finance Charges – 12 CFR 1026.18(b)(3)

A prepaid finance charge is any finance charge paid separately to the financial institution or to a third party, in cash or by check before or at closing, settlement, or consummation of a transaction, or withheld from the proceeds of the credit at any time.

Prepaid finance charges effectively reduce the amount of funds available for the consumer’s use, usually before or at the time the transaction is consummated.

Examples of finance charges frequently prepaid by consumers are borrower’s points, loan origination fees, real estate/construction inspection fees, odd days’ interest (interest attributable to part of the first payment period when that period is longer than a regular payment period), mortgage guarantee insurance fees paid to the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), private mortgage insurance (PMI) paid to such companies as the Mortgage Guaranty Insurance Corporation (MGIC), and, in non-real-estate transactions, credit report fees.

the add-on, discount, or simple interest methods. If reflected in the face amount of the debt instrument as part of the consumer's obligation, finance charges that are not viewed as prepaid finance charges are treated as precomputed finance charges that are earned over the life of the loan.

Precomputed Finance Charges

A precomputed finance charge includes, for example, interest added to the note amount that is computed by

Instructions for the Finance Charge Chart

The finance charge initially includes any charge that is, or will be, connected with a specific loan. Charges imposed by third parties are finance charges if the creditor requires use of the third party. Charges imposed on the consumer by a settlement agent are finance charges only if the creditor requires the particular services for which the settlement agent is charging the borrower and the charge is not otherwise excluded from the finance charge.

Immediately below the finance charge definition, the chart presents five captions applicable to determining whether a loan-related charge is a finance charge.

The first caption is “charges always included.” This category focuses on specific charges given in the regulation or commentary as examples of finance charges.

The second caption, “charges included unless conditions are met,” focuses on charges that must be included in the finance charge unless the creditor meets specific disclosure or other conditions to exclude the charges from the finance charge.

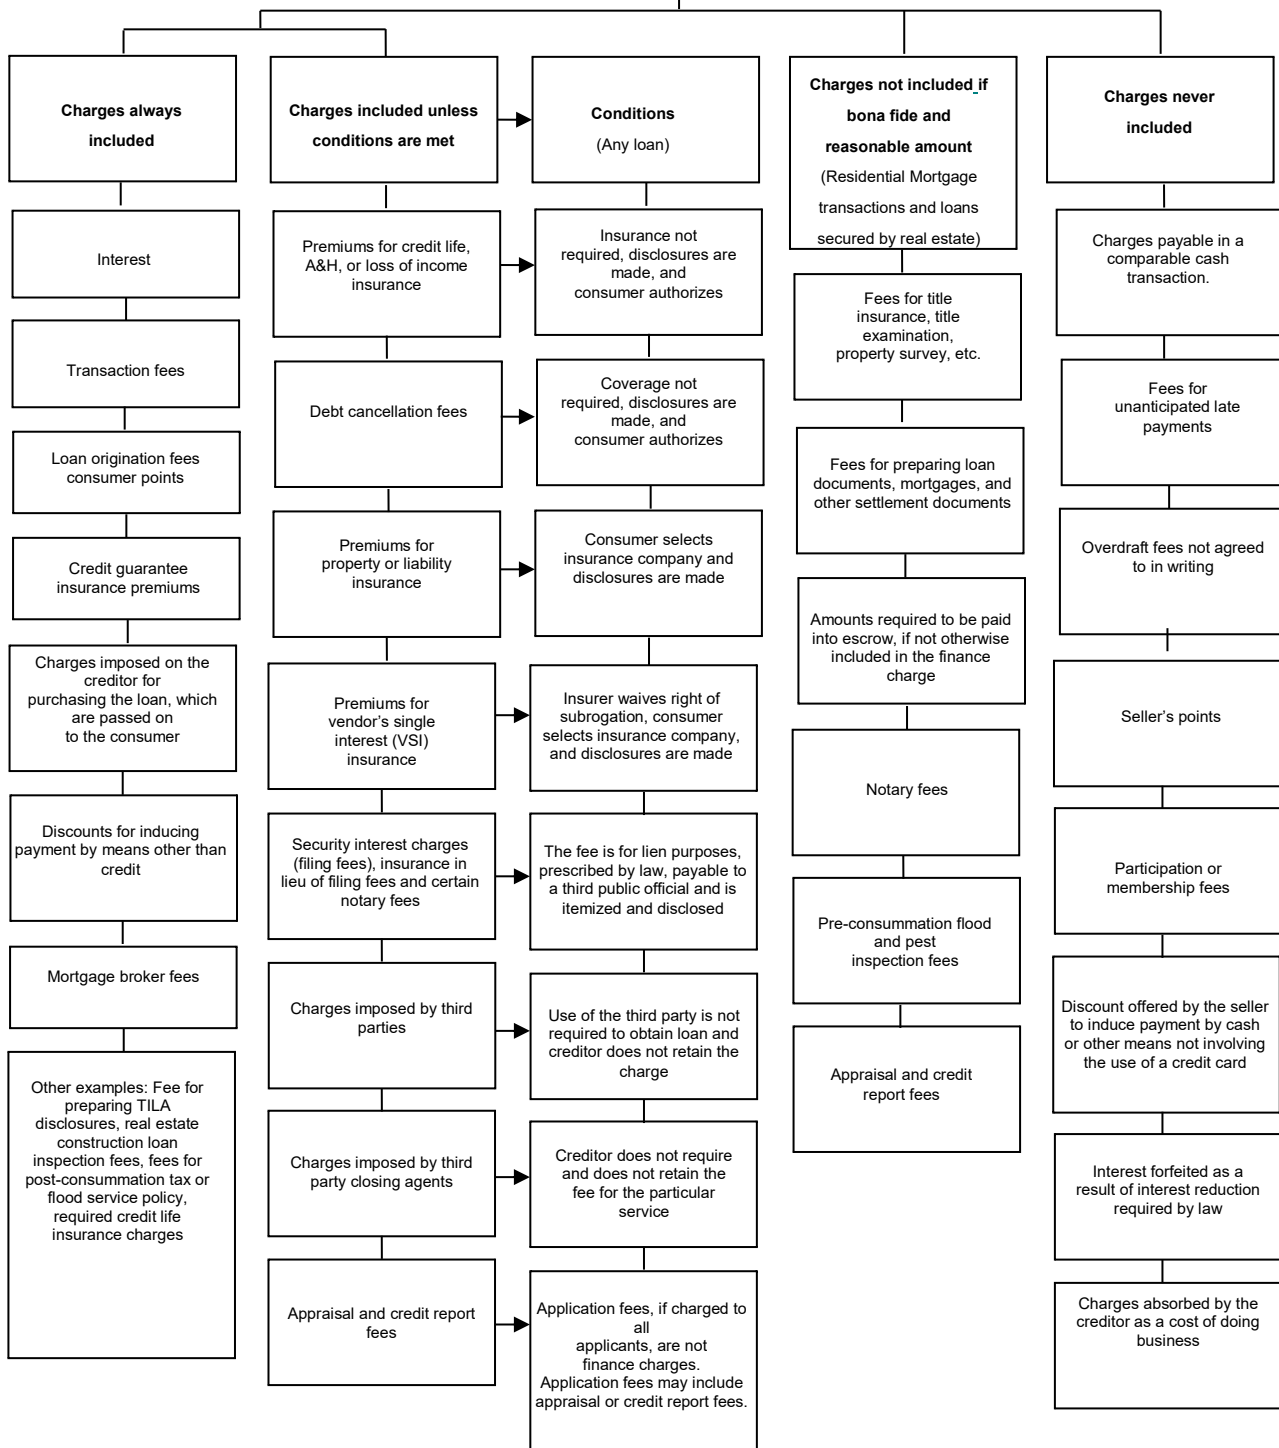

The third caption, “conditions,” focuses on the conditions that need to be met if the charges identified to the left of the conditions are permitted to be excluded from the finance charge. Although most charges under the second caption may be included in the finance charge at the creditor's option, third-party charges and application fees (listed last under the third caption) must be excluded from the finance charge if the relevant conditions are met. However, inclusion of appraisal and credit report charges as part of the application fee is optional.

The fourth caption, “charges not included,” identifies fees or charges that are not included in the finance charge under conditions identified by the caption. If the credit transaction is secured by real property or the loan is a residential mortgage transaction, the charges identified in the column, if they are bona fide and reasonable in amount, must be excluded from the finance charge. For example, if a consumer loan is secured by a vacant lot or commercial real estate, any appraisal fees connected with the loan must not be included in the finance charge.

The fifth caption, “charges never included,” lists specific charges provided by the regulation as examples of those that automatically are not finance charges (e.g., fees for unanticipated late payments).

Finance Charge Chart

Finance Charge = Dollar Cost Of Consumer Credit: It includes any charge payable directly or indirectly by the consumer and imposed directly or indirectly by the creditor as a condition of or incident to the extension of credit.

Annual Percentage Rate Definition – 12 CFR 1026.22 (Closed-End Credit)

Credit costs may vary depending on the interest rate, the amount of the loan and other charges, the timing and amounts of advances, and the repayment schedule. The APR, which must be disclosed in nearly all consumer credit transactions, is designed to take into account all relevant factors and to provide a uniform measure for comparing the cost of various credit transactions.

The APR is a measure of the cost of credit, expressed as a nominal yearly rate. It relates the amount and timing of value received by the consumer to the amount and timing of payments made. The disclosure of the APR is central to the uniform credit cost disclosure envisioned by the TILA.

The value of a closed-end credit APR must be disclosed as a single rate only, whether the loan has a single interest rate, a variable interest rate, a discounted variable interest rate, or graduated payments based on separate interest rates (step rates), and it must appear with the segregated disclosures. Segregated disclosures are grouped together and do not contain any information not directly related to the disclosures required under (12 CFR 1026.18).

Since an APR measures the total cost of credit, including costs such as transaction charges or premiums for credit guarantee insurance, it is not an “interest” rate, as that term is generally used. APR calculations do not rely on definitions of interest in state law and often include charges, such as a commitment fee paid by the consumer, that are not viewed by some state usury statutes as interest. Conversely, an APR might not include a charge, such as a credit report fee in a real property transaction, which some state laws might view as interest for usury purposes. Furthermore, measuring the timing of value received and of payments made, which is essential if APR calculations are to be accurate, must be consistent with parameters under Regulation Z.

The APR is often considered to be the finance charge expressed as a percentage. However, two loans could require the same finance charge and still have different APRs because of differing values of the amount financed or of payment schedules. For example, the APR is 12 percent on a loan with an amount financed of $5,000 and 36 equal monthly payments of $166.07 each. It is 13.26 percent on a loan with an amount financed of $4,500 and 35 equal monthly payments of $152.18 each and final payment of $152.22. In both cases the finance charge is $978.52. The APRs on these example loans are not the same because an APR does not only reflect the finance charge, it relates the amount and timing of value received by the consumer to the amount and timing of payments made.

The APR is a function of:

- The amount financed, which is not necessarily equivalent to the loan amount. For example, if the consumer must pay at closing a separate 1 percent loan origination fee (prepaid finance charge) on a $100,000 residential mortgage loan, the loan amount is $100,000, but the amount financed would be $100,000 less the $1,000 loan fee, or $99,000.

- The finance charge, which is not necessarily equivalent to the total interest amount (interest is not defined by Regulation Z, but rather by state or other federal law). For example:
 - If the consumer must pay a $25 credit report fee for an auto loan, the fee must be included in the finance charge. The finance charge in that case is the sum of the interest on the loan (i.e., interest generated by the application of a percentage rate against the loan amount) plus the $25 credit report fee.
 - If the consumer must pay a $25 credit report fee for a home improvement loan secured by real property, the credit report fee must be excluded from the finance charge. The finance charge in that case would be only the interest on the loan.
- The payment schedule, which does not necessarily include only principal and interest (P + I) payments. For example:
 - If the consumer borrows $2,500 for a vacation trip at 14 percent simple interest per annum and repays that amount with 25 equal monthly payments beginning one month from consummation of the transaction, the monthly P + I payment will be $115.87, if all months are considered equal, and the amount financed would be $2,500. If the consumer’s payments are increased by $2.00 a month to pay a non-financed $50 loan fee during the life of the loan, the amount financed would remain at $2,500 but the payment schedule would be increased to $117.87 a month, the finance charge would increase by $50, and there would be a corresponding increase in the APR. This would be the case whether or not state law defines the $50 loan fee as interest.
 - If the loan above has 55 days to the first payment and the consumer prepays interest at consummation ($24.31 to cover the first 25 days), the amount financed would be $2,500 - $24.31, or $2,475.69. Although the amount financed has been reduced to reflect the consumer’s reduced use of available funds at consummation, the time interval during which the consumer has use of the $2,475.69, 55 days to the first payment, has not changed. Since the first payment period exceeds the limitations of the regulation’s minor irregularities provisions (See 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(4)), it may not be treated as regular. In calculating the APR, the first payment period must not be reduced by 25 days (i.e., the first payment period may not be treated as one month).

Financial institutions may, if permitted by state or other law, precompute interest by applying a rate against a loan balance using a simple interest, add-on, discount or some other method, and may earn interest using a simple interest accrual system, the Rule of 78s (if permitted by law) or some other method. Unless the financial institution's internal interest earnings and accrual methods involve a simple interest rate based on a 360-day year that is applied over actual days (even that is important only for determining the accuracy of the payment schedule), it is not relevant in calculating an APR, since an APR is not an interest rate (as that term is commonly used under state or other law). Since the APR normally need not rely on the internal accrual systems of a bank, it always may be computed after the loan terms have been agreed upon (as long as it is disclosed before actual consummation of the transaction).

Special Requirements for Calculating the Finance Charge and APR

Proper calculation of the finance charge and APR are of primary importance. The regulation requires that the terms “finance charge” and “annual percentage rate” be disclosed more conspicuously than any other required disclosure, subject to limited exceptions. The finance charge and APR, more than any other disclosures, enable consumers to understand the cost of the credit and to comparison shop for credit. A creditor's failure to disclose those values accurately can result in significant monetary damages to the creditor, either from a class action lawsuit or from a regulatory agency's order to reimburse consumers for violations of law.

If an APR or finance charge is disclosed incorrectly, the error is not, in itself, a violation of the regulation if:

- The error resulted from a corresponding error in a calculation tool used in good faith by the financial institution.
- Upon discovery of the error, the financial institution promptly discontinues use of that calculation tool for disclosure purposes.
- The financial institution notifies the CFPB in writing of the error in the calculation tool.

When a financial institution claims a calculation tool was used in good faith, the financial institution assumes a reasonable degree of responsibility for ensuring that the tool in question provides the accuracy required by the regulation (15 U.S.C. 1640 (c)). For example, the financial institution might verify the results obtained using the tool by comparing those results to the figures obtained by using another calculation tool. The financial institution might also verify that the tool, if it is designed to operate under the actuarial method, produces figures similar to those provided by the examples in Appendix J to the regulation. The calculation tool should be checked for accuracy before it is first used and periodically thereafter.

Subpart B – Open-End Credit

Subpart B relates to open-end credit. It contains rules on account-opening disclosures 12 CFR 1026.6 and periodic statements (12 CFR 1026.7-.8). It also describes special rules that apply to credit card transactions, treatment of payments 12 CFR 1026.10 and credit balances 12 CFR 1026.11, procedures for resolving credit billing errors 12 CFR 1026.13, annual percentage rate calculations 12 CFR 1026.14, rescission requirements 12 CFR 1026.15 and advertising (12 CFR 1026.16).

Time of Disclosures (Periodic Statements) – 12 CFR 1026.5(b)

For credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, creditors must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the payment due date disclosed on the periodic statement and that payments are not treated as late for any purpose if they are received within 21 days after mailing or delivery of the statement. In addition, for all open-end consumer credit accounts with grace periods, creditors must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the date on which a grace period (if any) expires and that finance charges are not imposed as a result of the loss of a grace period if a payment is received within 21 days after mailing or delivery of a statement. For purposes of this requirement, a “grace period” is defined as a period within which any credit extended may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate. For non-credit card open-end consumer plans without a grace period, creditors must adopt reasonable policies and procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements are mailed or delivered at least 14 days prior to the date on which the required minimum periodic payment is due. Moreover, the creditor must adopt reasonable policies and procedures to ensure that it does not treat as late a required minimum periodic payment received by the creditor within 14 days after it has mailed or delivered the periodic statement.

Subsequent Disclosures (Open-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.9

For open-end, not home-secured credit, the following applies:

Creditors are required to provide consumers with 45 days' advance written notice of rate increases and other significant changes to the terms of their credit card account agreements. The list of “significant changes” includes most fees and other terms that a consumer should be aware of before use of the account. Examples of such fees and terms include:

- Penalty fees;
- Transaction fees;

V. Lending — TILA

- Fees imposed for the issuance or availability of the open-end plan;
- Grace period; and
- Balance computation method.

Changes that do not require advance notice include:

- Reductions of finance charges;
- Termination of account privileges resulting from an agreement involving a court proceeding;
- Increase in an APR upon expiration of a specified period of time previously disclosed in writing;
- Increases in variable APRs that change according to an index not under the card issuer's control; and
- Rate increases due to the completion of, or failure of a consumer to comply with, the terms of a workout or temporary hardship arrangement, if those terms are disclosed prior to commencement of the arrangement.

A creditor may suspend account privileges, terminate an account, or lower the credit limit without notice. However, a creditor that lowers the credit limit may not impose an over-limit fee or penalty rate as a result of exceeding the new credit limit without a 45-day advance notice that the credit limit has been reduced.

For significant changes in terms (with the exception of rate changes, increases in the minimum payment, certain changes in the balance computation method, and when the change results from the consumer's failure to make a required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date), a creditor must also provide consumers the right to reject the change. If the consumer does reject the change prior to the effective date, the creditor may not apply the change to the account (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(2)(i)).

In addition, when a consumer rejects a change or increase, the creditor must not:

- Impose a fee or charge, or treat the account as in default solely as a result of the rejection; or
- Require repayment of the balance on the account using a method that is less beneficial to the consumer than one of the following methods: (1) the method of repayment prior to the rejection; (2) an amortization period of not less than five years from the date of rejection; or (3) a minimum periodic payment that includes a percentage of the balance that is not more than twice the percentage included prior to the date of rejection.

Finance Charge (Open-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) and 1026.6(b)(3)

Each finance charge imposed must be individually itemized. The aggregate total amount of the finance charge need not be disclosed.

Determining the Balance and Computing the Finance Charge

There are three common methods to determine the balance to which the periodic rate is applied: the previous balance method, the daily balance method, and the average daily balance method, which are described as follows:

- Previous balance method. The balance on which the periodic finance charge is computed is based on the balance outstanding at the start of the billing cycle. The periodic rate is multiplied by this balance to compute the finance charge.
- Daily balance method. A daily periodic rate is applied to either the balance on each day in the cycle or the sum of the balances on each of the days in the cycle. If a daily periodic rate is multiplied by the balance on each day in the billing cycle, the finance charge is the sum of the products. If the daily periodic rate is multiplied by the sum of all the daily balances, the result is the finance charge.
- Average daily balance method. The average daily balance is the sum of the daily balances (either including or excluding current transactions) divided by the number of days in the billing cycle. A periodic rate is then multiplied by the average daily balance to determine the finance charge. If the periodic rate is a daily one, the product of the rate multiplied by the average balance is multiplied by the number of days in the cycle.

In addition to those common methods, financial institutions have other ways of calculating the balance to which the periodic rate is applied. By reading the financial institution's explanation, the examiner should be able to calculate the balance to which the periodic rate was applied. In some cases, the examiner may need to obtain additional information from the financial institution to verify the explanation disclosed. If the examiner is unable to understand the disclosed explanation, he or she should discuss the explanation with management and should remind management of Regulation Z's requirement that disclosures be clear and conspicuous.

When a balance is determined without first deducting all credits and payments made during the billing cycle, that fact and the amount of the credits and payments must be disclosed.

If the financial institution uses the daily balance method and applies a single daily periodic rate, disclosure of the balance to which the rate was applied may be stated as any of the following:

- A balance for each day in the billing cycle. The daily periodic rate is multiplied by the balance on each day and the sum of the products is the finance charge.
- A balance for each day in the billing cycle on which the balance in the account changes. The finance charge is figured by the same method as discussed previously, but the statement shows the balance only for those days on which the balance changed.
- The sum of the daily balances during the billing cycle. The balance on which the finance charge is computed is the sum of all the daily balances in the billing cycle. The daily periodic rate is multiplied by that balance to determine the finance charge.
- The average daily balance during the billing cycle. If this is stated, the financial institution may, at its option, explain that the average daily balance is or can be multiplied by the number of days in the billing cycle and the periodic rate applied to the product to determine the amount of interest.

If the financial institution uses the daily balance method but applies two or more daily periodic rates, the sum of the daily balances may not be used. Acceptable ways of disclosing the balances include:

- A balance for each day in the billing cycle;
- A balance for each day in the billing cycle on which the balance in the account changes; or
- Two or more average daily balances. If the average daily balances are stated, the financial institution may, at its option, explain that interest is or may be determined by 1) multiplying each of the average daily balances by the number of days in the billing cycle (or if the daily rate varied during the cycle, by multiplying the number of days that the applicable rate was in effect), 2) by multiplying each of the results by the applicable daily periodic rate, and 3) adding these products together.

In explaining the method used to find the balance on which the finance charge is computed, the financial institution need not reveal how it allocates payments or credits. That information may be disclosed as additional information, but all required information must be clear and conspicuous.

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.54 prohibits a credit card issuer from calculating finance charges based on balances for days in previous billing cycles as a result of the loss of a grace period (a practice sometimes referred to as “double-cycle billing”).

Finance Charge Resulting from Two or More Periodic Rates

Some financial institutions use more than one periodic rate in computing the finance charge. For example, one rate may apply to balances up to a certain amount and another rate to balances more than that amount. If two or more periodic rates apply, the financial institution must disclose all rates and conditions. The range of balances to which each rate applies also must be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1)). It is not necessary, however, to break the finance charge into separate components based on the different rates.

Annual Percentage Rate (Open-End Credit)

The disclosed APR on an open-end credit account is accurate if it is within one-eighth of one percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z.

Determination of APR – 12 CFR 1026.14

The basic method for determining the APR in open-end credit transactions involves multiplying each periodic rate by the number of periods in a year. This method is used in all types of open-end disclosures, including:

- The corresponding APR in the initial disclosures;
- The corresponding APR on periodic statements;
- The APR in early disclosures for credit card accounts;
- The APR in early disclosures for home-equity plans;
- The APR in advertising; and
- The APR in oral disclosures.

The corresponding APR is prospective, and it does not involve any particular finance charge or periodic balance.

A second method of calculating the APR is the quotient method. At a creditor’s option, the quotient method may be disclosed on periodic statements for home-equity plans subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 (home-equity lines of credit or HELOCs).²⁰ The quotient method reflects the annualized equivalent of the rate that was actually applied during a cycle. This rate, also known as the effective APR, will differ from the corresponding APR if the creditor applies minimum, fixed, or transaction charges to the account during the cycle (12 CFR 1026.14(c)).

²⁰ If a creditor does not disclose the effective (or quotient method) APR on a HELOC periodic statement, it must instead disclose the charges (fees and interest) imposed as provided in 12 CFR 1026.7(a).

Change in Terms Notices for Home Equity Plans Subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 – 12 CFR 1026.9(c)

Servicers are required to provide consumers with 15 days' advance written notice of a change to any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) or where the required minimum periodic payment is increased. Notice is not required when the change involves a reduction of any component of a finance charge or other charge or when the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding. If the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit in certain circumstances (if permitted by contract), a written notice must be provided no later than three business days after the action is taken and must include the specific reasons for the action. If the creditor requires the consumer to request reinstatement of credit privileges, the notice also must state that fact.

Payments – 12 CFR 1026.10 (Open-End Credit)

Creditors are required to credit a payment to the consumer's account as of the date of receipt, except when a delay in crediting does not result in a finance or other charge. If a creditor fails to credit a payment, as required by 12 CFR 1026.10(a) or (b), in time to avoid the imposition of finance or other charges, the creditor shall adjust the consumer's account so that the charges imposed are credited to the consumer's account during the next billing cycle.

If a card issuer makes a material change in the address for receiving payments or procedures for handling payments, and such change causes a material delay in the crediting of a payment to the consumer's account during the 60-day period following the date on which such change took effect, the card issuer may not impose any late fee or finance charge for a late payment on the credit card account during the 60-day period following the date on which the change took effect.

Timely Settlement of Estates – 12 CFR 1026.11(c)

Issuers are required to establish procedures to ensure that any administrator of an estate can resolve the outstanding credit

²¹ For the following formulas, the APR cannot be determined if the applicable balance is zero. (12 CFR 1026.14(c)(2))

²² Loan fees, points, or similar finance charges that relate to the opening of the account must not be included in the calculation of the APR.

²³ The sum of the balances may include the average daily balance, adjusted balance, or previous balance method. When a portion of the finance charge is determined by application of one or more daily periodic rates, the sum of the balances also means the average of daily balances. See Appendix F to Regulation Z.

²⁴ Cannot be less than the highest periodic rate applied, expressed as an APR. Loan fees, points, or similar finance charges that relate to the opening of the account must not be included in the calculation of the APR.

card balance of a deceased account holder in a timely manner. If an administrator requests the amount of the balance:

- The issuer is prohibited from imposing additional fees on the account;
- The issuer is required to disclose the amount of the balance to the administrator in a timely manner (safe harbor of 30 days); and
- If the balance is paid in full within 30 days after disclosure of the balance, the issuer must waive or rebate any trailing or residual interest charges that accrued on the balance following the disclosure.

Billing Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1026.13 (Open-End Credit)

A billing error notice is a written notice from a consumer that:

- Is received by a creditor at the address disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(9) or (b)(9), as applicable, no later than 60 days after the creditor transmitted the first periodic statement that reflects the alleged billing error;
- Enables the creditor to identify the consumer's name and account number; and
- To the extent possible, indicates the consumer's belief and the reasons for the belief that a billing error exists, and the type, date, and amount of the error.

The creditor shall mail or deliver written acknowledgment to the consumer within 30 days of receiving a billing error notice, unless the creditor has complied with the appropriate resolution procedures of 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within the 30-day period. Furthermore, the creditor credit must comply with the appropriate resolution procedures provided by 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within two complete billing cycles (but in no event later than 90 days) after receiving a billing error notice.

Until a billing error is resolved, the following rules apply:

- The consumer need not pay (and the creditor may not try to collect) any portion of any required payment that the consumer believes is related to the disputed amount (including related finance or other charges).
- The creditor or its agent is also prohibited from making or threatening to make an adverse report to any person about the consumer's credit standing, or report that an amount or account is delinquent, because the consumer failed to pay the disputed amount or related finance or other charges.
- A creditor shall not accelerate any part of the consumer's indebtedness or restrict or close a consumer's account solely because the consumer has exercised in good faith rights provided by this section.

A creditor is not prohibited, however, from taking action to collect any undisputed portion of the item or bill; from deducting any disputed amount and related finance or other charges from the consumer's credit limit on the account; or from reflecting a disputed amount and related finance or other charges on a periodic statement, provided that the creditor indicates on or with the periodic statement that payment of any disputed amount and related finance or other charges is not required pending the creditor's compliance with this section.

If a creditor determines that a billing error occurred as asserted, it must within the applicable time limits:

- Correct the billing error and credit the consumer's account with any disputed amount and related finance or other charges, as applicable; and
- Mail or deliver notification of the correction to the consumer.

If, after conducting a reasonable investigation, a creditor determines that no billing error occurred or that a different billing error occurred from that asserted, the creditor must within the applicable time limits:

- Mail or deliver to the consumer an explanation that sets forth the reasons for the creditor's belief that the billing error alleged by the consumer is incorrect in whole or in part;
- Furnish copies of documentary evidence of the consumer's indebtedness, if the consumer so requests; and
- If a different billing error occurred, correct the billing error and credit the consumer's account with any disputed amount and related finance or other charges, as applicable.

If a creditor determines that a consumer owes all or part of the disputed amount and related finance or other charges, determine whether the credit complied with the requirements provided in (12 CFR 1026.13(g)).

A creditor that has fully complied with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.13 has no further responsibilities under this section (other than as provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(g)(4)) if a consumer reasserts substantially the same billing error.

NOTE: Special credit card provisions provide additional protections for consumers, including provisions relating to unauthorized use (12 CFR 1026.12).

Minimum Payments – 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)

For credit card accounts under an open-end credit plan, card issuers generally must disclose on periodic statements an estimate of the amount of time and the total cost (principal and interest) involved in paying the balance in full by making only the minimum payments, an estimate of the monthly payment amount required to pay off the balance in 36 months and the total cost (principal and interest) of repaying the balance in 36 months. Card issuers also must disclose a minimum payment warning and an estimate of the total interest that a consumer would save if that consumer repaid the balance in 36 months, instead of making minimum payments.

Advertising for Open-End Plans— 12 CFR 1026.16

The regulation requires that loan product advertisements provide accurate and balanced information, in a clear and conspicuous manner, about rates, monthly payments, and other loan features. The advertising rules ban several deceptive or misleading advertising practices, including representations that a rate or payment is “fixed” when in fact it can change.

If an advertisement for credit states specific credit terms, it must state only those terms that actually are or will be arranged or offered by the creditor. If any finance charges or other charges are set forth in an advertisement, the advertisement must also clearly and conspicuously state the following:

- Any minimum, fixed, transaction, activity or similar charge that is a finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4 that could be imposed;
- Any periodic rate that may be applied expressed as an APR as determined under (12 CFR 1026.14(b)). If the plan provides for a variable periodic rate, that fact must be disclosed; and
- Any membership or participation fee that could be imposed.

If any finance charges or other charge or payment terms are set forth, affirmatively or negatively, in an advertisement for a home-equity plan subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, the advertisement also must clearly and conspicuously set forth the following:

- Any loan fee that is a percentage of the credit limit under the plan and an estimate of any other fees imposed for opening the plan, stated as a single dollar amount or a reasonable range;
- Any periodic rate used to compute the finance charge, expressed as an APR as determined under (12 CFR 1026.14(b)); and
- The maximum APR that may be imposed in a variable-rate plan.

Regulation Z’s open-end home-equity plan advertising rules include a clear and conspicuous standard for home-equity plan advertisements, consistent with the approach taken in the advertising rules for consumer leases under Regulation M. Commentary provisions clarify how the clear and conspicuous standard applies to advertisements of home-equity plans with promotional rates or payments, and to Internet, television, and oral advertisements of home-equity plans. The regulation allows alternative disclosures for television and radio advertisements for home-equity plans. The regulation also requires that advertisements adequately disclose not only promotional plan terms, but also the rates or payments that will apply over the term of the plan.

Regulation Z also contains provisions implementing the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005, which requires disclosure of the tax implications of certain home-equity plans.

Subpart C – Closed-End Credit

Subpart C relates to closed-end credit. It contains rules on disclosures 12 CFR 1026.17-.20, treatment of credit balances 12 CFR 1026.21, annual percentage rate calculations 12 CFR 1026.22, rescission rights 12 CFR 1026.23, and advertising (12 CFR 1026.24).

The TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures must be given for most closed-end transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33. The TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures do not apply to HELOCs, reverse mortgages, or mortgages secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property. Truth in Lending disclosures (TIL disclosures) and the Consumer Handbook on Adjustable Rate Mortgages (CHARM) booklet must still be provided for certain closed-end loan transactions.

Disclosures, Generally

Timing

Generally, all disclosures provided to consumers must be made clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep ((12 CFR 1026.17(a), 1026.37(o), 1026.38(t)). However, the timing of the disclosures may change depending on the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(a), 1026.19(e)(1)(iii), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii), 1026.19(g)).

Disclosures in connection with non-mortgage closed-end loans and specified housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income consumers must be provided before consummation of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.3).

For most closed-end transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 (including construction-only loans, loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres, and credit extended to certain trusts for tax or estate planning purposes), disclosures must be provided in accordance with the timing requirements outlined in 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f) and (g). Generally, a creditor is required to mail or deliver the Loan Estimate within three business days of receipt of the consumer's loan application and to ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before loan consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(iii), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)). If the loan is a purchase transaction, the special information booklet must also be provided within three business days of receipt of the consumer's application (12 CFR 1026.19(g)). The specifics of these disclosure timing requirements are further discussed below, including a discussion about revised disclosures.

Mortgage loans not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (e.g., reverse mortgages, and chattel-dwelling loans) have different disclosure requirements. For reverse mortgages, disclosures must be delivered or mailed to the consumer no later than the third business day after a creditor receives the consumer's written application (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). For chattel-dwelling mortgage loans, disclosures must be provided to the consumer prior to consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.17(b)). Revised disclosures are also required within three business days of consummation if certain mortgage loan terms change (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(2)). For loans like reverse mortgages, the consumer will receive the Good Faith Estimate (GFE), HUD-1 Settlement Statement (HUD-1), and Truth in Lending disclosures as required under the applicable sections of both TILA and RESPA. Consumers receive TIL disclosures for chattel-dwelling loans that are not secured by land, but the GFE and the HUD-1 are not required. Finally, certain variable rate transactions secured by a dwelling have additional disclosure obligations with specific timing requirements both prior to and after consummation (see 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) below).

Basis for Disclosures

Generally

Disclosures provided for closed-end transactions must reflect the credit terms to which the parties will be legally bound as of the outset of the credit transaction. If information required for the disclosures is unknown, the creditor may provide the consumer with an estimate, using the best information reasonably available. The disclosure must be clearly marked as an estimate.

Variable and Adjustable Rate

If the terms of the legal obligation allow the financial institution, after consummation of the transaction, to increase the APR, the financial institution must furnish the consumer with certain information on variable rates. Variable rate disclosures are not applicable to rate increases resulting from delinquency, default, assumption, acceleration, or transfer of the collateral.

Some of the more important transaction-specific variable rate disclosure requirements follow.

- Disclosures for variable rate loans must be given for the full term of the transaction and must be based on the terms in effect at the time of consummation.
- If the variable rate transaction includes either a seller buy-down that is reflected in a contract or a consumer buy-down, the disclosed APR should be a composite rate based on the lower rate for the buy-down period and the rate that is the basis for the variable rate feature for the remainder of the term.
- If the initial rate is not determined by the index or formula used to make later interest rate adjustments, as in a discounted variable-rate transaction, the disclosed APR must reflect a composite rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is applied and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation (i.e., the fully indexed rate).
 - If a loan contains a rate or payment cap that would prevent the initial rate or payment, at the time of the adjustment, from changing to the fully indexed rate, the effect of that rate or payment cap needs to be reflected in the disclosures.
 - The index at consummation need not be used if the contract provides a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value (e.g., the contract indicates that future rate changes are based on the index value in effect for some specified period, such as 45 days before the change date). Instead, the financial institution may use any rate from the date of consummation back to the beginning of the specified period (e.g., during the previous 45-day period).
- If the initial interest rate is set according to the index or formula used for later adjustments but is set at a value as of a date before consummation, disclosures should be based on the initial interest rate, even though the index may have changed by the consummation date.

Finance Charge, Amount Financed and APRs

Finance Charge – 12 CFR 1026.18(c)

The total amount of the finance charge must be disclosed for all loans.

In a transaction secured by real property or a dwelling, the disclosed finance charge and other disclosures affected by the disclosed finance charge (including the amount financed and the annual percentage rate) must be treated as accurate if the amount disclosed as the finance charge (1) is understated by no more than $100 or (2) is greater than the amount required to be disclosed.

Amount Financed – 12 CFR 1026.18(b), 1026.18(c), 1026.38(o)(3)

Definition

The amount financed is the net amount of credit extended for the consumer's use. It should not be assumed that the amount financed under the regulation is equivalent to the note amount, proceeds, or principal amount of the loan. The amount financed normally equals the total of payments less the finance charge.

V. Lending — TILA

To calculate the amount financed, all amounts and charges connected with the transaction, either paid separately or included in the note amount, must first be identified. Any prepaid, precomputed, or other finance charge must then be determined.

The amount financed must not include any finance charges. If finance charges have been included in the obligation (either prepaid or precomputed), they must be subtracted from the face amount of the obligation when determining the amount financed. The resulting value must be reduced further by an amount equal to any prepaid finance charge paid separately. The final resulting value is the amount financed.

When calculating the amount financed, finance charges (whether in the note amount or paid separately) should not be subtracted more than once from the total amount of an obligation. Charges not in the note amount and not included in the finance charge (e.g., an appraisal fee paid separately in cash on a real estate loan) are not required to be disclosed under Regulation Z and must not be included in the amount financed.

An itemization of the amount financed is required (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.18(c)(2) or (c)(3)), unless the loan is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) (i.e., most closed-end mortgage loans).

Calculating the Amount Financed

A consumer signs a note secured by real property in the amount of $5,435. The note amount includes $5,000 in proceeds disbursed to the consumer, $400 in precomputed interest, $25 paid to a credit reporting agency for a credit report, and a $10 service charge. Additionally, the consumer pays a $50 loan fee separately in cash at consummation. The consumer has no other debt with the financial institution. The amount financed is $4,975.

The amount financed may be calculated by first subtracting all finance charges included in the note amount ($$5,435 - $400 - $10 = $5,025$). The $25 credit report fee is not a finance charge because the loan is secured by real property. The $5,025 is further reduced by the amount of prepaid finance charges paid separately, for an amount financed of $$5,025 - $50 = $4,975$. The answer is the same whether finance charges included in the obligation are considered prepaid or precomputed finance charges.

The financial institution may treat the $10 service charge as an addition to the loan amount and not as a prepaid finance charge. If it does, the loan principal would be $5,000. The $5,000 loan principal does not include either the $400 or the $10 precomputed finance charge in the note. The loan principal is increased by other amounts that are financed that are not part of the finance charge (the $25 credit report fee) and reduced by any prepaid finance charges (the $50 loan fee, not the $10 service charge) to arrive at the amount financed of $$5,000 + $25 - $50 = $4,975$.

Conversely, the financial institution may treat the $10 service charge as a prepaid finance charge. If it does, the loan principal would be $5,010. The $5,010 loan principal does not include the $400 precomputed finance charge. The loan principal is increased by other amounts that are financed that are not part of the finance charge (the $25 credit report fee) and reduced by any prepaid finance charges (the $50 loan fee and the $10 service charge withheld from loan proceeds) to arrive at the same amount financed of $$5,010 + $25 - $50 - $10 = $4,975$.

Payment Schedule – 12 CFR 1026.18(g)

For transactions that are not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), the disclosed payment schedule must reflect all components of the finance charge. It includes all payments scheduled to repay loan principal, interest on the loan, and any other finance charge payable by the consumer after consummation of the transaction.

However, any finance charge paid separately before or at consummation (e.g., odd days' interest) is not part of the payment schedule. It is a prepaid finance charge that must be reflected as a reduction in the value of the amount financed.

At the creditor's option, the payment schedule may include amounts beyond the amount financed and finance charge (e.g., certain insurance premiums or real estate escrow amounts such as taxes added to payments). However, when calculating the APR, the creditor must disregard such amounts.

If the obligation is a renewable balloon payment instrument that unconditionally obligates the financial institution to renew the short-term loan at the consumer's option or to renew the loan subject to conditions within the consumer's control, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the longer term of the renewal period or periods. The long-term loan must be disclosed with a variable rate feature.

If there are no renewal conditions or if the financial institution guarantees to renew the obligation in a refinancing, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the shorter balloon payment term. The short-term loan must be disclosed as a fixed rate loan, unless it contains a variable rate feature during the initial loan term.

Annual Percentage Rate (Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.22

Calculating the Annual Percentage Rate – 12 CFR 1026.22

The APR must be determined under one of the following:

- The actuarial method, which is defined by Regulation Z and explained in Appendix J to the regulation.

- The U.S. Rule, which is permitted by Regulation Z and briefly explained in Appendix J to the regulation. The U.S. Rule is an accrual method that seems to have first surfaced officially in an early 19th-century United States Supreme Court case, Story v. Livingston, 38 U.S. 359 (1839).

Whichever method is used by the financial institution, the rate calculated will be accurate if it is able to “amortize” the amount financed while it generates the finance charge under the accrual method selected. Financial institutions also may rely on minor irregularities and accuracy tolerances in the regulation, both of which effectively permit somewhat imprecise, but still legal, APRs to be disclosed.

Accuracy Tolerances

The disclosed APR on a closed-end transaction is accurate for:

- Regular transactions (which include any single advance transaction with equal payments and equal payment periods, or an irregular first payment period and/or a first or last irregular payment), if the disclosed APR is within one-eighth of 1 percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(2)).
 - Irregular transactions (which include multiple advance transactions and other transactions not considered regular), if the disclosed APR is within one-quarter of 1 percentage point of the APR calculated under Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(3)).
 - Mortgage transactions, if the disclosed APR is within one-eighth of 1 percentage point for regular transactions or one-quarter of 1 percentage point for irregular transactions or if:
- 1) The rate results from the disclosed finance charge, and:
 - a) The disclosed finance charge is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.18(d)(1) or 1026.38(o)(2), as applicable; or
 - b) The disclosed finance charge is calculated incorrectly but is considered accurate for purposes of rescission, under 12 CFR 1026.23(g) or (h), whichever applies (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4)).
 - 2) The disclosed finance charge is calculated incorrectly but is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.18(d)(1) or 1026.38(o)(2), as applicable, or 12 CFR 1026.23 (g) or (h), and either:
 - a) The finance charge is understated, and the disclosed APR is also understated but is closer to the actual APR than the APR that would be considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4); or
 - b) The disclosed finance charge is overstated and the disclosed APR is also overstated but is closer to the actual APR than the APR that would be considered accurate under (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4)).

For example, in an irregular transaction subject to a tolerance of one-fourth of 1 percentage point, if the actual APR is 9.00 percent and a $75 omission from the finance charge corresponds to a rate of 8.50 percent that is considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22(a)(4), a disclosed APR of 8.65 percent is considered accurate under (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(5)). However, a disclosed APR below 8.50 percent or above 9.25 percent would not be considered accurate.

Construction-Only and Construction-Permanent Loans – 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6), 12 CFR 1026.37-.38, and Appendix D

Due to the structure of construction-permanent and certain other multiple advance loans, Regulation Z includes certain optional provisions to help a creditor estimate the components of the APR and finance charge computations for these loans. In many instances, the amount and dates of advances are not predictable with certainty since they depend on the progress of the work. Regulation Z provides that the APR and finance charge for such loans may be estimated for disclosure based on the best information reasonably available at the time of disclosure (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)). Further, a creditor has optionality as to whether it discloses the advances separate or together as one transaction in certain circumstances. First, a series of advances under an agreement to extend credit up to a certain amount may be considered as one transaction or disclosed as separate transactions (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(i)). Second, when a multiple-advance loan to finance the construction of a dwelling may be permanently financed by the same creditor, the construction phase and the permanent phase may be treated as either one transaction or more than one transaction (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii)). Because construction loans or construction-permanent loans may be disclosed as one transaction, or as multiple transactions, computations can be impacted by this decision.

If the actual schedule of advances is not known, the methods set forth in Appendix D may be used to estimate the interest portion of the finance charge and the annual percentage rate and to make disclosures (12 CFR Part 1026 App. D).

At its option, the financial institution may rely on the representations of other parties to acquire necessary information (for example, it might look to the consumer for the dates of advances). In addition, if either the amounts or dates of advances are unknown (even if some of them are known), the financial institution may, at its option, use Appendix D to the regulation (and its associated commentary) to make calculations and disclosures. The finance charge and payment schedule obtained through Appendix D may be used with volume one of the CFPB’s APR tables or with any other appropriate computation tool to determine the APR. If the financial institution elects not to use Appendix D, or if Appendix D cannot be applied to a loan (e.g., Appendix D does not apply to a combined construction-permanent loan if the payments for the permanent loan begin during the construction period), the financial institution must make its estimates under 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2) and calculate the APR using multiple advance formulas.

Interest Reserves

In a multiple advance construction loan, a creditor may establish an “interest reserve” to ensure that interest is paid as it accrues by designating a portion of the loan amount for that interest payment purpose.

If the creditor requires interest reserves for construction loans, Appendix D provides further guidance. Among other things, the amount of interest reserves included in the commitment amount is not treated as a prepaid finance charge, whether the interest reserve is the same as or different from the estimated interest figure calculated under Appendix D (Comment App. D-5).

If a creditor permits a consumer to make interest payments as they become due, the interest reserve should be disregarded in the disclosures and calculations under Appendix D (Comment App. D-5.i).

If a creditor requires the establishment of an interest reserve and automatically deducts interest payments from the reserve amount rather than allow the consumer to make interest payments as they become due, the fact that interest will accrue on those interest payments as well as the other loan proceeds must be reflected in the calculations and disclosures. To reflect the effects of such compounding, the creditor should use the formula in Appendix D (Comment App. D-5.ii).

Fees and Charges

In the case of a construction-permanent loan that a creditor chooses to disclose as multiple transactions, the creditor must allocate to the construction transaction finance charges and points and fees that would not be imposed but for the construction financing. Those amounts must be in disclosures for the construction phase and may not be included in the disclosures for the permanent phase. If a creditor charges separate amounts for the finance charges and points and fees for the construction phase and the permanent phase, such amounts must be allocated to the phase for which they are charged. If a creditor charges an origination fee for construction financing only but charges a greater origination fee for construction-permanent financing, the difference between the two fees must be allocated to the permanent phase. All other finance charges and points and fees must be allocated to permanent financing. Fees and charges that are not used to compute the finance charge or points and fees may be allocated between the transactions in any manner the creditor chooses (Comment 17(c)(6)-5).

360-Day and 365-Day Years – 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(3)

Confusion often arises over whether to use the 360-day or 365-day year in computing interest, particularly when the finance charge is computed by applying a daily rate to an unpaid balance. Many single payment loans or loans payable on demand are in this category. There are also loans in this category that call for periodic installment payments. Regulation Z does not require the use of one method of interest computation in preference to another (although state law may). It does, however, permit financial institutions to disregard the fact that months have different numbers of days when calculating and making disclosures. This means financial institutions may base their disclosures on calculation tools that assume all months have an equal number of days, even if their practice is to take account of the variations in months to collect interest.

For example, a financial institution may calculate disclosures using a financial calculator based on a 360-day year with 30-day months, when, in fact, it collects interest by applying a factor of 1/365 of the annual interest rate to actual days.

Disclosure violations may occur, however, when a financial institution applies a daily interest factor based on a 360-day year to the actual number of days between payments. In those situations, the financial institution must disclose the higher values of the finance charge, the APR, and the payment schedule resulting from this practice.

For example, a 12 percent simple interest rate divided by 360 days results in a daily rate of .033333 percent. If no charges are imposed except interest, and the amount financed is the same as the loan amount, applying the daily rate on a daily basis for a 365-day year on a $10,000 one year, single payment, unsecured loan results in an APR of 12.17 percent (.033333 percent x 365 = 12.17 percent), and a finance charge of $1,216.67. There would be a violation if the APR were disclosed as 12 percent or if the finance charge were disclosed as $1,200 (12 percent x $10,000).

However, if there are no other charges except interest, the application of a 360-day year daily rate over 365 days on a regular loan would not result in an APR in excess of the one eighth of one percentage point APR tolerance unless the nominal interest rate is greater than 9 percent. For irregular loans, with one-quarter of 1 percentage point APR tolerance, the nominal interest rate would have to be greater than 18 percent to exceed the tolerance.

NOTE: Notwithstanding the APR tolerance, a creditor's disclosures must reflect the terms of the legal obligation between the parties (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(1)), and the APR must be determined in accordance with either the actuarial method or the U.S. Rule method (12 CFR 1026.22(a)(1)). A creditor may not ignore, for disclosure purposes, the effects of applying a 360-day year daily rate over 365 days. (Comment 17(c)(3)-1.ii).

Required Deposit – 12 CFR 1026.18(r)

A required deposit, with certain exceptions, is one that the financial institution requires the consumer to maintain as a condition of the specific credit transaction. It can include a compensating balance or a deposit balance that secures the loan. The effect of a required deposit is not reflected in the APR. Also, a required deposit is not a finance charge since it is eventually released to the consumer. A deposit that earns at least 5 percent per year need not be considered a required deposit.

Transactions with TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures – Generally

On December 31, 2013, the CFPB published a final rule implementing Sections 1098(2) and 1100A(5) of the Dodd-Frank Act, which directed the CFPB to publish a single, integrated disclosure for mortgage loan transactions, which includes mortgage loan disclosure requirements under TILA and sections 4 and 5 of RESPA. The amendments in the final rule, referred to as the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule or TRID, are applicable to covered closed-end mortgage loans for which a creditor or mortgage broker received an application on or after October 3, 2015. As a result, Regulation Z now houses the integrated forms, timing, and related disclosure requirements for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans.

The integrated disclosures are not used to disclose information about reverse mortgages, HELOCs, chattel-dwelling loans such as loans secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property (i.e., land), or other transactions not covered by the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule. The final rule also does not apply to loans made by a creditor who makes five or fewer mortgages in a year. Creditors originating these types of mortgages use, as applicable, the GFE, HUD-1, and TIL disclosures.

Most closed-end mortgage loans are exempt from the requirement to provide the GFE, HUD-1, and servicing disclosure requirements of (12 CFR 1024.6, 1024.7, 1024.8, 1024.10, and 1024.33(a)). Instead, these loans are subject to disclosure, timing, and other requirements under TILA and Regulation Z. Specifically, the provisions mentioned in the first sentence of this paragraph do not apply to the following federally related mortgage loans:

- Loans subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure requirements for certain closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit set forth in (12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), and (g)); or
- Certain no-interest loans secured by subordinate liens made for the purpose of down payment or similar home buyer assistance, property rehabilitation assistance, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure avoidance or prevention (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

Summary of Applicable Disclosure Requirements:

Use TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (See Regulation Z): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Most closed-end mortgage loans, including: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Construction-only loans ○ Loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres 	Continue to use TIL²⁵ and RESPA disclosures (as applicable): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • HELOCs (subject to disclosure requirements under 12 CFR 1026.40) • Reverse mortgages²⁶ (subject to existing TIL and GFE disclosures) • Chattel-secured mortgages (i.e., mortgages secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property, such as land) (subject to existing TIL disclosures, and not RESPA)
NOTE: In both cases, there is a partial exemption from these disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.3(h) for loans secured by subordinate liens and associated with certain housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income persons.

Creditors making closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, and subject to the provisions of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), must provide consumers with a Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37, Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.38, the special information booklet as required, under 12 CFR 1026.19(g), and, as applicable for ARM transactions, the CHARM booklet. The special information booklet is described in further detail below.

Early disclosures (Loan Estimate) – 12 CFR 1026.19(e)

12 CFR 1026.19(e) requires the creditor to provide good faith estimates of the Loan Estimate disclosures (see 12 CFR 1026.37 for information on the content, form, and format of the disclosure). The creditor generally must deliver or place in the mail the Loan Estimate no later than three business days after receiving the consumer’s application, and no later than seven business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i) and (iii)).

Generally, the creditor is responsible for ensuring that the Loan Estimate and its delivery meet the rule’s content, delivery, and timing requirements. (See 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 1026.37.) If a mortgage broker receives a consumer’s application, the mortgage broker may provide the Loan Estimate to the consumer on the creditor’s behalf. If it does so, the mortgage broker must comply with all requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e), as well as the three-year record retention requirements in (12 CFR 1026.25(c)) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(ii)). The creditor is expected to maintain communication with mortgage brokers to ensure that the Loan Estimate and its delivery satisfy the rule’s requirements, and the creditor is legally responsible for any errors or defects (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(ii); Comment 19(e)(1)(ii) -1 and -2).

Timing – Loan Estimate – early disclosures

The Loan Estimate must be delivered or placed in the mail to the consumer no later than the third business day after the creditor or mortgage broker receives the consumer’s application for a mortgage loan. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A)). If the Loan Estimate is not provided to the consumer in person, the consumer is considered to have received the Loan Estimate three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail (this applies to electronic delivery as well) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iv); Comment 19(e)(1)(iv)-2). Other than for transactions secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan, the Loan Estimate must be delivered or placed in the mail no later than the seventh business day before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) and (C)).

For purposes of the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures rule, an “application” is defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(3)(ii). For transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), or (g), an application consists of the submission of the following six pieces of information:

- The consumer’s name;
- The consumer’s income;

²⁵ See Appendix H-2.

²⁶ An open-end reverse mortgage receives open-end disclosures, not a GFE or HUD-1.

- The consumer’s social security number to obtain a credit report;
- The property address;
- An estimate of the value of the property; and
- The mortgage loan amount sought.

This definition of application is similar to the definition under Regulation X (12 CFR 1024.2(b)), except that it does not include the seventh “catch-all” element of that definition, that is, “any other information deemed necessary by the loan originator.”

An application may be submitted in written or electronic format, and includes a written record of an oral application (Comment 2(a)(3)-1).

This definition of application does not prevent a creditor from collecting whatever additional information it deems necessary in connection with the request for the extension of credit. However, once a consumer has submitted²⁷ the six pieces of information discussed above to the creditor for purposes of obtaining an extension of credit, the creditor has an application for purposes of the requirement for delivery of the Loan Estimate to the consumer and must abide by the three business day timing requirement (Comment 2(a)(3)-1).

If the creditor determines, within the three business day period, that the consumer’s application will not or cannot be approved on the terms requested by the consumer, or if the consumer withdraws the application within that period, the creditor does not have to provide the Loan Estimate. However, if the creditor does not provide the Loan Estimate, it will not have complied with the Loan Estimate requirements if it later consummates the transaction on the terms originally applied for by the consumer. If a consumer amends an application and a creditor determines the amended application may proceed, then the creditor is required to comply with the Loan Estimate requirements, including delivering or mailing a Loan Estimate within three business days of receiving the amended or resubmitted application (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-3).

A “business day” for purposes of providing the Loan Estimate is a day on which the creditor’s offices are open to the public for carrying out substantially all of its business functions (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-1, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6)).

NOTE: The term “business day” is defined differently for other purposes, including counting days to ensure the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure on time (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) and (e)(1)(iv), and 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii)). For these other purposes, business day means all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. 6103(a) (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6); Comment 2(a)(6)-2; Comments 19(e)(1)(iii)-1 and 19(f)(1)(ii)-1).

Creditors are required to act in good faith and exercise due diligence in obtaining information necessary to complete the Loan Estimate (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1). Normally, creditors may rely on the representations of other parties in obtaining information (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)).

NOTE: There may be some information that is not reasonably available to the creditor at the time the Loan Estimate is made. In these instances, except as otherwise provided in 12 CFR 1026.19, 1026.37, and 1026.38, the creditor may use estimates even though it knows that more precise information will be available by the point of consummation. However, new disclosures may be required under 12 CFR 1026.17(f) or 1026.19 (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1). When estimated figures are used, they must be designated as such on the Loan Estimate (Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-2).

The consumer may modify or waive the seven business day waiting period after receiving the Loan Estimate if the consumer determines that the mortgage loan is needed to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency that necessitates consummating the credit transaction before the end of the waiting period (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)). Whether a consumer has a bona fide personal financial emergency is determined by the facts surrounding the consumer’s individual situation. One example is the imminent sale of the consumer’s home at foreclosure, where the foreclosure sale will proceed unless loan proceeds are made available to the consumer during the waiting period (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v); Comment 19(e)(1)(v)-1). To modify or waive the waiting period, the consumer must give the creditor a dated written statement that describes the emergency, specifically modifies or waives the waiting period, and is signed by all consumers primarily liable on the legal obligation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)). The creditor may not provide the consumer with a pre-printed waiver form (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)).

Good faith requirement and tolerances

Creditors are responsible for ensuring that the figures stated in the Loan Estimate are made in good faith and consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time they are disclosed (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3); Comment 19(e)(3)(iii)-1 through -3). Whether or not a Loan Estimate was made in good faith is determined by calculating the difference between the estimated charges originally provided in the Loan Estimate and the actual charges paid by or imposed on the consumer in the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii)). Generally, if the charge paid by or imposed on the consumer exceeds the amount originally disclosed on the Loan Estimate, it is not in good faith (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)). As long as the creditor's estimate is consistent with the best information reasonably available, and the creditor charges the consumer less than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, the Loan Estimate is considered to be in good faith (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)).

²⁷ When a consumer uses an online application system that allows the information to be saved, the application must be submitted before the Loan Estimate timing requirements are triggered.

V. Lending — TILA

The general rule is that the estimated closing cost is in good faith if the charge does not exceed the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate. Unless there is an exception, depending on the specific circumstances, the creditor may not charge more than the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)). For certain charges, there are different tolerances when charges exceed the amounts disclosed.

Zero tolerance. For charges other than those that are specifically excepted, as noted below, creditors may not charge consumers more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, other than for changed circumstances that permit a revised Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (iv)). The zero tolerance charges generally include but are not limited to the following:

- Fees for required services paid to the creditor, mortgage broker, or an affiliate of either (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i), Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-1(i)-(iii));
- Fees paid to an unaffiliated third party if the creditor did not permit the consumer to shop for a third-party service provider for a settlement service or transfer taxes (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i), Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-1(iv)-(v)).

10 percent cumulative tolerance. Charges for third-party services and recording fees paid by or imposed on the consumer are grouped together and are subject to a 10 percent cumulative tolerance. This means the creditor may charge the consumer more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate for any of these charges so long as the total sum of the charges does not exceed the sum of all such charges disclosed on the Loan Estimate by more than 10 percent (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(A)). These charges are:

- Recording fees (Comments 19(e)(3)(ii)-1.ii and -4);
- Charges for required third-party services if:
 - The charge is not paid to the creditor or the creditor's affiliate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(B)); and
 - The consumer is permitted by the creditor to shop for the third-party service (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(C); 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi); Comment 19(e)(1)(vi)-1 through 7)).

NOTE: If a creditor has failed to issue the written list of providers or failed to disclose a specific settlement service on the written list, the creditor may still be determined, based on all the relevant facts and circumstances, to have permitted a consumer to shop for purposes of determining good faith (Comment 19(e)(3)(iii)-2).

Variances permitted without tolerance limits. Creditors may charge consumers more than the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate without any tolerance limitation for certain costs or terms, but only if the original estimated charge, or lack of an estimated charge for a particular service, was based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided. These charges may be paid to the creditor or the creditor's affiliates as long as the charges are bona fide (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)). These charges are:

- Prepaid interest; property insurance premiums; amounts placed into an escrow, impound, reserve or similar account (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(A)-(C)).
- Charges paid to third-party service providers for services required by the creditor if the creditor permits the consumer to shop and the consumer selects a third-party service provider not on the creditor's written list of service providers (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(D); Comment 19(e)(3)(iii)-2).
- Property taxes and other charges paid to third-party service providers for services not required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(E)).

List of services for which a consumer may shop. In addition to the Loan Estimate, if the consumer is permitted to shop for a settlement service, the creditor, no later than three business days after receiving the application, must provide the consumer with a written list of settlement services for which the consumer can shop. This list must:

- Identify at least one available settlement service provider for each service; and
- State that the consumer may choose a different provider of that service (12 CFR 1026.19 (e)(1)(vi)(C)).²⁸

NOTE: The use of Model Form H-27 in Appendix H is not required. However, creditors who use that form properly are deemed to be in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)(C) (Comment 19(e)(1)(vi)-3).

Regardless of whether a creditor provides a revised written list of providers, determining whether the charges for required services were disclosed in good faith will depend on whether the creditor permitted the consumer to shop for those services, and is based on all relevant facts and circumstances (Comments 19(e)(1)(vi)-1 and 19(e)(3)(ii)-6).

Refunds within 60 days of consummation. If the amounts paid by the consumer at closing exceed the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate beyond the applicable tolerance threshold, the creditor must refund the excess to the consumer no later than 60 calendar days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v)).

- For charges subject to zero tolerance, any amount charged beyond the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate must be refunded to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i)).
- For charges subject to a 10 percent cumulative tolerance, to the extent the total sum of the charges exceeds the sum of all such charges disclosed on the Loan Estimate by more than 10 percent, the difference must be refunded to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)).

Loan Estimate - Revisions and Corrections

Creditors are generally bound by the original Loan Estimate and must determine the estimate's good faith by calculating the difference between the estimated charges originally provided and the actual charges paid by the consumer. Creditors may provide a revised Loan Estimate for informational purposes. Regardless of whether a creditor provides a revised Loan Estimate to reset tolerances or for informational purposes only, any disclosures on the revised Loan Estimate disclosure must be based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the revised disclosures are provided (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)-1-2, 4-5).

For purposes of determining whether the estimates are in good faith, the creditor may use a revised estimate of a charge instead of the amount originally disclosed if the revision is due to one of the specific circumstances set out in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) through (F). Specific circumstances " (A)" and "(B)" relate to "changed circumstances," as described below:

(A): Changed circumstances – increased settlement charges. Changed circumstances that occur after the Loan Estimate is provided to the consumer that cause estimated settlement charges to increase more than is permitted under the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)).

- A creditor may provide and use a revised Loan Estimate redisclosing a settlement charge and compare that revised estimate to the amount imposed on the consumer for purposes of determining good faith if changed circumstances cause the estimated charge to increase or, in the case of charges subject to the 10 percent cumulative tolerance under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii), cause the sum of those charges to increase by more than the 10 percent tolerance (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-1). Examples of changed circumstances affecting settlement costs include (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-2):

- A natural disaster that damages the property or otherwise results in additional closing costs;
- A creditor's estimate of title insurance is no longer valid because the title insurer goes out of business; or
- New information not relied on when the Loan Estimate was provided is discovered, such as a neighbor of the seller filing a claim contesting the property boundary.

(B): Changed circumstances – consumer eligibility. Changed circumstances that occur after the Loan Estimate is provided to the consumer that affect the consumer's eligibility for the terms for which the consumer applied or the value of the security for the loan (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B)).

For both (A) Changed circumstances – increased settlement charges, and (B) Changed circumstances – consumer eligibility:

- A creditor also may provide and use a revised Loan Estimate if a changed circumstance affected the consumer's creditworthiness or the value of the security for the loan and resulted in the consumer being ineligible for an estimated loan term previously disclosed (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B) and Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(B)-1). This may occur when a changed circumstance causes a change in the consumer's eligibility for specific loan terms disclosed on the Loan Estimate, which in turn results in increased cost for a settlement service beyond the applicable tolerance threshold (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(A)-2). For example:
- The creditor relied on the consumer's representation to the creditor of a $90,000 annual income but underwriting determines that the consumer's annual income is only $80,000.
- There are two co-applicants applying for a mortgage loan and the creditor relied on a combined income when providing the Loan Estimate, but one applicant subsequently becomes unemployed.

Note on Changed Circumstances: A changed circumstance permitting a revised Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) and (B) is:

- An extraordinary event beyond the control of any interested party or other unexpected event specific to the consumer or transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(I));
- Information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor relied upon when providing the original Loan Estimate and that was inaccurate or changed after the disclosures were provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(2)); or

- New information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor did not rely on when providing the original Loan Estimate.

(C): Revisions requested by the consumer. The consumer requests revisions to the credit terms or the settlement that cause the estimated charge to increase. For example, a consumer grants a power of attorney authorizing a family member to consummate the transaction on the consumer's behalf, and the creditor provides revised disclosures reflecting the fee to record the power of attorney (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(C)-1).

(D): Rate locks after initial Loan Estimate. If the interest rate for the loan was not locked when the Loan Estimate was provided and, upon being locked at some later time, points or lender credits for the mortgage loan change, the creditor is required to provide a revised disclosure no later than three business days after the interest rate is locked and may use the revised disclosure to compare the points and lender credits charged. The revised disclosure must reflect the revised interest rate as well as any revisions to the points disclosed on the Loan Estimate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1), lender credits, and any other interest rate dependent charges and terms that have changed due to the new interest rate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(D); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(D)-1). If the interest rate is locked on or after the date on which the creditor provides the Closing Disclosure and the Closing Disclosure is inaccurate as a result, then the creditor must provide the consumer a corrected Closing Disclosure, at or before consummation, reflecting any changed terms (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(D)-2).

(E): Expiration of Loan Estimate. If the consumer indicates an intent to proceed with the transaction more than 10 business days (or any additional number of days as extended by the creditor orally or in writing) after the Loan Estimate was delivered or placed in the mail to the consumer, a creditor may use a revised Loan Estimate. No justification is required for the change to the original estimate of a charge other than the lapse of 10 business days or the additional number of days as extended by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(E); Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(E)-1 and -2).

(F): Construction loans. Creditors also may use a revised Loan Estimate where the transaction involves financing of new construction and the creditor reasonably expects that settlement will occur more than 60 calendar days after the original Loan Estimate has been provided if the original Loan Estimate clearly and conspicuously stated that at any time prior to 60 days before consummation, the creditor may issue revised disclosures (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3) does not include technical errors, miscalculations, or underestimations of charges as reasons for which creditors are permitted to provide revised Loan Estimates.

Timing – Loan Estimate – revised disclosures

The general rule is that the creditor must deliver or place in the mail the revised Loan Estimate to the consumer no later than three business days after receiving the information sufficient to establish that one of the reasons for the revision has occurred (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i); Comment 19(e)(4)(i)-1).

The creditor may not provide a revised Loan Estimate on or after the date the creditor provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(ii); Comment 19(e)(4)(ii)-1.ii). Instead, the creditor may use the initial or a corrected Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith provided one of the specific circumstances under the rule is present. Any such revised disclosure must be provided to the consumer within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i)).

Predisclosure activity

A creditor or other person generally may not impose any fee on a consumer in connection with the consumer's application for a mortgage transaction until the consumer has received the Loan Estimate and has indicated intent to proceed with the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)). This restriction includes limits on imposing:

- Application fees;
- Appraisal fees;
- Underwriting fees; and
- Other fees imposed on the consumer.

The only exception to this exclusion is for a bona fide and reasonable fee for obtaining a consumer's credit report (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(B); Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(A)-1 through -5 and Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(B)-1).

Documentation of intent to proceed. To satisfy the record retention requirements of 12 CFR 1026.25, the creditor must document the consumer's communication of the intent to proceed (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)). A consumer indicates intent to proceed with the transaction when the consumer communicates, in any manner, that the consumer chooses to proceed after the Loan Estimate has been delivered, unless a particular manner of communication is required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)). This may include:

- Oral communication in person immediately upon delivery of the Loan Estimate; or
- Oral communication over the phone, written communication via email, or signing a pre-printed form after receipt of the Loan Estimate.

A consumer's silence is not indicative of intent to proceed (Comment 19(e)(2)(i)(A)-2).

Written information for consumers before the Loan Estimate is provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii)). A creditor or other person may provide a consumer with estimated terms or costs prior to the consumer receiving the Loan Estimate, if the person clearly and conspicuously states at the top of the front of the first page of the written estimate and in font size no smaller than 12-point font "Your actual rate, payment, and costs could be higher. Get an official Loan Estimate before choosing the loan" (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii); Comment 19(e)(2)(ii)-1). In addition, the written estimate may not have headings, content, and format substantially similar to the Loan Estimate or the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii); Comment 19(e)(2)(ii)-1).

The CFPB has provided a model of the required statement in form H-26 of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Verification of information before the Loan Estimate is provided. A creditor or other person may not condition providing the Loan Estimate on a consumer submitting documents verifying information related to the consumer's mortgage loan application before providing the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(iii); Comment 19(e)(2)(iii)-1).

Final Disclosures (Closing Disclosure) – 12 CFR 1026.19(f)

For loans that require a Loan Estimate (i.e., most closed-end mortgage loans secured by real property or a cooperative unit) and that proceed to closing, creditors must provide a new final disclosure reflecting the actual terms of the transaction; it is called the Closing Disclosure. The form integrates and replaces the HUD-1 and the final TIL disclosure for these transactions. The creditor is generally required to ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)).

NOTE: If the creditor mails the disclosure six business days prior to consummation, it can assume that it was received three business days after sending (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); Comment 19(f)(1)(iii)).

- The Closing Disclosure generally must contain the actual terms and costs of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i)). Creditors may estimate disclosures using the best information reasonably available when the actual term or cost is not reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure is made. However, creditors must act in good faith and use due diligence in obtaining the information. The creditor normally may rely on the representations of other parties in obtaining the information, including, for example, the settlement agent. The creditor is required to provide corrected disclosures containing the actual terms of the transaction at or before consummation (Comments 19(f)(1)(i)-2, -2.i, and -2.ii).
 - The Closing Disclosure must be in writing and contain the information prescribed in 12 CFR 1026.38. The creditor must disclose only the specific information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.38(a) through (s), as shown in the CFPB's form in Appendix H-25 (12 CFR 1026.38(t)).
 - If the actual terms or costs of the transaction change prior to consummation, the creditor must provide a corrected disclosure that contains the actual terms of the transaction and complies with the other requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f), including the timing requirements, and requirements for providing corrected disclosures due to subsequent changes (Comment 19(f)(1)(i)-1).
 - New three-day waiting period. If the creditor provides a corrected disclosure, it must provide the consumer with an additional three-business-day waiting period prior to consummation if the annual percentage rate becomes inaccurate, the loan product changes, or a prepayment penalty is added to the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)).
- "Consummation" occurs when the consumer becomes contractually obligated to the creditor on the loan, not, for example, when the consumer becomes contractually obligated to a seller on a real estate transaction. The time when a consumer becomes contractually obligated to the creditor on the loan depends on applicable state law (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(13); Comment 2(a)(13)-1).

Timing and Delivery - Closing Disclosure.

Generally, the creditor is responsible for ensuring that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure form no later than three business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A); Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-3). The creditor also is responsible for ensuring that the Closing Disclosure meets the content, delivery, and timing requirements (12 CFR 1026.19(f) and 1026.38). For timeshare transactions, the creditor must ensure that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(B)).

If the Closing Disclosure is provided in person, it is considered received by the consumer on the day it is provided. If it is mailed or delivered electronically, the consumer is considered to have received the Closing Disclosure three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); Comment 19(f)(1)(ii)-2).

However, if the creditor has evidence that the consumer received the Closing Disclosure earlier than three business days after it is mailed or delivered, the creditor may rely on that evidence and consider the Closing Disclosure to be received on that date (Comments 19(f)(1)(iii)-1 and -2).

Multiple consumers. In transactions that are not rescindable, the Closing Disclosure may be provided to any consumer with primary liability on the obligation (12 CFR 1026.17(d)). In rescindable transactions, the creditor must provide the Closing Disclosure separately and meet the timing requirements for each consumer who has the right to rescind under TILA (see 12 CFR 1026.23).

Settlement agents. Creditors may contract with settlement agents to have the settlement agent provide the Closing Disclosure to consumers on the creditor's behalf, provided that the settlement agent complies with all relevant requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v)). Creditors and settlement agents also may agree to divide responsibility with regard to completing the Closing Disclosure, with the settlement agent assuming responsibility to complete some or all the Closing Disclosure (Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-4). Any such creditor must maintain communication with the settlement agent to ensure that the Closing Disclosure and its delivery satisfy the requirements described above, and the creditor is legally responsible for any errors or defects (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v); Comment 19(f)(1)(v)-3). In transactions involving a seller, the settlement agent is required to provide the seller with the Closing Disclosure reflecting the actual terms of the seller's transaction no later than the day of consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)(i) and (ii)).

NOTE: "Business day" has a different meaning for purposes of providing the Closing Disclosure than it is for purposes of providing the Loan Estimate after receiving a consumer's application. For purposes of providing the Closing Disclosure, the term business day means all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. 6103(a) (See 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii)).

Three-business-day waiting period. The loan may not be consummated less than three business days after the Closing Disclosure is received by the consumer. If a settlement is scheduled during the waiting period, the creditor generally must postpone settlement, unless the consumer determines that the extension of credit is necessary to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency and waives the waiting period. The written waiver describes the emergency, specifically modifies, or waives the waiting period, and bears the signature of all consumers who are primarily liable on the legal obligation. Pre-printed forms for this purpose are prohibited (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

Average charges. In general, the amount imposed on the consumer for any settlement service must not exceed the amount the settlement service provider actually received for that service. However, an average charge may be imposed instead of the actual amount received for a particular service, as long as the average charge satisfies the following conditions (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(i)-(ii); Comment 19(f)(3)(i)-1):

- The average charge is no more than the average amount paid for that service by or on behalf of all consumers and sellers for a class of transactions;

- The creditor or settlement service provider defines the class of transactions based on an appropriate period of time, geographic area, and type of loan;
- The creditor or settlement service provider uses the same average charge for every transaction within the defined class; and
- The creditor or settlement service provider does not use an average charge:
 - For any type of insurance;
 - For any charge based on the loan amount or property value; or
 - If doing so is otherwise prohibited by law.

Closing Disclosures - Revisions and Corrections (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)).

Creditors must re-disclose terms or costs on the Closing Disclosure if certain changes occur to the transaction after the initial Closing Disclosure is provided that cause the disclosures to become inaccurate. There are three categories of changes that require a corrected Closing Disclosure containing all changed terms (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)):

- Changes that occur before consummation that require a new three-business-day waiting period (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii));
- Changes that occur before consummation and do not require a new three-business-day waiting period; and (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i));
- Changes that occur after consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii))

Changes before consummation requiring new waiting period. If one of the following occurs after delivery of the Closing Disclosure and before consummation, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure containing all changed terms and ensure that the consumer receives it no later than three business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii); Comment 19(f)(2)(ii)-1).

- The disclosed APR becomes inaccurate. If the APR previously disclosed becomes inaccurate, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the corrected APR disclosure and all other terms that have changed. The APR's accuracy is determined according to 12 CFR 1026.22 (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(A)). Generally, if the APR and finance charges are overstated because the interest rate has decreased, the APR is considered accurate and no new waiting period is required (12 CFR 1026.22). In addition, in connection with high-cost mortgages, TILA expressly provides there is no waiting period if the creditor extends a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate to the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).

- The loan product changes. If the loan product is changed, causing the product description disclosed to become inaccurate, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the corrected loan product and all other terms that have changed (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(B)).
- A prepayment penalty is added. If a prepayment penalty is added to the transaction, the creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with the prepayment penalty provision disclosed and all other terms that have changed (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(C)).

The consumer may waive this period if the consumer is facing a bona fide personal financial emergency (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

Changes before consummation not requiring new waiting period; consumer's right to inspect. For any other changes before consummation that do not fall under the three categories above (i.e., related to the APR, the loan product, or the addition of a prepayment penalty), the creditor still must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure with any terms or costs that have changed and ensure that the consumer receives it. For these changes, there is no additional three-business-day waiting period required. The creditor must ensure only that the consumer receives the corrected Closing Disclosure at or before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i); Comments 19(f)(2)(i)-1 and -2).

However, a consumer has the right to inspect the Closing Disclosure during the business day before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i)). If a consumer asks to inspect the Closing Disclosure the business day before consummation, the Closing Disclosure presented to the consumer must reflect any adjustments to the costs or terms that are known to the creditor at the time the consumer inspects it (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i)).

A creditor may satisfy the obligation to provide the Closing Disclosure by ensuring that a settlement agent that provides a consumer with the disclosures complies with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(f) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v); Comment 19(f)(2)(i)-2).

Changes due to events occurring after consummation. Creditors must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure if an event in connection with the settlement occurs during the 30-calendar-day period after consummation that causes the Closing Disclosure to become inaccurate and results in a change to an amount paid by the consumer from what was previously disclosed (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii); Comment 19(f)(2)(iii)-1).

NOTE: A creditor is not required to provide corrected disclosures under this provision if the only changes that would be required to be disclosed in the corrected disclosure are changes to per-diem interest and any disclosures affected by the change in per-diem interest, even if the amount of per-diem interest actually paid by the consumer differs from the amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(g)(2) and (o). Nonetheless, if a creditor is providing a corrected disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii) for reasons other than changes in per-diem interest and the per-diem interest has changed as well, the creditor must disclose in the corrected disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii) the correct amount of the per-diem interest and provide corrected disclosures for any disclosures that are affected by the change in per-diem interest (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii); Comment 19(f)(2)(iii)-2).

When a post-consummation event requires a corrected Closing Disclosure, the creditor must deliver or place in the mail a corrected Closing Disclosure not later than 30 calendar days after receiving information sufficient to establish that such an event has occurred. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii); Comment 19(f)(2)(iii)-1) In transactions involving a seller, the settlement agent must provide the seller with a corrected Closing Disclosure if an event occurs within 30 days of consummation that makes the disclosures inaccurate as they relate to the amount actually paid by the seller. The settlement agent must deliver or mail a corrected closing disclosure no later than 30 days from receiving information that establishes the Closing Disclosure is inaccurate and results in a change to an amount actually paid by the seller from what was previously disclosed. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)(ii))

Changes due to clerical errors. The creditor must provide a corrected Closing Disclosure to correct non-numerical clerical errors no later than 60 calendar days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iv)). An error is clerical if it does not affect a numerical disclosure and does not affect the timing, delivery, or other requirements imposed by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) or (f) (Comment 19(f)(2)(iv)-1).

Refunds related to the good faith analysis. The creditor can cure a tolerance violation of 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) or (ii) by providing a refund to the consumer and delivering or placing in the mail a corrected Closing Disclosure that reflects the refund no later than 60 calendar days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v)).

Special Information Booklet - 12 CFR 1026.19(g)

Creditors generally must provide a copy of the special information booklet, otherwise known as the home buying information booklet, to consumers who apply for a consumer credit transaction secured by real property or a cooperative unit. For loans using the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure forms, creditors provide the "Your Home Loan Toolkit: A Step-by-Step Guide," designed by the CFPB to replace the "Shopping for Your Home Loan: Settlement Cost Booklet" as the special information booklet. This requirement is not limited to closed-end transactions and applies to most consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, except in a few circumstances (see below). The special information booklet is required pursuant to Regulation Z (12

CFR 1026.19(g)(1) as well as Section 5 of RESPA (12 U.S.C. 2604) and 12 CFR 1024.6 of Regulation X. The booklet is published by the CFPB to help consumers applying for federally related mortgage loans understand the nature and cost of real estate settlement services.

- If the consumer is applying for a HELOC subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, the creditor (or mortgage broker) can provide a copy of the brochure titled “What You Should Know About Home Equity Lines of Credit” instead of the special information booklet (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(ii)).
- The creditor need not provide the special information booklet if the consumer is applying for a real property-secured consumer credit transaction that does not have the purpose of purchasing a one-to-four family residential property, such as a refinancing, a closed-end loan secured by a subordinate lien, or a reverse mortgage (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(iii)).

Creditors must deliver or place in the mail the special information booklet not later than three business days after receiving the consumer’s loan application (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i)).

If the creditor denies the consumer’s application or if the consumer withdraws the application before the end of the three-business-day period, the creditor need not provide the special information booklet (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i); Comment 19(g)(1)(i)-3).

When two or more persons apply together for a loan, the creditor may provide a copy of the special information booklet to just one of them (Comment 19(g)(1)-2).

If the consumer uses a mortgage broker, the mortgage broker must provide the special information booklet and the creditor need not do so (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(1)(i)).

Creditors generally are required to use the booklets designed by the CFPB and may make only limited changes to the special information booklet. (12 CFR 1026.19(g)(2)) The CFPB may issue revised or alternative versions of the special information booklet from time to time in the future. Creditors should monitor the Federal Register for notice of revisions (Comment 19(g)(1)-1).

Construction Loan Disclosures

Creditors are required to comply with TRID for disclosure of construction loans and construction-permanent loans that are closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1) and .19(f)(1)). These transactions have two distinct phases. First, the construction phase usually involves several disbursements of funds at times and in amounts that are unknown at the beginning of that period, with the consumer generally paying only accrued interest until construction is completed. Unless the obligation is paid when construction is completed (i.e., a construction-only loan), it is a construction-permanent loan and the construction period converts to the second phase, the permanent financing in which the loan amount is amortized just as in a standard mortgage transaction. The longstanding provisions of 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii) apply to construction and construction-permanent loans, as well as the option to use Appendix D. Appendix D provides an optional method of calculating the annual percentage rate and other disclosures for construction loans in disclosing construction financing (Comment 17(c)(6)-2). While the 2017 TRID amendments provide additional guidance on how a creditor may use Appendix D to disclose construction loans and construction-permanent loans, the 2017 TRID amendments do not require the use of Appendix D or its corresponding official commentary when disclosing the terms of construction loans or construction-permanent loans. Specific regulatory provisions and official commentary applicable to construction loan disclosures are discussed below.

Disclosure Methods for Construction Loans – 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)

Regulation Z provides a flexible rule for disclosure of construction loans and construction-permanent loans (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)). First, it provides that a series of advances under an agreement to extend credit up to a certain amount may be considered as one transaction (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(i)).

This means that for construction-only loans, a creditor may treat all of the advances as a single transaction or disclose each advance as a separate transaction. If these advances are treated as one transaction and the timing and amounts of advances are unknown, creditors must make disclosures based on estimates, based on the best information reasonably available at the time the disclosure is provided to the consumer, as provided in 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2).

Second, when a multiple-advance loan to finance the construction of a dwelling may be permanently financed by the same creditor, the construction phase and the permanent phase may be treated as either one or more than one transaction (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii)).

In addition to disclosure options described above for multiple advance loans, for construction-permanent loans where the permanent phase may be financed by the same creditor, the creditor also has the option to provide either one combined disclosure for both the construction financing and the permanent financing, or separate disclosures for the two phases (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii); Comment 17(c)(6)-2).

Thus, in a transaction that finances the construction of a dwelling that may be permanently financed by the same creditor, the construction financing phase and the permanent financing phases may be disclosed in one of three ways listed below.

- As a single transaction, with one disclosure combining both phases.
- As two separate transactions, with one disclosure for each phase.
- As more than two transactions, with one disclosure for each advance and one for the permanent financing phase (Comment 17(c)(6)-3).

Delivery of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)

Regulation Z clarifies the timing requirements for providing the Loan Estimate for construction and construction-permanent loans based on when the creditor receives an application (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)). Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5 provides examples of different scenarios, illustrating how the timing requirements would apply. For example, where a creditor receives an application for both the construction and permanent phases of a transaction, the creditor must deliver or place in the mail either a single Loan Estimate (if the phases are treated as one transaction) or two or more Loan Estimates (if the phases are treated separately) within three business days of receiving the application and not later than seven business days before consummation.

Completion of Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure

Generally, a financial institution will make disclosures for construction loans in the same manner as it discloses terms for non-construction loans, following the guidance of applicable regulations (See 12 CFR 1026.37 and 1026.38). The financial institution may, at its option, use Appendix D to Regulation Z to estimate and disclose the terms of multiple-advance construction and construction-permanent loans (12 CFR Part 1026, App. D). This appendix reflects the approach taken in 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)(ii), which permits creditors to provide separate or combined disclosures for the construction period and for the permanent financing, as discussed above.

The financial institution may, at its option, use Appendix D to the regulation to assist in estimating and disclosing the terms of multiple-advance construction loans when the amounts or timing of advances is unknown at consummation of the transaction. Appendix D may also be used in multiple-advance transactions other than construction loans, when the amounts or timing of advances is unknown at consummation (Comment App. D-1).

Appendix D and its associated commentary provide additional guidance and clarification on how to complete various portions of the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure. Additional guidance and examples are intended to inform the accurate disclosure of information related to Loan Term (Comment App. D. 7.i), Loan Product (Comment App. D 7.ii), Interest Rate (Comment App. D. 7.iii), Increases in Periodic Payment (Comment App. D. 7.iv), Projected Payments Table (Comment App. D. 7.v), Disclosure of Construction Costs (Comment App.

D. 7.vi), and Inspection and Handling Fees (Comment App. D. 7.vii).

Loans Receiving Non-TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures, Generally

Creditors making closed-end loans to consumers not subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures Rule (i.e., other than loans where 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) require the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure) must provide the consumer with the Truth in Lending (TIL) disclosure, as outlined in 12 CFR 1026.17 and 1026.18. Creditors engaged in specified housing assistance programs for low- and moderate-income consumers would also provide their consumers with the TIL Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

TIL Disclosure.

The TIL disclosure provided for these loans includes a payment schedule (12 CFR 1026.18(g)). The disclosed payment schedule must reflect all components of the finance charge. It includes all payments scheduled to repay loan principal, interest on the loan, and any other finance charge payable by the consumer after consummation of the transaction.

However, any finance charge paid separately before or at consummation (e.g., odd days' interest) is not part of the payment schedule. It is a prepaid finance charge that must be reflected as a reduction in the value of the amount financed.

At the creditor's option, the payment schedule may include amounts beyond the amount financed and finance charge (e.g., certain insurance premiums or real estate escrow amounts such as taxes added to payments). However, when calculating the APR, the creditor must disregard such amounts.

If the obligation is a renewable balloon payment instrument that unconditionally obligates the financial institution to renew the short-term loan at the consumer's option or to renew the loan subject to conditions within the consumer's control, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the longer term of the renewal period or periods. The long-term loan must be disclosed with a variable rate feature.

If there are no renewal conditions or if the financial institution guarantees to renew the obligation in a refinancing, the payment schedule must be disclosed using the shorter balloon payment term. The short-term loan must be disclosed as a fixed rate loan, unless it contains a variable rate feature during the initial loan term.

Variable and Adjustable Rate Transactions; 12 CFR 1026.18(f), 1026.20(c) and (d)

Closed-end transactions generally

If the terms of the legal obligation allow the financial institution, after consummation of the transaction, to increase the APR, the financial institution must furnish the consumer with certain information on variable rates. In addition, variable rate disclosures are not applicable to rate increases resulting from delinquency, default, assumption, acceleration, or transfer of the collateral. Some of the more important transaction-specific variable rate disclosure requirements follow.

- Disclosures for variable rate loans must be given for the full term of the transaction and must be based on the terms in effect at the time of consummation.
- If the variable rate transaction includes either a seller buy-down that is reflected in a contract or a consumer buy-down, the disclosed APR should be a composite rate based on the lower rate for the buy-down period and the rate that is the basis for the variable rate feature for the remainder of the term.
- If the initial rate is not determined by the index or formula used to make later interest rate adjustments, as in a discounted variable rate transaction, the disclosed APR must reflect a composite rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is applied and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation (i.e., the fully indexed rate).
 - If a loan contains a rate or payment cap that would prevent the initial rate or payment, at the time of the adjustment, from changing to the fully indexed rate, the effect of that rate or payment cap needs to be reflected in the disclosures.
 - The index at consummation need not be used if the contract provides a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value (e.g., the contract indicates that future rate changes are based on the index value in effect for some specified period, such as 45 days before the change date). Instead, the financial institution may use any rate from the date of consummation back to the beginning of the specified period (e.g., during the previous 45-day period).
- If the initial interest rate is set according to the index or formula used for later adjustments but is set at a value as of a date before consummation, disclosures should be based on the initial interest rate, even though the index may have changed by the consummation date.

²⁹ Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of this 12 CFR 1026.20(d). Creditors, assignees, and servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, establishing a business relationship where one party agrees to provide disclosures on behalf of the other parties does not absolve all other parties from their legal obligations.

Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosures

Disclosure of Post-Consummation Events - Initial Rate Change for Adjustable Rate Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.20(d)

Creditors, assignees, or servicers²⁹ (referred to collectively as creditors) of adjustable rate mortgages, or ARMs, secured by the consumer's principal dwelling and with terms of more than one year are generally required to provide consumers with certain information pertaining to the ARM's initial rate change.³⁰ This information must be provided in a disclosure that is separate from all other documents, and the disclosure must be provided between 210 and 240 days before the first payment at the adjusted rate is due. If the first payment at a new rate is due within the first 210 days after consummation, the creditor must provide the rate change disclosure at consummation.

Disclosures required under this section must provide consumers with information related to the timing and nature of the rate change. If the new rate pursuant to the change disclosed is not known and the creditor provides an estimate, the rate must be identified as an estimate. If the creditor is using an estimate, it must be based on the index within 15 business days prior to the date of the disclosure. The calculation is made using the index reported in the source of information that the creditor uses in the explanation of how the interest rate is determined.

Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(d) must also include, among others:

- The date of the disclosure.
- A statement explaining that the time period that the current rate has been in effect is ending, that the current rate is expiring, and that a change in the rate may result in a change in the required payment; providing the effective date of the change and a schedule of any future changes; and describing any other changes to the loan terms, features, or options taking effect on the same date (including expiration of interest-only or payment-option features).
- A table containing the current and new interest rates, the current and new payments, including the date the new payment is due, and for interest-only or negative amortization loans, the amount of the current and new payment allocated to principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable).

³⁰ Exemptions to disclosure requirements are covered in the section titled "Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)" below.

NOTE: The new payment allocation disclosed is the expected payment allocation for the first payment for which the new interest rate will apply.

- An explanation of how the interest rate is determined, including (among other things) an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate and the margin.
 - Any limitations on the interest rate or payment increase for each scheduled increase and over the life of the loan. Creditors must also include a statement regarding the extent to which such limitations result in foregone interest rate increases and the earliest date such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments.
 - An explanation of how the new payment is determined, including an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate, including the margin, the expected loan balance on the date of the rate adjustment, and the remaining loan term or any changes to the term caused by the rate change.
 - If the creditor is using an estimated rate or payment, a statement that the actual new interest rate and new payment will be provided to the consumer between two and four months prior to the first payment at the new rate.
 - For negative amortization loans, creditors must provide a statement indicating that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and will not reduce the balance of the loan; instead, the payment will only apply to part of the interest, thereby increasing the amount of principal.
 - A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer.
 - The telephone number of the creditor, assignee, or servicer for use if the consumer anticipates that he or she may not be able to make the new payments.
 - A statement providing specified alternatives (which include refinancing, selling the property, loan modification, and forbearance) available if the consumer anticipates not being able to make the new payment.
 - A website address for either the CFPB’s or the Department of Housing and Urban Development’s (HUD) list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, the HUD toll-free telephone number to access the HUD list of homeownership counselors and counseling organizations, and the CFPB’s website address for state housing finance authorities contact information.
 - For more information pertaining to the required format of the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(d), please see 12 CFR 1026.20(d)(3) and the model and sample forms H-4(D)(3) and (4) in Appendix H.
- Disclosure of Post-Consummation Events – Rate Adjustments Resulting in Payment Changes – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)
- Creditors, assignees, or servicers³¹ (referred to collectively as creditors) of ARMs secured by a consumer’s principal dwelling with a term greater than one year are generally required to provide consumers with disclosures prior to the adjustment of the interest rate on the mortgage,³² if the interest rate change will result in a payment change as follows:
- For ARMs where the payment changes along with a rate change, disclosures must be provided to consumers between 60 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.
 - For ARMs where the payment changes in connection with a uniformly scheduled interest rate adjustment occurring every 60 days (or more frequently), the disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.
 - For ARMs originated prior to January 10, 2015, in which the contract requires the adjusted interest and payment to be calculated based on an index that is available on a date less than 45 days prior to the adjustment date, disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new amount is required.
 - For ARMs where the first adjustment occurs within 60 days of consummation and the new interest rate disclosed at the time was an estimate, the disclosures must be provided as soon as practicable, but no less than 25 days before the first payment at the new amount is due.
- Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) must contain specific information, which includes, among others:

³¹ Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(c). Creditors, assignees, and servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, establishing a business relationship where one party agrees to provide disclosures on behalf of the other parties does not absolve all other parties from their legal obligations.

³² Exemptions to disclosure requirements are covered in the section titled “Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)” below.

- A statement explaining that the time period during which the consumer's current rate has been in effect is ending and that the rate and payment will change; when the interest rate will change; dates when additional interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur; and any other change in loan terms or features that take effect on the same date that the interest rate and payment change, such as an expiration of interest-only treatment or payment-option feature.
- A table explaining the current and new interest rates, the current and new payments, including the date the new payment is due, and for interest-only or negative amortizing loans, the amount of the current and new payment allocated to principal, interest, and amounts for escrow (if applicable).
- An explanation of how the new interest rate is determined, including (among other things) the index or formula used to determine the new rate and the margin, and any application of previously foregone interest rate increases from past adjustments;
- Any limitations on the interest rate and payment increase for each scheduled increase for the duration of the loan. Creditors must also include a statement regarding the extent to which such limitations result in foregone interest rate increases and the earliest date such foregone interest rate increases may apply to future interest rate adjustments.
- An explanation of how the new payment is determined, including an explanation of the index or formula used to determine the new rate, including the margin, the expected loan balance on the date of the rate adjustment, and the remaining loan term or any changes to the term caused by the rate change;
- For negative amortization loans, creditors must provide a statement indicating that the new payment will not reduce the balance of the loan, rather, the payment will only apply to part of the interest, thereby increasing the amount of principal; and
- A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer.

For more information pertaining to the required format of the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.20(c), please see 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(3) and the model and sample forms H-4(D)(1) and (2) in Appendix H.

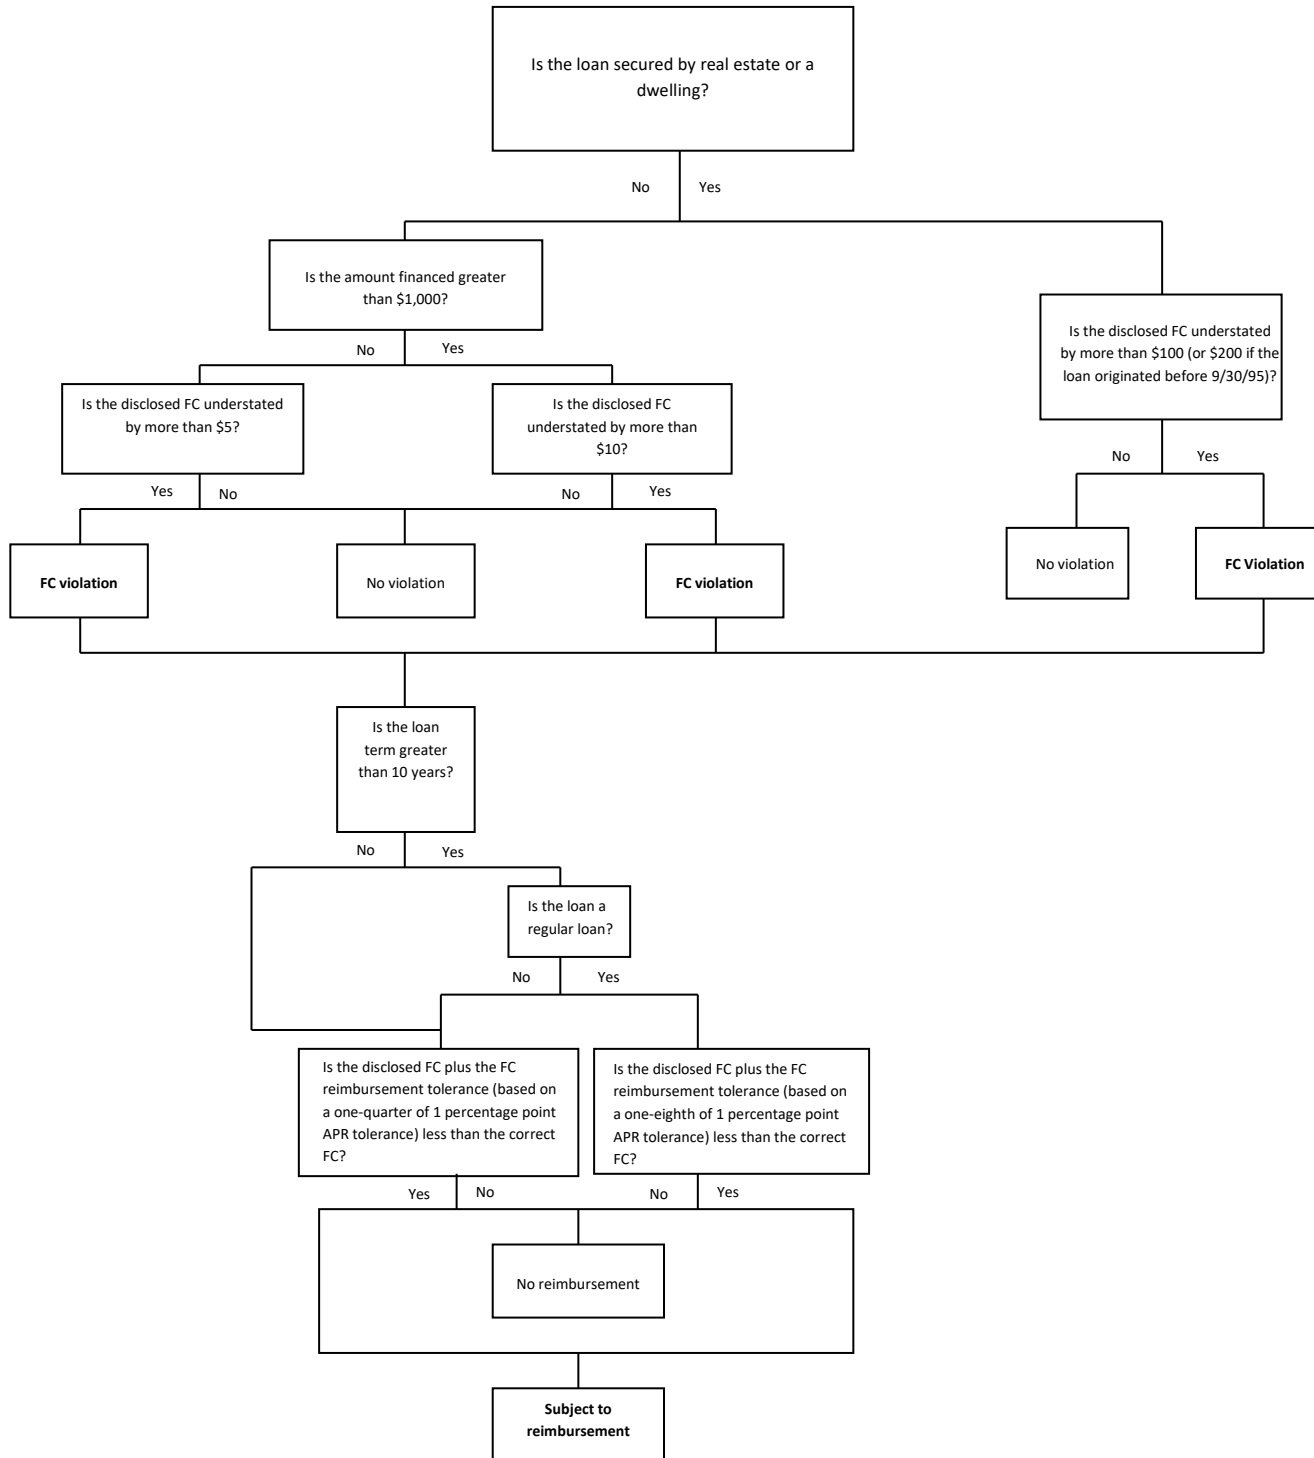

Exemptions to the Adjustable Rate Mortgage Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii) and (d)(1)(ii)

Disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) are not required for ARMs with a term of one year or less. Likewise, disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.20(c) are not required if the first interest rate and payment adjustment occurs within the first 210 days and the new rate disclosed at consummation pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.20(d) was not an estimate. ARM disclosures for payment changes are exempt under 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii)(C) where the servicer is a debt collector under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) and a consumer has exercised the right under FDCPA section 805(c) to prohibit debt collector communications regarding the debt.

Refinancings – 12 CFR 1026.20(a)

When an obligation is satisfied and replaced by a new obligation to the original financial institution (or a holder or servicer of the original obligation) and is undertaken by the same consumer, it must be treated as a refinancing for which a complete set of new disclosures must be furnished. A refinancing may involve the consolidation of several existing obligations, disbursement of new money to the consumer, or the rescheduling of payments under an existing obligation. In any form, the new obligation must completely replace the earlier one to be considered a refinancing under the regulation. The finance charge on the new disclosure must include any unearned portion of the old finance charge that is not credited to the existing obligation (12 CFR 1026.20(a)).

The following transactions are not considered refinancings even if the existing obligation is satisfied and replaced by a new obligation undertaken by the same consumer:

- A renewal of an obligation with a single payment of principal and interest or with periodic interest payments and a final payment of principal with no change in the original terms.
- An APR reduction with a corresponding change in the payment schedule.
- An agreement involving a court proceeding.
- Changes in credit terms arising from the consumer's default or delinquency.
- The renewal of optional insurance purchased by the consumer and added to an existing transaction, if required disclosures were provided for the initial purchase of the insurance.

However, even if it is not accomplished by the cancellation of the old obligation and substitution of a new one, a new transaction subject to new disclosures results if the financial institution:

- Increases the rate based on a variable rate feature that was not previously disclosed; or
- Adds a variable rate feature to the obligation.

If, at the time a loan is renewed, the rate is increased, the increase is not considered a variable rate feature. It is the cost of renewal, similar to a flat fee, as long as the new rate remains fixed during the remaining life of the loan. If the original debt is not canceled in connection with such a renewal, the regulation does not require new disclosures. Also, changing the index of a variable rate transaction to a comparable index is not considered adding a variable rate feature to the obligation.

Escrow Cancellation Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.20(e)

Escrow Closing Notice. Before cancelling an escrow account, an Escrow Closing Notice must be provided to any consumers for whom an escrow account was established in connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a first lien on real property or a dwelling, except for reverse mortgages (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)). For this purpose, the term escrow account has the same meaning given to it as under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17(b), and the term servicer has the same meaning given to it as under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.2(b). There are two exceptions to the requirement to provide the notice:

- Creditors and servicers are not required to provide the notice if the escrow account that is being canceled was established solely in connection with the consumer's delinquency or default on the underlying debt obligation (Comment 20(e)(1)-2).
- Creditors and servicers are not required to provide the notice when the underlying debt obligation for which an escrow account was established is terminated, including by repayment, refinancing, rescission, and foreclosure (Comment 20(e)(1)-3).

For loans subject to the Escrow Closing Notice requirement, if the creditor or servicer cancels the escrow account at the consumer's request, the creditor or servicer must ensure that the consumers receive the notice no later than three business days (i.e., all calendar days except Sundays and the legal public holidays (See 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A) and (f)(1)(iii)) before the consumer's escrow account is canceled (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(i)). If the creditor or servicer cancels the escrow account and the cancellation is not at the consumer's request, the creditor or servicer must ensure that the consumer receives the notice no later than 30 business days before the closure of the consumer's escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(ii)). If the Escrow Closing Notice is not provided to the consumer in person, the consumer is considered to have received the notice three business days after it is delivered or placed in the mail (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(iii)).

The creditor or servicer must disclose (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)-(2)):

- The date on which the account will be closed;
- That an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account;
- The reason that the escrow account will be closed;
- That without an escrow account, the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner's insurance, directly, possibly in one or two large payments a year;
- A table, titled "Cost to you," that contains an itemization of the amount of any fee the creditor or servicer imposes on the consumer in connection with the closure of the consumer's escrow account, labeled "Escrow Closing Fee," and a statement that the fee is for closing the escrow account;

- Under the reference "In the future":
 - The consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid and the actions the creditor or servicer may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer's behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than a policy that the consumer could obtain directly;
 - A telephone number that the consumer can use to request additional information about the cancellation of the escrow account;
 - Whether the creditor or servicer offers the option of keeping the escrow account open and, as applicable, a telephone number the consumer can use to request that the account be kept open; and
 - Whether there is a cutoff date by which the consumer can request that the account be kept open.

The creditor or servicer may also, at its option, disclose (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(3)):

- The creditor or servicer's name or logo;
- The consumer's name, phone number, mailing address, and property address;
- The issue date of the notice;
- The loan number; or
- The consumer's account number.

In addition, the disclosures must:

- Contain a required heading that is more conspicuous than and precedes the required disclosures discussed above (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)).
- Be clear and conspicuous. This standard generally requires that the disclosures in the Escrow Closing Notice be in a reasonably understandable form and readily noticeable to the consumer (Comment 20(e)(2)-1).
- Be written in 10-point font, at a minimum (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)).

- Be grouped together on the front side of a one-page document. The disclosures must be separate from all other materials, with the headings, content, order, and format substantially similar to model form H-29 in Appendix H to Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)). This requirement, however, does not preclude creditors and servicers from modifying the disclosures to accommodate particular consumer circumstances or transactions not addressed by the form or from adjusting the statement required by 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(A), concerning consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, to the circumstances of the particular consumer (Comment 20(e)(4)-3).

Successors In Interest – 12 CFR 1026.20(f)

If, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.20(c) (rate adjustments with corresponding change in payment), 12 CFR 1026.20(d) (initial rate adjustment), and 12 CFR 1026.20(e) (escrow account cancellation notice), unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under State law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv), and the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked such acknowledgement form.

Treatment of Credit Balances – 12 CFR 1026.21

When a credit balance in excess of $1 is created in connection with a transaction (through transmittal of funds to a creditor in excess of the total balance due on an account, through rebates of unearned finance charges or insurance premiums, or through amounts otherwise owed to or held for the benefit of a consumer), the creditor is required to:

- Credit the amount of the credit balance to the consumer's account;
- Refund any part of the remaining credit balance, upon the written request of the consumer; and
- Make a good faith effort to refund to the consumer by cash, check, or money order, or credit to a deposit account of the consumer, any part of the credit balance remaining in the account for more than 6 months, except that no further action is required if the consumer's current location is not known to the creditor and cannot be traced through the consumer's last known address or telephone number.

Closed-end Advertising – 12 CFR 1026.24

If an advertisement for credit states specific credit terms, it must state only those terms that actually are or will be arranged or offered by the creditor.

V. Lending — TILA

Disclosures required by this section must be made “clearly and conspicuously.” To meet this standard in general, credit terms need not be printed in a certain type size nor appear in any particular place in the advertisement. For advertisements for credit secured by a dwelling, a clear and conspicuous disclosure means that the required information is disclosed with equal prominence and in close proximity to the advertised rates or payments triggering the required disclosures.

If an advertisement states a rate of finance charge, it must state the rate as an “annual percentage rate,” using that term. If the APR may be increased after consummation, the advertisement must state that fact.

If an advertisement is for credit not secured by a dwelling, the advertisement must not state any other rate, except that a simple annual rate or periodic rate that is applied to an unpaid balance may be stated in conjunction with, but not more conspicuously than, the APR.

If an advertisement is for credit secured by a dwelling, the advertisement must not state any other rate, except that a simple annual rate that is applied to an unpaid balance may be stated in conjunction with, but not more conspicuously than, the APR. That is, an advertisement for credit secured by a dwelling may not state a periodic rate, other than a simple annual rate, that is applied to an unpaid balance.

“Triggering terms” – The following are triggering terms that require additional disclosures:

- The amount or percentage of any down payment;
- The number of payments or period of repayment;
- The amount of any payment; and
- The amount of any finance charge.

An advertisement stating a triggering term must also state the following terms as applicable:

- The amount or percentage of any down payment;
- The terms of repayment, which reflect the repayment obligations over the full term of the loan, including any balloon payment; and
- The “annual percentage rate,” using that term, and, if the rate may be increased after consummation, that fact.

For any advertisement secured by a dwelling, other than television or radio advertisements, that states a simple annual rate of interest, and more than one simple annual rate of interest will apply over the term of the advertised loan, the advertisement must state in a clear and conspicuous manner:

- Each simple rate of interest that will apply. In variable-rate transactions, a rate determined by adding an index and margin must be disclosed based on a reasonably current index and margin.
- The period of time during which each simple annual rate of interest will apply.
- The APR for the loan.

The regulation prohibits the following seven deceptive or misleading acts or practices in advertisements for closed-end mortgage loans:

- Stating that rates or payments for loans are “fixed” when those rates or payments can vary without adequately disclosing that the interest rate or payment amounts are “fixed” only for a limited period of time, rather than for the full term of the loan;
- Making comparisons between actual or hypothetical credit payments or rates and any payment or rate available under the advertised product that are not available for the full term of the loan, with certain exceptions for advertisements for variable rate products;
- Characterizing the products offered as “government loan programs,” “government-supported loans,” or otherwise endorsed or sponsored by a federal or state government entity even though the advertised products are not government-supported or sponsored loans;
- Displaying the name of the consumer’s current mortgage lender, unless the advertisement also prominently discloses that the advertisement is from a mortgage lender not affiliated with the consumer’s current lender;
- Making claims of debt elimination if the product advertised would merely replace one debt obligation with another;
- Creating a false impression that the mortgage broker or lender is a “counselor” for the consumer; and
- In foreign-language advertisements, providing certain information, such as a low introductory “teaser” rate, in a foreign language, while providing required disclosures only in English.

Subpart D – Miscellaneous

Subpart D contains rules on oral disclosures 12 CFR 1026.26, disclosures in languages other than English 12 CFR 1026.27, record retention 12 CFR 1026.25, effect on state laws (12 CFR 1026.28), state exemptions 12 CFR 1026.29, and rate limitations (12 CFR 1026.30).

Record Retention – 12 CFR 1026.25

As a general rule, the creditor must retain evidence of compliance with Regulation Z (other than advertising requirements under 12 CFR 1026.16 and 12 CFR 1026.24, and other than certain requirements for mortgage loans) for two years after the date disclosures are required to be made or action is required to be taken (12 CFR 1026.25(a)). This includes, for example, evidence that the creditor properly handled adverse credit reports in connection with amounts subject to a billing dispute under 12 CFR 1026.13, and properly handled the refunding of credit balances under 12 CFR 1026.11 and 12 CFR 1026.21. The creditor may retain the evidence by any method that reproduces records accurately (including computer programs) (Comment 25(a)-2). A creditor must permit the enforcing agency to inspect its relevant records for compliance (12 CFR 1026.25(b)).

The record retention period for mortgage loans is generally three years (12 CFR 1026.25(c)). A creditor must retain evidence of compliance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) for three years after the later of the date of consummation, the date disclosures are required to be made, or the date the action is required to be taken (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(i)).

For Closing Disclosures, the record retention period is five years. The creditor must retain completed closing disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) or (f)(4)(i), and all documents related to such disclosures, for five years after consummation (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(ii)(A)). If a creditor sells, transfers, or otherwise disposes of its interest in a mortgage loan subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) and does not service the mortgage loan, the creditor must provide a copy of the closing disclosures to the owner or servicer of the mortgage, and the new owner or servicer must retain such disclosures for the remainder of the five-year period.

For loan originator compensation, creditors and loan originator organizations must retain records-related requirements for mortgage loan originator compensation and the compensation agreement that governs those payments for three years after the date of payment (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2)).

A creditor must retain evidence to show compliance with the minimum standards for loans secured by a dwelling in 12 CFR 1026.43 for three years after consummation of a transaction covered by that section (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(3)).

Relationship to State Law – TILA 111 and 12 CFR 1026.28, 1026.29

State laws providing rights, responsibilities, or procedures for consumers or financial institutions for consumer credit contracts may be:

- Preempted by federal law;

- Not preempted by federal law; or
- Substituted in lieu of the TILA and Regulation Z requirements.

State law provisions are preempted to the extent that they contradict the requirements in the following chapters of the TILA and the implementing sections of Regulation Z:

- Chapter 1, “General Provisions,” which contains definitions and acceptable methods for determining finance charges and annual percentage rates.
- Chapter 2, “Credit Transactions,” which contains disclosure requirements, rescission rights, and certain credit card provisions.
- Chapter 3, “Credit Advertising,” which contains consumer credit advertising rules and APR oral disclosure requirements.

For example, a state law would be preempted if it required a financial institution to use the terms “nominal annual interest rate” in lieu of “annual percentage rate.”

Conversely, state law provisions are generally not preempted under federal law if they call for, without contradicting chapters 1, 2, or 3 of the TILA or the implementing sections of Regulation Z, either of the following:

- Disclosure of information not otherwise required. A state law that requires disclosure of the minimum periodic payment for open-end credit, for example, would not be preempted because it does not contradict federal law.
- Disclosures more detailed than those required. A state law that requires itemization of the amount financed, for example, would not be preempted, unless it contradicts federal law by requiring the itemization to appear with the disclosure of the amount financed in the segregated closed-end credit disclosures.

The relationship between state law and Chapter 4 of the TILA (Credit Billing) involves two parts. The first part is concerned with Sections 161 (correction of billing errors) and 162 (regulation of credit reports) of the TILA; the second part addresses the remaining sections of Chapter 4.

State law provisions are preempted if they differ from the rights, responsibilities, or procedures contained in Sections 161 or 162. An exception is made, however, for state law that allows a consumer to inquire about an account and requires the bank to respond to such inquiry beyond the time limits provided by federal law. Such a state law would not be preempted for the extra time period.

State law provisions are preempted if they result in violations of Sections 163 through 171 of Chapter 4. For example, a state law that allows the card issuer to offset the consumer's credit-card indebtedness against funds held by the card issuer would be preempted, since it would violate (12 CFR 1026.12(d)). Conversely, a state law that requires periodic statements to be sent more than 14 days before the end of a free-ride period would not be preempted, since no violation of federal law is involved.

A financial institution, state, or other interested party may ask the CFPB to determine whether state law contradicts Chapters 1 through 3 of the TILA or Regulation Z. The party also may ask if the state law is different from, or would result in violations of, Chapter 4 of the TILA and the implementing provisions of Regulation Z. If the CFPB determines that a disclosure required by state law (other than a requirement relating to the finance charge, APR, or the disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.32) is substantially the same in meaning as a disclosure required under TILA or Regulation Z, generally creditors in that state may make the state disclosure in lieu of the federal disclosure.

Subpart E – Special Rules for Certain Home Mortgage Transactions

Subpart E contains special rules for mortgage transactions. 12 CFR 1026.32 requires certain disclosures and provides limitations for closed-end credit transactions and open-end credit plans that have rates or fees above specified amounts or certain prepayment penalties. 12 CFR 1026.33 requires special disclosures, including the total annual loan cost rate, for reverse mortgage transactions. 12 CFR 1026.34 prohibits specific acts and practices in connection with high-cost mortgages, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a). 12 CFR 1026.35 provides requirements for higher-priced mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1026.36 prohibits specific acts and practices in connection with an extension of credit secured by a dwelling. 12 CFR 1026.37 and 12 CFR 1026.38 set forth disclosure requirements for certain closed-end transactions secured by real property or cooperative unit, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f).

General Rules – 12 CFR 1026.31

The requirements and limitations of this subpart are in addition to, and not in lieu of, those contained in other subparts of Regulation Z. The disclosures for high-cost, reverse mortgage, and higher-priced mortgage transactions must be made clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep and in compliance with specific timing requirements.

Requirements for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32

The requirements of this section generally apply to a high-cost mortgage, which is a consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer's principal dwelling (subject to the exemptions discussed below) that meets any one of the following three coverage tests.

- The APR will exceed the average prime offer rate (APOR), as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a)(2), applicable for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by:

- More than 6.5 percentage points for first-lien transactions (other than as described below);
- More than 8.5 percentage points for first-lien transactions where the dwelling is personal property and the loan amount is less than $50,000; or
- More than 8.5 percentage points for subordinate-lien transactions.
- The total points and fees (see definition below) for the transaction will exceed:
 - For transactions with a loan amount of $26,092 or more, 5 percent of the total loan amount, with the loan amount to be adjusted annually on January 1st by the annual percentage change in the Consumer Price Index reported on the preceding June 1st; or
 - For transactions with a loan amount of less than $16,308, the lesser of 8 percent of the total transaction amount or $1,000, with the loan amount to be adjusted annually on January 1st by the annual percentage change in the Consumer Price Index reported on the preceding June 1st.

The adjusted loan amounts will be reflected in official interpretations of 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii). The official interpretation of 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(ii) also contains a historical list of dollar amount adjustments for transactions originated prior to January 10, 2014.

NOTE: The "total loan amount" (using the face amount of the note) for closed-end credit is calculated by taking the amount financed (see 12 CFR 1026.18(b)) and deducting any cost listed in 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(iii), (iv), or (vi) that is both included in points and fees and financed by the creditor. The "total loan amount" for open-end credit is the credit plan limit when the account is opened.

- The terms of the loan contract or open-end credit agreement permit the creditor to charge a prepayment penalty (see definition below) more than 36 months after consummation or account opening, or prepayment penalties that exceed more than 2 percent of the amount prepaid (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(1)(iii)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.32(d)(6) prohibits prepayment penalties for high-cost mortgages. However, if a mortgage loan has a prepayment penalty that may be imposed more than 36 months after consummation or account opening or that is greater than 2 percent of the amount prepaid, the loan is a high-cost mortgage regardless of interest rate or fees. Therefore, the prepayment penalty coverage test above effectively bans transactions of the types subject to HOEPA coverage that permit creditors to charge prepayment penalties that exceed the prescribed limits.

Exemptions from HOEPA Coverage – 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(2)

- Reverse mortgage transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.33;
- A transaction that finances the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A transaction originated by a Housing Finance Agency, where the Housing Finance Agency is the creditor for the transaction; or
- A transaction originated pursuant to the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s Rural Development Section 502 Direct Loan Program.

Determination of APR for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)

The APR used to determine whether a mortgage is a high-cost mortgage is calculated differently from the APR that is used on TILA disclosures. Specifically, the APR for HOEPA coverage is based on the following:

- If the APR will not vary during the length of the loan or credit plan (i.e., for fixed-rate transactions), the interest rate in effect as of the date the interest rate for the transaction is set (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(i));
- If the interest rate may vary during the term of the loan or credit plan in accordance with an index, the interest rate that results from adding the maximum margin permitted at any time during the term of the loan or credit plan to the index rate in effect as of the date the interest rate for the transaction is set, or to the introductory interest rate, whichever is greater (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(ii)); or
- If the interest rate may or will vary during the term of the loan or credit plan other than as described above (i.e., as in a step-rate transaction), the maximum interest rate that may be imposed during the life of the loan or credit plan (12 CFR 1026.32(a)(3)(iii)).

Points and Fees for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32(b)

NOTE: Points and fees calculations for high-cost mortgages depend upon whether the transaction is closed end or open end.

For a closed-end transaction, calculate the points and fees by including the following charges (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)):

- All items included in the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4(a) and (b), except that the following items are excluded:
 - Interest or the time-price differential;

- Any premiums or other charges imposed in connection with a federal or state agency program for any guaranty or insurance that protects the creditor against the consumer’s default or other credit loss (i.e., up-front and annual Federal Housing Administration (FHA) premiums, U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) funding fees, and USDA guarantee fees);
- Premiums or other charges for any guaranty or insurance that protects creditors against the consumer’s default or other credit loss and is not in connection with a federal or state agency program (i.e., private mortgage insurance (PMI) premiums) as follows:
 - The entire amount of any premiums or other charges payable after consummation (i.e., monthly or annual PMI premiums); or
 - If the premium or other charge is payable at or before consummation, the portion of any such premium or other charge that is not in excess of the permissible up-front mortgage insurance premium for FHA loans, but only if the premium or charge is refundable on a pro rata basis and the refund is automatically issued upon the notification of the satisfaction of the underlying mortgage loan. The permissible up-front mortgage insurance premiums for FHA loans are published in HUD Mortgagee Letters, available online at: http://portal.hud.gov/hudportal/HUD?src=/program_offices/administration/hudclips/letters/mortgage.
- Bona fide third-party charges not retained by the creditor, loan originator, or an affiliate of either, unless the charge is required to be included under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i)(C), (iii), or (v);
- Up to two bona fide discount points payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
 - The APOR for a comparable transaction by more than one percentage point; or
 - If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than one percentage point, or
- If no discount points have been excluded above, then up to one bona fide discount point payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:

V. Lending — TILA

- The APOR for a comparable transaction by more than two percentage points; or
- If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than two percentage points.

NOTE: In the case of a closed-end plan, a bona fide discount point means an amount equal to 1 percent of the loan amount paid by the consumer that reduces the interest rate or time-price differential applicable to the transaction based on a calculation that is consistent with established industry practices for determining the amount of reduction in the interest rate or time-price differential appropriate for the amount of discount points paid by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(3)).

- All compensation paid directly or indirectly by a consumer or creditor to a loan originator (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1) that can be attributed to the transaction at the time the interest rate is set unless:
 - That compensation is paid by a consumer to a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), and already has been included in points and fees under (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i));
 - That compensation is paid by a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), to a loan originator that is an employee of the mortgage broker;
 - That compensation is paid by a creditor to a loan originator that is an employee of the creditor; or
- All items listed in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(7), other than amounts held for future taxes, unless all of the following conditions are met:
 - The charge is reasonable;
 - The creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the charge; and
 - The charge is not paid to an affiliate of the creditor.
- Premiums or other charges paid at or before consummation, whether paid in cash or financed, for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or for any other life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance for which the creditor is a beneficiary, or any payments directly or indirectly for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract.
- The maximum prepayment penalty that may be charged or collected under the terms of the mortgage or credit plan.
- The total prepayment penalty incurred by the consumer if the consumer refinances an existing mortgage loan, or terminates an existing open-end credit plan in connection with obtaining a new mortgage loan, with a new mortgage transaction extended by the current holder of the existing loan, a servicer acting on behalf of the current holder, or an affiliate of either.

For an open-end credit plan, points and fees mean the following charges that are known at or before account opening (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)):

- All items included in the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4(a) and (b), except that the following items are excluded:
 - Interest or the time-price differential;
 - Any premiums or other charges imposed in connection with a federal or state agency program for any guaranty or insurance that protects the creditor against the consumer's default or other credit loss (i.e., up-front and annual FHA premiums, VA funding fees, and USDA guarantee fees);
 - Premiums or other charges for any guaranty or insurance that protects creditors against the consumer's default or other credit loss and is not in connection with a federal or state agency program (i.e., private mortgage insurance (PMI) premiums) as follows:
 - If the premium or other charge is payable after account opening, the entire amount of such premium or other charge, or
 - If the premium or other charge is payable at or before account opening, the portion of any such premium or other charge that is not in excess of the permissible up-front mortgage insurance premium for FHA loans, but only if the premium or charge is refundable on a pro rata basis and the refund is automatically issued upon the notification of the satisfaction of the underlying mortgage loan. The permissible up-front mortgage insurance premiums for FHA loans are published in HUD Mortgagee Letters, available online at: https://www.hud.gov/program_offices/administratio/hudclips/letters/mortgagee
 - Bona fide third-party charges not retained by the creditor, loan originator, or an affiliate of either, unless the charge is required to be included under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)(i)(C), (iii), or (iv);
 - Up to two bona fide discount points payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:

- The APOR by more than one percentage point; or
- If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than one percentage point, or
- If no discount points have been excluded above, then up to one bona fide discount point payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction, provided that the interest rate without any discount does not exceed:
 - The APOR by more than two percentage points; or
 - If the transaction is secured by personal property, the average rate for a loan insured under Title I of the National Housing Act by more than two percentage points.

NOTE: A bona fide discount point means an amount equal to 1 percent of the credit limit when the account is opened, paid by the consumer, that reduces the interest rate or time-price differential applicable to the transaction based on a calculation that is consistent with established industry practices for determining the amount of reduction in the interest rate or time-price differential appropriate for the amount of discount points paid by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(3)(ii)).

- All compensation paid directly or indirectly by a consumer or creditor to a loan originator (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1)) that can be attributed to the transaction at the time the interest rate is set unless:
 - That compensation is paid by a consumer to a mortgage broker, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2), and already has been included in points and fees under (12 CFR 1026.33(b)(2)(i)); or
 - That compensation is paid by a mortgage broker as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(2) to a loan originator that is an employee of the mortgage broker; or
 - That compensation is paid by a creditor to a loan originator that is an employee of the creditor; or
 - That compensation is paid by a retailer of manufactured homes to its employee.

NOTES:

- A person is not a loan originator if the person does not take a consumer credit application or offer or negotiate credit terms available from a creditor to that consumer based on the consumer's financial characteristics, but the person performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who does engage in such activities. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36, "credit terms" include rates, fees, or other costs, and a consumer's financial characteristics include any factors that may influence a credit decision, such as debts, income, assets or credit history (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(6)).

- A retailer of manufactured or modular homes or an employee of such a retailer who does not receive compensation or gain for engaging in loan originator activities in excess of any compensation or gain received in a comparable cash transaction, and who does not directly negotiate with the consumer or lender on loan terms, is not a loan originator, provided the retailer or employee discloses to the consumer in writing any corporate affiliation with any creditor. Where the retailer has a corporate affiliation with any creditor, at least one unaffiliated creditor must also be disclosed (15 U.S.C. 1602(dd)(2)(C)(ii)).
- All items listed in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(7), other than amounts held for future taxes, unless all of the following conditions are met:
 - The charge is reasonable;
 - The creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the charge; and
 - The charge is not paid to an affiliate of the creditor.
- Premiums or other charges paid at or before account opening for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or for any other life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance for which the creditor is a beneficiary, or any payments directly or indirectly for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract.
- The maximum prepayment penalty that may be charged or collected under the terms of the credit plan.
- The total prepayment penalty incurred by the consumer if the consumer refinances an existing closed-end credit transaction with an open-end credit plan, or terminates an existing open-end credit plan in connection with obtaining a new open-end credit with the current holder of the existing transaction or plan, a servicer acting on behalf of the current holder, or an affiliate of either.

In addition to the charges listed above, points and fees for open-end credit plans include the following items:

- Fees charged for participation in the credit plan, payable at or before account opening, as described in 12 CFR 1026.4(c)(4), and
- Any transaction fee that will be charged to draw funds on the credit line, as described in (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)(viii)).

Prepayment Penalty Definition – 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(6)

For closed-end credit transactions, a prepayment penalty is a charge imposed for paying all or part of the transaction's principal before the date on which the principal is due, with limited exceptions.

For open-end credit plans, a prepayment penalty is a charge imposed by the creditor if the consumer terminates the credit plan prior to the end of its term.

NOTE: Waived, bona fide third-party charges that are later imposed if the closed-end transaction is prepaid or the consumer terminates the open-end credit plan sooner than 36 months after consummation or account opening are not considered prepayment penalties.

NOTE: For closed-end transactions insured by the Federal Housing Administration and consummated before January 21, 2015, interest charged consistent with the monthly interest accrual amortization method is not a prepayment penalty, so long as the interest is charged consistent with the monthly interest accrual amortization method used for those loans. (See Comment 32(b)(6)-1(iv)).

High-Cost Mortgage Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.32(c)

In addition to the other disclosure requirements of Regulation Z, high-cost mortgages require certain additional information to be disclosed in conspicuous type size to consumers before consummation of the transaction or account opening. These disclosures include:

- Notice to the consumer using the required language in 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(1);
- The annual percentage rate (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(2));
- Specified information concerning the regular or minimum periodic payment and the amount of any balloon payment, if permitted under the high-cost mortgage limitations in 12 CFR 1026.32(d) (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)).
- For variable-rate transactions, a statement that the interest and monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment based on the maximum interest rate required to be included in the contract (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(4)) and
- The total amount borrowed for closed-end credit transactions or the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened for an open-end credit plan (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5)).

NOTE: For closed-end credit transactions, if the amount borrowed includes charges to be financed under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10), this fact must be stated, grouped together with the disclosure of amount borrowed. The disclosure of the amount borrowed will be treated as accurate if it is not more than $100 above or below the amount required to be disclosed.

High-Cost Mortgage Limitations – 12 CFR 1026.32(d)

Certain loan terms, including negative amortization, interest rate increases after default, and prepayment penalties are prohibited for high-cost mortgages. Others, including balloon payments and due-on-demand clauses, are restricted.

- Balloon payments, defined as payments that are more than two times a regular periodic payment, are generally prohibited for high-cost mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(i)). However, balloon payments are allowed in certain limited circumstances.
 - For closed-end transactions, balloon payments are permitted when (a) the loan has a payment schedule that is adjusted to seasonal or irregular income of the consumer; (b) the loan is a “bridge” loan made in connection with the purchase of a new dwelling and matures in 12 months or less; (c) the creditor is a small creditor operating in a rural or underserved area that meets the criteria set forth in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) for small creditor rural or underserved balloon-payment qualified mortgages; or, (d) until April 1, 2016, the creditor is a small creditor that meets the criteria set forth in 1026.43(e)(6) for temporary balloon-payment qualified mortgages (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(ii)).
 - For an open-end credit plan where the terms of the plan provide for a draw period where no payment is required, followed by a repayment period where no further draws may be taken, the initial payment required after conversion to the repayment phase of the credit plan is not considered a “balloon” payment. However, if the terms of an open-end credit plan do not provide for a separate draw period and repayment period, the balloon payment limitation applies (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(iii)).
- Acceleration clauses or demand features are limited and may only permit creditors to accelerate and demand repayment of the entire outstanding balance of a high-cost mortgage if:
 - There is fraud or material misrepresentation by the consumer in connection with the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(i));
 - The consumer fails to meet the repayment terms of the agreement for any outstanding balance that results in a default on the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(ii)); or
 - There is any action (or inaction) by the consumer that adversely affects the rights of the creditor's security interest for the loan, such as the consumer failing to pay required taxes on the property (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)(iii) and comments 32(d)(8)(iii)-1 and -2).

Prohibited Acts or Practices in Connection with High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.34

In addition to the requirements in 12 CFR 1026.32, Regulation Z imposes additional requirements for high-cost mortgages, several of which are discussed below.

Refinancing Within One Year – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3)

A creditor or assignee cannot refinance a consumer's high-cost mortgage into a second high-cost mortgage within the first year of the origination of the first loan, unless the second high-cost mortgage is in the consumer's interest.

Repayment Ability for High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)

Among other requirements, a creditor extending high-cost mortgage credit subject to 12 CFR 1026.32 must not make such loans without regard to the consumer's repayment ability as of consummation or account opening as applicable (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)).

For closed-end credit transactions that are high-cost mortgages, 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4) requires a creditor to comply with the repayment ability requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.43.

For open-end credit plans that are high-cost mortgages, a creditor may not open a credit plan for a consumer where credit is or will be extended without regard to the consumer's repayment ability as of account opening, including the consumer's current and reasonably expected income, employment, assets other than the collateral, and current obligations, including any mortgage-related obligations.

- For the purposes of these open-end requirements, mortgage-related obligations include, among other things, property taxes, premiums and fees for mortgage-related insurance that are required by the creditor, fees and special assessments such as those imposed by a condominium association, and similar expenses required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening and secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage transaction (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(i)).
- A creditor must also verify both current obligations and the amounts of income or assets that it relies on to determine repayment ability using W-2s, tax returns, payroll receipts, financial institution records, or other third-party documents that provide reasonably reliable evidence of the consumer's income or assets (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(ii)).

For open-end high-cost mortgages, a presumption of compliance is available, but only if the creditor:

- Verifies the consumer's repayment ability as required under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(ii);
- Determines the consumer's repayment ability taking into account current obligations and mortgage-related obligations, using the largest required minimum periodic payment based on the assumptions that:
 - The consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening with no additional extensions of credit;
 - The consumer makes only required minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period; and
 - If the APR can increase, the maximum APR that is included in the contract applies to the plan at account opening and will apply during the draw and any repayment period (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(iii)(B)).
- Assesses the consumer's repayment ability, taking into account either the ratio of total debts to income or the income the consumer will have after paying current obligations (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)(iii)(C)).

NOTE: No presumption of compliance will be available for an open-end high-cost mortgage transaction in which the regular periodic payments, when aggregated, do not fully amortize the outstanding principal balance except for transactions with balloon payments permitted under 12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(ii).

High-Cost Mortgage Pre-Loan Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)

Creditors that originate high-cost mortgages must receive written certification that the consumer has obtained counseling on the advisability of the mortgage from a counselor approved by HUD, or if permitted by HUD, a state housing finance authority (specific content for the certifications can be found in 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)(iv)). Counseling must occur after the consumer receives a good faith estimate or initial TILA disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.40 (or, for transactions where neither of those disclosures are provided, the disclosures required by (12 CFR 1026.32(c)). Additionally, counseling cannot be provided by a counselor who is employed by, or affiliated with, the creditor. A creditor may pay the fees for counseling but is prohibited from conditioning the payment of fees upon the consummation of the mortgage transaction or, if the consumer withdraws his or her application, upon receipt of the certification. However, a creditor may confirm that a counselor provided counseling to the consumer prior to paying these fees. Finally, a creditor is prohibited from steering a consumer to a particular counselor.

Recommended Default – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(6)

Creditors (and mortgage brokers) are prohibited from recommending or encouraging a consumer to default on an existing loan or other debt prior to, and in connection with, the consummation or account opening of a high-cost mortgage that refinances all or any portion of the existing loan or debt.

Loan Modification and Deferral Fees – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(7)

Creditors, successors in interest, assignees, or any agents of these parties may not charge a consumer any fee to modify, renew, extend, or amend a high-cost mortgage, or to defer any payment due under the terms of the mortgage.

Late Fees – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)

Late payment charges for a high-cost mortgage must be permitted by the terms of the loan contract or open-end agreement and may not exceed 4 percent of the amount of the payment that is past due. Late payment charges are permitted only if payment is not received by the end of the 15-day period beginning on the day the payment is due or, where interest on each installment is paid in advance, by the end of the 30-day period beginning on the day the payment is due.

Creditors are also prohibited from “pyramiding” late fees—that is, charging late payments if any delinquency is attributable only to a late payment charge that was imposed due to a previous late payment, and the payment otherwise is considered a full payment for the applicable period (and any allowable grace period). If a consumer fails to make a timely payment by the due date then subsequently resumes making payments but has not paid all past due payments, the creditor can continue to impose late payment charges for the payments outstanding until the default is cured.

Fees for Payoff Statements – 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)

A creditor or servicer may not charge a fee for providing consumers (or authorized representatives) with a payoff statement on a high-cost mortgage. Payoff statements must be provided to consumers within five business days after receiving the request for a statement. A creditor or servicer may charge a processing fee to cover the cost of providing the payoff statement by fax or courier only, provided that such fee may not exceed an amount that is comparable to fees imposed for similar services provided in connection with a non-high-cost mortgage and that a payoff statement be made available to the consumer by an alternative method without charge. If a creditor charges a fee for providing a payoff statement by fax or courier, the creditor must disclose the fee prior to charging the consumer and must disclose to the consumer that other methods for providing the payoff statement are available at no cost. Finally, a creditor is permitted to charge a consumer a reasonable fee for additional payoff statements during a calendar year in which four payoff statements have already been provided without charge other than permitted processing fees.

Reverse Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.33

A reverse mortgage is a non-recourse transaction secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling that ties repayment (other than upon default) to the homeowner’s death or permanent move from, or transfer of the title of, the home. Special disclosure requirements apply to reverse mortgages.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1026.35(a)

A mortgage loan subject to 12 CFR 1026.35 (higher-priced mortgage loan) is a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling with an APR that exceeds the average prime offer rate for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by:

- 1.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a first lien on a dwelling where the amount of the principal obligation at the time of consummation does not exceed the maximum principal obligation eligible for purchase by Freddie Mac;
- 2.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a first lien on a dwelling, where the amount of the principal obligation at the time of consummation exceeds the maximum principal obligation eligible for purchase by Freddie Mac; or
- 3.5 or more percentage points for loans secured by a subordinate lien on a dwelling.

Average prime offer rate means an APR that is derived from average interest rates, points, and other loan pricing terms currently offered to consumers by a representative sample of creditors for mortgage transactions that have low-risk pricing characteristics. The CFPB publishes average prime offer rates for a broad range of types of transactions in a table updated at least weekly, as well as the methodology it uses to derive these rates. These rates are available on the website of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC).
<http://www.ffiec.gov/ratespread/newcalchelp.aspx>.

Additionally, creditors extending mortgage loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.43(c) must verify a consumer’s ability to repay as required by (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Finally, the regulation prohibits creditors from structuring a home-secured loan that does not meet the definition of open-end credit as an open-end plan to evade these requirements.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans Escrow Requirement – 12 CFR 1026.35(b)

In general, a creditor may not extend a higher-priced mortgage loan (including high-cost mortgages that also meet the definition of a higher-priced mortgage loan), secured by a first lien on a principal dwelling unless an escrow account is established before consummation for payment of property taxes and premiums for mortgage-related insurance required by the creditor.

An escrow account for a higher-priced mortgage loan need not be established for:

- A transaction secured by shares in a cooperative,
- A transaction to finance the initial construction of a dwelling,
- A temporary or “bridge” loan with a term of 12 months or less, or
- A reverse mortgage subject to (12 CFR 1026.33).

There is also a limited exemption that allows creditors to establish escrow accounts for property taxes only (rather than for both property taxes and insurance) for loans secured by dwellings in a “common interest community” under 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii), where dwelling ownership requires participation in a governing association that is obligated to maintain a master insurance policy insuring all dwellings (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii)).

An exemption to the higher-priced mortgage loan escrow requirement is available for first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans made by certain creditors that operate in a “rural” or “underserved” area (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii) and its associated commentary). To make use of this exemption, a creditor:

1. Must have made, during the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), a covered transaction secured by a first lien on a property that is located in an area that meets the definition of either “rural” or “underserved” as set forth in (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv));³³
2. Together with its affiliates, must not have extended more than 2,000 covered transactions (secured by first liens, that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person) in the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years),

3. Together, with its affiliates that regularly extended³⁴ covered transactions (secured by first liens), must have had less than $2.640 billion in total assets³⁵ as of the preceding December 31st (or if an application was received before April 1 of the current year, as of either of the two preceding December 31^{sts}), and
4. The creditor and its affiliates must not maintain escrow accounts for any extensions of consumer credit secured by real property or a dwelling that the creditor or its affiliate currently services. However, such creditors (and their affiliates) are permitted to maintain escrow accounts established to comply with the rule for applications received on or after April 1, 2010, and before May 1, 2016 without losing the exemption and to offer an escrow account to accommodate distressed borrowers.

For first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans originated by a creditor that would not be required to establish an escrow account based on the above exemption, if that creditor has obtained a commitment for a higher-priced mortgage loan to be acquired by another company that is not eligible for the exemption, an escrow account must be established. Since an escrow account will be established for this loan, however, note that if the creditor that has obtained a commitment for the higher-priced mortgage loan to be acquired by a non-exempt company would like to remain eligible for the exemption above, neither the creditor nor its affiliates can service the loan on or beyond the second periodic payment under the terms of the loan.

³³ The regulation defines these two terms in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A) and (B). A rural area is a county that is neither in a metropolitan statistical area or a micropolitan statistical area that is adjacent to a metropolitan statistical area; or a census block that is not in an urban area, as defined by the U.S. Census Bureau using the latest decennial census of the United States; or a county or a census block that has been designated as “rural” by the CFPB pursuant to the application process established in 2016. See Application Process for Designation of Rural Area under Federal Consumer Financial Law; Procedural Rule, 81 FR 11099 (March 3, 2016). The provisions related to the application process ceased to have any force or effect on December 4, 2017 (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A)(3)). An underserved area is a county defined by using Home Mortgage Disclosure Act data for the preceding year to determine whether it is a county in which no more than two creditors extended covered transactions secured by first liens on properties in the county five or more times. A property is in a rural or underserved area for a particular year if it is listed as a rural or underserved county by the CFPB, is identified as in a rural or underserved area by any automated tool on the Bureau’s website or is not designated as located in an urban area in the most recent delineation of urban areas announced by the Census Bureau by any automated address search tool that the Census Bureau provides on its public website for that purpose.

³⁴ See Comment 35(b)(2)(iii)-1.iii for discussion of “regularly extended” as it applies to affiliates in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(C).

³⁵ The asset threshold is adjusted automatically each year, based on the year-to-year change in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers.

An additional exemption to the higher-priced mortgage loan escrow requirement is available for higher-priced mortgage loans made by insured depository institutions and secured by a first-lien on the principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(vi))³⁶. To make use of this exemption, the following criteria must be met:

1. The insured depository institution must have had less than $11.835 billion in total assets³⁷ as of the preceding December 31st (or if an application was received before April 1 of the current year, as of either of the two preceding December 31^{sts}),
2. The institution and its affiliates must not have extended more than 1,000 covered transactions secured by a first-lien on a principal dwelling in the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), and
3. The transaction satisfies the criteria in (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A) and (D)).³⁸

A creditor or servicer may cancel an escrow account only upon the earlier of termination of the underlying loan, or a cancellation request from the consumer five years or later after consummation. However, a creditor or servicer is not permitted to cancel an escrow account, even upon request from the consumer, unless the unpaid principal balance of the higher-priced mortgage loan is less than 80 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan and the consumer is not currently delinquent or in default on the loan (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)).

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans Appraisal Requirement – 12 CFR 1026.35(c)³⁹

General Requirements, Exception, and Safe Harbor

A creditor may not extend a higher-priced mortgage loan without first obtaining a written appraisal of the property to be mortgaged. The appraisal must be performed by a state-certified or licensed appraiser (defined in part as an appraiser who conducts the appraisal in conformity with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice (USPAP) and the requirements applicable to appraisers in Title IX of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA) and its implementing regulations). The appraisal must include a physical visit of the interior of the dwelling. The appraisal requirements do not apply to:

- Qualified mortgages (QM) under 12 CFR 1026.43 or under rules on qualified mortgages adopted by HUD, VA, or USDA, including mortgages that meet the QM criteria for these rules and are insured, guaranteed, or administered by those agencies;
- An extension of credit equal to or less than the applicable threshold amount that is published in the official staff commentary to the regulation, which is adjusted every year as applicable to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers;⁴⁰
- A transaction secured by a mobile home, boat, or trailer;
- A transaction to finance the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A loan with maturity of 12 months or less, if the purpose of the loan is a “bridge” loan connected with the acquisition of a dwelling intended to become the consumer’s principal dwelling;
- A reverse mortgage transaction subject to (12 CFR 1026.33(a)).
- A refinancing secured by a first lien, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.20(a) (except that the creditor need not be the original creditor or a holder or servicer of the original obligation), provided that the refinancing meets the following criteria:
 - The credit risk of the refinancing is retained by the person who held the credit risk of the existing obligation and there is no commitment, at consummation, to transfer the credit risk to another person; or, the refinancing is insured or guaranteed by ³⁶ See Higher-Priced Mortgage Loan Escrow Exemption (Regulation Z), 86 FR 9840 (February 17, 2021).

³⁹ The higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal requirement was adopted pursuant to an interagency rulemaking conducted by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board), the CFPB, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the FHFA, the NCUA, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC). The Board codified the rule at 12 CFR 226.43, and the OCC codified the rule at 12 CFR Part 34. There is no substantive difference among these three sets of rules.

⁴⁰ From January 1, 2015, through December 31, 2015, the threshold amount was $25,500. See Comment 35(c)(2)(ii) – 3. Effective January 1, 2024, to December 31, 2024, the threshold is $32,400.

the same Federal government agency that insured or guaranteed the existing obligation;

- The regular periodic payments under the refinance loan do not:
 - Cause the principal balance to increase;
 - Allow the consumer to defer repayment of principal; or
 - Result in a balloon payment, as defined in (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(5)(i)).
- The proceeds from the refinancing are used solely to satisfy the existing obligation and amounts attributed solely to the costs of the refinancing.
- A transaction secured by a manufactured home under the following conditions:⁴¹
 - If the transaction is for a new manufactured home and land, the exemption shall only apply to the requirement that the appraiser conduct a physical visit of the interior of the new manufactured home.
 - If the transaction is for a manufactured home and not land, for which the creditor obtains one of the following and provides a copy to the consumer no later than three business days prior to consummation of the transaction:
 - For a new manufactured home, the manufacturer's invoice for the manufactured home securing the transaction, provided that the date of manufacture is no earlier than 18 months prior to the creditor's receipt of the consumer's application for credit;
 - A cost estimate of the value of the manufactured home securing the transaction obtained from an independent cost service provider; or
 - A valuation, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(b)(3), of the manufactured home performed by a person who has no direct or indirect interest, financial or otherwise, in the property or transaction for which the valuation is performed and has training in valuing manufactured homes.
 - Transactions secured by an existing (used) manufactured home and land are not exempt from the appraisal requirement.

A creditor may obtain a safe harbor for compliance with 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(i) by ordering that the appraisal be completed in conformity with USPAP and the requirements applicable to appraisers in Title IX of FIRREA and its implementing regulations, verifying that the appraiser is certified or licensed through the National Registry; and confirming that the written appraisal contains the elements listed in Appendix N of Regulation Z. In addition, the creditor must have no actual knowledge that the facts or certifications contained in the appraisal are inaccurate (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)).

Additional Appraisals

The appraisal provisions in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) also require creditors to obtain an additional written appraisal before extending a higher-priced mortgage loan in two instances:

- First, when the dwelling that is securing the higher-priced mortgage loan was acquired by the seller 90 or fewer days prior to the consumer's agreement to purchase the property and the price of the property has increased by more than 10 percent.
- Additionally, when the dwelling was acquired by the seller between 91 and 180 days prior to the consumer's agreement to purchase the property, and the price of the property has increased by more than 20 percent.

A creditor must obtain an additional interior appraisal meeting the same requirements as the first appraisal (written report by a certified or licensed appraiser in compliance with USPAP and FIRREA based upon an interior property visit), unless the creditor can demonstrate, by exercising reasonable diligence, that the circumstances necessitating an additional appraisal do not apply. A creditor can meet the reasonable diligence requirement if it bases its determination on information contained in certain written source documents (such as a copy of the seller's recorded deed or a copy of a property tax bill) (See Appendix O of Regulation Z). If, after exercising reasonable diligence, the creditor is unable to determine whether the circumstances necessitating an additional appraisal apply, the creditor must obtain an additional appraisal.

If the creditor is required to obtain an additional written appraisal, the two required appraisals must be conducted by different appraisers. Each appraisal obtained must include a physical visit of the interior of the dwelling. In instances where two appraisals are required, creditors are allowed to charge for only one of the two appraisals.

One of the two required written appraisals must contain an analysis of the difference between the price at which the seller obtained the property and the price the consumer agreed to pay to acquire the property, an analysis of changes in market conditions between when the seller acquired the property and when the consumer agreed to purchase the property, and a review of improvements made to the property between the two ⁴¹ Prior to July 18, 2015, appraisal requirements do not apply to transactions secured in whole or in part by a manufactured home (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2)).

This section describes how the exemption will work under an amendment to the rule that takes effect on July 18, 2015.

The higher-priced mortgage loan additional appraisal requirements do not apply to the extension of credit that finances the acquisition of a property:

- From a local, state, or federal government agency;
- From a person who acquired title to the property through foreclosure, deed-in-lieu of foreclosure, or other similar judicial or non-judicial procedures as a result of the person's exercise of rights as the holder of a defaulted mortgage;
- From a nonprofit entity as part of a local, state, or federal government program permitted to acquire single-family properties for resale from a person who acquired title through foreclosure, deed-in-lieu of foreclosure, or other similar judicial or non-judicial procedures;
- From a person who acquired title to the property by inheritance or by court order as a result of a dissolution of marriage, civil union, or domestic partnership, or of partition of joint or marital assets;
- From an employer or relocation agency in connection with the relocation of an employee;
- From a servicemember who received a deployment or permanent change-of-station order after the servicemember purchased the property;
- Located in a federal disaster area if the requirements of Title XI of FIRREA have been waived by the federal financial institutions regulatory agencies for as long as that waiver would apply; or
- Located in a rural county as defined by the CFPB in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv)(A).

Application Disclosures and Copy of Appraisal

Finally, creditors must provide consumers who apply for a loan covered by the appraisal requirements in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) with a disclosure providing information relating to appraisals. A creditor must provide consumers with disclosures no later than the third business day after the creditor receives an application for a higher-priced mortgage loan, or no later than the third business day after the loan requested becomes a higher-priced mortgage loan. Additionally, a creditor must provide, at no cost to the consumer, a copy of each written appraisal performed in connection with a loan covered by the appraisal requirements in 12 CFR 1026.35(c) no later than three business days prior to consummation or, if the loan will not be consummated, no later than 30 days after the creditor determines that the loan will not be consummated.⁴²

Prohibited Acts or Practices in Connection with Credit Secured by a Consumer's Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.36

Loan Originator – 12 CFR 1026.36(a)

The term “loan originator” means a person who, in expectation of direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain or for direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain, performs any of the following activities:

- Takes an application, offers, arranges, assists a consumer in obtaining or applying to obtain, negotiates, or otherwise obtains or makes an extension of consumer credit for another person; or
- Through advertising or other means of communication represents to the public that such person can or will perform any of these activities.

The term “loan originator” includes an employee, agent, or contractor of the creditor or loan originator organization if the employee, agent, or contractor meets this definition. The term “loan originator” also includes a creditor that engages in loan origination activities if the creditor does not finance the transaction at consummation out of the creditor's own resources, including by drawing on a bona fide warehouse line of credit or out of deposits held by the creditor.

The term “loan originator” does not include:

- A person who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who takes applications or offers or negotiates credit terms;
- A retailer of manufactured or modular homes or an employee of such a retailer who does not receive compensation or gain for engaging in loan originator activities in excess of any compensation or gain received in a comparable cash transaction, and who does not directly negotiate with the consumer or lender on loan terms (including rates, fees, and other costs), if such retailer or employee discloses to the consumer in writing any corporate affiliation with any creditor. Where the retailer has a corporate affiliation with any creditor, at least one unaffiliated creditor must also be disclosed (15 U.S.C. 1602(dd)(2)(C)(ii));

- A person who performs only real estate brokerage activity and is licensed or registered in accordance with applicable state law, unless that person is compensated by a creditor or loan originator for a consumer credit transaction subject to (12 CFR 1026.36);
- A seller financier that meets the criteria established in (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(4) or (a)(5)); or
- A servicer, or a servicer's employees, agents, and contractors who offer or negotiate the terms of a mortgage for the purpose of renegotiating, modifying, replacing, or subordinating principal of an existing mortgage where consumers are behind in their payments, in default, or have a reasonable likelihood of becoming delinquent or defaulting. This exception does not, however, apply to such persons if they refinance a mortgage or assign a mortgage to a different consumer.

An "individual loan originator" is a natural person who meets the definition of "loan originator." Finally, a "loan originator organization" is any loan originator that is not an individual loan originator. A loan originator organization would include banks, thrifts, finance companies, credit unions and mortgage brokers.

Prohibited Loan Originator Compensation: Payments Based on a Term of a Transaction – 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)

With limited exceptions, loan originators cannot receive (and no person can pay directly or indirectly), compensation in connection with closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling based on a term of a transaction, the terms of multiple transactions, or the terms of multiple transactions by multiple individual loan originators. The loan originator compensation provisions do not apply to open-end home-equity lines of credit or to credit secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D).

A "term of a transaction" is any right or obligation of the parties to a credit transaction. The amount of credit extended is not a term of a transaction, provided that such compensation is based on a fixed percentage of the amount of credit extended (but may be subject to a minimum or maximum dollar amount).

NOTE: A review of whether compensation, which includes salaries, commissions, and any financial or similar incentive, is based on the terms of a transaction requires an objective analysis. If compensation would have been different if a transaction term had been different, then the compensation is prohibited. The regulation does not prevent compensating loan originators differently on different transactions, provided the difference is not based on a term of a transaction or on a proxy for a term of a transaction (a factor that consistently varies with a term or terms of the transaction over a significant number of transactions and which the loan originator has the ability to manipulate).

- An individual loan originator may receive (and a person may pay):
- Compensation in the form of a contribution to a defined contribution plan that is a designated tax-advantage plan unless the contribution is tied to the terms of the individual's transaction(s) (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iii));
- Compensation in the form of a benefit under a defined benefit plan that is a designated tax-advantaged plan (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iii));
- Compensation under a non-deferred profits-based compensation plan provided that:
 - The compensation paid to an individual loan originator is not directly or indirectly based on the terms of the individual's transaction(s); and
 - Either:
 - The compensation paid to the individual loan originator does not exceed 10 percent (in aggregate) of the individual loan originator's total compensation corresponding to the time period for which the compensation under the non-deferred profits-based compensation plan is paid; or
 - The individual loan originator was the loan originator of 10 or fewer transactions during the 12 months preceding the date that the compensation was determined (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iv)).

For more information pertaining to permissible compensation, see the commentary to (12 CFR 1026.36(d)).⁴³

Prohibited Loan Originator Compensation: Dual Compensation – 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)

Loan originators that receive compensation directly from consumers in consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling (except for open-end home-equity lines of credit or to loans secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan) may not receive additional compensation directly or indirectly from any other person in connection with that transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)(A)(1)). This prohibition includes compensation received from a third party to the transaction to pay for some or all of the consumer's costs (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)(B)). Further, a person is prohibited from compensating a loan originator when that person "knows or has reason to know" that the consumer has paid compensation to the loan originator (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(2)).

However, even if a loan originator organization receives compensation directly from a consumer, the organization can compensate the individual loan originator, subject to 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1) (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(C)).

Prohibition on Steering – 12 CFR 1026.36(e)

Loan originators are prohibited from directing or "steering" consumers to loans based on the fact that the originator will receive greater compensation for the loan from the creditor than in other transactions that the originator offered or could have offered to the consumer, unless the consummated transaction is in the consumer's interest. A loan originator complies with the prohibition on steering (but not the loan originator compensation provisions) by obtaining loan options from a significant number of the creditors with which the loan originator regularly does business and, for each loan type in which the consumer has expressed interest, presenting the consumer with loan options for which the loan originator believes in good faith the consumer likely qualifies, provided that the presented loan options include all of the following:

- The loan with the lowest interest rate;
- The loan with the lowest interest rate without certain enumerated risky features (such as prepayment penalties, negative amortization, or a balloon payment in the first seven years); and
- The loan with the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees (or, if two or more loans have the same total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees, the loan with the lowest interest rate that has the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees).

The anti-steering provisions do not apply to open-end home-equity lines of credit or to loans secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan.

Loan Originator Qualification Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.36(f)

Individual loan originators and loan originator organizations must, when required under state or federal law, be registered and licensed under those laws, including the Safe and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Action of 2008 (SAFE Act).⁴⁴ Loan originator organizations other than government agencies or state housing finance agencies must:

- Comply with all applicable state law requirements for legal existence and foreign qualification; (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(1)); and
- Ensure that each individual loan originator who works for the loan originator organization (e.g., an employee, under a brokerage agreement) is licensed or registered to the extent that the individual is required to be licensed or registered under the SAFE Act or excluded from those requirements because the individual is authorized to act with temporary authority pursuant to 12 U.S.C. 5117 prior to acting as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(2)).

The requirements are different for loan originator organizations whose employees are not required to be licensed and are not licensed pursuant to 12 CFR 1008.103 or state SAFE Act implementing laws (including employees of depository institutions and bona fide nonprofits). For their employees hired on or after January 1, 2014 (or hired before this date but not subject to any statutory or regulatory background standards at the time, or for any individual loan originators regardless of when hired that the organization believes, based on reliable information do not meet the qualification standards), loan originator employers must obtain before the individual acts as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling:

- A criminal background check through the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLSR) or, in the case of an individual loan originator who is not a registered loan originator under NMLSR, a criminal background check from a law enforcement agency or commercial service (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(A));
- A credit report from a consumer reporting agency (as defined in section 603(p) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act) secured, where applicable, in compliance with section 604(b) of FCRA (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(B)); and
- Information from the NMLSR about any administrative, civil, or criminal findings by any government jurisdiction or, in the case of an individual loan originator who is not a registered loan originator under the NMLSR, such information from the individual loan originator (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(C)).

Based on the information obtained above and any other information reasonably available, the loan originator employer must determine for such an employee prior to allowing the individual to act as a loan originator in a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling:

- That the individual has not been convicted of, or pleaded guilty or nolo contendere to, a felony in a domestic or military court during the preceding seven-year period or, in the case of a felony involving an act of fraud, dishonesty, a breach of trust, or money laundering, at any time (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(1)); and

*NOTE: Whether the conviction of a crime is considered a felony is determined by whether the conviction was classified as a felony under the law of the jurisdiction under which the individual is convicted. Additionally, a loan originator organization may employ an individual with a felony conviction (or a plea of nolo contendere) as a loan originator if that individual has received consent from the FDIC, (or the Board, as applicable) the NCUA, or the Farm Credit Administration (FCA) under their own applicable statutory authority (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(iii)).*

- Has demonstrated financial responsibility, character, and general fitness such as to warrant a determination that the individual loan originator will operate honestly, fairly, and efficiently.

The loan originator organization must also provide periodic training to each such employee that covers federal and state legal requirements that apply to the individual loan originator's loan origination activities.

The SAFE Act provides certain loan originators with temporary authority to act as loan originators while applying for a state-loan originator license (12 U.S.C. 5117). If an individual loan originator may act as a loan originator with temporary authority under 12 U.S.C. 5117, the loan originator organization is not required to comply with the screening and training requirements described in (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)).⁴⁵

Name and NMLSR ID on Loan Documentation – 12 CFR 1026.36(g)

12 CFR 1026.36(g) applies to closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling except a loan that is secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan described in (11 U.S.C. 101(53D)). For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(g), a loan originator includes all creditors that engage in loan origination activities, not just those who table fund.

For consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling, loan originator organizations must include certain identifying information on loan documentation provided to consumers. The loan documents must include the loan originator organization's name, NMLSR ID (if applicable), and the name of the individual loan originator that is primarily responsible for the origination as it appears in the NMLSR, as well as the individual's NMLSR ID. This information is required on credit applications, the Loan Estimate, the Closing Disclosure, the note or loan contract, and the documents securing an interest in the property.

Policies and Procedures to Ensure and Monitor Compliance – 12 CFR 1026.36(j)

Depository institutions (including credit unions) must establish and maintain written policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure and monitor compliance of the depository institution, its employees, and its subsidiaries and their employees with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.36(d) (prohibited payments to loan originators), 1026.36(e) (prohibition on steering), 1026.36(f) (loan originator qualifications), and 1026.36(g) (name and NMLSR ID on loan documents). The written policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository and its subsidiaries (12 CFR 1026.36(j)).

Prohibition on Mandatory Arbitration or Waivers of Certain Consumer Rights – 12 CFR 1026.36(h)

A contract or other agreement for a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer's principal dwelling) may not include terms that require mandatory arbitration or any other non-judicial procedure to resolve any controversy arising out of the transaction. Also, a contract or other agreement relating to such a consumer credit transaction may not be applied or interpreted to bar a consumer from bringing a claim in court under any provision of law for damages or other relief in connection with an alleged violation of any federal law. However, a creditor and a consumer could agree, after a dispute or claim under the transaction arises, to settle or use arbitration or other non-judicial procedure to resolve that dispute or claim.

Prohibition on Financing Credit Insurance – 12 CFR 1026.36(i)

Creditors are prohibited from "financing" (i.e., providing a consumer the right to defer payment beyond the monthly period in which the premium or fee is due), either directly or indirectly, premiums or fees for credit insurance in connection with a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer's principal dwelling). This prohibition includes financing fees for credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, credit property insurance, or any other accident, loss-of-income, life, or health insurance or payment for debt cancellation or suspension. This prohibition does not apply to credit unemployment insurance where the premiums are reasonable, the creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the premiums, and the premiums are paid under a separate insurance contract and not to an affiliate of the creditor. This prohibition also does not apply to credit insurance where premiums or fees are "calculated" and paid in full "on a monthly basis" (i.e., determined mathematically by multiplying a rate by the actual monthly outstanding balance).

(November 19, 2019).

⁴⁵ Truth in Lending (Regulation Z); Screening and Training Requirements for Mortgage Loan Originators with Temporary Authority, 84 Fed. Reg. 63791

Negative Amortization Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.36(k)

A creditor may not extend a negative amortizing mortgage loan to a first-time borrower in connection with a closed-end transaction secured by a dwelling, other than a reverse mortgage or a transaction secured by a timeshare, unless the creditor receives documentation that the consumer has obtained homeownership counseling from a HUD-certified or approved counselor. Additionally, a creditor extending a negative amortizing mortgage loan to a first-time borrower may not steer, direct, or require the consumer to use a particular counselor.

Loan Servicing Practices

Servicers of mortgage loans are prohibited from engaging in certain practices, such as pyramiding late fees. In addition, servicers are required to credit consumers' loan payments as of the date of receipt and provide a payoff statement within a reasonable time, not to exceed seven business days of a written request.

Payment Processing – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)

For a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, a loan servicer:

- Cannot fail to credit a periodic payment to the consumer's loan account as of the date of receipt, except in instances where the delay will not result in a charge to the consumer or in the reporting of negative information to a consumer reporting agency.

NOTE: For the purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(c) a periodic payment is "an amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow for any given billing cycle." If the consumer owes late fees, other fees, or non-escrow payments but makes a full periodic payment, the servicer must credit the periodic payment as of the date of receipt.

- Cannot retain a partial payment (any amount less than a periodic payment) in a suspense or unapplied payment account without disclosing to the consumer in the periodic statement (if required) the total amount(s) held in the suspense account and applying the payment to the balance upon accumulation of sufficient funds to equal a periodic payment.

If a servicer has provided written requirements for accepting payments in writing but then accepts payments that do not conform to the written requirements, the servicer must credit the payment as of five days after receipt.

If a loan contract has not been permanently modified but the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, a periodic payment under 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(i) is the amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable) for a given billing cycle under the loan contract, regardless of the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program (Comment .36(c)(1)(i)-4). If a loan contract has been permanently modified, a periodic payment under 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(i) is an amount sufficient to cover principal, interest, and escrow (if applicable) for a given billing cycle under the modified loan contract (Comment .36(c)(1)(i)-5).

Pyramiding of Late Fees – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(2)

In connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, a servicer may not impose on the consumer any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency is attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a periodic payment for the applicable period and is received on its due date or within any applicable courtesy period.

Providing Payoff Statements – 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3)

For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's dwelling, including home equity lines of credit under 12 CFR 1026.40(a), a creditor, assignee, or servicer may not fail to provide, within a reasonable time but no more than seven business days, after receiving a written request from the consumer or person acting on behalf of the consumer, an accurate statement of the total outstanding balance that would be required to pay the consumer's obligation in full as of a specific date.

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3), when a creditor, assignee, or servicer is not able to provide the statement within seven business days because a loan is in bankruptcy or foreclosure, because the loan is a reverse mortgage or shared appreciation mortgage, or because of natural disasters or similar circumstances, the payoff statement must be provided within a reasonable time.

TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.37 and 12 CFR 1026.38

For most closed-end consumer mortgages, creditors must provide two disclosures, the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure, to consumers for mortgage applications received on or after October 3, 2015. The Loan Estimate is a three-page form that provides disclosures to help consumers understand the key features, costs, and risks of the mortgage loan for which they are applying. This form must be delivered or placed in the mail no later than three business days after the creditor receives a consumer's mortgage loan application. The Closing Disclosure is a five-page form that helps consumers understand all of the costs of the transaction. This form generally must be received by the consumer at least three business days before consummation. Both forms use similar language and design to make it easier for consumers to locate key information, such as the interest rate, monthly payments, and costs to close the loan.

The Loan Estimate form replaces the Good Faith Estimate designed by HUD under RESPA, and the "early" Truth in Lending disclosure designed by the Board under TILA. The regulation and the Official Interpretations contain detailed instructions as to how each line on the Loan Estimate form should be completed. There are sample forms for different types of loan products. The Loan Estimate form also incorporates new disclosures required by Congress under the Dodd-Frank Act.

The Closing Disclosure form replaces the HUD-1 for loan closing, which was designed by HUD under RESPA. The Closing Disclosure form also replaces the revised Truth in Lending disclosure designed by the Board under TILA. The rule and the Official Interpretations contain detailed instructions as to how each line on the Closing Disclosure form should be completed. The Closing Disclosure form contains additional new disclosures required by the Dodd-Frank Act and a detailed accounting of the settlement transaction. Refer to CFPB's TILA-RESPA Guide to Forms for a detailed, step-by-step walk-through for completing the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure.

The rules on who provides the disclosures, timing, limits on when fees can be charged, early estimates, and limits on increases in charges are in 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), described in subpart A.

Loan Estimate – Content of Disclosures for Certain Mortgage Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.37

Loan Estimate form required (12 CFR 1026.37(o))

The Loan Estimate generally must provide consumers with a good faith estimate of credit costs and transaction terms and satisfy timing and delivery requirements set forth in the rule.

For any transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) that are federally related mortgage loans subject to RESPA (which will include most mortgages), creditors must use form H-24, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(i)). (See also 12 CFR 1024.2(b) for definition of federally related mortgage loan).

For other loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) that are not federally related mortgage loans, the disclosures must be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to form H-24 (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(ii)).

The disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.) (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(3)(iii)).

Information required on the Loan Estimate form. Most disclosures on the Loan Estimate form are required to be labeled using specific nomenclature, headings, and formatting. For example, the regulation requires that the form disclose the contract sale price, labeled "Sale Price" (or if there is no seller, the estimated value of the property, labeled "Prop. Value"). Further, in some instances, the regulation directs lines on the disclosure to be left blank where there is no charge (See, e.g., 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)(v)) or sets forth the maximum number of items that may be disclosed (See, e.g., 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3)(v)). See the regulation, Form H-24, and the Regulation Z procedures for specific obligations regarding each required disclosure.

Rounding. Dollar amounts must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar where noted in the regulation, including adjustments after consummation for loan amount, interest rate, and periodic payment; and details about prepayment penalties and balloon payments, minimum and maximum amounts for principal and interest payments and range of payments, maximum mortgage insurance premiums, escrows, taxes and insurance and assessments, closing costs (loan costs and other costs), cash to close, and adjustable payment and comparisons (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A)).

The amount for prepaid interest paid per day and the monthly amounts required to be disclosed for escrows of homeowner's insurance, mortgage insurance, or property taxes must not be rounded (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A)).

The loan amount (the total amount the consumer will borrow, as reflected by the face amount of the note) must not be rounded, and if the amount is a whole number, must be truncated at the decimal point (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(B)).

If an amount is required to be rounded but is composed of other amounts that are not required or permitted to be rounded, the unrounded amounts should be used to calculate the total, and the final sum should be rounded. Conversely, if an amount is required to be rounded and is composed of rounded amounts, the rounded amounts should be used to calculate the total (Comment 37(o)(4)-2).

Percentage amounts must be rounded where noted in the regulation to three decimal places, but trailing zeros to the right of the decimal place must be dropped (e.g., 2.49999 percent APR is disclosed as 2.5 percent, and 7.005 percent APR is disclosed as 7.005 percent). The items rounded include the interest rate, adjustments after consummation (to the loan amount, interest rate, or periodic payment), points itemized under origination charges, prepaid interest rate, adjustable interest rate, annual percentage rate, and total interest percentage or TIP (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(ii); Comment 37(o)(4)(ii)-1).

Page 1: General information, loan terms, projected payments, and costs at closing

Page 1 of the Loan Estimate discloses general information about the creditor, the applicant(s), and the loan. It also includes a Loan Terms table with descriptions of applicable information about the loan, a Projected Payments table, a summary Costs at Closing table, and a link for consumers to obtain more information about loans secured by real property or cooperative unit at a website maintained by the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.37(a)-(e)).

General information. Page 1 of the Loan Estimate requires the title “Loan Estimate” and the statement “Save this Loan Estimate to compare with your Closing Disclosure” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(1), (2)). The top of page 1 also requires the name and address of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(3)). A logo can be used for, and a slogan included along with, the creditor’s name and address, so long as the logo or slogan does not cause this information to exceed the space provided on Form H-24 for that information (12 CFR 1026.37(o)(5)(iii)). If there are multiple creditors, only the name of the creditor completing the Loan Estimate should be used (Comment 37(a)(3)-1). If a mortgage broker is completing the Loan Estimate, the mortgage broker should make a good faith effort to disclose the name and address of the creditor as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i). However, if the name of the creditor is not yet known, this space may be left blank (Comment 37(a)(3)-2).

Below the creditor information, the form requires the date that the creditor mails or delivers the disclosures to the consumer; the name and mailing address of the consumer(s) applying for the credit; the address, including the zip code, of the property that secures or will secure the transaction, or if the address is unavailable, the location of such property, including a zip code; and the contract sale price (or if there is no seller, the estimated value of the property) (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(4)-(6)).

On the top right side of the first page, the form requires the loan term to maturity (stated in years or months, or both, as applicable); and loan purpose (purchase, refinance, construction or home equity loan) (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8)-(9)). This section of the form also requires the product type (adjustable rate, step rate, or fixed rate) and, preceding the type, any features that may change the periodic payment, including negative amortization, interest only, step payment, balloon payment, or seasonal payment features, as applicable. If the product has an adjustable or step rate, or a feature that may change the periodic payment, the product disclosure must also be preceded by a disclosure of the duration of any introductory rate or payment period, and the first adjustment period, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)). This section of the form also requires the loan type (conventional, FHA, VA, or other), and loan ID number (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(11)-(12)). Further, there must be a statement of whether the interest rate is locked for a specific time, and if so, the date and time when that period ends. The form must also include a statement that the interest rate, any points, and any lender credits may change unless the interest rate has been locked, and the date and time (including the applicable time zone) at which estimated closing costs expire (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(13)).

Loan Terms table

The Loan Terms table follows the general information requirements on page 1 of the Loan Estimate. For the Loan Terms table, the creditor must disclose the loan amount (the total amount the consumer will borrow, as reflected by the face amount of the note), interest rate applicable to the transaction at consummation, and specified principal and interest payments. (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1)-(3)) For each such element, the disclosure must answer the question, either affirmatively or negatively, whether the amount can increase after consummation. If the amount can increase, the loan must disclose additional information (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)). The Loan Terms table must also include information about prepayment penalties and balloon payments.

Loan amount. The loan amount is disclosed in accordance with the face amount of the note. If the loan amount may increase after consummation, the disclosure must include the maximum principal balance for the transaction and the due date of the last payment that may cause the principal balance to increase. The disclosure must also indicate whether the maximum principal balance is potential or is scheduled to occur under the terms of the legal obligation (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(1); 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(i)).

Interest rate. If it is an adjustable rate transaction where the interest rate at consummation is not known, the disclosed rate is the fully indexed rate (which means the index value and margin at the time of consummation) (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2)). If the interest may increase after consummation, the creditor must disclose the frequency of interest rate adjustments, the date when the interest rate may first adjust, the maximum interest rate, and the first date when the interest rate can reach the maximum interest rate, followed by a reference to the adjustable rate table required by 12 CFR 1026.37(j) in the Closing Cost Details section of the Loan Estimate. If the loan term may increase based on an interest rate adjustment, that fact must be included, as well as the maximum possible loan term determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8) (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(ii)).

Principal and interest payment. The creditor must disclose the initial periodic payment that will be due under the terms of the legal obligation, immediately preceded by the applicable unit period, and a statement referring to the payment amount that includes any mortgage insurance and escrow payments that are required to be disclosed in the Projected Payments table (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(3)). If the monthly principal and interest payment can increase after closing, the creditor must also disclose: the scheduled frequency of adjustments to the periodic principal and interest payment; the due date of the first adjusted principal and interest payment; the maximum possible periodic principal and interest payment; and the date when the periodic principal and interest payment may first equal the maximum principal and interest payment (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(iii)). If any adjustments to the principal and interest payment are not the result of a change to the interest rate, the creditor must reference the adjustable payment table disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.37(i). If there is a period during which only interest is required to be paid, the disclosure must also state that fact and the due date of the last periodic payment of such period (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(iii)).

Prepayment penalties and balloon payments. The Loan Terms table must also state affirmatively or negatively whether the transaction includes a prepayment penalty (for these purposes, a charge imposed for paying all or part of a transaction's principal before the date on which the principal is due, other than a waived, bona fide third-party charge that the creditor imposes if the consumer prepays all of the transaction's principal sooner than 36 months after consummation) or a balloon payment (for these purposes, a payment that is more than two times a regular periodic payment) (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(4) and (5)).

Projected Payments table.

The Projected Payments table is located directly below the Loan Terms table on page 1 of the Loan Estimate. The Projected Payments table shows estimates of the periodic payments that the consumer will make over the life of the loan. Creditors must disclose estimates of the following periodic payment amounts in the Projected Payments table: periodic principal and interest (or range of periodic payments); mortgage insurance; estimated escrow; and estimated total monthly payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)). Creditors must also disclose estimated taxes, insurance, and assessments, even if not paid with escrow funds (and whether these items will be paid with funds from the consumer's escrow account) (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)).

Generally, the creditor will show in one column the initial periodic payment (or range of payments if required). Depending on the features of the loan, subsequent periodic payments also may be required to be disclosed. However, no more than four separate periodic payments or ranges of payments may be disclosed, beginning with the initial periodic payment. Events that require disclosure of separate periodic payments or ranges include: changes to the periodic principal and interest payment; a scheduled balloon payment; an automatic termination of mortgage insurance or its equivalent; and the anniversary of the due date of the initial periodic payment or range of payments that immediately follows the occurrence of multiple events that change the periodic principal and interest. The regulation addresses how to disclose these events when the event occurs after the third separate periodic payment or range of payments disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)).

Each separate payment or range of payments must be itemized according to the regulation, including the amount payable for principal and interest. The regulation provides instructions for itemizing payments that include an interest-only payment, payments on loans with an adjustable interest rate, and payments on a loan that has both an adjustable interest rate and a negative amortization feature. Additionally, the regulation requires that each separate periodic payment or range of payments itemizes the maximum amount payable for mortgage insurance premiums corresponding to the principal and interest payment and the amount payable into escrow (with a statement that the amount disclosed can increase over time and a calculation of the total monthly payment) (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)).

Below the estimated total monthly payment, the Projected Payments table discloses estimated taxes, insurance, and assessments. These are stated as a monthly amount and include a statement that the amount may increase over time. The creditor provides these estimates even if there will be no escrow account established for these costs. The table also requires a statement of whether the amount disclosed includes payments for property taxes or other amounts; a description of any such other amounts; and an indication of whether such amounts will be paid by the creditor using escrow account funds. The table also includes a statement that the consumer must separately pay the taxes, insurance, and assessments that are not paid by the creditor using escrow account funds; and a reference to the information disclosed under the subheading on the Loan Estimate titled "Initial Escrow Payment at Closing" (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)).

The creditor estimates property taxes and homeowner's insurance using the taxable assessed value of the real property or cooperative unit securing the transaction after consummation, including the value of any improvements on the property or to be constructed on the property, if known, whether or not such construction will be financed from the proceeds of the transaction, for property taxes; and the replacement costs of the property during the initial year after the transaction, for premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property identified in 12 CFR 1026.4(b)(8) (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)).

Costs at Closing table.

This table, located at the bottom of page 1, provides disclosures on estimated Closing Costs and estimated Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)). These disclosures offer the consumer a high-level summary of estimated closing costs and cash required to close (including closing costs) and reference the more detailed itemizations found on page 2 of the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(i)(E) and 1026.37(d)(1)(ii)(B)).

Items that are disclosed include an estimate of Total Closing Costs, as well as the key inputs making up this total: Loan Costs, Other Costs, and Lender Credits (and the fact that total closing costs include these amounts) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(i)). These disclosures also provide a high-level summary of the estimated amount of cash required to close, which is also itemized more specifically on page 2 of the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)(ii)). The regulation provides an optional alternative Cash to Close table for transactions that do not involve a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing. The creditor may alternatively disclose, using the label “Cash to Close,” the cash to or from the consumer (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv)), a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer, and a statement referring the consumer to the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(2)).

Page 2 of the Loan Estimate contains a good faith itemization of the “Loan Costs” and “Other Costs” associated with the loan (12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g)). Generally, Loan Costs are those costs paid by the consumer to the creditor and third-party providers of services that the creditor requires to be obtained by the consumer during the origination of the loan (12 CFR 1026.37(f)). Other Costs include taxes, governmental recording fees, and certain other payments involved in the real estate closing process (12 CFR 1026.37(g)). Page 2 also includes an itemized “Calculating Cash to Close” table to show the consumer how the amount of cash needed at closing is calculated (12 CFR 1026.37(h)). In addition, for transactions with adjustable monthly payments not based on changes to the interest rate, or if the transaction is a seasonal payment product (as described in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(E)), page 2 must include an Adjustable Payment (AP) table with relevant information about how the monthly payments will change (12 CFR 1026.37(i)). Further, for transactions with adjustable interest rates, page 2 must include an Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table with relevant information about how the interest rate will change (12 CFR 1026.37(j)).

If state law requires additional disclosures, those additional disclosures may be made on a document whose pages are separate from, and not presented as part of, the Loan Estimate (Comments 37(f)(6)-1 and 37(g)(8)-1).

Loan Costs table. This table includes all loan costs associated with the transaction, broken down into an itemization of three types of costs:

- Origination charges that the consumer will pay to each creditor and loan originator for originating and extending credit (including separate itemization for points paid to the creditor to reduce the interest rate as both a percentage of the amount of credit extended and dollar amount) (up to 13 line items); the following items should be itemized separately in the Origination Charges subheading:

- Compensation paid directly by a consumer to a loan originator that is not also the creditor (Comments 37(f)(1)-2 and -5); or
- Any charge imposed to pay for a loan level pricing adjustment assessed on the creditor that is passed on to the consumer as a cost at consummation and not as an adjustment to the interest rate (Comment 37(f)(1)-5).
- Services the consumer cannot shop for (items provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker that the consumer cannot shop for and will pay for at settlement, such as appraisal fees and credit report fees) (up to 13 line items); and
- Services the consumer can shop for (such as a pest inspection fee, survey fee, or closing agent fee) (up to 14 line items) (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(2) and (3)).

Regarding origination fees, only charges paid directly by the consumer to compensate a loan originator are included in the itemization. Compensation of a loan originator paid indirectly by the creditor through the interest rate is not itemized (but is itemized on the Closing Disclosure; see below) (Comment 37(f)(1)-2).

NOTE: Items that are a component of title insurance must include the introductory description of “Title -” (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(2)(i) and (g)(4)(i)).

NOTE: The disclosure of “lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), is required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i). “Lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), represents the sum of non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits. Non-specific lender credits are generalized payments from the creditor to the consumer that do not pay for a particular fee on the disclosures provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1). Specific lender credits are specific payments, such as a credit, rebate, or reimbursement, from a creditor to the consumer to pay for a specific fee. Non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits are negative charges to the consumer (Comment 19(e)(3)(i) -5).

The sum of these amounts must be disclosed as Total Loan Costs. The regulation includes a required order and terminology for each item (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1)-(5)). If the creditor does not have enough lines for each subheading, it must disclose the remaining items as an aggregate number (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(6)(i)). An addendum is not permitted for origination charges or charges the consumer cannot shop for that exceed the maximum number of lines but is permitted for services the consumer can shop for, provided the creditor appropriately references the addendum (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(6)(ii)).

Other Costs table. The Other Costs table captures costs established by government action, determined by standard calculations applied to ongoing fixed costs, or based on an obligation incurred by the consumer independently of any requirement imposed by the creditor (Comment 37(g)-1). The table includes:

- Taxes and other governmental fees (recording fees and other taxes, and transfer taxes paid by the consumer, separately itemized);
- Prepays (amounts paid by the consumer before the first scheduled payment, such as homeowner’s insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, prepaid interest, and property taxes, plus up to 3 additional line items);
- Initial escrow payment at closing (items that the consumer will be expected to place into a reserve or escrow account at consummation to be applied to recurring periodic charges; these include homeowner’s insurance, mortgage insurance, and property taxes, plus up to 5 additional line items); and
- Other amounts the consumer is likely to pay (such as real estate agent commissions, up to five line items) (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1)-(4), Comment 37(g)(4)-4).

NOTE: Items that disclose any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products not required by the creditor must include the parenthetical description (optional) at the end of the label (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4)(ii)).

As with Loan Costs, the regulation includes a required order, terminology, and specific information regarding each Other Costs line item, such as the applicable time period covered by the amount paid at consummation and the total amount to be paid. Items that disclose any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products not required by the creditor must include the parenthetical description (optional) at the end of the label (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4)(ii)). An addendum is not permitted; if the creditor does not have enough lines for each subheading, it must disclose the remaining items as an aggregate number (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(8)). The sum of these amounts must be disclosed as a line item as Total Other Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(5)). Below this total, the sum of Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs, less any lender credits (separately itemized), must be disclosed as a line item as Total Closing Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)).

Calculating Cash to Close table. The Calculating Cash to Close table shows the consumer how the amount of cash needed at closing is calculated (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)). The creditor must itemize the total amount of cash or other funds that the consumer must provide at consummation. The itemization includes:

- Total closing costs. The amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6), labeled “Total Closing Costs” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i));

- Closing costs to be financed. The amount of any closing costs to be paid out of loan proceeds, disclosed as a negative number, labeled “Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount)” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii));
- Note: The formula for calculating the amount of closing costs financed can be found in (Comment 37(h)(1)(ii)(1)).*
- Down payment and other funds from the borrower, labeled “Down Payment/Funds from Borrower.” The formula for determining this disclosure depends on the type of purchase transaction (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)). (For a non-purchase transaction, use the Funds from Borrower formula in 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) as provided for in (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(B)).
 - Deposit, labeled “Deposit.” In a purchase transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(i), the amount that is paid to the seller or held in trust or escrow by an attorney or other party under the terms of the agreement for the sale of the property, disclosed as a negative number; in all other transactions, the amount of zero dollars (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iv));
 - Funds for the borrower, labeled “Funds for Borrower.” The formula for calculating the disclosure is set forth in (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v));
 - Seller credits, labeled “Seller Credits.” The amount the seller will pay for total loan costs and total other costs, to the extent known, disclosed as a negative number (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vi)).
 - Adjustments and other credits, labeled “Adjustments and Other Credits.” Determined in accordance with (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(vii)); and
 - Estimated Cash to Close, labeled “Cash to Close.” The sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i) to (vii) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(viii)).

For transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing transactions, the creditor can use the optional alternative table and provide, under the heading Closing Cost Details, the total amount of cash or other funds that must be provided by the consumer at consummation with an itemization of the following component amounts (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)):

- Loan amount. The amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1), labeled “Loan Amount” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i));
- Total closing costs. The amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6), disclosed as a negative number if the amount is a positive number and disclosed as a positive number if the amount is a negative number, and labeled “Total Closing Costs” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(ii));

- Payoffs and payments. The total amount of payoffs and payments to third parties not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g), labeled “Total Payoffs and Payments” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii));
- Cash to or from consumer. The amount of cash or other funds due from or to the consumer and a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer, calculated by the sum of the loan amount, total closing costs and payoffs and payments under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i)-(iii), labeled “Cash to Close” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv));
- Closing costs financed. The sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(i) and (iii) (loan amount and payoffs and payments) but only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than the total closing costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)), labeled “Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount)” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(v)).

Adjustable Payment (AP) table.

This table is for transactions with adjustable monthly payments for reasons other than adjustments to the interest rate, or if the transaction is a seasonal payment product. The table provides consumers with relevant information about how the monthly payments will change. If the transaction does not contain such terms, the table may not be on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(i); Comment 37(i)-1).

The AP table requires answers to the following questions:

- Whether there are interest-only payments and, if so, the period during which the interest-only payment would apply (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(1));
- Whether the amount of any periodic payment can be selected by the consumer as an optional payment and, if so, the period during which the consumer can select optional payments (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(2));
- Whether the loan is a step payment product and, if so, the period during which the regular periodic payments are scheduled to increase (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(3));
- Whether the loan is a seasonal payment product and, if so, the period during which the periodic payments are not scheduled (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(4)); and
- A subheading of monthly principal and interest payments, with specified information about the first payment change and amount; frequency of subsequent changes; and maximum periodic payment that may occur during the loan term (and first date the maximum is possible) (12 CFR 1026.37(i)(5)).

Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table.

For transactions with adjustable interest rates, an Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table provides consumers with relevant information about how the interest rate will change (12 CFR 1026.37(j)). The adjustable interest rate table must be completed if the interest rate may increase after consummation. However, if the legal obligation does not permit the interest rate to adjust after consummation, this table is not permitted to appear on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(1); Comment 37(j)-1)).

The AIR table includes the following information (12 CFR 1026.37(j)):

- For non-step-rate products, the index upon which adjustments to the interest rate will be based and the margin that is added to the index to determine the interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(1));
- For step-rate products, the maximum amount of any adjustments to the interest rate that are scheduled and predetermined (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(2));
- The initial interest rate at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(3));
- The minimum/maximum interest rate for the loan, after any introductory period expires (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(4));
- The frequency of adjustments (first and subsequent adjustments) (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(5)); and
- Any limits on interest rate changes (12 CFR 1026.37(j)(6)).

Page 3: Additional information about the loan

Page 3 of the Loan Estimate contains contact information, a Comparisons table, an Other Considerations table, and, if desired, a Signature Statement for the consumer to sign to acknowledge receipt (See 12 CFR 1026.37(k), (l), (m), and (n)).

Contact information

The top of page 3 includes the name and NMLSR or License ID number for the creditor and mortgage broker, if any; and name and NMLSR or License ID of individual loan officer who is the primary contact for the consumer, along with that person’s email address and phone number (12 CFR 1026.37(k)).

Comparisons table

The Comparisons table follows the contact information and allows consumers to compare loans. Each of these disclosures must be accompanied by a specified descriptive statement (12 CFR 1026.37(l)).

The creditor must provide the:

- Total dollar amount of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment;
- Total dollar amount of principal scheduled to be paid through the end of the 60th month after the due date of the first periodic payment;
- Annual percentage rate using that term and the abbreviation “APR” and expressed as a percentage; and
- Total interest percentage that the consumer will pay over the life of the loan, expressed as a percentage of the amount of credit extended, using the term “Total Interest Percentage” and the abbreviation “TIP.”

The TIP calculation is the same for the Loan Estimate and for the Closing Disclosure: total interest (including prepaid interest) that the consumer will pay over the life of the loan is divided by the loan amount to arrive at the total interest percentage (TIP) 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3); 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(5). The TIP is computed assuming that the consumer makes each monthly payment in full and on time and does not make any overpayments 15 U.S.C. 1638(a)(19); 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3); Comment 37(l)(3)-1.

To calculate the TIP for fixed rate loans add the sum of interest payments for the full term of the loan to the amount of prepaid interest and divide that total by the loan amount. To calculate the TIP for a variable-rate loan, compute the amount of interest that the consumer will pay according to the terms of the loan. If the loan has an index and margin, use the index existing at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2); Comment 17(c)(1)-10). For Adjustable Rate products under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(A), compute the TIP in accordance with comment 17(c)(1)-10 (Comment 37(l)(3)-2). Comment 17(c)(1)-10 provides guidance and examples for adjustable mortgages with discounted and premium variable-rate terms. Where the initial rate is not based upon the index or formula used for later interest rate adjustments, the disclosures should reflect a composite annual percentage rate based on the initial rate for as long as it is charged and, for the remainder of the term, the rate that would have been applied using the index or formula at the time of consummation. The rate at consummation need not be used if a contract provides for a delay in the implementation of changes in an index value. For example, if the contract specifies that rate changes are based on the index value in effect 45 days before the change date, creditors may use any index value in effect during the 45 day period before consummation in calculating a composite annual percentage rate (Comment 17(c)(1)-10). For step-rate products under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(B), compute the TIP in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(1) and its associated commentary (Comment 37(l)(3)-2). For loans that have a negative amortization feature under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(A), compute the TIP using the scheduled payment, even if it is a negatively amortizing payment amount, until the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments under the terms of the legal obligation (Comment 37(l)(3)-3).

NOTE: Prepaid interest that is paid by someone other than the consumer is not included in the calculation. Further, if prepaid interest was disclosed as a negative number on the Loan Estimate or the Closing Disclosure, the negative value is used in the TIP calculation (Comment 37(l)(3)-1).

Other Considerations

Below the Comparisons table is a section regarding “other considerations” about the loan. This section includes disclosures on appraisals, assumptions, whether homeowner’s insurance is required, applicable late payment fees, a warning about refinancing, whether the creditor intends to service the loan or transfer servicing, liability after foreclosure. The section also provides for an optional, clear and conspicuous statement, if applicable, that the creditor may issue a revised Loan Estimate any time prior to 60 days before consummation pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(F) for transactions involving new construction where the creditor reasonably expects that settlement will occur more than 60 days after the provision of the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(m)).

The consumer is not required to sign the Loan Estimate. If the creditor adds a signature statement on page 3 of the Loan Estimate to confirm receipt by the consumer, it must use the model form language. If the creditor chooses not to use the confirm receipt table, it must include a statement that “You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application” (12 CFR 1026.37(n)).

Closing Disclosure – Content of Disclosures for Certain Mortgage Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.38

Closing Disclosure form required – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(i)

The Closing Disclosure generally must contain the actual terms and costs of the transaction and must satisfy timing and delivery requirements set forth in the rule.

For any loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) that are federally related mortgage loans subject to RESPA (which will include most mortgages), creditors must use form H-25, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(i) (See also 12 CFR 1024.2(b) for definition of federally related mortgage loan).

For other loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f) that are not federally related mortgage loans, the disclosures must contain the exact same information and be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to form H-25 (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(ii)).

Information required on the Closing Disclosure. As with the Loan Estimate, most disclosures on the Closing Disclosure form are required to be labeled using specific nomenclature, headings, and formatting. Similarly, in some instances, the regulation directs lines on the disclosure to be left blank where there is no charge or sets forth the maximum number of items that may be disclosed. See the regulation, Form H-25, and the Regulation Z procedures for specific obligations regarding each required disclosure.

Rounding. Dollar amounts generally must not be rounded except where noted in the regulation (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(i)). If an amount must be rounded but is composed of other amounts that are not required or permitted to be rounded, the unrounded amounts should be used to calculate the total, and the final sum should be rounded. Conversely, if an amount is required to be rounded and is composed of rounded amounts, the rounded amounts should be used to calculate the total (Comment 38(t)(4)-2). Percentage amounts should not be rounded and are disclosed up to three decimals, as needed, except where noted in the regulation. If a percentage amount is a whole number, only the whole number should be disclosed, with no decimals (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(ii)).

General information, the Loan Terms table, the Projected Payments table, and the Costs at Closing table are disclosed on the first page of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(a), (b), (c), and (d)). These disclosures mirror the disclosures in the Loan Estimate, and there is a required statement to compare the document with the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(2)).

Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure is similar, but not identical, to the Loan Estimate. Page 1 of the Closing Disclosure provides general closing, transaction, and loan information. It also includes a Loan Terms table with descriptions of applicable information about the loan, a Projected Payments table, and a summary Costs at Closing table (12 CFR 1026.38(a)-(d)).

General information

The top of page 1 of the Closing Disclosure requires the title “Closing Disclosure” and a specified statement to compare the disclosure with the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(1) and (2)). The top of page 1 also requires general closing, transaction, and loan information.

Closing information includes the date that the Closing Disclosure was delivered to the consumer, closing date (i.e., the date of consummation), the disbursement date, settlement agent conducting the closing, file number assigned by the settlement agent, property address or location, and sale price (or appraised property value if there is no seller) (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)). For transactions without a seller for which the creditor has not obtained an appraisal, the creditor may disclose the estimated value of the property, using the estimate provided by the consumer at application or the estimate the creditor used to determine approval of the credit transaction (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).

Transaction information includes the borrower’s name and mailing address, the seller’s name and mailing address, and the name of the creditor making the disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4)).

Loan information includes the loan term, purpose, product, loan type, loan ID number (using the same number as on the Loan Estimate), and mortgage insurance case number (MIC #), if required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)). Other than the MIC #, this information is determined by the same definitions for those items on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (Comment 38(a)(5)-1).

Loan Terms table

The Loan Terms table is located under the above-described general information disclosures. The information for this table is the same as that required in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(b), updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (12 CFR 1026.38(b)).

Projected Payments table

The Projected Payments table is located directly below the Loan Terms table on page 1 of the Closing Disclosure. The information for this table is generally the same as that required in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1) through (4), updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation (other than the reference to closing cost details required by 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(vi)). The estimated escrow payments disclosed on the Closing Disclosure for transactions subject to RESPA are determined under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17. For transactions not subject to RESPA, estimated escrow payments may be determined under the escrow account analysis described in Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17 or in the manner set forth in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5). There is also a required reference to the detailed escrow account disclosures on page 4 of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(c)).

Costs at Closing table

This table, located at the bottom of page 1, provides disclosures on Closing Costs and Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(d)). These disclosures offer the consumer a high-level summary of closing costs and reference the more detailed itemizations found on pages 2 and 3 of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(i)(E) and 1026.38(d)(1)(ii)(B)).

Items that are disclosed on the Cash at Closing table include Total Closing Costs, as well as the key inputs making up this total: Loan Costs and Other Costs, less Lender Credits (and the fact that total closing costs include these amounts) (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(i)). The table also discloses Cash Required to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(1)(ii)). For transactions without a seller or simultaneous subordinate financing transactions, the creditor must use the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table when the alternative costs at closing table was used on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2)).

Page 2: Closing Cost Details; Loan costs and other costs

Page 2 of the Closing Disclosure contains an itemization of the “Loan Costs” and “Other Costs” associated with the loan (12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (h)). In each case, the amounts paid by the consumer, seller, and others are separately disclosed. For items paid by the consumer or seller, amounts that are paid at closing are disclosed in a column separately from amounts paid before closing (12 CFR 1026.38(f)).

The number of items in the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables can be expanded and deleted to accommodate the disclosure of additional line items and to keep the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables on page 2 of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(iv)(A); Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-2). However, items that are required to be disclosed even if they are not charged to the consumer (such as Points in the Origination Charges subheading) cannot be deleted (Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-1).

Further, the Loan Costs and Other Costs tables can be disclosed on two separate pages of the Closing Disclosure but only if the page cannot accommodate all of the costs required to be disclosed on one page (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(iv)(B); Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-2). When used, these pages are numbered page 2a and 2b (Comment 38(t)(5)(iv)-3). For an example of this permissible change to the Closing Disclosure, see form H-25(H) of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Loan Costs table

All loan costs associated with the transaction are listed in a table under the heading “Loan Costs,” with the items and amounts listed under four subheadings:

- Origination charges;
- Services borrower did not shop for;
- Services borrower did shop for; and
- Total loan costs (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1) through (f)(5)).

Items should generally be the same as disclosed on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation, except as discussed below (12 CFR 1026.38(f)).

Origination Charges. All loan originator compensation is disclosed as an origination charge, including compensation from the creditor to a third-party loan originator (which was not disclosed on the Loan Estimate). Compensation from the consumer to a third-party loan originator is designated as Borrower-Paid at Closing or before closing on the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1); Comment 38(f)(1)-2). Compensation from the creditor to a third-party loan originator is designated as Paid by Others on the Closing Disclosure (Comment 38(f)(1)-2). This line item must also disclose the name of the loan originator ultimately receiving the payment (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(1)). A designation of “(L)” can be listed with the amount to indicate that the creditor pays the compensation at consummation. This is the same as the amount of third-party compensation included in points and fees for purposes of determining the consumer’s ability to repay the loan. Compensation to individual loan originators is not calculated or disclosed on the Closing Disclosure (Comment 38(f)(1)-3).

Services the consumer did or did not shop for. The following are disclosed under “Services Borrower Did Not Shop For,” regardless of where it was located on the Loan Estimate:

- Items that the consumer could have shopped for but did not.
- When a consumer chooses a provider that is on the written list of providers for a service on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(2)).

Items are re-alphabetized when an item is added to or removed from a particular subheading.

The amounts that are designated as Borrower-Paid at or before closing are subtotaled as Total Loan Costs (Borrower-Paid) (12 CFR 1026.38(f)(5)). Amounts designated as Seller-Paid or Paid by Others are not included in this subtotal (rather, they are included elsewhere in the Closing Cost Subtotal) (Comment 38(f)(5)-1; 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2)).

Other Costs table

Items should generally be the same as disclosed on the Loan Estimate, updated to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation, except as discussed below (12 CFR 1026.38(g)).

Taxes and other government fees. Itemized transfer taxes paid by the consumer and by the seller are disclosed, instead of just the sum total of transfer taxes to be paid by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(1)).

Prepays. An itemization of homeowner’s insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, prepaid interest, property taxes and a maximum of three additional items (see 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2)), the name of the person ultimately receiving the payment or government entity assessing the property tax, and the total of all such itemized amounts that are designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing. If no interest is collected prior to the interest collected with the first monthly payment, zero dollars should be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(2); Comment 38(g)(2)-3).

Initial escrow payment at closing. Property taxes paid during different time periods may be disclosed as separate items (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3)).

V. Lending — TILA

This section of the table also includes, as the last item disclosed, an Aggregate Adjustment calculated pursuant to Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17(d)(2) (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3)).

Other. This section of the table includes charges for services that are required or obtained in the real estate closing by the consumer, the seller, or other party, and the name of the person ultimately receiving the payment, even if not initially disclosed on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(4)). This includes all real estate brokerage fees, homeowner's or condominium association charges paid at consummation, home warranties, inspection fees, and other fees that are part of the real estate closing but not required by the creditor or not disclosed elsewhere on the Closing Disclosure (Comment 38(g)(4)-1). The amount of real estate commissions paid must be the total amount paid to any real estate brokerage as a commission, regardless of the identity of the party holding any earnest money deposit (Comment 38(g)(4)-4).

If there are costs that are a component of title insurance services, their label must begin with "Title -" and, if there are costs designated Borrower-Paid at or before closing for any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products, they must be labeled "(optional)" (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(4)(i) and (ii)).

The sum of any of these amounts that are Borrower-Paid must be disclosed as a line item as Total Other Costs (Borrower-Paid) (12 CFR 1026.38(g)(5)). Below this total, the sum of Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs (Borrower-Paid), less any lender credits (separately itemized), must be disclosed as a line item as Total Closing Costs (Borrower-Paid) (12 CFR 1026.38(g) and (h)).

Page 3: Calculating cash to close, summaries of transactions, and alternatives for transactions without a seller

Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure contains the Calculating Cash to Close table and Summaries of Transactions tables (12 CFR 1026.38(i), (j), and (k)).

Calculating Cash to Close

The Calculating Cash to Close table permits the consumer to see what costs have changed from the Loan Estimate. This table contains nine items:

- Total Closing Costs;
- Closing Costs Paid before Closing;
- Closing Costs Financed;
- Down Payment/Funds from Borrower;
- Deposit;
- Funds for Borrower;

- Seller Credits;
- Adjustments and other Credits; and
- Total Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(i)).

The table has three columns that disclose (1) the amount for each item as it was disclosed on the most recent Loan Estimate provided to the consumer, (2) the final amount for the item, and (3) an answer to the question "Did this change?" (12 CFR 1026.38(i)). The amounts disclosed in the Loan Estimate column will be the amounts disclosed on the most recent Loan Estimate (or revised Loan Estimate) Provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i), (5)(i), (6)(i), (7)(i), (8)(i), (9)(i)).

When amounts have changed, the disclosure must indicate where the consumer can find the amounts that have changed since being provided the Loan Estimate. For example, if the Seller Credit amount changed, the creditor can indicate that the consumer should "See Seller Credits in Section L" (Comment 38(i)-3). Other examples of language for these items are found in example form H-25(B) in Appendix H to Regulation Z.

Increases in total closing costs that exceed legal limits. When the increase in Total Closing Costs exceeds the legal limits on closing costs set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3), the form must disclose a statement that an increase in closing costs exceeds the legal limits by the dollar amount of the excess in the "Did this change?" column (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(3)). A statement directing the consumer to the Lender Credit on page 2 or a principal reduction must also be included if either is provided as a refund for the excess amount (Comment 38(i)(1)(iii)(A)-3). The dollar amount must be the sum of all excess amounts, taking into account the different methods of calculating excesses of the limitations on increases in closing costs under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii) (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(1)(iii)(A)(3)).

Closing Costs Paid Before Closing. The amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate column for the "Closing Costs Paid Before Closing" item is zero dollars (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(i)). The Final column should disclose the same amount designated as Borrower-Paid Before Closing in the Closing Costs Subtotals of the Other Costs table on page 2 of the Closing Disclosure. Under the subheading "Did this change?" if the amount disclosed here is different from the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate, include a statement of that fact; and if it is equal to the amount disclosed on the Loan Estimate, include a statement of that fact (12 CFR 1026.38(i)(2)(iii)).

Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table

For transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing where the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table was used on the Loan Estimate, the Closing Disclosure must also use the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table under (12 CFR 1026.38(e)). These items include:

- Loan amount;
- Total closing costs;
- Closing costs paid before closing;
- Payoffs and payments;
- Cash to or from consumer; and
- Closing costs financed.

The table has three columns that disclose (1) the amount for each item as it was disclosed on the most recent Loan Estimate provided to the consumer, (2) the final amount for the item, and (3) an answer to the question “Did this change?” along with a statement of whether the amount increased, decreased, or is equal to the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.38(e), Comment 38(e)-6). Generally, the amounts disclosed in the Loan Estimate column will be the Loan Amount, Total Closing Costs, Closing Costs Paid before Closing, and the Total Payoffs and Payments (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(i), (2)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i)).

Cash to or from the consumer is disclosed in the first two columns of the row labeled Cash to Close. The first column contains amounts disclosed in the most recent Loan Estimate provided to the consumer. The second column discloses the final amount due from or to the consumer, calculated by the sum of the amounts disclosed (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(i), (2)(i), (3)(i), (4)(i)) as final Loan Amount, Total Closing Costs, Closing Costs Paid before Closing, and the Total Payoffs and Payments, disclosed as a positive number with the statement of whether the funds are due from or to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(5)).

Closing Costs Financed are disclosed in the third column of the row labeled Cash to Close in the Calculating Cash to Close table. This amount is calculated by the sum of the final Loan Amount (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(1)(ii)) and the final Total Payoffs and Payments (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(4)(ii)), but only to the extent that the sum is greater than zero and less than or equal to the sum of borrower paid closing costs (disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2)) designated Borrower-Paid Before Closing (12 CFR 1026.38(e)(6)).

Summaries of Transactions table.

The Summaries of Transactions table contains required itemizations of the borrower’s and the seller’s transactions (12 CFR 1026.38(j)-(k)). The table discloses amounts due from or payable to the consumer and seller at closing, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1) and (2)). A separate Closing Disclosure can be provided to the consumer and the seller that does not reflect the other party’s costs and credits by omitting specified disclosures on each separate Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(v),(vi),(ix)).

Additional pages may be attached to the Closing Disclosure to add lines to provide a complete listing of all items required to be shown on the Closing Disclosure and for customary recitals and information used locally in real estate closings (for example, breakdown of payoff figures, a breakdown of the consumer’s total monthly mortgage payments, an accounting of debits received and check disbursements, a statement stating receipt of funds, applicable special stipulations between consumer and seller, and the date funds are transferred) (Comment 38(j)-6).

Generally, the Summaries of Transactions table is similar to the Summary of Borrower’s Transaction and Summary of Seller’s Transaction tables on the HUD-1 Settlement Statement provided under Regulation X prior to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule taking effect. There are some modifications to the Closing Disclosure related to the handling of the disclosure of the consumer’s deposit, the disclosure of credits, and specific guidance on other matters that may not have been clear in the HUD-1 instructions.

In transactions without a seller, the Seller-Paid column for Closing Costs may be deleted on page 2, and a Payoffs and Payments table may be substituted for the Summaries of Transactions table and placed before the alternative Calculating Cash to Close table on page 3 of the closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)). For an example, see page 3 of form H-25(J) of Appendix H to Regulation Z.

In some transactions, there are contractual or legal limits on what refunds may be provided to the consumer, and, instead, principal is reduced. Principal reductions may also be utilized in circumstances where refunds do not need to be provided. In transactions with a principal reduction that occurs immediately or very soon after closing, the principal reduction must be disclosed in the Summaries of Transactions table on the standard Closing Disclosure pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v)).

Borrower’s Transaction

Amounts due from the borrower. The sale price of the property, sale price of any personal property included in the sale, and total amount of closing costs designated Borrower-Paid at Closing, calculated with lender credits as a negative number pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(2) and (h)(3) (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ii)-(iv)). The contract sale price of the property does not include the price of tangible personal property if the buyer and seller have agreed to a separate price for such items. Manufactured homes are not considered personal property for this disclosure (Comment 38(j)(1)(ii)-1).

Adjustments. This includes a description and the amount of any additional items that the seller has paid prior to the real estate closing but reimbursed by the consumer at closing, and a description and the amount of any other items owed by the consumer at the real estate closing not otherwise disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), or (j) (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v)). Amounts not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j) that are owed to the seller but payable to the consumer after the real estate closing must be disclosed under the heading “Adjustments,” including rent that the consumer will collect after closing for a period of time prior to the real estate closing, and a tenant’s security deposit (Comment 38(j)(1)(v)-1). Other consumer charges owed by the consumer at the real estate closing and not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (j) will not have a corresponding credit in the summary of the seller’s transaction under 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(iv) (Comments 38(j)(1)(v)-1 and -2).

Adjustments for items paid by seller in advance. The prorated amount of prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller, and the time periods. The taxes are labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(vi)-(ix)). If there are additional items paid by the seller and due from the consumer, they are also itemized. Examples include taxes paid in advance, flood or insurance premiums if the insurance is under the same policy, mortgage insurance for assumed loans, condominium assessments, fuel or supplies on hand, and ground rent paid in advance (Comment 38(j)(1)(x)-1).

Itemization of amounts already paid by or on behalf of borrower. These amounts are itemized in the second part of the Summary of Transactions table. These include the following:

- Deposits, and if there is no deposit, this line is left blank. If the deposit was reduced to pay closing charges prior to closing, the reduction should be shown in the Closing Cost Detail table designated as Borrower-Paid Before Closing (Comments 38(j)(2)(ii)-1 and -2).
- The loan amount is the construction or purchase loan amount for a structure or purchase of a new manufactured home that is real property. For construction loans or loans for manufactured homes that are real property under state law, the loan amount for the current transaction must be disclosed, and the sales price of the land and the construction cost or the price of the manufactured home should be disclosed separately (Comment 38(j)(2)(iii)-1).
- Existing loans assumed or taken subject to are itemized with the outstanding amount of any loans that the consumer is assuming or taking title subject to (Comment 38(j)(2)(iv)-1).
- If the seller is providing a lump sum at closing that is not otherwise itemized, to pay for loan costs and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer, this amount is labeled Seller Credit (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(v)). When the consumer receives a generalized credit from the seller for closing costs or where the seller (typically a builder) is making an allowance to the consumer for items to purchase separately, the amount of the credit must be disclosed. However, if the Seller Credit is attributable to a specific loan cost or other cost listed in the Closing Cost Details tables, that amount should be reflected in the Seller-Paid column in the Closing Cost Details tables.

- Any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer, such as for issues identified at a walk-through of the property prior to closing, are disclosed here (Comments 38(j)(2)(v)-1 and -2).
- Other credits are itemized with a description and the amounts paid by or on behalf of the consumer, and not otherwise disclosed. Examples of other credits include credits from a real estate agent not attributable to a specific closing cost, subordinate financing proceeds, satisfaction of existing subordinate liens by consumer, transferred escrow balances, gift funds provided at closing, and any additional amounts not already disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(f), (g), and (j)(2) that are owed to the consumer but payable to the seller before the real estate closing (“Adjustments”), including rent paid to the seller from a tenant before the real estate closing for a period extending beyond the closing (Comments 38(j)(2)(vi)-1 through -6).

Adjustments for items unpaid by seller include prorated unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at closing, along with the time period and labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(vii)-(x)). If there are additional items that have not been paid and that the consumer is expected to pay after closing but which are attributable to the time prior to closing, they are itemized here (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(xi)). Examples include utilities used but not paid for by the seller or interest on a loan assumption (Comment 38(j)(2)(xi)-1).

Calculation of the borrower’s transaction is disclosed by including the Total Due from Borrower at Closing, the amount labeled Total Paid Already by or on Behalf of Borrower at Closing, if any, disclosed as a negative number, and a statement that the resulting amount is due from or to the consumer, and labeled Cash to Close (12 CFR 1026.38(j)(3)).

Items paid outside of closing are costs that are not paid from closing funds but would otherwise be part of the borrower’s transaction table should be marked as “P.O.C.” for paid outside of closing. There must also be a statement of the party making the payment, such as the consumer, seller, loan originator, real estate agent, or any other person. For an example, see form H-25(D) of Appendix H (Comment 38(j)(4)(i)-1).

Seller’s Transaction

Amounts due to the seller include the sale price of the property, sale price of any personal property included in the sale, and a description and the amount of other items paid to the seller by the consumer pursuant to a contract, such as charges that were not disclosed on the Loan Estimate, or items paid by the seller prior to closing but reimbursed by the consumer at closing (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ii)-(iv)).

Adjustments for items paid by seller in advance include the prorated amount of prepaid taxes due from the consumer to reimburse the seller, and the time periods. The taxes are labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(v)-(viii)). If there are additional items paid by the seller and due from the consumer, they are also itemized (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ix)).

Itemization of amounts due from seller at closing are itemized in the second part of the Summary of Transactions table. These include the amount of any deposits disbursed to the seller prior to closing and seller-paid closing costs. The itemization also includes the amount of any existing loans that the consumer is assuming and the amounts of any loan secured by a first lien or a second lien on the property that will be paid off. In addition, the itemization includes seller credits, an amount that the seller will provide at the closing as a lump sum, not otherwise itemized, to pay for loan costs and other costs and any other obligations of the seller to be paid directly to the consumer. The amounts and a description of any and all other obligations required to be paid by the seller at closing are disclosed, including any lien-related payoffs, fees, or obligations (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(ii)–(vii)).

Adjustments for items unpaid by seller include prorated unpaid taxes due from the seller to reimburse the consumer at closing, along with the time period and labeled city/town taxes, county taxes, and/or assessments as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(x)–(xii)). If there are additional items that have not been paid and that the consumer is expected to pay after closing but which are attributable to the time prior to closing, they are itemized here (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(2)(xiii)).

Calculation of the seller's transaction is disclosed by including the Total Due to Seller at Closing, the amount labeled Total Due from Seller at Closing, if any, disclosed as a negative number, and a statement that the resulting amount is due from or to the seller, and labeled Cash (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(3)).

Items paid outside of closing are costs that are not paid from closing funds but that would otherwise be part of the seller's transaction table should be marked as "P.O.C." for paid outside of closing. There must also be a statement of the party making the payment (12 CFR 1026.38(k)(4)).

Page 4: Additional information about this loan

Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure groups several required loan disclosures together, generally using specified language, including:

- Information concerning future assumption of the loan by a subsequent purchaser required by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(2) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(1));
- Whether the legal obligation contains a demand feature that can require early payment of the loan; (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(2));
- The terms of the legal obligation that impose a fee for a late payment, including the amount of time that passes before a fee is imposed and the amount of such fee or how it is calculated (as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(4)) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(3));
- Whether the regular periodic payments can cause the principal balance of the loan to increase (i.e., whether there could be negative amortization) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(4));
- The creditor's policy regarding partial payments by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5));
- A statement that the consumer is granting a security interest in the property (along with an identification of the property) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(6)); and
- Specified information related to any escrow account held by the servicer, including specified estimated escrow costs over the first year after consummation (or a statement that an escrow account has not been established, with a description of specified estimated property costs during the first year after consummation) (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)).

If the periodic principal and interest payment may change after consummation, other than due to a change in interest rate or where the loan is a seasonal payment product, page 4 of the Closing Disclosure must also include an Adjustable Payment (AP) table (12 CFR 1026.38(m)). If the loan's interest rate may increase after consummation, page 4 of the Closing Disclosure must also include the Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) table (12 CFR 1026.38(n)). These are the tables required in the Loan Estimate at 12 CFR 1026.37(i) and (j), respectively, updated to reflect the terms of the loan at consummation.

Page 5: Loan calculations, other disclosures, and contact information

Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure includes a Loan Calculations table, as well as specified other disclosures, contact information for the CFPB for questions, contact information for participants in the transaction, and if desired by the creditor, a signature table to confirm receipt of the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(o)–(s)).

Loan Calculations table

The Loan Calculations table discloses:

- Total of Payments (total paid after all scheduled payments of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs are made);
- Finance Charge;
- Amount Financed;
- Annual Percentage Rate (APR); and
- Total Interest Percentage (TIP) (the total amount of interest paid over the loan term as a percentage of the loan amount) (12 CFR 1026.38(o); 12 CFR 1026.37(l)(3) and its commentary).

V. Lending — TILA

The APR and TIP amounts should be updated from the amounts disclosed on the Loan Estimate to reflect the terms of the legal obligation at consummation. The TIP calculation is set forth in 12 CFR 1026.37(1)(3) and its commentary.

NOTE: See the discussion on calculating the TIP for the comparison table on page 3 of the Loan Estimate.

Other Disclosures table

The Other Disclosures table requires a notice regarding the lender's obligation to provide a free copy of the appraisal (for higher-priced mortgage loans under 12 CFR 1026.35 and loans covered by the Equal Credit Opportunity Act); a specified warning about consequences of nonpayment under the contract, whether state law provides for continued consumer liability after foreclosure, a statement concerning the consumer's ability to refinance the loan, and a statement concerning the extent that the interest on the loan can be included as a tax deduction by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.38(p)).

Contact information table

For each lender, mortgage broker, real estate broker (buyer and seller), and settlement agent, the contact information table discloses the name, address, NMLS or state license ID (as applicable), contact name of an individual primary contact for the consumer (and NMLS ID or license ID for that person), email, and phone number (12 CFR 1026.38(r)).

Mortgage Transfer Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.39

Notice of new owner – No later than 30 calendar days after the date on which a mortgage loan is acquired by or otherwise sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred⁴⁶ to a third party, the “covered person”⁴⁷ shall notify the consumer clearly and conspicuously in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep, of such transfer and include:

- Identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;
- Name, address, and telephone number of the covered person;
- Date of transfer;
- Name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the mortgage loan;

- Location where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and
- At the option of the covered person, any other information regarding the transaction.

This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer, as well as a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling or real property. Thus, it applies to both closed-end mortgage loans and open-end home equity lines of credit. This notification is required of the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same.

Regulation Z also establishes special rules regarding the delivery of the notice when there is more than one covered person. In a joint acquisition of a loan, the covered persons must provide a single disclosure that lists the contact information for all covered persons. However, if one of the covered persons is authorized to receive a notice of rescission and to resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments, the disclosure may state contact information only for that covered person. In addition, if the multiple covered persons each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, they may provide either a single notice or separate notices. Finally, if a covered person acquires a loan and subsequently transfers it to another covered person, a single notice may be provided on behalf of both of them, as long as the notice satisfies the timing and content requirements with respect to each of them.

In addition, there are three exceptions to the notice requirement to provide the notice of sale or transfer:

- The covered person sells, assigns, or otherwise transfers legal title to the mortgage loan on or before the 30th calendar day following the date of transfer on which it acquired the mortgage loan;
- The mortgage loan is transferred to the covered person in connection with a repurchase agreement that obligates the transferring party to repurchase the mortgage loan (unless the transferring party does not repurchase the mortgage loan); or ⁴⁷ A “covered person” means any person, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(22), who becomes the owner of an existing mortgage loan by acquiring legal title to the debt obligation, whether through a purchase, assignment, or other transfer, and who acquires more than one mortgage loan in any 12-month period. For purposes of this section, a servicer of a mortgage loan shall not be treated as the owner of the obligation if the servicer holds title to the loan or it is assigned to the servicer solely for the administrative convenience of the servicer in servicing the obligation. See 12 CFR 1026.39(a)(1).

- The covered person acquires only a partial interest in the mortgage loan and the agent or party authorized to receive the consumer’s rescission notice and resolve issues concerning the consumer’s payments on the mortgage loan does not change as a result of that transfer.

If, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest the notice of sale or transfer unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under State law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgment in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv), that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked (12 CFR 1026.39(f)).

Mortgage transfer notices – partial payment policies. If a creditor or servicer is required by Regulation Z to provide mortgage transfer notices when the ownership of a mortgage loan is being transferred, the notice must include information related to the partial payment policy that will apply to the mortgage loan. This post-consummation partial payment disclosure is required for a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling or real property, other than a reverse mortgage (12 CFR 1026.39(a) and (d)).

The partial payment disclosure must include (12 CFR 1026.39(d)(5)):

- The heading “Partial Payment” over all of the following additional information:
 - If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term “lender,” may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer’s loan;
 - If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted but not applied to a consumer’s loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the covered person, using the term “lender,” may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer’s loan;
 - If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term “lender,” does not accept any partial payments; and

- A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new covered person, using the term “lender,” may have a different policy.

The text illustrating the disclosure in form H-25 may be modified to suit the format of the mortgage transfer notice. Any modifications must be appropriate and not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure (Comment 39(d)(5)-1).

Periodic Statements for Residential Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1026.41

Creditors, assignees, or servicers⁴⁸ of closed-end mortgages are generally required to provide consumers with periodic statements for each billing cycle unless the loan is a fixed-rate loan and the servicer provides the consumer with a coupon book meeting certain conditions. Periodic statements must be provided by the servicer within a reasonably prompt time after the payment is due, or at the end of any courtesy period provided by the servicer for the previous billing cycle. Delivering, emailing or placing the periodic statements in the mail within four days of the close of the courtesy period of the previous billing cycle is generally acceptable. However, periodic statements are not required for:

- Reverse mortgage transactions covered under (12 CFR 1026.33);
- Mortgage loans secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan;
- Fixed-rate loans where the servicer currently provides consumers with coupon books that contain certain specified account information, contact information for the servicer, delinquency information (if applicable), and information that consumers can use to obtain more information about their account; and
- Creditors, assignees, or servicers that meet the “small servicer” exemption.

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii) define a “small servicer” and provide clarification how a small servicer will be determined. A small servicer is a servicer that: (1) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which it or an affiliate is the ⁴⁸ Creditors, assignees, and servicers are all subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41, as applicable. Creditors, assignees, or servicers may decide among themselves which of them will provide the required disclosures. However, establishing a business relationship where one party agrees to provide disclosures on behalf of the other parties does not absolve all other parties from their legal obligations. However, a creditor or assignee that currently does not own the mortgage loan or mortgage servicing rights is not subject to the periodic statement requirement.

creditor or assignee, (2) meets the definition of a Housing Finance Agency under 24 CFR 266.5, or (3) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor. To determine whether a servicer is a small servicer, generally, a servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliate as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer has the later of six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1 to come into compliance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5)).

- A mortgage loan while the consumer is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the U.S. Code. Servicers, however, are required to send modified periodic statements (or coupon books) to consumers who have filed for bankruptcy, subject to certain exceptions (See the Certain Consumers in Bankruptcy discussion below);
- Charged-off loans, if the servicer will not charge any additional fees or interest on the account and provides a periodic statement including additional disclosures related to the effects of charge-off in accordance with (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6));
- A successor in interest under certain conditions: if, upon confirmation, a servicer provides a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgment form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), the servicer is not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest a periodic statement unless and until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan obligation under State law or has provided the servicer an executed acknowledgment in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv), that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked (12 CFR 1026.41(g)).

Servicers must provide consumers with the following information in the specified format on the periodic statements:

Amount Due

- The payment due date, the amount of any late payment fee, the date that late payment fees will be assessed to the consumer's account if timely payment is not made, and the amount due, which must be shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page;

NOTE: If the transaction has multiple payment options, the amount due under each of the payment options must be provided.

The commentary to Regulation Z clarifies how servicers must disclose the amount due on periodic statements when the mortgage loan has been accelerated, is in a temporary loss mitigation program, or has been permanently modified. The commentary states the following:

- Acceleration. If the balance of a mortgage loan has been accelerated but the servicer will accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, the amount due must identify only the lesser amount that will be accepted to reinstate the loan. The periodic statement must be accurate when provided and should indicate, if applicable, that the amount due is accurate only for a specified period of time. For example, the statement may include language such as "as of [date]" or "good through [date]" and provide an amount due that will reinstate the loan as of that date or good through that date, respectively (Comment 1026.41(d)(1)-1).
- Temporary loss mitigation programs. If the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, the amount due may identify either the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program or the amount due according to the loan contract (Comment 1026.41(d)(1)-2).
 - Permanent loan modifications. If the loan contract has been permanently modified, the amount due must identify only the amount due under the modified loan contract (Comment 1026.41(d)(1)-3).

Explanation of Amount Due

- An explanation of the amount due, including the monthly payment amount with a breakdown of how much will be applied to principal, interest, and escrow, the total sum of any fees/charges imposed since the last statement, and any payment amount past due. Mortgage loans with multiple payment options must also have a breakdown of each payment option, along with information regarding how each payment option will impact the principal;

NOTE: The commentary to Regulation Z clarifies the explanation of amount due disclosures that must be included on periodic statements when mortgage loans have been accelerated or are in temporary loss mitigation programs. The commentary states the following:

- Acceleration. If the balance of a mortgage loan has been accelerated but the servicer will accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, the explanation of amount due must list both the reinstatement amount that is disclosed as the amount due and the accelerated amount. The servicer is not required to list the monthly payment amount that would otherwise be required under (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)(i)).
- The periodic statement must also include an explanation that the reinstatement amount will be accepted to reinstate the loan through the “as of [date]” or “good through [date],” as applicable, along with any special instructions for submitting the payment. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement. The explanation may include related information, such as a statement that the amount disclosed is “not a payoff amount” (Comment 41(d)(2)-1).
- Temporary loss mitigation programs. If the consumer has agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program and the amount due identifies the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program, the explanation of amount due must include both the amount due according to the loan contract and the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program. The statement must also include an explanation that the amount due is being disclosed as a different amount because of the temporary loss mitigation program. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter (Comment 41(d)(2)-2).

Past Payment Breakdown

- The total of all payments received since the last statement and the total of all payments received since the start of the calendar year, including, for each payment, a breakdown of how the payment(s) was applied to principal, interest, escrow, and/or fees and charges, and any amount held in a suspense or unapplied funds account (if applicable);

Transaction Activity

- A list of transaction activity (including dates, a brief description, and amount) for the current billing cycle, including any credits or debits that affect the current amount due, with the date, amount, and brief description of each transaction;

Partial Payment Information

- If a statement reflects a past partial payment held in a suspense or unapplied funds account, information explaining what the consumer must do to have the payment applied to the mortgage. Information must be on the front page or a separate page of the statement or separate letter;

Contact Information

- Contact information for the servicer, including a toll-free telephone number and email address (if applicable) that the consumer may use to obtain information regarding the account. Contact information must be on the front page of the statement; and

Account Information

- Account information, including the outstanding principal balance, the current interest rate, the date after which the interest rate may change if the loan is an ARM, and any prepayment penalty, as well as the web address for CFPB’s or HUD’s list of homeownership counselors or counseling organizations and the HUD toll-free telephone number to contact the counselors or counseling organizations.

Delinquency Information

Servicers must provide consumers that are more than 45 days delinquent on past payments additional information regarding their accounts on their periodic statements. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8), the length of a consumer’s delinquency is measured as of the date of the periodic statement or the date of the written notice provided under (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(3)(iv)). A consumer’s delinquency begins on the date an amount sufficient to cover a periodic payment of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, becomes due and unpaid, even if the consumer is afforded a period after the due date to pay before the servicer assesses a late fee. A consumer is delinquent if one or more periodic payments of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, are due and unpaid (Comment 41(d)(8)-1).

These items must be grouped together in close proximity to one another. To meet this requirement, the items to be provided in close proximity must be grouped together, and set off from other groupings of items. Items in close proximity may not have an unrelated text between them. Text is unrelated if it does not explain or expand upon the required disclosures. This may be accomplished in a variety of ways, for example, by presenting the information in boxes, or by arranging the items on the document and including spacing between the groupings (Comment 41(d)-1). Furthermore, the additional information must include:

- The length of the consumer’s delinquency;
- A notification of the possible risks of being delinquent, such as foreclosure and related expenses;
- An account history for either the previous six months or the period since the last time the account was current (whichever is shorter), which details the amount past due from each billing cycle and the date on which payments were credited to the account as fully paid;

V. Lending — TILA

- A notice stating any loss mitigation program that the consumer has agreed to (if applicable);
- A notice stating whether the servicer has initiated a foreclosure process;
- Total payments necessary to bring the account current; and
- A reference to homeownership counseling information (See Account Information above).

The regulation does not prohibit adding to the required disclosures, as long as the additional information does not overwhelm or obscure the required disclosures. For example, while certain information about the escrow account (such as the account balance) is not required on the periodic statement, this information may be included.

The periodic statement may be provided electronically if the consumer agrees. The consumer must give affirmative consent to receive statements electronically.

For sample periodic statements, see Appendix H-30.

NOTE: Servicers may modify the sample forms for periodic statements provided in Appendix H-30 to remove language that could suggest liability under the mortgage loan agreement if such language is not applicable (Comment 41(c)-5). For example, in the case of a confirmed successor in interest who has not assumed the mortgage loan obligation under State law and is not otherwise liable on the mortgage loan obligation, a servicer may modify the forms to:

- Use “this mortgage” or “the mortgage” instead of “your mortgage.”
- Use “The payments on this mortgage are late” instead of “You are late on your mortgage payments.”
- Use “This is the amount needed to bring the loan current” instead of “You must pay this amount to bring your loan current.”

(Comment 41(c)-5)

Certain Consumers in Bankruptcy – 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5) and 12 CFR 1026.41(f)

Servicers must send modified periodic statements (or coupon books) to certain consumers while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in a bankruptcy under title 11 of the U.S. Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy (12 CFR 1026.41(f)). The modified periodic statement requirements, however, are subject to certain exemptions.

Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i), a servicer is exempt from the periodic statement requirements with regard to a mortgage loan if:

- Any consumer on the loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the U.S. Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy or the consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan through bankruptcy; and
- With regard to any consumer on the mortgage loan:
- The consumer requests in writing that the servicer cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book;
 - The consumer’s bankruptcy plan provides that the consumer will surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, provides for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, or otherwise does not provide for the payment of the pre-bankruptcy arrearage or the maintenance of payments due under the mortgage loan;
 - A court enters an order in the bankruptcy case providing for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, lifting the automatic stay pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 362 with regard to the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, or requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book; or
 - The consumer files with the bankruptcy court a statement of intention pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 521(a) identifying an intent to surrender the dwelling and the consumer has not made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the bankruptcy case.

The bankruptcy exemption will no longer apply, however, if the consumer reaffirms personal liability for the loan, or any consumer on the loan requests in writing that the servicer provide a periodic statement or coupon book, unless a court enters an order in the bankruptcy case requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book.

Servicers not meeting the above exemption must send modified periodic statements or coupon books with regard to a mortgage loan as required by 12 CFR 1026.41(f) while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in a bankruptcy under title 11 of the U.S. Code, or if such consumer has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan under Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13 bankruptcy. The content of the periodic statements will vary depending on whether the consumer is a debtor in a chapter 7 or 11 bankruptcy case, or a chapter 12 or 13 bankruptcy case. Appendix H includes a Sample Form of Periodic Statement for Consumer in Chapter 7 or Chapter 11 Bankruptcy (See H-30(E)) and a Sample Form of Periodic Statement for Consumer in Chapter 12 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcy (See H-30(F)) that servicers may use for consumers in bankruptcy to ensure compliance with (12 CFR 1026.41). Servicers not meeting the above exemption must send modified periodic statements or coupon books as required by (12 CFR 1026.41(f)).

Valuation Independence – 12 CFR 1026.42

Regulation Z seeks to ensure that real estate appraisers, and others preparing valuations, are free to use their independent professional judgment in assigning home values without influence or pressure from those with interests in the transactions. Regulation Z also seeks to ensure that appraisers receive customary and reasonable payments for their services. Regulation Z’s valuation rules apply to creditors and settlement services providers for consumer credit transactions secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling (“covered transaction”) and includes several provisions that protect the integrity of the appraisal process when a consumer’s principal dwelling is securing the loan. In general, the rule prohibits “covered persons” from engaging in coercion, bribery, and other similar actions designed to cause anyone who prepares a valuation to base the value of the property on factors other than the person’s independent judgment.⁴⁹ More specifically, Regulation Z:

- Prohibits coercion and other similar actions designed to cause appraisers to base the appraised value of properties on factors other than their independent judgment;
- Prohibits appraisers and appraisal management companies hired by lenders from having financial or other interests in the properties or the credit transactions;
- Prohibits creditors from extending credit based on appraisals if they know beforehand of violations involving appraiser coercion or conflicts of interest, unless the creditors determine that the values of the properties are not materially misstated;
- Prohibits a person who prepares a valuation from materially misrepresenting the value of the consumer’s principal dwelling, and prohibits a covered person other than the person who prepares valuations from materially altering a valuation. A misrepresentation or alteration is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer’s principal dwelling;
- Prohibits any covered person from falsifying a valuation or inducing a misrepresentation, falsification, or alteration of value;
- Requires that creditors or settlement service providers that have information about appraiser misconduct file reports with the appropriate state licensing authorities if the misconduct is material (i.e., likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer’s principal dwelling; and

- Requires the payment of customary and reasonable compensation to appraisers who are not employees of the creditors or of the appraisal management companies hired by the creditors.

NOTE: Voluntary donation of appraisal services by a fee appraiser⁵⁰ to an organization eligible to receive tax-deductible charitable contributions meets the customary-and-reasonable requirements (15 U.S.C.1639e(i)(2)(B)).

Minimum Standards for Transactions Secured by a Dwelling (Ability to Repay and Qualified Mortgages) – 12 CFR 1026.43

Minimum standards for transactions secured by a dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43(a), (g), (h)

Creditors originating certain mortgage loans are required to make a reasonable and good faith determination at or before consummation that a consumer will have the ability to repay the loan. The ability-to-repay requirement applies to most closed-end mortgage loans; however, there are some exclusions, including:

- Home equity lines of credit;⁵¹
- Mortgages secured by an interest in a timeshare plan;
- Reverse mortgages;
- A temporary bridge loan with a term of 12 months or less, such as a loan to finance the purchase of a new dwelling where the consumer plans to sell a current dwelling within 12 months or a loan to finance the initial construction of a dwelling;
- A construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; and
- An extension of credit made pursuant to a program authorized by sections 101 and 109 of the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008 (12 U.S.C. 5211; 5219).

NOTE: There are additional exclusions under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) that generally include extensions of credit by various state or federal government agencies or programs or by creditors with specific designations under such programs or extensions of credit that meet certain criteria and are extended by certain creditors that the IRS has determined are 501(c)(3) nonprofits. For a full list and criteria, (see 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(iv)–(vii)).

⁵⁰ A fee appraiser is a state-licensed or certified appraiser, or a company using their services who receives a fee for performing appraisals.

Generally, loans covered under this section (which, for purposes of the prepayment penalty provisions in 12 CFR 1026.43(g), includes reverse mortgages and temporary loans otherwise excluded⁵² from the ability-to-repay provisions) may not have prepayment penalties; however, there are exceptions for certain fixed-rate and step-rate qualified mortgages that are not higher-priced mortgage loans (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a)), and only if otherwise permitted by law. For such mortgages, the prepayment penalties must be limited to the first three years of the loan and may not exceed 2 percent for the first two years and 1 percent for the third year. The creditor must offer the consumer an alternative loan without such penalties that the creditor has a good faith belief that the consumer likely qualifies for, with the same term, a fixed rate or step rate, substantially equal payments, and limited points and fees (See 12 CFR 1026.43(g)).

Ability to Repay – 12 CFR 1026.43(c)

Except as provided under 12 CFR 1026.43(d) (refinancing of non-standard mortgages), (e) (qualified mortgages), and (f) (balloon payment qualified mortgages by certain creditors), creditors must consider the following eight underwriting factors when making a determination of the consumer’s ability to repay:

- The consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets (excluding the value of the dwelling and any attached real property);
- The consumer’s current employment status if the creditor relies on the consumer’s income in determining repayment ability;
- The consumer’s monthly payment for the mortgage loan;
- The consumer’s monthly payment on any simultaneous loan (i.e., a covered transaction or HELOC that is being consummated generally at the same or similar time) secured by the same dwelling that the creditor knows or has reason to know will be made, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6);

- The consumer’s monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations, including property taxes;
- The consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support;
- The consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7); and
- The consumer’s credit history.

Creditors are required to verify this information using reasonably reliable third-party records, with specific rules for verification of income or assets and employment status. In the case of the consumer’s income or assets, the creditor must use third-party records that provide reasonably reliable evidence of such income or assets. Creditors may verify the information considered using the consumer’s income tax return transcripts issued by the IRS, copies of tax returns filed by the consumer, W-2s or similar documentation, payroll statements, financial institution records, receipts from check-cashing or fund transfer services, and records from the consumer’s employer or other specified records (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)).

Regulation Z also provides rules for how creditors must apply certain underwriting factors when determining whether a consumer has the ability to repay the mortgage. For example, creditors must calculate the monthly payment for the covered transaction using the greater of the fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, and the monthly, fully amortizing payments that are substantially equal during the loan term. However, special rules apply to mortgages with a balloon payment, interest-only loans, and negative amortization loans due to the unique characteristics of the mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)).

Finally, creditors may not evade the ability-to-repay requirements by structuring a closed-end loan secured by a dwelling as open-end credit that does not meet the definition of open-end credit plan.

Exemption from ATR Requirements for Refinancing of Non-Standard Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(d)

12 CFR 1026.43(d) provides special rules for refinancing a “non-standard mortgage” into a “standard mortgage.”

A “non-standard mortgage” is a covered transaction⁵³ as defined

⁵² These include a temporary or “bridge” loan with a term of 12 months or less; a construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; or an extension of credit made pursuant to a program administered by a housing finance agency; by certain community development or non-profit lenders, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v); or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs (12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)).

⁵³ A covered transaction is a consumer credit transaction that is secured by a dwelling, including any real property attached to the dwelling. A covered transaction is not a home equity line of credit under 12 CFR 1026.40; a mortgage secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan; a reverse mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.33; a temporary or “bridge” loan with a term of 12 months or less; a construction phase of 12 months or less of a construction-to-permanent loan; or an extension of credit made pursuant to a program administered by a housing finance agency; by certain community development or non-profit lenders, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v); or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs.

under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) that is:

- An adjustable rate mortgage with an introductory fixed interest rate for a period of one year or longer;
- An interest-only loan; or
- A negative amortization loan.

A “standard mortgage” is a covered transaction as defined under 12 CFR 1026.43(a) with:

- Periodic payments that do not cause the principal balance to increase, do not allow the consumer to defer repayment of the principal, or do not result in balloon payments;
- Total points and fees that are not more than those allowed in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(3);
- A term that does not exceed 40 years;
- An interest rate that is fixed for the first five years of the loan; and
- Proceeds that are used solely to pay off the outstanding principal on the non-standard mortgage and closing or settlement costs (that are required to be disclosed under RESPA).

Current holders of non-standard mortgages or their servicers (collectively referred to here as “holders”) can refinance non-standard mortgages into standard mortgages without considering a consumer’s ability to repay under 12 CFR 1026.43(c), if certain conditions are met.

To qualify for the exemption from the ability-to-repay requirements:

- The standard mortgage must have a monthly payment that is “materially lower”⁵⁴ than the non-standard mortgage;
- The creditor must receive a written application from the consumer for the standard mortgage no later than two months after the non-standard mortgage is recast; and
- On the non-standard mortgage, consumers must have made no more than one payment more than 30 days late during the preceding 12 months and must have made no late payments more than 30 days late in the preceding six months of the holder receiving the application for a standard mortgage.

For non-standard loans consummated on or after January 10, 2014, that are refinanced into standard mortgages, the exemption from the ability-to-repay requirements for the refinancing is available only if the non-standard mortgage met the repayment ability requirements under 12 CFR 1026.43(c) or the qualified mortgage requirements under 12 CFR 1026.43(e) as applicable.

If these conditions are satisfied and if the holder has considered whether the standard mortgage is likely to prevent the consumer from defaulting on the non-standard mortgage once the loan terms are recast, the holder is not required to meet the ability-to-repay requirements in 12 CFR 1026.43(c). Finally, holders refinancing a non-standard mortgage to a standard mortgage may offer consumers rate discounts and terms that are the same as (or better than) rate discounts and terms that the holder offers to new consumers, consistent with the holder’s documented underwriting practices and to the extent not prohibited by applicable laws. For example, a holder would comply with this requirement if it has documented underwriting practices that provide for offering rate discounts to consumers with credit scores above a certain threshold, even though the consumer would not normally qualify for that discounted rate.

Qualified Mortgages: Rebuttable Presumption and Safe Harbor – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)

The rule provides a presumption of compliance with the ability-to-repay requirements for creditors that originate certain types of loans called “qualified mortgages.” There are several categories of qualified mortgages, which are discussed below. Qualified mortgages afford creditors and assignees greater protection against liability under the ability-to-repay provisions. Qualified mortgages that are not higher-priced covered transactions receive a safe harbor under the ability-to-repay provisions, which means the presumption of compliance cannot be rebutted. A qualified mortgage is higher-priced if the loan’s APR exceeds the APOR for a comparable transaction by 1.5 percentage points or more for first-lien loans other than those that fall within the small-creditor portfolio, temporary small-creditor balloon-payment, or balloon-payment qualified mortgage definitions, and 3.5 percentage points for first-lien loans that fall within those qualified mortgage definitions or for second-lien loans. Special APR calculation rules apply to certain adjustable-rate and step-rate loans made under the general qualified mortgage definition that took effect on March 1, 2021, for purposes of ⁵⁴ When comparing the payments, the holder must calculate the payment for the standard mortgage based on substantially equal, monthly, fully amortizing payments based on the maximum interest rate that may apply in the first five years. The holder must calculate the non-standard mortgage payment based on substantially equal, monthly, fully amortizing payments of principal and interest using:

- The fully indexed rate as of a reasonable period of time before or after the date on which the creditor receives the consumer’s application for the standard mortgage;

- The term of the loan remaining as of the date on which the recast occurs, assuming all scheduled payments have been made up to the recast date, and the payment due on the recast date is made and credited as of that date; and
- The remaining loan amount, which is calculated differently depending on whether the loan is an adjustable rate mortgage, interest-only loan, or negative amortization loan (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(5)).

determining if the loan is a higher-priced qualified mortgage.

Generally, the safe harbor provides a conclusive presumption that the creditor made a good faith and reasonable determination of the consumer's ability to repay. Qualified mortgages that are higher-priced receive a rebuttable presumption of compliance rather than a safe harbor with the ability-to-repay provisions. This means that the loan is presumed to comply with the ability-to-repay provisions, but, for example, the consumer would have the opportunity to rebut that presumption in future ability-to-repay litigation.

For a qualified mortgage that is a higher-priced covered transaction, the presumption of compliance is rebuttable by showing that at consummation, the consumer's income, debt obligations, alimony, child support, and monthly payments on the loan and mortgage-related obligations and simultaneous loans of which the creditor was aware at consummation would leave the consumer with insufficient residual income or assets (other than the value of the dwelling and real property) to meet living expenses (including recurring and material non-debt obligations that the creditor was aware of at consummation).

Requirements for Qualified Mortgages – Generally – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2) and (3)

Loans that are qualified mortgages under the general qualified mortgage definition must provide for regular periodic payments that are substantially equal (except for the effect that any interest rate change after consummation has on the payment in the case of an adjustable-rate or step-rate mortgage) and may not have negative amortization, interest-only payments, balloon payments, or terms exceeding 30 years. A qualified mortgage for loans greater than or equal to $100,000 (indexed for inflation) may not have points and fees paid by the consumer that exceed 3 percent of the total loan amount (although certain “bona fide discount points” are excluded for certain loans with pricing within prescribed ranges of APOR—the average prime offer rate). The rule provides guidance on calculating points and fees and thresholds for smaller loans.⁵⁵ The rule also requires that the creditor underwrite the loan (taking into account monthly payments for mortgage-related obligations) using the maximum interest rate that will apply in the first five years after the date on which the first periodic payment is due.

The general definition of a qualified mortgage also considers a loan's pricing. Under the amended rule issued by the Bureau, effective March 1, 2021, a loan greater than or equal to $130,461 (indexed for inflation) meets the general qualified mortgage definition if the APR exceeds the APOR for a comparable transaction by less than 2.25 percentage points as of the date the interest rate is set. The amended rule provides pricing thresholds higher than 2.25 percentage points above APOR for loans with smaller loan amounts, subordinate-lien transactions, and smaller manufactured housing loans. The amended rule also includes a special rule for calculating the APR for ARMs for purposes of these pricing thresholds. For a loan to be a qualified mortgage under the general definition, the creditor must also (1) consider the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support, and (2) verify the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support.

For transactions for which a creditor received the consumer's application prior to the amended rule's mandatory compliance date, October 1, 2022, creditors seeking to originate general qualified mortgages will have the option of complying with either the current general qualified mortgage definition (described above) or the definition in place prior to March 1, 2021. The older definition did not include the price-based limit described in the previous paragraph and instead required that the consumer's total monthly debt to total monthly income not exceed 43 percent. Unlike the current definition, the older definition further required that creditors calculate debt and income for purposes of determining the consumer's debt-to-income ratio using the standards contained in former Appendix Q of Regulation Z.⁵⁶

Qualified Mortgages – Other Agencies – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4)

Regulation Z provides a temporary category of qualified mortgages that are eligible to be purchased or guaranteed by the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac) (collectively, the government-sponsored enterprises or GSEs) while under the conservatorship of the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA). This temporary category is commonly known as the GSE Patch. The GSE Patch is available for transactions that are both (1) consummated on or before the date the applicable GSE ceases to operate under conservatorship and (2) transactions for which the creditor receives the consumer's application before October 1, 2022. However, the practical availability of the GSE Patch may be affected by policies or agreements created by parties other than the Bureau, such as the Preferred Stock Purchase Agreements (PSPAs), which include restrictions on GSE purchases that rely on the GSE Patch definition after July 1, 2021.

⁵⁵ The definition and calculation rules for points and fees are the same as those used to determine whether a closed-end mortgage is a HOEPA loan, discussed above at 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(2)

Further, HUD, VA, and USDA have issued definitions for qualified mortgages for loans they insure, guarantee, or provide under applicable law. These definitions may be found under 24 CFR 201.7 and 24 CFR 203.19 (HUD), 38 CFR 36.4300 and 38 CFR 36.4500 (VA), and 7 CFR 3555.109 (USDA).

Qualified Mortgage – Small Creditor Portfolio Loans – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)

Mortgages that are originated and held in portfolio by certain small creditors are also qualified mortgages if they meet certain requirements.

These mortgages must generally satisfy the requirements applicable to qualified mortgages, including prohibitions on negative-amortization, balloon-payment, and interest-only features; maximum loan terms of 30 years; and points-and-fees restrictions. The creditor must consider the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support, and verify the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support.

A small creditor that satisfies the exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C) is eligible to make small creditor portfolio qualified mortgages. (In contrast to 12 CFR 1026.43(f), below, eligibility for this qualified mortgage category is not conditioned on the small creditor operating in a rural or underserved area). For a period of three years after consummation, the creditor may not transfer the loan, or the loan will lose its status as a qualified mortgage. The qualified mortgage status continues under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(ii), however, if the creditor transfers the loan to another creditor that meets the requirements to be a small lender, or when the loan is transferred due to a capital restoration plan, bankruptcy, or state or federal governmental agency order, or if the mortgage is transferred pursuant to a merger or acquisition of the creditor. A qualified mortgage can be transferred after three years without losing its status.

Small Creditor Rural or Underserved Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages and Temporary Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(f) and 1026.43(e)(6)

Balloon-payment mortgages are qualified mortgages if they are originated and held in portfolio by small creditors operating in a rural or underserved area (see 12 CFR 1026.43(f)) and meet certain other requirements. These mortgages must satisfy certain requirements applicable to qualified mortgages, including prohibitions on negative-amortization and interest-only features; maximum loan terms of 30 years; and points-and-fees restrictions. These loans must have a term of at least five years, and a fixed interest rate, and meet certain basic underwriting standards. The creditor must consider the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support, and verify the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support, but without regard to the standards in Appendix Q. This category of qualified mortgage is not available for a loan that, at origination, is subject to a forward commitment to be acquired by a person that does not itself qualify for the category (under the requirements outlined in the next paragraph).

A small creditor that satisfies the exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C) (higher-priced mortgage escrow requirements) is eligible to make rural or underserved balloon-payment qualified mortgages. For a period of three years after consummation, the creditor may not transfer the loan, or it will lose its status as a qualified mortgage. The qualified mortgage status continues under 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(2), however, if the creditor transfers the loan to another creditor that meets the requirements to be a small rural lender, or when the loan is transferred due to a capital restoration plan, bankruptcy, or state or federal governmental agency order, or if the mortgage is transferred pursuant to a merger or acquisition of the creditor. A qualified mortgage can be transferred after three years without losing its status.

There is also a temporary qualified mortgage category for balloon-payment mortgages that would otherwise meet the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(f) but that are originated by small creditors that do not operate in a rural or underserved area. This category is applicable to covered transactions for which the application was received before April 1, 2016 (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(6)(ii)).

Qualified Mortgage – Seasoned Loans – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)

The Seasoned QM Final Rule, effective March 1, 2021, created a new category of qualified mortgage known as seasoned qualified mortgages. To be eligible to be a seasoned qualified mortgage, a covered transaction must be a first-lien, fixed-rate loan that has met certain performance requirements over a seasoning period of at least 36 months, be held in portfolio by the originating creditor or first purchaser until the end of the seasoning period (subject to certain enumerated exceptions), comply with general restrictions on product features and points and fees, and meet certain underwriting requirements.

V. Lending — TILA

A loan made by any creditor, regardless of size, is eligible to become a seasoned qualified mortgage if at the end of the seasoning period it meets the requirements in the Seasoned QM Final Rule. Loans that satisfy another QM definition at consummation also can be seasoned qualified mortgages if the requirements for seasoned qualified mortgages are met.

Qualified Mortgage – Insured depository institution or insured credit union that, together with its affiliates, has less than $10 billion in total consolidated assets (covered institution):
Portfolio loans – 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F)⁵⁷

Under EGRRCPA, residential mortgages that are originated and held in portfolio by covered institutions are qualified mortgages if they meet certain statutory requirements. Such loans are subject to prepayment penalty limitations and must not have negative amortization or interest-only features, have points and fees within applicable limits, and consider and document debt, income and assets. The creditor must consider and document (as described in the statute) debt, income, and financial resources of the consumer in underwriting the loan. The loan loses its qualified mortgage status upon sale, assignment, or transfer, except in the case of a transfer (1) due to bankruptcy or failure; (2) to another covered institution that also retains the loan in portfolio; (3) pursuant to a merger or acquisition by or to another person who retains the loan in portfolio; or (4) to a wholly owned subsidiary, provided that the loan is considered an asset by the covered institution for regulatory accounting purposes.

Subpart F – Special Rules for Private Education Loans

Subpart F relates to private education loans. It contains rules on disclosures 12 CFR 1026.46, the right to cancel the loan 12 CFR 1026.47, and limitations on changes in terms after approval and on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans (12 CFR 1026.48).

Special Disclosure Requirements for Private Education Loans – 12 CFR 1026.46

The disclosures required under Subpart F apply only to private education loans. Except where specifically provided otherwise, the requirements and limitations of Subpart F are in addition to the requirements of the other subparts of Regulation Z.

A private education loan means an extension of credit that:

- Is not made, insured, or guaranteed under title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965;
- Is extended to a consumer expressly, in whole or part, for postsecondary educational expenses, regardless of whether the loan is provided by the educational institution that the student attends; and

- Does not include open-end credit or any loan that is secured by real property or a dwelling.

A private education loan does not include an extension of credit in which the covered educational institution is the creditor if:

- The term of the extension of credit is 90 days or less; or
- An interest rate will not be applied to the credit balance, and the term of the extension of credit is one year or less, even if the credit is payable in more than four installments.

Content of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.47

Disclosure Requirements

This section establishes the content that a creditor must include in its disclosures to a consumer at three different stages in the private education loan origination process:

- Application or Solicitation Disclosures – With any application or solicitation;
- Approval Disclosures – With any notice of approval of the private education loan; and
- Final Disclosures – After the consumer accepts the loan. In addition, 12 CFR 1026.48(d) requires that the disclosures must be provided at least three business days prior to disbursement of the loan funds.

Rights of the Consumer

The creditor must disclose that, if approved for the loan, the consumer has the right to accept the loan on the terms approved for up to 30 calendar days. The disclosure must inform the consumer that the rate and terms of the loan will not change during this period, except for changes to the rate based on adjustments to the index used for the loan and other changes permitted by law. The creditor must disclose that the consumer also has the right to cancel the loan, without penalty, until midnight of the third business day following the date on which the consumer receives the final disclosures.

Limitations on Private Education Loans – 12 CFR 1026.48

This section contains rules and limitations on private education loans, including:

⁵⁷ This statutory provision is effective without any requirement to adopt regulations, and Regulation Z has not been amended to incorporate this provision as of the date of these procedures.

1. A prohibition on co-branding in the marketing of private education loans;
2. Rules governing the 30-day acceptance period and three business-day cancellation period and prohibition on disbursement of loan proceeds until the cancellation period has expired;
3. The requirement that the creditor obtain a self-certification form from the consumer before consummation; and
4. The requirement that creditors in preferred lender arrangements provide certain information to covered educational institutions.

Co-Branding Prohibited

Regulation Z prohibits creditors from using the name, emblem, mascot, or logo of a covered institution (or other words, pictures, or symbols readily identified with a covered institution) in the marketing of private education loans in a way that implies endorsement by the educational institution. Marketing that refers to an educational institution does not imply endorsement if the marketing includes a clear and conspicuous disclosure that is equally prominent and closely proximate to the reference to the institution that the educational institution does not endorse the creditor's loans, and that the creditor is not affiliated with the educational institution. There is also an exception in cases where the educational institution actually does endorse the creditor's loans, but the marketing must make a clear and conspicuous disclosure that is equally prominent and closely proximate to the reference to the institution that the creditor, and not the educational institution, is making the loan.

Private Education Loan Protections in the Event of Death or Bankruptcy – 15 U.S.C. 1650

TILA defines a cosigner with respect to a private education loan as any individual who is liable for the obligation of another without compensation regardless of how designated in the contract or instrument, and includes any person whose signature is requested as a condition to grant credit or to forbear on collection of the private education loan. This definition does not extend to obligations intended to consolidate a consumer's pre-existing private education loan. A cosigner does not include a spouse whose signature is required to perfect a security interest in the loan.

EGRRCPA amended TILA to enhance consumer protections for student borrowers and cosigners of student loans. Specifically, a private education loan creditor may not declare a default or accelerate a debt against a student obligor on the sole basis of bankruptcy or death of a cosigner. Additionally, the holder of a private education loan must release, within a reasonable time frame, any cosigner of their obligations related to the loan, when the holder is notified of the death of a student obligor. The holder or servicer of the private education loan, as applicable, must notify, within a reasonable time frame, a cosigner who is released of their obligations. A private education loan creditor also must provide a student obligor the option to designate an individual to have the legal authority to act on behalf of the student obligor in the event of death of the obligor. These protections apply only to private education loan agreements entered into on or after November 24, 2018.

Subpart G – Special Rules Applicable To Credit Card Accounts and Open-End Credit Offered To College Students

Subpart G relates to credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (except for 12 CFR 1026.57(c), which applies to all open-end credit plans). This subpart contains rules regarding credit and charge card application and solicitation disclosures 12 CFR 1026.60, as well as hybrid prepaid-credit cards (12 CFR 1026.61). It also contains rules on evaluation of a consumer's ability to make the required payments under the terms of an account 12 CFR 1026.51, limits the fees that a consumer can be required to pay 12 CFR 1026.52, and contains rules on allocation of payments in excess of the minimum payment (12 CFR 1026.53). The subpart also sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as the result of a loss of a grace period 12 CFR 1026.54 and on increases in annual percentage rates, fees, and charges for credit card accounts 12 CFR 1026.55, including the reevaluation of rate increases (12 CFR 1026.59). This subpart prohibits the assessment of fees or charges for over-the-limit transactions unless the consumer affirmatively consents to the creditor's payment of over-the-limit transactions (12 CFR 1026.56). This subpart also sets forth rules for reporting and marketing of college student open-end credit (12 CFR 1026.57). Finally, it sets forth requirements for the Internet posting of credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.58).

Evaluation of the Consumer's Ability to Pay – 12 CFR 1026.51

Regulation Z requires credit card issuers to consider a consumer's ability to pay before opening a new credit card account or increasing the credit limit for an existing credit card account. Additionally, the rule provides specific requirements that must be met before opening a new credit card account or increasing the credit limit on an existing account when the consumer is under the age of 21.

When evaluating a consumer's ability to pay, credit card issuers must perform a review of a consumer's income or assets and current obligations. Card issuers are permitted, however, to rely on information provided by the consumer. The rule does not require card issuers to verify a consumer's statements; a card issuer may base its determination of ability to repay on facts and circumstances known to the card issuer (Comment 51(a)(1)(i)-2). A card issuer may also consider information obtained through any empirically derived, demonstrably, and statistically sound model that reasonably estimates a consumer's income or assets.

Card issuers may consider any income and assets to which the consumer has a reasonable expectation of access or may limit their consideration to the consumer's independent income and assets. The rule also requires that issuers consider at least one of the following:

- The ratio of debt obligations to income;
- The ratio of debt obligations to assets; or
- The income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations (i.e., residual income).

The rule also provides that it would be unreasonable for a card issuer not to review any information about a consumer's income, assets, or current obligations, or to issue a credit card to a consumer who does not have any income or assets.

Because credit card accounts typically require consumers to make a minimum monthly payment that is a percentage of the total balance (plus, in some cases, accrued interest and fees), card issuers are required to consider the consumer's ability to make the required minimum payments. Card issuers must also establish and maintain reasonable written policies and procedures to consider a consumer's income or assets and current obligations. Because the minimum payment is unknown at account opening, the rule requires that card issuers use a reasonable method to estimate a consumer's minimum payment. The regulation provides a safe harbor for card issuers to estimate the required minimum periodic payment if the card issuer:

1. Assumes utilization, from the first day of the billing cycle, of the full credit line that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer; and
2. Uses a minimum payment formula employed by the card issuer for the product that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer or, in the case of an existing account, the minimum payment formula that currently applies to that account, provided:
 - a. If the minimum payment formula includes interest charges, the card issuer estimates those charges using an interest rate that the card issuer is considering offering to the consumer for purchases or, in the case of an existing account, the interest rate that currently applies to purchases; and
 - b. If the applicable minimum payment formula includes mandatory fees, the card issuer must assume that such fees have been charged to the account.

Specific Requirements for Underage Consumers – 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)

Regulation Z prohibits the issuance of a credit card to a consumer who has not attained the age of 21 unless the consumer has submitted a written application and the creditor has:

- Information indicating that the underage consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum payments on the account; or
- The signature of a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who has attained the age of 21, who has the ability to repay debts (based on 12 CFR 1026.51) incurred by the underage consumer in connection with the account, and who assumes joint liability for all debts or secondary liability for any debts incurred before the underage consumer attains 21 years of age.

For credit line increases:

- If an account was opened based on the underage consumer's independent ability to repay, in order to increase the consumer's credit line before he or she turns 21, the issuer either must determine that the consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum payments at the time of the contemplated increase, or must obtain an agreement from a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who is 21 or older and who has the ability to repay debts to assume liability for any debt incurred on the account.
- If the account was opened based on the ability of a cosigner over the age of 21 to pay, the issuer must obtain written consent from that cosigner before increasing the credit limit.

Limitations of Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52

Limitations on Fees During First Year After Account Opening – 12 CFR 1026.52(a)

During the first year after account opening, issuers are prohibited from requiring consumers to pay fees (other than fees for late payments, returned payments, and exceeding the credit limit) that in the aggregate exceed 25 percent of the initial credit limit in effect when the account is opened. An account is considered open no earlier than the date on which the account may first be used by the consumer to engage in transactions. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this restriction also applies to fees or charges imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) (Comments 6(b)(3)(iii)(D)-1 and 52(a)(2)-2).

NOTE: The 25 percent limitation on fees does not apply to fees assessed prior to opening the account.

Limitations on Penalty Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52(b)

TILA requires that penalty fees imposed by card issuers be reasonable and proportional to the violation of the account terms. Among other things, the regulation prohibits credit card issuers from charging a penalty fee of more than $29 for paying late or otherwise violating the account’s terms for the first violation, $40 for an additional violation of the same type during the same billing cycle or one of the next six billing cycles, or 3 percent of the delinquent balance on the charge card account that requires payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle if payment has not been received for two or more consecutive billing cycles unless the issuer determines that a higher fee represents a reasonable proportion of the costs it incurs as a result of that type of violation and reevaluates that determination at least once every 12 months.⁵⁸ With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this provision also applies to any fee for violating the terms or other requirements of the credit feature, regardless of whether those fees are imposed on the credit or asset feature of the prepaid account (Comment 52(b)-3).

Credit card issuers are not permitted to charge penalty fees that exceed the dollar amount associated with the consumer’s violation of the terms or other requirements of the credit card account. For example, card issuers are not permitted to charge a $40 fee when a consumer is late making a $20 minimum payment. Instead, in this example, the fee cannot exceed $20. The regulation also bans imposition of penalty fees when there is no dollar amount associated with the violation, such as fees based on “inactivity” fees based on the consumer’s failure to use the account to make new purchases, or declined transaction fees for credit transactions that the card issuer declines to authorize. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, the regulation prohibits a card issuer from imposing declined transaction fees in connection with the credit feature, regardless of whether the declined transaction fee is imposed on the credit feature or on the asset feature of the prepaid account (Comment 52(b)(2)(i)-7). The regulation also prohibits issuers from charging multiple penalty fees based on a single late payment or other violation of the account terms.

⁵⁸ The dollar amounts in this paragraph may be adjusted annually by the CFPB to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index that warrant an increase or decrease of a whole dollar. The amounts increased in 2022 to $30 and $41 from $29 and $40, respectively, effective January 1, 2022. Further adjustments may be made in subsequent years (See 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii)(D); Comment 52(b)(1)(ii) – 2).

Payment Allocation – 12 CFR 1026.53

When different rates apply to different balances on a credit card account, issuers are generally required to allocate payments in excess of the minimum payment first to the balance with the highest APR and then to any remaining portion to the other balances in descending order based on the applicable APR.

For deferred interest programs, however, issuers must allocate excess payments first to the deferred interest balance during the last two billing cycles of the deferred interest period. In addition, during a deferred interest period, issuers are permitted (but not required) to allocate excess payments in the manner requested by the consumer.

For accounts with secured balances, issuers are permitted (but not required) to allocate excess payments to the secured balance if requested by the consumer.

Double-Cycle Billing and Partial Grace Period – 12 CFR 1026.54

Issuers are generally prohibited from imposing finance charges on balances for days in previous billing cycles as a result of the loss of a grace period. In addition, when a consumer pays some, but not all, of a balance prior to the expiration of a grace period, an issuer is prohibited from imposing finance charges on the portion of the balance that has been repaid.

Restrictions on Applying Increased Rates to Existing Balances and Increasing Certain Fees and Charges – 12 CFR 1026.55

Unless an exception applies, a card issuer must not increase an annual percentage rate or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) on a credit card account. With regard to a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card where the credit feature is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, this restriction applies regardless of whether these fees or annual percentage rates are imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account or on the credit feature (Comment 55(a)-3). There are some general exceptions to the prohibition against applying increased rates to existing balances and increasing certain fees or charges:

- A temporary or promotional rate or temporary fee or charge that lasts at least six months, and that is required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii), provided that the card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements. Fees and charges required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii),

(b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) are periodic fees for issuance or availability of an open-end plan (such as an annual fee); a fixed finance charge (and any minimum interest charge) that exceeds $1; or a charge for required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension;

- The rate is increased due to the operation of an index available to the general public and not under the card issuer's control (i.e., the rate is a variable rate);
- The minimum payment has not been received within 60 days after the due date, provided that the card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements and adheres to certain requirements when a series of on-time payments are received;
- The consumer successfully completes or fails to comply with the terms of a workout arrangement, provided that card issuer complied with applicable disclosure requirements and adheres to certain requirements upon the completion or failure of the arrangement; and
- The APR on an existing balance or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) has been reduced pursuant to the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) or a similar federal or state statute or regulation. The creditor is permitted to increase the rate, fee, or charge once the SCRA ceases to apply, but only to the rate, fee, or charge that applied prior to the reduction.

Regulation Z's limitations on the application of increased rates and certain fees and charges to existing balances continue to apply when the account is closed, acquired by another institution through a merger or the sale of a credit card portfolio, or when the balance is transferred to another credit account issued by the same creditor (or its affiliate or subsidiary).

Issuers are generally prevented from increasing the APR applicable to new transactions or a fee or charge subject to 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) during the first year after an account is opened. After the first year, issuers are permitted to increase the APRs that apply to new transactions or a fee or charge subject to 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) so long as the creditor complies with the regulation's 45-day advance notice requirement (12 CFR 1026.9).

Regulation Z's limitations on the application of increased rates to existing balances and limitations on the increase of certain fees or charges apply upon cessation of a waiver or rebate of interest, fees, or charges if the issuer promotes the waiver or rebate.

Fees for Transactions that Exceed the Credit Limit – 12 CFR 1026.56

Consumer consent requirement – Regulation Z requires an issuer to obtain a consumer's express consent (or opt in) before the issuer may impose any fees on a consumer's credit card account for making an extension of credit that exceeds the account's credit limit. Prior to providing such consent, the consumer must be notified by the issuer of any fees that may be assessed for an over-the-limit transaction. If the consumer consents, the issuer is also required to provide written confirmation (or electronic confirmation if the consumer agrees) of the consumer's consent and a notice of the consumer's right to revoke that consent on the front page of any periodic statement that reflects the imposition of an over-the-limit fee.

Prior to obtaining a consumer's consent to the payment of over-the-limit transactions, the issuer must provide the consumer with a notice disclosing, among other things, the dollar amount of any charges that will be assessed for an over-the-limit transaction, as well as any increased rate that may apply if the consumer exceeds the credit limit. Issuers are prevented from assessing any over-the-limit fee or charge on an account unless the consumer consents to the payment of transactions that exceed the credit limit.

Prohibited practices – Even if the consumer has affirmatively consented to the issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions, Regulation Z prohibits certain issuer practices in connection with the assessment of over-the-limit fees or charges. An issuer can only charge one over-the-limit fee or charge per billing cycle. In addition, an issuer cannot impose an over-the-limit fee on the account for the same transaction in more than three billing cycles. Furthermore, fees may not be imposed for the same transaction in the second or third billing cycle unless the consumer has failed to reduce the account balance below the credit limit by the payment due date in that cycle.

Regulation Z also prohibits unfair or deceptive acts or practices in connection with the manipulation of credit limits in order to increase over-the-limit fees or other penalty charges. Specifically, issuers are prohibited from engaging in three practices:

- Assessing an over-the-limit fee because the creditor failed to promptly replenish the consumer's available credit;
- Conditioning the amount of available credit on the consumer's consent to the payment of over-the-limit transactions (e.g., opting in to an over-the-limit service to obtain a higher credit limit); and
- Imposing any over-the-limit fee if the credit limit is exceeded solely because of the issuer's assessment of accrued interest charges or fees on the consumer's account.

Special Rules for Marketing to Students – 12 CFR 1026.57

Regulation Z establishes several requirements related to the marketing of credit cards and other open-end consumer credit plans to students at an institution of higher education, including the marketing of a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card and prepaid account and a prepaid account where a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card may be added in the future, to students at an institution of higher education (Comments 57(a)(1)-1, 57(a)(5)-1, and 57(c)-7). The regulation limits a creditor's ability to offer a college student any tangible item to induce the student to apply for or participate in an open-end consumer credit plan offered by the creditor. Specifically, Regulation Z prohibits a card issuer from offering tangible items as an inducement:

- On the campus of an institution of higher education;
- Near the campus of an institution of higher education; or
- At an event sponsored by or related to an institution of higher education

A tangible item means physical items, such as gift cards, t-shirts, or magazine subscriptions, but does not include nonphysical items such as discounts, reward points, or promotional credit terms. With respect to offers “near” the campus, the commentary to the regulation states that a location that is within 1,000 feet of the border of the campus is considered near the campus.

Regulation Z also requires card issuers to submit an annual report to the CFPB containing the terms and conditions of business, marketing, or promotional agreements with an institution of higher education or an alumni organization or foundation affiliated with an institution of higher education.

Online Disclosure of Credit Card Agreements – 12 CFR 1026.58

The regulation requires that issuers post credit card agreements on their websites and to submit those agreements to the CFPB for posting on a website maintained by the CFPB. There are three exceptions for when issuers are not required to provide statements to the CFPB:

- The issuer has fewer than 10,000 open credit card accounts; or
- The agreement currently is not offered to the public and the agreement is used only for one or more private label credit card plans with credit cards usable only at a single merchant or group of affiliated merchants and that involves fewer than 10,000 open accounts; or
- The agreement currently is not offered to the public and the agreement is for one or more plans offered to test a new product offered only to a limited group of consumers for a limited time that involves fewer than 10,000 open accounts.

Reevaluation of Rate Increases – 12 CFR 1026.59

For any rate increase imposed on or after January 1, 2009, that requires 45 days advance notice, the regulation requires card issuers to review the account no less frequently than once each six months and, if appropriate based on that review, reduce the annual percentage rate. The requirement to reevaluate rate increases applies both to increases in annual percentage rates based on consumer-specific factors, such as changes in the consumer's creditworthiness, and to increases in annual percentage rates imposed based on factors that are not specific to the consumer, such as changes in market conditions or the issuer's cost of funds. If, based on its review, a card issuer is required to reduce the rate applicable to an account, the final regulation requires that the rate be reduced within 45 days after completion of the evaluation.

This review must consider either the same factors on which the increase was originally based or the factors the card issuer currently considers in determining the annual percentage rate applicable to similar new credit card accounts.

Hybrid Prepaid-Credit Cards – 12 CFR 1026.61

Generally, this section applies to credit offered in connection with a prepaid account. A prepaid card is a hybrid prepaid-credit card when it has a separate accessible credit feature, or a credit feature structured as a negative balance on the asset feature of the prepaid account (except as described below). Further, a hybrid prepaid-credit card is a credit card for the purposes of this regulation with respect to those credit features.

A prepaid card is a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to a separate credit feature when it is a single device that can be used from time to time to access the separate credit feature where the following two conditions are both satisfied: (1) the card can be used to draw, transfer, or authorize the draw or transfer of credit from the separate credit feature in the course of authorizing, settling, or otherwise completing transactions conducted with the card to obtain goods or services, obtain cash, or conduct person-to-person transfers; and (2) the separate credit feature is offered by the prepaid account issuer, its affiliate, or its business partner. A separate credit feature that is accessed by a hybrid prepaid-credit card is described as a “covered separate credit feature.” A prepaid card is not a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to a separate credit feature if it does not meet the two conditions discussed above, although that separate credit feature may be subject to other provisions of Regulation Z depending on its own terms and conditions, independent of the connection to the prepaid account.

Generally, the regulation prohibits structuring a hybrid prepaid-credit card to access credit through a negative balance on the asset feature of a prepaid account. However, a prepaid card is not a hybrid prepaid-credit card with respect to credit extended through a negative balance on the asset feature of a prepaid account if several conditions are met. One condition is that the prepaid card cannot access credit from a covered separate credit feature that is offered by a prepaid account issuer or its affiliate. In addition, the prepaid account issuer must have an established policy and practice of either: declining to authorize any transaction for which it reasonably believes a consumer has insufficient or unavailable funds in the asset feature of the prepaid account at the time the transaction is authorized to cover the amount of the transaction; or declining to authorize such transactions except when (1) the amount of the transaction will not cause the asset feature balance to become negative by more than $10 at the time of the authorization, or (2) the issuer has received an instruction, confirmation, or request to load funds from a separate asset account to the prepaid account, but the funds have not yet settled and the amount of the transaction will not cause the asset balance to become negative at the time of the authorization by more than the incoming or requested load amount. Furthermore, under this exception, the issuer may not impose any of the following fees or charges on the asset feature of the prepaid account:

- Fees or charges for opening, issuing, or holding a negative balance on the asset feature, or for the availability of credit, whether imposed on a one-time or periodic basis;⁵⁹
- Fees or charges that will be imposed only when credit is extended on the asset feature or when there is a negative balance on the asset feature;⁶⁰ and
- Fees or charges where the amount of the fee or charge is higher when credit is extended on the asset feature or when there is a negative balance on the asset feature.
- Issuers must wait at least 30 days after a prepaid account is registered before opening a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, making a solicitation or providing an application to open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card, or allowing an existing credit feature opened prior to the consumer obtaining the prepaid account to become a covered separate credit feature accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card. Issuers must obtain an application or specific request from the consumer to link such a credit feature to a prepaid account (Comment 12(a)(1)-7.ii).

Liability and Defenses

Civil Liability – TILA Sections 129B, 129C, 130 and 131

If a creditor fails to comply with any requirements of the TILA, other than with the advertising provisions of chapter 3, it may be held liable to the consumer for:

- Actual damage, and
- Cost of any successful legal action together with reasonable attorney's fees.

⁵⁹ This provision does not prohibit fees or charges to open, issue, or hold the prepaid account generally, where the amount of the fee or charge imposed on the asset feature is not higher based on whether credit might be offered or has been accepted, whether or how much credit the consumer has accessed, or the amount of credit available.

The creditor also may be held liable for any of the following:

- In an individual action, twice the amount of the finance charge involved.
- In an individual action relating to an open-end credit transaction that is not secured by real property or a dwelling, twice the amount of the finance charge involved, with a minimum of $500 and a maximum of $5,000 or such higher amount as may be appropriate in the case of an established pattern or practice of such failure.
- In an individual action relating to a closed-end credit transaction secured by real property or a dwelling, not less than $400 and not more than $4,000.
- In a class action, such amount as the court may allow (with no minimum recovery for each class member). However, the total amount of recovery in any class actions arising out of the same failure to comply by the same creditor cannot be more than $1 million or 1 percent of the creditor's net worth, whichever is less.

A creditor that fails to comply with TILA Section 129, 15 U.S.C. Section 1639 (requirements for certain mortgages), may be held liable to the consumer for all finance charges and fees paid by the consumer unless the creditor demonstrates that the failure was not material. A mortgage originator that is not a creditor and that fails to comply with TILA Section 129B (requirements for mortgage loan originators) also may be liable to consumers for the greater of actual damages or an amount equal to three times the total amount of direct and indirect compensation or gain to the mortgage originator in connection with the loan, plus costs, including reasonable attorney's fees. In addition, TILA Section 130(a) provides that a creditor may be liable for failure to comply with the ability-to-repay requirements of TILA Section 129C(a) unless the creditor demonstrates that failure to comply was not material.

Generally, civil actions that may be brought against a creditor may be maintained against any assignee of the creditor only if the violation is apparent on the face of the disclosure statement or other documents assigned, except where the assignment was involuntary. For high-cost mortgage loans (under 12 CFR 1026.32(a)), any subsequent purchaser or assignee is subject to all claims and defenses that the consumer could assert against the creditor, unless the assignee demonstrates that it could not reasonably have determined that the loan was a high-cost mortgage loan subject to (12 CFR 1026.32).

In specified circumstances, the creditor or assignee has no liability if it corrects identified errors within 60 days of discovering the errors and prior to the institution of a civil action or the receipt of written notice of the error from the obligor. Additionally, a creditor and assignee will not be liable for bona fide errors that occurred despite the maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid any such error.

Moreover, the TILA also provides consumers with the right to assert a violation of the TILA's anti-steering provisions or the ability-to-repay standards for residential mortgage loan requirements "as a matter of defense by recoupment or setoff" against a foreclosure action. In general, the amount of recoupment or setoff shall be equal to the amount that the consumer would be entitled to generally under 15 U.S.C. 1640(a) for a valid claim, plus the cost to the consumer of the action (including reasonable attorney's fees).

Refer to Sections 129B, 129C, 130, and 131 of TILA for more information.

Criminal Liability – TILA Section 112

Anyone who willingly and knowingly fails to comply with any requirement of the TILA will be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Administrative Actions – TILA Section 108

TILA authorizes federal regulatory agencies,⁶¹ when carrying out enforcement activities, to require financial institutions to make monetary and other adjustments to the consumers' accounts when the true finance charge or APR exceeds the disclosed finance charge or APR by more than a specified accuracy tolerance. That authorization extends to unintentional errors, including isolated violations (e.g., an error that occurred only once or errors, often without a common cause, that occurred infrequently and randomly).

Under certain circumstances, the TILA requires federal regulatory agencies to order financial institutions to reimburse consumers when understatement of the APR or finance charge involves:

- Patterns or practices of violations (e.g., errors that occurred, often with a common cause, consistently or frequently, reflecting a pattern with a specific type or types of consumer credit);
- Gross negligence; or
- Willful noncompliance intended to mislead the person to whom the credit was extended.

Any administrative enforcement proceeding that may be brought by a regulatory agency against a creditor may be maintained against any assignee of the creditor if the violation is apparent on the face of the disclosure statement or other documents assigned, except where the assignment was involuntary under Section 131 (15 U.S.C. 1641).

Specific Defenses – TILA Section 108

Defense Against Civil, Criminal, and Administrative Actions

A financial institution in violation of TILA may avoid liability by:

- Discovering the error before an action is brought against the financial institution, or before the consumer notifies the financial institution, in writing, of the error;
- Notifying the consumer of the error within 60 days of discovery; and
- Making the necessary adjustments to the consumer's account, also within 60 days of discovery (The consumer will pay no more than the lesser of the finance charge actually disclosed or the dollar equivalent of the APR actually disclosed).

The above three actions also may allow the financial institution to avoid a regulatory order to reimburse the customer.

An error is "discovered" if it is:

- Discussed in a final, written report of examination;
- Identified through the financial institution's own procedures; or
- An inaccurately disclosed APR or finance charge included in a regulatory agency notification to the financial institution.

When a disclosure error occurs, the financial institution is not required to re-disclose after a loan has been consummated or an account has been opened. If the financial institution corrects a disclosure error by merely re-disclosing required information accurately, without adjusting the consumer's account, the financial institution may still be subject to civil liability and an order to reimburse from its regulator.

The circumstances under which a financial institution may avoid liability under the TILA do not apply to violations of the Fair Credit Billing Act (chapter 4 of the TILA).

Additional Defenses Against Civil Actions

The financial institution may avoid liability in a civil action if it shows by a preponderance of evidence that the violation was not intentional and resulted from a bona fide error that occurred despite the maintenance of procedures to avoid the error.

A bona fide error may include a clerical, calculation, computer malfunction, programming, or printing error. It does not include an error of legal judgment.

Showing that a violation occurred unintentionally could be difficult if the financial institution is unable to produce evidence that explicitly indicates it has an internal controls program designed to ensure compliance. The financial institution's demonstrated commitment to compliance and its adoption of policies and procedures to detect errors before disclosures are furnished to consumers could strengthen its defense.

Statute of Limitations – TILA Sections 108, 129, 129B, 129C, 129D, 129E, 129F, 129G, 129H, and 130

In general, civil actions may be brought within one year after the violation occurred. For private education loans, civil actions may be brought within one year from the date on which the first regular payment of principal and interest is due. After that time, and if allowed by state law, the consumer may still assert the violation as a defense if a financial institution were to bring an action to collect the consumer's debt.

A civil action for a violation of TILA Section 129 (requirements for certain mortgages), 129B (residential mortgage loan origination), or 129C (minimum standards for residential mortgage loans) may be brought three years from the date of the occurrence of the violation (as compared with one year for most other TILA violations) (TILA Section 130(e)).

Moreover, TILA provides that when a creditor, assignee, other holder, or anyone acting on such a person's behalf initiates a foreclosure action on, or any other action to collect the debt in connection with a residential mortgage loan, a consumer may assert a violation of TILA Section 129B(c)(1) or (2) or 129C(a) "as a matter of defense by recoupment or set off" (TILA section 130(k)). There is no time limit on the use of this defense and the amount of recoupment or setoff is limited, with respect to the special statutory damages, to no more than three years of finance charges and fees.

Criminal actions and actions brought by regulators,⁶² are not subject to the general one-year statute of limitations. Actions brought by a state attorney general to enforce a violation of section 129, 129B, 129C, 129D, 129E, 129F, 129G, or 129H may be brought not later than 3 years after the date on which the violation occurs.

However, administrative enforcement actions under the policy guide involving erroneously disclosed APRs and finance charges may be subject to time limitations by the TILA. Those limitations range from the date of the last regulatory examination of the financial institution, to as far back as 1969, depending on when loans were made, when violations were identified, whether the violations were repeat violations, and other factors.

There is no time limitation on willful violations intended to mislead the consumer. A general summary of the various time limitations that otherwise apply follows.

- For open-end credit, reimbursement applies to violations not older than two years.
- For closed-end credit, reimbursement is generally directed for loans with violations occurring since the immediately preceding examination.

Rescission Rights (Open-End and Closed-End Credit) – 12 CFR 1026.15 and 1026.23

TILA provides that for certain transactions secured by the consumer's principal dwelling, a consumer has three business days after becoming obligated on the debt to rescind the transaction. The right of rescission allows consumer(s) time to reexamine their credit agreements and cost disclosures and to reconsider whether they want to place their homes at risk by offering them as security for the credit. A higher-priced mortgage loan (whether or not it is a HOEPA loan) having a prepayment penalty that does not conform to the prepayment penalty limitations (12 CFR 1026.32(c) and (d) and 12 CFR 1026.43(g) (subject to certain exclusions)), is also subject to a three-year right of rescission. Transactions exempt from the right of rescission include residential mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(24)) and refinancings or consolidations with the original creditor where no "new money" is advanced.

If a transaction is rescindable, consumers must be given a notice explaining that the creditor has a security interest in the consumer's home, that the consumer may rescind, how the consumer may rescind, the effects of rescission, and the date the rescission period expires.

To rescind a transaction, a consumer must notify the creditor in writing by midnight of the third business day after the latest of three events:

- Consummation of the transaction;
- Delivery of material TILA disclosures; or

⁶² However, reimbursement required by regulatory action may be limited to the last examination conducted at the institution.

- Receipt⁶³ of the required notice of the right to rescind.

For purposes of rescission, business day means every calendar day except Sundays and the legal public holidays (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6)). The term “material disclosures” is defined in 12 CFR 1026.23(a)(3) to mean the required disclosures of the APR, the finance charge, the amount financed, the total of payments, the payment schedule, and the disclosures and limitations referred to in 12 CFR 1026.32(c) and (d) and 12 CFR 1026.43(g).

The creditor may not disburse any monies (except into an escrow account) and may not provide services or materials until the three-day rescission period has elapsed and the creditor is reasonably satisfied that the consumer has not rescinded. If the consumer rescinds the transaction, the creditor must refund all amounts paid by the consumer (even amounts disbursed to third parties) and terminate its security interest in the consumer’s home.

A consumer may waive the three-day rescission period and receive immediate access to loan proceeds if the consumer has a “bona fide personal financial emergency.” The consumer must give the creditor a signed and dated waiver statement that describes the emergency, specifically waives the right, and bears the signatures of all consumers entitled to rescind the transaction. The consumer provides the explanation for the bona fide personal financial emergency, but the creditor decides the sufficiency of the emergency.

If the required rescission notice or material TILA disclosures are not delivered or if they are inaccurate, the consumer’s right to rescind may be extended from three days after becoming obligated on a loan to up to three years.

Examination Objectives⁶⁴

1. To appraise the quality of the financial institution’s compliance management system for the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z (12 CFR part 1026).
 2. To determine the reliance that can be placed on the financial institution’s compliance management system, including internal controls and procedures performed by the person(s) responsible for monitoring the financial institution’s compliance review function for the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z.
 3. To determine the financial institution’s compliance with the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z.
4. To initiate corrective action when policies or internal controls are deficient, or when violations of law or regulation are identified.
 5. To determine whether the institution will be required to make adjustments to consumer accounts under the restitution provisions of the Truth in Lending Act.

Examination Procedures⁶⁵

General Procedures

- I. Obtain information pertinent to the area of examination from the financial institution’s compliance management system program (historical examination findings, complaint information, and significant findings from compliance review and audit).
- II. Through discussions with management and review of the below documents, determine whether the financial institution’s internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance in the area under review. Identify procedures used daily to detect errors/violations promptly. Also, review the procedures used to ensure compliance when changes occur (e.g., changes in interest rates, service charges, computation methods, and software programs).
 - Organizational charts
 - Process flowcharts
 - Policies and procedures
 - Loan documentation and disclosures
 - Checklists/worksheets and review documents
 - Computer programs
- III. Review compliance review and audit workpapers and determine whether:
 - The procedures used address all regulatory provisions (See Transactional Testing section).
 - Steps are taken to follow up on previously identified deficiencies.
 - The procedures used include samples that cover all product types and decision centers.

⁶³ 12 CFR 1026.15(b) and 1026.23(b)(1) were amended to include the electronic delivery of the notice of the right to rescind. If a paper notice of the right to rescind is used, a creditor must deliver two copies of the notice to each consumer entitled to rescind. However, under the final rule on electronic delivery of disclosures if the notice is in electronic form, in accordance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the E-Sign Act, only one copy to each customer is required.

⁶⁴These procedures reflect changes to TILA and Regulation Z through September 2019, including applicable provisions of the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief and Consumer Protection Act P.L. 115-174 (May 24, 2018) that do not require rulemaking to be effective.

⁶⁵ This reflects the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

V. Lending — TILA

- The work performed is accurate (through a review of some transactions).
 - Significant deficiencies, and the root cause of the deficiencies, are included in reports to management/board.
 - Corrective actions are timely and appropriate.
 - The area is reviewed at an appropriate interval, based upon appropriate risks.
- IV. Review the financial institution's record retention practices to determine whether the required documentation or evidence of compliance is retained for at least:
- Two years after the disclosures were required to be made or other action was required to be taken, other than for the advertising requirements, requirements for mortgages subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), and certain requirements for mortgages, which are described below (12 CFR 1026.25(a)).
 - Three years after the later of the date of consummation, the date disclosures are required to be made, or the date action is required to be taken, for evidence of compliance with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)-(f) (regarding closed-end loans that are secured by real property or a cooperative unit and subject to those sections) other than as set forth in 4.c below (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(i)).
 - Five years after consummation for completed Closing Disclosure forms, and all documents related to these disclosures, as required by 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) or (f)(4)(i). If the loan is sold, transferred, or otherwise disposed of during that time, the creditor must provide a copy of the Closing Disclosure to the owner or servicer as part of the loan file transfer, who must retain the disclosure for the remainder of the five-year period (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(1)(ii)).
 - Three years after the date of receipt of payment to show compliance with loan originator compensation requirements (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(2)).
 - Three years after consummation to show compliance with ability-to-repay minimum standards (12 CFR 1026.43(c)-(f)) and prepayment penalty restrictions (12 CFR 1026.43(g)) for loans secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.25(c)(3)).

Disclosure Forms

- I. Determine if the financial institution has changed any TILA disclosure forms or if there are forms that have not been previously reviewed for accuracy. If so:

Verify the accuracy of each disclosure by reviewing the following as applicable:

- Credit card application/solicitation disclosures (12 CFR 1026.60(b)-(e))
- HELOC disclosures (12 CFR 1026.40(d) and (e))
- Initial disclosures 12 CFR 1026.6 and, if applicable, additional HELOC disclosures (12 CFR 1026.40)
- Periodic statement disclosures (12 CFR 1026.7 and 1026.41)
- Statement of billing rights and change in terms notice (12 CFR 1026.9(a),(b),(c) or (g))
- Note and/or contract forms (including those furnished to dealers)
- Notice of Right to Rescind/Cancel (12 CFR 1026.15(b), 12 CFR 1026.23(b)(1)) and 12 CFR 1026.47(c)(4)
- Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 12 CFR 1026.37)
- Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(f) and 12 CFR 1026.38)
- Special information booklet (12 CFR 1026.19(g))
- Other closed-end credit transaction disclosures not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) or (f) (12 CFR 1026.17(a) and 12 CFR 1026.18)
- ARM disclosures (12 CFR 1026.19(b) 1026.20(c) – (d))

Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms Review Procedures

Closed-end consumer credit transactions secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, are subject to the disclosure, timing, and other requirements under the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure rule (TILA-RESPA or TRID). Thus, for most closed-end mortgages, including construction-only loans and loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres, creditors must provide the Loan Estimate and the Closing Disclosure. There is a partial exemption in 12 CFR 1026.3(h) from the requirement to provide the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure if the transaction meets all of the following criteria: (i) The transaction is secured by a subordinate lien; (ii) the transaction is for the purpose of home buyer assistance, such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention; (iii) that the credit contract does not require the payment of interest; (iv) the credit contract provides for repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer's principal dwelling; and (v) the total costs payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction at consummation are limited to (A) recording fees, (B) transfer taxes, (C) a bona fide and reasonable application fee, and (D) a bona fide and reasonable fee for housing counseling services; and the total of costs payable by the consumer for the application fee and housing counseling services is less than 1 percent of the amount of credit extended. For those transactions meeting the criteria for a partial exemption, creditors may provide either a compliant disclosure of the cost of credit under 12 CFR 1026.18 or a compliant Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure, and do not need to provide the special information booklet, Good Faith Estimate, or HUD-1 settlement statement (12 CFR 1024.5(d)).

NOTE: The GFE, HUD-1, and Truth in Lending forms continue to be used for transactions covered by the other disclosure requirements of TILA or RESPA (e.g., reverse mortgages) or before the effective date of the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule (October 3, 2015) (12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f)).

Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms – For transactions under 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)

NOTE: The 2017 TILA-RESPA rule includes an optional compliance period, which began on October 10, 2017 and is for transactions for which a creditor or mortgage broker received an application prior to October 1, 2018. During this period, early compliance with the 2017 rule was allowed but not required.

- I. For a closed-end credit transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), determine whether the creditor provides disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.37 (Loan Estimate) and 12 CFR 1026.38 (Closing Disclosure) (12 CFR 1026.19(e) and 12 CFR 1026.19(f)).
- For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e), determine whether the creditor provides the good faith disclosures in the form required by 12 CFR 1026.37 and conforming to the Loan Estimate in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.19(e), 12 CFR 1026.37(o)).
- For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(f), determine whether the creditor provides the Closing Disclosure in the form required by 12 CFR 1026.38 and conforming to the Closing Disclosure in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.19(f), 12 CFR 1026.38(t)).

NOTE: Use of the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure is mandatory for RESPA-covered transactions. For transactions not covered by RESPA, the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure may be considered a model form.

Loan Estimate – 12 CFR 1026.37(a) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

- I. Loan Estimate. Determine whether the disclosures required for the Loan Estimate are accurately completed and include the following disclosures on the first page (12 CFR 1026.37(a)). Disclosures are detailed below according to the designations made on the Loan Estimate form:
 - The statement: “Save this Loan Estimate to compare with your Closing Disclosure” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(2));
 - Name and address of creditor (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(3));
 - Date Issued (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(4));
 - Applicants (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(5));
 - Property The property address, including zip code (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(6));
 - Sale Price (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)):
 - For transactions with a seller, the contract sale price of the property identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(6), labeled “Sale Price.”
 - For transactions that do not have a seller, the estimated value of the property identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(6), labeled “Prop. Value.”
 - Loan Term. Stated in years, months, or both, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8));
 - Purpose. Loan purpose, categorized as “Purchase,” “Refinance,” or “Construction.” All other loan purposes must be categorized as “Home Equity Loan” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9));
 - Product. Product type, including the type of interest rate categorized as “Adjustable Rate,” “Step Rate,” or “Fixed Rate.” This disclosure must be preceded by the type of feature that may change the consumer's periodic payment, such as “Negative Amortization,” “Interest Only,” “Step Payment,” “Balloon Payment,” or “Seasonal Payment,” with the duration of any introductory rate or payment period and the first adjustment period if applicable (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10));
 - Loan Type. Categorized as “Conventional,” “FHA,” “VA,” or “Other” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(11));
 - Loan ID #. (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(12)); and
 - Rate Lock. A statement of whether the disclosed interest rate is locked for a specific period. If so, the date and time (including time zone) that the lock will expire, along with an accompanying statement that the interest rate, any points, and any lender credits may change unless the interest rate has been locked (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(13)).

V. Lending — TILA

Loan Terms – 12 CFR 1026.37(b) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

II. Loan Terms. Determine whether, under the heading “Loan Terms,” all disclosures are completed and accurate (12 CFR 1026.37(b)):

- Loan Amount (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1));
- Interest Rate (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2));
- Principal and Interest. The applicable unit period (i.e., biweekly, monthly, yearly) must precede the initial periodic payment amount that will be due under the terms of the legal obligation, labeled “Principal & Interest” (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(3));
- Prepayment Penalty. A statement of whether the loan contains a prepayment penalty, an affirmative or negative response to the question, the maximum amount of the prepayment penalty that may be imposed, and the date on which the penalty may no longer be applied (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(4), 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(7)(i)). If the date is disclosed (for an affirmative response), determine whether it is disclosed as the year in which the event occurs, counting from the date of consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(iii));
- Balloon Payment. A statement of whether the loan contains a balloon payment, an affirmative or negative response to the question, the maximum amount of the balloon payment, and the due date of such payment (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(5), 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(7)(ii)). If the date is disclosed (for an affirmative response), determine whether it is disclosed as the year in which the event occurs, counting from the due date of the initial periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(ii)); and
- Whether the loan amount, interest rate, or monthly principal and interest can increase after closing (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)) and, if so, the information required by 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6)(i)-(iii) and 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(8)(i)-(ii).

Projected Payments – 12 CFR 1026.37(c) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

III. Projected Payments. Determine whether, under the heading “Projected Payments” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)):

- a. All required fields in the table are completed, follow the formatting and statement requirements, are accurate, and itemize the periodic payments or range of payments together with an itemized estimate of taxes, insurance, assessments, and payments to be made with escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1) – (5));

NOTE: If accurate, a creditor can indicate that a portion of taxes, insurance, and assessments will be paid with escrow account funds, such as by using the word “some” (Comment 37(c)(4)(iv)-2).

- b. Each separate periodic payment or range of payments is itemized as follows (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)):
 - i. Principal and Interest. The amount payable for principal and interest labeled “Principal & Interest,” including the term “only interest” if the payment or range of payments includes any interest-only payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i));
 - A. Adjustable Rate Loans. The maximum principal and interest payment must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the maximum possible interest rate. The minimum amounts must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the minimum possible interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i)(A));
 - B. Adjustable Rate and Negative Amortization Loans. The maximum principal and interest amounts (after the loan term period for which the loan principal balance may increase) must be determined by assuming the maximum principal amount permitted under the terms of the legal obligation at the end of the loan term period. The minimum amounts must be determined by assuming that the interest rate in effect throughout the loan term is the minimum possible interest rate (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(i)(B));
 - ii. Mortgage Insurance. The maximum amount payable for mortgage insurance premiums corresponding to the principal and interest payment disclosed, labeled “Mortgage Insurance” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(ii));
 - iii. Escrow. The amount payable into an escrow account to pay some or all of the charges described in 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(ii), as applicable, labeled “Escrow,” together with a statement that the amount disclosed can increase over time (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iii)); and
 - iv. Total Monthly Payment. The total periodic payment, calculated as the sums disclosed as the “Principal & Interest,” “Mortgage Insurance,” and “Escrow,” Labeled “Total Monthly Payment” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iv)).

NOTE: The labels required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2) must be listed under the subheading “Payment Calculation” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(i)).

- c. If the amount of a periodic monthly payment may change, additional, separate periodic payments, or range of payments have been disclosed. Events requiring additional disclosure(s) include: (i) the change of the periodic principal and interest payment or range of such payments, (ii) a scheduled balloon payment, (iii) the automatic termination of mortgage insurance, or (iv) the anniversary of the due date of the initial periodic payment or range of payments immediately following the occurrence of a change in the principal and interest payment or range of such payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(i));
- d. The creditor has met the following in disclosing a range of payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)):
 - i. The creditor has disclosed both the minimum and maximum amount for both the principal and interest payment and the total periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii));
 - ii. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments where multiple events are combined into a single range of payments in order to meet the requirement that only four disclosures may be made (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(A));
 - iii. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments where multiple events occur during a single year or an event occurs during the same year as the initial periodic payment or range of payments. If the event occurs during the same year as the initial periodic payment or range of payments, the creditor has disclosed the range that would apply during the year in which the events will occur (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(B));

NOTE: If multiple changes to periodic principal and interest payments would result in more than one separate periodic payment or range of payments in a single year, the creditor must combine the changes and disclose them as a single range of payments (Comment 37(c)(1)(iii)(B)-1); and

- iv. The creditor has accurately disclosed a range of payments if the periodic principal and interest payment may adjust based on index rates at the time an interest rate adjustment may occur (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii)(C));

- e. The creditor has not disclosed more than four separate periodic payments or ranges of payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)):
 - i. If additional separate periodic payments or range of payments disclosures are required after the third separate periodic payment or range of payment disclosure, and the transaction does not involve a balloon payment, determine whether the creditor has disclosed the additional separate periodic payment or range of payments as a single fourth range of payments disclosure (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii));
 - ii. If additional separate periodic payments or range of payments disclosures are required and the transaction involves a final balloon payment, determine whether the creditor has disclosed the additional separate periodic payment or range of payments as a single range of payments after the second separate periodic payment disclosure. Disclosure of the final balloon payment must appear as the final disclosure, under the heading “Final Payment” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)(A), 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(iii));
 - iii. The automatic termination of mortgage insurance requires disclosure of an additional separate periodic payment or range of payments only if the total number of separate periodic payments or ranges of payments does not exceed three (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(ii)(B)); and
 - iv. Each separate periodic payment or range of payments must be disclosed under a subheading stating the years of the loan during which that payment or range of payments will apply. The years must be disclosed in sequence of whole years from the due date of the initial periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(3)(ii)).

NOTE: See the Narrative for further discussion of requirements related to the Projected Payments table.

- f. Taxes, Insurance, and Assessments. Determine whether the creditor accurately discloses (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)):
 - i. The sum of all mortgage-related obligations, expressed as a monthly amount, even if no escrow account for the payment of some or any of such charges will be established, labeled “Taxes, Insurance & Assessments” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(i)-(ii));

NOTE: The term “mortgage-related obligations,” as used here, takes the definition used in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8); however, it does not include amounts identified in 12 CFR 1026.4(b)(5). Amounts that must be disclosed as “Taxes, Insurance & Assessments” include premiums or other charges for credit life, accident, health, or loss-of-income insurance; premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property; or premiums or charges paid for debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage (12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8)).

- ii. A statement that the mortgage-related obligations disclosed can increase over time (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(iii)). If estimates are used for property taxes and homeowner’s insurance, they must reflect (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)):
 - A. The taxable assessed value of the real property or cooperative unit securing the transaction after consummation, including the value of any improvements on the property or to be constructed on the property if known. The disclosure must be made whether or not such construction will be financed from the proceeds of the transaction for property taxes (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(i)); and
 - B. The replacement costs of the property during the initial year after the transaction for premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(5)(ii));
- iii. A statement of whether the mortgage-related obligations include payments for property taxes; premiums or other charges for insurance against loss of or damage to property, or against liability arising out of the ownership or use of property; or as otherwise identified by 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8). The creditor must disclose whether the amounts will be paid by the creditor using escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(iv));

Note: If only a portion of such amounts are to be paid with escrow account funds, a creditor may so indicate, such as by using the word “some” (Comment 37(c)(4)(iv)-2).

- iv. A statement that the consumer must pay separately any mortgage-related obligations that are not paid by the creditor using escrow account funds (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(v)); and
- v. A reference to the escrow account information contained on page 2 of the Loan Estimate, captioned “Initial Escrow Payment at Closing” (12 CFR 1026.37(c)(4)(vi)).

Costs at Closing – 12 CFR 1026.37(d) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

- iv. Costs at Closing. Determine whether, under the heading “Costs at Closing,” the creditor discloses the Estimated Closing Costs (including Loan Costs and Other Costs, less Lender Credits) and the Estimated Cash to Close (including Closing Costs), based upon the calculations required by 12 CFR 1026.37(f), (g), and (h) (and found on page 2 of the Loan Estimate) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(1)).
- v. Optional Alternative Table for Transactions without a Seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing. Determine whether, for transactions that do not involve a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing, the creditor chose to use the alternative “Cash to Close” table. If so, determine whether the amount is calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iv) (Calculating Cash to Close), includes a statement of whether the disclosed estimated amount is due from or to the consumer; and includes a statement referring the consumer to the alternative “Calculating Cash to Close” table pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2) (12 CFR 1026.37(d)(2)).

NOTES:

- In a purchase transaction, the optional alternative disclosure may be used for the simultaneous subordinate financing Loan Estimate only if the first-lien Closing Disclosure will record the entirety of the seller’s transaction. (Comment 37(d)(2)-1) Creditors may only use this alternative estimated cash to close disclosure in conjunction with the alternative disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2) (Comment 37(d)(2)-1).
- See the Narrative for further discussion of requirements related to the Costs at Closing table.

Website Disclosure – 12 CFR 1026.37(e) (Page 1 of the Loan Estimate)

- 1. Website Reference. Determine whether the creditor discloses that the consumer may obtain general information and tools on the Bureau’s website and has included a link to the site specified in 12 CFR 1026.37(e) (12 CFR 1026.37(e)).

Closing Cost Details: Loan Costs – 12 CFR 1026.37(f) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

- 2. Loan Costs. Determine on page 2 whether, under the heading “Loan Costs,” the creditor makes the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.37(f)):
 - a. Origination charges. Accurately itemized to reflect each amount and a subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay to each creditor and loan originator for originating and extending the credit. Determine whether the points paid to the creditor to reduce the interest rate are itemized separately, as both a percentage of the amount of credit extended and a dollar amount and using the label “__% of Loan Amount (Points).” Determine whether points paid is the first item listed. If points to reduce the interest rate are not paid, this disclosure must be left blank (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(1));

- b. Services You Cannot Shop For. An accurate itemization, limited to 13 items, of each amount and subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay for settlement services that the consumer cannot shop for and that are provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include “Title” as an introductory description (12 CFR 1026.37)(f)(2);
- c. Services You Can Shop For. An accurate itemization, limited to 14 items, of each amount and subtotal of all amounts that the consumer will pay for settlement services that the consumer can shop for and that are provided by persons other than the creditor or mortgage broker. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include “Title” as an introductory description (12 CFR 1026.37)(f)(3));
- d. Total Loan Costs. An accurate sum of the subtotals required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) as Origination Charges, Services You Cannot Shop For and Services You Can Shop For (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(4)); and
- e. Other than as noted in item 1.a above, determine that items are ordered alphabetically by label under the applicable subheading. If there are more than the maximum allowable number of line items, determine that the remaining charges are disclosed in the aggregate in the last line as “Additional Charges” (12 CFR 1026.37(f)(5) and (f)(6)).

Closing Cost Details: Other Costs – 12 CFR 1026.37(g) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

- 3. Other Costs. Determine whether the creditor makes the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.37(g)):
 - a. Taxes and Other Government Fees. Accurately itemized to reflect amounts to be paid to state and local governments for taxes and other government fees, including subtotals for recording fees and other taxes. A separate line must be included for transfer taxes paid by the consumer. If not charged to the consumer, these fields must be left blank ((12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1));
 - b. Prepays. Accurately itemized to reflect amounts to be paid by the consumer in advance of the first scheduled payment and the subtotals of all such amounts. The disclosures must follow the required order and include the number of months and the total dollar amount to be paid at consummation for homeowner’s insurance and mortgage insurance premiums; the prepaid interest to be paid at consummation, based on daily interest, number of days, interest rate, and the total to be collected; the number of months for which property taxes are to be paid; and the amount the consumer will pay at consummation. If any of these items are not charged to the consumer, the field must be left blank. A maximum of three additional items may be disclosed (including applicable time period covered by the payment at consummation and total to be paid) as Prepays (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(2));

- c. Initial Escrow Payment at Closing. Accurately itemized to reflect the amounts that the consumer will be expected to place into an escrow account at consummation to be applied to recurring periodic charges and subtotals of all amounts. The disclosure must provide the amount escrowed each month, the number of months of escrow, and the total amount to be paid into the escrow account by the consumer at consummation. Homeowner’s insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, and property taxes must be separately subtotaled. If any of these items are not charged to the consumer, that field must be left blank. A maximum of five additional items may be disclosed as part of Initial Escrow Payment at Closing (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(3));
- d. Other. An accurate itemization of costs that the consumer is likely to pay or has contracted with a person other than the creditor or loan originator to pay, at closing and of which the creditor is aware at the time of issuing the Loan Estimate. Determine whether the creditor has used a descriptive label for each such amount and provided the subtotal of all such amounts. Determine whether the terms related to title insurance include “Title” as an introductory description and whether the parenthetical description “(optional)” is used at the end of the label for items disclosing any premiums paid for separate insurance, warranty, guarantee, or event-coverage products. A maximum of five items may be disclosed as “Other” (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(4));
- e. Total Other Costs. An accurate sum of the subtotals for Taxes and Other Government Fees, Prepays, Initial Escrow Payment at Closing, and Other disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(1) through (4) (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(5));
- f. Total Closing Costs. Accurate component amounts and sum of the following (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)):
 - i. D+I. A sum of the Total Loan Costs and Total Other Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(i)); and

- ii. Lender Credits. The amount of any lender credits, disclosed as a negative number. If no such amount is disclosed, this line must be left blank (12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii));

NOTE: The disclosure of “lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), is required by (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(i)). “Lender credits,” as identified in 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(6)(ii), represent the sum of non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits. Non-specific lender credits are generalized payments from the creditor to the consumer that do not pay for a particular fee on the disclosures provided pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)). Specific lender credits are specific payments, such as a credit, rebate, or reimbursement, from a creditor to the consumer to pay for a specific fee. Non-specific lender credits and specific lender credits are negative charges to the consumer (Comment 19(e)(3)(i)-5).

- g. Determine that items follow the alphabetical ordering and addenda restrictions of 12 CFR 1026.37(g)(7) and (g)(8).

Closing Cost Details: Calculating Cash to Close – 12 CFR 1026.37(h) (Page 2 of the Loan Estimate)

- 4. Calculating Cash to Close. Determine whether, under the heading “Calculating Cash to Close,” the creditor has accurately disclosed the total amount of cash or other funds that must be provided by the consumer at consummation, itemized into the following component amounts (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)):
 - a. Total Closing Costs. The amount disclosed as the sum of the loan costs, other costs, and lender credits, labeled “Total Closing Costs” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(i));
 - b. Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Amount). The amount of any closing costs to be paid out of loan proceeds, disclosed as a negative number, labeled “Closing Costs Financed (Paid from your Loan Account)” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii)). Determined by subtracting the estimated total amount of payments to third parties not otherwise disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f) and (g) from the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1);

NOTE: (1) If the result of the calculation is zero or negative, the amount of zero dollars is disclosed. (2) If the result of the calculation is a positive number, the amount is disclosed as a negative number but only to the extent that the absolute value of the number does not exceed the total amount of closing costs (Comment 37(h)(1)(ii)-1).

- c. Downpayment/Funds from Borrower. Labeled “Down Payment/Funds from Borrower”:
 - i. In a purchase transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(i), disclosed as the amount determined by subtracting the sum of the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and any amount of existing loans assumed or taken subject to that will be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iv), from the sale price of the property disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(i), except as required by 12 CFR 1026.38(h)(1)(iii)(A)(2) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A)(1));
 - ii. For a purchase transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(i) that is a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, a transaction involving or improvements to be made on the property, or when the sum of the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and any amount of existing loans assumed or taken subject to on the Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iv) exceeds the sale price of the property disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(i), disclosed as the amount of estimated funds from the consumer determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A)(2)); and
 - iii. For all other transactions, disclosed as the amount of estimated funds from the consumer determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(B)).
- d. Deposit.
 - i. for a purchase transaction, disclosed as the amount that is paid to the seller or held in trust or escrow by an attorney or other party under the terms of the agreement for the sale of the property, as a negative number, labeled “Deposit;” and
 - ii. For all other transactions, disclosed as zero dollars, labeled “Deposit” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iv)).
- e. Funds for Borrower. Disclosed as the amount of funds for the consumer, labeled “Funds for Borrower.” Determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) by subtracting the sum of the loan amount disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) and any amount of existing loans assumed or taken subject to that will be disclosed on the Closing Disclosure under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(2)(iv) (excluding any closing costs financed disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(ii)) from the total amount of all existing debt being satisfied in the transaction. The total amount of all existing debt being satisfied in the transaction is the sum of the amounts that will be disclosed on the Closing Disclosure in the summaries of transactions table under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(ii), (iii), and (v), as applicable:

- i. If the calculation yields a positive number, that amount is disclosed under the heading “Down Payment/Funds from Borrower,” (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(iii)(A)(2) or (B), as applicable) and zero dollars are disclosed under the heading “Funds for Borrower,” under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v)(A));
 - ii. - 12 CFR 1026.38(k) does not apply in a transaction where there is no seller, for example, in a refinance transaction, or a transaction with a construction purpose as defined in 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(9)(iii), or a simultaneous subordinate financing purchase transaction if the first-lien Closing Disclosure records the entirety of the seller's transaction (Comment 38(k)-1). If 12 CFR 1026.38(k) applies to a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, 12 CFR 1026.38(k) is completed based only on the terms and conditions of the simultaneous subordinate financing transaction and no contract sales price is disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(k)(1)(ii) on the Closing Disclosure for the simultaneous subordinate financing (Comment 38(k)(1)-1).

Payoffs and Payments Table for Transactions Without a Seller or Simultaneous Subordinate Financing Transaction – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) (Page 3 of the Closing Disclosure)

The following modifications to Form H-25 of Appendix H may be made for a transaction that does not involve a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing, and for which the alternative tables are disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e), as illustrated by Form H-25(J).

21. Payoff and Payments. For transactions without a seller, determine whether a creditor, using an optional modified Closing Disclosure (as illustrated by form H-25(J) in Appendix H), has provided alternative tables for Cash to Close, pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2), and for Calculating Cash to Close pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(e), and that the creditor itemizes the amounts of payments made at consummation to other parties from the credit extended to the consumer or funds provided by the consumer in connection with the transaction, including designees of the consumer, the payees, and a description of the purpose of such disbursements under the subheading “To;” and the total amount of such payments, labeled “Total Payoffs and Payments.”

NOTE: Funds provided by designees of the consumer may include gift funds, grants, proceeds from loans that satisfy the partial exemption criteria in 12 CFR 1026.3(h), and, on the Closing Disclosure for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, contributions from a seller for costs associated with the subordinate financing (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-1).

22. Disclosure of Subordinate Financing. For a transaction without a seller, or for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction, if a creditor chose to disclose the alternative tables under 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e), determine whether a creditor's modifications to form H-25 of Appendix H, if any, were permissible pursuant to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii).
- The information required by 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(4)(ii), (f), (g), and (h), with respect to loan costs, other costs, and closing costs paid by the seller, may be deleted (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(A)).
 - A table under the master heading “Closing Cost Details” required by 12 CFR 1026.38(f) may be added with the heading “Payoffs and Payments” that itemizes the amounts of payments made at closing to other parties from the credit extended to the consumer or funds provided by the consumer in connection with the transaction, including designees of the consumer; the payees and a description of the purpose of such disbursements under the subheading “To;” and the total amount of such payments, labeled “Total Payoffs and Payments” (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)).

- C. The tables required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(j) and (k) may be deleted (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(C)).

NOTE: The commentary to 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) provides guidance as follows:

- First-lien Closing Disclosure. On the Closing Disclosure for a first-lien transaction disclosed with the alternative tables pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e) that also has simultaneous subordinate financing, the proceeds of the subordinate financing are included in the payoff and payments table under 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) by disclosing, as a credit, the principal amount of the subordinate financing, and if the net proceeds of the subordinate financing are less than the principal amount of the subordinate financing, the net proceeds (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-2.i).
- Simultaneous subordinate financing – Closing Disclosure. On the Closing Disclosure for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction disclosed with the alternative tables pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e), the proceeds of the subordinate financing applied to the first-lien transaction may be included in the payoffs and payments table under 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B) (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-2.ii).
- Simultaneous subordinate financing – Seller contribution. If a creditor discloses the alternative tables pursuant 12 CFR 1026.38(d)(2) and (e) on the simultaneous subordinate financing Closing Disclosure, the creditor also discloses as a credit in the payoffs and payments table on the simultaneous subordinate financing Closing Disclosure, any contributions from the seller toward the simultaneous subordinate financing. (See also Comments 38(j)-3 and 38(k)(2)(vii)-1 for disclosure requirements applicable to the first-lien transaction when the alternative disclosures are used for a simultaneous subordinate financing transaction and a seller contributes to the costs of the subordinate financing.) (Comment 38(t)(5)(vii)(B)-2.iii).

NOTE: As required by 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)(B), a form used for a transaction that does not involve a seller and is modified under 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii) must contain the label “Appraised Prop. Value”. Where an estimate is disclosed, rather than an appraisal, the label for the disclosure is changed to “Estimated Prop. Value” (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).

Additional Information About This Loan: Loan Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(l) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

25. Loan Disclosures. Determine whether the creditor accurately provides the required disclosures (12 CFR 1026.38(l)):
- a. Assumption. Whether the loan obligations may be assumed by a subsequent purchaser (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(1));
 - b. Demand Feature. Whether the legal obligation includes a demand feature, and, if it does, a reference to the note or other loan contract for details (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(2));
 - c. Late Payment. The dollar amount or percentage charge of any fee designated as a late payment (information required on the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(4)) and the number of days after which such a charge will be triggered (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(3));
 - d. Negative Amortization (Increase in Loan Amount). Whether the regular period payments may cause the principal balance to increase, and:
 - i. If the regular periodic payments do not cover all of the interest due, the creditor provides a statement that the borrower’s principal balance will increase, such balance will likely become larger than the original loan amount, and increases in such balance lower the consumer’s equity in the property; and
 - ii. If the consumer may make regular periodic payments that do not cover all of the interest due, the creditor provides a statement that, if the consumer chooses a monthly payment option that does not cover all of the interest due, the principal balance may become larger than the original loan amount and the increases in the principal balance lower the consumer’s equity in the property (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(4)(i)-(ii)).
 - e. Partial Payments. Whether the creditor that accepts less than the full amount due has provided a statement that the “lender” (using that label) may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer’s loan, and:
 - i. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted but not applied to a consumer’s loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the lender may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer's loan;

- ii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, the lender does not accept any partial payments; and
 - iii. A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new lender may have a different policy (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5)(i)-(iv)).
- f. Security Interest. Whether the creditor states that the consumer is granting a security interest in the property securing the transaction, and that the borrower may lose the property if required payments are not made or otherwise fails to satisfy the requirements of the legal obligation. Determine that the creditor has included the property address and zip code (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(6));
- g. Escrow Account. Under the subheading “Escrow Account” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)), whether the creditor provides:
- (i) Under the reference “For now,” a statement that an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account; a statement of whether the creditor has established or will establish (at or before consummation) an escrow account in connection with the transaction; and the following information required under 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A) and (B):
 - (A) A statement that the creditor may be liable for penalties and interest if it fails to make a payment for any cost for which the escrow account is established; a statement that the consumer would have to pay such costs directly in the absence of the escrow account; and a table, entitled “Escrow,” that contains, if an escrow account is or will be established, an itemization of the following:
 - 1) The total amount that the consumer will be required to pay into the account over the first year after consummation, labeled “Escrowed Property Costs over Year 1,” together with a descriptive name of each charge to be paid (in whole or in part) from the escrow account, calculated as the Monthly Escrow Payment multiplied by the number of periodic payments scheduled to be made to the escrow account during the first year after consummation (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(1)).
 - 2) The estimated amount that the consumer is likely to pay during the first year after consummation, for the mortgage-related obligations described in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8) that are known to the creditor and that will not be paid using escrow account funds, labeled “Non-Escrowed Property Costs over Year 1,” together with a descriptive name of each such charge and a statement that the consumer may have to pay other costs that are not listed (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(2)).

NOTE: The creditor discloses this amount only if an escrow account will be established. The disclosure is based on payments during the first year after consummation. If the creditor elects to make disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(1) and (4) based on amounts derived from the escrow account analysis required under Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.17, then the creditor may make the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(2) based on a 12-month period beginning with the borrower’s initial payment date (rather than beginning with consummation) (Comment 38(l)(7)(i)(A)(2)-2; Comment 38(l)(7)(i)(A)(5)-1).

- 3) The total amount disclosed and a reference to the disclosure made on the Closing Disclosure under the heading “Other Costs, Initial Escrow Payment at Closing,” pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.38(g)(3), and a statement that the payment is a cushion for the escrow account, labeled “Initial Escrow Payment” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(3)).
 - 4) The amount the consumer will be required to pay into an escrow account with each periodic payment during the first year after consummation, labeled “Monthly Escrow Payment” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(A)(4)).
- (ii) No Escrow. If an escrow account will not be established for the consumer, determine whether there is a statement that the consumer will not have an escrow account; the reason that an escrow account will not be established; a statement that the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner’s insurance, directly; a statement that the consumer may contact the creditor to inquire about the availability of an escrow account; and a table, titled “No Escrow,” that itemizes:

- (1) the estimated total amount the consumer will pay directly for the mortgage-related obligations described in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(8) during the first year after consummation that are known to the creditor; and a statement that, without an escrow account, the consumer must pay the identified costs, possibly in one or two large payments, labeled “Property Costs over Year 1;” and
- (2) The amount of any fee the creditor imposes on the consumer for not establishing an escrow account in connection with the transaction, labeled “Escrow Waiver Fee” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(B)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(i)(B)(1) requires disclosure based on payments during the first year after consummation. A creditor may comply with this requirement by basing the disclosure on a 12-month period beginning with the borrower’s initial payment date or on a 12-month period beginning with consummation (Comment 38(l)(7)(i)(B)(1)-2).

- (A) Under the reference “In the future,” determine whether the creditor has disclosed under the reference “In the future” (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)):
 - 1) A statement that the consumer’s property costs may change and that, as a result, the consumer’s escrow payment may change (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)(A));
 - 2) A statement that the consumer may be able to cancel any escrow account that has been established, but that the consumer is responsible for directly paying all property costs in the absence of an escrow account (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)(B)); and
 - 3) A description of the consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid, and the actions that the creditor may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer’s behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than what the consumer could obtain directly (12 CFR 1026.38(l)(7)(ii)(C)).

Additional Information About This Loan: Adjustable Payment (AP) Table – 12 CFR 1026.38(m) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

26. Adjustable Payment (AP) Table. Determine whether the creditor provides the AP disclosure required for the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.37(i) (12 CFR 1026.38(m)).

Additional Information About This Loan: Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table – 12 CFR 1026.38(n) (Page 4 of the Closing Disclosure)

27. Adjustable Interest Rate (AIR) Table. Determine whether the creditor provides the AIR disclosures required for the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(j) (12 CFR 1026.38(n)).

Loan Calculations – 12 CFR 1026.38(o) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

28. Loan Calculations. Determine whether the creditor provides a separate table and accurately discloses the following information (12 CFR 1026.38(o)):
 - a. Total of Payments. Expressed as a dollar amount, and a statement that the disclosure is the total the consumer will have paid after making all payments of principal, interest, mortgage insurance, and loan costs, as scheduled. The disclosed total of payments for each transaction shall be treated as accurate if the amount disclosed as the total of payments:
 - i. Is understated by no more than $100, or
 - ii. Is greater than the amount required to be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(1)).

NOTE: For transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), special tolerances apply to the disclosure of the total of payments for purposes of the right of rescission and foreclosure (12 CFR 1026.23(g)(1)(ii), (g)(2)(ii) and (h)(2)(ii)).

- b. Finance Charge. Expressed as a dollar amount, and including the statement “The dollar amount the loan will cost you.” The finance charge and other disclosures affected by the disclosed finance charge (including the amount financed and the APR) is accurately calculated if the amount disclosed as the finance charge:
 - i. Is understated by no more than $100, or
 - ii. Is greater than the amount required to be disclosed (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(2)).

- c. Amount Financed. Expressed as a dollar amount, and the following statement: “The loan amount available after paying your up-front finance charge” (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(3));
- d. Annual Percentage Rate (APR). Expressed as a percentage, with the following statement: “Your costs over the loan term expressed as a rate. This is not your interest rate” (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4)); and
- e. Total Interest Percentage (TIP). Expressed as a percentage, with the following statement: “The total amount of interest that you will pay over the loan term as a percentage of your loan amount” (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(5)).
- e. Tax Deductions. A statement that, if the extension of credit exceeds the fair market value of the property, the interest on the portion of the credit extension that is greater than the fair market value of the property is not tax deductible for Federal income tax purposes and a statement that the consumer should consult a tax advisor for further information (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(5)).
- f. Loan Acceptance. If the creditor does not provide a line for the consumer's signature, the creditor must include with the other disclosures the same statement required in the Loan Estimate (pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(n)(2)) that “You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application” (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(2)).

Other Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(p) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

29. Other Disclosures. Determine whether the creditor accurately provides the following disclosures:
- a. Appraisal. For transactions subject to 15 U.S.C. 1639(h) or 1691(e), as implemented in this part or Regulation B, 12 CFR part 1002, respectively, under the subheading “Appraisal” (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)):
- i. If there was an appraisal of the property in connection with the loan, the creditor is required to provide the consumer with a copy at no additional cost to the consumer at least three days prior to consummation; (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)(i)); and
 - ii. If the consumer has not yet received a copy of the appraisal, the consumer should contact the creditor using the information disclosed in the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(1)(ii)).
- b. Contract Details. A statement that the consumer should refer to the appropriate loan document and security instrument for information about nonpayment, what constitutes a default under the legal obligation, circumstances under which the creditor may accelerate the maturity of the obligation, and prepayment rebates and penalties (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(2)).
- c. Liability after Foreclosure. A brief statement of whether, and the conditions under which, the consumer may remain responsible for any deficiency after foreclosure under applicable state law, a brief statement that certain protections may be lost if the consumer refinances or incurs additional debt on the property, and a statement that the consumer should consult an attorney for additional information (12 CFR 1026.38(p)(3)).
- d. Refinance. The statement required on the Loan Estimate by 12 CFR 1026.37(m)(5) that “Refinancing

Questions Notice – 12 CFR 1026.38(q) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

30. Questions. Determine whether the creditor provides a separate questions notice. The creditor must include a prominent question mark, a statement directing the consumer to use the contact information for questions, and a reference to CFPB’s website for more information and to submit a complaint, and a link to www.consumerfinance.gov/mortgage-closing/ (12 CFR 1026.38(q)(1)-(3)).

Contact Information – 12 CFR 1026.38(r) (Page 5 of the Closing Disclosure)

31. Contact Information. Determine whether the creditor provides the required contact information for each lender, mortgage broker, consumer's real estate broker, seller's real estate broker, and settlement agent participating in the transaction; the name of the person, address, NMLSR ID number, or if none, state and License ID; the name of the natural person who is the primary contact for the consumer at each entity, identified as “Contact,” along with that person’s Contact NMLS ID or Contact License ID, email address, and phone number (12 CFR 1026.38(r)(1)-(7)).

32. Confirm Receipt. Determine whether, if the creditor chooses to provide a signature statement, the creditor discloses, above the signature line, the statement “By signing, you are only confirming that you have received this form. You do not have to accept this loan because you have signed or received this form” (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(1)).

NOTE: If the creditor does not provide a line for the consumer's signature, the creditor must include the following statement, labeled "Loan Acceptance:" "You do not have to accept this loan because you have received this form or signed a loan application" (12 CFR 1026.38(s)(2).

Form of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.38(t)

33. Determine whether the creditor follows the format and content of form H-25, set forth in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(1) and (3)), changes formatting only if there is an exception, including acceptable modifications in Appendix H for transactions without a seller (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)), and complies with the following rounding rules for dollar amounts and percentages:
- a. Rounding - nearest dollar. The following dollar amounts are rounded to the nearest whole dollar (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(i)):
 - i. The dollar amounts for Loan Terms (required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(b)) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(6) and (7) (i.e., adjustments after consummation and details about prepayment penalty and balloon payments);
 - ii. The dollar amounts for projected payments or range of payments required by 12 CFR 1026.38(c) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(A) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(1)(iii) (i.e., minimum and maximum amounts of principal and interest for projected periodic payments or range of payments);
 - iii. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(e) (Alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller) and 12 CFR 1026.38(i) (Calculating Cash to Close table) under the subheading "Loan Estimate;"
 - iv. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(m) (adjustable payment table); and
 - v. The dollar amounts required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(c) (projected payments) that are required to be rounded by 12 CFR 1026.37(o)(4)(i)(C) when disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(c)(2)(iv) (i.e., total monthly payment).
 - b. Percentages. The percentage amounts required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(b), (f)(1), (n), and (o)(4) and (5) must be disclosed by rounding the exact amounts to three decimal places. The percentage amount required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4) (APR) is not rounded and is disclosed up to three decimal places and then dropping any trailing zeros to the right of the decimal point (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(ii)).

- c. Loan amount. The dollar amount required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1026.38(b) as required by 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(1) is disclosed as an unrounded number, except that if the amount is a whole number, then the amount disclosed is truncated at the decimal point (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(4)(iii)).
- d. Use of Form H-25 not required in certain circumstances. For a transaction that is not a federally related mortgage loan, the creditor is not required to use Form H-25 of Appendix H, but the disclosures must be made with headings, content, and format substantially similar to Form H-25 (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)(ii)).

NOTE: For such loans, the use of Form H-25, if properly completed with accurate content, constitutes compliance with the clear and conspicuous and segregation requirement of 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(1)-(i) (Comment 38(t)(3)-1).

- e. Exceptions. The changes required and permitted by 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) are permitted for federally related mortgage loans for which the use of form H-25 is required under (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(3)). For non-federally related mortgage loans, the changes required or permitted by 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) do not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure, and therefore, are permissible. Any changes to the disclosure not specified in 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) or not permitted by other provisions of 12 CFR 1026.38 are not permissible for federally related mortgage loans. Creditors in non-federally related mortgage loans making any changes that affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure will lose their protection from civil liability under TILA section 130 (Comment 38(t)(5)-1). 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5) contains important exceptions. For example, modifications of Form H-25 are permitted to separate consumer and seller information, if modifications comply with the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(v)).

Construction or Construction-Permanent Loan Disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2), (c)(6); .19(e)(1); .37-.38; and Appendix D to Part 1026)

Regulation Z permits treating: (1) a series of advances under an agreement to extend credit up to a certain amount as one transaction, and (2) the construction and permanent phases of a multiple-advance construction loan that may be permanently financed by the same creditor as either one or more than one transaction 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6); (Comments 17(c)(6)-1 through -5).

NOTE: A creditor has the option to use the methods provided in Appendix D to part 1026 to calculate the annual percentage rate and other disclosures for construction loans in disclosing construction financing (Comment 17(c)(6)-2). Further, creditors may use, at their discretion, methods in Appendix D to estimate and disclose the terms of multiple-advance construction loans pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37 and .38 (Comment App. D-7).

The following provisions of Regulation Z and associated commentary apply to (1) construction-only, (2) construction-permanent combined (CP Loan-Combined), and/or (3) construction-permanent separate (CP Loan-Separate) disclosures, or some combination of these loan disclosures, as noted.

NOTE: Citations for violations are to be made to the appropriate regulatory provision, not to the Commentary. References below to Comments are provided for informational purposes.

Determine:

1. Timing of Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii); Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-1 and -5)
 - a. Whether the creditor has delivered or placed in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the third business day after receiving the consumer's application and not later than the seventh business day before consummation of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)); See also Comment 17(c)(6)-2 discussing disclosures for construction loans).

NOTES:

- For a CP Loan-Combined, the creditor delivers or places in the mail one combined disclosure within these time frames (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5).
- For a CP Loan-Separate for which an application for the construction and permanent financing has been received (either as one application or as a separate application), the creditor delivers or places in the mail the separate Loan Estimates for each phase within these time frames (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5). If the creditor receives the application at separate times, the creditor must provide the Loan Estimate for each phase no later than the time frames applicable to the date it received the specific phase's application (i.e., if the creditor received the application for the permanent phase three days after the construction phase, it must deliver or place in the mail the permanent phase disclosure not later than the third day after receiving that application, not the construction phase application) (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-5).

- A creditor may also provide a separate Loan Estimate for the permanent phase before receiving an application for permanent financing at any time not later than the seventh business day before consummation (Comment 19(e)(iii)-5).
- For a Construction-only transaction for which an application has been received and the creditor is separately disclosing the advances, the creditor delivers or places in the mail separate Loan Estimates for each advance no later than three business days after receiving the consumer's application (Comment 19(e)(1)(iii)-1).

2. Allocation of fees and charges when disclosing multiple transactions

- a. Whether fees and charges are allocated in construction-permanent loan or multiple-advance construction-only loan disclosures for purposes of calculating disclosures (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(6)).

NOTES (Comment 17(c)(6)-5):

- If the creditor has charged separate amounts for finance charges under 12 CFR 1026.4, and points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1), such amounts are allocated to the phase for which they are charged.
- For a CP Loan-Separate, the finance charges and points and fees that would not be imposed but for the construction financing are allocated to the construction phase, and all other finance charges and points and fees are allocated to the permanent financing.
- For a CP Loan-Separate, if a creditor charges a greater origination fee for construction-permanent financing than for construction-only financing, the fee difference is allocated to the permanent phase.
- For a CP Loan-Separate, fees and charges that are not used to compute the finance charge under 12 CFR 1026.4 or points and fees under 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1) may be allocated between the transactions in any manner the creditor chooses.

3. Sale Price

- a. Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)).
 - i. For transactions that involve a seller, whether the contract sale price of the property is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(i)).
 - ii. For transactions that do not involve a seller, whether the estimated value of the property is disclosed as “Prop. Value” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(7)(ii)).

NOTES:

- For transactions that do not involve a seller and transactions that involve a seller where the sale price is not yet known, the creditor discloses the estimated value of the property based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure is provided to the consumer (Comment 37(a)(7)-1. See also 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i), Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1, and Comment 19(e)(1)(i)-1).
- For transactions involving construction where there is no seller, the creditor has the option to include the estimated value of the improvements to be made on the property (Comment 37(a)(7)-1).

- b. Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)).
 - i. If there is a seller, whether the creditor has disclosed the contract sale price of the property (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)(A)).
 - ii. Where there is no seller, whether the creditor has disclosed the appraised value of the property (12 CFR 1026.38(a)(3)(vii)(B)).

NOTES:

- The value disclosed is determined by the appraisal or valuation used to determine approval of the credit transaction. If the creditor has not obtained an appraisal, the creditor may disclose the estimated value of the property, labeled “Estimated Prop. Value” (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).
- For transactions involving construction where there is no seller, this disclosure must be the value of the property that is used to determine the approval of the credit transaction.

That disclosure includes any improvements to be made on the property if those improvements were considered when approving the loan (Comment 38(a)(3)(vii)-1).

4. Loan Term (23 CFR 1026.37(a)(8); .38(a)(5)(i))

- a. Whether the term to maturity of the credit transaction is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(8); .38(a)(5)(i)).

NOTES:

- For a CP Loan-Combined, the loan term is the total combined term of the construction and permanent periods (Comment App. D-7.i.A).
- For a CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase), the loan term of the permanent financing is counted from the date that interest for the permanent financing periodic payments begins to accrue, regardless of when the permanent phase is disclosed (Comment App. D-7.i.B).

5. Product Type (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10); .38(a)(5)(iii))

- a. Whether the loan product description includes “Adjustable rate,” “Step rate,” or “Fixed rate,” as applicable, and the features that may change the periodic payment (Negative amortization, Interest only, Step payment, Balloon payment, Seasonal payment) (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10); .38(a)(5)(iii)).
- b. “Interest Only” feature is disclosed if one or more regular periodic payments may be applied only to interest accrued and not to the loan principal (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(ii)(B); .38(a)(5)(iii)).

NOTES:

- If there is a final balloon payment that includes principal (typically construction-only and separate construction phase disclosures), the final balloon payment is excluded for purposes of determining the duration of the “Interest Only” payment period (Comment App. D-7.ii.A).
- For a CP Loan-Combined, the “Interest Only” payment period is the full term of the interest-only construction phase, plus any interest-only period in the permanent phase (Comment App. D-7.ii.B).

- c. “Adjustable Rate” product is disclosed if the interest rate may increase after consummation, but the rates that will apply or the periods for which they will apply are not known at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(A)).

NOTES:

- For a CP Loan-Combined and CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase), if the interest rate for the permanent phase is not known at consummation for a construction-permanent loan using a single, combined construction-permanent disclosure or using separate disclosures for the permanent phase, the creditor shall disclose the loan product under 12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10) and 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(iii) as “Adjustable Rate” (Comment App. D-7.ii.C).
 - For a CP Loan-Combined and CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase), if the interest rate may increase under the terms of the legal obligation from the disclosures provided at consummation, the product is disclosed as “Adjustable Rate,” even if the interest rate will be fixed for the term of the permanent phase once it is set (Comment App. D-7.ii.C).
- d. “Step Rate” product is disclosed if the interest rate will change after consummation, and the rates that will apply and the periods for which they will apply are known at consummation (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(B)).

NOTE: For a CP Loan-Combined transaction, if the interest rates for both phases are fixed at consummation but are different rates, and the creditor does not reserve the right to modify the rate after consummation so that the interest rate for the permanent phase is known at consummation but different from the construction phase interest rate, the product is disclosed as “Step Rate” (12 CFR 1026.37(a)(10)(i)(B)).

6. Interest Rate (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2))

- a. Whether the interest rate that will be applicable to the transaction at consummation is disclosed, and if the interest rate at consummation is not known for an adjustable rate transaction, whether the fully indexed rate (i.e., the interest rate calculated using the index value and margin at the time of consummation) is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2)).

NOTES for CP Loan-Combined and CP Loan-Separate (Permanent Phase):

- If the permanent phase has an adjustable rate at consummation and separate disclosures are provided, the rate disclosed for the permanent financing is the fully indexed rate pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.37(b)(2) at the time of consummation (Comment App. D-7.iii).
- If the permanent phase has a rate that is not known at consummation, the creditor discloses the best information reasonably available at the time the disclosure is provided to the consumer (Comment 19(e)(1)(i)-1; 12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i); Comment 17(c)(2)(i)-1).
- If the permanent phase has a fixed rate that will not be adjusted when the construction phase converts to the permanent phase, that fixed rate is used for disclosures (Comment App. D-7.iii).
- If the loan contract secured by a principal dwelling provides that the permanent loan interest rate may adjust at conversion, and such rate adjustment results in a corresponding payment adjustment, and if the interest rate for the permanent phase will be fixed after the conversion, the adjustable rate disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.20(c), but not (d), are provided (Comment App.D-7.iii); however, if the loan contract secured by a principal dwelling provides that the permanent loan interest rate may adjust at conversion, and such rate adjustment results in a corresponding payment adjustment, and if the interest rate for the permanent phase is adjustable, the creditor provides the adjustable rate disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.20(c) and (d) (Comment App. D-7.iii).

7. Projected Payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c); .38(c))

- a. Whether a separate table itemizes each separate periodic payment (or range), together with estimated taxes, insurance and assessments, and escrow account payments (12 CFR 1026.37(c) and 12 CFR 1026.38(c)).

NOTES:

- For a Construction-Only and CP Loan-Separate (Construction Phase), the construction phase is disclosed according to the requirements for the Projected Payments table, including disclosure of the amounts of any interest-only payments. If the terms of the construction phase do not account for repayment of the entire principal, the creditor must disclose a balloon payment feature (unless the transaction has negative amortization, interest-only, or step payment features) in a separate column, and balloon payment disclosures are provided (Comment App. D-7.v.A).
 - For a CP Loan-Combined, the Projected Payments table reflects the interest-only payments during the construction phase in the first column, which also reflects the amortizing payments, and mortgage insurance and escrow payments, if any, for the permanent phase if the term of the construction phase is not a full year (Comment App. D-7.v.B).
 - For a CP Loan-Combined when only the terms of the permanent phase require mortgage insurance or escrow, the disclosure of such amounts depends on whether the first column of the table exclusively discloses the construction phase. If the first column of the Projected Payment table exclusively discloses the construction phase, the creditor discloses “0” mortgage insurance and or a “-” for escrow in the first column if the construction phase does not include mortgage insurance or escrow. If payments for both phases are disclosed in the first column, the amount of the mortgage insurance premium or any escrow payment for the permanent phase is disclosed in the first column (Comment App. D-7.v.C).
8. Disclosure of Construction Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v); 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii); 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v); 12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)) (Construction-only; CP-Combined; CP-Separate (Construction Phase))

NOTE: Construction costs are the costs of improvements to be made to the property that the consumer contracts for in connection with the financing transaction and that will be paid in whole or in part with loan proceeds (Comment App. D-7.vi.A).

- a. Loan Estimate. Whether on the Loan Estimate, a creditor factors construction costs into the “funds for borrower” calculation in the Calculating Cash to Close table under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(1)(v) or the “Payoffs and Payments” calculation in the optional alternative Calculating Cash to Close table under 12 CFR 1026.37(h)(2)(iii) for transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing (12 CFR 1026.37(h)); Comment App. D-7.vi.B).
 - b. Closing Disclosure. Whether on the Closing Disclosure, a creditor includes construction costs in the “Itemization of amounts due from borrower” in the “Summary of Borrower’s Transaction” under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v) and factors them into the “Down payment/funds from borrower” and “Funds for borrower” calculations of the Calculating Cash to Close table under 12 CFR 1026.38(i)(4) and (6) or in the “Payoffs and Payments” section of the Closing Cost details in the optional alternative Calculating Cash to Close table for transactions without a seller or for simultaneous subordinate financing 12 CFR 1026.38(e) as modified under (12 CFR 1026.38(t)(5)(vii)(B)). (See also Comment App. D-7.vi.C).
- NOTE: If a creditor places a portion of a construction loan’s proceeds in a reserve or other account at consummation, the creditor may separately disclose this from the other construction costs disclosed in the “Itemization of amounts due from borrower” in the Summary of Borrower’s Transaction under 12 CFR 1026.38(j)(1)(v), if space permits (Comment App. D-7.vi.D). The creditor may disclose the amount of such reserve or other account as a separate itemized cost, along with an itemized cost for the balance of the construction costs, under disclosure and calculation options described in Comments App. D-7.vi.B and C (Comment App. D-7.vi.D).*
9. Inspection and Handling fees (12 CFR 1026.37(f) and .38(f)) (Construction-only; CP-Combined; CP-Separate (Construction Phase))
- a. Whether inspection and handling fees, which are Loan Costs (12 CFR 1026.37(f) and .38(f)), are included in the Loan Costs table (or an addendum) and certain disclosures, including “In 5 Years” (12 CFR 1026.37(l)(1)) and “Total of Payments” (12 CFR 1026.38(o)(1)).

NOTES:

- Inspection and handling fees for the staged disbursement of construction loan proceeds, including draw fees, are part of the finance charge (Comment 4(a)-1.ii.A and Comment App. D-7.vii).
- If inspection and handling fees are collected before or at consummation, the total of such fees is disclosed in the Loan Costs table (Comment 37(f)-3 and Comment App. D-7.vii).
- If inspection and handling fees will be collected after consummation, the total of such fees is disclosed in a separate addendum under the heading “Inspection and Handling Fees Collected After Closing” and the fees are not counted for purposes of the Calculating Cash to Close table (Comment 37(f)-3, Comment 37(f)(6)-3, Comment 38(f)-2, and Comment App. D-7.vii).
- If inspection and handling costs are collected, such costs are included in the sum of the “In 5 Years” disclosure (Loan Estimate) and the “Total of Payments” (Closing Disclosure), even when disclosed on an addendum (Comment App. D-7.vii).

Content Of Forms Not Subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)-(f) – Forms Review and Timing Requirements

Content of Forms Not Subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e)-(f) – General (12 CFR 1026.18)

1. Determine that the disclosures are clear, conspicuous, and grouped together or segregated as required, in a form the consumer may keep.
 - a. For loans subject to 12 CFR 1026.18(s), the terms “Finance Charge” and “Annual Percentage Rate” and corresponding rates or amounts should be more conspicuous than other terms, except for the creditor’s identity (12 CFR 1026.17(a)(2)).

2. For a closed-end transaction not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), determine whether the disclosures are accurately completed and include the following disclosures as applicable.

 - r. Interest rate and payment summary for mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.18(s))
3. Determine that for transactions other than transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), the creditor discloses the number, amounts, and timing of payments scheduled to repay the obligation (other than for a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.18(s)⁶⁷ (12 CFR 1026.18(g)).

4. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)), determine that the creditor discloses the following information about the interest rate and payments, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.18(s)):

a. Interest Rates

- i. For a fixed-rate mortgage, the interest rate at consummation (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(A)).
- ii. For an adjustable-rate or step-rate mortgage (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(B)):

- A. The interest rate at consummation and the period of time until the first interest rate adjustment may occur, labeled as the “introductory rate and monthly payment;”

NOTE: As set forth in comment 18(s)-1, if periodic payments are not due monthly, the creditor should use the appropriate term, such as “quarterly” or “annually.”

- B. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the first five years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due and the earliest date on which that rate may apply, labeled as “maximum during first five years;” and
- C. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the life of the loan and the earliest date on which that rate may apply, labeled as “maximum ever.”

- iii. For a loan that provides for payment increases occurring without regard to an interest rate adjustment⁶⁸ (as described in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)(B)), the interest rate in effect at the time the first such payment increase is scheduled to occur and the date on which the increase will occur, labeled as “first adjustment” if the loan is an adjustable-rate mortgage or, otherwise, labeled as “first increase”⁶⁹ (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i)(C)).

- iv. For a negative amortization loan⁷⁰ (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)):

- A. The interest rate at consummation and, if it will adjust after consummation, the length of time until it will adjust, and the label “introductory” or “intro;”
- B. The maximum interest rate that could apply when the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments under the terms of the legal obligation;
- C. If the minimum required payment will increase before the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments, the maximum interest rate that could apply at the time of the first payment increase and the date the increase is scheduled to occur; and
- D. If a second increase in the minimum required payment may occur before the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments, the maximum interest rate that could apply at the time of the second payment increase and the date the increase is scheduled to occur.

- v. Introductory rate for an amortizing adjustable-rate mortgage, if the interest rate at consummation is less than the fully indexed rate, the following (placed in a box directly beneath the table required by 12 CFR 1026.18 (s)(1) of the regulation, in a format substantially similar to Model Clause H-4(I) in the regulation’s Appendix H):

- A. The interest rate that applies at consummation and the period of time for which it applies;
- B. A statement that, even if market rates do not change, the interest rate will increase at the first adjustment and a designation of the place in sequence of the month or year, as applicable, of such rate adjustment (e.g., “in the third year”); and
- C. The fully indexed rate.

⁶⁷ For example, some home construction loans that are secured by real property or a dwelling are subject to §1026.18(s) and not §1026.18 (g). See comment App. D-6 of Regulation Z. See also Comment App. D-7 for transactions subject to 12 CFR 1026.37 – .38.

⁶⁸ This category includes interest-only loans, as set forth in comment §1026.18(s)(2)(i)(C)-1.

⁶⁹ Because model forms and clauses published by the CFPB are safe harbors, this rate may also be labeled “Maximum Ever,” pursuant to §1026.18(s)(2)(i)(B)(3).

⁷⁰ The term “negative amortization loan” means a loan, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 that provides for a minimum periodic payment that covers only a portion of the accrued interest, resulting in negative amortization (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(7)(v)).

b. Payments for Amortizing Loans

i. Principal and interest payments. If all periodic payments will be applied to accrued interest and principal, for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)):

- A. The corresponding periodic principal and interest payment, labeled as “principal and interest;”
- B. If the periodic payment may increase without regard to an interest rate adjustment, the payment that corresponds to the first such increase and the earliest date on which the increase could occur;
- C. If an escrow account is established, an estimate of the amount of taxes and insurance, including any mortgage insurance payable with each periodic payment; and
- D. The sum of the amounts disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)(A) and (C) or (s)(3)(i)(B) and (C), as applicable, labeled as “total estimated monthly payment.”

ii. Interest-only payments. If the loan is an interest-only loan, for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(i), the corresponding periodic payment and (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(ii)):

- A. If the payment will be applied to only accrued interest, the amount applied to interest, labeled as “interest payment,” and a statement that none of the payment is being applied to principal;
- B. If the payment will be applied to accrued interest and principal, an itemization of the amount of the first such payment applied to accrued interest and to principal, labeled as “interest payment” and “principal payment,” respectively;
- C. The escrow information described in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(i)(C); and
- D. The sum of all amounts required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(3)(ii)(A) and (C) or (s)(3)(ii)(B) and (C), as applicable, labeled as “total estimated monthly payment.”

iii. Payments for negative amortization loans. If the loan is a negative amortization loan (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(4)):

- A. The minimum periodic payment required until the first payment increase or interest rate increase, corresponding to the interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)(A);
- B. The minimum periodic payment that would be due at the first payment increase and the second, if any, corresponding to the interest rates described in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)(C) and (D);
- C. A statement that the minimum payment pays only some interest, does not repay any principal, and will cause the loan amount to increase;
- D. The fully amortizing periodic payment amount at the earliest time when such a payment must be made, corresponding to the interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii)(B); and
- E. If applicable, in addition to the payments in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(4)(i) and (ii), for each interest rate disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)(ii), the amount of the fully amortizing periodic payment, labeled as the “full payment option,” and a statement that these payments pay all principal and all accrued interest.

NOTE: The information in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)–(4) must be disclosed in the form of a table with no more than five columns, and with headings and format substantially similar to Model Clause H–4(E), H–4(F), H–4(G), or H–4(H) in Appendix H of the regulation. The table should contain only the information required in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(2)–(4), be placed in a prominent location, and be in a minimum 10-point font (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(1)).

iv. Balloon payments. For loans with balloon payments (defined as a payment that is more than two times a regular periodic payment) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(5)):

- A. Except as provided below, the balloon payment is disclosed separately from other periodic payments disclosed in the table (i.e., is outside the table and in a manner substantially similar to Model Clause H–4(J) in Appendix H to the regulation); and
- B. If the balloon payment is scheduled to occur at the same time as another payment required to be disclosed in the table, the

- balloon payment must be disclosed in the table.
5. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) that is a negative amortization loan, determine that the following information is disclosed (in close proximity to the table required in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(1), with headings, content, and format substantially similar to Model Clause H-4(G) in Appendix H to this part) (12 CFR 1026.18(s)(6)):
 - a. The maximum interest rate, the shortest period of time in which such interest rate could be reached, the amount of estimated taxes and insurance included in each payment disclosed, and a statement that the loan offers payment options, two of which are shown; and
 - b. The dollar amount of the increase in the loan's principal balance if the consumer makes only the minimum required payments for the maximum possible time and the earliest date on which the consumer must begin making fully amortizing payments, assuming that the maximum interest rate is reached at the earliest possible time.
 6. For a closed-end transaction secured by real property or a dwelling (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)), determine that the creditor disclosed a statement that there is no guarantee the consumer can refinance the transaction to lower the interest rate or periodic payments (12 CFR 1026.18(t)(1)).

NOTE: The statement required by 12 CFR 1026.18(t)(1) should be in a form substantially similar to Model Clause H-4(K) in Appendix H to the regulation (12 CFR 1026.18(t)(2)).
 7. Determine all variable rate loans (other than a transaction that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) with a maturity greater than one year, secured by a principal dwelling, are given the following disclosures at the time of application (12 CFR 1026.19(b)).

 - a. The date of the disclosure;
 - b. An explanation that under the terms of the consumer's adjustable rate mortgage, the time frame that the current rate has been in effect, when the current rate is scheduled to expire, the effective date of the new rate, when additional future interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur and any other changes to loan terms, features, and options taking effect on the same date, and how the rate change may affect the payment and other loan terms;
 - c. A table explaining the current interest rate and payment, the new interest rate and payment, and the date the first new payment is due;

If the new payment will result in negative amortization, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and that only part of the interest will be paid, which will add to the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization as a result of the interest rate adjustment, the statement must set forth the payment required to fully amortize the remaining balance at the new interest rate over the remainder of the loan term;
 - l. A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer;

2. Determine that for any closed-end adjustable-rate mortgage with a maturity date greater than one year, secured by a principal dwelling, the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides the following rate adjustment disclosures for rate adjustments with a corresponding payment change (for disclosure timing requirements, see Timing Requirements below) (12 CFR 1026.20(c)):

NOTE: A creditor, assignee or servicer subject to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) that has received the consumer's notification to cease communication pursuant to FDCPA section 805(c) is exempt from this requirement.

 - a. An explanation that under the terms of the consumer's adjustable rate mortgage, the time frame that the current rate has been in effect is ending and the interest rate and payment will change, the effective date of the new rate, when additional future interest rate adjustments are scheduled to occur and any other changes to loan terms, features, and options taking effect on the same date, such as the expiration of interest-only or payment-option features; and a table explaining the current interest rate and payment, the new interest rate and payment, and the date the first new payment is due;

NOTE: For interest-only and negatively amortizing payments, the table must include how the current and new rates and payment will be allocated to interest, principal, and escrow (if applicable). See 12 CFR 1026.20(d)(2)(iii)(C) for more on payment allocation disclosure requirements.

If the new payment will result in negative amortization, a statement that the new payment will not be allocated to pay loan principal and that only part of the interest will be paid, which will add to the loan balance. If the new payment will result in negative amortization as a result of the interest rate adjustment, the statement must set forth the payment required to fully amortize the remaining balance at the new interest rate over the remainder of the loan term; and
- i. A statement indicating the circumstances under which any prepayment penalty may be imposed, the time period during which it may be imposed, and a statement that the consumer may contact the servicer for additional information, including the maximum amount of the penalty that may be charged to the consumer;

NOTES:

- *Model and sample disclosures H-4(D)(1) through (4) containing all necessary information can be found in Appendix H. - When examining a creditor, an assignee, or a servicer that continues to own the loan, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (the creditor, assignee, or servicer, as applicable) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

Escrow Cancellation Notice – 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(1)

1. Escrow cancellation notice. For a closed-end loan secured by a first lien on real property or a dwelling (other than a reverse mortgage) where an escrow account (as defined under 12 CFR 1024.17(b)) is canceled, determine whether (12 CFR 1026.20(e)):

 - ii. A statement that an escrow account may also be called an impound or trust account;
 - iii. A statement of the reason that the escrow account will be closed;
 - iv. A statement that without an escrow account, the consumer must pay all property costs, such as taxes and homeowner's insurance, directly, possibly in one or two large payments a year;
 - v. A table, titled "Cost to you," that contains an itemization of the amount of any fee the creditor or servicer imposes on the consumer in connection with the closure of the consumer's escrow account, labeled "Escrow Closing Fee," and a statement that the fee is for closing the escrow account; (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(i)); and
 - vi. Information under the reference "In the future" that includes: (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii))
 - A. A statement of the consequences if the consumer fails to pay property costs, including the actions that a state or local government may take if property taxes are not paid and the actions the creditor or servicer may take if the consumer does not pay some or all property costs, such as adding amounts to the loan balance, adding an escrow account to the loan, or purchasing a property insurance policy on the consumer's behalf that may be more expensive and provide fewer benefits than a policy that the consumer could obtain directly; (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(A));

- B. A statement with a telephone number that the consumer can use to request additional information about the cancellation of the escrow account; (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(B));
- C. A statement of whether the creditor or servicer offers the option of keeping the escrow account open and, as applicable, a telephone number the consumer can use to request that the account be kept open; and (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(C)); and
- D. A statement of whether there is a cut-off date by which the consumer can request that the account be kept open (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(2)(ii)(D)).

2. Form. The disclosure meets the formatting requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4) and is substantially similar to model form H-29 in Appendix H (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(4)).

3. Timing. The creditor or servicer ensures that the consumer receives the Escrow Closing Notice in the following time periods:

- i. If the cancellation is upon the consumer's request, no later than three business days before the closure of the consumer's escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(i)); or
- ii. If cancellation is other than upon the consumer's request, no later than 30 business days before the closure of the consumer's escrow account (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(ii)).

NOTE: If the disclosures are not provided in person, the consumer is considered to have received the disclosures three business days after they are delivered or placed in the mail (12 CFR 1026.20(e)(5)(iii)).

Successors In Interest – 12 CFR 1026.20(f)

- 1. If, upon confirmation, a servicer provided a confirmed successor in interest who is not liable on the mortgage loan obligation with an optional notice and acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1), determine whether the servicer provided to a confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by the following (if applicable): 12 CFR 1026.20(c) (rate adjustments with corresponding change in payment), 12 CFR 1026.20(d) (initial rate adjustment), or 12 CFR 1026.20(e) (escrow account cancellation notice), once the confirmed successor in interest either assumed the mortgage loan obligation under State law or provided the servicer an executed acknowledgement form in accordance with Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.32(c)(1)(iv), that the confirmed successor in interest has not revoked.

High-Cost Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.32

- 1. Determine that the disclosures required for high-cost mortgage transactions (12 CFR 1026.32) clearly and conspicuously include the items below (12 CFR 1026.32(c), see Form H-16 in Appendix H).
 - a. The required statement “you are not required to complete this agreement merely because you have received these disclosures or have signed a loan application. If you obtain this loan, the lender will have a mortgage on your home. You could lose your home, and any money you have put into it, if you do not meet your obligations under the loan.”
 - b. The APR.
 - c. Amount of the regular monthly (or other periodic) payment and the amount of any balloon payment. The regular payment should include amounts for voluntary items, such as credit life insurance or debt-cancellation coverage, only if the consumer has previously agreed to the amount (See the commentary to 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)).
 - d. Statement that the interest rate may increase and that the monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment, based on the maximum interest rate allowed under the contract, if applicable.
 - e. The amount borrowed. For a closed-end mortgage, the amount borrowed is the total amount borrowed, as reflected by the face amount of the note; and where the amount borrowed includes premiums or other charges for optional credit insurance or debt-cancellation coverage (grouped together with the amount borrowed), that fact shall be stated. For an open-end credit plan, the amount borrowed is the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened.

- d. The name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the mortgage loan;
- e. Where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and
- f. At the option of the covered person, any other relevant information regarding the transaction.
- g. If there are multiple covered persons, contact information for each of them, unless one of them has been authorized to receive the consumer's notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the loan.

If the loan is a closed-end consumer mortgage loan secured by a dwelling or real property, other than a reverse mortgage transaction subject to section 12 CFR 1026.33 of this part, the following information about the covered person's partial payment policy, under the subheading "Partial Payment":

- i. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," may accept partial payments and apply such payments to the consumer's loan;
- ii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are accepted, but not applied to a consumer's loan until the consumer pays the remainder of the full amount due, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," may hold partial payments in a separate account until the consumer pays the remainder of the payment and then apply the full periodic payment to the consumer's loan;
- iii. If periodic payments that are less than the full amount due are not accepted, a statement that the covered person, using the term "lender," does not accept any partial payments; and

- iv. A statement that, if the loan is sold, the new covered person, using the term "lender," may have a different policy.

NOTES:

- The format of the disclosure illustrated by form H-25 of Appendix H may be used (for the information required to be disclosed by section 12 CFR 1026.38(l)(5)). The text on that form may be modified to suit the format of the covered person's disclosure under section 12 CFR 1026.39. Any modifications must be appropriate and not affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the disclosure. (Comment .39(d)(5)-1).
- This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer, except as noted above. This notification is required of the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same. In addition, if more than one consumer is liable on the obligation, the covered person may mail or deliver the disclosure notice to any consumer who is primarily liable. And, if an acquisition involves multiple covered persons who each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, each covered person has a duty to ensure that disclosures related to its acquisition are accurate and provided in a timely manner unless an exception in 12 CFR 1026.39(c) applies. The parties may, but are not required to, provide a single notice that satisfies the timing and content requirements applicable to each covered person. (Comment .39(b)(5)-2).
- Each covered person must provide the notice of transfer or sale to confirmed successors in interest unless the exemption under 12 CFR 1026.39(f) applies.

Open-End Credit Forms Review Procedures

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.61(a) sets forth the definition of hybrid prepaid-credit card. A covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card is a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(15)(ii) if the covered separate credit feature is an open-end credit plan that is not home-secured.

- 1. Determine that the creditor made the disclosures clearly and conspicuously (12 CFR 1026.5(a)).
- 2. Determine that the creditor made the applicable disclosures in writing, in a form that the consumer may keep, except (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1)(ii)):
 - a. The following disclosures need not be written: Disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) of charges that are imposed as part of an open-end (not home-secured) plan that are not required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) and related disclosures of charges under 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iii)(B); disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi); disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.9(d) when a finance charge is imposed at the time of the transaction; and disclosures under (12 CFR 1026.56(b)(1)(i)).

- b. The following disclosures need not be in a retainable form: Disclosures that need not be written under paragraph 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1)(ii)(A) of this section; the alternative summary billing-rights statement under 12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2); the credit and charge card renewal disclosures required under 12 CFR 1026.9(e); the payment requirements under 12 CFR 1026.10(b), except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13); ; home-equity disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.40(d); and disclosures for credit and charge card applications and solicitations under (12 CFR 1026.60).
 - c. The disclosures required by this subpart may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). The disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60, 12 CFR 1026.40, and 12 CFR 1026.16 may be provided to the consumer in electronic form without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act in the circumstances set forth in those sections.
3. Determine that the terminology used in providing the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.5 is consistent (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(i)).
 4. Determine that, for home-equity plans subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, the terms finance charge and annual percentage rate (APR), when required to be disclosed with a corresponding amount or percentage rate, shall be more conspicuous than any other required disclosure. The terms need not be more conspicuous when used for periodic statement disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.7(a)(4) and for advertisements under 12 CFR 1026.16 (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(ii)).
 5. Determine that, if disclosures are required to be presented in a tabular format pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(3), that the term penalty APR shall be used, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.5(a)(2)(iii)).

NOTE: The term penalty APR need not be used in reference to the annual percentage rate that applies with the loss of a promotional rate, assuming the annual percentage rate that applies is not greater than the annual percentage rate that would have applied at the end of the promotional period; or if the annual percentage rate that applies with the loss of a promotional rate is a variable rate, the annual percentage rate is calculated using the same index and margin as would have been used to calculate the annual percentage rate that would have applied at the end of the promotional period. If credit insurance or debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage is required as part of the plan, the term required shall be used and the program shall be identified by its name. If an annual percentage rate is required to be presented in a tabular format pursuant to paragraph (a)(3)(i) or (a)(3)(iii) of this section, the term fixed, or a similar term, may not be used to describe such rate unless the creditor also specifies a time period that the rate will be fixed and the rate will not increase during that period, or if no such time period is provided, the rate will not increase while the plan is open.

6. Determine whether the credit offered in connection with a prepaid account is subject to this regulation as set forth in 12 CFR 1026.61(a)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.61(a)(2)(i)).

Credit and Charge Card Application and Solicitation Disclosures – 12 CFR 1026.60

1. Determine that the credit card solicitation or application disclosures were made clearly and conspicuously on or with a solicitation or an application (12 CFR 1026.60).
2. For the disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) through (5) (except for (b)(1)(iv)(B) and (b)(7) through (15)), determine that the creditor made the disclosures required for 12 CFR 1026.60(c), (d)(2), (e)(1), and (f) in the form of a table with headings, content, and format substantially similar to the applicable tables found in G-10 in Appendix G (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i)).

NOTE: Review any fees or charges imposed on the asset feature of a prepaid account that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3), (b)(13), and (b)(14). Those fees or charges must be included in the disclosures on or with an application or solicitation to the extent those fees or charges fall within the categories of fees or charges required to be disclosed under (12 CFR 1026.60(b)).

3. Determine that the table required by 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i) contains only the information required or permitted by that section. If the creditor provides other information, determine that such information appears outside the table (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(ii)).
4. Determine that the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(B), (b)(1)(iv)(C), and (b)(6) are placed directly beneath the table required by 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iii)).

5. When a tabular format is required, determine that the following disclosures are disclosed in bold text (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iv)):
 - a. Annual percentage rate required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(1) of this section;
 - b. Introductory rate required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section;
 - c. Rate that will apply after a premium initial rate expires required to be disclosed under paragraph (b)(1)(iii) of this section; and
 - d. Fee or percentage amounts or maximum limits on fee amounts required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraphs (b)(2), (b)(4), (b)(8) through (b)(13).

NOTE: Bold text shall not be used for the amount of any periodic fee disclosed pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) of this section that is not an annualized amount, and other APRs or fee amounts disclosed in the table (12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(iv)).

6. Determine that the card issuer discloses, on or with a solicitation or application (12 CFR 1026.60(b)):
 - a. APR. Each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on an outstanding balance for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer, expressed as an annual percentage rate. When more than one rate applies for a category of transactions, determine that the range of balances to which each rate is applicable is also disclosed (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)).

NOTE: The APR for purchases disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) shall be in at least 16-point type, except for the following: oral disclosures of the annual percentage rate for purchases, or a penalty rate that may apply upon the occurrence of one or more specific events.

- i. Variable rate information. If a rate is a variable rate, determine that the card issuer discloses the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined. Determine that the card issuer identifies the type of index or formula that is used in setting the rate. Determine that the value of the index and the amount of the margin that are used to calculate the variable rate are not disclosed in the table. Determine further that any applicable limitations on rate increases are not included in the table (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(i)).
- ii. Discounted initial rate. If the initial rate is an introductory rate, determine that the card issuer discloses in the table the introductory rate, the time period during which the introductory rate will remain in effect, and the term “introductory” or “intro” in immediate proximity to the introductory rate. Determine further that the card issuer discloses, as applicable, either the variable or fixed rate that would otherwise apply to the account (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(ii)).

- iii. Premium initial rate. If the initial rate is temporary and is higher than the rate that will apply after the temporary rate expires, determine that the card issuer discloses the premium initial rate and the time period during which the premium initial rate will remain in effect. Determine that the premium initial rate for purchases is in at least 16-point type. Determine that the issuer discloses in the table the rate that will apply after the premium initial rate expires, in at least 16-point type (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iii)).
- iv. Penalty rates. Except as for provided introductory rate or employee preferential rate requirements (discussed below), if a rate may increase as a penalty for one or more events specified in the account agreement, such as a late payment or an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit, determine that the card issuer discloses the increased rate that may apply, a brief description of the event or events that may result in the increased rate, and a brief description of how long the increased rate will remain in effect (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(A)).
- v. Introductory rate. If the issuer discloses an introductory rate in the table or in any written or electronic promotional materials accompanying applications or solicitations (and subject to paragraph (c) or (e) of 12 CFR 1026.60), determine that the issuer briefly discloses, directly beneath the table, the circumstances, if any, under which the introductory rate may be revoked, and the type of rate that will apply after the introductory rate is revoked (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(B)).
- vi. Employee preferential rates. If the issuer discloses in the table a preferential APR for which only employees of the card issuer, employees of a third party, or other individuals with similar affiliations with the card issuer or third party are eligible, determine that the issuer briefly discloses directly beneath the table the circumstances under which such preferential rate may be revoked and the rate that will apply after such preferential rate is revoked (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv)(C)).
- vii. Rates that depend on consumer’s creditworthiness. If a rate cannot be determined at the time disclosures are given because the rate depends, at least in part, on a later determination of the consumer's creditworthiness, determine that the card issuer discloses the specific rates or the range of rates that could apply and a statement that the rate for which the consumer may qualify at account opening will depend on the consumer's creditworthiness, and other factors if applicable (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(v)).

NOTE: If the rate that depends, at least in part, on a later determination of the consumer's creditworthiness is a penalty rate, as described in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(iv), the card issuer at its option may disclose the highest rate that could apply, instead of disclosing the specific rates or the range of rates that could apply (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(v)).

viii. APRs that vary by state. Determine that the card issuer does not list annual percentage rates for multiple states in the table. Note, however, that issuers imposing annual percentage rates that vary by state may, at the issuer's option, disclose in the table: the specific annual percentage rate applicable to the consumer's account; or the range of the annual percentage rates, if the disclosure includes a statement that the annual percentage rate varies by state and refers the consumer to a disclosure provided with the table where the annual percentage rate applicable to the consumer's account is disclosed (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1)(vi)).

b. Fees for issuance or availability. Determine that the card issuer discloses any annual or other periodic fee, expressed as an annualized amount, or any other fee that may be imposed for the issuance or availability of a credit or charge card, including any fee based on account activity or inactivity (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(2)).

NOTE: A charge card issuer must disclose the applicable items in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(2), (4), (7) through (12), and (15). For a covered separate credit feature that is a charge card account accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61, a charge card issuer also must disclose the applicable items in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(3), (13), and (14).

c. Fixed finance charge; minimum interest charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any fixed finance charge that could be imposed during a billing cycle, as well as a brief description of that charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any minimum interest charge if it exceeds $1 that could be imposed during a billing cycle, and a brief description of the charge (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(3)).

d. Transaction charge. Determine that the creditor discloses any transaction charge imposed for the use of the card for purchases (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(4)).

e. Grace period. Determine that the issuer discloses the date by which or the period within which any credit extended for purchases may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate and any conditions on the availability of the grace period. If no grace period is provided, determine that this fact is disclosed. In disclosing in the tabular format, a grace period that applies to all types of purchases, determine that the issuer uses the phrase "How to Avoid Paying Interest on Purchases" as the heading for the row describing the grace period. If a grace period is not offered on all types of purchases, in disclosing this fact in the tabular format, determine that the issuer uses the phrase "Paying Interest" as the heading for the row describing this fact.

NOTE: If the length of the grace period varies, the card issuer may disclose the range of days, the minimum number of days, or the average number of days in the grace period, if the disclosure is identified as a range, minimum, or average (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(5)).

f. Balance computation method. Determine that the creditor disclosed the name of the balance computation method that is used to determine the balance on which the finance charge is computed, or an explanation of the method used if it is not listed. In determining which balance computation method to disclose, the creditor should have assumed that the credit extended will not be repaid within any grace period (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(6)).

NOTE: Disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(6) must be placed directly beneath the table.

g. Statement on charge card payments. Determine that the creditor discloses a statement that charges incurred by use of the charge card are due when the periodic statement is received (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(7)).

h. Cash advance fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for an extension of credit in the form of cash or its equivalent (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(8)).

i. Late payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a late payment (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(9)).

j. Over-the-limit fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for exceeding the credit limit (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(10)).

k. Balance transfer fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed to transfer a balance (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(11)).

- l. Returned payment fee. Determine that the creditor disclosed any fee imposed for a returned payment (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(12)).
 - m. Required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage. Determine that the fee imposed required insurance, debt cancellation or suspension coverage is disclosed if the insurance, debt cancellation or coverage is required as part of the plan (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(13)).
 - n. Available credit. Determine whether total of required fees for the issuance or availability of credit and/or security deposit debited to the account at account opening equal or exceed 15 percent of minimum credit limit for the account. If so, determine that the creditor disclosed, as applicable, the available credit remaining after the fees and/or security deposit are debited to the account (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(14)).
 - o. Website reference. Determine that the creditor disclosed a reference to the website established by the CFPB and a statement that the consumers may obtain on the website information about shopping for and using credit cards (12 CFR 1026.60(b)(15)).
- k. A recent APR imposed under the plan and a statement that the rate does not include costs other than interest (fixed rate plans only)
 - l. Itemization of all fees paid to creditor
 - m. Estimate of any fees payable to third parties to open the account and a statement that the consumer may receive a good faith itemization of third-party fees
 - n. Statement regarding negative amortization, as applicable
 - o. Transaction requirements
 - p. Statement that the consumer should consult a tax advisor regarding the deductibility of interest and charges under the plan
 - q. For variable rate home equity plans, disclose the following:
 - i. That the APR, payment, or term may change;
 - ii. The APR excludes costs other than interest;
 - iii. Identify the index and its source;

7. The following requirements apply to open-end (not home-secured). Determine that the creditor discloses in the appropriate format, as applicable:
- Review any fees or charges imposed on a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61. A creditor is required to disclose under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) any fees or charges imposed on the asset feature that are charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) to the extent those fees fall within the categories of fees or charges required to be disclosed under (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)).

- g. Employee preferential rates. If the creditor discloses in the table a preferential APR for which only employees of the creditor, employees of a third party, or other individuals with similar affiliations with the creditor or third party are eligible, determine that the creditor briefly disclosed directly beneath the table the circumstances under which the preferential rate may be revoked, and the rate that will apply after the preferential rate is revoked (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(D)(3)).
- h. Point of sale where APRs vary by state or based on creditworthiness. If the creditor imposes an APR that varies by state or based on the consumer's creditworthiness and provides required disclosures in person at the time the open-end (not home-secured) plan is established in connection with financing the purchase of goods or services, determine that the creditor discloses either (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(i)(E)):
- i. The specific APR applicable to the consumer's account; or

If no grace period is provided, that fact must be disclosed. If the length of the grace period varies, the creditor may disclose the range of days, the minimum number of days, or the average number of days in the grace period, if the disclosure is identified as a range, minimum, or average. In disclosing in the tabular format a grace period that applies to all features on the account, the phrase "How to Avoid Paying Interest" shall be used as the heading for the row describing the grace period. If a grace period is not offered on all features of the account, in disclosing this fact in the tabular format, the phrase "Paying Interest" shall be used as the heading for the row describing this fact (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(v)).

k. Due date; late payment costs. With the exception of periodic statements provided solely for charge cards, other than covered separate credit features that are charge card accounts accessible by hybrid prepaid-credit cards as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61, and periodic statements provided for a charged-off account where payment of the entire account balance is due immediately, determine that the creditor disclosed (in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13)) for a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan:

- i. The due date for a payment (the due date must be the same day of the month for each billing cycle) (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(11)(i)(A)).
- ii. The amount of any late payment fee and any increased periodic rate(s) (expressed as APR(s)) that may be imposed on the account as a result of a late payment. If a range of late payment fees may be assessed, verify that the card issuer either states a range of fees or the highest fee and an indication that the fee imposed could be lower (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(11)(i)(B)).

NOTES:

- If the rate may be increased for more than one feature or balance, the card issuer may state the range of rates or the highest rate that could apply and at the issuer's option an indication that the rate imposed could be lower.
- Further, with the exception of the negative or no amortization disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii), the repayment disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12) (as listed in step 12 below) are not required for:
 - iii. Charge card accounts that require payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle;
 - iv. A billing cycle immediately following two consecutive billing cycles in which the consumer paid the entire balance in full, had a zero outstanding balance or had a credit balance; and
 - v. A billing cycle where paying the minimum payment due for that billing cycle will pay the entire outstanding balance on the account for that billing cycle.

l. Given those exceptions above, determine that the card issuer disclosed on the periodic statement 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12):

- i. The following statement with a bold heading: “Minimum Payment Warning: If you make only the minimum payment each period, you will pay more in interest and it will take you longer to pay off your balance” (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(A)); and
- ii. The minimum payment repayment estimate, as described in Appendix M1 to this part.

NOTE: If the minimum payment repayment estimate is less than two years, determine that the card issuer disclosed the estimate in months. Otherwise, the estimate must be disclosed in years and rounded to the nearest whole year (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(B)).

- iii. The minimum payment total cost estimate, as described in Appendix M1 to this part, rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(C));
- iv. A statement that the minimum payment repayment estimate and the minimum payment total cost estimate are based on the current outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement. A statement that the minimum payment repayment estimate, and the minimum payment total cost estimate are based on the assumption that only minimum payments are made and no other amounts are added to the balance (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(D));
- v. A toll-free telephone number where the consumer may obtain from the card issuer information about credit counseling services (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(E)); and
- vi. The disclosures required for (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)):
 - A. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(i));
 - B. A statement that the card issuer estimates that the consumer will repay the outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement in three years if the consumer pays the estimated monthly payment for three years (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(ii));

- C. The total cost estimate for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part. The total cost estimate for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(iii)); and
- D. The savings estimate for repayment in 36 months, as described in appendix M1 to this part. The savings estimate for repayment in 36 months must be rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the card issuer's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1)(iv)).

NOTE: The disclosures (A through D above) required for 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i)(F)(1) do not apply to a periodic statement in any of the following circumstances:

- 1) The minimum payment repayment estimate that is disclosed on the periodic statement pursuant to paragraph (b)(12)(i)(B) of this section after rounding is three years or less;
 - 2) The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months, as described in Appendix M1 to this part, rounded to the nearest whole dollar or nearest cent that is calculated for a particular billing cycle is less than the minimum payment required for the plan for that billing cycle; and
 - 3) A billing cycle where an account has both a balance in a revolving feature where the required minimum payments for this feature will not amortize that balance in a fixed amount of time specified in the account agreement, and a balance in a fixed repayment feature where the required minimum payment for this fixed repayment feature will amortize that balance in a fixed amount of time specified in the account agreement, which is less than 36 months.
- vii. If negative or no amortization occurs when calculating the minimum payment estimate as described in Appendix M1, determine that the card issuer provides the following disclosures on each periodic statement instead of the disclosures set forth in 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(i) (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii));

- A. “Minimum Payment Warning: Even if you make no more charges using this card, if you make only the minimum payment each month we estimate you will never pay off the balance shown on this statement because your payment will be less than the interest charged each month” (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(A));
 - B. “If you make more than the minimum payment each period, you will pay less in interest and pay off your balance sooner” (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(B));
 - C. The estimated monthly payment for repayment in 36 months rounded to the nearest whole dollar or to the nearest cent, at the creditor's option (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(C));
 - D. A statement that the card issuer estimates that the consumer will repay the outstanding balance shown on the periodic statement in three years if the consumer pays the estimated monthly payment each month for three years (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(D)); and
 - E. A toll-free telephone number where the consumer may obtain from the card issuer information about credit counseling services consistent with 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(ii)(E)).
- viii. Verify that the items required to be disclosed, as addressed in the procedures in step 12 above (required by 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)) are disclosed in accordance with the format requirements of 12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13) and are substantially similar to the samples provided in Appendix G of Regulation Z.
- ix. Determine that a card issuer provides (to the extent available from the U.S. Trustee or a bankruptcy administrator) through the disclosed toll-free telephone number the name, street address, telephone number, and website address for at least three organizations that have been approved by the U.S. Trustee or a bankruptcy administrator to provide credit counseling services in either the state in which the billing address for the account is located or the state specified by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv)(A)).

- x. Determine that the card issuer at least annually updates the credit counseling information it discloses for consistency with the information available from the U.S. Trustee or a bankruptcy administrator (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(12)(iv)(B)).
- m. Determine that the card issuer provided periodic statement disclosures according to the following format requirements (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(13)):
 - i. The due date is disclosed on the front of the first page of the periodic statement and that the amount of the late payment fee and the APR(s) are stated in close proximity thereto.
 - ii. The ending balance and the repayment disclosures (required by paragraph (b)(12) of 12 CFR 1026.7) are disclosed closely proximate to the minimum payment due.
 - iii. The due date, late payment fee and APR, ending balance, minimum payment due, and repayment disclosures are grouped together.

NOTE: Sample G-18(D) in appendix G of Regulation Z sets forth an example of how these terms may be grouped.

- n. For accounts with an outstanding balance subject to a deferred interest or similar program, determine that the creditor disclosed the date by which that outstanding balance must be paid in full, in order to avoid the obligation to pay finance charges on such balance, on the front of any page of each periodic statement issued during the deferred interest period beginning with the first periodic statement issued during the deferred interest period, that reflects the deferred interest or similar transaction. The disclosure provided pursuant to this paragraph must be substantially similar to Sample G-18(H) in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.7(b)(14)).

Subsequent Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1026.9

- 1. Determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered the billing rights statement at least once per calendar year, at intervals of not less than 6 months or more than 18 months, to customers and whether the institution used the short form notice with each periodic statement (12 CFR 1026.9(a)(1)).

NOTE: As an alternative to the annual billing rights statement 12 CFR 1026.9(a)(1), the creditor may mail or deliver, on or with each periodic statement, a statement substantially similar to Model Form G-4 or Model Form G-4(A) in Appendix G to this part, as applicable. Creditors offering home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40 may use either Model Form, at their option (12 CFR 1026.9(a)(2)).

- 2. If, 30 days after mailing or delivering the account-opening disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) or (b)(3)(ii)(A), the creditor adds a credit feature or furnishes a credit access device (other than as a renewal, resupply, or the original issuance of a credit card, or except with regard to checks that access a credit card account) on the same finance charge terms, determine that the creditor discloses, before the consumer uses the feature or device for the first time, that it is for use in obtaining credit under the terms previously disclosed (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(1)).
- 3. Determine that, except with regard to checks that access a credit card account, whenever a credit feature is added or a credit access device is mailed or delivered to the consumer, and the finance charge terms for the feature or device differ from disclosures previously given, the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.6(a)(1) or (b)(3)(ii)(A) that are applicable to the added feature or device are given before the consumer uses the feature or device for the first time (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(2)).
- 4. Checks that access a credit card account. For open-end plans not subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, if checks that can be used to access a credit card account are provided more than 30 days after account-opening disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.6(b) are mailed or delivered, or are provided within 30 days of the account-opening disclosures, and the finance charge terms for the checks differ from the finance charge terms previously disclosed, determine that the creditor discloses on the front of the page containing the checks the following terms in the form of a table with the headings, content, and form substantially similar to Sample G-19 in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)):
 - a. If a promotional rate applies to the checks, determine that the creditor discloses:
 - i. The promotional rate and the time period during which the promotional rate will remain in effect (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(1));
 - ii. The type of rate that will apply (such as whether the purchase or cash advance rate applies) after the promotional rate expires, and the annual percentage rate that will apply after the promotional rate expires. For a variable-rate account, a creditor must disclose an annual percentage rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements set forth in paragraph (b)(3)(ii) of this 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(2)); and
 - iii. The date, if any, by which the consumer must use the checks in order to qualify for the promotional rate. If the creditor will honor checks used after such date but will apply an annual percentage rate other than the promotional rate, the creditor must disclose this fact and the type of annual percentage rate that will apply if the consumer uses the checks after such date (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(A)(3)).

- b. If any APR required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i) is a variable rate, determine that the creditor also disclosed the fact that the rate may vary and how the rate is determined. Determine that the creditor identified the type of index or formula used in setting the rate. Determine that the creditor does not disclose the value of the index and the amount of the margin that are used to calculate the variable rate in the table, and that any applicable limitations on rate increases are not included in the table (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(iii)).
- c. If no promotional rate applies to the checks, determine that the creditor discloses:
 - i. The type of rate that will apply to the checks and the applicable annual percentage rate. For a variable-rate account, a creditor must disclose an annual percentage rate based on the applicable index or formula in accordance with the accuracy requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(ii) (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(B)(1)).
- d. Determine that the creditor discloses:
 - i. Any transaction fees applicable to the checks disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(C)).
 - ii. Whether or not a grace period is given within which any credit extended by use of the checks may be repaid without incurring a finance charge due to a periodic interest rate. When disclosing whether there is a grace period, the phrase “How to Avoid Paying Interest on Check Transactions” shall be used as the row heading when a grace period applies to credit extended by the use of the checks. When disclosing the fact that no grace period exists for credit extended by use of the checks, the phrase “Paying Interest” shall be used as the row heading (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i)(D)).

NOTE: The disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(i) must be accurate as of the time the disclosures are mailed or delivered. A variable APR is accurate if it was in effect within 60 days of when the disclosures are mailed or delivered (12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3)(ii)).

5. Determine, for home-equity plans subject to the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.40):

- a. Whenever any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) is changed or the required minimum periodic payment is increased, the creditor mailed or delivered written notice of the change at least 15 days prior to the effective date of the change. If the consumer agreed to the change, determine that notice was provided before the change went into effect (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(i)).
- b. If the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit that the creditor mailed or delivered notice of the action not later than three business days after such action is taken. The notice must contain the specific reasons for the action (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(iii)).

NOTE: Notice is not required when the change involves a reduction of any component of a finance charge or other charge or when the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding. (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(ii))

6. For plans other than home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B), (c)(2)(iii) and (c)(2)(v), when a significant change in account terms as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii) is made, determine that the creditor provides a written notice of the change at least 45 days prior to the effective date of the change to each consumer who may be affected (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A)).
7. The 45-day timing requirement, however, does not apply if the consumer has agreed to a particular change as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B). For these instances, however, determine that the creditor provided a notice in accordance with the timing requirements of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A)).
8. For open-end (not home-secured) plans, determine that increases in the rate applicable to a consumer’s account due to delinquency, default or as a penalty described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g) that are not due to a change in the contractual terms of the consumer’s account are disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g) instead of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(A)).
9. When a notice of change in terms is required, determine that it is mailed or delivered no later than the effective date of the change, if the consumer agrees to the particular change. 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B) applies only when a consumer substitutes collateral or when the creditor can advance additional credit only if a change relatively unique to that consumer is made, such as the consumer’s providing additional security or paying an increased minimum payment amount (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B)).

NOTE: The 45-day timing requirements discussed in step f above does not apply in certain narrow circumstances, as described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B). The following are not considered agreements between the consumer and the creditor for purposes of (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B)):

- a. The consumer's general acceptance of the creditor's contract reservation of the right to change terms;
 - b. The consumer's use of the account (which might imply acceptance of its terms under state law);
 - c. The consumer's acceptance of a unilateral term change that is not particular to that consumer, but rather is of general applicability to consumers with that type of account; and
 - d. The consumer's request to reopen a closed account or to upgrade an existing account to another account offered by the creditor with different credit or other features (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i)(B)).
10. The 45-day advance notice requirement applies to changes to the following terms (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(ii)):
- a. APR increases (including each periodic rate that may be used to compute the finance charge on outstanding balances for purchases, a cash advance, or a balance transfer) and other APR changes (including variable rate information, discounted or premium initial rates, or penalty rates that may be applied to the account);
 - b. Fees for issuance or availability, including any fee based upon account activity or inactivity;
 - c. Fixed finance charge or minimum interest charge, if it exceeds $1;
 - d. Transaction charge for purchases;
 - e. Grace period;
 - f. Balance computation method;
 - g. Cash advance fee;
 - h. Late payment fee;
 - i. Over-the-limit fee;
 - j. Balance transfer fee;
 - k. Returned payment fee;
 - l. Required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage; and
 - m. Increase in required minimum periodic payment, or the acquisition of a security interest.
11. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi), if a creditor increases any component of a charge, or introduces a new charge, required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) that is not a significant change in account terms as described in paragraph (c)(2)(ii) of this 12 CFR, determine that the creditor either (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iii)):
- a. Complies with the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i), or
 - b. Provides notice of the amount of the charge before the consumer agrees to or becomes obligated to pay the charge, at a time and in a manner that a consumer would be likely to notice the disclosure of the charge, either in writing or orally.
12. Ensure that the written change-in-terms notice contains the following disclosures (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)):
- a. A summary of the changes made to terms required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4), a description of any increase in the required minimum payment, and a description of any security interests being acquired by the creditor;
 - b. A statement that changes are being made to the account;
 - c. For accounts other than credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan subject to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B), a statement indicating that the consumer has the right to opt out of the changes, if applicable, and a reference to the opt-out right provided in the notice, if applicable;
 - d. The date the changes will become effective;
 - e. If applicable, a statement that the consumer may find additional information about the summarized changes, and other changes, in the notice;
 - f. In the case of a rate change, other than a penalty rate, a statement that if a penalty rate currently applies to the consumer's account, the new rate described in the notice will not apply to the consumer's account until the consumer's account balances are no longer subject to the penalty rate;
 - g. If the change in terms being disclosed is an increase in the APR, the balances to which the increased rate will apply. If applicable, creditors should disclose a statement identifying the balances to which the current rate will apply as of the effective date of the change; and
 - h. If the change in terms being disclosed is an increase in an annual percentage rate for a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, a statement of no more than four principal reasons for the rate increase, listed in their order of importance.

NOTE: The disclosed reasons must accurately describe the principal factors actually considered by the card issuer in increasing the rate (Comment 9(c)(2)(iv)-11).

13. In addition to the disclosures in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A), if a card issuer makes a significant change in account terms on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the creditor provides the following information on the notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B)):

NOTE: This information is not required to be provided in the case of an increase in the required minimum periodic payment, an increase in a fee as a result of a reevaluation of a determination made under 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i) or an adjustment to the safe harbors in 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii) to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index, a change in an annual percentage rate applicable to a consumer's account, an increase in a fee previously reduced consistent with 50 U.S.C. app. 527 (Servicemembers Civil Relief Act) or similar federal or state statute or regulation if the amount of the increased fee does not exceed the amount of that fee prior to the reduction, or when the change results from the creditor not receiving the consumer's required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment.

- a. A statement that the consumer has the right to reject the change or changes prior to the effective date of the changes, unless the consumer fails to make a required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment;
 - b. Instructions for rejecting the change or changes, and a toll-free telephone number that the consumer may use to notify the creditor of the rejection; and
 - c. If applicable, a statement that if the consumer rejects the change or changes, the consumer's ability to use the account for further advances will be terminated or suspended.
14. Changes resulting from failure to make minimum periodic payment within 60 days from due date for credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan. For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(C)):
- a. If the significant change required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) of this section is an increase in an annual percentage rate or a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) based on the consumer's failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to paragraph (c)(2)(i) of this section states that the increase will cease to apply to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days of provision of the notice, if the creditor receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase.

- b. If the significant change required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) is an increase in a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) based on the consumer's failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) also states the reason for the increase.
15. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is in a tabular format (except for a summary of any increase in the required minimum periodic payment, a summary of a term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(4) that is not required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2), or a description of any security interest being acquired by the creditor), with headings and format substantially similar to any of the account-opening tables found in G-17 in Appendix G. Determine that the table discloses the changed term and information relevant to the change, if that relevant information is required by 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2). Determine that the new terms are described in the same level of detail as required when disclosing the terms under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(1)).
16. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) (change in terms) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.6(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is disclosed on the front of any page of the statement. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) immediately follows the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(2) through 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(7) and, if applicable, 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(8), 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B), and 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(C), and is substantially similar to the format shown in Sample G-20 or G-21 in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(2)).
17. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(i) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice or segregated on a separate page from other information given with the notice (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(3)).

NOTE: The summary of changes required to be in a table pursuant to paragraph (c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) of this section may be on more than one page, and may use both the front and reverse sides, so long as the table begins on the front of the first page of the notice and there is a reference on the first page indicating that the table continues on the following page.

18. Determine that the summary of changes described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(1) immediately follows the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(2) through 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(7) and, if applicable, 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(A)(8), (c)(2)(iv)(B), and (c)(2)(iv)(C), of this section, and is substantially similar to the format shown in Sample G-20 or G-21 in Appendix G to this part (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(D)(3)).
 19. For open-end plans (other than home equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40), note that a creditor is not required to provide notice under this section if (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)):
 - a. The change involves:
 - i. Charges for documentary evidence;
 - ii. A reduction of any component of a finance or other charge;
 - iii. A suspension of future credit privileges (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi) of this section) or termination of an account or plan;
 - iv. When the change results from an agreement involving a court proceeding;
 - v. When the change is an extension of the grace period; or
 - vi. The change is applicable only to checks that access a credit card account and the changed terms are disclosed on or with the checks in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.9(b)(3) (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(A)).
 - b. The change is an increase in an APR upon the expiration of a specified period of time, provided that (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)):
 - i. Prior to commencement of that period, the creditor disclosed in writing to the consumer, in a clear and conspicuous manner, the length of the period and the APR or fee that would apply after expiration of the period;
 - ii. The disclosure of the length of the period and the APR or fee that would apply after expiration of the period are set forth in close proximity and in equal prominence to the first listing of the disclosure of the rate or fee that applies during the specified period of time; and
 - iii. The APR or fee that applies after that period does not exceed the rate disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1) or, if the rate disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1) was a variable rate, the rate following any such increase is a variable rate determined by the same formula (index and margin) that was used to calculate the variable rate disclosed pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(B)(1));
 - c. The change is an increase in a variable APR in accordance with a credit card or other account agreement that provides for changes in the rate according to operation of an index that is not under the control of the creditor and is available to the general public (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(C)); or
 - d. The change is an increase in an APR, a fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), (b)(2)(viii), (b)(2)(ix), or (b)(2)(xii), or the required minimum periodic payment due to the completion of a workout or temporary hardship arrangement by the consumer or the consumer's failure to comply with the terms of such an arrangement, provided that (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(D)):
 - i. The APR or fee or charge applicable to a category of transactions or the required minimum periodic payment following any such increase does not exceed the rate or fee or charge or required minimum periodic payment that applied to that category of transactions prior to commencement of the arrangement or, if the rate that applied to a category of transactions prior to the commencement of the workout or temporary hardship arrangement was a variable rate, the rate following any such increase is a variable rate determined by the same formula (index and margin) that applied to the category of transactions prior to commencement of the workout or temporary hardship arrangement; and
 - ii. The creditor has provided the consumer, prior to the commencement of such arrangement, with a clear and conspicuous disclosure of the terms of the arrangement (including any increases due to such completion or failure). This disclosure must generally be provided in writing. However, a creditor may provide the disclosure of the terms of the arrangement orally by telephone, provided that the creditor mails or delivers a written disclosure of the terms of the arrangement to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the oral disclosure is provided.
20. For open-end plans that are not subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, if a creditor decreases the credit limit on the account, determine that advance notice of the decrease is provided before an over-the-limit fee or a penalty rate can be imposed solely as a result of the consumer exceeding the newly decreased credit limit. Determine that notice is provided in writing or orally at least 45 days prior to imposing the over-the-limit fee or penalty rate and that it states that the credit limit on the account has been or will be decreased (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(vi)).

21. Determine that the disclosures contained in 12 CFR 1026.60(b)(1) through (b)(7) are provided if the account is renewed and (1) the card issuer imposes an annual or other periodic fee for the renewal or (2) the card issuer has changed or amended any term of the account required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) that has not previously been disclosed to the consumer. Additionally, the disclosure provided upon renewal must disclose how and when the cardholder may terminate the credit to avoid paying the renewal fee, if any (12 CFR 1026.9(e)).
22. For plans other than home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40 (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)), determine that the creditor provides a written notice to each consumer who may be affected when (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1)):
 - a. A rate is increased due to the consumer's delinquency or default; or
 - b. A rate is increased as a penalty for one or more events specified in the account agreement, such as making a late payment or obtaining an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit.
23. Whenever any notice is required to be given pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section, determine that the creditor provided written notice of the increase in rates at least 45 days prior to the effective date of the increase. The notice must be provided after the occurrence of the events described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1)(i) and (g)(1)(ii) that trigger the imposition of the rate increase (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(2)).
24. If a creditor is increasing the rate due to delinquency or default or as a penalty, determine that the creditor provided the following information on the notice sent pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i)(A)):
 - a. A statement that the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate, as applicable, has been triggered;
 - b. The date on which the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will apply;
 - c. The circumstances under which the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate, as applicable, will cease to apply to the consumer's account, or that the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will remain in effect for a potentially indefinite time period;

- d. A statement indicating to which balances the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will be applied;
- e. If applicable, a description of any balances to which the current rate will continue to apply as of the effective date of the rate increase, unless a consumer fails to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment; and
- f. For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, a statement of no more than four principal reasons for the rate increase, listed in their order of importance.

NOTE: The disclosed reasons must accurately describe the principal factors actually considered by the card issuer in increasing the rate (Comment 12 CFR 1026.9(g) - 7).

25. For a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, if the rate increase required to be disclosed pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section is an increase pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4) based on the consumer's failure to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment, determine that the notice provided pursuant to paragraph (g)(1) of this section also states that the increase will cease to apply to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days of provision of the notice, if the creditor receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i)(B)).
26. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (Increase in rates due to delinquency or default or as a penalty) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the disclosure described in paragraph (g)(3)(i) is in the form of a table and provided on the front of any page of the periodic statement, above the notice described in paragraph (c)(2)(iv) of this section if that notice is provided on the same statement (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(ii)(A)).
27. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) (increase in rates) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(i) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice. Ensure that only information related to the increase in the rate to a penalty rate is included with the notice.

NOTE: This notice may be combined with a notice described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv) or (g)(4) (A statement indicating to which balances the delinquency or default rate or penalty rate will be applied) of this section (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(3)(ii)(B)).

28. Exception for Decreases in the Credit Limit. If a creditor does not provide the 45-day notice under 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(1) prior to increasing the rate for obtaining an extension of credit that exceeds the credit limit, determine that the creditor provides at least 45 days in advance of imposing the penalty rate a notice, in writing, that includes (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)):
- A statement that the credit limit on the account has or will be decreased.
 - The date on which the penalty rate will apply, if the outstanding balance exceeds the credit limit as of that date;
 - A statement that the penalty rate will not be imposed on that date, if the outstanding balance does not exceed the credit limit as of that date;
 - The circumstances under which the penalty rate, if applied, will cease to apply to the account, or that the penalty rate, if applied, will remain in effect for a potentially indefinite period of time;
 - A statement indicating to which balances the penalty rate may be applied; and
 - If applicable, a description of any balances to which the current rate will continue to apply as of the effective date of the rate increase, unless the consumer fails to make a minimum periodic payment within 60 days from the due date for that payment.

In addition to this notice, determine that the creditor does not increase the applicable rate to the penalty rate if the outstanding balance does not exceed the credit limit on the date set forth in the notice (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(ii)).

29. If a notice provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is in the form of a table and provided on the front of any page of the periodic statement (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(iii)(A)); or
30. If a notice required by 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is not included on or with a periodic statement, determine that the information described in 12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(i) is disclosed on the front of the first page of the notice. Determine that only information related to the reduction in credit limit is included with the notice, except that this notice may be combined with a notice described in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv) or (g)(1) (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)(iii)(B)).
31. When the consumer is given the right to reject a significant change to an account term prior to the effective date of the change, determine whether the consumer was given the option to reject the change by notifying the creditor of the rejection before the effective date of the change (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(1)).

32. If the creditor was notified of the rejection of a significant change to an account term, determine that the creditor did not:
- Apply the charge to the account;
 - Impose a fee or charge or treat the account as in default solely as a result of the rejection; or
 - Require repayment of the balance on the account using a method that is LESS beneficial to the consumer than one of the following methods:
 - The method of repayment for the account on the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection;
 - An amortization period of not less than five years, beginning no earlier than the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection; or
 - A required minimum periodic payment that includes a percentage of the balance that is equal to no more than twice the percentage required on the date on which the creditor was notified of the rejection (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(2)).

NOTE: These requirements do not apply if the creditor has not received the consumer's required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment and the creditor has provided timely change in terms disclosures (12 CFR 1026.9(h)(3)).

33. Determine that a statement of the maximum interest rate that may be imposed during the term of the obligation is made for any dwelling-secured loan in which the APR may increase during the plan (12 CFR 1026.30(b)).
34. For any open-end mortgage loan (credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer) that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to the covered person, determine that the covered person notifies the borrower in writing of such transfer, including (12 CFR 1026.39):
- An identification of the loan that was sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred;
 - The name, address, and telephone number of the covered person who owns the mortgage loan;
 - The date of transfer (either the date of acquisition recognized in the books and records of the covered person or that of the transferring party) identified by the covered person;

- d. The name, address, and telephone number of an agent or party having authority, on behalf of the covered person, to receive notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the mortgage loan;
 - e. Where transfer of ownership of the debt to the covered person is or may be recorded in public records or, alternatively, that the transfer of ownership has not been recorded in public records at the time the disclosure is provided; and
 - f. At the option of the covered person, any other relevant information regarding the transaction.
 - g. If there are multiple covered persons, contact information for each of them, unless one of them has been authorized to receive the consumer's notice of the right to rescind and resolve issues concerning the consumer's payments on the loan (12 CFR 1026.39(d)-(e)).
- issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions, including the method(s) by which the consumer may consent.
2. Determine that the written notice informing the consumer of the right to revoke consent following the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge describes that right, including the method(s) by which the consumer may revoke consent (12 CFR 1026.56(e)(2)).

Reverse Mortgage Forms Review Procedures (Both Open- and Closed-End)

1. Determine that the disclosures required for reverse mortgage transactions are substantially similar to the model form in Appendix K and include the items below (12 CFR 1026.33):
 - a. A statement that the consumer is not obligated to complete the reverse mortgage transaction merely because he or she has received the disclosures or signed an application.
 - b. A good faith projection of the total cost of the credit expressed as a table of "total annual loan cost rates" including payments to the consumer, additional creditor compensation, limitations on consumer liability, assumed annual appreciation, and the assumed loan period.
 - c. An itemization of loan terms, charges, the age of the youngest borrower, and the appraised property value.
 - d. An explanation of the table of total annual loan costs rates.

NOTE: Forms that include or involve current transactions, such as change in terms notices, periodic billing statements, rescission notices, and billing error communications, are verified for accuracy when the file review worksheets are completed.

Timing Requirements

1. Timing Requirements – Open-End Credit. Review financial institution policies, procedures, and systems to determine, either separately or when completing the actual file review, whether the applicable disclosures listed below are furnished when required by Regulation Z. Take into account products that have different features, such as closed-end loans or credit card accounts that are fixed or variable rate.
 - a. Credit card application and solicitation disclosures. On or with the application (12 CFR 1026.60(b)).
 - b. Adding a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card to a prepaid account. Ensure that a card issuer does not do any of the NOTE: This notice of sale or transfer must be provided for any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the principal dwelling of a consumer. This notification is required by the covered person even if the loan servicer remains the same. In addition, if more than one consumer is liable on the obligation, the covered person may mail or deliver the disclosure notice to any consumer who is primarily liable. And, if an acquisition involves multiple covered persons who each acquire a partial interest in the loan pursuant to separate and unrelated agreements, each covered person has a duty to ensure that disclosures related to its acquisition are accurate and provided in a timely manner unless an exception in 12 CFR 1026.39(c) applies. The parties may, but are not required to, provide a single notice that satisfies the timing and content requirements applicable to each covered person (Comment 12 CFR 1026.39(b)(5) – 2).

Disclosure Requirements for Over-the-Limit Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.56

1. Determine that the oral, written, or electronic "opt-in" notice includes all of the following applicable items (and not any information not specified in or otherwise permitted) (12 CFR 1026.56(e)(1)):
 - a. Fees. The dollar amount of any fees or charges assessed by the card issuer on a consumer's account for an over-the-limit transaction;
 - b. APR(s). Any increased periodic rate(s) (expressed as an APR(s)) that may be imposed on the account as a result of an over-the-limit transaction; and
 - c. Disclosure of opt-in right. An explanation of the consumer's right to affirmatively consent to the card

- following until 30 days after the prepaid account has been registered: (1) open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card; (2) make a solicitation or provide an application to open a covered separate credit feature that could be accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card; or (3) allow an existing credit feature that was opened prior to the consumer obtaining the prepaid account to become a covered separate credit feature accessible by the hybrid prepaid-credit card (12 CFR 1026.61(c)).
- c. HELOC disclosures. At the time the application is provided or within three business days under certain circumstances (12 CFR 1026.40(b)).
 - d. Open-end credit initial disclosures. Before the first transaction is made under the plan (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(1)).
 - e. Card Holder Agreement. Verify that the card issuer sends to the cardholder or otherwise make available to the cardholder a copy of the cardholder's agreement in electronic or paper form no later than 30 days after the issuer receives the cardholder's request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)). Determine that the issuer has adequate procedures for ensuring that this requirement is met.
 - f. Periodic statement disclosures for open-end credit under 12 CFR 1026.7. Required if at the end of a billing cycle, the account has a debit or credit balance of $1 or more or if a finance charge has been imposed (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(2)(i)). Also, the creditor must adopt reasonable procedures designed to ensure that periodic statements for credit card accounts are mailed or delivered at least 21 days prior to the payment due date and the date on which any grace period expires (for non-credit card open-end credit, there is a 21 day rule if there is a grace period and a 14-day rule if there is no grace period) (12 CFR 1026.5(b)(2)(ii)(B)(2)).
 - g. Statement of billing rights. At least once per year (12 CFR 1026.9(a)).
 - h. Supplemental credit devices. Before the first transaction under the plan (12 CFR 1026.9(b)).
 - i. Open-end credit change in significant terms as a result of a change in contractual terms. 45 days prior to the effective change date (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)).
 - j. Open-end change in terms or rates due to delinquency or default or as a penalty. 45 days prior to the effective change date (12 CFR 1026.9(g)).
 - k. Finance charge imposed at time of transaction. Prior to imposing any fee (12 CFR 1026.9(d)).
- l. Disclosures upon renewal of credit or charge card. 30 days or one billing cycle, whichever is less before the delivery of the periodic statement on which the renewal fee is charged, or at least 30 days prior to the scheduled renewal date if the creditor has changed or amended any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(1) and (b)(2) that has not previously been disclosed to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.9(e)).
 - m. Change in credit account insurance provider. – Certain information 30 days before the change in provider occurs and certain information 30 days after the change in provider occurs. The institution may provide a combined disclosure 30 days before the change in provider occurs (12 CFR 1026.9(f)).
- 2. Timing Requirements – Closed-End Credit Secured by a Dwelling
 - a. Closed-end credit disclosures for transactions not subject to 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f) must be made before consummation (12 CFR 1026.17(b)).
 - b. Disclosures for reverse mortgages. Several disclosure timing requirements apply to reverse mortgages subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 and RESPA:
 - i. Determine whether the creditor provides early TIL disclosures within three business days after receiving the consumer's written application. The creditor is required to deliver or mail the early disclosures no later than three business days after receiving the consumer's application and at least seven business days before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(1)(i) and (iii) and 12 CFR 1026.19(a)(2)(i)). No fees may be charged before the consumer receives the early disclosures except for credit report fees (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). If the APR stated in the early disclosures is not considered accurate under 12 CFR 1026.22 when compared to the APR at consummation, determine whether the creditor provided corrected disclosures of all changed terms, including the APR, that the consumer received no later than the third business day before consummation and that the creditor delivered or placed in the mail the corrected disclosures not later than the seventh business day before consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(2)(i) and (ii)).
 - ii. Determine whether the creditor provides the disclosures required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.33 (and found in paragraph d of the model form in Appendix K) either three days prior to consummation (for a closed-end transaction) or prior to the first transaction (for an open-end credit plan) (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(2)).

NOTE: For closed-end credit transactions secured by a dwelling not subject to the TILA-RESPA rule, the prohibition on charging fees (other than credit report fees) before the consumer receives the early TIL disclosure is more limited than the prohibition for closed-end credit transactions secured by a dwelling that are subject to TILA-RESPA (12 CFR 1026.19(a)). For TILA-RESPA closed-end transactions, creditors are prohibited from charging fees (other than credit report fees) prior to receipt of disclosures and an intent to proceed with the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)).

- c. Disclosures for high-cost mortgages. – Three business days prior to consummation or account opening. If such disclosures became inaccurate due to a change by the creditor, ensure that the creditor provided new, accurate disclosures no later than three business days prior to consummation or account opening (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)).

NOTE: For a high-cost mortgage, the three-business day waiting period requirement does not apply to a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate consummated by the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).

- d. Disclosures for initial rate change to an adjustable-rate mortgage securing a principal dwelling with terms of more than one year:
- i. For adjustable-rate mortgages, creditors, assignees, or servicers are generally required to provide information regarding the first interest rate change to consumers between 210 and 240 days prior to the date the first payment at the new rate is due (12 CFR 1026.20(d));

NOTE: If the first payment change occurs within the first 210 days, creditors, assignees, or servicers are required to provide the disclosure at consummation (12 CFR 1026.20(d)).

NOTE: When examining a creditor that continues to own the loan, an assignee, or a servicer, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (the creditor, assignee, or servicer, as applicable) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.

- e. Additional disclosures for adjustable-rate mortgages securing a principal dwelling with a term of more than one year, where a rate change affects the amount of payment:
- i. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment changes with a rate change, disclosures must be provided to consumers between 60 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate is due;

- ii. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment change is caused by a rate change that is uniformly scheduled every 60 days (or more frequently), disclosures must be provided to consumers between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate;
- iii. For adjustable-rate mortgages originated prior to January 10, 2015, where the interest rate and payment are calculated based on an index that is available less than 45 days prior to the change, disclosures must be provided between 25 and 120 days before the first payment at the new rate is due; and
- iv. For adjustable-rate mortgages where the payment adjustment occurs within 60 days of consummation and the new interest rate after adjustment provided at consummation was an estimate, disclosure are required as soon as practicable, but no later than 25 days prior to the first payment at the new rate is due (12 CFR 1026.20(c)).

NOTE: The requirements of 12 CFR 1026.20(c) do not apply to: ARMS with terms of one year or less; first interest rate adjustments to an ARM if the first adjusted payment is due within 210 days after consummation and the new interest rate disclosed at consummation was not an estimate; or the creditor, assignee or servicer when the servicer is subject to the Fair Debt Collections Practices Act (FDCPA) and the consumer has notified the servicer to cease communication under section 805(c) of the FDCPA (12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)(ii)).

- f. Notice of new creditor. – On or before the 30th calendar day following the acquisition (12 CFR 1026.39).
- g. For private education loans subject to Subpart F (12 CFR 1026.46), determine that:
- i. Application or solicitation disclosures were provided on or with any application or solicitation (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(1)(i));
- ii. Approval disclosures were provided before consummation on or with any notice of approval provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(2)); and
- iii. Final disclosures were provided after the consumer accepts the loan and at least three business days prior to disbursing the private education loan funds (12 CFR 1026.46(d)(3)).

- h. Determine that the issuer provides a written over-the-limit notice prior to the assessment of any over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer's account (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(1)(i)).
- i. Determine that, if a consumer consents to the card issuer's payment of any over-the-limit transaction by oral or electronic means, the card issuer provides the required written notice immediately prior to obtaining that consent (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(1)(ii)).
- j. Determine that the notice confirming the consumer's consent is provided no later than the first periodic statement sent after the consumer has consented to the card issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions. The creditor must not assess an over-the-limit fee on the consumer's account without first providing written confirmation (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(2)).
- k. Determine that the notice providing the consumer notice in writing of the right to revoke consent following the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge is provided on the front of any page of each periodic statement that reflects the assessment of an over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer's account (12 CFR 1026.56(d)(3)).
- l. For home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, whenever any term required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(a) is changed or the required minimum periodic payment is increased, determine that the creditor mails or delivers written notice of the change to each consumer who may be affected. Determine that the notice is mailed or delivered at least 15 days prior to the effective date of the change. If the change has been agreed to by the consumer, determine that the notice is given before the effective date of the change (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(i)).
- m. Notice to restrict credit. For home-equity plans subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.40, if the creditor prohibits additional extensions of credit or reduces the credit limit pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.40(f)(3)(i) or (f)(3)(vi), determine that the creditor mails or delivers written notice of the action to each consumer who will be affected not later than three business days after the action is taken and contains specific reasons for the action. If the creditor requires the consumer to request reinstatement of credit privileges, determine that the notice states that fact (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(1)(iii)).

Mortgage Loans Secured by Real Property or a Cooperative Unit—Early Disclosures (Loan Estimates) – 12 CFR 1026.19(e)

Provision of Disclosures

1. For closed-end consumer loans secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33, determine whether the creditor provides the consumer with good faith estimates on the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.37) or if the creditor satisfies its obligation by ensuring that a mortgage broker providing the Loan Estimate complied with all requirements of (12 CFR 1026.19(e)).

NOTE: Partial exemption. The special disclosure requirements of 12 CFR 1026.19(e) do not apply if the following criteria are met:

- (i) the transaction is secured by a subordinate lien;
- (ii) the transaction is for buyer assistance such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention;
- (iii) the credit contract does not require the payment of interest;
- (iv) the credit contract provides for repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer's principal dwelling;
- (v) The costs payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction at consummation are limited to recording fees, transfer taxes, a reasonable application fee, and a reasonable fee for housing counseling services; and the total of costs payable by the consumer for the application and housing counseling services is less than 1 percent of the amount of credit extended; and
- (vi) the creditor complies with the disclosure requirements in 12 CFR 1026.18. However, the creditor is permitted to provide the integrated disclosures (Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure) as an alternative to providing the disclosure of the cost of credit under 12 CFR 1026.18, and does not need to provide the special information booklet, Good Faith Estimate, or HUD-1 settlement statement (12 CFR 1026.3(h); Comment 3(h)-1).

Timing

2. Determine whether the creditor delivers or places in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the third business day after receiving the consumer's application. As defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(3), an application consists of the submission for purposes of obtaining an extension of credit of the consumer's name, income, social security number to obtain a credit report, the property address, an estimate of the value of the property, and the mortgage loan amount sought (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A)).

NOTE: When a consumer uses an online application system that allows the information to be saved, the timing requirements for the Loan Estimate are not triggered until the application is submitted.

3. Determine whether the creditor delivers or places in the mail the Loan Estimate not later than the seventh business day before consummation (other than for transactions secured by a consumer's interest in a timeshare plan) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B)).

NOTE: Business day is defined differently for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A) and (B). For 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(A), business day is defined based on whether the creditor's offices are open to the public for carrying on substantially all of its business functions on that day. For 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B), a business day is all days except Sundays and federal holidays (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6)).

4. Determine whether the consumer waived the waiting period before consummation under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(iii)(B) by providing a dated written statement describing a bona fide personal financial emergency, specifically modifying or waiving the waiting period, and signed by all the consumers who are primarily liable on the obligation (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(v)).

NOTE: Preprinted forms for this purpose are prohibited (12 CFR 1026.19(a)(3)).

Shopping for Settlement Service Providers

5. Determine whether a creditor permits a consumer to shop for a settlement service and, if so, identifies the settlement services the consumer is permitted to shop for (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)).
6. If so, determine whether the creditor provides a written list identifying at least one available provider for each settlement service for which the consumer may shop and stating that the consumer may choose a different provider for that service. Determine that the creditor provides the written list separately from the initial Loan Estimate but in accordance with the same timing requirements. The settlement service providers identified on the written list must correspond to required settlement services for which the consumer may shop, disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.37(f)(3) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi); Comment 19(e)(1)(vi)-3).

Pre-Disclosure Activity

7. Fee restriction. Determine that the creditor does not charge any fees before the consumer receives the Loan Estimate and before the consumer indicated to the creditor an intent to proceed with the transaction, except for bona fide and reasonable credit report fees (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(i)(A)).
8. Disclaimer on early estimates. Determine whether a creditor that provides a consumer with a written estimate of terms or costs specific to that consumer before the consumer receives the Loan Estimate clearly and conspicuously states on the first page in no smaller than 12-point font "Your actual rate, payment, and costs could be higher. Get an official Loan Estimate before choosing a loan," and that the estimate does not use a format or content substantially similar to the Loan Estimate (form H-24 or H-25 of Appendix H) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(ii)).
9. Verification of information. Determine whether the creditor requires a consumer to submit documents verifying information related to the consumer's application before providing the creditor provides the Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(2)(iii)).

Permissible variations

10. Determine whether the creditor disclosed estimated closing costs in good faith and consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosures are provided. The estimated closing costs are in good faith if the amount charged to the consumer at closing does not exceed the estimated closing costs disclosed on the Loan Estimate, unless the following exceptions apply (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)).

10 Percent Cumulative Increase Permitted

11. Determine whether the creditor has appropriately increased estimated third party costs or recording fees in good faith. Estimates for third party services or a recording fee are in good faith if:
 - a. The aggregate charges do not exceed the aggregate estimate for those charges by more than 10 percent (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(A); Comment 19(e)(3)(ii)-2);
 - b. The third party service charge is not paid to the creditor or affiliate of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(B)); and
 - c. The creditor permits the consumer to shop for the third party service (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii)(C)).

- i. A creditor may permit a consumer to shop even if a creditor fails to issue the written list of providers required by (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)(C)).
- ii. Determine whether the creditor permits the consumer to shop consistent with 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(1)(vi)(A) based on all the relevant facts and circumstances.

Variations Permitted for Certain Charges

12. For the following, determine whether the estimate has been made in good faith. An estimate is in good faith if it is consistent with the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time it is disclosed, regardless of whether the amount paid by the consumer exceeds the amount disclosed in the Loan Estimate, even if such charges are paid to the creditor or affiliate of the creditor, as long as the charges are bona fide (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)):
 - a. Prepaid interest (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(A));
 - b. Property insurance premiums (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(B));
 - c. Amounts placed into an escrow, impound, reserve, or similar account (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(C));
 - d. Charges paid to third-party service providers the consumer selected that are not on the list provided by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(D)); and
 - e. Property taxes and other charges paid for third-party services not required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iii)(E)).

Revised Loan Estimates

13. Determine whether the creditor may use a revised estimate of charges, instead of the estimate of charges originally disclosed to the consumer, to compare charges actually paid by or imposed on the consumer for purposes of determining good faith (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)). Creditors are permitted to use a revised estimate for this purpose (i.e. to reset tolerances) for any of the following reasons (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)):
 - a. Changed circumstances affecting settlement charge. Changed Circumstances that cause the estimated settlement charges to increase or, in the case of estimated charges identified in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(ii), cause the aggregate amount of such charges to increase by more than 10 percent. (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)) For purposes of this and the following procedure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A) and (B)), “changed circumstance” means:

- i. An extraordinary event beyond the control of any interested party or other unexpected event specific to the consumer or transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(1));
 - ii. Information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor relied upon when providing the Loan Estimate and that was inaccurate or changed after the disclosures were provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(2)); or
 - iii. New information specific to the consumer or transaction that the creditor did not rely on when providing the original Loan Estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(A)(3)).
- b. Changed circumstance affecting eligibility. The consumer is ineligible for an estimated charge previously disclosed because a changed circumstance affected the consumer’s creditworthiness or the value of the security for the loan (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(B)).
 - c. Revisions requested by the consumer. The consumer requests revisions to the credit terms or the settlement that cause an estimated charge to increase (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(C)).
 - d. Interest rate dependent charges. The points or lender credits change because the interest rate was not locked when the Loan Estimate was provided (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(D)).
 - e. Intent to Proceed. The consumer indicates an intent to proceed with the transaction more than 10 business days after the Loan Estimate is provided or within an extended period of time if the creditor has voluntarily extended the expiration date either orally or in writing (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(E)).
 - f. Construction loan. The loan involves new construction where settlement is not expected to occur until more than 60 days after the Loan Estimate has been provided to the consumer and the creditor states clearly and conspicuously that a revised disclosure may be used at any time prior to 60 days before consummation, unless otherwise provided by 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv)(F)).

NOTE: A loan involves “new construction” if it is a loan for the purchase of a home that has yet to be constructed, or a loan to purchase a home under construction (i.e., construction is currently underway) (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)(F)-1).

NOTE: A creditor may issue a revised disclosure for informational purposes, even if the revised disclosure may not be used for purposes of determining good faith under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) and (ii) (Comment 19(e)(3)(iv)-4).

14. Determine whether the revised disclosures, even those provided only for informational purposes (i.e., not to reset tolerances), were based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)).

Provision and Receipt of Revised Disclosures

15. Determine whether the creditor has already provided a Closing Disclosure in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i).

NOTE: If the creditor has provided a Closing Disclosure, the creditor may not provide a revised version of the Loan Estimate on or after the date on which it provided the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(ii)). Instead, the creditor may use the initial or a corrected Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith if one of the reasons for a revised estimate is present (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)(i)).

16. Determine whether the creditor provides revised disclosures within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised disclosures, such as a changed circumstance or other reason pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)).

NOTE: If not provided to the consumer in person, the revised disclosure is considered to have been received three business days after the creditor delivers or places the revised disclosure in the mail (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)).

Special Information Booklet at Time of Application

17. For purchase loans using the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure, Determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered a copy of the special information booklet, titled “Your Home Loan Toolkit – A Step-by-Step Guide,” which was designed by the CFPB to replace the “Shopping for Your Home Loan: Settlement Cost Booklet.” The booklet is required by Regulation Z 12 CFR 1026.19(g) as well as section 5 of RESPA and section 12 CFR 1024.6 of Regulation X. The booklet must be delivered or placed in the mail within three business days after receiving the consumer’s application for a purchase transaction, unless the creditor denies the application before the end of the three-business-day period.

NOTE: If the consumer uses a mortgage broker, the mortgage broker must provide the special information booklet and the creditor need not do so (12 CFR 1026.19(g)).

Mortgage Loans Secured by Real Property or a Cooperative Unit—Final Disclosures (Closing Disclosures) – 12 CFR 1026.19(f)

Provision of Closing Disclosures

1. Determine whether, for closed-end consumer loans secured by real property or a cooperative unit, other than a reverse mortgage subject to 12 CFR 1026.33 or loans otherwise excepted under 12 CFR 1026.3(h), the creditor provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure (12 CFR 1026.38), reflecting the actual terms of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i)).

NOTE: There is a partial exemption in 12 CFR 1026.3(h) from the requirement to provide the Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure if (i) the transaction is secured by a subordinate lien, (ii) the loan is for buyer assistance such as down payments or closing costs, rehabilitation loans, energy efficiency assistance, or foreclosure prevention, (iii) the loan does not require the payment of interest, (iv) the loan provides for repayment that is forgiven, deferred for 20 years, or deferred until the property is sold or is no longer the consumer’s principal dwelling, and (v) the costs payable by the consumer in connection with the transaction at consummation are limited to recording fees, transfer taxes, a reasonable application fee, and a reasonable fee for housing counseling services, and fees for the application and housing counseling are less than 1 percent of the amount of credit extended. For those transactions, creditors must comply with all Regulation Z requirements pertaining to disclosures. They may do so by complying with the disclosure requirements of 12 CFR 1026.18, or in the alternative, where criteria for the partial exemption are satisfied, they may provide a compliant Loan Estimate and Closing Disclosure, and do not need to provide a Good Faith Estimate or HUD-1 settlement statement (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

2. Determine whether the creditor ensures that the consumer receives the Closing Disclosure no later than three business days before consummation (except for transactions secured by a timeshare, which the creditor must ensure the consumer receives no later than consummation) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)).

NOTE: If the creditor mails the disclosure six business days prior to consummation, it can assume that it was received three business days after sending, and therefore three business days prior to consummation. (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iii); see Comment 19(f)(1)(iii)) “Business day” for purposes of the Closing Disclosure is the rescission-based business day definition, and means all calendar days except Sundays and legal public holidays (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(6), 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(ii)(A)).

3. Determine whether the consumer waived the waiting period before consummation by providing a dated written statement describing a bona fide personal financial emergency, specifically modifying or waiving the waiting period and signed by all the consumers who are primarily liable on the obligation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

NOTE: Preprinted forms for this purpose are prohibited (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(iv)).

4. If a settlement agent provides the consumer with the Closing Disclosure, determine whether the creditor ensures that the disclosures were provided in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.19(f) (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(v)).
5. Determine whether the creditor is relying on the Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3). If so, confirm:
 - a. A changed circumstance or other reason set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv) is present;
 - b. The revised disclosures were based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)); and
 - c. The creditor provided the revised disclosures within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)).

Subsequent Changes

1. Determine whether the creditor provides a corrected Closing Disclosure where a disclosure has become inaccurate before consummation, so that the consumer receives a corrected Closing Disclosure at or before consummation. Determine whether the creditor permits the consumer to inspect the corrected disclosure during the business day prior to consummation.

NOTE: the corrected Closing Disclosure must be completed to set forth items known to the creditor at the time of this inspection but may omit from inspection items related only to the seller's transaction (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(i)).

2. Determine whether the creditor provides a corrected Closing Disclosure and a new three-business-day waiting period before consummation if:
 - a. The APR disclosed in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.38(o)(4) becomes inaccurate, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.22 (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(A));

NOTE: Generally, if the APR and finance charges are overstated because the interest rate has decreased, the APR is considered accurate and no new waiting period is required. (12 CFR 1026.22)). In addition, in connection with high-cost mortgages, TILA expressly provides there is no waiting period if a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate is consummated by the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).

- b. The loan product is changed, causing the information disclosed in the Loan Estimate under 12 CFR 1026.38(a)(5)(iii) to become inaccurate (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(B)); or
 - c. A prepayment penalty is added, causing the statement regarding a prepayment penalty required under 12 CFR 1026.38(b) to become inaccurate (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)(C)).
3. Determine whether the creditor is relying on the corrected Closing Disclosure to reset tolerances for purposes of determining good faith under 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3). If so, confirm:
 - a. A changed circumstance or other reason set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(iv) is present;
 - b. The revised disclosures were based on the best information reasonably available to the creditor at the time the disclosure was provided to the consumer (12 CFR 1026.17(c)(2)(i)); and
 - c. The creditor provided the revised disclosures within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish a reason for a revised estimate (12 CFR 1026.19(e)(4)).

NOTE: Corrected Closing Disclosures require a new three-day waiting period only if one of the following is present: an inaccurate APR, a change in loan product, or the addition of a prepayment penalty (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(ii)).

4. Determine whether, when an event in connection with the settlement causes the Closing Disclosure to become inaccurate during the 30-day period following consummation, and that inaccuracy results in a change to an amount actually paid by the consumer from the amount disclosed, the creditor delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures not later than 30 days from receiving the information to establish that the event occurred (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iii)).

NOTE: A creditor does not violate 12 CFR 1026.19(f)(1)(i) if the disclosures contain non-numeric clerical errors, provided the creditor delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures no later than 60 days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(iv)).

5. Determine whether the creditor charged the consumer for any amounts that exceeded the estimated charges beyond the applicable permissible variations set forth in 12 CFR 1026.19(e)(3)(i) (no variation permitted for the charge) and (ii) (charge subject to a 10 percent aggregate limit). For any such charges, determine if the creditor refunds the excess amounts no later than 60 days after consummation and delivers or places in the mail corrected disclosures reflecting the refund no later than 60 days after consummation (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(2)(v)).

Charges Disclosed

1. Determine whether the creditor or settlement service provider imposes a charge on the consumer for more than the settlement service provider actually received. If the creditor charges the average charge for settlement services, determine whether the creditor meets the following:
 - a. The average charge is no more than the average amount paid for that service by or on behalf of all consumers and sellers for a class of transactions (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(A));
 - b. The class of transactions is defined by appropriate period of time, geographic area, and type of loan (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(B));
 - c. The same average charge is used for every transaction within the class (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(C)); and
 - d. The average charge is not used for any type of insurance or any charge based on the loan amount or property value, and is not otherwise prohibited by law (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(3)(ii)(D)).

Transactions Involving a Seller

1. Determine whether the settlement agent provides the seller with the Closing Disclosure no later than the day of consummation. If during the 30-day period following consummation, an event in connection with the settlement of the transaction occurs that causes disclosures to become inaccurate and the inaccuracy results in a change to the amount actually paid by the seller from that previously disclosed, determine whether the settlement agent has delivered or placed in the mail corrected disclosures not later than 30 days after receiving information sufficient to establish that such an event has occurred (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(4)).

No Fee

1. Determine whether a creditor or servicer imposes a fee on any person as part of settlement costs or otherwise for preparing or delivering Closing Disclosures (12 CFR 1026.19(f)(5)).

Electronic Disclosures

1. Assess compliance for an institution's electronic disclosure requirements.

E-Sign Act

1. Disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). The E-Sign Act does not mandate that institutions or consumers use or accept electronic records or signatures. It permits institutions to satisfy any statutory or regulatory requirements by providing the information electronically after obtaining the consumer's affirmative consent. Before consent can be given, consumers must be provided with the following information:
 - a. Any right or option to have the information provided in paper or non-electronic form;
 - b. The right to withdraw the consent to receive information electronically and the consequences, including fees, of doing so;
 - c. The scope of the consent (for example, whether the consent applies only to a particular transaction or to identified categories of records that may be provided during the course of the parties' relationship);
 - d. The procedures to withdraw consent and to update information needed to contact the consumer electronically; and
 - e. The methods by which a consumer may obtain, upon request, a paper copy of an electronic record after consent has been given to receive the information electronically and whether any fee will be charged.
 - i. The consumer must consent electronically or confirm consent electronically in a manner that "reasonably demonstrates that the consumer can access information in the electronic form that will be used to provide the information that is the subject of the consent." After the consent, if an institution changes the hardware or software requirements such that a consumer may be prevented from accessing and retaining information electronically, the institution must notify the consumer of the new requirements and must allow the consumer to withdraw consent without charge (15 U.S.C. 7001(c)(1)(C) and (D)).
 - ii. If the financial institution makes its disclosures available to consumers in electronic form, determine that the forms comply with the appropriate sections – 12 CFR 1026.5(a)(1); 12 CFR 1026.15(b); 12 CFR 1026.16(c); 12 CFR 1026.17(a)(1); 12 CFR 1026.17(g); 12 CFR 1026.19(c); 12 CFR 1026.23(b)(1); 12 CFR 1026.24(d); 12 CFR 1026.31(b); 12 CFR 1026.40(a)(3); and 12 CFR 1026.60(a)(2)(v).

- iii. Card issuers may provide credit card agreements in electronic form under 12 CFR 1026.58(d) and (e) without regard to the consumer notice and consent requirements of section 101(c) of the E-Sign Act (12 CFR 1026.58(f)).

Annual Report to the CFPB – 12 CFR 1026.57

1. If the card issuer was a party to one or more college credit card agreements in effect at any time during a calendar year, verify that the card issuer submits to the CFPB an annual report regarding those agreements in the form and manner prescribed by the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(1)).

NOTE: A college credit card agreement is any business, marketing, or promotional agreement between a card issuer and an institution of higher education (or an affiliated alumni organization or foundation) in connection with which credit cards are issued to college students at that institution of higher education (12 CFR 1026.57(a)(5)). (See Comment 57(a)(5)-1 for specifics on where a covered separate credit feature may be added.

2. The annual report to the CFPB must include the following (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(2)):
 - a. Identifying information about the card issuer and the agreements submitted, including the issuer's name, address, and identifying number (such as an RSSD ID number or tax identification number);
 - b. A copy of any college credit card agreement to which the card issuer was a party that was in effect at any time during the period covered by the report;
 - c. A copy of any memorandum of understanding in effect at any time during the period covered by the report between the card issuer and an institution of higher education or affiliated organization that directly or indirectly relates to the college credit card agreement or that controls or directs any obligations or distribution of benefits between any such entities;
 - d. The total dollar amount of any payments pursuant to a college credit card agreement from the card issuer to an institution of higher education or affiliated organization during the period covered by the report, and the method or formula used to determine such amounts;

- e. The total number of credit card accounts opened pursuant to any college credit card agreement during the period covered by the report; and
- f. The total number of credit card accounts opened pursuant to any such agreement that were open at the end of the period covered by the report.

3. If the card issuer is subject to reporting, determine if the card issuer submits its annual report for each calendar year to the CFPB by the first business day on or after March 31 of the following calendar year (12 CFR 1026.57(d)(3)).

The Submission of Agreements to the CFPB – 12 CFR 1026.58(c)

1. For card issuers that issue credit cards under a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the card issuer makes quarterly submissions to the CFPB in the form and manner specified by the CFPB that contain:
 - a. Identifying information about the card issuer and the agreements submitted, including the issuer's name, address, and identifying number (such as an RSSD ID number or tax identification number) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(i));
 - b. The credit card agreements that the card issuer offered to the public as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter that the card issuer has not previously submitted to the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(ii));
 - c. Any credit card agreement previously submitted to the CFPB that was amended during the preceding calendar quarter and that the card issuer offered to the public as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter as described in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(3) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(iii)); and
 - d. Notification regarding any credit card agreement previously submitted to the CFPB that the issuer is withdrawing, as described in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(4), (c)(5), (c)(6), and (c)(7) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)(iv)).
2. Verify that quarterly submissions were sent to the CFPB no later than the first business day on or after January 31, April 30, July 31, and October 31, of each year (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(1)).
3. If a credit card agreement that previously has been submitted to the CFPB is amended, verify that the card issuer submits the entire amended agreement to the CFPB, in the form and manner specified by the CFPB, by the first quarterly submission deadline after the last day of the calendar quarter in which the change became effective (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(3)).

NOTE: If a credit card agreement has been submitted to the CFPB, the agreement has not been amended and the card issuer continues to offer the agreement to the public, no additional submission regarding that agreement is required.

4. If a card issuer no longer offers to the public a credit card agreement that previously has been submitted to the CFPB, ensure that the card issuer notifies the CFPB by the first quarterly submission deadline after the last day of the calendar quarter in which the issuer ceased to offer the agreement (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(4)).

NOTE: A card issuer is not required to submit any credit card agreements to the CFPB if the card issuer had fewer than 10,000 open credit card accounts as of the last business day of the calendar quarter (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(5)(i)).

5. If an issuer that previously qualified for the de minimis exception ceases to qualify, determine that the card issuer begins making quarterly submissions to the CFPB no later than the first quarterly submission deadline after the date as of which the issuer ceased to qualify (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(5)(ii)).
6. If a card issuer that did not previously qualify for the de minimis exception qualifies for the de minimis exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the CFPB until the issuer notifies the CFPB that the card issuer is withdrawing all agreements it previously submitted to the CFPB (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(5)(iii)).
7. A card issuer is not required to submit to the CFPB a credit card agreement if, as of the last business day of the calendar quarter, the agreement is offered for accounts under one or more private label credit card plans each of which has fewer than 10,000 open accounts and is not offered to the public other than for accounts under such a plan (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(6)(i)).

NOTE: A private label credit card is one that is usable only at a single merchant or affiliated group of merchants. A private label credit card plan is all private label credit card accounts issued by a particular issuer with credit cards usable at the same single merchant or affiliated group of merchants (12 CFR 1026.58(b)(8)).

8. If an agreement that previously qualified for the private label credit card exception ceases to qualify, determine that the card issuer submits the agreement to the CFPB no later than the first quarterly submission deadline after the date as of which the agreement ceased to qualify (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(6)(ii)).
9. If an agreement that did not previously qualify for the private label credit card exception qualifies for the exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the CFPB with respect to that agreement until the issuer notifies the CFPB that the agreement is being withdrawn (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(6)(iii)).

NOTE: A card issuer is not required to submit to the CFPB a credit card agreement if, as of the last business day of the calendar quarter, the agreement is offered as part of a product test offered to only a limited group of consumers for a limited period of time, is used for fewer than 10,000 open accounts, and is not offered to the public other than in connection with such a product test (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(i)).

10. If an agreement that previously qualified for the product testing exception ceases to qualify, determine that the card issuer submits the agreement to the CFPB no later than the first quarterly submission deadline after the date as of which the agreement ceased to qualify (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(ii)).
 11. If an agreement that did not previously qualify for the product testing exception qualifies for the exception, determine that the card issuer continues to make quarterly submissions to the CFPB with respect to that agreement until the issuer notifies the CFPB that the agreement is being withdrawn (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(7)(iii)).
 12. Verify that each agreement contains the provisions of the agreement and the pricing information in effect as of the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(A)).
 13. Verify that agreements do not include any personally identifiable information relating to any cardholder, such as name, address, telephone number, or account number (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(B)).
 14. Verify that agreements are presented in a clear and legible font (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(i)(D)).
 15. Verify that pricing information is set forth in a single addendum to the agreement that contains only the pricing information (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(A)).
- NOTE: With respect to information other than the pricing information that may vary between cardholders depending on creditworthiness, state of residence, or other factors, issuers may, but are not required to, include that information in a single addendum (the optional variable terms addendum) to the agreement separate from the pricing addendum (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iii)).*
16. If pricing information varies from one cardholder to another depending on the cardholder's creditworthiness or state of residence or other factors, verify that the pricing information is disclosed either by setting forth all the possible variations (such as purchase APRs of 13 percent,

V. Lending — TILA

15 percent, 17 percent, and 19 percent) or by providing a range of possible variations (such as purchase APRs ranging from 13 percent to 19 percent) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(B)).

17. If a rate included in the pricing information is a variable rate, verify that the issuer identifies the index or formula used in setting the rate and the margin (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(C)).
18. If rates vary from one cardholder to another, verify that the issuer discloses such rates by providing the index and the possible margins (such as the prime rate plus 5 percent, 8 percent, 10 percent, or 12 percent) or range of margins (such as the prime rate plus from 5 to 12 percent) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(ii)(C)).

NOTE: The value of the rate and the value of the index are not required to be disclosed.

19. Determine that issuers do not provide provisions of the agreement or pricing information in the form of change-in-terms notices or riders (other than the pricing information addendum and the optional variable terms addendum) (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iv)).
20. Determine that changes in provisions or pricing information are integrated into the text of the agreement, the pricing information addendum, or the optional variable terms addendum, as appropriate (12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8)(iv)).

The Posting of Agreements Offered to the Public – 12 CFR 1026.58(d)

1. Determine that the card issuer posts and maintains on its publicly available website the credit card agreements that the issuer is required to submit to the CFPB under 12 CFR 1026.58(c) (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(1)).
2. With respect to an agreement offered solely for accounts under one or more private label credit card plans (and the issuer does not post and maintain the agreements on its publicly available website), determine that the issuer posts and maintains the agreement on the publicly available website of at least one of the merchants where cards issued under each private label credit card plan with 10,000 or more open accounts may be used (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(1)).
3. Verify that agreements posted pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.58(d) conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB specified in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8) (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(2)).
4. Determine that agreements are posted in an electronic format that is readily usable by the general public (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(3)).

5. Verify that agreements are placed in a location on its website that is prominent and readily accessible by the public and accessible without submission of personally identifiable information (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(3)).
6. Determine that the card issuer updates the agreements posted on its website at least as frequently as the quarterly schedule required for submission of agreements to the CFPB under 12 CFR 1026.58(c) (12 CFR 1026.58(d)(4)).

NOTE: If the issuer chooses to update the agreements on its website more frequently, the agreements posted on the issuer's website may contain the provisions of the agreement and the pricing information in effect as of a date other than the last business day of the preceding calendar quarter.

The Posting of Agreements for "Open" Accounts – 12 CFR 1026.58(e)

1. With respect to any open (i.e., the cardholder can obtain extensions or there is an outstanding balance on the account that has not been charged off) credit card account, determine that the card issuer either:
 - a. Posts and maintains the cardholder's agreement on its website; or
 - b. Promptly provides a copy of the cardholder's agreement to the cardholder upon the cardholder's request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(i) and (ii)).
2. If the card issuer makes an agreement available upon request, ensure that the issuer provides the cardholder with the ability to request a copy of the agreement both by:
 - a. Using the issuer's website, such as by clicking on a clearly identified box to make the request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)), and
 - b. Calling a readily available telephone line the number for which is displayed on the issuer's website and clearly identified as to purpose (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii) and (e)(2)).
3. If an issuer does not maintain a website from which cardholders can access specific information about their individual accounts determine that the issuer makes agreements available upon request by providing the cardholder with the ability to request a copy of the agreement by calling a readily available telephone line the number for which is (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(2)):
 - a. Displayed on the issuer's website and clearly identified as to purpose; or
 - b. Included on each periodic statement sent to the cardholder and clearly identified as to purpose.

4. Verify that the card issuer sends to the cardholder or otherwise make available to the cardholder a copy of the cardholder's agreement in electronic or paper form no later than 30 days after the issuer receives the cardholder's request (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii)).
5. Determine that agreements posted on the card issuer's website or made available upon the cardholder's request conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB specified in 12 CFR 1026.58(c)(8) (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(i)).
6. If the card issuer posts an agreement on its website or otherwise provides an agreement to a cardholder electronically, verify that the agreement is posted or provided in an electronic format that is readily usable by the general public and is placed in a location that is prominent and readily accessible to the cardholder (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(ii)).
7. If agreements posted or otherwise provided contain personally identifiable information relating to the cardholder, such as name, address, telephone number, or account number, ensure that the issuer takes appropriate measures to make the agreement accessible only to the cardholder or other authorized persons (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iii)).
8. Determine that agreements posted or otherwise provided set forth the specific provisions and pricing information applicable to the particular cardholder (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iv)).
9. Determine that provisions and pricing information are complete and accurate as of a date no more than 60 days prior to (12 CFR 1026.58(e)(3)(iv)):
 - a. The date on which the agreement is posted on the card issuer's website under 12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(i);
 - b. The date the cardholder's request is received under 12 CFR 1026.58(e)(1)(ii) or (e)(2).

NOTE: Card issuers may provide credit card agreements in electronic form under 12 CFR 1026.58(d) and (e) without regard to the consumer notice and consent requirements of section 101(c) of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.) (12 CFR 1026.58(f)).

Advertising (Open- and Closed-End)

1. For open- and closed-end loans, sample advertising copy, including any electronic advertising, since the previous examination and verify that the terms of credit are accurate, clear, balanced, and conspicuous. If triggering terms are used, determine that the required disclosures are made (12 CFR 1026.16 and 12 CFR 1026.24).
 - a. For advertisements for closed-end credit:
 - i. If a rate of finance charge was stated, determine that it was stated as an APR.
 - ii. If an APR will increase after consummation, verify that a statement to that fact is made.
 - iii. Determine whether there are deceptive or misleading statements or practices.
 - b. Determine that the creditor does not offer college students any tangible item to induce such students to apply for or open an open-end consumer credit plan offered by such creditor, if such offer is made:
 - i. On the campus of an institution of higher education;
 - ii. Near the campus of an institution of higher education; or
 - iii. At an event sponsored by or related to an institution of higher education (12 CFR 1026.57(c)).
 - c. If an open-end credit advertisement refers to an APR as "fixed" (or similar term), determine 1) that the advertisement also specifies a time period that the rate will be fixed and 2) that the rate will not increase during that period (12 CFR 1026.16(f)).
 - d. If an open-end credit advertisement used the word "fixed" or a similar word and no time period is specified in which the rate will be fixed, determine that the rate will not increase while the plan is open (12 CFR 1026.16(f)).
 - e. For any advertisement of an open-end (not home-secured) plan, if an APR or fee that may be applied to the account is an introductory rate or introductory fee, determine that the term introductory or intro is in immediate proximity to each listing of the introductory rate or introductory fee in a written or electronic advertisement (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(3)).
 - f. For any advertisement of an open-end (not home-secured) plan, if any APR or fee that may be applied to the account is a promotional rate under 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(i) or any fee that may be applied to the account is a promotional fee under 12 CFR 1026.16(g)(2)(iv), determine that the following information is stated in a clear and conspicuous manner in the advertisement (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(4)):
 - i. When the promotional rate or promotional fee will end; and

- ii. The annual percentage rate that will apply after the end of the promotional period.

NOTE: If such rate is variable, determine that the annual percentage rate complies with the accuracy standards in 12 CFR 1026.60(c)(2), 12 CFR 1026.60(d)(3), 12 CFR 1026.60(e)(4), or 12 CFR 1026.16(b)(1)(ii), as applicable. If such rate cannot be determined at the time disclosures are given because the rate depends at least in part on a later determination of the consumer's creditworthiness, determine that the advertisement discloses the specific rates or the range of rates that might apply (12 CFR 1026.16(g)(4)(ii)). Further, if the promotional rate or fee is stated in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that the information in 12 CFR 1026.16 (g)(4)(i), and, as applicable, (g)(4)(ii), or (g)(4)(iii) are also stated in a prominent location closely proximate to the first listing of the promotional rate or promotional fee.

- g. If a deferred interest offer is advertised for an open-end account not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the deferred interest period is stated in a clear and conspicuous manner in the advertisement. If the phrase “no interest” or similar term regarding the possible avoidance of interest obligations under the deferred interest program is stated, determine that the term “if paid in full” is also stated in a clear and conspicuous manner preceding the disclosure of the deferred interest period in the advertisement. If the deferred interest offer is included in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that the deferred interest period and, if applicable, the term “if paid in full” are stated in immediate proximity to each statement of “no interest,” “no payments,” “deferred interest,” “same as cash,” or similar term regarding interest or payments during the deferred interest period (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(3)).
- h. If any deferred interest offer is advertised for an open-end account not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40, determine that the (h)(4)(i) and (h)(4)(ii) language of 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4) is stated in the advertisement and is similar to Sample G–24 in Appendix G. If the deferred interest offer is included in a written or electronic advertisement, determine that this information is stated in a prominent location closely proximate to the first statement of “no interest,” “no payments,” “deferred interest,” “same as cash,” or similar term regarding interest or payments during the deferred interest period (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4)).

NOTE: The requirements in 12 CFR 1026.16(h)(4) apply to any advertisement of an open-end credit plan not subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 (requirements for home equity plans) (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(1)). However, the requirements do not apply to an envelope or other enclosure in which an application or solicitation is mailed, or to a banner advertisement or pop-up advertisement linked to an application or solicitation provided electronically (12 CFR 1026.16(h)(5)).

Transactional Testing

NOTE: When verifying APR accuracies, use the OCC's APR calculation model or other calculation tool acceptable to your regulatory agency.

- 1. Review the financial institution's closed-end and open-end transactions to ensure accuracy and completeness.

Closed-End Credit Transactional Testing Procedures

- 1. For each type of closed-end loan being tested, determine the accuracy of the disclosures by comparing the disclosures to the contract and other financial institution documents (12 CFR 1026.17).
- 2. Determine whether the required disclosures were made before consummation of the transaction and ensure the presence and accuracy of the items below, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.18).
 - a. Creditor and loan originator name with Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLSR) IDs on required documents as required under (12 CFR 1026.36).
 - b. Amount financed.
 - c. Itemization of the amount financed (RESPA GFE may substitute).
 - d. Finance charge.
 - e. APR.
 - f. Variable rate information as follows for loans not secured by a principal dwelling or secured by a principal dwelling with terms of one year or less:
 - i. Circumstances which permit rate increase,
 - ii. Limitations on the increase (periodic or lifetime),
 - iii. Effect of the increase, and
 - iv. Hypothetical example of new payment terms that would result from an increase.
 - g. Payment schedule including the number, amount, and timing of payments.
 - h. Total of payments.
 - i. Demand feature.
 - j. Total sale price (credit sale).

- k. Prepayment.
 - l. Late payment.
 - m. Security interest.
 - n. Insurance and debt cancellation.
 - o. Certain security interest charges.
 - p. Contract reference.
 - q. Assumption policy.
 - r. Required deposit.
 - s. Interest rate and payment summary for mortgage transactions.
 - t. No-guarantee-to-refinance statement.
3. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides disclosures in connection with the initial interest rate adjustment pursuant to the contract and for rate changes that result in corresponding changes in payment.
 4. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer includes the appropriate content (as identified in the Closed-End Credit Disclosure Forms Review Procedures section above).
 5. For adjustable-rate mortgages, verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides the disclosures consistent with timing requirements (see Timing Requirements section of the procedures above).

NOTE: The accuracy of the adjusted interest rates and indexes should be verified by comparing them with the contract and early disclosures. Refer to the Additional Variable Rate Testing section of these examination procedures.

6. Determine, for each type of closed-end rescindable loan being tested, the appropriate number of copies of the rescission notice are provided to each person whose ownership interest is or will be subject to the security interest. The creditor must deliver two copies of the notice of right to rescind to each consumer entitled to rescind. The rescission notice must disclose the items below (12 CFR 1026.23(b)(1)).
 - a. Security interest taken in the consumer’s principal dwelling.
 - b. Consumer’s right to rescind the transaction.
 - c. How to exercise the right to rescind, with a form for that purpose, designating the address of the creditor’s place of business.
 - d. Effects of rescission.
 - e. Date the rescission period expires.
7. Ensure funding was delayed until the rescission period expired (12 CFR 1026.23(c)).
8. Determine if the consumer has waived the three-day right to rescind since the previous examination. If applicable, test rescission waivers (12 CFR 1026.23(e)).
9. Determine whether the maximum interest rate in the contract is disclosed for any consumer credit contract secured by a dwelling if the APR may increase after consummation (12 CFR 1026.30(a)).
10. For private student loans with a right to cancel, review cancellation requests to determine if they were properly handled (12 CFR 1026.47(c)).

Minimum Standards for Transactions Secured by a Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43

1. Determine whether the financial institution is a creditor that originates covered transactions. Covered transactions are transactions secured by a dwelling, including any real property attached to a dwelling. They do not include: home equity lines of credit; timeshare loans, or purposes of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)-(f): reverse mortgages; temporary, or bridge, or construction loans of 12 months or less; renewable or non-renewable construction loans of 12 months or less that are a part of a construction-to-permanent transaction; or an extension of credit under a program administered by a Housing Finance Agency (defined in 24 CFR 266.5), by community development or non-profit lenders specified in 12 CFR 1026.43(a)(3)(v), or in connection with certain federal emergency economic stabilization programs (12 CFR 1026.43(a)).
2. Determine if a loan is a streamline refinance under 12 CFR 1026.20(a) and Commentary 12 CFR 1026.20(a) and whether it qualifies under 12 CFR 1026.43(d), below.

Refinancing Non-Standard Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(d)

1. Determine whether a creditor that has refinanced a non-standard mortgage defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(i) (an ARM with an introductory rate fixed for a year or more, an interest-only loan, or a negative amortization loan) into a standard mortgage as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(ii) has considered whether the standard mortgage likely will prevent a default by the consumer once the loan is recast. In addition, determine that the following conditions are met (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(3)):

- a. At the time of the refinance, the creditor for the standard mortgage is the current holder of the existing non-standard mortgage or the servicer acting on behalf of the current holder (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(i));
- b. The monthly payment for the standard mortgage is materially lower (a payment reduction of 10 percent or more is sufficient) than the monthly payment for the non-standard mortgage using the payment calculation rules in 12 CFR 1026.43(d)(5) (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(ii));
- c. The creditor received the consumer's written application for the standard mortgage no later than two months after the non-standard mortgage had recast (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(iii));
- d. The consumer had made no more than one payment more than 30 days late on the non-standard mortgage during the 12 months immediately before the creditor receives the consumer's written application for the standard mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(iv));
- e. The consumer had made no payments more than 30 days late during the six months immediately before the creditor received the consumer's written application for the standard mortgage (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(2)(v)); and
- f. If the non-standard mortgage was consummated on or after January 10, 2014, the non-standard mortgage was made in accordance with the ability to repay or the qualified mortgage requirements 12 CFR 1026.43(c) or (e) (12 CFR 1026.43(d)(vi)).

Ability to Repay – 12 CFR 1026.43(c)

NOTE: For all covered transactions, except streamline refinances, creditors must make a good faith determination that the consumer will have a reasonable ability to repay the loan, and must verify the information upon which it relied. A creditor can meet this obligation by complying with the ability-to-repay requirement in 12 CFR 1026.43(c) or by making qualified mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.43(e) and (f), or qualified mortgages under the safe harbor standard in 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F). Qualified mortgages, which limit certain loan features and practices, are presumed to satisfy the ability-to-repay requirements (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(1) and (2)).

Except where a loan is a non-standard mortgage refinanced into a standard mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(d), or is a qualified mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(e), (f), or pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F) (all of which are covered by procedures below), determine whether the creditor makes a reasonable and good faith determination at or before consummation that the consumer will have a reasonable ability to repay the loan according to its terms, based, at a minimum, on the criteria that follow (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(1)).

1. Determine whether the creditor considered the following, at a minimum, in determining the consumer's ability to repay (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)):
 - a. The consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets (other than the value of the dwelling, including any real property attached to the dwelling, that secures the loan) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(i));
 - b. If the creditor relies on employment income, the consumer's current employment status (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(ii));
 - c. The consumer's monthly payment on the covered transaction, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iii)) (see g. below);
 - d. The consumer's monthly payment on any simultaneous loan that the creditor knows or has reason to know will be made, calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iv));
 - e. The consumer's monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(v));
 - f. The consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vi));
 - g. The consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7) and 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vii) and (viii)); and
 - h. The consumer's credit history (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(viii)).
2. Determine whether the creditor verified the information it relied upon when considering the eight factors listed above using reasonably reliable third-party records, except that special rules apply for verification of income or assets, employment, and current debt obligations that are not shown on the consumer's credit report (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)).

Income and Assets, Employment and Debt Obligations

1. Determine that the creditor verified the information that it relied on using reliable third-party records except that:
 - a. A creditor may verify a consumer's employment status orally if the creditor prepares a written record of the

- information obtained orally (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(ii)); and
- b. A creditor that relies on a credit report to verify a consumer's current obligations need not independently verify obligations that the consumer lists on the application that are not in the consumer's credit report (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(iii)).
2. Determine whether the creditor verified the income or assets it relied upon, by using third-party records that provide reasonably reliable evidence, (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)) such as:
 - a. A tax-return transcript issued by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4));
 - b. Copies of tax returns the consumer filed with the IRS or a state taxing authority (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(i));
 - c. IRS Form W-2s or similar IRS forms used for reporting wages or tax withholding (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(ii));
 - d. Payroll statements, including military Leave and Earnings Statements (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(iii));
 - e. Financial institution records (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(iv));
 - f. Records from the consumer's employer or a third party that obtained information from the employer (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(v));
 - g. Records from a federal, state, or local government agency stating the consumer's income from benefits or entitlements (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(vi));
 - h. Receipts from the consumer's use of check cashing services (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(vii)); and
 - i. Receipts from the consumer's use of a funds transfer service (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(4)(viii)).
 3. For employment status, if the creditor orally verified employment status, determine whether the creditor prepared a written record of the information obtained orally (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(3)(ii)).

Monthly Payment Calculation

1. Determine whether the creditor calculated the monthly payment (except for balloon payment, interest-only and negative amortization loans) by using:
 - a. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and monthly, fully amortizing payments that are substantially equal (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)).

- b. For a loan with a balloon payment:
 - i. The maximum payment scheduled during the first five years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due for a loan that is not a higher-priced covered transaction as defined under 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(4) (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(A)(1)); or
 - ii. The maximum payment in the payment schedule, including any balloon payment, for a higher-priced covered transaction (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(A)(2)).
- c. For an interest-only loan:
 - i. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and
 - ii. Substantially equal, monthly payments of principal and interest that will repay the loan amount over the term of the loan remaining as of the date the loan is recast (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(B)).
- d. For a negative amortization loan:
 - i. The fully indexed rate or any introductory interest rate, whichever is greater; and
 - ii. Substantially equal, monthly payments of principal and interest that will repay the maximum loan amount as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(7) over the term of the loan remaining as of the date the loan is recast (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5)(ii)(C)).

Monthly Payment Calculation for Simultaneous Loans

1. Determine whether the creditor calculated the monthly payment on any simultaneous loan that was used to determine the consumer's repayment ability, including any mortgage-related obligations, as follows:
 - a. For a simultaneous loan that is a covered transaction, using the payment calculation rules for covered transactions, described above (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6)(i)); or
 - b. For a home equity line of credit, by using the periodic payment required under the terms of the plan and the amount of credit drawn at or before consummation of the covered transaction (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(6)(ii)).

Monthly Debt-to-Income Ratio or Residual Income

1. When a creditor considers the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio, determine whether the creditor considered the ratio of the consumer's total monthly debt obligations to the consumer's total monthly income (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(ii)(A)).

V. Lending — TILA

- a. Total monthly debt obligations means the total of: the monthly payment on the covered transaction (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iii) and (c)(5)), simultaneous loans (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(iv) and (c)(6)), mortgage-related obligations (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(v)), and current debt obligations, alimony, and child support (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vi)).
 - b. Total monthly income means the total of the consumer's current or reasonably expected income, including any income from assets (as required by 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(i) and (4)).
2. If a creditor considers the consumer's monthly residual income, determine whether the creditor considered the consumer's remaining income after subtracting the consumer's total monthly debt obligations from the consumer's total monthly income (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(ii)(B)). Total monthly debt obligations and total monthly income are defined in (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) and (B)).

NOTE: In cases where qualified mortgage status does not apply, the loan should be analyzed under ability to repay requirements as outlined in (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)

1. Determine whether the creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a loan that is a qualified mortgage, including a higher-priced qualified mortgage, under the general qualified mortgage definition in 12 CFR 1026.43(e).
2. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4), (5), (6), or (f) (all discussed below), a qualified mortgage is a covered transaction:
 - a. That provides for regular, substantially equal, periodic payments, except for the effect any interest rate change after consummation has on adjustable-rate mortgages or step-rate mortgages (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)) that do not:
 - i. Result in an increase of the principal balance (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(A)), or
 - ii. Allow balloon payments or deferment of principal payments (except for balloon-payment qualified mortgages described in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) and (e)(6) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(B) and (C))).
 - b. For which the loan term does not exceed 30 years (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(ii));

- c. For which the total points and fees (as defined in (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(1)(i))):
 - i. Do not exceed the applicable thresholds of (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iii) and (3)):
 - A. $130,461 or over: 3 percent of the total loan amount (see 12 CFR 1026.32(b)(4)(i));
 - B. $78,277 or over but less than $130,461: $3,914;
 - C. $26,092 or over but less than $78,277: 5 percent of the total loan amount;
 - D. $16,308 or over but less than $26,092: $1,305; or
 - E. Less than $16,308: 8 percent of the total loan amount.
 - ii. For transactions consummated on or before January 10, 2021, if the creditor or assignee determined after consummation that the points and fees exceeded the applicable threshold, the loan is not precluded from being a qualified mortgage if:

NOTE: These numbers are annually adjusted for inflation on January 1.

- A. The loan otherwise meets the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), (e)(4), (e)(5), (e)(6), or (f), as applicable;
- B. The creditor or assignee paid to the consumer certain amounts, described below, within 210 days after consummation and prior to any of the following events:
 - 1) The consumer institutes an action in connection with the loan;
 - 2) The consumer provides a written notice to the creditor, assignee, or servicer that the transaction's total points and fees exceed the applicable threshold; or
 - 3) The consumer becomes 60 days past due on the legal obligation; and
- C. The amount paid to the consumer is not less than the sum of the following:
 - 1) The dollar amount by which the transaction's total points and fees exceeds the applicable limit, and

- 2) Interest on the amount of excess points and fees, calculated using the contract interest rate applicable during the period from consummation until the payment is made to the consumer; and
- D. The creditor or assignee, as applicable, maintains and follows policies and procedures for post-consummation review of points and fees for making the above-described payments to consumers (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(3)(iii) and (iv)).
- NOTE: The points and fees cure provision applies to the points and fees limits for all of the qualified mortgage types defined in Regulation Z.*
- d. For which the creditor underwrites the loan, taking into account the monthly payment for mortgage-related obligations, using (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv)):
- i. The maximum interest rate that may apply during the first 5 years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due; and
 - ii. Periodic payments of principal and interest that will repay either:
 - A. The outstanding principal balance over the remaining term of the loan. This should be calculated as of the date the interest rate adjusts to the maximum interest rate that may apply during the first 5 years after the date on which the first regular periodic payment will be due, assuming the consumer will have made all required payments as due prior to that date; or
 - B. The loan amount over the loan term;
- e. For which the creditor considers and verifies at or before consummation the following (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(v)):
- i. Consider the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan, in accordance with Appendix Q and (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(i) and (c)(4)); and debt obligations, alimony, and child support; and
 - ii. Verify the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support in accordance with Appendix Q and (12 CFR 1026.43(c)(2)(vi) and (c)(3)); and
- f. For which the annual percentage rate does not exceed the average prime offer rate for a comparable transaction as of the date the interest rate is set by the amounts specified below (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)):⁷¹
- i. For a first-lien covered transaction with a loan amount greater than or equal to $130,461, 2.25 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(A));
 - ii. For a first-lien covered transaction with a loan amount greater than or equal to $78,277 but less than $130,461, 3.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(B));
 - iii. For a first-lien covered transaction with a loan amount less than $78,277, 6.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(C));
 - iv. For a first-lien covered transaction secured by a manufactured home with a loan amount less than $130,461, 6.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(D));
 - v. For a subordinate-lien covered transaction with a loan amount greater than or equal to $78,277, 3.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(E));
 - vi. For a subordinate-lien covered transaction with a loan amount less than $78,277, 6.5 or more percentage points (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(vi)(F)).
- Note: These numbers are annually adjusted for inflation on January 1.*⁷²

⁷¹ This subsection applies if the creditor chooses to rely on the pricing threshold method, which becomes compulsory for purposes of the General QM on October 1, 2022. Prior to that date, at the creditor's discretion, it may choose to rely on the previous debt-to-income based definition of the general qualified mortgage, under which the ratio of the consumer's total monthly debt to total monthly income, at the time of consummation, does not exceed 43 percent in accordance with former Appendix Q.

V. Lending — TILA

Temporary Category of Qualified Mortgages – Other Agencies – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(4)

$2.640 billion (this threshold will adjust annually).

1. Determine whether the creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making loans that
 - a. Meet the requirements of a qualified mortgage as defined by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (24 CFR 201.7 and 24 CFR 203.19), the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (38 CFR 36.4300 and 38 CFR 36.4500), or the U.S. Department of Agriculture (7 CFR 3555.109); or
 - b. Meet the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i) through (iii) (i.e., do not have negative amortization, interest-only payments, or balloon payments, loan terms that exceed 30 years; or points and fees that exceed the specified limits—generally, 3 percent of the total loan amount); and are eligible for purchase or guarantee Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac (or any limited-life regulatory entity succeeding the charter of either) operating under the conservatorship or receivership of the Federal Housing Finance Agency pursuant to section 1367 of the Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992 (12 U.S.C. 4617(a)), and for which the creditor received the consumer’s application prior to October 1, 2022.

NOTE: This category of qualified mortgages does not require a small creditor to operate in a rural or underserved area.

- b. The creditor makes a loan that meets the requirements for a qualified mortgage in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), other than 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(v) and (vi);

NOTE: This means, among other things, that the loan does not have negative amortization, interest-only, or balloon payment features (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)); has a loan term of 30 years or less (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(ii)); points and fees are under certain thresholds (generally 3 percent) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iii)); and the creditor underwrites the loan, taking into account the monthly payment for mortgage related obligations (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv)).

- c. The creditor considers and verifies at or before consummation: the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan, in accordance with the general repayment ability standards; and the consumer’s current debt obligations, alimony, and child support in accordance with the general repayment ability standards (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(B));

Small Creditor Portfolio Loan Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage as follows:
 - a. The creditor satisfies the creditor requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B), and (C), which require that (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(D)):
 - i. During the preceding calendar year (or, if the application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor and its affiliates together extended no more than 2,000 first-lien covered transactions that were sold, assigned or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person; and
 - ii. As of the end of the preceding calendar year (or if the application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, as of either of the two preceding December 31sts), the creditor and its affiliates that regularly extended first-lien covered transactions, together had total assets of less than

- d. The creditor considers at or before consummation, the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income and verifies the debt obligations and income used to determine that ratio in accordance with the repayment ability requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7), except that the calculation of the payment for determining the consumer’s total monthly debt obligations in 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) is determined in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv) (based on the maximum interest rate in the first five years after the date the first periodic payment is due) instead of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(5) (fully indexed rate) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(B)); and
 - e. The loan was not subject to a forward commitment at consummation, except to a person that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii) (B) and (C) (i.e., small creditors) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(C)).
2. Determine whether the small creditor portfolio mortgage does not have a qualified mortgage status because it was subject to a forward commitment at consummation, or the creditor has transferred it in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:
 - a. Three years or more after consummation;

- b. To a creditor that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(i)(D) of this section (i.e., small creditors under 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(B) and (C));
- c. Made pursuant to a capital restoration plan or other action under 12 U.S.C. 1831o, or to actions or instructions of a conservator, receiver, or bankruptcy trustee, or to orders by or agreements with a state or federal governmental agency with jurisdiction to examine the creditor; or
- d. Made pursuant to a merger of the creditor and another person or the acquisition of the creditor by another person, or the creditor's acquisition of another person (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(5)(ii)).

NOTE: If a small creditor portfolio qualified mortgage has lost its qualified mortgage status, the creditor must have complied with the general ability-to-repay requirements under (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Seasoned Loan Qualified Mortgages – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)

- 1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that, except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv) (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(i)):
 - a. Is a first-lien covered transaction;
 - b. Is a fixed-rate mortgage as defined in 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(7)(iii) with fully amortizing payments as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(b)(2);

NOTE: Under 12 CFR 1026.18(s)(7)(iii), the term “fixed-rate mortgage” means a transaction secured by real property or a dwelling that is not an adjustable-rate mortgage or a step-rate mortgage. Thus, a covered transaction that is an adjustable-rate mortgage or step-rate mortgage is not eligible to become a seasoned qualified mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7) (Comment 43(e)(7)(i)(A)-1).

Only loans for which the scheduled periodic payments do not require a balloon payment, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.18(s), to fully amortize the loan within the loan term can become seasoned qualified mortgages for purposes of 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7). However, 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(i)(A) does not prohibit a qualifying change as defined in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv)(B) that is entered into during or after a temporary payment accommodation in connection with a disaster or pandemic-related national emergency, even if such a qualifying change involves a balloon payment or lengthened loan term (Comment 43(e)(7)(i)(A)-2).

- c. Satisfies the requirements in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i) through (v) because:

- i. The loan does not have negative amortization, interest-only payments, or balloon payments, or a loan term that exceeds 30 years;
- ii. The loan's points and fees do not exceed the specified limits—generally, 3 percent of the total loan amount;
- iii. The loan is underwritten in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iv); and
- iv. The creditor:
 - A. Considered the consumer's monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income; current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan; and debt obligations, alimony, and child support; and
 - B. Verified the consumer's current or reasonably expected income or assets other than the value of the dwelling (including any real property attached to the dwelling) that secures the loan and the consumer's current debt obligations, alimony, and child support.
- d. Is a covered transaction with no more than two delinquencies of 30 or more days and no delinquencies of 60 or more days at the end of the seasoning period (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(ii)). The “seasoning period” generally means a period of 36 months beginning on the date on which the first periodic payment is due after consummation of the covered transaction, with certain exceptions (see 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv)(C)(1) and (2)). For the definition of delinquency, see 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iv)(A).
- e. Satisfies the portfolio requirements in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iii) because:
 - i. It is not subject, at consummation, to a commitment to be acquired by another person, except for a sale, assignment, or transfer permitted by 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(7)(iii)(B)(3); and
 - ii. Legal title to the covered transaction is not sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person before the end of the seasoning period, except as identified in 1026.43(e)(7)(iii)(B)(1) through (3).
- f. Is not a high-cost mortgage as defined in 12 CFR 1026.32(a).

Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages Made by Certain Small Creditors – 12 CFR 1026.43(f)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that provides for a balloon payment as follows:
 - a. The creditor satisfies the creditor requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A),(B), and (C), which require that (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(vi)):
 - i. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor extended a first-lien covered transaction on a property that is located in a “rural” or “underserved” area;
 - ii. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), the creditor, together with its affiliates, extended no more than 2,000 first-lien covered transactions (that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person); and
 - iii. As of the preceding December 31st (or if an application was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, as of either of the two preceding December 31sts), the creditor and its affiliates that regularly extended first-lien covered transactions, together had total assets of less than $2.640 billion (this threshold will adjust annually).
 - b. The creditor makes a loan that meets the requirements for a qualified mortgage in 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i)(A) (substantially equal payments or ARMs or step-rate mortgages that do not increase the principal balance), (e)(2)(ii) (loan term 30 years or less), and (e)(2)(iii) (points and fees under certain thresholds);
 - c. The creditor determines that the consumer can make all of the scheduled payments under the loan and the monthly payments for all mortgage-related obligations (excluding the balloon payment) from the consumer’s current or reasonably expected income or assets (other than the dwelling that secures the loan) (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(ii));
 - d. The creditor considers at or before consummation, the consumer’s monthly debt-to-income ratio or residual income and verifies the debt obligations and income used to determine that ratio in accordance with the repayment ability requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7), except that the calculation of the payment for determining the consumer’s total monthly debt obligations in 12 CFR 1026.43(c)(7)(i)(A) is based on the scheduled payments for the balloon-payment qualified mortgage in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iv)(A), together with the consumer’s monthly payments for all mortgage-related obligations other than the balloon payment (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iii));

- e. The legal obligation provides for:
 - i. Scheduled payments that are substantially equal, calculated using an amortization period that does not exceed 30 years, with
 - ii. An interest rate that does not increase over the term of the loan, and
 - iii. A loan term of five years or longer (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(iv)(A)-(C));

The loan was not subject to a forward commitment at consummation, except to a person that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A), (B), and (C) (i.e., small creditors operating in rural or underserved counties).

2. Determine whether the balloon-payment qualified mortgage does not have qualified mortgage status because it was subject to a forward commitment at consummation, or the creditor has transferred it in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:
 - a. Three years or more after consummation;
 - b. To a creditor that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(f)(1)(vi) of this section (i.e., meets the definition of 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A)-(C), establishing criteria for small creditors operating in rural or underserved counties);
 - c. Made pursuant to a capital restoration plan or other action under 12 U.S.C. 1831o, or to actions or instructions of a conservator, receiver or bankruptcy trustee, or to orders by or agreements with a state or federal governmental agency with jurisdiction to examine the creditor; or
 - d. Due to a merger of the creditor with another person or the acquisition of the creditor by another person or another person by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.43(f)(2)(i) and (iv)).

NOTE: If a balloon-payment qualified mortgage has lost its qualified mortgage status, the creditor must have complied with the general ability-to-repay requirements under (12 CFR 1026.43(c)).

Temporary Balloon-Payment Qualified Mortgages Made by Small Creditors – 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(6)

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(c) by making a qualified mortgage that meets the requirements of the small creditor balloon-payment qualified mortgage definition in 12 CFR 1026.43(f) (above), except that the creditor requirement in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A) (operate in a rural or underserved area) does not apply.

NOTE: This temporary qualified mortgage category applies only to loans for which the application was received before April 1, 2016.

Qualified Mortgage— Covered Institution Portfolio Loans—15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F)⁷³

1. Determine whether a creditor has complied with the ability-to-repay requirements of 15 U.S.C. 1639c(a) by making a qualified mortgage as follows:
 - a. The creditor is a covered institution under 15 U.S.C. 1639c(b)(2)(F), which requires that the creditor is an insured depository institution or insured credit union that, together with its affiliates, has less than $10 billion in total consolidated assets;
 - b. The creditor originates and retains the loan in portfolio;
 - c. The loan has total points and fees not exceeding 3 percent of the total loan amount;
 - d. The loan does not contain terms under the legal obligation for:
 - i. Prepayment penalties for paying all or part of the principal following consummation, pursuant to the limitations as set forth in 15 U.S.C. 1639c(c)(1) and (c)(3);
 - ii. Negative amortization (periodic payments that will result in an increase in the principal balance);
 - iii. Interest-only payments (one or more of the periodic payments to be applied solely to accrued interest and

NOTE: A member of a federal credit union may repay a loan prior to maturity in whole or in part on any business day without penalty (12 U.S.C. 1757(5)(A)(viii) 12 CFR 701.21(c)(6));

- ii. Negative amortization (periodic payments that will result in an increase in the principal balance);
- iii. Interest-only payments (one or more of the periodic payments to be applied solely to accrued interest and not to loan principal);

- e. The creditor considers and documents the debt, income, and financial resources of the consumer.

NOTE: Consideration and documentation requirements need not be construed to require compliance with former Appendix Q to Part 1026 (12 CFR Part 1026); multiple methods of documentation are permitted.

2. Determine whether a covered institution's qualified mortgage loan no longer retains its qualified mortgage status because the creditor has sold, assigned, or transferred the legal title in any circumstances other than where the transfer was:
 - a. Due to bankruptcy or failure of the covered institution;
 - b. To another covered institution, so long as that transferee institution retains the loan in portfolio;
 - c. Made pursuant to a merger or acquisition to or by another person, so long as the loan is retained in portfolio by the transferee; or
 - d. To a wholly owned subsidiary of the covered institution, so long as the loan is considered to be an asset of the covered institution for regulatory accounting purposes.

Prepayment Penalties – 12 CFR 1026.43(g)

1. Determine whether a mortgage is a covered transaction (which excludes HELOCs and timeshares but, for purposes of the prepayment penalty provisions, includes reverse mortgages, temporary loans, and loans made by certain community development, non-profit, and other lenders otherwise excluded from ability-to-repay provisions under 12 CFR 1026.43(a)). If yes, then the loan may not have a prepayment penalty unless:
 - a. It is a qualified mortgage under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2), (e)(4), (e)(5), (e)(6), or (f);
 - b. The prepayment penalty is otherwise allowed by law;
 - c. The mortgage has an APR that cannot increase after consummation; and
 - d. The loan is not a higher-priced mortgage loan, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.35(a) (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(1)).

⁷³ As of the date of these procedures, this provision is implemented by statute only, and the terms are not further defined by Regulation Z.

NOTE: Covered transactions are generally prohibited from having prepayment penalties unless certain conditions are met.

2. Determine if the prepayment penalty improperly exceeds the following percentages of the outstanding balance prepaid:
 - a. 2 percent during the first two years following consummation;
 - b. 1 percent during the third year following consummation; and
 - c. 0 percent thereafter (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(2)).
3. Determine whether a creditor offering a consumer a mortgage with a prepayment penalty has also offered the consumer an alternative without a prepayment penalty and the alternative (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3)):
 - a. Has an APR that cannot increase after consummation and has the same type of interest rate (fixed or step rate) as the loan with a prepayment penalty;
 - b. Has the same loan term as the loan with a prepayment penalty;
 - c. Satisfies the periodic payment conditions under (12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(i));
 - d. Satisfies the points and fees conditions under 12 CFR 1026.43(e)(2)(iii), based on the information known to the creditor at the time of the offer; and
 - e. Is a loan for which the creditor has a good faith belief that the consumer likely qualifies, based on the information known to the creditor at the time the creditor offers the loan without a prepayment penalty (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3)).
4. Determine whether a creditor offering a loan with a prepayment penalty through a mortgage broker:
 - a. Presents the mortgage broker an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty that satisfies the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(3)); and
 - b. Establishes by agreement that the mortgage broker must present to the consumer an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty offered by the creditor that satisfies the requirements of (12 CFR 1026.43(g)); or another creditor, if the other creditor offers a lower interest rate or a lower total dollar amount of discount points and origination points or fees (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(4)).
5. Determine whether a creditor that is a loan originator, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1), who presents a covered transaction with a prepayment penalty offered by another person to whom the loan would be assigned after consummation also presents the consumer an alternative covered transaction without a prepayment penalty that satisfies the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.43(g), offered by the assignee; or another person offering a lower interest rate or a lower total dollar amount of origination discount points and points or fees (12 CFR 1026.43(g)(5)).

Evasion of Minimum Standards for Loans Secured By a Dwelling – 12 CFR 1026.43(h)

1. Determine whether the creditor has structured credit secured by a dwelling that does not meet the definition of open-end credit in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20) as an open-end plan to evade the requirements for minimum standards for loans secured by a dwelling.

High-Cost Mortgages, Reverse Mortgages, and Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1026.32, 12 CFR 1026.33, and 12 CFR 1026.35

1. Determine whether the financial institution originates consumer credit transactions subject to Subpart E of Regulation Z; specifically, high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32, reverse mortgages 12 CFR 1026.33, and “higher-priced mortgage loans” (12 CFR 1026.35).
2. In addition to reviewing high-cost mortgages, reverse mortgages, and higher-priced mortgage loans for compliance with requirements in other subparts of Regulation Z (for example, disclosure timing requirements under 12 CFR 1026.19(a)), review such mortgages to ensure the following:
 - a. Required disclosures are provided to consumers in addition to, not in lieu of, the disclosures contained in other subparts of Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.31(a)).
 - b. Disclosures are clear and conspicuous, in writing, and in a form that the consumer may keep (12 CFR 1026.31(b)).
 - c. Disclosures are furnished at least three business days prior to consummation or account opening of a high-cost mortgage or a closed-end reverse mortgage transaction (or at least three business days prior to the first transaction under an open-end reverse mortgage) (12 CFR 1026.31(c)).

NOTE: For a high-cost mortgage, the three business day waiting period requirement does not apply where a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate is consummated by the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).

- d. Disclosures reflect the terms of the legal obligation between the parties (12 CFR 1026.31(d)).

- e. If the transaction involves more than one creditor, that only one creditor provided the disclosures. Where the obligation involves multiple consumers, ensure that the disclosures were provided to any consumer who is primarily liable on the obligation. Further, for rescindable transactions, verify that the disclosures were provided to each consumer who has the right to rescind (12 CFR 1026.31(e)).
- f. The APR is accurately calculated and disclosed in accordance with the requirements and within the tolerances allowed in 12 CFR 1026.22 for closed-end credit transactions and 12 CFR 1026.6(a) for open-end credit plans (12 CFR 1026.31(g)).
3. For high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32, ensure that, in addition to other required disclosures, the creditor discloses the following at least three business days prior to consummation or account opening (See model disclosure at H-16 in Appendix H):
- Notice containing the prescribed language (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(1));
 - The APR (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(2));
- NOTE: For a high-cost mortgage, the three business day waiting period requirement does not apply where a second offer of credit with a lower annual percentage rate is consummated by the consumer (15 U.S.C. 1639(b)(3)).*
- Regular payment and balloon payment (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3));
 - For a closed-end credit transaction, the amount of regular loan payment and the amount of any balloon payment. The disclosed regular payment should be treated as accurate if it is based on an amount borrowed that is deemed accurate under 12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5) (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3));
 - For an open-end credit plan:
 - An example showing the first minimum periodic payment for the draw period, the first minimum periodic payment for any repayment period, and the balance outstanding at the beginning of any repayment period (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(A));

NOTE: The example must be based on the assumption that the consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening and does not obtain any additional extensions of credit, that the consumer makes only the minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period, and that the APR used to calculate the example payments remains the same during the draw period and any repayment period.
- Creditors must provide the minimum period payment example based on the APR, except that if an introductory APR applies, the creditor must use the rate that will apply to the plan after the introductory rate expires (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(A)-(C)).*
- If the credit contract provides for a balloon payment, a disclosure of that fact and an example showing the amount of the balloon payment based on the assumptions described in the note above (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(B));
 - A statement that the example payments show the first minimum periodic payments at the current annual percentage rate if the consumer borrows the maximum credit available when the account is opened and does not obtain any additional extensions of credit, or substantially similar statement (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(C));
 - A statement that the example payments are not the consumer's actual payments and that the actual minimum periodic payments will depend on the amount the consumer borrows, the interest rate applicable to that period, and whether the consumer pays more than the required minimum periodic payment, or a substantially similar statement (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(3)(ii)(D)).
- f. For variable rate transactions, a statement that the interest rate and monthly payment may increase, and the amount of the single maximum monthly payment allowed under the contract based on the maximum rate required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.30 (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(4));
- g. For a closed-end credit transaction, the total amount the consumer will borrow (the face amount of the note) and if this amount includes financed charges that are not prohibited under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10), that fact. This disclosure should be treated as accurate if within $100 of the actual amount borrowed. For an open-end credit plan, the credit limit for the plan when the account is opened (12 CFR 1026.32(c)(5));
4. For high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32, ensure that the creditor follows these additional rules concerning the disclosures required by (12 CFR 1026.32(c)):
- Determine if a new disclosure is required if, subsequent to providing the additional disclosure but prior to consummation or account opening, the creditor changes any terms that make the disclosures inaccurate. For example, if a consumer finances the payment of premiums or other charges as permitted under 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(10) and, as a result, the monthly payment differs from the payment previously

- disclosed, re-disclosure is required and a new three-day waiting period applies (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(i)).
- b. Determine if a creditor provides new disclosures by telephone when the consumer initiates a change in terms, then prior to or at consummation or account opening the creditor must provide new written disclosures and both parties must sign a statement that these new disclosures were provided by telephone at least three days prior to consummation or account opening (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(ii)).
 - c. If a consumer waives the right to a three-day waiting period to meet a bona fide personal financial emergency, the consumer's waiver must be a dated written statement (not a pre-printed form) describing the emergency and bearing the signature of all the consumers entitled to the waiting period (a consumer can waive only after receiving the required disclosures and prior to consummation or account opening) (12 CFR 1026.31(c)(1)(iii)).
5. For high-cost mortgages 12 CFR 1026.32 determine that the creditor has not included any of the following loan terms:
- a. A payment schedule that provides for a balloon payment (with exceptions) (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(1)(i)-(iii)).
 - b. Negative amortization (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(2)).
 - c. Advance payments from the proceeds of more than 2 periodic payments (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(3)).
 - d. Increased interest rate after default (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(4)).
 - e. A rebate of interest, arising from a loan acceleration due to default, calculated by a method less favorable than the actuarial method (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(5)).
 - f. Prepayment penalty as defined in (12 CFR 1026.32(b)(6)).
 - g. A due-on-demand clause that permits the creditor to terminate the loan in advance of maturity and accelerate the balance, except in cases of fraud or material misrepresentation by the consumer, failure by the consumer to meet the repayment terms of the agreement for any outstanding balance, or action or inaction by the consumer that adversely affects the creditor's security interest in the loan (12 CFR 1026.32(d)(8)).
6. For high-cost mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.32, determine that the creditor is not engaged in the following acts and practices:
- a. Home improvement contracts – Paying a contractor under a home improvement contract from the proceeds of a mortgage unless certain conditions are met (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(1)).
 - b. Notice to assignee – Selling or otherwise assigning a high-cost mortgage without furnishing the required statement to the purchaser or assignee (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(2)).
 - c. Refinancing within one year of extending credit – Within one year of making a high-cost mortgage, a creditor may not refinance any high-cost mortgage to the same consumer into another high-cost mortgage that is not in the consumer's interest. This also applies to assignees that hold or service the high-cost mortgage. Commentary to 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3) has examples applying the refinancing prohibition and addressing "consumer's interest" (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(3)).
 - d. Extending high-cost mortgage credit without regard to the consumer's repayment ability. (Temporary or bridge loans with a term of 12 months or less are exempt from this requirement.) (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4):
 - i. For closed-end credit transactions that are high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor is complying with the repayment ability requirements set forth in (12 CFR 1026.43).
 - ii. For open-end credit plans that are high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor is not extending credit without regard to the consumer's repayment ability as of account opening, including the consumer's current and reasonably expected income, current obligations, assets other than collateral, and employment. A creditor must determine repayment ability for open-end high-cost mortgages by:
 - A. Verifying amounts of income or assets that it relies on to determine repayment ability, including expected income or assets, by the consumer's Internal Revenue Service Form W-2, tax returns, payroll receipts, financial institution records, or other third-party documents that provide reasonably reliable evidence of the consumer's income or assets.
 - B. Verifying the consumer's current obligations, including any mortgage-related obligations that are required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening and secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage.

- iii. Alternatively determines whether the creditor complies with the repayment ability requirement by:
 - A. Verifying repayment ability as described above;
 - B. Determining the consumer's repayment ability by using the largest required minimum periodic payment based on the assumptions that:
 - 1) The consumer borrows the full credit line at account opening with no additional extensions of credit;
 - 2) The consumer makes only required minimum periodic payments during the draw period and any repayment period;
 - 3) If the annual percentage rate can increase during the plan, the maximum percentage rate that is included in the contract; and
 - C. Assessing the consumer's repayment ability, taking into account at least one of the following: the ratio of total debt obligations to income (including any mortgage-related obligations that are required by another credit obligation undertaken prior to or at account opening, and are secured by the same dwelling that secures the high-cost mortgage transaction, or the income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(4)).
- e. Pre-loan counseling – Determine whether the creditor extending a high-cost mortgage received written certification confirming that the consumer received approved home ownership counseling after receiving the initial GFE or, for open-end credit plans, the initial TILA disclosure required by 12 CFR 1026.40, or if neither of those disclosures are provided, after receiving the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.32(c) (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)). Requirements include:
 - i. Verify that home ownership counseling was not provided by an employee or affiliate of the creditor.
 - ii. If the creditor paid fees associated with homeownership counseling, confirm that the payment was not contingent upon the consumer obtaining the high-cost mortgage or receipt of a counseling certification.
 - iii. Verify that the counseling certificate contains the name of the consumer, date of counseling, name and address of the counselor, and statements required by (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(5)(iv)).
- 7. Late Fees – For high-cost mortgages, confirm that late payment charges are disclosed in the terms of the loan contract or open-end credit agreement and that such fees do not exceed 4 percent of the amount past due. No such charge may be imposed more than once for a single late payment (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)).

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans: Appraisals⁷⁴

- 1. For higher-priced mortgage loans secured by principal dwelling that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2), determine whether, before consummation, the creditor obtained a written appraisal from a state-licensed or certified appraiser that included a physical visit to the interior of the dwelling (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) exempts several types of loans from the appraisal requirements, including qualified mortgages under (12 CFR 1026.43).

- 2. Determine whether the creditor is deemed to comply with the requirement by:
 - a. Ordering that the appraiser performs the appraisal in conformity with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice and title XI of FIRREA and any implementing regulations (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)(A)).
 - b. Verifying through the National Registry that the appraiser who signed the appraiser's certification was a certified or licensed appraiser in the state in which the appraised property is located as of the date the appraiser signed the appraiser's certification (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(ii)(B)).
 - c. Confirming that the appraisal includes elements set forth in Appendix N (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(ii)(3)(C)).

⁷⁴ The higher-priced mortgage loans appraisal requirement was adopted pursuant to an interagency rulemaking conducted by the Board, the CFPB, the FDIC, FHFA, NCUA and OCC. The Board codified the rule at 12 CFR 226.43, and the OCC codified the rule at 12 CFR Part 34. There is no substantive difference among these three sets of rules.

- d. Having no actual knowledge contrary to the facts or certifications contained in the written appraisal.
3. Assess whether the creditor exercised reasonable diligence in determining if a second interior appraisal was necessary. A creditor can exercise reasonable diligence by basing its determination on written source documents such as:
 - a. A copy of the recorded deed from the seller,
 - b. A copy of a property tax bill,
 - c. A copy of any owner's title insurance policy obtained by the seller,
 - d. A copy of the RESPA settlement statement from the seller's acquisition,
 - e. A property sales history report or title report from a third-party reporting service,
 - f. Sales price data recorded in multiple listing services,
 - g. Tax assessment records or transfer tax records obtained from local governments,
 - h. A written appraisal performed in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(3)(i) for the same transaction,
 - i. A copy of a title commitment report detailing the seller's ownership of the property, and
 - j. A property abstract (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(i) and (vi); See Appendix O).
4. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii), determine whether an additional written interior appraisal from a state certified or licensed appraiser was both required and performed because the seller acquired the property 180 days or less before the consumer's purchase agreement, and the sales price increased:
 - a. Greater than 10 percent over the previous purchase price, if acquired 90 or fewer days prior to the consumer's purchase agreement; or (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(i)(A)) or
 - b. Greater than 20 percent over the previous purchase price, if acquired 91 to 180 days prior to the consumer's purchase agreement (12 CFR 1026.35(C)(4)(i)(B)).
5. For higher-priced mortgage loans (that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) or 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii)) where the creditor is required to obtain a second interior appraisal:
 - a. Confirm that the creditor obtained an appraisal from a different state certified or licensed appraiser than the one who conducted the first appraisal (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(ii)).
 - b. Confirm that the creditor charged the consumer for only one of the appraisals (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(v)).

NOTE: Reviewing the Closing Disclosure or HUD-1 may assist in identifying whether a second appraisal fee was charged to the consumer.

- c. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2), determine that the creditor provided a written disclosure in a timely manner informing consumers that an appraisal may be necessary and that there is a cost associated with the appraisal, as specified in (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)).
 - i. Disclosures must be provided to consumers within three business days after receipt of an application for a higher-priced mortgage loan. A creditor can meet this requirement by placing the disclosure in the mail within three business days after receipt of the application for a higher-priced mortgage loan (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)(ii)).
 - ii. If the loan becomes a higher-priced mortgage loan during the application process, but after initial receipt of the application, a creditor has three business days from the time the loan became a higher priced mortgage loan to provide the necessary disclosure (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)(ii)).
- d. Confirm that the creditor provided consumers with a free copy of any written appraisal performed in connection with a higher-priced mortgage loan that is not exempt under 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(2) (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)).
 - i. Determine whether the creditor is providing consumers with a copy of their appraisal(s) no later than three business days prior to consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(ii)(A)); or
 - ii. If the loan is not consummated, determine whether the creditor is providing consumers with a copy of the appraisal(s) within 30 days after determining that the loan will not be consummated (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(ii)(B)).

NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.35(c)(4)(vii) provides for eight exemptions from the second appraisal requirement, such as for extensions of credit to finance the acquisition of property from a local, state, or federal government agency.

NOTE: The creditor can satisfy this disclosure requirement by providing the disclosure required in Regulation B, 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(2), related to a free copy of the appraisal (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(5)). However, unlike the waiver provision in Regulation B, a consumer may not waive the timing requirement to receive a copy of the appraisal under (12 CFR 1026.35(c)(6)(i)). In addition, the creditor must use the earliest applicable timing requirement to comply with each regulation's appraisal/valuation disclosure requirements.

Higher-Priced Mortgage Loans: Escrow Accounts

1. For most higher-priced mortgage loans secured by a first lien on a principal dwelling escrow accounts must be established before consummation for property taxes and premiums for mortgage-related insurance required by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(1)).
2. For higher-priced mortgage loans where the creditor did not establish an escrow account, determine whether the transaction or the creditor would fall into an exemption (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)).
 - a. Is the transaction secured by shares in a cooperative (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(A));
 - b. Is the transaction to finance the initial construction of the dwelling (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(B));
 - c. Is the transaction a temporary or "bridge" loan with a term less than 12 months (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(C));
 - d. Is the transaction a reverse mortgage transaction under 12 CFR 1026.33 (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(i)(D));

NOTE: There is a limited exemption for transactions secured by a dwelling in a condominium, planned unit development, or other "common interest community" where a dwelling ownership requires participation in a governing association that is obligated to maintain a master insurance policy insuring all dwellings. In these common interest communities, creditors must maintain an escrow account for the payment of taxes only (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(ii)).

- e. Does the creditor, or loan originator, qualify for an exemption under (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iii)(A)-(D)):
 - i. During the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years), it extended a covered transaction (defined in section 1026.43(b)(1)) secured by a first lien on a property located in an area that meets the definition of "rural" or "underserved" as laid out in (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(2)(iv));

- ii. Together with any affiliates, it did not extend more than 2,000 covered transactions (secured by first liens, that were sold, assigned, or otherwise transferred to another person or subject at the time of consummation to a commitment to be acquired by another person) in the preceding calendar year (or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, during either of the two preceding calendar years);
- iii. It and its affiliates that regularly extended covered transactions together had less than the annually adjusted $2.640 billion threshold in total assets as of the preceding December 31st, or if the application for the transaction was received before April 1 of the current calendar year, of either of the two preceding December 31sts; and
- iv. Neither the creditor nor its affiliate maintains an escrow account of the type described in 12 CFR 1026.35(b)(1) for any extension of consumer credit secured by real property or a dwelling that the creditor or its affiliate currently services, other than:
 - A. Escrow accounts established for first-lien higher-priced mortgage loans on or after April 1, 2010, and before May 1, 2016; or
 - B. Escrow accounts established after consummation as an accommodation to distressed consumers to assist such consumers in avoiding default or foreclosure.

NOTE: The asset threshold will adjust automatically each year, based on the year-to-year change in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers, not seasonally adjusted, for each 12-month period ending in November, with rounding to the nearest million dollars (See comment 35(b)(2)(iii)-1.iii for the current threshold).

3. Evasion of requirements: Ensure that the creditor does not structure a higher-priced mortgage loan as an open-end plan ("spurious open-end credit") to evade the requirements of Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.35(d)).

Prohibited Payments to Loan Originators – 12 CFR 1026.36(d) and (e)

1. Determine that, in connection with a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling,⁷⁵ no loan originator receives, and no person pays to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, compensation⁷⁶ that is based on:

NOTE: The term “loan originator” means, a person who, in expectation of direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain or for direct or indirect compensation or other monetary gain: takes an application, offers, arranges, assists a consumer in obtaining or applying to obtain, negotiates, or otherwise obtains or makes an extension of consumer credit for another person; or through advertising or other means of communication represents to the public that such person can or will perform any of these activities. The term “loan originator” includes an employee, agent, or contractor of the creditor or loan originator organization if the employee, agent, or contractor meets this definition. The term “loan originator” also includes a creditor that engages in loan origination activities if the creditor does not finance the transaction at consummation out of the creditor’s own resources, including by drawing on a bona fide warehouse line of credit or out of deposits held by the creditor (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(1)).

NOTES:

- A person is not a loan originator who does not take a consumer credit application or offer or negotiate credit terms available from a creditor to that consumer based on the consumer’s financial characteristics, but who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of a person who does engage in such activities. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36, “credit terms” include rates, fees or other costs, and a consumer’s financial characteristics include any factors that may influence a credit decision, such as debts, income, assets or credit history (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(6)).
- A retailer of manufactured or modular homes or an employee of such a retailer who does not receive compensation or gain for engaging in loan originator activities in excess of any compensation or gain received in a comparable cash transaction, and who does not directly negotiate with the consumer or lender on credit terms, is not a loan originator if such retailer or employee discloses to the consumer in writing, any corporate affiliation with any creditor. Where the retailer has a corporate affiliation with any creditor, at least one unaffiliated creditor must also be disclosed (15 U.S.C. 1602(dd)(2)(C)(ii)).

- a. A term of a transaction, the terms of multiple transactions by an individual loan originator, or the terms of multiple transactions by multiple individual loan originators (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)); or

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1) only, a “term of a transaction” is any right or obligation of the parties to a credit transaction. The amount of credit extended is not a term of a transaction or a proxy for a term of a transaction, provided that compensation received by or paid to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, is based on a fixed percentage of the amount of credit extended; however, such compensation may be subject to a minimum or maximum dollar amount (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(ii)).

- b. A proxy⁷⁷ for a term of a transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)).
2. Determine that a loan originator that receives a contribution to a defined contribution, tax-advantaged plan that meets the applicable requirements of the Internal Revenue Code does not receive a contribution that is directly or indirectly based on the terms of the individual loan originator’s transactions (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iii)).
 3. Determine whether an individual loan originator receives compensation pursuant to a non-deferred, profits-based compensation plan only if:
 - a. The compensation paid to an individual loan originator is not directly or indirectly based on the terms of that individual loan originator’s transactions that are subject to (12 CFR 1026.36(d)); and
 - b. At least one of the following conditions is satisfied:
 - i. The compensation paid to an individual loan originator does not, in the aggregate, exceed 10 percent of the individual loan originator’s total compensation corresponding to the time period

⁷⁵ 12 CFR 1026.36(d) and (e) do not apply to a home-equity line of credit subject to 12 CFR 1026.40 or to a loan that is secured by a consumer’s interest in a timeshare plan described in 11 U.S.C. 101(53D) (12 CFR 1026.36(b)).

⁷⁷ A factor that is not itself a term of a transaction is a proxy for a term of the transaction if the factor consistently varies with that term over a significant number of transactions, and the loan originator has the ability, directly or indirectly, to add, drop, or change the factor in originating the transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(i)).

for which the compensation under the non-deferred profits-based compensation plan is paid; or

- ii. The individual loan originator was a loan originator for ten or fewer transactions consummated during the 12-month period preceding the date of the compensation determination (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)(iv)).

Prohibition on Dual Compensation

1. If any loan originator receives compensation directly from a consumer in a closed-end consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling, determine that (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)):
 - a. No loan originator receives compensation, directly or indirectly, from any person other than the consumer in connection with the transaction 12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(1) except that a loan originator organization may receive compensation from a consumer and pay compensation to its individual loan originator; and
 - b. No person who knows or has reason to know of the consumer-paid compensation to the loan originator (other than the consumer) pays any compensation to a loan originator, directly or indirectly, in connection with the transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(2)(i)(A)(2)).

NOTE: Loan originator organizations are permitted to compensate their employees if the organization receives compensation directly from a consumer, subject to the prohibition on payments to loan originators in (12 CFR 1026.36(d)(1)).

Prohibition on Steering

1. Determine that, in connection with a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling, a loan originator does not direct or “steer” a consumer to consummate a transaction based on the fact that the originator will receive greater compensation from the creditor in that transaction than in other transactions the originator offered or could have offered to the consumer, unless the consummated transaction is in the consumer’s interest (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(1)).

NOTE: The rule provides a safe harbor to facilitate compliance with the prohibition on steering in (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(1)). The loan originator is deemed to comply with the anti-steering prohibition if the consumer is presented with loan options that meet all of the following conditions for each type of transaction in which the consumer expressed an interest.⁷⁸

- a. The loan originator obtains loan options from a significant number of the creditors with which the originator regularly does business and, for each type of transaction in which the consumer expressed an interest, presents the consumer with loan options that include (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)):
 - i. The loan with the lowest interest rate (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(A));
 - ii. The loan with the lowest interest rate without negative amortization, a prepayment penalty, interest-only payments, a balloon payment in the first seven years of the life of the loan, a demand feature, shared equity, or shared appreciation; or, in the case of a reverse mortgage, a loan without a prepayment penalty, or shared equity or shared appreciation (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(B)); and
 - iii. The loan with the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees (or, if two or more loans have the same total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees, the loan with the lowest interest rate that has the lowest total dollar amount of discount points, origination points or origination fees) (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(i)(C)).
- b. The loan originator has a good faith belief that the options (presented to the consumer that are set forth, above) are loans for which the consumer likely qualifies (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(ii)).
- c. For each type of transaction, if the originator presents to the consumer more than three loans, the originator highlights the loans that satisfy options 1.i, 1.ii, and 1.iii above (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(3)(iii)).

NOTE: If the requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1026.36(e) are met, the loan originator can, without steering, present fewer than three loans (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(4)).

Loan Originator Qualifications⁷⁹ and Documentation – 12 CFR 1026.36(f) and (g)

1. Determine whether the loan originator organization complies with all applicable state law requirements for legal existence and foreign qualification (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(1)).

⁷⁸ The term “type of transaction” refers to whether: (i) A loan has an APR that cannot increase after consummation; (ii) A loan has an APR that may increase after consummation; or (iii) A loan is a reverse mortgage (12 CFR 1026.36(e)(2)).

⁷⁹ For the purposes of 12 CFR 1026.36(f) and (g), all creditors are loan originators.

2. Determine whether the loan originator organization ensures that individual loan originators who work for it (e.g., employees, under a brokerage agreement) are licensed or registered (or excluded from those requirements because the individual is authorized to act with temporary authority pursuant to 12 U.S.C. 5117), as required by the Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act of 2008 (SAFE Act), its implementing regulations (12 CFR §1007 and §1008), and any state SAFE Act law (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(2)).

NOTE: The SAFE Act provides certain loan originators with temporary authority to act as loan originators, while applying for a state-loan originator license (12 U.S.C. 5117). If an individual loan originator may act as a loan originator with temporary authority under 12 U.S.C. 5117, the loan originator organization is not required to comply with the screening and training requirements described in 12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3).⁸⁰

3. For individual loan originators who are its employees and who are not required to be licensed and are not licensed as a loan originator under section 1008.103 or state SAFE Act implementing law, determine whether the loan originator organization, prior to allowing the individual to act as a loan originator:
 - a. Obtained a copy of the individual's background check through the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (NMLSR) or a criminal background check from a law enforcement agency or commercial service (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(A));
 - b. Obtained a credit report from a consumer reporting agency in compliance with FCRA section 604(b) (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(B));
 - c. Obtained information from the NMLSR, or from the individual as applicable, about administrative, civil, or criminal findings against the individual (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(i)(C));
 - d. Determined on the basis of obtained information or any other information reasonably available that the individual has not been convicted of, plead guilty or nolo contendere to a felony in a domestic or military court during the preceding seven year period (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(I));
 - e. Determined on the basis of obtained information or any other information reasonably available that the individual has not been convicted of, plead guilty or nolo contendere to a felony involving an act of fraud, dishonesty, breach of trust, or money laundering, at any time (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(ii)(A)(I));

- f. Confirmed that if the individual has a felony conviction and is employed as an individual loan originator, that the FDIC (or FRB, as applicable), NCUA, or Farm Credit Administration has provided consent to employ the individual under their own statutory authorities (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(ii)(A)(2)(iii));
- g. Confirmed that the individual demonstrated financial responsibility, character, and general fitness such as to warrant a determination that the individual loan originator will operate honestly, fairly, and efficiently (12 CFR 1026(f)(3)(ii)(B));
- h. Provides periodic training covering federal and state law requirements that apply to the individual loan originator's loan origination activities (12 CFR 1026.36(f)(3)(iii)).

NOTE: Paragraph (c) only applies to an individual loan originator hired on after January 1, 2014 (or an individual loan originator the loan originator organization hired before this date but for whom there were no applicable statutory or regulatory background standards in effect at the time of hire or used to screen the individual) or an individual loan originator regardless of when hired who, based on reliable information known to the loan originator organization, likely does not meet the qualification standards.

4. Verify that the loan originator organization and individual loan originator include their names and NMLSR IDs on all required loan documentation, including (12 CFR 1026.36(g)):
 - a. The credit application;
 - b. The disclosures required by 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f);
 - c. The note or loan contract; and
 - d. The security instrument.

Policies and Procedures for Depository Institutions to Ensure and Monitor Compliance – 12 CFR 1026.36(j)

1. Verify that loan originator organizations that are depositories (including credit unions) have established and maintain written policies and procedures reasonably designed (i.e., appropriate to the nature, size, complexity and scope of the mortgage lending activities of the depository and its subsidiaries) to ensure that the depository, its subsidiaries and their collective employees comply with the loan originator requirements of 12 CFR 1026.36(d)–(g) (12 CFR 1026.36(j)).

Prohibition on Mandatory Arbitration Clauses and Waiver of Certain Consumer Rights – 12 CFR 1026.36(h)

1. Verify that the contract or other agreement for a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling) does not include terms that require arbitration or any other non-judicial procedure to resolve any controversy or settle any claims arising out of the transaction (12 CFR 1026.36(h)(1)).
2. Verify that the contract or other agreement relating to a consumer credit transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by the consumer’s principal dwelling) has not been applied or interpreted to bar a consumer from bringing a claim in court pursuant to any provision of law for damages or other relief in connection with any alleged violation of any federal law (12 CFR 1026.36(h)(2)).

Prohibition on Financing Credit Insurance – 12 CFR 1026.36(i)

1. Determine that the creditor does not finance, directly or indirectly, premiums or fees for credit insurance (including credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, or any other accident, loss-of-income, life, or health insurance or direct or indirect payment for debt cancellation/suspension) on the transaction secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by a principal dwelling) (12 CFR 1026.36(i)).

NOTE: Credit unemployment insurance is not subject to this prohibition where the premiums are reasonable, the creditor receives no direct or indirect compensation in connection with the premiums, and the premiums are paid under a separate insurance contract and are not paid to an affiliate of the creditor. Additionally, this prohibition does not apply to credit insurance that is paid in full monthly.

Negative Amortization Counseling – 12 CFR 1026.36(k)

1. Verify that the creditor received documentation that first-time borrowers received pre-loan counseling from a HUD certified or approved counselor on each negative amortizing mortgage loan to prior to originating the loan (12 CFR 1026.36(k)).

NOTE: This restriction does not apply to reverse mortgages covered under 12 CFR 1026.33 or transactions secured by a timeshare plan. For more information, please see the commentary to (12 CFR 1026.36(k)).

Servicing Requirements for Certain Home Mortgages Subject to Subpart E

1. Determine if the servicer is a small servicer under (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)). The following steps 2-5 regarding periodic statements for closed-end loans secured by a dwelling are not applicable if the servicer is a small servicer.

NOTE: A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers’ interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in (12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5)).

2. Determine whether the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides consumers with reasonably prompt periodic statements for closed-end loans secured by a dwelling (12 CFR 1026.41).

NOTES:

- “Consumer” includes a confirmed successor in interest as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(27) (12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11)). If there is a confirmed successor in interest, determine whether the exemption from the requirement to provide a periodic statement to the confirmed successor in interest applies as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(g).
- This requirement does not apply to reverse mortgages under 12 CFR 1026.33; timeshare plans; fixed-rate loans where the servicer currently provides consumers with coupon books that contain account payment, fees, and contact information specified under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(3); small servicers under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4); or, as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5), for mortgages while the consumer is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the US Code. Servicers, however, must provide modified periodic statements and coupon books to certain consumers in bankruptcy as specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(f) (see questions below). Servicers are exempt from providing periodic statements for charged-off mortgage loans if the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6) are met (see questions below).

- When examining a creditor or assignee that continues to own the loan, or a servicer, if the entity states that another entity has the obligation to provide the disclosures, examiners should determine whether the examined entity takes steps to ensure that the other party (a creditor, assignee, or servicer) is complying with the obligation to provide the disclosures.
3. Verify that the periodic statements contain:
- a. The payment due date; the amount of any late payment fee, and the date on which that fee will be imposed; and the amount due (the latter shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page and, if the transaction has multiple payment options, the amount due under each of the payment options), grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1));
 - i. If the balance of a mortgage loan was accelerated but the servicer was willing to accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, verify that the amount due on the periodic statement identified only the lesser amount that the servicer would have accepted to reinstate the loan (Comment 41(d)(1)-1);
 - ii. If the consumer had agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program, verify that the amount due identified either the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program or the amount due according to the loan contract (Comment 41(d)(1)-2).
 - iii. If the loan contract had been permanently modified, verify that the amount due identified only the amount due under the modified loan contract (Comment 41(d)(1)-3).

NOTE: Servicers may modify the sample forms for periodic statements provided in Appendix H, Sample forms H-30(A) through H-30(F), to remove language that could suggest liability under the mortgage loan agreement if such language is not applicable. For example, in the case of a confirmed successor in interest who has not assumed the mortgage loan obligation under State law and is not otherwise liable on the mortgage loan obligation, a servicer may modify the forms to:

- Use “this mortgage” or “the mortgage” instead of “your mortgage.”
- Use “The payments on this mortgage are late” instead of “You are late on your mortgage payments.”
- Use “This is the amount needed to bring the loan current” instead of “You must pay this amount to bring your loan current.”

(Comment 41(c)-5)

- b. The monthly payment amount, including a breakdown of how it will be applied to principal, interest, and escrow, and if a mortgage loan has multiple payment options along with information regarding how each payment will affect the principal, a breakdown of each of the payment options; the total sum of any fees or charges imposed since the last statement; and any payment amount past due, grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)).
 - i. If the balance of a mortgage loan was accelerated but the servicer was willing to accept a lesser amount to reinstate the loan, verify that the explanation of amount due on the periodic statement listed both the reinstatement amount and the accelerated amount. Verify that the periodic statement also included an explanation that the reinstatement amount would be accepted through the “as of [date],” as applicable along with any special instructions for submitting the payment. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement (Comment 41(d)(2)-1).

NOTE: The servicer is not required to list the monthly payment amount that would otherwise be required under 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2)(i) (Comment 41(d)(2)-1).
 - ii. If the consumer had agreed to a temporary loss mitigation program and the amount due identified the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program, verify that the explanation of amount due included both the amount due according to the loan contract and the payment due under the temporary loss mitigation program. Also verify that the statement included an - explanation that the amount due was being disclosed as a different amount because of the temporary loss mitigation program. The explanation should be on the front page of the statement or, alternatively, may be included on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter (Comment 41(d)(2)-2).

- c. The total of all payments received since the last statement, including a breakdown showing how the payment was applied to principal, interests, escrow, fees, and charges, and any amount sent to a suspense or unapplied funds account grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3)(i));
 - d. The total of all payments received for the calendar year, including a breakdown of how those payments were applied to principal, interest, escrow, fees, and charges and any amount currently held in a suspense or unapplied funds account, grouped together in close proximity to each other and located at the top of the first page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3)(ii));
 - e. A list of transaction activity that occurred since the last statement, including the date, amount, and brief description of the transaction. Transaction activity includes any activity that caused a credit or debit to the amount currently due (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(4));
 - f. For statements where a partial payment was received and the creditor or servicer held the partial payment in a suspense or unapplied funds account, information explaining what must be done for the funds to be applied to the balance, located on the front page or a separate page of the statement or in a separate letter (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(5));
 - g. A toll-free number, and if applicable, an email address, that consumers may use to obtain account information located on the front page (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(6));
 - h. The amount of the outstanding principal balance (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(i));
 - i. The current interest rate for the mortgage (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(ii));
 - j. The date that the interest may change (if applicable) (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(iii));
 - k. Information regarding whether the loan contains a prepayment penalty (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(iv));
 - l. The web address to the CFPB or HUD's list of homeownership counselors or counseling organizations and HUD's toll-free telephone number to obtain contact information for counselors or counseling organizations (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(v));
 - m. For consumers more than 45 days delinquent, determine that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provides on the first page, on a separate page of the statement, or in a separate letter:
 - i. The length of the consumer's delinquency (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(i));
 - ii. A notification of the possible risks, such as foreclosure, and expenses that may occur if the consumer does not become current (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(ii));
 - iii. An account history showing the shorter of the previous six months or from the time the account was last current, the amount of payment that is past due from each billing cycle (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iii));

NOTE: If any payment was accepted as a full payment, the creditor or servicer must show that the payment was credited to the consumer's account and the date that the payment was credited.

 - iv. A notice indicating any loss mitigation program that the consumer has agreed to (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iv));
 - v. A notice of whether the servicer has initiated foreclosure proceedings (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(v));
 - vi. The total payment amount needed to bring the account current (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(vi)); and
 - vii. A reference to homeownership counseling information required under 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(7)(v) (12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(vii)).
4. Unless the servicer is otherwise exempt as noted below, while any consumer on a mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code, or if such consumer had discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan pursuant Chapter 7, 11, 12, or 13, determine whether the servicer provided a modified periodic statement or coupon book in compliance with (12 CFR 1026.41(f)). Specifically, the periodic statement:
 - a. May omit the information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1)(ii) and (d)(8)(i), (ii), and (v). The requirement in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1)(iii) of this section that the amount due must be shown more prominently than other disclosures on the page shall not apply (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(1));

- b. Must include the following bankruptcy notices:
- i. A statement identifying the consumer's status as a debtor in bankruptcy or the discharged status of the mortgage loan; and
 - ii. A statement that the periodic statement is for informational purposes only (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(2));
- c. For chapter 12 and chapter 13 consumers:
- i. May omit (in addition to information listed in 12 CFR 1026.41(f)(1)) the information in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8)(iii), (iv), (vi), and (vii). (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(i));
 - ii. May limit the amount due information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(1) to the date and amount of the post-petition payments due and any post-petition fees and charges imposed by the servicer (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(ii));
 - iii. May limit the explanation of amount due information set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(2) to:
 1. The monthly post-petition payment amount, including a breakdown showing how much, if any, would be applied to principal, interest, and escrow;
 2. The total sum of any post-petition fees or charges imposed since the last statement; and
 3. Any post-petition payment amount past due (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(iii)).
 - iv. Must include all payments that the servicer received since the last statement, including all post-petition and pre-petition payments, payments of post-petition fees and charges, and all post-petition fees and charges that the servicer imposed since the last statement. The brief description of the activity need not identify the source of any payments (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(iv));
 - v. Must disclose the following pre-petition arrearage information, if applicable, grouped in close proximity to each other and located on the first page of the statement or on a separate page enclosed with the periodic statement or in a separate letter:
 1. The total of all pre-petition payments received since the last statement;
 2. The total of all pre-petition payments received since the beginning of the consumer's pre-petition arrearage; and
 3. The current balance of the consumer's pre-petition arrearage (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(v)).
- vi. Must include, as applicable:
1. A statement that the amount due includes only post-petition payments and does not include other payments that may be due under the terms of the consumer's bankruptcy plan;
 2. If the consumer's bankruptcy plan requires the consumer to make the post-petition mortgage payments directly to a bankruptcy trustee, a statement that the consumer should send the payment to the trustee and not to the servicer;
 3. A statement that the information disclosed on the periodic statement may not include payments the consumer has made to the trustee and may not be consistent with the trustee's records;
 4. A statement that encourages the consumer to contact the consumer's attorney or the trustee with questions regarding the application of payments; and
 5. If the consumer is more than 45 days delinquent on post-petition payments, a statement that the servicer has not received all the payments that became due since the consumer filed for bankruptcy. (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(3)(vi)).

NOTES:

- Multiple obligors. The servicer may provide the modified statement to any or all of the primary obligors, even if a primary obligor to whom the servicer provides the modified statement is not a debtor in bankruptcy (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(4)).
- Coupon books. A servicer that provides a coupon book instead of a periodic statement must include in the coupon book (or on a separate page enclosed with the coupon book) the disclosures set forth in 12 CFR 1026.41(f)(2) and (f)(3)(vi), as applicable (12 CFR 1026.41(f)(5)).
- Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i), a servicer is exempt from providing a periodic statement to certain consumers in bankruptcy if:

- Any consumer on the mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code or has discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan pursuant to Chapter 7 (11 U.S.C. 727), Chapter 11 (11 U.S.C. 1141), Chapter 12 (11 U.S.C. 1228), or Chapter 12 (11 U.S.C. 1328); and
- With regard to any consumer on the mortgage loan:
 - The consumer requests in writing that the servicer cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book;
 - The consumer’s bankruptcy plan provides that the consumer will surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, provides for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, or otherwise does not provide for, as applicable, the payment of pre-bankruptcy arrearage or the maintenance of payments due under the mortgage loan;
 - A court enters an order in the bankruptcy case providing for the avoidance of the lien securing the mortgage loan, lifting the automatic stay pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 362 with regard to the dwelling securing the mortgage loan, or requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book; or
 - The consumer files with the court overseeing the bankruptcy case a statement of intention pursuant to 11 U.S.C. 521(a) identifying an intent to surrender the dwelling securing the mortgage loan and a consumer has not made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the consumer’s bankruptcy case.

A servicer ceases to qualify for the exemption pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(i) with respect to a mortgage loan if the consumer reaffirms personal liability for the loan or any consumer on the loan requests in writing that the servicer provide a periodic statement or coupon book, unless a court enters an order in the bankruptcy case requiring the servicer to cease providing a periodic statement or coupon book (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(5)(ii)).

5. If the servicer has ceased providing periodic statements for charged-off mortgage loans, determine whether the following exemption requirements of 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) are met:
 - a. The servicer charged off the loan in accordance with loan-loss provisions and has not charged any additional fees or interest on the account; and
 - b. The servicer provided, within 30 days of charge-off or the most recent periodic statement, a periodic statement, clearly and conspicuously labeled “Suspension of Statements & Notice of Charge Off—Retain This Copy for Your Records.” The periodic statement clearly and conspicuously explained the following (as applicable):
 - i. The mortgage loan was charged off and the servicer will not charge any additional fees or interest on the account;
 - ii. The servicer will no longer provide the consumer a periodic statement for each billing cycle;
 - iii. The lien on the property remains in place and the consumer remains liable for the mortgage loan obligation and any obligations arising from or related to the property, which may include property taxes;
 - iv. The consumer may be required to pay the balance on the account in the future, for example, upon sale of the property;
 - v. The balance on the account is not being canceled or forgiven; and
 - vi. The loan may be purchased, assigned, or transferred.

NOTE: If a servicer fails at any time to treat a mortgage loan that is exempt under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) as charged off or charges any additional fees or interest on the account, the servicer must resume providing a periodic statement. (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(ii)(A)). A servicer may not retroactively assess fees or interest on the account for the period of time during which the exemption in paragraph 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(i) applied (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(6)(ii)(B)).

6. For high-cost mortgages, ensure the creditor or servicer does not charge any fee to modify, renew, extend, or amend a high-cost mortgage, or to defer any payment due under the terms of the mortgage (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(7)).
7. For high-cost mortgages, determine whether the creditor or servicer charged a late payment greater than 4 percent of the payment past due (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)(i)).
8. For high-cost mortgages, determine that the creditor or servicer did not impose any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency was attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a full payment for the applicable period and is paid on its due date or within any applicable grace period (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)(iii)).

9. For high-cost mortgages, determine whether the creditor or servicer assessed any fees for providing consumers with a payoff statement related to the high-cost mortgage (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)).

NOTE: Creditors or servicers are permitted to assess a processing fee if the payoff statement is provided by courier or by fax, the fee is comparable to fees for similar services provided for non-high-cost mortgages, and the creditor or servicer discloses that payoff statements are available by an alternative method free of charge. Additionally, within a calendar year, if the creditor or servicer has already provided four payoff statements in compliance with 12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9), it may assess fees for additional statements.

10. For high-cost mortgages, determine that the creditor or servicer is providing payoff statements within five business days after receiving a request from the consumer (or consumer's authorized representative) (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(9)(v)).
11. For higher-priced mortgage loans that are subject to the escrow account requirements, ensure the creditor or servicer maintains the consumer's escrow account for a minimum of five years after consummation of the loan, unless (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)):
 - a. The creditor or servicer terminated the escrow account upon termination of the underlying debt obligation (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(i)(A)); or
 - b. The creditor or servicer terminated the escrow account upon request from the consumer, no earlier than five years after consummation of the loan (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(i)(B)).

NOTE: Upon request from the consumer, the creditor or servicer must verify that the unpaid principal balance of the higher-priced mortgage loan is less than 80 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan and that the consumer is not delinquent or in default on the loan, prior to cancelling the escrow account (12 CFR 1026.35(b)(3)(ii)).

12. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, determine that the creditor or servicer credited consumer's periodic payments as of the date the payment was received or ensured that any delay in crediting did not result in any charge to the consumer or in the reporting of any negative information to a consumer reporting agency (12 CFR 1026.34(a)(8)-(9) and (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(i)).

13. For consumers performing under a permanent loan modification of a consumer credit transaction secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, determine whether the creditor or servicer credited the payments according to the terms of the modified loan contract (Comment 36(c)(1)(i)-5).

NOTE: For consumers performing under temporary loss mitigation programs, a creditor must continue to credit payments according to the loan contract and could, if appropriate, credit the payments as partial payments. (Comment 36(c)(1)(i)-4).

14. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, determine whether the creditor or servicer uses a suspense or unapplied payment account for partial payments.
 - a. For creditors or servicers that use suspense or unapplied payment accounts for consumers' partial payments, verify that the creditor or servicer discloses to consumers that amount held in the suspense account on the periodic statement required by 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(3) if one is required (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(ii)(A)); and
 - b. Verify that creditors or servicers credit a periodic payment to the consumer's account once the amount in the suspense account equals a periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(ii)(B)).
15. For consumer credit transactions secured by a consumer's principal dwelling, and for creditors or servicers that accept non-conforming payments from consumers, verify that the creditor or servicer credited the non-conforming payment to the consumer's account as of five days after receipt of the payment (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1)(iii)).
16. Determine whether there were any of the following prohibited acts or practices in connection with credit secured by a consumer's principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.36(c)):
 - a. Imposing on the consumer any late fee or delinquency charge in connection with a payment, when the only delinquency was attributable to late fees or delinquency charges assessed on an earlier payment, and the payment is otherwise a periodic payment for the applicable period and is received on its due date or within any applicable courtesy period (12 CFR 1026.36(c)(2)); or
17. For consumer credit transactions secured by a dwelling (including a home equity line of credit secured by a dwelling), verify that the creditor, assignee, or servicer provided, within a reasonable time, but no later than seven business days after receiving a written request from the consumer or person acting on behalf of the consumer, an accurate statement of the total outstanding balance that would be required to pay the consumer's obligation in full as of a specific date except when a delay is because a loan is in bankruptcy or foreclosure, the loan is a reverse or shared appreciation mortgage, or because of a natural disaster, in which case the payoff statement must be provided within a reasonable period of time (12 CFR 1026.36(b) and (c)(3)).

Valuation Independence

1. Determine that the covered person did not attempt to directly or indirectly cause the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling to be based on any factor other than the independent judgment of a person that prepares valuations. Examples of such attempts include (12 CFR 1026.42(c)):
 - a. Seeking to influence a person that prepares a valuation to report a minimum or maximum value for the consumer's principal dwelling;
 - b. Withholding or threatening to withhold timely payment to a person that prepares a valuation or performs valuation management functions because the person does not value the consumer's principal dwelling at or above a certain amount;
 - c. Implying to a person that prepares valuations that current or future retention of the person depends on the amount at which the person estimates the value of the consumer's principal dwelling;
 - d. Excluding a person that prepares a valuation from consideration for future engagement because the person reports a value for the consumer's principal dwelling that does not meet or exceed a predetermined threshold; and
 - e. Conditioning the compensation paid to a person that prepares a valuation on consummation of the covered transaction.
2. Determine that the valuation does not materially misrepresent the value of the consumer's principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(i)).

NOTE: A misrepresentation is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling. A bona fide error shall not be a misrepresentation.

3. Determine that a valuation was not falsified or materially altered (12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(ii)).

NOTE: An alteration is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling.

4. Determine that the covered person does not induce a person to materially misrepresent or falsify the value of a consumer's principal dwelling (in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(i) or (ii)) (12 CFR 1026.42(c)(2)(iii)).
5. Prohibition on conflicts of interest. To the extent applicable, determine that the person who prepared the valuations or performed the valuation management functions for a covered transaction did not have a direct or indirect interest, financial or otherwise, in the property or transaction for which the valuation is or will be performed (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i)).

NOTE: No person violates this section solely because that the person is an employee or affiliate of the creditor, or provides a settlement service in addition to preparing valuations or performing valuation management functions, or based solely on the fact that the person's affiliate performs another settlement service, as long as the conditions discussed below ((f), (g), and (h)) are met. If they are not met, whether the conflicts of interest provisions are violated by the above persons or entities depends on all of the facts and circumstances. In other words, the conditions in (f), (g), and (h) are a safe harbor, but not required.

6. For any consumer credit transaction secured by the consumer's principal dwelling in which the creditor had assets of more than $250 million as of December 31st for both of the past two calendar years, determine that a person subject to 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) who is employed by or affiliated with the creditor does not have a conflict of interest in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) based solely on the person's employment or affiliate relationship with the creditor if (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(2)):
 - a. The compensation of the person preparing a valuation or performing valuation management functions is not based on the value arrived at in any valuation;
 - b. The person preparing a valuation or performing valuation management functions reports to a person who is not part of the creditor's loan production function, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(5)(i), and whose compensation is not based on the closing of the transaction to which the valuation relates; and
 - c. No employee, officer or director in the creditor's loan production function, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(5)(i), is directly or indirectly involved in selecting, retaining, recommending or influencing the selection of the person to prepare a valuation or perform valuation management functions, or to be included in or excluded from a list of approved persons who prepare valuations or perform valuation management functions.

7. For any covered transaction in which the creditor had assets of $250 million or less as of December 31st for either of the past two calendar years, determine that a person subject to 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) who is employed by or affiliated with the creditor does not have a conflict of interest in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) based solely on the person's employment or affiliate relationship with the creditor if (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(3)):

- a. The compensation of the person preparing a valuation or performing valuation management functions is not based the value arrived at in any valuation; and
- b. The creditor requires that any employee, officer or director of the creditor who orders, performs, or reviews a valuation for a covered transaction abstain from participating in any decision to approve, not approve, or set the terms of that transaction.

8. For any covered transaction, determine that a person who prepares a valuation or performs valuation management functions in addition to performing another settlement service for the transaction, or whose affiliate performs another settlement service for the transaction, does not have a conflict of interest in violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(d)(1)(i) as a result of the person or the person's affiliate performing another settlement service for the transaction if (12 CFR 1026.42(d)(4)):

- a. The creditor had assets of more than $250 million as of December 31st for both of the past two calendar years and the conditions in paragraph (d)(2)(i)-(iii) are met; or
- b. The creditor had assets of $250 million or less as of December 31st for either of the past two calendar years and the conditions in paragraph (d)(3)(i)-(ii) are met.

9. If the creditor did know at or before consummation of a violation of 12 CFR 1026.42(c) or (d) in connection with a valuation, determine that the creditor did not extend credit based on the valuation, unless the creditor documented that it acted with reasonable diligence to determine that the valuation did not materially misstate or misrepresent the value of the consumer's principal dwelling (12 CFR 1026.42(e)).

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.42(e), a valuation materially misstates or misrepresents the value of the consumer's principal dwelling if the valuation contains a misstatement or misrepresentation that affects the credit decision or the terms on which credit is extended.

10. Customary and reasonable compensation. For any covered transaction, determine that the creditor and its agents compensated a fee appraiser (as defined in 12 CFR 1026.42(f)(4)(i)) for performing appraisal services at a rate that is customary and reasonable for comparable appraisal services performed in the geographic market of the property being appraised (12 CFR 1026.42(f)(1)).

NOTE: Voluntary donation of appraisal services by a fee appraiser (as defined in 15 U.S.C. 1639e(i)(2)) to an organization eligible to receive tax-deductible charitable contributions meets the requirement to be customary-and-reasonable for purposes of 15 U.S.C. 1639e(i)(1) (15 U.S.C. 1639e(i)(2)(B)). For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.42(f), "agents" of the creditor do not include any fee appraiser as defined in (12 CFR 1026.42(f)(4)(i)). An "agent" could be an appraisal management company to which the creditor has outsourced the valuation function.

11. If the creditor reasonably believes an appraiser has not complied with the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice or ethical or professional requirements for appraisers under applicable state or federal statutes or regulations, determine that the creditor referred the matter within a reasonable period of time to the appropriate state agency if the failure to comply is material (12 CFR 1026.42(g)(1)).

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.42(g), a failure to comply is material if it is likely to significantly affect the value assigned to the consumer's principal dwelling.

Open-End Credit Transactional Testing Procedures

1. For each open-end credit product tested, determine the accuracy of the disclosures by comparing the disclosure with the contract and other financial institution documents (12 CFR 1026.5(c)).
2. Review the financial institution's policies, procedures, and practices to determine whether it provides appropriate disclosures for creditor-initiated direct mail applications and solicitations to open charge card accounts, telephone applications and solicitations to open charge card accounts, and applications and solicitations made available to the general public to open charge card accounts (12 CFR 1026.60(b), (c), and (d)).
3. Determine for all home equity plans with a variable rate that the APR is based on an independent index. Further, ensure home equity plans are terminated or terms changed only if certain conditions exist (12 CFR 1026.40(f)).
4. Determine that, if any consumer rejected a home equity plan because a disclosed term changed before the plan was opened, all fees were refunded. Verify that non-refundable fees were not imposed until three business days after the consumer received the required disclosures and brochure (12 CFR 1026.40(g) and (h)).

5. Review consecutive periodic billing statements for each major type of open-end credit activity offered (overdraft and home-equity lines of credit, credit card programs, etc.). Determine whether disclosures were calculated accurately and are consistent with the initial disclosure statement furnished in connection with the accounts (or any subsequent change in terms notice) and the underlying contractual terms governing the plan(s).
6. Determine whether the consumer was given notice of the right to reject the significant change, with the exception of:
 - a. An increase in the required minimum periodic payment (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B));
 - b. A change in the APR (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B));
 - c. A change in the balance computation method necessary to comply with 12 CFR 1026.54, which sets forth certain limitations on the imposition of finance charges as a result of a loss of a grace period;
 - d. Increase in fee pursuant to evaluation under 12 CFR 1026.52 or adjustment to safe harbors;
 - e. Increase in fees previously reduced under Servicemembers Civil Relief Act; or
 - f. When the change results from the creditor not receiving the required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date for that payment (12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(iv)(B)).
7. Determine that the creditor did not increase the rate applicable to the consumer's account to the penalty rate if the outstanding balance did not exceed the credit limit on the date set forth in the notice (12 CFR 1026.9(g)(4)).
8. Determine, for each type of open-end rescindable loan being tested, the appropriate number of copies of the rescission notice are provided to each person whose ownership interest is or will be subject to the security interest and perform the procedures 12, 13, and 14 under Closed-End Credit section (12 CFR 1026.15(b), (c) and (e)).
9. Additional variable rate testing: Verify that when accounts were opened or loans were consummated that loan contract terms were recorded correctly in the financial institution's calculation systems (e.g., its computer). Determine the accuracy of the following recorded information:
 - a. Index value,
 - b. Margin and method of calculating rate changes,
 - c. Rounding method, and
 - d. Adjustment caps (periodic and lifetime).
10. Using a sample of periodic disclosures for open-end variable rate accounts (e.g., home equity accounts) and closed-end rate change notices for adjustable rate mortgage loans:
 - a. Compare the rate-change date and rate on the credit obligation to the actual rate-change date and rate imposed.
 - b. Determine that the index disclosed and imposed is based on the terms of the contract (example: the weekly average of one-year Treasury constant maturities, taken as of 45 days before the change date) (12 CFR 1026.7(a) and 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(2)).
 - c. Determine that the new interest rate is correctly disclosed by adding the correct index value with the margin stated in the note, plus or minus any contractual fractional adjustment (12 CFR 1026.7(g) and 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(1)).
 - d. Determine that the new payment disclosed 12 CFR 1026.20(c)(4) was based on an interest rate and loan balance in effect at least 25 days before the payment change date (consistent with the contract) (12 CFR 1026.20(c)).

Crediting a Consumer's Account – 12 CFR 1026.10

1. Ensure that the creditor credits payment to a consumer's account as of the date of receipt, except when a delay in crediting does not result in a finance charge or other charge (12 CFR 1026.10(a)).
2. If a creditor specifies requirements for payments, determine that they are reasonable and enable most consumers to make conforming payments (12 CFR 1026.10(b)).
3. Except as provided by 12 CFR 1026.10(b)(4)(ii), if a creditor specifies, on or with the periodic statement, requirements for the consumer to follow in making payments as permitted under 12 CFR 1026.10, but accepts a payment that does not conform to the requirements, determine that the payment is credited within five days of receipt (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(4)(i)).
4. If the creditor promotes a method for making payments, determine that the creditor considers such payments conforming payments in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.10(b) and that they are credited to the consumer's account as of the date of receipt, except when a delay in crediting does not result in a finance charge or other charge (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(4)(ii)).
5. If the creditor sets a cut-off time for payments to be received by mail, by electronic means, by telephone, or in person, verify that the cut-off time is 5 p.m. or later on the payment due date at the location specified by the creditor for the receipt of such payments (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(2)(ii)).

6. For in-person payments on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan at a financial institution branch or office that accepts such payments, a card issuer shall not impose a cut-off time earlier than the close of business for any such payments made in person at any branch or office of the card issuer at which such payments are accepted. However, a card issuer may impose a cut-off time earlier than 5 p.m. for such payments, if the close of business of the branch or office is earlier than 5 p.m. (12 CFR 1026.10(b)(3)(i)).
7. If a creditor fails to credit a payment as required and imposes a finance or other charge, ensure that the creditor credits the charge(s) to the consumer's account during the next billing cycle (12 CFR 1026.10(c)).
8. If (due to a weekend or holiday, for example) a creditor does not receive or accept payments by mail on the due date for payments, determine that the creditor treats as timely a payment received on the next business day (12 CFR 1026.10(d)(1)).

NOTE: If a creditor accepts or receives payments made on the due date by a method other than mail, such as electronic or telephone payments, the creditor is not required to treat a payment made by that method on the next business day as timely.

9. For credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the creditor does not impose a separate fee to allow consumers to make a payment by any method, such as mail, electronic, or telephone payments, unless such payment method involves an expedited service by a customer service representative of the creditor (12 CFR 1026.10(e)).

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.10(e), the term "creditor" includes a third party that collects, receives, or processes payments on behalf of a creditor.

10. If a card issuer makes a material change in the address for receiving payments or procedures for handling payments, and such change causes a material delay in the crediting of a payment to a consumer's account during the 60-day period following the date on which such change took effect, ensure that the card issuer does not impose any late fee or finance charge for a late payment on the credit card account during the 60-day period following the date on which the change took effect (12 CFR 1026.10(f)).

Treatment of Credit Balances, Account Termination – 12 CFR 1026.11

1. Determine institution's treatment of credit balances. Specifically, if the account's credit balance is in excess of $1, the institution must take the actions listed below (12 CFR 1026.11):
 - a. Credit the amount to the consumer's account; and
 - b. Either:
 - i. Refund any part of the remaining credit balance within seven business days from receiving a written request from the consumer; or
 - ii. If no written request is received and the credit remains for more than six months, make a good faith effort to refund the amount of the credit to the consumer by cash, check, money order, or credit to a deposit account of the consumer. No further action is required if the consumer's current location is not known to the creditor and cannot be traced through the consumer's last known address or telephone number.
2. Determine that institution has not terminated an account prior to its expiration date solely because the consumer did not incur a finance charge. However, a creditor is not prohibited from closing an account that, for three consecutive months, no credit has been extended (such as by purchase, cash advance, or balance transfer) and the account has had no outstanding balance (12 CFR 1026.11(b)).
3. Determine that, for credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, the card issuer has adopted reasonable written policies and procedures designed to ensure that an administrator of an estate of a deceased account holder can determine the amount of and pay any balance on the account in a timely manner (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(1)(i)).

NOTE: This does not apply to the account of a deceased consumer if a joint account holder remains on the account.

4. Ensure that, upon request by the administrator of an estate, the card issuer provides the administrator with the amount of the balance on a deceased consumer's account in a timely manner (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(2)(i)).

NOTE: Providing the amount of the balance on the account within 30 days of receiving the request is deemed to be timely.

5. Verify that, after receiving a request from the administrator of an estate for the amount of the balance on a deceased consumer's account, the card issuer does not impose any fees on the account (such as a late fee, annual fee, or over the-limit fee) or increase any annual percentage rate, except as provided by 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(2) (i.e., due to the operation of an index) (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(3)(i)).

6. Determine that, if payment in full of the disclosed balance, pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.11(c)(2), is received within 30 days after disclosure, the card issuer waives or rebates any additional finance charge due to a periodic interest rate (12 CFR 1026.11(c)(3)(ii)).

Billing Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1026.13 (Open-End Credit)

1. Determine whether the creditor mailed or delivered a written acknowledgment to the consumer within 30 days of receiving a billing error notice in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.13(c)(1) if it has not complied with the appropriate resolution procedures provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable.
2. Determine whether the creditor complied with the appropriate resolution procedures provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(e) and (f), as applicable, within 2 complete billing cycles (but in no event later than 90 days) after receiving a billing error notice.
3. Determine if the institution engaged in any of the prohibited conduct provided in 12 CFR 1026.13(d) while a billing error resolution was pending.
4. If the creditor determined that a consumer owed all or part of the disputed amount and related finance or other charges, determine whether the creditor complied with the requirements provided in (12 CFR 1026.13(g)).

Special Credit Card Provisions and Billing Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1026.12 and 13

1. Review a sample of billing error resolution files and a sample of consumers who have asserted a claim or defense against the financial institution for a credit card dispute regarding property or services. Verify the following (12 CFR 1026.12 and 12 CFR 1026.13):
 - a. Credit cards are issued only upon request;
 - b. Liability for unauthorized credit card use is limited to $50;
 - c. Disputed amounts are not reported delinquent unless remaining unpaid after the dispute has been settled;
 - d. Offsetting credit card indebtedness is prohibited; and
 - e. Errors are resolved within two complete billing cycles.

Ability to Make the Required Minimum Payments – 12 CFR 1026.51

1. Determine that the card issuer does not open a credit card account for a consumer under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, or increase any credit limit applicable to such account, unless the card issuer considers the ability of the consumer to make the required minimum periodic payments under the terms of the account based on the consumer's income or assets and current obligations (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(1)(i)).
2. Verify that the card issuer establishes and maintains reasonable written policies and procedures to consider a consumer's income or assets and current obligations. Reasonable policies and procedures to consider a consumer's ability to make the required payments include a consideration of at least one of the following (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(1)(ii)):
 - a. The ratio of debt obligations to income;
 - b. The ratio of debt obligations to assets; or
 - c. The income the consumer will have after paying debt obligations.

NOTE: Reasonable written policies and procedures may include treating any income and assets to which the consumer has a reasonable expectation of access as the consumer's income or assets or may be limited to consideration to the consumer's independent income and assets.

3. Confirm that the card issuer does not issue a credit card to a consumer who does not have any income or assets, and that the credit does not issue a credit card without reviewing any information about a consumer's income, assets, or current obligations (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(1)(ii)).

NOTE: A card issuer may consider the consumer's income or assets based on information provided by the consumer, in connection with the credit card account or any other financial relationship the card issuer or its affiliates has with the consumer, subject to any applicable information-sharing rules, and information obtained through third parties, subject to any applicable information-sharing rules. A card issuer may also consider information obtained through any empirically derived, demonstrably, and statistically sound model that reasonably estimates a consumer's income or assets (Comment 12 CFR 51(a)-5).

4. Determine that the card issuer uses a reasonable method for estimating the minimum periodic payments the consumer would be required to pay under the terms of the account (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(2)(i)).

V. Lending — TILA

5. A card issuer's estimate of the minimum periodic payment is compliant (i.e., receives the benefit of a safe harbor) if it uses the following method (12 CFR 1026.51(a)(2)(ii)):
 - a. The card issuer assumes utilization, from the first day of the billing cycle, of the full credit line that the issuer is considering offering to the consumer; and
 - b. The card issuer uses a minimum payment formula employed by the issuer for the product the issuer is considering offering to the consumer or, in the case of an existing account, the minimum payment formula that currently applies to that account, provided that:
 - i. If the applicable minimum payment formula includes interest charges, the card issuer estimates those charges using an interest rate that the issuer is considering offering to the consumer for purchases or, in the case of an existing account, the interest rate that currently applies to purchases; and
 - ii. If the applicable minimum payment formula includes mandatory fees, the card issuer must assume that such fees have been charged to the account.
6. Rules affecting young consumers: If the card issuer opens a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan for a consumer less than 21 years old, verify that the issuer requires that such consumers:
 - a. Submit a written application; and
 - b. Either possess an independent ability to make the required minimum periodic payments on the proposed extension of credit in connection with the account under 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)(i) or provide a signed agreement of a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant who is at least 21 years old who has the ability to make the required minimum periodic payments on such debts, and be either jointly liable with the consumer for any debt on the account, or secondarily liable for any debt on the account incurred by the consumer before the consumer has attained the age of 21 pursuant to (12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)(ii)(A) and (B)).
7. If a credit card account was opened for such consumer without a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1), determine that the issuer does not increase the credit limit on the account before the consumer turns 21 unless:
 - a. At the time of the contemplated increase, the consumer has an independent ability to make the required minimum periodic payments; or
 - b. A cosigner, guarantor, or joint accountholder who is at least 21 years old and has the ability to make the required minimum periodic payments agrees in writing to assume liability for any debt incurred on the account (12 CFR 1026.51(b)(2)(i)).
8. If a credit card account was opened for such a consumer with a cosigner, guarantor, or joint applicant pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.51(b)(1)(ii), determine that the issuer does not increase the credit limit on such account before the consumer attains the age of 21 unless the cosigner, guarantor, or joint accountholder who assumed liability at account opening agrees in writing to assume liability on the increase (12 CFR 1026.51(b)(2)).

Limitations on Fees – 12 CFR 1026.52

1. During the first year after the opening of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine whether the card issuer required the consumer to pay covered fees in excess of the 25 percent of the credit limit in effect when the account is opened (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(1)).

NOTES:

- The 25 percent limitation on fees does not apply to fees assessed prior to opening the account.
- An account is considered opened no earlier than the date on which the account may first be used by the consumer to engage in transactions.

Covered fees include fees (Comment 12 CFR 1026.52(a)(2)-1):

- a. For the issuance or availability of credit, including any fees based on account activity or inactivity;
- b. For insurance, debt cancellation or debt suspension coverage, if the insurance or debt cancellation or suspension coverage is required by the terms of the account;
- c. The consumer is required to pay to engage in transactions using the account, such as:
 - i. Cash advance fees;
 - ii. Balance transfer fees;
 - iii. Foreign transaction fees; and
 - iv. Fees for using the account for purchases.
- d. Fees the consumer is required to pay for violating the terms of the account, except to the extent they are specifically excluded (see below);
- e. Fixed finance charges; and

- f. Minimum charges imposed if a charge would otherwise have been determined by applying a periodic interest rate to a balance except for the fact that such charge is smaller than the minimum.
- g. Prepaid Cards: For fees in connection with a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature of the prepaid card account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, except as provided in (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(2)):
- i. Any fee or charge imposed on the covered separate credit feature, other than a charge attributable to a periodic interest rate, during the first year after account opening that the card issuer will or may require the consumer to pay where that fee or charge is imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3).
 - ii. Any fee or charge imposed on the asset feature of the prepaid account, other than a charge attributable to a periodic interest rate, during the first year after account opening that the card issuer will or may require the consumer to pay where that fee or charge is imposed as part of the plan under (12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3)).
- NOTE: 12 CFR 1026.52(a) does not authorize the imposition or payment of fees or charges otherwise prohibited by law (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(3)).*
2. Fees not covered by this limitation include (12 CFR 1026.52(a)(2)(i)):
 - a. Late payment fees, over-the-limit fees, and returned-payment fees; or
 - b. Fees that the consumer is not required to pay with respect to the account, such as:
 - i. An expedited payment fee;
 - ii. Fees for optional services like travel insurance;
 - iii. Fees for reissuing a lost or stolen card; or
 - iv. Statement reproduction fees.
 3. Review penetration rates of various optional services to determine if they are truly optional and therefore not covered by the 25 percent limitation.
 4. Ensure that the card issuer does not impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account, regardless of where the fee is imposed, under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan unless the dollar amount of the fee is consistent with 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1) and (b)(2) (12 CFR 1026.52(b)).
 5. Determine that a card issuer imposes a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan only if the dollar amount of the fee is consistent with either 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i) or 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii) (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)).
 6. Cost determination. A card issuer may impose a fee for a particular violation (e.g., late payment) if the card issuer has determined that the fee represents a reasonable proportion of the total costs incurred by the issuer as a result of that type of violation. If a card issuer is relying on a cost determination instead of the safe harbors (see below), review (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i)):
 - a. The number of violations of a particular type experienced by the card issuer during a prior period of reasonable length (e.g., a 12-month period).
 - b. The costs incurred by the card issuer during that period as a result of those violations. Losses and associated costs (including the cost of holding reserves against potential losses and the cost of funding delinquent accounts) must be excluded from this analysis.
 - c. If used by the card issuer when making its determination:
 - i. The number of fees imposed by the card issuer as a result of the type of violation during the period that the issuer reasonably estimates it will be unable to collect.
 - ii. Reasonable estimates for an upcoming period of changes in the number of violations of the relevant type, the resulting costs, and the number of fees that the card issuer will be unable to collect.
 - d. If applicable, whether the items in 1-3 above have been reevaluated by the card issuer at least once during the prior 12 months. If as a result of the reevaluation the card issuer determines that a lower fee represents a reasonable proportion of the total costs incurred by the card issuer as a result of that type of violation, determine that the card issuer begins imposing the lower fee within 45 days after completing the reevaluation.

NOTE: If as a result of the reevaluation the card issuer determines that a higher fee represents a reasonable proportion of the total costs incurred by the card issuer as a result of that type of violation, the card issuer may begin imposing the higher fee after complying with the notice requirements in 12 CFR 1026.9 (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(i)).

V. Lending — TILA

7. Safe harbors. A card issuer may impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of the account if the dollar amount of the fee does not exceed, as applicable (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii)(A)-(C)):
- $28.00,
 - $39.00 if the card issuer previously imposed a fee pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(1)(ii)(A) for a violation of the same type that occurred during the same billing cycle or one of the next six billing cycles, or
 - Three percent of the delinquent balance on a charge card account that requires payment of outstanding balances in full at the end of each billing cycle if the card issuer has not received the required payment for two or more consecutive billing cycles.
- NOTE: The dollar amounts in the subparagraphs above may be adjusted annually by the CFPB to the extent that changes in the Consumer Price Index warrant an increase or decrease of a whole dollar. The amounts were increased to $28 and $39, respectively, effective January 1, 2019, as reflected here. Further adjustments may be made in subsequent years.*
8. Determine that the card issuer does not impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan that exceeds the dollar amount associated with the violation (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(i)(A)).
9. Determine that a card issuer does not impose a fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan when there is no dollar amount associated with the violation. For purposes of 12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(i), there is no dollar amount associated with the following violations (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(i)(B)):
- Transactions that the card issuer declines to authorize;
 - Account inactivity; and
 - The closure or termination of an account.
10. Determine that the card issuer does not impose more than one fee for violating the terms or other requirements of a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan based on a single event or transaction (12 CFR 1026.52(b)(2)(ii)).

Allocation of Payments – 12 CFR 1026.53

- Determine whether, when a consumer makes a payment in excess of the required minimum periodic payment, the card issuer allocates the excess amount:

- First to the balance with the highest APR, and
 - Any remaining portion to the other balances in descending order based on the applicable APR (12 CFR 1026.53(a)).
2. For balances on a credit card account subject to a deferred interest or similar program, determine whether the card issuer allocated any amount paid by the consumer in excess of the required minimum periodic payment:
- Consistent with the general requirement discussed in (a) above, except that, during the two billing cycles immediately preceding expiration of the deferred interest period, the excess amount must have been allocated first to the balance subject to the deferred interest or similar program and any remaining portion allocated to any other balances consistent with 12 CFR 1026.53(a) (12 CFR 1026.53(b)(1)(i)), or
 - In the manner requested by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.53(b)(1)(ii)).
3. When a balance on a credit card account is secured, the card issuer may at its option allocate any amount paid by the consumer in excess of the required minimum periodic payment to that balance if requested by the consumer (12 CFR 1026.53(b)(2)).

Loss of a Grace Period – 12 CFR 1026.54

- Determine whether the card issuer imposed finance charges as a result of the loss of a grace period on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan based on:
 - Balances for days in billing cycles that precede the most recent billing cycle, a prohibited practice; or
 - Any portion of a balance subject to a grace period that was repaid prior to the expiration of the grace period (12 CFR 1026.54).
- With respect to the prohibition above, issuers are not required to follow any specific methodology, but an issuer is in compliance if it applies the consumer's payment to the balance subject to the grace period and calculates interest charges on the amount of the balance that remains unpaid (Comment 12 CFR 54(a)(1)-5).

Exceptions: This rule does not apply to adjustments to the finance charge as a result of:

- The resolution of a dispute under 12 CFR 1026.12, unauthorized use, or 12 CFR 1026.13, billing error; or
- The return of a payment.

Limitations on Increasing Annual Percentage Rates, Fees, and Charges – 12 CFR 1026.55

1. With respect to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, determine that the card issuer did not increase an APR or fee or charge required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii) (fee for issuance or availability (e.g., an annual fee)), (b)(2)(iii) (fixed finance charge or minimum interest charge), or (b)(2)(xii) (fee for required insurance, debt cancellation, or debt suspension coverage), unless as permitted by one of the six exceptions:
 - a. Temporary rate, fee, or charge exception;
 - b. Variable rate exception;
 - c. Advance notice exception;
 - d. Delinquency exception;
 - e. Workout and temporary hardship arrangement; and
 - f. Servicemembers Civil Relief Act exception (12 CFR 1026.55(a)-(b)).
2. To assess whether the temporary rate, fee, or charge exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(1), determine whether:
 - a. The card issuer increased the APR, fee, or charge upon the expiration of a specified period of six months or longer and
 - b. Prior to the commencement of that period, the card issuer disclosed in writing to the consumer, in a clear and conspicuous manner, the length of the period and the APR, fee, or charge that would apply after expiration of the period.
3. If the temporary rate exception applies, determine that the card issuer:
 - a. Did not apply an APR, fee, or charge to transactions that occurred prior to the period that exceeds the APR, fee, or charge that applied to those transactions prior to the period;
 - b. Provided the required notice, but did not apply an APR, fee, or charge (to transactions that occurred within 14 days after provision of the notice) that exceeds the APR, fee, or charge that applied to that category of transactions prior to provision of the notice; and
 - c. Did not apply an annual percentage rate to transactions that occurred during the period that exceeds the increased APR, fee, or charge.
4. If the variable rate exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(2), determine that the card issuer did not increase an APR unless:
 - a. The increase in the APR is due to an increase in the index; and
 - b. The annual percentage rate varies according to an index that is not under the card issuer's control and is available to the general public.

NOTE: For purposes of qualifying under this exception, an index is considered under the card issuer's control if the card issuer applies a minimum rate or floor below which the rate cannot decrease. However, because there is no disadvantage to consumers, issuers are not prevented from setting a maximum rate or ceiling (Comment 55(b)(2)-2(ii)).
5. If the advance notice exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(3), determine that the card issuer:
 - a. Did not apply that increased APR, fee, or charge to transactions that occurred prior to provision of the notice;
 - b. Did not apply the increased APR, fee, or charge to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days after provision of the notice; and
 - c. Did not increase the APR, fee, or charge during the first year after the account is opened.
6. If the delinquency exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4), determine that the card issuer:
 - a. Disclosed in a clear and conspicuous manner in the required notice a statement of the reason for the increase, and
 - b. Will cease the increase if the card issuer receives six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date, beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase.
7. If the delinquency exception applies and the card issuer received six consecutive required minimum periodic payments on or before the payment due date beginning with the first payment due following the effective date of the increase, determine that the card issuer reduces any APR, fee, or charge (increased pursuant to the delinquency exception) to the original APR, fee, or charge that applied prior to the increase with respect to transactions that occurred prior to or within 14 days after provision of the required notice 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4)(ii).
8. If the workout and temporary hardship arrangement exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(5), determine that:

V. Lending — TILA

- a. Prior to commencement of the arrangement (except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2)(v)(D)) the card issuer provided the consumer with a clear and conspicuous written disclosure of the terms of the arrangement (including any increases due to the completion or failure of the arrangement); and
 - b. Upon the completion or failure of the arrangement, the card issuer did not apply to any transactions that occurred prior to commencement of the arrangement an APR, fee, or charge that exceeds the APR, fee, or charge that applied to those transactions prior to commencement of the arrangement.
9. If the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act exception applies 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(6), determine that the card issuer increased the APR, fee, or charge only after 50 U.S.C. 3937 or a similar federal or state statute or regulation no longer applied. Further, determine that the issuer did not apply to any transactions that occurred prior to the decrease an APR, fee, or charge that exceeded the APR, fee, or charge that applied to those transactions prior to the decrease.
10. For protected balances 12 CFR 1026.55(c), determine that the card issuer did not require repayment using a method that is less beneficial to the consumer than one of the following methods:
- a. The method of repayment for the account before the effective date of the increase;
 - b. An amortization period of not less than five years, beginning no earlier than the effective date of the increase; or
 - c. A required minimum periodic payment that includes a percentage of the balance that is equal to no more than twice the percentage required before the effective date of the increase.
11. If a card issuer promotes the waiver or rebate of finance charges due to a periodic interest rate or fees or charges 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(2)(ii), (b)(2)(iii), or (b)(2)(xii) and applies the waiver or rebate to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, any cessation of the waiver or rebate on that account constitutes an increase in an annual percentage rate, fee, or charge for purposes of (12 CFR 1026.55).

Requirements for Over-the-Limit Transactions – 12 CFR 1026.56

1. Joint Relationships. Determine that, if two or more consumers are jointly liable on a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, the card issuer treats the affirmative consent of any of the joint consumers as affirmative consent for that account. Similarly, determine that the card issuer treats a revocation of consent by any of the joint consumers as revocation of consent for that account (12 CFR 1026.56(f)).

2. Notwithstanding a consumer's affirmative consent to a card issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions, determine that the card issuer does not (12 CFR 1026.56(j)):
 - a. Impose more than one over-the-limit fee or charge on a consumer's credit card account per billing cycle, and, in any event, only if the credit limit was exceeded during the billing cycle. In addition, the card issuer may not impose an over-the-limit fee or charge on the consumer's credit card account for more than three billing cycles for the same over-the-limit transaction where the consumer has not reduced the account balance below the credit limit by the payment due date for either of the last two billing cycles.
- NOTE: There is an exception to the latter prohibition if another over-the-limit transaction occurred in the last two billing cycles.*
- b. Impose an over-the-limit fee or charge solely because of the card issuer's failure to promptly replenish the consumer's available credit following the crediting of the consumer's payment following the crediting of the consumer's payment under (12 CFR 1026.10).
 - c. Condition the amount of a consumer's credit limit on the consumer affirmatively consenting to the card issuer's payment of over-the-limit transactions if the card issuer assesses a fee or charge for such service.
 - d. Impose an over-the-limit fee or charge for a billing cycle if a consumer exceeds a credit limit solely because of fees or interest charged by the card issuer (defined as charges imposed as part of the plan under 12 CFR 1026.6(b)(3) to the consumer's account during that billing cycle.

Reevaluation of Rate Increases – 12 CFR 1026.59

1. If a card issuer increases an APR that applies to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, based on the credit risk of the consumer, market conditions, or other factors, or increased such a rate on or after January 1, 2009, and 45 days' advance notice of the rate increase is required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.9(c)(2) or (g), determine that the card issuer (12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1)):
 - a. Evaluates the factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(d); and
 - b. Based on its review of such factors, reduces the APR applicable to the consumer's account, as appropriate.

2. If a card issuer is required to reduce the rate applicable to an account pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1), determine that the card issuer reduces the rate not later than 45 days after completion of the evaluation described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) (12 CFR 1026.59(a)(2)(i)).

NOTE: Any reduction in an APR required pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) of this 12 CFR shall apply to (12 CFR 1026.59(a)(2)(ii)):

 - a. Any outstanding balances to which the increased rate described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) has been applied; and
 - b. New transactions that occur after the effective date of the rate reduction that would otherwise have been subject to the increased rate.
 3. Determine that the card issuer has reasonable written policies and procedures in place to conduct the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) (12 CFR 1026.59(b)).
 4. Determine that a card issuer that is subject to 12 CFR 1026.59(a) conducts the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a)(1) not less frequently than once every six months after the rate increase (12 CFR 1026.59(c)).
 5. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(d)(2), determine that the card issuer reviews either (12 CFR 1026.59(d)(1)):
 - a. The factors on which the increase in an APR was originally based; or
 - b. The factors that the card issuer currently considers when determining the APRs applicable to similar new credit card accounts under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan.
 6. For rate increases imposed between January 1, 2009 and February 21, 2010, determine that an issuer considered the factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(d)(1)(ii) when conducting the first two reviews required under 12 CFR 1026.59(a), unless the rate increase subject to 12 CFR 1026.59(a) was based solely upon factors specific to the consumer, such as a decline in the consumer's credit risk, the consumer's delinquency or default, or a violation of the terms of the account (12 CFR 1026.59(d)(2)).
 7. If an issuer increases a rate applicable to a consumer's account pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4) based on the card issuer not receiving the consumer's required minimum periodic payment within 60 days after the due date, note that the issuer is not required to perform the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) prior to the sixth payment due date after the effective date of the increase. However, if the APR applicable to the consumer's account is not reduced pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(4)(ii), determine that the card issuer performs the review described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a). Determine that the first such review occurs no later than six months after the sixth payment due following the effective date of the rate increase (12 CFR 1026.59(e)).
 8. The obligation to review factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) and (d) ceases to apply (12 CFR 1026.59(f)):
 - a. If the issuer reduces the APR applicable to a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan to the rate applicable immediately prior to the increase, or, if the rate applicable immediately prior to the increase was a variable rate, to a variable rate determined by the same formula (index and margin) that was used to calculate the rate applicable immediately prior to the increase; or
 - b. If the issuer reduces the APR to a rate that is lower than the rate described in 12 CFR 1026.59(f)(1) of this section.
 9. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2), 12 CFR 1026.59 applies to credit card accounts that have been acquired by the card issuer from another card issuer (12 CFR 1026.59(g)).
 10. Determine that a card issuer that complies with this section by reviewing the factors described in 12 CFR 1026.59(d)(1)(i) reviews the factors considered by the card issuer from which it acquired the accounts in connection with the rate increase (12 CFR 1026.59(g)(1)).
 11. If, not later than six months after the acquisition of such accounts, a card issuer reviews all of the credit card accounts it acquires in accordance with the factors that it currently considers in determining the rates applicable to its similar new credit card accounts (12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2)):
 - a. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2)(iii), determine that the card issuer conducts reviews described in 12 CFR 1026.59(a) for rate increases that are imposed as a result of its review under this paragraph.
 - b. Except as provided in 12 CFR 1026.59(g)(2)(iii), note that the card issuer is not required to conduct reviews in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.59(a) for any rate increases made prior to the card issuer's acquisition of such accounts.
 - c. Note that if as a result of the card issuer's review, an account is subject to, or continues to be subject to, an increased rate as a penalty, or due to the consumer's delinquency or default, the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.59(a) apply.
- Servicemembers Civil Relief Act exception:* Note that the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.59 do not apply to increases in an APR that was previously decreased pursuant to the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (50 U.S.C. app. 527), provided that such a rate increase is made in accordance with 12 CFR 1026.55(b)(6) (12 CFR 1026.59(h)(1)).

V. Lending — TILA

Charged off accounts exception: Note that the requirements of 12 CFR 1026.59 do not apply to accounts that the card issuer has charged off in accordance with loan-loss provisions (12 CFR 1026.59(h)(2)).

NOTE: Appendix G to part 12 CFR 1026 is amended by revising Forms G-10(B), G-10(C), G-10(E), G-17(B), G-17(C), G-18(B), G-18(D), G-18(F), G-18(G), G-20, G-21, G-22, G-25(A), and G-25(B).

Administrative Enforcement

1. If there is non-compliance involving understated finance charges or understated APRs subject to reimbursement under TILA Section 108:
 - a. Determine the date of the preceding examination.
 - b. If the non-compliance involves indirect (third-party paper) disclosure errors and affected consumers have not been reimbursed:
 - i. Prepare comments, discussing the need for improved internal controls to be included in the report of examination.
 - ii. Notify your supervisory office for follow up with the regulator that has primary responsibility for the original creditor.
 - c. If the non-compliance involves direct credit:
 - i. Make an initial determination whether the violation is a pattern or practice.
 - ii. Calculate the reimbursement for the loans or accounts in an expanded sample of the identified population.
 - iii. Estimate the total impact on the population based on the expanded sample.
 - iv. Inform management that reimbursement may be necessary under TILA Section 108, and discuss all substantive facts including the sample loans and calculations.
 - v. Inform management of the financial institution's options under Section 130 of the TILA for avoiding civil liability and of its option under the Section 108 (e)(6) of TILA for avoiding a regulatory agency's order to reimburse affected customers.

⁷⁸ If the creditor used an accounting method whereby it kept unearned interest charged for any period between payoff and the end of the month, this would be a prepayment penalty under the rule. In this case, the maximum prepayment penalty would be the maximum amount of interest that could be charged for the “phantom” (post-payoff) accrual period. For this purpose, the examiner would need to assume that the consumer makes the final payoff on the day of the month that yields the longest period of post-payoff interest that could be charged under the terms of the credit contract and is charged interest for the entire month, and that amount would be the maximum unearned interest prepayment penalty.

Determining Whether TIL Restitution is Required

Overview

This section provides information that relates to the identification of Truth in Lending violations subject to restitution, restitution calculations, and the determination of appropriate corrective action.

Section 108(e)(2) of the Truth in Lending Act (Act) directs that the FDIC shall require “adjustments” (restitution) to consumers for understated annual percentage rates (APR) or finance charges (FC).¹ Unless other statutory or regulatory exemptions are met, the FDIC is required to seek restitution and may not waive or grant relief from restitution. If an institution does not voluntarily comply with the law and make restitution, §108(e)(4) of the Act authorizes the FDIC to order institutions to make monetary adjustments to the accounts of consumers where an APR or FC was understated.

In general, the FDIC must require restitution when understatement of the cost of borrowing results from a clear and consistent pattern or practice of violations, gross neglect, or a willful violation intended to mislead the consumer. This parallels the restitution requirements of §108(e)(2) of the Act. In such instances, a file search may be requested to detect loans containing specific problems requiring restitution.

Historically, the FDIC has treated a request made by non-member banks seeking relief from making restitution under the Truth in Lending Act, 15 USC §1601 et seq. (TILA), as an application under its regulations. The Board has delegated authority to the Director of the Division of Depositor and Consumer Protection to grant or deny these requests. The Director may further delegate this authority to the Regional Directors, but only to deny requests where the amount of restitution totals less than $25,000.

The TILA grants the enforcement agencies very little discretion to grant relief from restitution for violations. Because of this limited discretion, the FDIC has not been able to grant relief in many instances. Should a nonmember bank wish to pursue a request for relief or reconsideration, the request will be processed within the following time frames:

Regulation Z Request for Relief from Reimbursement	Regional Office	Washington Office
--	-----------------	-------------------

Initial Request	Deny Up to $25,000 aggregate	60 days	NA
	Deny $25,000 and above aggregate	30 days	30 days
	Approve	30 days	30 days
Reconsideration		30 days	30 days

Legal Requirements

Section 108(e) of the TILA, which governs enforcement of TILA, provides a very specific framework for requiring agency action on restitution. Once the FDIC determines that a disclosure error involving an inaccurate APR or finance charge has occurred, and that the error has resulted from “gross negligence,” or a “clear and consistent pattern or practice of violations,” the agency shall require an adjustment unless one of four stated exceptions applies, in which case the agency need not require an adjustment. If the exceptions apply, or in cases of similar disclosure errors, an agency may require an adjustment.

There are four instances where the FDIC has discretion to waive restitution. Three of these exceptions are straightforward and fact specific:

1. The error involves a fee or charge that would otherwise be excludable in computing the finance charge.
2. The error involved a disclosed amount which was 10 percent or less of the amount that should have been disclosed and either the annual percentage rate (APR) or finance charge was disclosed correctly; or
3. The error involved a total failure to disclose either the APR or finance charge.
4. The fourth exception is the one most frequently cited by an institution in requesting relief. It is the one that is most difficult to meet since it contains four elements, all four of which must be met for the exception to apply. The conditions are that:
 - The error resulted from a unique circumstance;
 - The disclosure violations are clearly technical and non-substantive;
 - The disclosure violations do not adversely affect information provided to the consumer; and
 - The disclosure violations have not misled or otherwise deceived the consumer.

Under provisions of the Act, a financial institution will generally have no civil or regulatory liability if it takes two affirma-

¹ For the purposes of this Manual, when referring to adjustments under Section 108(e)(2) of the Act, the term “restitution” will be used consistently to refer to all reimbursements, adjustments, or credits paid to consumers in connection with violations of the Act.

V. Lending — TIL Restitution

tive corrective actions. Within 60 days of “discovering” an error (but before institution of a civil action or receipt of a written notice of error from a consumer), the financial institution must both:

- Notify the consumer of the error, and
- Provide restitution to the consumer for overcharges

An error is “discovered” if the institution either identifies the error through its own procedures or if it is disclosed in a written examination report. If the financial institution attempts to correct a disclosure error by merely re-disclosing the required information accurately, without providing restitution to the consumer, correction has not been effected. Consumer restitution is an inseparable part of the correction action.

Procedures for Making a Request

If an institution requests relief from restitution, it should do so within 60 days of receipt of the report of examination containing the request to conduct a file search and make restitution to affected customers. The request should be directed to the attention of the Regional Director and shall contain a complete and concise statement of the action requested, all relevant facts, the reasons and analysis relied upon as the basis for such requested action, and all supporting documentation. The Regional Director will notify the institution of the receipt of the request and that pending a final determination; the institution is not required to complete corrective action on the restitution request.

If the initial request for relief is denied, the institution may petition the FDIC for reconsideration within 15 days of written receipt of the denial by filing a request for reconsideration with the appropriate Regional Director. The FDIC will acknowledge receipt of reconsideration within 15 days and will provide the applicant with written notification of its determination within 60 days of receipt of the request for reconsideration.

Process for Making Restitution

Restitution must be made expeditiously. When lump sum payments to consumers are required to be made, they must be provided to the consumer either by official check or a deposit into an existing unrestricted consumer asset account, such as an unrestricted savings, checking or NOW account. If, however, the loan that triggered restitution is delinquent, in default, or has been charged off, the institution may apply all or part of the restitution to the amount past due, if permissible under law.

There have been instances where institution personnel have inappropriately asked consumers to return restitution checks to the institution. This is not permissible. The FDIC views any such attempt to prevent unrestricted access by the consumer to restitution proceeds as a serious breach of fiduciary duty as well as a violation of law and regulation. These violations will be subject to enforcement action including, but not limited to, assessment of civil money penalties, orders to cease and desist, and possible removal/prohibition orders.

Determining Whether a Pattern or Practice Exists

The Truth in Lending Act (§108(e)) requires restitution when a disclosure error involving an understated APR or finance charge exceeds the allowed tolerance and results from a “clear and consistent pattern or practice of violations.” The term “pattern or practice” is not defined by the Act, Regulation Z or the Official Staff Commentary to the Regulation, the Interagency Policy Guide, or the FFIEC’s interpretive Questions and Answers.

However, the usual interpretation has been that a “pattern or practice” exists where there are more than isolated occurrences involving violations; however, a determination of whether a “pattern or practice” exists will depend on the facts and circumstances of individual situations.

Examiners should use the following guidance to determine if a pattern or practice exists for restitution purposes during the review of their initial sample of loans:

- If the frequency of a violation represents at least ten percent of the credit transactions sampled that have the same features or that are subject to the same regulatory requirements; and
- Within the given category of credit transactions two or more violations of the same type have been identified; then
- Examiners should determine if the cause of the violation is other than a random error. This may require the examiner to expand the sample of types of loans with violations to verify if the hypothesis of a particular pattern or practice is correct. In situations involving small samples where the number or percentage of violations noted are within the lower ranges of the minimum frequency requirements, examiners should always review additional files of the same type (if available) to confirm or refute the initial hypothesis.

Satisfying any one of the following three criteria will help demonstrate the existence of a pattern OR practice leading to violations discovered during the sampling process:

- Conduct grounded in written or unwritten policy, procedure or established practice.

- Similar conduct by an institution toward multiple consumers.
- Conduct having some common source or cause within the institution’s control.

Examiners should note that the minimum number of two violations would satisfy the ten percent minimum frequency requirement only in samples containing fewer than 25 loans. In a sample containing 55 loan transactions, at least six violations would be required to demonstrate a ten percent frequency for consideration of a hypothesis that a pattern or practice may exist.

Examiners should be certain that both the number of violations (numerator) and total sample of credit features reviewed (denominator) support their determination. Properly identifying the universe being sampled for the denominator is a key factor in this process.

- For example, samples of unsecured installment loans are normally separated from home mortgage loans, but it may be reasonable to combine them when a violation is discovered that involves the same or similar omission of credit-insurance disclosures, even though the types of loans are quite different. A review of two mortgage loans and three unsecured consumer loans, where credit life insurance was financed as part of the transactions, all lacked the affirmative written request for insurance and accompanying initials or signature, thereby reflecting a pattern or practice leading to the violations.
- In other cases, some combinations or separations of samples may be impacted by findings concerning the separation of banking functions, such as between employees or between different branch offices of the institution. For example, it is discovered that a new loan officer in the installment loan area has not been disclosing the amount of the premiums for disability insurance to customers, yet the mortgage loan department provides the correct disclosure when offering that insurance to customers. In this situation, it would be more appropriate to separate the samples from both departments because the cause of the error is solely within the installment loan area and confined to one loan officer.
- In another example, in a review of 65 consumer loans, errors in credit insurance disclosures were discovered in all six loans involving consumer purchases of credit life insurance; however, no errors were discovered in 59 loans where the consumer did not purchase credit insurance. The frequency of violations in this case is 100 percent (six of six instances) as these were the loans where the disclosures were required to be made but were not made correctly.

- Another example would be where violations are found involving private mortgage insurance (PMI). To further test whether this error would constitute a pattern or practice, the examiner should sample additional mortgage loans where the purchase of PMI was required. It would not be appropriate to consider loans where PMI was not a requirement for the loan.

In a situation where violations are discovered in some construction loans, it would not be correct to consider all real estate loans as the applicable universe. The universe in that situation should consist of only construction loans to determine whether a particular pattern or practice was the cause of the violation.

Documenting Reimbursable Truth in Lending Violations

Truth in Lending reimbursable violations will be included under a separate heading, “Truth in Lending Violations Subject to Restitution,” in the applicable Level 3 and Level 2 Violations pages. The FOCUS System will code these violations as reimbursable.

In the text of the violation write-up, the following information will be provided to support the presence of a “pattern or practice” for each type of reimbursable Truth in Lending violation:

- Type of loan;
- Special characteristics or features, if any; and
- Number of loans sampled with reimbursement violations.

For violations involving both understated annual percentage rates (APR) and finance charges, the larger of the reimbursable amounts will be identified.

In addition to the above information, the examiners will forward to the Regional Office or Field Office the following for each type of reimbursable violation cited (as applicable):

- APR calculation printouts;
- TRID disclosures;
- Contract note;
- Commitment letter;
- Private mortgage insurance agreements;
- Interest rate indices;
- Trial balances, loan history, or payment record showing first payment and at least one subsequent payment;
- Itemization of amount financed (if separate)/Good Faith Estimate;

V. Lending — TIL Restitution

- Amortization schedule; and
- Any other documentation supporting adjustments to the amount financed (e.g., credit insurance application forms, payment or rate change notices, etc.)

Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA)

Introduction

The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (RESPA) (12 U.S.C. 2601 et seq.) (the Act) became effective on June 20, 1975. The Act requires lenders, mortgage brokers, or servicers of home loans to provide borrowers with pertinent and timely disclosures regarding the nature and costs of the real estate settlement process. The Act also prohibits specific practices, such as kickbacks, and places limitations upon the use of escrow accounts. The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) originally promulgated Regulation X, which implements RESPA.

Congress has amended RESPA significantly since its enactment. The National Affordable Housing Act of 1990 amended RESPA to require detailed disclosures concerning the transfer, sale, or assignment of mortgage servicing. It also requires disclosures for mortgage escrow accounts at closing and annually thereafter, itemizing the charges to be paid by the borrower and what is paid out of the account by the servicer.

In October 1992, Congress amended RESPA to cover subordinate lien loans.

Congress, when it enacted the Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act of 1996,¹ further amended RESPA to clarify certain definitions, including “controlled business arrangement,” which was changed to “affiliated business arrangement.” The changes also reduced the disclosures under the mortgage servicing provisions of RESPA.

In 2008, HUD issued a RESPA Reform Rule (73 Fed. Reg. 68204, November 17, 2008) that included substantive and technical changes to the existing RESPA regulations and different implementation dates for various provisions. Substantive changes included a standard Good Faith Estimate (GFE) form and a revised HUD-1 Settlement Statement that were required as of January 1, 2010. Technical changes, including streamlined mortgage servicing disclosure language, elimination of outdated escrow account provisions, and a provision permitting an “average charge” to be listed on the GFE and HUD-1 Settlement Statement, took effect on January 16, 2009. In addition, HUD clarified that all disclosures required by RESPA are permitted to be provided electronically, in accordance with the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign).²

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, Pub. L. 111-203 (July 10, 2010) (Dodd-Frank Act) granted rule-making authority under RESPA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) and, with respect to entities under its jurisdiction, generally granted authority to the CFPB to supervise for and enforce compliance with RESPA and its implementing regulations.³ In December 2011, the CFPB restated HUD’s implementing regulation at 12 CFR Part 1024 (76 Fed. Reg. 78978) (December 20, 2011).

Since December 2011, the CFPB has issued a series of final rules amending Regulation X. On January 17, 2013, the CFPB issued a final rule that implemented certain provisions of Title XIV of the Dodd-Frank Act and included substantive and technical changes to the existing regulations. (78 Fed. Reg. 10695) (February 14, 2013). Substantive changes included modifying the servicing transfer notice requirements and implementing new procedures and notice requirements related to borrowers’ error resolution requests and information requests. The amendments also included new provisions related to escrow payments, force-placed insurance, general servicing policies, procedures, and requirements, early intervention, continuity of contact, and loss mitigation. The amendments were effective as of January 10, 2014.

Subsequently, on July 10, 2013, September 13, 2013, and October 22, 2014, the CFPB issued final rules to further amend Regulation X ((78 Fed. Reg. 44685) (July 24, 2013), (78 Fed. Reg. 60381) (October 1, 2013), and (79 Fed. Reg. 65299) (November 3, 2014)). The final rules included substantive and technical changes to the existing regulations, including revisions to provisions on the relation to state law of Regulation X’s servicing provisions, to the loss mitigation procedure requirements, and to the requirements relating to notices of error and information requests. On October 15, 2013, the CFPB issued an interim final rule to further amend Regulation X (78 Fed. Reg. 62993) (October 23, 2013) to exempt servicers from the early intervention requirements in certain circumstances. The Regulation X amendments were effective as of January 10, 2014.

On December 31, 2013, the CFPB published final rules implementing Sections 1098(2) and 1100A(5) of the Dodd-Frank Act, which direct the CFPB to publish a single, integrated disclosure for mortgage transactions, which includes mortgage disclosure requirements under the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) and Sections 4 and 5 of RESPA. These amendments are referred to in this document as the “TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule” or “TRID,” and are applicable to covered closed-end mortgage loans for which a creditor or mortgage broker receives an application on or after October 3, 2015. As a result, Regulation Z now houses the integrated forms, timing, and related disclosure requirements for most closed-end consumer mortgage loans.

V. Lending — RESPA

The new integrated disclosures are not used to disclose information about reverse mortgages, home equity lines of credit (HELOCs), chattel-dwelling loans such as loans secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property (i.e., land), or other transactions not covered by the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule. The final rule also does not apply to loans made by a creditor who makes five or fewer mortgages in a year. Creditors originating these types of mortgages must continue to use, as applicable, the GFE, HUD-1 Settlement Statement, and Truth in Lending (TIL) disclosures.

On August 4, 2016, the CFPB issued a final rule to further clarify, revise, and amend provisions of Regulation X as well as Regulation Z, the regulation implementing TILA. (81 Fed. Reg. 72160) (October 19, 2016). The amendments in the final rule are referenced in this document as the “2016 Servicing Rule.” The 2016 Servicing Rule establishes a definition of successor in interest and provides that confirmed successors in interest are considered “borrowers” for the purposes of Regulation X’s mortgage servicing provisions. Confirmed successor in interest means a successor in interest once a servicer has confirmed the successor in interest’s identity and ownership interest in a property that secures a mortgage loan subject to Subpart C of Regulation X. The 2016 Servicing Rule also addresses compliance with certain servicing requirements when a person is a debtor in bankruptcy or sends a cease communication request under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA).

Additionally, the 2016 Servicing Rule clarifies, revises, or amends provisions regarding force-placed insurance notices, policy and procedure requirements, early intervention, and loss mitigation requirements under Regulation X’s mortgage servicing provisions; and which loans are considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer, certain periodic statement requirements relating to bankruptcy and charge-off, and prompt crediting requirements under Regulation Z’s mortgage servicing provisions. The 2016 Servicing Rule was effective October 19, 2017, except for the provisions related to successors in interest and periodic statements for borrowers in bankruptcy, which take effect on April 19, 2018.

The CFPB concurrently issued an interpretive rule under the FDCPA to clarify the interaction of the FDCPA and specified mortgage servicing rules in Regulations X and Z. (81 Fed. Reg. 71977) (October 19, 2016).⁴ This interpretive rule constitutes an advisory opinion for purposes of the FDCPA and provides safe harbors from liability for servicers acting in compliance with it.

On October 4, 2017, the CFPB issued an interim final rule amending a provision of the 2016 Servicing Rule relating to the timing for servicers to provide modified written early intervention notices under Regulation X to borrowers who have invoked their cease communication rights under the FDCPA. (82 FR 47953) (October 16, 2017). The interim final rule was effective October 19, 2017.

Subpart A – General Provisions

Coverage – 12 CFR 1024.5(a)

RESPA is applicable to all “federally related mortgage loans,” except as provided under 12 CFR 1024.5(b) and 1024.5(d), discussed below. “Federally related mortgage loans” are defined as:

Loans (other than temporary loans), including refinancings that satisfy the following two criteria:

- First, the loan is secured by a first or subordinate lien on residential real property, located within a state, upon which either:
 - A one-to-four family structure is located or is to be constructed using proceeds of the loan (including individual units of condominiums and cooperatives); or
 - A manufactured home is located or is to be constructed using proceeds of the loan.
- Second, the loan falls within one of the following categories:
 - Loans made by a lender,⁵ creditor,⁶ dealer;⁷
 - Loans made or insured by an agency of the federal government;
 - Loans made in connection with a housing or urban development program administered by an agency of the federal government;

⁵ A lender includes financial institutions either regulated by, or whose deposits or accounts are insured by, any agency of the federal government.

⁶ A creditor is defined in Section 103(g) of the Consumer Credit Protection Act (15 U.S.C. 1602(g)). RESPA covers any creditor that makes or invests in residential real estate loans aggregating more than $1,000,000 per year.

⁷ “Dealer” is defined in Regulation X to mean a seller, contractor, or supplier of goods or services. Dealer loans are covered by RESPA if the obligations are to be assigned before the first payment is due to any lender or creditor otherwise subject to the regulation.

- Loans made and intended to be sold by the originating lender or creditor to FNMA, GNMA, or FHLMC (or its successor);⁸ or
- Loans that are the subject of a home equity conversion mortgage or reverse mortgage issued by a lender or creditor subject to the regulation.

“Federally related mortgage loans” are also defined to include installment sales contracts, land contracts, or contracts for deeds on otherwise qualifying residential property if the contract is funded in whole or in part by proceeds of a loan made by a lender, specified federal agency, dealer or creditor subject to the regulation.

Exemptions – 12 CFR 1024.5(b)

The following transactions are exempt from coverage:

- A loan primarily for business, commercial or agricultural purposes (definition identical to Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.3(a)(1)).
- A temporary loan, such as a construction loan. (The exemption does not apply if the loan is used as, or may be converted to, permanent financing by the same financial institution or is used to finance transfer of title to the first user of the property.) If the lender issues a commitment for permanent financing, it is covered by the regulation.
- Any construction loan with a term of two years or more is covered by the regulation, unless it is made to a bona fide contractor. “Bridge” or “swing” loans are not covered by the regulation.
- A loan secured by vacant or unimproved property where no proceeds of the loan will be used to construct a one-to-four family residential structure. If the proceeds will be used to locate a manufactured home or construct a structure within two years from the date of settlement, the loan is covered.
- An assumption, unless the mortgage instruments require lender approval for the assumption and the lender approves the assumption.
- A conversion of a loan to different terms which are consistent with provisions of the original mortgage instrument, as long as a new note is not required, even if the lender charges an additional fee for the conversion.⁹

- A bona fide transfer of a loan obligation in the secondary market. (However, the mortgage servicing requirements of Subpart C, 12 CFR 1024.30-41, still apply.) Mortgage broker transactions that are table funded (the loan is funded by a contemporaneous advance of loan funds and an assignment of the loan to the person advancing the funds) are not secondary market transactions and therefore are covered by RESPA. Similarly, neither the creation of a dealer loan or consumer credit contract, nor the first assignment of such loan or contract to a lender, is a secondary market transaction.

Partial Exemptions for Certain Mortgage Loans – 12 CFR 1024.5(d)

Most closed-end mortgage loans are exempt from the requirement to provide the GFE, HUD-1 settlement statement, and application servicing disclosure requirements of 12 CFR 1024.6, 1024.7, 1024.8, 1024.10, and 1024.33(a). Instead, these loans are subject to disclosure, timing, and other requirements under TILA and Regulation Z. Specifically, the aforementioned provisions do not apply to a federally related mortgage loan that:

- Is subject to the special disclosure (TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure) requirements for certain consumer credit transactions secured by real property set forth in Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f), and (g); or
- Is subject to the partial exemption under 12 CFR 1026.3(h) (i.e., certain no-interest loans secured by subordinate liens made for the purpose of down payment or similar home buyer assistance, property rehabilitation, energy efficiency, or foreclosure avoidance or prevention. (12 CFR 1026.3(h)).

NOTE: A creditor may not use the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure forms instead of the GFE, HUD-1, and TIL forms for transactions that continue to be covered by TILA or RESPA that require those disclosures (e.g., reverse mortgages).¹⁰

⁸ FNMA – Federal National Mortgage Association; GNMA - Government National Mortgage Association; FHLMC – Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation.

⁹ 12 CFR 1024.5(b)(6).

¹⁰ Open-end reverse mortgages receive open-end disclosures, rather than GFEs or HUD-1s.

Summary of Applicable Disclosure Requirements:

Use TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (See Regulation Z): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Most closed-end mortgage loans, including: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Construction-only loans ○ Loans secured by vacant land or by 25 or more acres 	Continue to use existing TIL, RESPA Disclosures (as applicable): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • HELOCs (subject to disclosure requirements under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.40) • Reverse mortgages (subject to existing TIL and GFE disclosures) • Chattel-secured mortgages (i.e., mortgages secured by a mobile home or by a dwelling that is not attached to real property, such as land) (subject to existing TIL disclosures, and not RESPA)
But note: In both cases, there is a partial exemption from these disclosures under 12 CFR 1026.3(h) for loans secured by subordinate liens and associated with certain housing assistance loan programs for low- and moderate-income persons.

Subpart B – Mortgage Settlement and Escrow Accounts

Examiners should note that certain provisions in Subpart B (12 CFR 1024.6, 1024.7, 1024.8, and 1024.10) are applicable only to limited categories of mortgage loans. See the discussion of 12 CFR 1024.5(d) above.

Special Information Booklet – 12 CFR 1024.6

For mortgage loans that are not subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule (see 12 CFR 1026.19(e), (f) and (g)),* a loan originator¹¹ is required to provide the borrower with a copy of the Special Information Booklet at the time a written application is submitted or no later than three business days after the application is received. If the application is denied before the end of the three-business-day period, the loan originator is not required to provide the booklet. If the borrower uses a mortgage broker, the broker rather than the lender, must provide the booklet.

The booklet does not need to be provided for refinancing transactions, closed-end subordinate lien mortgage loans and reverse mortgage transactions, or for any other federally related mortgage loan not intended for the purchase of a one-to-four family residential property. (12 CFR 1024.19(g)(1)(iii)).

A loan originator that complies with Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.40) for open-end home equity plans (including providing the brochure entitled “What You Should Know About Home Equity Lines of Credit” or a suitable substitute) is deemed to have complied with this section.

NOTE: The Special Information Booklet may also be required under 12 CFR 1026.19(g) for those closed-end mortgage loans subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule. A discussion of those requirements is located in the Regulation Z examination procedures.

Good Faith Estimate (GFE) of Settlement Costs – 12 CFR 1024.7 Standard GFE Required

For closed-end reverse mortgages, a loan originator is required to provide a consumer with the standard GFE form that is designed to allow borrowers to shop for a mortgage loan by comparing settlement costs and loan terms. (See GFE form at Appendix C to 12 CFR Part 1024.)

Overview of the Standard GFE

The first page of the GFE includes a summary of loan terms and a summary of estimated settlement charges. It also includes information about key dates such as when the interest rate for the loan quoted in the GFE expires and when the estimate for the settlement charges expires. The second page discloses settlement charges as subtotals for 11 categories of costs. The third page provides a table explaining which charges can change at settlement, a trade-off table showing the relationship between the interest rate and settlement charges, and a shopping chart to compare the costs and terms of loans offered by different originators.

¹¹ A “loan originator” is defined as a lender or mortgage broker. 12 CFR 1024.2(b).

GFE Application Requirements

- The loan originator must provide the standard GFE to the borrower within three business days of receipt of an application for a mortgage loan. A loan originator is not required to provide a GFE if before the end of the three-business-day period, the application is denied or the borrower withdraws the application.
- An application can be in writing or electronically submitted, including a written record of an oral application.
- A loan originator determines what information it needs to collect from a borrower and which of the collected information it will use in order to issue a GFE. Under the regulations, an “application” includes at least the following six pieces of information:
 - 1) The borrower’s name;
 - 2) The borrower’s gross monthly income;
 - 3) The borrower’s Social Security number (e.g., to enable the loan originator to obtain a credit report);
 - 4) The property address;
 - 5) An estimate of the value of the property; and
 - 6) The mortgage loan amount sought. In addition, a loan originator may require the submission of any other information it deems necessary.

A loan originator will be presumed to have relied on such information prior to issuing a GFE and cannot base a revision of a GFE on that information unless it changes or is later found to be inaccurate.

- While the loan originator may require the borrower to submit additional information beyond the six pieces of information listed above in order to issue a GFE, it cannot require, as a condition of providing the GFE, the submission of supplemental documentation to verify the information provided by the borrower on the application. However, a loan originator is not prohibited from using its own sources to verify the information provided by the borrower prior to issuing the GFE. The loan originator can require borrowers to provide verification information after the GFE has been issued in order to complete final underwriting.
- For dealer loans, the loan originator is responsible for providing the GFE directly or ensuring that the dealer provides the GFE.
- For mortgage brokered loans, either the lender or the mortgage broker must provide a GFE within three business days after a mortgage broker receives either an application or information sufficient to complete an application. The lender is responsible for ascertaining whether the GFE has been provided. If the mortgage broker has provided the GFE to the applicant, the lender is not required to provide an additional GFE.

- A loan originator is prohibited from charging a borrower any fee in order to obtain a GFE unless the fee is limited to the cost of a credit report.

GFE Not Required for Open End Lines of Credit – 12 CFR 1024.7(h)

A loan originator that complies with Regulation Z (12 CFR 1026.40) for open-end home equity plans is deemed to have complied with 12 CFR 1024.7.

Availability of GFE Terms – 12 CFR 1024.7(c)

Regulation X does not establish a minimum period of availability for which the interest rate must be honored. The loan originator must determine the expiration date for the interest rate of the loan stated on the GFE. In contrast, Regulation X requires that the estimated settlement charges and loan terms listed on the GFE be honored by the loan originator for at least 10 business days from the date the GFE is provided. The period of availability for the estimated settlement charges and loan terms as well as the period of availability for the interest rate of the loan stated on the GFE must be listed on the GFE in the “important dates” section of the form.

After the expiration date for the interest rate of the loan stated on the GFE, the interest rate and the other rate related charges, including the charge or credit for the interest rate chosen, the adjusted origination charges and the per diem interest can change until the interest rate is locked.

Key GFE Form Contents – 12 CFR 1024.7(d)

The loan originator must ensure that the required GFE form is completed in accordance with the Instructions set forth in Appendix C of 12 CFR Part 1024.

First Page of GFE

- The first page of the GFE discloses identifying information such as the name and address of the “loan originator,” which includes the lender or the mortgage broker originating the loan. The “purpose” section indicates what the GFE is about and directs the borrower to the TIL disclosures and HUD’s website for more information. The borrower is informed that only the borrower can shop for the best loan and that the borrower should compare loan offers using the shopping chart on the third page of the GFE.

V. Lending — RESPA

- The “important dates” section requires the loan originator to state the expiration date for the interest rate for the loan provided in the GFE as well as the expiration date for the estimate of other settlement charges and the loan terms not dependent upon the interest rate.
- While the interest rate stated on the GFE is not required to be honored for any specific period of time, the estimate for the other settlement charges and other loan terms must be honored for at least 10 business days from when the GFE is provided.
- In addition, the form must state how many calendar days within which the borrower must go to settlement once the interest rate is locked (rate lock period). The form also requires disclosure of how many days prior to settlement the interest rate would have to be locked, if applicable.
- The “summary of your loan” section requires disclosure of the initial loan amount; loan term; initial interest rate; initial monthly payment for principal, interest and any mortgage insurance; whether the interest rate can rise, and if so, the maximum rate to which it can rise over the life of the loan, and the period of time after which the interest rate can first change; whether the loan balance can rise if the payments are made on time and if so, the maximum amount to which it can rise over the life of the loan; whether the monthly amount owed for principal, interest and any mortgage insurance can rise even if payments are made on time, and if so, the maximum amount to which the monthly amount owed can ever rise over the life of the loan; whether the loan has a prepayment penalty, and if so, the maximum amount it could be; and whether the loan has a balloon payment, and if so, the amount of such payment and in how many years it will be due. Specific instructions are provided with respect to closed-end reverse mortgages.
- The “escrow account information” section requires the loan originator to indicate whether the loan does or does not have an escrow account to pay property taxes or other property related charges. In addition, this section also requires the disclosure of the monthly amount owed for principal, interest and any mortgage insurance. Specific instructions are provided with respect to closed-end reverse mortgages.
- The bottom of the first page includes subtotals for the adjusted origination charges and charges for all other settlement charges listed on page two, along with the total estimated settlement charges.

Second Page of GFE

The second page of the GFE requires disclosure of all settlement charges. It provides for the estimate of total settlement costs in eleven categories discussed below. The adjusted origination charges are disclosed in “Block A” and all other settlement charges are disclosed in “Block B.” The amounts in the blocks are to be added to arrive at the “total estimated settlement charges” which is required to be listed at the bottom of the page.

Disclosure of Adjusted Origination Charge (Block A)

Block A addresses disclosure of origination charges, which include all lender and mortgage broker charges. The “adjusted origination charge” results from the subtraction of a “credit” from the “origination charge” or the addition of a “charge” to the origination charge.

- Block 1 – the origination charges, which include lender processing and underwriting fees and any fees paid to a mortgage broker.

Origination Charge Note: This block requires the disclosure of all charges that all loan originators involved in the transaction will receive for originating the loan (excluding any charges for points). A loan originator may not separately charge any additional fees for getting the loan such as application, processing or underwriting fees. The amount in Block 1 is subject to zero tolerance, i.e., the amount cannot change at settlement.

- Block 2 – a “credit” or “charge” for the interest rate chosen.

Credit or Charge for the Interest Rate Chosen Note:

Transaction Involving a Mortgage Broker. For a transaction involving a mortgage broker,¹² Block 2 requires disclosure of a “credit” or charge (points) for the specific interest rate chosen. The credit or charge for the specific interest rate chosen is the net payment to the mortgage broker (i.e., the sum of all payments to the mortgage broker from the lender, including payments based on the loan amount, a flat rate or any other compensation, and in a table funded transaction, the loan amount less the price paid for the loan by the lender.)

¹² The 2008 RESPA Reform Rule changed the definition of “mortgage broker” to mean a person or entity (not an employee of a lender) that renders origination services and serves as an intermediary between a lender and a borrower in a transaction involving a federally related mortgage loan, including such person or entity that closes the loan in its own name and table funds the transaction. The definition will also apply to a loan correspondent approved under 24 CFR 202.8 for Federal Housing Administration (FHA programs). The definition would also include an “exclusive agent” who is not an employee of the lender.

When the net payment to the mortgage broker from the lender is positive, there is a “credit” to the borrower and it is entered as a negative amount. For example, if the lender pays a yield spread premium to a mortgage broker for the loan set forth in the GFE, the payment must be disclosed as a “credit” to the borrower for the particular interest rate listed on the GFE (reflected on the GFE at Block 2, checkbox 2). The term “yield spread premium” is not featured on the GFE or the HUD-1 Settlement Statement.

Points paid by the borrower for the interest rate chosen must be disclosed as a “charge” (reflected on the GFE at Block 2, third checkbox). A loan cannot include both a charge (points) and a credit (yield spread premium).

Transaction Not Involving a Mortgage Broker. For a transaction without a mortgage broker, a lender may choose not to separately disclose any credit or charge for the interest rate chosen for the loan in the GFE. If the lender does not include any credit or charge in Block 2, it must check the first checkbox in Block 2 indicating that “The credit or charge for the interest rate you have chosen is included in ‘our origination charge’ above.” Only one of the boxes in Block 2 may be checked, as a credit and charge cannot occur together in the same transaction.

Disclosure of Charges for All Other Settlement Services (Block B)

Block B is the sum of charges for all settlement services other than the origination charges.

- Block 3 – required services by providers selected by the lender such as appraisal and flood certification fees.
- Block 4 – title service fees and the cost of lender’s title insurance.
- Block 5 – owner’s title insurance.
- Block 6 – other required services for which the consumer may shop.
- Block 7 – government recording charges.
- Block 8 – transfer tax charges.
- Block 9 – initial deposit for escrow account.
- Block 10 – daily interest charges.
- Block 11 – homeowner’s insurance charges.

Third Page of GFE

The third page of the GFE includes the following information:

- A tolerance chart identifying the charges that can change at settlement (see discussion on tolerances below);
- A trade-off table that requires the loan originator to provide information on the loan described in the GFE and at the loan originator’s option, information about alternative loans (one with lower settlement charges but a higher interest rate and one with a lower interest rate but higher settlement charges);
- A shopping chart that allows the consumer to fill in loan terms and settlement charges from other lenders or brokers to use to compare loans; and
- Language indicating that some lenders may sell the loan after settlement, but that any fees the lender receives in the future cannot change the borrower’s loan or the settlement charges.

Tolerances on Settlement Costs – 12 CFR 1024.7(e) and (i)

The 2008 RESPA Reform Rule established “tolerances” or limits on the amount actual settlement charges can vary at closing from the amounts stated on the GFE. The rule established three categories of settlement charges and each category has different tolerances. If, at settlement, the charges exceed the charges listed on the GFE by more than the permitted tolerances, the loan originator may cure the tolerance violation by reimbursing to the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded, at settlement or within 30 calendar days after settlement.

Tolerance Categories

- Zero tolerance category. This category of fees is subject to a zero tolerance standard. The fees estimated on the GFE may not be exceeded at closing. These fees include:
 - The loan originator’s own origination charge, including processing and underwriting fees;
 - The credit or charge for the interest rate chosen (i.e., yield spread premium or discount points) while the interest rate is locked;
 - The adjusted origination charge while the interest rate is locked; and
 - State/local property transfer taxes.
- Ten percent tolerance category. For this category of fees, while each individual fee may increase or decrease, the sum of the charges at settlement may not be greater than 10 percent above the sum of the amounts included on the GFE. This category includes fees for:

V. Lending — RESPA

- Loan originator required settlement services, where the loan originator selects the third-party settlement service provider;
- Loan originator required services, title services, required title insurance and owner's title insurance when the borrower selects a third-party provider identified by the loan originator; and
- Government recording charges.
- No tolerance category. The final category of fees is not subject to any tolerance restriction. The amounts charged for the following settlement services included on the GFE can change at settlement and the amount of the change is not limited:
 - Loan originator required services where the borrower selects his or her own third-party provider;
 - Title services, lender's title insurance, and owner's title insurance when the borrower selects his or her own provider;
 - Initial escrow deposit;
 - Daily interest charges; and
 - Homeowner's insurance.

Identification of Third-Party Settlement Service Providers

When the loan originator permits a borrower to shop for one or more required third-party settlement services and select the settlement service provider for such required services, the loan originator must list in the relevant block on page two of the GFE the settlement service and the estimated charge to be paid to the provider of each required service. In addition, the loan originator must provide the borrower with a written list of settlement service providers for those required services on a separate sheet of paper at the time the GFE is provided.

Binding GFE – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)

The loan originator is bound, within the tolerances provided, to the settlement charges and terms listed on the GFE provided to the borrower, unless a new GFE is provided prior to settlement (see discussion below on changed circumstances). This also means that if a lender accepts a GFE issued by a mortgage broker, the lender is subject to the loan terms and settlement charges listed in the GFE, unless a new GFE is issued prior to settlement.

Changed Circumstances – 12 CFR 1024.2(b), 1024.7(f)(1) and (f)(2)

Changed circumstances are defined as:

- Acts of God, war, disaster, or other emergency;
- Information particular to the borrower or transaction that was relied on in providing the GFE that changes or is found to be inaccurate after the GFE has been provided;
- New information particular to the borrower or transaction that was not relied on in providing the GFE; or
- Other circumstances that are particular to the borrower or transaction, including boundary disputes, the need for flood insurance, or environmental problems.

Changed circumstances do not include the borrower's name, the borrower's monthly income, the property address, an estimate of the value of the property, the mortgage loan amount sought, and any information contained in any credit report obtained by the loan originator prior to providing the GFE, unless the information changes or is found to be inaccurate after the GFE has been provided. In addition, market price fluctuations by themselves do not constitute changed circumstances.

Changed circumstances affecting settlement costs are those circumstances that result in increased costs for settlement services such that the charges at settlement would exceed the tolerances or limits on those charges established by the regulations.

Changed circumstances affecting the loan are those circumstances that affect the borrower's eligibility for the loan. For example, if underwriting and verification indicate that the borrower is ineligible for the loan provided in the GFE, the loan originator would no longer be bound by the original GFE. In such cases, if a new GFE is to be provided, the loan originator must do so within three business days of receiving information sufficient to establish changed circumstances. The loan originator must document the reason that a new GFE was provided and must retain documentation of any reasons for providing a new GFE for no less than three years after settlement.

None of the information collected by the loan originator prior to issuing the GFE may later become the basis for a "changed circumstance" upon which it may offer a revised GFE, unless: it can demonstrate 1) that there was a change in the particular information; 2) that the information was inaccurate; or 3) that it did not rely on that particular information in issuing the GFE. A loan originator has the burden of demonstrating nonreliance on the collected information, but may do so through various means including through a documented record in the underwriting file or an established policy of relying on a more limited set of information in providing GFEs.

If a loan originator issues a revised GFE based on information previously collected in issuing the original GFE and “changed circumstances,” it must document the reasons for issuing the revised GFE, such as its nonreliance on such information or the inaccuracy of such information.

Borrower Requested Changes – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(3)

If a borrower requests changes to the mortgage loan identified in the GFE that change the settlement charges or the terms of the loan, the loan originator may provide a revised GFE to the borrower. If a revised GFE is provided, the loan originator must do so within three business days of the borrower’s request.

Expiration of Original GFE – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(4)

If a borrower does not express an intent to continue with an application within 10 business days after the GFE is provided, or such longer time provided by the loan originator, the loan originator is no longer bound by the GFE.

Interest Rate Dependent Charges and Terms – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(5)

If the interest rate has not been locked by the borrower, or a locked interest rate has expired, all interest rate-dependent charges on the GFE are subject to change. The charges that may change include the charge or credit for the interest rate chosen, the adjusted origination charges, per diem interest, and loan terms related to the interest rate. However, the loan originator’s origination charge (listed in Block 1 of page 2 of the GFE) is not subject to change, even if the interest rate floats, unless there is another changed circumstance or borrower-requested change.

If the borrower later locks the interest rate, a new GFE must be provided showing the revised interest rate dependent charges and terms. All other charges and terms must remain the same as on the original GFE, unless changed circumstances or borrower-requested changes result in increased costs for settlement services or affect the borrower’s eligibility for the specific loan terms identified in the original GFE.

New Home Purchases – 12 CFR 1024.7(f)(6)

In transactions involving new home purchases, where settlement is expected to occur more than 60 calendar days from the time a GFE is provided, the loan originator may provide the GFE to the borrower with a clear and conspicuous disclosure stating that at any time up until 60 calendar days prior to closing, the loan originator may issue a revised GFE. If the loan originator does not provide such a disclosure, it cannot issue a revised GFE except as otherwise provided in Regulation X.

Volume-Based Discounts

The 2008 RESPA Reform Rule did not formally address the legality of volume-based discounts. However, HUD indicated in the preamble to the rule that discounts negotiated between loan originators and other settlement service providers, where the discount is ultimately passed on to the borrower in full, is not, depending on the circumstances of a particular transaction, a violation of Section 8 of RESPA.¹³

Uniform Settlement Statement (HUD-1 OR HUD-1A) – 12 CFR 1024.8

For closed-end reverse mortgages, the person conducting the settlement (settlement agent) must provide the borrower with a HUD-1 Settlement Statement at or before settlement that clearly itemizes all charges imposed on the buyer and the seller in connection with the settlement. The 2008 RESPA Reform rule included a revised HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement form that is required as of January 1, 2010. The HUD-1 is used for transactions in which there is a borrower and seller. For transactions in which there is a borrower and no seller (refinancings and subordinate lien loans), the HUD-1 may be completed by using the borrower’s side of the settlement statement. Alternatively, the HUD-1A may be used.

However, no settlement statement is required for home equity plans subject to TILA and Regulation Z. Appendix A to 12 CFR 1024 contains the instructions for completing the forms.

V. Lending — RESPA

Key 2008 RESPA Reform Enhancements to the HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement

While the 2008 RESPA Reform Rule did not include any substantive changes to the first page of the HUD-1/1A form, there were changes to the second page of the form to facilitate comparison between the HUD-1/1A and the GFE. Each designated line on the second page of the revised HUD-1/1A includes a reference to the relevant line from the GFE.

With respect to disclosure of “no cost” loans where “no cost” refers only to the loan originator’s fees (see Section L, subsection 800 of the HUD-1 form), the amounts shown for the “origination charge” and the “credit or charge for the interest rate chosen” should offset, so that the “adjusted origination charge” is zero.

In the case of a “no cost” loan where “no cost” encompasses loan originator and third-party fees, all third-party fees must be itemized and listed in the borrower’s column on the HUD-1/1A. These itemized charges must be offset with a negative adjusted origination charge (Line 803) and recorded in the columns.

To further facilitate comparability between the forms, the revised HUD-1 includes a third page (second page of the HUD-1A) that allows borrowers to compare the loan terms and settlement charges listed on the GFE with the terms and charges listed on the closing statement. The first half of the third page includes a comparison chart that sets forth the settlement charges from the GFE and the settlement charges from the HUD-1 to allow the borrower to easily determine whether the settlement charges exceed the charges stated on the GFE. If any charges at settlement exceed the charges listed on the GFE by more than the permitted tolerances, the loan originator may cure the tolerance violation by reimbursing to the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded. A borrower will be deemed to have received timely reimbursement if the financial institution delivers or places the payment in the mail within 30 calendar days after settlement.

Inadvertent or technical errors on the settlement statement are not deemed to be a violation of Section 4 of RESPA if a revised HUD-1/1A is provided to the borrower within 30 calendar days after settlement.

The second half of the third page sets forth the loan terms for the loan received at settlement in a format that reflects the summary of loan terms on the first page of the GFE, but with additional loan related information that would be available at closing. The note at the bottom of the page indicates that the borrower should contact the lender if the borrower has questions about the settlement charges or loan terms listed on the form.

12 CFR 1024.8(b) and the instructions for completing the HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement provide that the loan originator shall transmit sufficient information to the settlement agent to allow the settlement agent to complete the “loan terms” section. The loan originator must provide the information in a format that permits the settlement agent to enter the information in the appropriate spaces on the HUD-1/1A, without having to refer to the loan documents.

Average Charge Permitted

As of January 16, 2009, an average charge may be stated on the HUD-1/1A if such average charge is computed in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.8(b)(2). All settlement service providers, including loan originators, are permitted to list the average charge for a settlement service on the HUD-1/1A Settlement Statement (and on the GFE) rather than the exact cost for that service.

The method of determining the average charge is left up to the settlement service provider. The average charge may be used as the charge for any third-party vendor charge, not for the provider’s own internal charges. The average charge also cannot be used where the charge is based on the loan amount or the value of the property.

The average charge may be used for any third-party settlement service, provided that the total amounts received from borrowers for that service for a particular class of transactions do not exceed the total amounts paid to providers of that service for that class of transactions. A class of transactions may be defined based on the period of time, type of loan and geographic area. If an average charge is used in any class of transactions defined by the loan originator, then the loan originator must use the same average charge for every transaction within that class. The average charge must be recalculated at least every six months.

A settlement service provider that uses an average charge for a particular service must maintain all documents that were used to calculate the average charge for at least three years after any settlement in which the average charge was used.

Printing and Duplication of the Settlement Statement – 12 CFR 1024.9

Financial institutions have numerous options for layout and format in reproducing the HUD-1 and HUD-1A that do not require prior CFPB approval such as size of pages; tint or color of pages; size and style of type or print; spacing; printing on separate pages, front and back of a single page or on one continuous page; use of multi-copy tear-out sets; printing on rolls for computer purposes; addition of signature lines; and translation into any language. Other changes may be made only with the approval of the CFPB.

One-Day Advance Inspection of the Settlement Statement – 12 CFR 1024.10

For closed-end reverse mortgages, and upon request by the borrower, the HUD-1 or HUD-1A must be completed and made available for inspection during the business day immediately preceding the day of settlement, setting forth those items known at that time by the person conducting the closing.

Delivery – 12 CFR 1024.10(a) and (b)

The completed HUD-1 or HUD-1A must be mailed or delivered to the borrower, the seller (if there is one), the lender (if the lender is not the settlement agent), and/or their agents at or before settlement. However, the borrower may waive the right of delivery by executing a written waiver at or before settlement. The HUD-1 or HUD-1A shall be mailed or delivered as soon as practicable after settlement if the borrower or borrower's agent does not attend the settlement.

Retention – 12 CFR 1024.10(e)

A lender must retain each completed HUD-1 or HUD-1A and related documents for five years after settlement, unless the lender disposes of its interest in the mortgage and does not service the mortgage. If the loan is transferred, the lender shall provide a copy of the HUD-1 or HUD-1A to the owner or servicer of the mortgage as part of the transfer. The owner or servicer shall retain the HUD-1 or HUD-1A for the remainder of the five-year period.

Prohibition of Fees for Preparing Federal Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.12

For loans subject to RESPA, no fee may be charged for preparing the Settlement Statement or the Escrow Account statement or any disclosures required by TILA.

Prohibition Against Kickbacks and Unearned Fees – 12 CFR 1024.14

Any person who gives or accepts a fee, kickback, or thing of value (payments, commissions, gifts, tangible item or special privileges) for the referral of settlement business is in violation of Section 8(a) of RESPA. Any person who gives or accepts any portion, split, or percentage of a charge for real estate settlement services, other than for services actually performed, is in violation of Section 8(b) of RESPA. Appendix B of Regulation X provides guidance on the meaning and coverage of the prohibition against kickbacks and unearned fees.

RESPA Section 8(b) is not violated when a single party charges and retains a settlement service fee, and that fee is unearned or excessive.

Penalties and Liabilities

Civil and criminal liability is provided for violating the prohibition against kickbacks and unearned fees including:

- Civil liability to the parties affected, equal to three times the amount of any charge paid for such settlement service.
- The possibility that the costs associated with any court proceeding together with reasonable attorney's fees could be recovered.
- A fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year or both.

Affiliated Business Arrangements – 12 CFR 1024.15

If a loan originator (or an associate)¹⁴ has either an affiliate relationship or a direct or beneficial ownership interest of more than one percent in a provider of settlement services and the loan originator directly or indirectly refers business to the provider it is an affiliated business arrangement. An affiliated business arrangement is not a violation of Section 8 of RESPA and of 12 CFR 1024.14 of Regulation X if the following conditions are satisfied.

Prior to the referral, the person making each referral has provided to each person whose business is referred an Affiliated Business Arrangement Disclosure Statement (Appendix D of Regulation X). This disclosure shall specify the following:

- The nature of the relationship (explaining the ownership and financial interest) between the provider and the loan originator; and ¹⁴ An associate includes a corporation or business entity that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the institution; an employer, officer, director, partner, franchisor, or franchisee of the institution; or anyone with an arrangement with the institution that enables the person to refer settlement business and benefit financially from the referrals. 12 U.S.C. 2602(8).

V. Lending — RESPA

- The estimated charge or range of charges generally made by such provider.

This disclosure must be provided on a separate piece of paper either at the time of loan application, or with the GFE, or at the time of the referral.

The loan originator may not require the use of such a provider, with the following exceptions: the institution may require a buyer, borrower, or seller to pay for the services of an attorney, credit reporting agency, or real estate appraiser chosen by the institution to represent its interest. The loan originator may only receive a return on ownership or franchise interest or payment otherwise permitted by RESPA.

Title Insurance Companies – 12 CFR 1024.16

Sellers that hold legal title to the property being sold are prohibited from requiring borrowers, either directly or indirectly, as a condition to selling the property, to use a particular title insurance company.

Escrow Accounts – 12 CFR 1024.17

On October 26, 1994, HUD issued its final rule changing the accounting method for escrow accounts, which was originally effective April 24, 1995. The final rule established a national standard accounting method, known as aggregate accounting. The final rule also established formats and procedures for initial and annual escrow account statements.

The amount of escrow funds that can be collected at settlement or upon creation of an escrow account is restricted to an amount sufficient to pay charges, such as taxes and insurance, that are attributable to the period from the date such payments were last paid until the initial payment date. Throughout the life of an escrow account, the servicer may charge the borrower a monthly sum equal to one-twelfth of the total annual escrow payments that the servicer reasonably anticipates paying from the account. In addition, the servicer may add an amount to maintain a cushion no greater than one-sixth of the estimated total annual payments from the account.

Starting April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat a confirmed successor in interest as a borrower for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.17 and for Subpart C's provisions.

Escrow Account Analysis – 12 CFR 1024.17(c)(2) and (3) and 12 CFR 1024.17(k)

Before establishing an escrow account, a servicer must conduct an analysis to determine the periodic payments and the amount to be deposited. The servicer shall use an escrow disbursement date that is on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty and may make annual lump sum payments to take advantage of a discount.

Transfer of Servicing – 12 CFR 1024.17(e)

If the new servicer changes either the monthly payment amount or the accounting method used by the old servicer, then it must provide the borrower with an initial escrow account statement within 60 days of the date of transfer. When the new servicer provides an initial escrow account statement, it shall use the effective date of the transfer of servicing to establish the new escrow account computation year. In addition, if the new servicer retains the monthly payments and accounting method used by the old servicer, then the new servicer may continue to use the same computation year established by the old servicer or it may choose a different one, using a short year statement.

Shortages, Surpluses, and Deficiency Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.17(f)

The servicer shall conduct an annual escrow account analysis to determine whether a surplus, shortage, or deficiency exists as defined under 12 CFR 1024.17(b).

If the escrow account analysis discloses a surplus, the servicer shall, within 30 days from the date of the analysis, refund the surplus to the borrower if the surplus is greater than or equal to $50. If the surplus is less than $50, the servicer may refund such amount to the borrower, or credit such amount against the next year's escrow payments. These provisions apply as long as the borrower's mortgage payment is current at the time of the escrow account analysis.

If the escrow account analysis discloses a shortage of less than one month's escrow payments, then the servicer has three possible courses of action:

- The servicer may allow the shortage to exist and do nothing to change it,
- The servicer may require the borrower to repay the shortage amount within 30 days, or
- The servicer may require the borrower to repay the shortage amount in equal monthly payments over at least a 12-month period.

If the shortage is more than or equal to one month's escrow payment, then the servicer has two possible courses of action:

- The servicer may allow the shortage to exist and do nothing to change it, or
- The servicer may require the borrower to repay the shortage in equal monthly payments over at least a 12-month period.

If the escrow account analysis discloses a deficiency, then the servicer may require the borrower to pay additional monthly deposits to the account to eliminate the deficiency.

If the deficiency is less than one month's escrow account payment, then the servicer:

- May allow the deficiency to exist and do nothing to change it,
- May require the borrower to repay the deficiency within 30 days, or
- May require the borrower to repay the deficiency in two or more equal monthly payments.

If the deficiency is greater than or equal to one month's escrow payment, the servicer may allow the deficiency to exist and do nothing to change it, or require the borrower to repay the deficiency in two or more equal monthly payments.

These provisions apply as long as the borrower's mortgage payment is current at the time of the escrow account analysis.

A servicer must notify the borrower at least once during the escrow account computation year if a shortage or deficiency exists in the account.

Initial Escrow Account Statement – 12 CFR 1024.17(g)

After analyzing each escrow account, the servicer must submit an initial escrow account statement to the borrower at settlement or within 45 calendar days of settlement for escrow accounts that are established as a condition of the loan.

The initial escrow account statement must include the monthly mortgage payment; the portion going to escrow; itemize estimated taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges; the anticipated disbursement dates of those charges; the amount of the cushion; and a trial running balance.

Annual Escrow Account Statement – 12 CFR 1024.17(i)

A servicer shall submit to the borrower an annual statement for each escrow account within 30 days of the completion of the computation year. The servicer must conduct an escrow account analysis before submitting an annual escrow account statement to the borrower.

The annual escrow account statements must contain the account history; projections for the next year; current mortgage payment and portion going to escrow; amount of past year's monthly mortgage payment and portion that went into the escrow account; total amount paid into the escrow account during the past year; amount paid from the account for taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges; balance at the end of the period; explanation of how the surplus, shortage, or deficiency is being handled; and, if applicable, the reasons why the estimated low monthly balance was not reached.

Short-Year Statements – 12 CFR 1024.17(i)(4)

Short-year statements can be issued to end the escrow account computation year and establish the beginning date of the new computation year. Short-year statements may be provided upon the transfer of servicing and are required upon loan payoff. The statement is due to the borrower within 60 days after receiving the pay-off funds.

Timely Payments – 12 CFR 1024.17(k)

The servicer must pay escrow disbursements by the disbursement date. In calculating the disbursement date, the servicer must use a date on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty and may make annual lump sum payments to take advantage of a discount. A servicer may not purchase force-placed insurance unless it is unable to disburse funds from the borrower's escrow account to maintain the borrower's hazard insurance. A servicer is unable to disburse funds only if the servicer has a reasonable basis to believe that either the borrower's property is vacant or the borrower's hazard insurance has terminated for reasons other than non-payment. A servicer is not unable to disburse funds from the borrower's escrow account solely because the account is deficient. If a servicer advances funds to an escrow account to ensure that the borrower's hazard insurance premium charges are paid in a timely manner, a servicer may seek repayment from the borrower for the funds the servicer advanced, unless otherwise prohibited by applicable law.

Regulation X includes a limited exemption from the restriction on force-placed insurance purchases for small servicers. Subject to the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.37, small servicers may purchase force-placed insurance and charge the borrower for the cost of that insurance if the cost to the borrower is less than the amount the small servicer would need to disburse from the borrower's escrow account to ensure timely payment of the borrower's hazard insurance premium charges.

An institution qualifies as a small servicer under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) if:

- The institution services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee;
- The institution is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5 (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)); or
- The institution is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(I)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor.

The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

List of Homeownership Counseling Organizations – 12 CFR 1024.20

For any application for a federally related mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.2 subject to the exemptions in 12 CFR 1024.5(b) (except for applications for reverse mortgages or timeshare loans), the lender must provide a loan applicant with a clear and conspicuous written list of homeownership counseling services in the loan applicant's location, no later than three business days after a lender, mortgage broker, or dealer receives an application or information sufficient to complete an application. The list is available on a website maintained by the CFPB, or from data made available by the CFPB or HUD. Lenders must make sure that the list of homeownership counseling services was obtained no earlier than 30 days before they provide it to the applicant. This list may be combined with other disclosures (unless otherwise prohibited by Regulation X or Regulation Z). A mortgage broker or dealer that receives a loan application, or for whom it prepares an application, may provide the list, in which case the lender is not required to provide an additional list, though in all cases the lender remains responsible for ensuring that the list is provided to the applicant. The list may be provided in person, by mail or other means. The list may be provided in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of E-Sign.

If, before the three-day period ends, the lender denies the application or the applicant withdraws it, the lender does not have to provide the list. If the transaction involves more than one lender, the lenders should agree on which of them will provide the list. If there is more than one applicant, the list can go to any one of them that has primary liability on the loan.

Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing

Scope – 12 CFR 1024.30

Except as otherwise noted below, the provisions of Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing, 12 CFR 1024.30-41, apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31. The procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.39 through 1024.41 regarding early intervention, continuity of contact, and loss mitigation only apply to a mortgage loan secured by a property that is the borrower's principal residence. If a property ceases to be a borrower's principal residence, the procedures set forth in the early intervention provisions (12 CFR 1024.39), the continuity of contact provisions (12 CFR 1024.40), and the loss mitigation provisions (12 CFR 1024.41) do not apply to the mortgage loan secured by the property. (Comment 30(c)(2)-1). The determination of principal residence status will depend on the specific facts and circumstances regarding the property and applicable state law. For example, a vacant property may still be a borrower's principal residence. (Comment 30(c)(2)-1).

Starting April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat a confirmed successor in interest as a borrower under Subpart C's provisions and under the escrow account requirements in 12 CFR 1024.17. Further, a servicer that is a debt collector under the FDCPA with respect to a mortgage loan does not violate the FDCPA Section 805(b)'s prohibition on communicating with third parties by communicating with a confirmed successor in interest in compliance with the mortgage servicing rules because "consumer" for purposes of FDCPA Section 805 includes any person who meets the definition in this part of confirmed successor in interest. (Comment 30(d)-1).¹⁵

Definitions – 12 CFR 1024.31

Regulation X, 12 CFR 1024.31 contains definitions that are applicable to Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing, 12 CFR 1024.30-41. Among other definitions, Regulation X provides that "mortgage loan" means "any federally related mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.2 subject to the exemptions in 12 CFR 1024.5(b), but does not include open-end lines of credit (home equity plans)." Thus, the term "mortgage loan" includes (but is not limited to) refinancing transactions, whether secured by a senior or subordinate lien.

The 2016 Servicing Rule establishes definitions of "successor in interest" and "confirmed successors in interest," and provides that the latter are considered "borrowers" for the purposes of Regulation X's mortgage servicing provisions. The 2016 Servicing Rule also adds a new definition of "delinquency."

Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

"Successor in interest" means a person to whom an ownership interest in a property securing a mortgage loan if the transfer is:

- (1) A transfer by devise, descent, or operation of law on the death of a joint tenant or tenant by the entirety;
- (2) A transfer to a relative resulting from the death of a borrower;
- (3) A transfer where the spouse or children of the borrower become an owner of the property;
- (4) A transfer resulting from a decree of a dissolution of marriage, legal separation agreement, or from an incidental property settlement agreement, by which the spouse of the borrower becomes an owner of the property; or
- (5) A transfer into an inter vivos trust in which the borrower is and remains a beneficiary and which does not relate to a transfer of rights of occupancy in the property.

"Confirmed successor in interest" means a successor in interest once a servicer has confirmed the successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in a property that secures a mortgage loan subject to Subpart C of Regulation X.

Delinquency

The definition of "delinquency" applies to the servicing provisions in Subpart C of Regulation X and the provisions regarding periodic statements for mortgage loans in Regulation Z.¹⁶ Under the definition, a borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent beginning on the date a payment sufficient to cover principal, interest, and, if applicable, escrow, becomes due and unpaid, and the borrower remains delinquent until such time as no periodic payment is due and unpaid (even if the borrower is afforded a period after the due date to pay before the servicer assesses a late fee).

If a servicer applies payments to the oldest outstanding payment, a payment by a delinquent borrower advances the date the borrower's delinquency began. For example, assume a borrower's mortgage loan requires borrower to make periodic payments of principal, interest, and escrow by the first of each month. The borrower fails to make a payment on January 1 or on any day in January, and on January 31 the borrower is 30 days delinquent. On February 3, the borrower makes a periodic payment. The servicer applies the payment it received on February 3 to the outstanding January payment. On February 4, the borrower is three days delinquent. (Comment 31-2).

Further, if a servicer chooses to accept a payment that is less than the periodic payment due without considering the borrower delinquent for purposes of any provisions in Subpart C, the borrower is not delinquent for any other provisions in the Subpart. (Comment 31-3).¹⁷

¹⁶ For purposes of periodic statements for residential mortgage loans under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.41(d)(8), the length of a consumer's delinquency is measured as of the date of the periodic statement or the date of the written notice provided under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(3)(iv). A consumer's delinquency begins on the date an amount sufficient to cover a periodic payment of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, becomes due and unpaid, even if the consumer is afforded a period after the due date to pay before the servicer assesses a late fee. A consumer is delinquent if one or more periodic payments of principal, interest, and escrow, if applicable, are due and unpaid. (Comment 1026.41(d)(8)-1).

General Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.32

Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.32(a)

Disclosures required under 12 CFR 1024.30-41 must be clear and conspicuous, in writing, and in a form that a recipient may keep. The disclosures may be provided in electronic form, subject to consumer consent and the provisions of E-Sign,¹⁸ and a servicer may use commonly accepted or readily understandable abbreviations. Disclosures may be made in a language other than English, provided that they are made in English upon a recipient's request.

Additional Information, Disclosures Required by Other Laws – 12 CFR 1024.32(b)

Servicers may include additional information in disclosures required under 12 CFR 1024.30-41 or combine these disclosures with any disclosure required by other law unless doing so is expressly prohibited by 12 CFR 1024.30-41, by other applicable law (such as TILA or the Truth in Savings Act), or by the terms of an agreement with a federal or state regulatory agency.

Successors in Interest – 12 CFR 1024.32(c) (Effective April 19, 2018)

Under 12 CFR 1024.32(c), servicers have the option to provide a written notice and acknowledgment form to confirmed successors in interest who have not assumed the mortgage loan and are not otherwise liable on it. Among other things, the written notice must explain that the confirmed successor in interest may be entitled to receive certain notices and communications about the mortgage loan if the servicer is not providing them to another confirmed successor in interest or borrower on the account. The notice also must explain that in order to receive such notices and communications, the successor in interest must execute and provide to the servicer the acknowledgment form.

Servicers that send this type of notice and acknowledgement form are not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1024.17, 1024.33, 1024.34, 1024.37, or 1024.39, or to comply with the live contact loan contract to accelerate payment for a breach of that contract. Failure to pay the amount due after the creditor accelerates the mortgage loan obligation in accordance with the mortgage loan contract would begin or continue delinquency. (Comment 31-4).

requirements in 12 CFR 1024.39(a) with respect to the confirmed successor in interest until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan or executes the acknowledgment form.

Regardless of whether the confirmed successor in interest executes the acknowledgment form, the written notice must state the successor in interest is entitled to submit notices of error under 12 CFR 1024.35, requests for information under 12 CFR 1024.36, and requests for a payoff statement under 12 CFR 1026.36 with respect to the mortgage loan account, and the notice must include a brief explanation of those rights and how to exercise them, including appropriate address information.

Furthermore, except as required by 12 CFR 1024.36, a servicer is not required to provide to a confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1024.17, 1024.33, 1024.34, 1024.37, or 1024.39(b) if the servicer is providing the same specific disclosure to another borrower on the account. A servicer is also not required to comply with the live contact requirements in 12 CFR 1024.39(a) with respect to a confirmed successor in interest if the servicer is complying with those requirements with respect to another borrower on the account. A confirmed successor in interest who does not receive servicing communications because the servicer is providing them to another borrower on the account can request additional information as needed through the request for information process under Regulation X.

Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.33

The disclosures related to the transfer of mortgage servicing generally are required for any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, except that the servicing disclosure statement required under 12 CFR 1024.33(a) is required only for reverse mortgage transactions.

Servicing Disclosure Statement – 12 CFR 1024.33(a)

A lender, mortgage broker who anticipates using table funding, or dealer in a first-lien dealer loan that receives an application for a reverse mortgage transaction is required to provide the servicing disclosure statement to the borrower within three days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receipt of the application. The disclosure statement must advise whether the servicing of the mortgage loan may be assigned, sold, or transferred to any other person at any time. A model disclosure statement is set forth in Appendix MS-1.

If the institution denies the borrower's application within the three-day period, it is not required to provide the disclosure statement.

Notices of Transfer of Loan Servicing – 12 CFR 1024.33(b)

When any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, is assigned, sold or transferred, the transferor (former servicer) generally must provide a disclosure at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Generally, a transfer of servicing notice from the transferee (new servicer) must be provided not more than 15 days after the effective date of the transfer. Generally, both notices may be combined into one notice if delivered to the borrower at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Notices provided at the time of settlement satisfy the timing requirements.

The disclosure must include:

- The effective date of the transfer;
- The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferee servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries;
- The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferor servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries;
- The date on which the transferor servicer will cease accepting payments relating to the loan, and the date on which the transferee servicer will begin to accept such payments. The dates must be either the same or consecutive dates;
- Whether the transfer will affect the terms or the availability of optional insurance and any action the borrower must take to maintain such coverage; and
- A statement that the transfer does not affect the terms or conditions of the mortgage (except as directly related to servicing).

Servicers may use the disclosure in Appendix MS-2 to comply with the mortgage servicing transfer disclosure.

The following transfers are not considered an assignment, sale, or transfer of mortgage loan servicing for purposes of this requirement if there is no change in the payee, address to which payment must be delivered, account number, or amount of payment due:

- Transfers between affiliates;

- Transfers resulting from mergers or acquisitions of servicers or subservicers; and
- Transfers between master servicers, when the subservicer remains the same.

Additionally, the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) is not required to provide a notice of transfer to the borrower where a mortgage insured under the National Housing Act is assigned to FHA.

Borrower Payments During Transfer of Servicing – 12 CFR 1024.33(c)

During the 60-day period beginning on the date of transfer, no late fee or other penalty can be imposed on a borrower who has made a timely payment to the transferor servicer (former servicer). Additionally, if the transferor servicer (former servicer) receives any incorrect payments on or after the effective date of the transfer, the transferor servicer must either transfer the payment to the transferee servicer (new servicer) or return the payment and inform the payor of the proper recipient of the payment.

Timely Escrow Payments and Treatment of Escrow Account Balances – 12 CFR 1024.34

Servicers must comply with requirements concerning the treatment of escrow funds, which apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

If the terms of a mortgage loan require the borrower to make payments to the servicer for deposit into an escrow account to pay taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges, the servicer shall make payments from the escrow account in a timely manner. A payment is made in a timely manner if it is made on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty.

Generally, the servicer must return any amounts remaining in escrow within the servicer’s control within 20 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after the borrower pays the mortgage loan in full, unless the borrower and servicer agree to credit the remaining funds towards an escrow account for certain new mortgage loans. The rule does not prohibit servicers from netting any funds remaining in an escrow account against the outstanding balance of the borrower’s mortgage loan.

Error Resolution Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.35

Servicers must comply with error resolution procedures that are triggered when a borrower submits an error notice to the servicer. The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.35 apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

V. Lending — RESPA

The CFPB has issued an advisory opinion clarifying that, because borrowers initiate the error resolution process, a servicer's communications with a borrower regarding an error notice are not subject to the "cease communication" provision of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) unless the borrower specifically withdraws the request for action regarding the error.¹⁹

Notice of Error – 12 CFR 1024.35(a)

An error notice must be in writing and identify the borrower's name, information that allows the servicer to identify the borrower's account, and the alleged error. A qualified written request that asserts an error relating to the servicing of a mortgage loan is an error notice, and the servicer must comply with all of the error notice requirements with respect to such qualified written request.

The commentary clarifies that a servicer should not rely solely on the borrower's description of a submission to determine whether it is an error notice, an information request, or both. For example, a borrower may submit a letter titled "Notice of Error" that indicates that the borrower wants to receive the information set forth in an annual escrow account statement and asserts an error for the servicer's failure to provide that statement. Such a letter could be both an error notice and an information request, and the servicer must evaluate whether the letter fulfills the substantive requirements of an error notice, information request, or both.

Scope of Error Resolution – 12 CFR 1024.35(b)

The error resolution procedures apply to the following alleged errors:

- Failure to accept a payment that complies with the servicer's written requirements;
- Failure to apply an accepted payment to principal, interest, escrow, or other charges as required by the mortgage loan and applicable law;
- Failure to credit a payment to the borrower's account as of the date the servicer received it, as required by 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(1);
- Failure to pay taxes, insurance premiums, or other charges by the due date, as required by 12 CFR 1024.34(a);

- Failure to refund an escrow account balance within 20 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after the borrower pays the mortgage loan in full, as required by 12 CFR 1024.34(b);
- Imposition of a fee or charge without a reasonable basis to do so;
- Failure to provide an accurate payoff balance amount upon the borrower's request, as required by 12 CFR 1026.36(c)(3);
- Failure to provide accurate information to a borrower regarding loss mitigation options and foreclosure, as required by 12 CFR 1024.39;
- Failure to transfer accurate and timely information relating to servicing to a transferee servicer;
- Making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process before the time periods allowed by 12 CFR 1024.41(f) and (j);
- Moving for foreclosure judgment or order of sale or conducting a foreclosure sale in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(g) or (j); and
- Any other error relating to the servicing of a borrower's mortgage loan.

The commentary gives examples of errors not covered by 12 CFR 1024.35(b), such as errors relating to: (i) the origination of a mortgage loan; (ii) the underwriting of a mortgage loan; (iii) a subsequent sale or securitization of a mortgage loan; and (iv) a determination to sell, assign, or transfer the servicing of a mortgage loan (unless it concerns the failure to transfer accurate and timely information relating to the servicing of the borrower's mortgage loan account to a transferee servicer).

Contact Information – 12 CFR 1024.35(c)

If the servicer establishes an address to which borrowers must send error notices, the servicer must provide written notice of the address to the borrower with specified content. The commentary states that the servicer must also include this address on the following communications: (i) any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41; (ii) any website the servicer maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and (iii) any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or 12 CFR 1024.41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance. The servicer must use the same address for receiving information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36(b), and provide written notice to the borrower before changing the address to which the borrower must send error notices.

¹⁹ CFPB Bulletin 2013-12.

Acknowledgement of Receipt – 12 CFR 1024.35(d)

The servicer generally must provide a written acknowledgment to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the error notice.

Response to an Error Notice – 12 CFR 1024.35(e)

A servicer generally has 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) from receipt of the error notice to investigate and respond to the notice, except that a servicer may extend this period by an additional 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) if, prior to the expiration of the original 30-day period, it notifies the borrower in writing of the extension and the reasons for it.

A servicer must respond within seven days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) if the alleged error is a failure to provide an accurate payoff balance amount, and a servicer must respond by the earlier of 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) or the date of a foreclosure sale if the error involves either (i) making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process before the time periods allowed by 12 CFR 1024.41(f) or (j), or (ii) moving for foreclosure judgment or order of sale or conducting a foreclosure sale in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(g) or (j).

In response to the notice of error, the servicer must either correct the error or conduct a reasonable investigation and determine that no error occurred. The servicer must also send a written response to the borrower that accomplishes one of the following:

- If the servicer corrects the alleged error. The servicer must advise the borrower of the correction and when the correction took effect, and provide contact information, including phone number, for further assistance;
- If the servicer determines that it committed an error or errors different than or in addition to those identified by the borrower. The servicer must correct the error and advise the borrower of the correction and when the correction took effect, and provide contact information, including phone number, for further assistance; or
- If the servicer determines after a reasonable investigation that no error occurred. The servicer must state that it determined that no error occurred, the reasons for its determination, and the borrower's right to request documents relied upon by the servicer in reaching its determination and how the borrower can make such a request, and provide contact information, including phone number, for further assistance. If the borrower requests those documents, the servicer generally must provide them within 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) at no cost to the borrower. The servicer need not provide documents that constitute confidential, proprietary, or privileged information.

Furthermore, servicers responding to a notice of error request for documentation may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (Effective April 19, 2018).

As a part of its investigation of the asserted error, the servicer may request supporting documentation from the borrower, but the servicer must conduct a reasonable investigation even if the borrower does not provide supporting documentation.

Early Correction or Error Asserted Before Foreclosure Sale – 12 CFR 1024.35(f)

A servicer is not required to provide the five-day acknowledgement notice (12 CFR 1024.35(d)) or the response notice (12 CFR 1024.35(e)) if either:

- The servicer corrects the asserted errors and notifies the borrower of the correction within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the error notice; or
- The servicer receives the error notice seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale and the asserted error concerns the timing of the foreclosure process under 12 CFR 1024.35(b)(9) or (10). In this instance, the servicer must make a good faith attempt to respond to the borrower, either orally or in writing, and either correct the error or state the reason the servicer has determined that no error occurred.

Requirements Not Applicable – 12 CFR 1024.35(g)

A servicer does not need to provide the five-day acknowledgement notice (12 CFR 1024.35(d)), provide the response notice (12 CFR 1024.35(e)), or refrain from providing adverse information to credit reporting agencies for 60 days (12 CFR 1024.35(i)), if the servicer reasonably determines any of the following apply:

- Duplicative notice of error. The asserted error is substantially the same as a previously-asserted error for which the servicer complied with the obligation to respond, unless the borrower provides new and material information to support the asserted error. New and material information is information that is reasonably likely to change the servicer's prior determination about the error;

- Overbroad notice of error. The error notice is overbroad if the servicer cannot reasonably determine the specific alleged error. The commentary provides examples of overbroad notices, including those that assert errors regarding substantially all aspects of the mortgage loan (including origination, servicing, and foreclosure), notices that resemble legal pleadings and demand a response to each numbered paragraph, or notices that are not reasonably understandable or contain voluminous tangential information such that a servicer cannot reasonably identify from the notice any error that requires a response. Note that if a servicer concludes an error notice as submitted is overbroad, the servicer must still provide a five-day acknowledgment notice and a subsequent response to the extent the servicer can identify an appropriate error notice within the submission; or
- Untimely notice of error. The error notice is sent more than one year after either the mortgage loan was discharged or the servicer receiving the notice of error transferred the mortgage loan to another servicer. For purposes of this provision, a mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

If a servicer determines that any of these three exceptions apply, it must provide written notice to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination, including the basis relied upon.

Payment Requirements Prohibited – 12 CFR 1024.35(h)

A servicer may not charge a fee or require a borrower to make any payments as a condition to responding to an error notice.

Effect on Servicer Remedies – 12 CFR 1024.35(i)

In the 60-day period after receiving an error notice, a servicer may not furnish adverse information to any consumer reporting agency regarding any payment that is the subject of the error notice.

Requests for Information – 12 CFR 1024.36

Servicers must follow certain procedures in response to a borrower's written request for information with respect to the borrower's mortgage loan. The request must include the borrower's name, information that allows the servicer to identify the borrower's account, and the requested information related to the borrower's mortgage loan. The request can be from the borrower or the borrower's agent; a servicer may undertake reasonable procedures to determine if an alleged agent has authority from the borrower to act as the borrower's agent. A qualified written request that requests information relating to the servicing of a mortgage loan is an information request, and the servicer must comply with all of the information request requirements with respect to such a qualified written request.

The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36 apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

The CFPB has issued an advisory opinion clarifying that, because borrowers initiate requests for information, a servicer's communications with a borrower regarding such a request for information are not subject to the FDCPA's "cease communication" provision, unless the borrower specifically withdraws the information request.²⁰

Contact Information – 12 CFR 1024.36(b)

If the servicer establishes an address to which borrowers must send information requests, the servicer must provide written notice of the address to the borrower with specified information. The commentary states that the servicer must also include this address on the following communications: (i) any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41; (ii) any website the servicer maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and (iii) any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or 12 CFR 1024.41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance. The servicer must use the same address for receiving error notices under 12 CFR 1024.35(b), and provide written notice to the borrower before changing the address to which the borrower must send information requests.

Acknowledgement of Receipt – 12 CFR 1024.36(c)

The servicer generally must provide a written acknowledgment to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the information request.

Response to Information Request – 12 CFR 1024.36(d)

A servicer generally must respond in writing to an information request within 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of receipt, except that a servicer may extend this period by an additional 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) if, prior to the expiration of the original 30-day period, it notifies the borrower in writing of the extension and the reasons for it. A servicer must respond within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the request, if the borrower requested the identity or contact information for the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan.

The servicer must respond in writing by either:

- Providing the requested information and contact information, including phone number, for further assistance; or
- Conducting a reasonable search for the information and advising the borrower that the servicer has determined that the requested information is not available to it, the basis for the servicer’s determination, and contact information, including phone number, for further assistance.

Information is not available if it is not in the servicer’s control or possession, or the servicer cannot retrieve it in the ordinary course of business through reasonable efforts. The commentary gives examples of when information is or is not available.

In its response to a request for information, a servicer may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(3)). (Effective April 19, 2018).

Early Response – 12 CFR 1024.36(e)

The five-day receipt acknowledgement (12 CFR 1024.36(c)) and the response (12 CFR 1024.36(d)) requirements do not apply if the servicer provides the requested information and contact information, including phone number, for further assistance within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the information request.

Requirement Not Applicable – 12 CFR 1024.36(f)

The five-day receipt acknowledgement (12 CFR 1024.36(c)) and the response notice (12 CFR 1024.36(d)) requirements also do not apply if the servicer reasonably determines any of the following exceptions apply:

- The information requested is substantially the same information that the borrower previously requested.
- The information requested is confidential, proprietary, or privileged.
- The information requested is not directly related to the borrower’s mortgage loan account. The commentary provides examples of irrelevant information, including information related to the servicing of mortgage loans other than the borrower’s loan and investor instructions or requirements for servicers regarding the negotiation or approval of loss mitigation options.
- The information request is overbroad or unduly burdensome. A request is overbroad if the borrower requests that the servicer provide an unreasonable volume of documents or information. A request is unduly burdensome if a diligent servicer could not respond within the time periods set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2) or would incur costs (or have to dedicate resources) that would be unreasonable in light of the circumstances. The commentary provides examples of overbroad or unduly burdensome requests, such as requests that seek documents relating to substantially all aspects of mortgage origination, mortgage servicing, mortgage sale or securitization, and foreclosure, as well as requests that require servicers to provide information in a specific format or seek information that is not reasonably likely to assist the borrower. If an information request as submitted is overbroad or unduly burdensome, the servicer must still provide the five-day acknowledgment of receipt and subsequent response if the servicer can reasonably identify an appropriate information request within the submission.
- The information request is sent more than one year after either the mortgage loan was discharged or the servicer receiving the information request transferred the mortgage loan to another servicer. For purposes of this provision, a mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

If a servicer determines that any of these five exceptions apply, it must provide written notice to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination, including the basis relied on.

Payment Requirement Limitations – 12 CFR 1024.36(g)

A servicer generally may not charge a fee, or require a borrower to make any payment that may be owed on a borrower's account, as a condition of responding to an information request. A servicer may charge for providing a beneficiary notice under applicable state law, if such a fee is not otherwise prohibited by applicable law.

Potential Successors in Interest – 12 CFR 1024.36(i) (Effective April 19, 2018)

A servicer must respond to a written request from a person indicating that the person may be a successor in interest if the request includes the name of the transferor borrower from whom the person received an ownership interest and information that enables the servicer to identify the mortgage loan. The response must generally provide a written description of the documents the servicer reasonably requires to confirm the person's identity and ownership interest in the property as well as contact information, including a telephone number, for further assistance. With respect to the written request, a servicer must treat the potential successor in interest as a borrower for the purposes of 12 CFR 1024.36(c) through 1024.36(g).

A servicer must respond to such a request not later than the time limits set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2) for information requests. Depending on the facts and circumstances of the request, responding promptly may require a servicer to respond more quickly than the time limits established in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2). (Comment 36(i)-2).

Under 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(1)(vi)(B), a servicer, other than a small servicer, must maintain policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to promptly facilitate communication with potential successors in interest and promptly confirm a potential successor in interest's identity and ownership interest in the property securing the mortgage loan.

Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37

Servicers must comply with restrictions on obtaining and assessing charges and fees for force-placed insurance, defined as hazard insurance that a servicer obtains on behalf of the owner or assignee to insure the property securing the mortgage loan (but does not include (i) flood insurance required by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, (ii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower's servicer in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.17(k)(1), (2), or (5), or (iii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower's servicer with the borrower's agreement). The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.37 apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

The CFPB has issued an advisory opinion clarifying that, because the Dodd-Frank Act specifically mandates certain disclosures regarding force-placed insurance without any mention of the FDCPA's "cease communication" provisions, a servicer acting as a debt collector does not violate the FDCPA's "cease communication" provision by providing the notices required under 12 CFR 1024.37.²¹

Requirements Before Charging For Force-placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(b), (c), (d)

Servicers may not assess charges or fees for force-placed insurance unless the servicer satisfies four requirements.

First, the servicer must have a reasonable basis to believe that the borrower has failed to maintain required hazard insurance. The commentary states that information about a borrower's hazard insurance received by the servicer from the borrower, the borrower's insurance provider, or the borrower's insurance agent, may provide a servicer with a reasonable basis. If a servicer receives no such information, the servicer may satisfy the reasonable basis standard if the servicer acts with reasonable diligence to ascertain the borrower's hazard insurance status and does not receive evidence of hazard insurance.

Second, the servicer must mail or deliver an initial written notice to the borrower at least 45 days before assessing a charge or fee related to force-placed insurance. The servicer's notice must identify the following:

- The date of the notice;
- The servicer's name and mailing address;

²¹ CFPB Bulletin 2013-12.

- The borrower’s name and mailing address;
- A statement requesting that the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower’s property and identifying the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the borrower’s hazard insurance has expired, is expiring, or provides insufficient coverage, as applicable; that the servicer lacks evidence that the borrower has hazard insurance coverage past the expiration date or lacks evidence of sufficient coverage, as applicable; and if applicable, identifies the type of hazard insurance lacking;
- A statement that hazard insurance is required on the borrower’s property and that the servicer has purchased or will purchase insurance at the borrower’s expense;
- A request that the borrower promptly provide the servicer with insurance information;
- A description of the requested insurance information and how the borrower may provide such information, and if applicable, that the requested information must be in writing;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
- The servicer’s phone number for borrower inquiries; and
- A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable).

The servicer cannot provide any information on the initial notice other than the specific statements listed above and, at the servicer’s option, the loan account number. The servicer, however, can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same mailing. Certain information must be provided in bold text. Appendix MS-3(A) contains a form notice that servicers may use.

Third, the servicer must send a reminder notice at least 30 days after the initial notice is mailed or delivered and at least 15 days before the servicer assesses charges or fees. If the servicer has received no hazard insurance information in response to the initial notice described above, the reminder notice must contain the date of the reminder notice and all of the other information provided in the initial notice, as well as (i) advise that it is a second and final notice, and (ii) identify the annual cost of force-placed insurance, or if unknown, a reasonable estimate of that cost.

If the servicer has received hazard insurance information but not evidence that sufficient coverage has been in place continuously, the reminder notice must identify the following:

- The date of the notice;
- The servicer’s name and mailing address;
- The borrower’s name and mailing address;
- A statement requesting that the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower’s property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
- The servicer’s phone number for borrower inquiries;
- A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable);
- A statement that it is the second and final notice;
- The annual cost of force-placed insurance, or if unknown, a reasonable estimate of that cost;
- A statement that the servicer has received the hazard insurance information that the borrower provided;
- A request that the borrower provide the missing information; and
- A statement that the borrower will be charged for insurance the servicer purchases during the time period in which the servicer cannot verify coverage.

The servicer cannot provide any additional information on the reminder notice other than specific statements listed above and, at the servicer’s option, the loan account number. The servicer, however, can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal. Certain information must be provided in bold text. Appendix MS-3 contains sample reminder notices at forms MS-3(B) and MS-3(C). If a servicer receives new information about a borrower’s hazard insurance after the required written notice has been put into production, the servicer is not required to update the notice if the written notice was put into production a reasonable time prior to the servicer delivering the notice to the borrower or placing the notice in the mail. For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.37(d)(5), five days (excluding legal holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) is a reasonable time.

V. Lending — RESPA

(Comment 37(d)(5)-1).

Fourth, by the end of the 15-day period beginning on the date the servicer delivers the reminder notice or places it in the mail, the servicer must not have received evidence that the borrower has had required hazard insurance continuously in place. As evidence, the servicer may require a copy of the borrower's hazard insurance policy declaration page, the borrower's insurance certificate, the borrower's insurance policy, or other similar forms of written confirmation.

Renewing Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(e)

A servicer must comply with two requirements before assessing charges or fees on a borrower to renew or replace existing force-placed insurance.

First, the servicer must provide written notice at least 45 days before assessing a premium charge or fee. This renewal notice must provide the following information:

- The date of the renewal notice;
- The servicer's name and mailing address;
- The borrower's name and mailing address;
- A request that the borrower update the hazard insurance information and that identifies the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the servicer previously purchased force-placed insurance at the borrower's expense because the servicer did not have evidence that the borrower had hazard insurance coverage;
- A statement that the force-placed insurance is expiring or has expired and that the servicer intends to renew or replace it because hazard insurance is required on the property;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower, and identifying the annual cost (or if unknown, a reasonable estimate) of force-placed insurance;
- A statement that if the borrower purchases hazard insurance, the borrower should promptly advise the servicer;
- A description of the requested insurance information and how the borrower may provide such information, and if applicable, that the requested information must be in writing;

- The servicer's telephone number for borrower inquiries; and
- A statement advising the borrower to review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable).

The servicer cannot provide any additional information on the renewal notice other than the specific statements listed above, and, at the servicer's option, the loan account number. The servicer, however, can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal. Certain information must be provided in bold text. Appendix MS-3(D) contains a form notice that servicers may use.

Second, by the end of the 45-day period beginning on the date the written notice was delivered or placed in the mail, the servicer must not have received evidence demonstrating that the borrower has purchased required hazard insurance coverage.

Notwithstanding these two requirements, if not prohibited by state or other applicable law, if the servicer receives evidence that the borrower lacked insurance for some period of time after the existing force-placed insurance expired, the servicer may promptly assess a premium charge or fee related to renewing or replacing the existing force-placed insurance for that period of time.

The servicer must mail or deliver the renewal notice before each anniversary of purchasing force-placed insurance, though the servicer need not send the renewal notice more than once per year.

Mailing the Notices – 12 CFR 1024.37(f)

If the servicer mails the initial notice, the reminder notice, or the renewal notice, the servicer must use at least first-class mail.

Canceling Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(g)

If the servicer receives evidence that the borrower has had required hazard insurance coverage in place, then the servicer has 15 days to cancel the force-placed insurance, refund force-placed insurance premium charges and fees for the period of overlapping insurance coverage, and remove all force-placed charges and fees from the borrower's account for that period.

Limitations on Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37(h)

All charges that a servicer assesses on a borrower related to force-placed insurance must be bona fide and reasonable, except for charges subject to state regulation and charges authorized by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973. A bona fide and reasonable charge is one that is reasonably related to the servicer's cost of providing the service and is not otherwise prohibited by law.

General Servicing Policies, Procedures, and Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.38

Servicers must maintain policies and procedures reasonably designed to achieve certain servicing-related objectives, and are subject to requirements regarding record retention and the ability to create servicing files.

These requirements apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, except that they do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5, or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(I)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor.²²

The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Qualified lenders are those defined to be qualified lenders under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and the Farm Credit Administration's accompanying regulations set forth at 12 CFR 617.7000 *et seq.*²³

Reasonable Policies and Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.38(a)

Servicers must maintain policies and procedures reasonably designed to meet the objectives identified in 12 CFR 1024.38(b). Servicers may determine the specific policies and procedures they will adopt and the methods for implementing them in light of the size, nature, and scope of the servicers' operations, including, for example, the volume and aggregate unpaid principal balance of mortgage loans serviced, the credit quality (including the default risk) of the mortgage loans serviced, and the servicer's history of consumer complaints. "Procedures" refer to the servicer's actual practices for achieving the objective.

Objectives – 12 CFR 1024.38(b)

Servicers are required to maintain policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to achieve the following objectives.

- I. Accessing and providing timely and accurate information.
The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can:
 - a. Provide accurate and timely disclosures to the borrower.
 - b. Investigate, respond to, and make corrections in response to borrowers' complaints. These policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can promptly obtain information from service providers to facilitate investigation and correction of errors resulting from actions of service providers.

²² The definition of small servicer is set forth at 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii).

²³ 12 CFR 617.7000 defines a qualified lender as (i) a system institution (except a bank for cooperatives) that extends credit to a farmer, rancher, or producer or harvester of aquatic products for any agricultural or aquatic purpose and other credit needs of the borrower, and (ii) other financing institutions with respect to loans discounted or pledged under section 1.7(b)(1)(B) of the Farm Credit Act.

V. Lending — RESPA

- c. Provide a borrower with accurate and timely information and documents in response to the borrower's request for information with respect to the borrower's mortgage loan.
