- It uses a process to ensure that it does not sell, rent, lease, purchase or use the national do-not-call database, or any part thereof, for any purpose except compliance with this section and any such state or federal law to prevent telephone solicitations to telephone numbers registered on the national database;
- It purchases access to the relevant do-not-call data from the administrator of the national database and does not participate in any arrangement to share the cost of accessing the national database, including any arrangement with telemarketers who may not divide the costs to access the national database among various client sellers; or
- It has obtained the subscriber's prior express invitation or permission. Such permission must be evidenced by a signed, written agreement between the consumer and seller which states that the consumer agrees to be contacted by this seller and includes the telephone number to which the calls may be placed; or
- The telemarketer making the call has a personal relationship with the recipient of the call.

Company-Specific Do-Not-Call Lists, Mandatory Procedures, and Opt-Out Requests (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(d))

No person or entity shall initiate any call for telemarketing purposes to a residential telephone subscriber or wireless telephone subscriber²⁵ unless such person or entity has instituted procedures for maintaining a list of persons who request not to receive telemarketing calls made by or on behalf of that person or entity.²⁶ The procedures instituted must meet the following minimum standards:

- Persons or entities making calls for telemarketing purposes must have a written policy, available upon demand, for maintaining a do-not-call list;
- Personnel engaged in any aspect of telemarketing must be informed and trained in the existence and use of the do-not-call list;
- If a person or entity making a call for telemarketing purposes (or on whose behalf such a call is made) receives a request from a residential telephone subscriber or wireless telephone subscriber not to receive calls from that person or entity, the person or entity must record the request and place the subscriber's name, if provided, and telephone number on the do-not-call list at the time the request is made.²⁷ Persons or entities making calls for telemarketing purposes (or on whose behalf such calls are made) must honor a residential subscriber's or wireless telephone subscriber's do-not-call request within a reasonable time from the date such request is made. This period may not exceed 30 days from the date of such request. If such requests are recorded or maintained by a party other than the person or entity on whose behalf the telemarketing call is made, the person or entity on whose behalf the telemarketing call is made will be liable for any failures to honor the do-not-call request. A person or entity making a call for telemarketing purposes must obtain a consumer's prior express permission to share or forward the consumer's request not to be called to a party other than the person or entity on whose behalf a telemarketing call is made or an affiliated entity;
- A person or entity making a call for telemarketing purposes must provide the called party with the name of the individual caller, the name of the person or entity on whose behalf the call is being made, and a telephone number or address at which the person or entity may be contacted. The telephone number provided may not be a 900 number or any other number for which charges exceed local or long distance transmission charges;

²⁶ 47 C.F.R. § 64.1100(h). The term subscriber is any one of the following: (1) The party identified in the account records of a common carrier as responsible for payment of the telephone bill; (2) Any adult person authorized by such party to change telecommunications services or to charge services to the account; or (3) Any person contractually or otherwise lawfully authorized to represent such party.

- In the absence of a specific request by the subscriber to the contrary, a residential subscriber's or wireless telephone subscriber's do-not-call request shall apply to the particular business entity making the call (or on whose behalf a call is made), and will not apply to affiliated entities unless the consumer reasonably would expect them to be included given the identification of the caller and the product being advertised; and
- A person or entity making calls for telemarketing purposes must maintain a record of a consumer's request not to receive further telemarketing calls. A do-not-call request must be honored for 5 years from the time the request is made.

Tax-exempt nonprofit organizations are not required to comply with provisions contained within this Mandatory Procedures, Company-Specific Do-Not-Call Lists, and Opt-Out Requests section.

Other Restrictions on Calls

Simultaneous Engagement of Multi-line Businesses (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(5))

No person or entity may use an automatic telephone dialing system in such a way that two or more telephone lines of a multi-line business are engaged simultaneously.

Disconnected Calls (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(6))

No person or entity may disconnect an unanswered telemarketing call prior to at least 15 seconds or four (4) rings.

Abandoned Calls (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(7))

No person or entity may abandon more than three percent of all telemarketing calls that are answered live by a person, as measured over a 30-day period for a single calling campaign. If a single calling campaign exceeds a 30-day period, the abandonment rate shall be calculated separately for each successive 30-day period or portion thereof that such calling campaign continues. A call is "abandoned" if it is not connected to a live sales representative within two (2) seconds of the called person's completed greeting.

Whenever a live sales representative is not available to speak with the person answering the call, within two (2) seconds after the called person's completed greeting, the telemarketer or the seller must provide:

- A prerecorded identification and opt-out message that is limited to disclosing that the call was for "telemarketing purposes" and states the name of the business, entity, or individual on whose behalf the call was placed, and a telephone number for such business, entity, or individual that permits the called person to make a do-not-call request during regular business hours for the duration of the telemarketing campaign; provided, that, such telephone number may not be a 900 number or any other number for which charges exceed local or long distance transmission charges; and
- An automated, interactive voice- and/or key press-activated opt-out mechanism that enables the called person to make a do-not-call request prior to terminating the call, including brief explanatory instructions on how to use such mechanism. When the called person elects to opt-out using such mechanism, the mechanism must automatically record the called person's number to the seller's do-not-call list and immediately terminate the call.

A call for telemarketing purposes that delivers an artificial or prerecorded voice message to a residential telephone line or to any of the lines or telephone numbers described in the Prohibition on Autodialed or Prerecorded Calls to Sensitive Numbers and Cell Phones section above (*General Prohibition*²⁸) after the subscriber to such line has granted prior express written consent for the call to be made shall not be considered an abandoned call if the message begins within two (2) seconds of the called person's completed greeting.

The seller or telemarketer must maintain records establishing compliance with this Abandoned Calls section. Calls made by or on behalf of tax-exempt nonprofit organizations are not covered by the provisions in this Abandoned Calls section.

No person or entity may use any technology to dial any telephone number for the purpose of determining whether the line is a facsimile or voice line.

Calls Made by Financial Institutions²⁹ (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(9)(iii))

A person or entity will not be liable for making any telephone call³⁰ using an automatic telephone dialing system or an artificial or prerecorded voice; to any telephone number assigned to a paging service, cellular telephone service, specialized mobile radio service, or other radio common carrier service, or any service for which the called party is charged for the call; provided that the call is not charged to the called person or counted against the called person's plan limits on minutes or texts and all of the following conditions are met:

Voice calls and text messages:

- Must be sent only to the wireless telephone number provided by the customer of the financial institution;
- Must state the name and contact information of the financial institution (for voice calls, these disclosures must be made at the beginning of the call);
- Are strictly limited to those for the following purposes: transactions and events that suggest a risk of fraud or identity theft; possible breaches of the security of customers' personal information; steps consumers can take to prevent or remedy harm caused by data security breaches; and actions needed to arrange for receipt of pending money transfers;
- Must not include any telemarketing, cross-marketing, solicitation, debt collection, or advertising content; and
- Must be concise, generally one minute or less in length for voice calls (unless more time is needed to obtain customer responses or answer customer questions) or 160 characters or less in length for text messages.

A financial institution:

- May initiate no more than three messages (whether by voice call or text message) per event over a three-day period for an affected account;
- Must offer recipients within each message an easy means to opt out of future such messages; voice calls that could be answered by a live person must include an automated, interactive voice- and/or key press-activated opt-out mechanism that enables the call recipient to make an opt-out request prior to terminating the call; voice calls that could be answered by an answering machine or voice mail service must include a toll-free number that the consumer can call to opt out of future calls; text messages must inform recipients of the ability to opt out by replying "STOP," which will be the exclusive means by which consumers may opt out of such messages; and,
- Must honor opt-out requests immediately.

Calling Times (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(c)(1))

No person or entity shall initiate any telephone solicitation to any residential telephone subscriber before the hour of 8 a.m. or after 9 p.m. (local time at the called party's location).

Caller ID Information and Blocking (47 C.F.R. § 64.1601(e))

Any person or entity that engages in telemarketing, as defined³¹ in the TCPA regulations and reiterated in the Key Definitions section above, must transmit caller identification information. Caller identification information must include either the calling party number or the automatic numbering information, and, when available by the telemarketer's carrier, the name of the telemarketer. It shall not be a violation of this paragraph to substitute (for the name and phone number used in, or billed for, making the call) the name of the seller on behalf of which the telemarketing call is placed and the seller's customer service telephone number. The telephone number so provided must permit any individual to make a do-not-call request during regular business hours. The person or entity engaging in telemarketing is also prohibited from blocking the transmission of caller identification information.

Tax-exempt nonprofit organizations are not required to comply with this Caller ID Information and Blocking section.

Prohibitions on Use of Telephone Fax Machine, Computer, or Other Device to Send Unsolicited Advertisement to a Telephone Fax Machine (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4))

General Prohibitions and Notification Requirements (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(i) through (iii))

No person or entity may use a telephone facsimile machine, computer, or other device to send an unsolicited advertisement to a telephone facsimile machine, unless:

- The unsolicited advertisement is from a sender with an established business relationship, as defined in the Key Definitions section above,³² with the recipient; and
- The sender obtained the number of the telephone facsimile machine through:
 - The voluntary communication of such number by the recipient directly to the sender, within the context of such established business relationship; or
 - A directory, advertisement, or site on the Internet to which the recipient voluntarily agreed to make available its facsimile number for public distribution. If a sender obtains the facsimile number from the recipient's own directory, advertisement, or Internet site, it will be presumed that the number was voluntarily made available for public distribution, unless such materials explicitly note that unsolicited advertisements are not accepted at the specified facsimile number. If a sender obtains the facsimile number from other sources, the sender must take reasonable steps to verify that the recipient agreed to make the number available for public distribution,³³ and

- The advertisement contains a notice that informs the recipient of the ability and means to avoid future unsolicited advertisements. A notice contained in an advertisement complies with the requirements only if:
 - The notice is clear and conspicuous and on the first page of the advertisement;
 - The notice states that the recipient may make a request to the sender of the advertisement not to send any future advertisements to a telephone facsimile machine or machines and that failure to comply, within 30 days, with such a request meeting the requirements set out in the Telephone Facsimile Machine Opt-Out Requests section is unlawful;
 - The notice sets forth the requirements for an opt-out request under the Telephone Facsimile Machine Opt-Out Requests section below in this section;
 - The notice includes:
 - A domestic contact telephone number and facsimile machine number for the recipient to transmit such a request to the sender; and
 - If neither the required telephone number nor facsimile machine number is a toll-free number, a separate cost-free mechanism including a Web site address or email address, for a recipient to transmit a request pursuant to such notice to the sender of the advertisement. A local telephone number also shall constitute a cost-free mechanism so long as recipients are local and will not incur any long distance or other separate charges for calls made to such number; and

³³ This provision shall not apply in the case of an unsolicited advertisement that is sent based on an established business relationship with the recipient that was in existence before July 9, 2005, if the sender also possessed the facsimile machine number of the recipient before July 9, 2005. There shall be a rebuttable presumption that if a valid established business relationship was formed prior to July 9, 2005, the sender possessed the facsimile number prior to such date as well.

- The telephone and facsimile numbers and cost-free mechanism identified in the notice must permit an individual or business to make an opt-out request 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Telephone Facsimile Machine Opt-Out Requests (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(4)(iv-vi))

A request not to send future unsolicited advertisements to a telephone facsimile machine complies with the requirements under this subparagraph only if:

- The request identifies the telephone number or numbers of the telephone facsimile machine or machines to which the request relates;
- The request is made to the telephone number, facsimile number, Web site address or email address identified in the sender's facsimile advertisement; and
- The person making the request has not, subsequent to such request, provided express invitation or permission to the sender, in writing or otherwise, to send such advertisements to such person at such telephone facsimile machine.

A sender that receives a request not to send future unsolicited advertisements that complies with the requirements in the bulleted list above must honor that request within the shortest reasonable time from the date of such request, not to exceed 30 days, and is prohibited from sending unsolicited advertisements to the recipient unless the recipient subsequently provides prior express invitation or permission to the sender. The recipient's opt-out request terminates the established business relationship exemption for purposes of sending future unsolicited advertisements. If such requests are recorded or maintained by a party other than the sender on whose behalf the unsolicited advertisement is sent, the sender will be liable for any failures to honor the opt-out request.³⁴

A facsimile broadcaster will be liable for violations of the provisions in this Prohibition on Use of Telephone Fax Machine, Computer, or Other Device to Send Unsolicited Advertisement to a Telephone Fax Machine section,³⁵ including the inclusion of opt-out notices on unsolicited advertisements, if it demonstrates a high degree of involvement in, or actual notice of, the unlawful activity and fails to take steps to prevent such facsimile transmissions.

FCC Declaratory Ruling – The hyperlink will enable you to search FCC Declaratory Rulings.

Below are hyperlinks to some rulings:

- 2018 Report and Order (FCC 18-177, December 13, 2018)
Addresses calls to reassigned phone numbers by establishing a single, comprehensive database that will contain reassigned number information from each provider that obtains North American Numbering Plan (NANP) U.S. geographic numbers that will enable any caller to verify whether a telephone number has been reassigned before calling that number.
- 2015 Declaratory Ruling and Order (FCC 15-72, July 10, 2015)
Preserves consumers' rights to stop unwanted robocalls, including both voice calls and texts, and clarifies whether conduct violates the TCPA, and details simple guidance intended to assist callers in avoiding violations. In this Declaratory Ruling, the FCC refers to calls that require consumer consent under the TCPA as "robocalls," "covered calls and texts," or "voice calls and texts." Unless otherwise indicated, the term "robocalls" includes calls made either with an automatic telephone dialing system ("autodialer") or with a prerecorded or artificial voice. Note that the D.C. Circuit set aside portions of this Declaratory Ruling related to the types of calling equipment that fall within the TCPA's restrictions and the approach to calls made to reassigned numbers.³⁶
- 2012 Report and Order (FCC 12-21, February 15, 2012)
Establishes that prior express consent for telemarketing calls must be in writing and meet certain content and display criteria. The Order makes clear that for informational calls, including debt collection calls, prior express consent can be either oral or in writing.
- 2020 Declaratory Ruling (DA 20-670, June 25, 2020)
Clarifies that the fact that a calling platform or other equipment is used to make calls or send texts to a large volume of telephone numbers is not probative of whether that equipment constitutes an autodialer under the TCPA. Instead, if a calling platform is not capable of originating a call or sending a text without a person actively and affirmatively manually dialing each one, that platform is not an autodialer and calls or texts made using it are not subject to the TCPA's restrictions on calls and texts to wireless phones. The FCC also confirms that, even when a party uses an autodialer to send a message, it may still avoid TCPA liability by obtaining the recipient's prior express consent.
- 2020 Declaratory Ruling (DA 20-318, March 20, 2020)
Establishes that COVID-19 Pandemic constitutes an "emergency" under the TCPA and that hospitals, health care providers, state and local health officials, and other government officials may lawfully communicate information about the novel coronavirus as well as mitigation measures without violating federal law.

VIII. Privacy — Telephone Consumer Protection Act

Examination Objectives

1. Determine the financial institution’s compliance with the provision of the TCPA and the corresponding regulation, as applicable to the institution’s product offering and operations.³⁷
 2. Assess the quality of the financial institution’s compliance management system and its policies and procedures for implementing the TCPA provisions and corresponding regulation.
 3. Determine the reliance that can be placed on the financial institution’s internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution’s compliance with the provisions of the TCPA and the corresponding regulation.
 4. Determine corrective action when violations of law are identified or when the financial institution’s policies or internal controls are deficient.
- ii. Does the institution (or third party) place calls to any residential line or cellular telephone service using an artificial or prerecorded voice to deliver a message?
 - c. Does the institution (or third party) use a telephone facsimile machine, computer, or other device to send advertisements to a telephone facsimile machine?

If the financial institution itself does not engage directly (or indirectly through a third-party telemarketing firm) in any form of telemarketing or telephone solicitation (including the use of artificial or prerecorded voice messages), or facsimile advertising: STOP. No further examination for compliance with the TCPA is necessary. Examiners should conclude the TCPA review and document their finding according to agency procedures. Otherwise, continue with step 2 below.

Examination Procedures

General

1. Determine whether the financial institution or a third-party telemarketing firm on behalf of the financial institution engages in telemarketing, telephone solicitation, and facsimile advertising activities covered by the TCPA:
 - a. Does the institution (or a third party) place calls for telemarketing purposes to residential telephone or wireless telephone subscribers that could be listed on the national do-not-call registry or the institution’s own internal do-not-call registry?
 - b. Does the institution (or third party) employ technology to assist in placing calls for marketing purposes (as opposed to manually dialing numbers)? If so:
 - i. Does the institution (or third party) use an automatic telephone dialing system? (To qualify as an “automatic telephone dialing system,” a device must have the capacity to both (1) store or produce telephone numbers to be called, using a random or sequential number generator and (2) to dial such numbers.)
2. Obtain information pertinent to the area of examination from the financial institution’s compliance management system, relating to TCPA, including historical examination findings, complaint information, training records, internal monitoring and audit materials, policies and procedures governing telemarketing, telephone solicitations, and facsimile advertising.
3. Through discussions with management and review of the documents and systems listed below, assess the adequacy of the financial institution’s internal controls to ensure compliance with the TCPA. For instance, identify procedures used daily to detect errors and violations in a timely manner. Also, review the procedures used to ensure compliance when changes to bank operations or the regulatory environment occur (e.g., applicability to text messages, reassigned telephone numbers, calls made for “emergency purposes”).
 - Organizational charts
 - Process flowcharts
 - Policies and procedures, including those to monitor third parties
 - Disclosures and notices

VIII. Privacy — Telephone Consumer Protection Act

- Scripts and computer programs, including documentation on computer testing and validation
 - Telephone communication systems (voice, text, and facsimile)
 - Do-Not-Call lists
 - Contact, tracking, and consumer consent/opt-out databases
 - Checklists/worksheets and review documents
4. Determine the extent and adequacy of the training received by individuals whose responsibilities relate to compliance with the TCPA, including training scope, frequency, and management oversight. Review any training materials pertaining to the TCPA and determine if the training is appropriately tailored to the financial institution's risk profile and covers the various aspects of the provisions that apply to the operations under review.
 5. Review financial institution's compliance monitoring procedures and/or audit materials, including workpapers and reports to determine whether:
 - The scope of any monitoring procedures and/or audits address all applicable provisions of the TCPA;
 - Steps are taken to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies;
 - The monitoring procedures and/or audit include samples covering all applicable types of messages and delivery channels and methods;
 - The monitoring/audit work performed is accurate;
 - Significant deficiencies and the root cause of the deficiencies are included in reports to management or to the Board of Directors;
 - Management responds promptly to identified deficiencies and has taken corrective actions that are effective and lasting; and
 - The frequency of monitoring and audit is appropriate, based upon the financial institution's risk profile.
 6. Review the financial institution's record retention practices to determine whether documentation and evidence of compliance is retained as required.

7. If any complaints based on the TCPA have been filed against the financial institution or a third party used by the institution, determine why the complaints were filed and how they were resolved.

Transaction Testing Procedures

The transaction testing procedures to be employed depend upon the adequacy of the financial institution's compliance program and level of risk identified.

1. Obtain a list of telemarketing programs for products and services that the financial institution promoted in-house or through a third-party.
2. Review a sample of call logs, call scripts, recorded call sessions, and facsimile advertisements, observe call center operations, evaluate automated messaging and opt-out systems, and through testing of marketing programs assess the institution's level of compliance.

Examination Conclusions

1. Conclude the examination after taking the following actions:
 - Fully address identified deficiencies and violations, if any;
 - Maintain appropriate supporting workpaper documentation;
 - For the violation(s), document the root cause by identifying weaknesses in internal controls, audit and compliance monitoring, training, management oversight, or other factors; also document whether the violation(s) are repetitive or systemic.
 - Document action(s) needed to correct violations and weaknesses in the institution's compliance program.
 - Discuss findings with financial institution management and Board of Directors, including adequacy of the institution's compliance management system, supervisory recommendations, and violations of laws and regulations, and also obtain a commitment from management for corrective action(s).
 - Write comments, as applicable, in the Report of Examination;

VIII. Privacy — Telephone Consumer Protection Act

- Include appropriate violation write-ups; and
- Discuss proposed enforcement action, if needed.

Fair Credit Reporting Act

Introduction

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) (15 USC §§1681-1681u) became effective on April 25, 1971. The FCRA is a part of a group of acts contained in the Federal Consumer Credit Protection Act (15 USC §1601 et seq.), such as the Truth in Lending Act and the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Congress subsequently passed the Consumer Credit Reporting Reform Act of 1996 (Pub. L. No. 104-208, 110 Stat. 3009-426), which substantially revised the FCRA. These revisions generally became effective on September 30, 1997. Minor amendments to the FCRA were made in 1997 and 1998. The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (Pub. L. No. 106-102, 113 Stat. 1338 (1999)) made additional changes, including provisions removing a previous statutory prohibition against conducting routine FCRA examinations, and permitting regulations to be adopted to implement the requirements of the FCRA. Elements of the FCRA and Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act of 2003 (FACT Act) have been implemented in Regulation V (12 CFR 1022).

The FCRA was substantively amended in 2003 upon the passage of the FACT Act (Pub. L. No. 108-159, 117 Stat. 1952). The FACT Act created many new responsibilities for consumer reporting agencies and users of consumer reports. It contained many new consumer disclosure requirements as well as provisions to address identity theft. In addition, it provided free annual consumer report rights for consumers and improved access to consumer report information to help increase the accuracy of data in the consumer reporting system.

The FCRA contains significant responsibilities for business entities that are consumer reporting agencies and lesser responsibilities for those that are not. Generally, financial institutions are not considered to function as consumer reporting agencies; however, depending on the degree to which their information sharing business practices approximate those of a consumer reporting agency, they can be deemed as such.

In addition to the requirements related to financial institutions acting as consumer reporting agencies, FCRA requirements also apply to financial institutions that operate in the following capacities:

1. Procurers and users of information (for example, as credit grantors, purchasers of dealer paper, or when opening deposit accounts);
2. Furnishers and transmitters of information (by reporting information to consumer reporting agencies or other third parties, or to affiliates);
3. Marketers of credit or insurance products; or
4. Employers.

Structure and Overview of Examination Modules

The examination procedures are structured as a series of modules, grouping similar requirements together. General information about each of the requirements is followed by the examination steps.

Financial institutions are subject to a number of different requirements under the FCRA, of which some are contained directly in the statute, while others contained in regulations issued by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (Bureau), Federal Reserve Board and/or the Federal Trade Commission. Job Aids at the end of this section contains a matrix of the different statutory and regulatory cites applicable to financial institutions that are not consumer reporting agencies. This matrix is sorted by federal regulator.

Key Definitions

There are a number of definitions used throughout the FCRA. Key definitions include the following:

“Consumer” is defined as an individual.

“Consumer report” is any written, oral, or other communication of any information by a consumer reporting agency that bears on a consumer’s creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living which is used or expected to be used or collected, in whole or in part, for the purpose of serving as a factor in establishing the consumer’s eligibility for:

1. Credit or insurance to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes;
2. Employment purposes; or
3. Any other purpose authorized under section 604 (15 USC §1681b).

The term “consumer report” does not include:

1. Any report containing information solely about transactions or experiences between the consumer and the institution making the report;
2. Any communication of that transaction or experience information among entities related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control (for example, different banks that are members of the same holding company, or subsidiary companies of a bank);
3. Communication of other information among persons related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control if:
 - a. It is clearly and conspicuously disclosed to the consumer that the information may be communicated among such persons; and

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

- b. The consumer is given the opportunity, before the time that the information is communicated, to direct that the information not be communicated among such persons.
4. Any authorization or approval of a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly by the issuer of a credit card or similar device;
5. Any report in which a person who has been requested by a third party to make a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly to a consumer, such as a lender who has received a request from a broker, conveys his or her decision with respect to such request, if the third party advises the consumer of the name and address of the person to whom the request was made, and such person makes the disclosures to the consumer required under section 615 (15 USC §1681m); or
6. A communication described in subsection (o) or (x) of section 603 [15 USC §1681a(o)] (which relates to certain investigative reports and certain reports to prospective employers).

“Person” means any individual, partnership, corporation, trust, estate, cooperative, association, government or governmental subdivision or agency, or other entity.

“Investigative Consumer Report” means a consumer report or portion thereof in which information on a consumer’s character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living is obtained through personal interviews with neighbors, friends, or associates of the consumer reported on or with others with whom he is acquainted or who may have knowledge concerning any such items of information. However, such information does not include specific factual information on a consumer’s credit record obtained directly from a creditor of the consumer or from a consumer reporting agency when such information was obtained directly from a creditor of the consumer or from the consumer.

“Adverse Action” has the same meaning as used in section 701(d)(6) [15 USC1691(d)(6)] of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (“ECOA”). Under the ECOA, it means a denial or revocation of credit, a change in the terms of an existing credit arrangement, or a refusal to grant credit in substantially the same amount or on terms substantially similar to those requested. Under the ECOA, the term does not include a refusal to extend additional credit under an existing credit arrangement where the applicant is delinquent or otherwise in default, or where such additional credit would exceed a previously established credit limit.

The term has the following additional meanings for purposes of the FCRA:

1. A denial or cancellation of, an increase in any charge for, or a reduction or other adverse or unfavorable change in the terms of coverage or amount of, any insurance, existing or applied for, in connection with the underwriting of insurance;

2. A denial of employment or any other decision for employment purposes that adversely affects any current or prospective employee;
3. A denial or cancellation of, an increase in any charge for, or any other adverse or unfavorable change in the terms of, any license or benefit described in section 604(a)(3)(D) [15 USC §1681b(a)(3)(D)]; and
4. An action taken or determination that is (a) made in connection with an application made by, or transaction initiated by, any consumer, or in connection with a review of an account to determine whether the consumer continues to meet the terms of the account, and (b) adverse to the interests of the consumer.

“Employment Purposes” when used in connection with a consumer report means a report used for the purpose of evaluating a consumer for employment, promotion, reassignment or retention as an employee.

“Consumer Reporting Agency” means any person which, for monetary fees, dues, or on a cooperative nonprofit basis, regularly engages in whole or in part in the practice of assembling or evaluating consumer credit information or other information on consumers for the purpose of furnishing consumer reports to third parties, and which uses any means or facility of interstate commerce for the purpose of preparing or furnishing consumer reports.

Examination Objectives

1. To determine the financial institution’s compliance with the FCRA.
2. To assess the quality of the financial institution’s compliance management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing the FCRA.
3. To determine the reliance that can be placed on the financial institution’s internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution’s compliance with the FCRA.
4. To direct corrective action when violations of law are identified or when policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures¹

Initial Procedures

The initial procedures are designed to acquaint examiners with the individual operations and processes of the institution under examination. These initial steps focus on an institution’s systems, controls, policies, and procedures, including audits and previous examination findings.

The applicability of the various sections of the FCRA and implementing regulations depend on an institution's unique operations. The functional examination requirements for these responsibilities are presented topically in Modules 1 through 6 of these procedures. (Module 6 will be included in a subsequent amendment to these procedures.)

The FCRA contains many different requirements that a financial institution must follow, even if it is not a consumer reporting agency. Subsequent to the passage of the FACT Act, some of the individual compliance responsibilities are set forth directly in the statute, while others are within joint, inter-agency regulations, while still others are set forth in regulations set by some of the regulatory agencies. The modules present examination responsibilities by subject matter, versus strict regulatory or statutory construction.

Initially, examiners should:

1. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance in the area under review. Consider the following:
 - a. Organization charts
 - b. Process flowcharts
 - c. Policies and procedures
 - d. Loan documentation
 - e. Checklists
 - f. Computer program documentation (for example, records illustrating the fields and types of data reported to consumer reporting agencies; automated records tracking customer opt outs for FCRA affiliate information sharing; etc.)
2. Review any compliance audit material including work papers and reports to determine whether:
 - a. The scope of the audit addresses all provisions as applicable;
 - b. Corrective actions were taken to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies;
 - c. The testing includes samples covering all product types and decision centers;
 - d. The work performed is accurate;
 - e. Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and/or to the board of directors; and
 - f. The frequency of review is appropriate.
3. Review the financial institution's training materials to determine whether:
 - a. Appropriate training is provided to individuals responsible for FCRA compliance and operational procedures; and
 - b. The training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of the FCRA that apply to the individual financial institution's operations.
4. Through discussions with management, determine which portions of the six examination modules will apply.
5. Complete appropriate examination modules, document and form conclusions regarding the quality of the financial institution's compliance management systems and compliance with the FCRA

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Module 1: Obtaining Consumer Reports

Overview

Consumer reporting agencies have a significant amount of personal information about consumers. This information is invaluable in assessing a consumer's creditworthiness for a variety of products and services, including loan and deposit accounts, insurance, and utility services, among others. Access to this information is governed by the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) to ensure that it is obtained for permissible purposes and not exploited for illegitimate purposes.

The FCRA requires any prospective "user" of a consumer report, for example a lender, insurer, landlord, or employer, among others, to have a legally permissible purpose to obtain a report.

Section 604 Permissible Purposes of Consumer Reports and Section 606 Investigative Consumer Reports

Legally Permissible Purposes. The FCRA allows a consumer reporting agency to furnish a consumer report for the following circumstances and no other:

1. In response to a court order or Federal Grand Jury subpoena.
2. In accordance with the written instructions of the consumer.
3. To a person, including a financial institution, which it has reason to believe:
 - a. Intends to use the report in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer (includes extending, reviewing, and collecting credit);
 - b. Intends to use the information for employment purposes;²
 - c. Intends to use the information in connection with the underwriting of insurance involving the consumer;
 - d. Intends to use the information in connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility for a license or other benefit granted by a governmental instrumentality that is required by law to consider an applicant's financial responsibility;
 - e. Intends to use the information, as a potential investor or servicer, or current insurer, in connection with a valuation of, or an assessment of the credit or prepayment risks associated with, an existing credit obligation; or
 - f. Otherwise has a legitimate business need for the information:

- i. In connection with a business transaction that is initiated by the consumer; or
 - ii. To review an account to determine whether the consumer continues to meet the terms of the account.
4. In response to a request by the head of a State or local child support enforcement agency (or authorized appointee) if the person certifies various information to the consumer reporting agency regarding the need to obtain the report. (Generally, this particular purpose does not impact a financial institution that is not a consumer reporting agency.)

Prescreened Consumer Reports. Users of consumer reports, such as financial institutions, may obtain prescreened consumer reports to make firm offers of credit or insurance to consumers, unless the consumers have elected to opt out of being included on prescreened lists. The FCRA contains many requirements, including an opt out notice requirement when prescreened consumer reports are used. In addition to defining prescreened consumer reports, Module 3 covers these requirements.

Investigative Consumer Reports. Section 606 contains specific requirements for use of an investigative consumer report. This type of consumer report contains information about a consumer's character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living that is obtained in whole or in part through personal interviews with neighbors, friends, or associates of the consumer. If a financial institution procures an investigative consumer report, or causes one to be prepared, the institution must meet the following requirements:

1. The institution clearly and accurately discloses to the consumer that an investigative consumer report may be obtained.
2. The disclosure contains a statement of the consumer's right to request other information about the report, and a summary of the consumer's rights under the FCRA.
3. The disclosure is in writing and is mailed or otherwise delivered to the consumer not later than three business days after the date on which the report was first requested.
4. The financial institution procuring the report certifies to the consumer reporting agency that it has complied with the disclosure requirements and will comply in the event that the consumer requests additional disclosures about the report.

Institution Procedures. Given the preponderance of electronically available information and the growth of identity theft, financial institutions should manage the risks associated with obtaining and using consumer reports. Financial institutions should employ procedures, controls, or other safeguards to ensure that consumer reports are obtained and used only in situations for which there are permissible purposes. Access to, and storage and destruction of this information is dealt with under an institution's Information Security Program; however, obtaining consumer reports initially must be done in compliance with the FCRA.

Examination Procedures

Section 604 Permissible Purposes of Consumer Reports and Section 606 Investigative Consumer Reports

1. Determine whether the financial institution obtains consumer reports.
2. Determine whether the institution obtains prescreened consumer reports and/or reports for employment purposes. If so, complete the appropriate sections of Module 3.
3. Determine whether the financial institution procures or causes to be prepared an investigative consumer report. If so, ensure that the appropriate disclosure is given to the consumer within the required time periods. In addition, ensure that the financial institution certified compliance with the disclosure requirements to the consumer reporting agency.
4. Evaluate the institution's procedures to ensure that consumer reports are obtained only for permissible purposes. Confirm that the institution certifies to the consumer reporting agency the purposes for which it will obtain reports. (The certification is usually contained in a financial institution's contract with the consumer reporting agency.)
5. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, such as the receipt of several consumer complaints were received, review a sample of consumer reports obtained from a consumer reporting agency and determine whether the financial institution had permissible purposes to obtain the reports.
 - For example, obtain a copy of a billing statement or other list of consumer reports obtained by the financial institution from the consumer reporting agency for a period of time.
 - Compare this list, or a sample from this list to the institution's records to ensure that there is a permissible purpose for the report(s) obtained. This could include any permissible purpose, such as the consumer applied for credit, insurance, or employment, etc. The financial institution may also obtain a report in connection with the review of an existing account.

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Module 2: Obtaining Information and Sharing Among Affiliates

Overview

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) contains many substantive compliance requirements for consumer reporting agencies that are designed to help ensure the accuracy and integrity of the consumer reporting system. As noted in the definitions section, a consumer reporting agency is a person that generally furnishes consumer reports to third parties. By their very nature, banks, credit unions, and thrifts have a significant amount of consumer information that could constitute a consumer report, and thus communication of this information could cause the institution to become a consumer reporting agency. The FCRA contains several exceptions that enable a financial institution to communicate this type of information, within strict guidelines, without becoming a consumer reporting agency.

Rather than containing strict information sharing prohibitions, the FCRA creates a business disincentive such that if a financial institution shares consumer report information outside of the exceptions, then the institution is a consumer reporting agency and will be subject to the significant, substantive requirements of the FCRA applicable to those entities. Typically, a financial institution will structure its information sharing practices within the exceptions to avoid becoming a consumer reporting agency. This examination module generally covers the various information sharing practices within these exceptions.

If upon completion of this module, examiners determine that the financial institution's information sharing practices fall outside of these exceptions, the financial institution will be considered a consumer reporting agency and Module 6 of the examination procedures should be completed.

Section 603(d) Consumer Report and Information Sharing

Section 603(d) defines a consumer report to include information about a consumer such as that which bears on a consumer's creditworthiness, character, and capacity among other factors. Communication of this information may cause a person, including a financial institution, to become a consumer reporting agency. The statutory definition contains key exemptions to this definition that enable financial institutions to share this type of information under certain circumstances, without becoming consumer reporting agencies. Specifically, the term "consumer report" does not include:

1. A report containing information solely as to transactions or experiences between the consumer and the financial institution making the report. A person, including a financial institution, may share information strictly related to its own transactions or experiences with a consumer (such as the consumer's payment history, or an account with the institution) with any third party, without regard to affiliation, without becoming a consumer reporting agency. This type of information sharing may, however, be restricted under the Privacy of Consumer Financial Information regulations that implement the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA) because it meets the definition of non-public personal information under the Privacy regulations; therefore sharing it with non-affiliated third parties may be subject to an opt out under the privacy regulations. In turn, the FCRA may also restrict activities that the GLBA permits. For example, the GLBA permits a financial institution to share a list of its customers and information such as their credit scores with another financial institution to jointly market or sponsor other financial products or services. This communication may be considered a consumer report under the FCRA and could potentially cause the sharing financial institution to become a consumer reporting agency.

2. Communication of such transaction or experience information among persons, including financial institutions related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control.
3. Communication of other information (e.g., other than transaction or experience information) among persons and financial institutions related by common ownership or affiliated by corporate control, if it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed to the consumer that the information will be communicated among such entities, and before the information is initially communicated, the consumer is given the opportunity to opt out of the communication. This allows a financial institution to share other information (that is, information other than its own transaction and experience information) that could otherwise be a consumer report, without becoming a consumer reporting agency under the following circumstances:
 - a. The sharing of the "other" information is done with affiliates; and
 - b. Consumers are provided with the notice and an opportunity to opt out of this sharing before the information is first communicated among affiliates.

For example, "other" information can include information provided by a consumer on an application form concerning accounts with other financial institutions. It can also include information obtained by a financial institution from a consumer reporting agency, such as the consumer's credit score. If a financial institution shares other information with affiliates without providing a notice and an opportunity to opt out, the financial institution may become a consumer reporting agency subject to all of the other requirements of the FCRA.

The opt out right required by this section must be contained in a financial institution's Privacy Notice, as required by the GLBA and its implementing regulations.

Other Exceptions

Specific extensions of credit. In addition, the term “consumer report” does not include the communication of a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly by the issuer of a credit card or similar device. For example, this exception allows a lender to communicate an authorization through the credit card network to a retailer, to enable a consumer to complete a purchase using a credit card.

Credit Decision to Third Party (e.g., auto dealer). The term “consumer report” also does not include any report in which a person, including a financial institution, who has been requested by a third party to make a specific extension of credit directly or indirectly to a consumer, conveys the decision with respect to the request. The third party must advise the consumer of the name and address of the financial institution to which the request was made, and such financial institution makes the adverse action disclosures required by section 615 of the FCRA. For example, this exception allows a lender to communicate a credit decision to an automobile dealer who is arranging financing for a consumer purchasing an automobile and who requires a loan to finance the transaction.

Joint User Rule. The Federal Trade Commission staff commentary discusses another exception known as the “Joint User Rule.” Under this exception, users of consumer reports, including financial institutions, may share information if they are jointly involved in the decision to approve a consumer’s request for a product or service, provided that each has a permissible purpose to obtain a consumer report on the individual. For example, a consumer applies for a mortgage loan that will have a high loan-to-value ratio, and thus the lender will require private mortgage insurance (PMI) in order to approve the application. The PMI will be provided by an outside company. The lender and the PMI company can share consumer report information about the consumer because both entities have permissible purposes to obtain the information and both are jointly involved in the decision to grant the products to the consumer. This exception applies to entities that are affiliated or non-affiliated third parties. It is important to note that the GLBA will still apply to the sharing of non-public, personal information with non-affiliated third parties; therefore, financial institutions should be aware that sharing under the FCRA joint user rule may still be limited or prohibited by the GLBA.

Examination Procedures

Section 603(d) Consumer Report and Information Sharing

1. Review the financial institution’s policies, procedures, and practices concerning the sharing of consumer information with third parties, including both affiliated and non-affiliated third parties. Determine the type of information shared and with whom the information is shared. (This portion of the examination process may overlap with a review of the institution’s compliance with the Privacy of Consumer Financial Information Regulations that implement the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act.)

2. Determine whether the financial institution’s information sharing practices fall within the exceptions to the definition of a consumer report. If they do not, the financial institution could be considered a consumer reporting agency, in which case Module 6 of the examination procedures should be completed.
3. If the financial institution shares information other than transaction and experience information with affiliates subject to an opt out, ensure that information regarding how to opt out is contained in the institution’s GLBA Privacy Notice, as required by the Privacy of Consumer Financial Information regulations.
4. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain a sample of opt out rights exercised by consumers and determine if the financial institution honored the opt out requests by not sharing “other information” about the consumers with the institution’s affiliates subsequent to receiving a consumer’s opt out direction.

Section 604(g) Protection of Medical Information

Section 604(g) generally prohibits creditors from obtaining and using medical information in connection with any determination of the consumer’s eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit. The statute contains no prohibition on creditors obtaining or using medical information for other purposes that are not in connection with a determination of the consumer’s eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit.

Section 604(g)(5)(A) requires the FFIEC agencies to prescribe regulations that permit transactions that are determined to be necessary and appropriate to protect legitimate operational, transactional, risk, consumer, and other needs (including administrative verification purposes), consistent with the Congressional intent to restrict the use of medical information for inappropriate purposes. On November 22, 2005, the FFIEC Agencies published final rules in the Federal Register (70 FR 70664). The rules contain the general prohibition on obtaining or using medical information, and provide exceptions for the limited circumstances when medical information may be used. The rules define “credit” and “creditor” as having the same meanings as in section 702 of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (15 USC 1691a).

Obtaining and Using Unsolicited Medical Information. A creditor does not violate the prohibition on obtaining medical information if it receives the medical information pertaining to a consumer in connection with any determination of the consumer’s eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit without specifically requesting medical information. However, the creditor may only use this medical information in connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit in accordance with either the financial information exception or one of the specific other exceptions provided in the rules. These exceptions are discussed below.

Financial Information Exception. The rules allow a creditor to obtain and use medical information pertaining to a consumer in connection with any determination of the consumer's eligibility or continued eligibility for credit, so long as:

1. The information is the type of information routinely used in making credit eligibility determinations, such as information relating to debts, expenses, income, benefits, assets, collateral, or the purpose of the loan, including the use of the loan proceeds;
2. The creditor uses the medical information in a manner and to an extent that is no less favorable than it would use comparable information that is not medical information in a credit transaction; AND
3. The creditor does not take the consumer's physical, mental, or behavioral health, condition or history, type of treatment, or prognosis into account as part of any such determination.

The financial information exception is designed in part to allow creditors to consider a consumer's medical debts and expenses in the assessment of that consumer's ability to repay the loan according to the loan terms. In addition, the financial information exception also allows a creditor to consider the dollar amount and continued eligibility for disability income, worker's compensation income, or other benefits related to health or a medical condition that is relied on as a source of repayment.

The creditor may use the medical information in a manner and to an extent that is no less favorable than it would use comparable, non-medical information. For example, a consumer includes on an application for credit information about two $20,000 debts. One debt is to a hospital; the other is to a retailer. The creditor may use and consider the debt to the hospital in the same manner in which they consider the debt to the retailer, such as including the debts in the calculation of the consumer's proposed debt-to-income ratio. In addition, the consumer's payment history of the debt to the hospital may be considered in the same manner as the debt to the retailer. For example, if the creditor does not grant loans to applicants who have debts that are 90-days past due, the creditor could consider the past-due status of a debt to the hospital, in the same manner as the past-due status of a debt to the retailer.

A creditor may use medical information in a manner that is more favorable to the consumer, according to its regular policies and procedures. For example, if a creditor has a routine policy of declining consumers who have a 90-day past due installment loan to a retailer, but does not decline consumers who have a 90-day past due debt to a hospital, the financial information exception would allow a creditor to continue this policy without violating the rules because in these cases, the creditor's treatment of the debt to the hospital is more favorable to the consumer.

A creditor may not take the consumer's physical, mental, or behavioral health, condition or history, type of treatment, or prognosis into account as part of any determination regarding the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit. The creditor may only consider the financial implications as discussed above, such as the status of a debt to a hospital, continuance of disability income, etc.

Specific Exceptions for Obtaining and Using Medical Information. In addition to the financial information exception, the rules also provide for the following nine specific exceptions under which a creditor can obtain and use medical information in its determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit:

1. To determine whether the use of a power of attorney or legal representative that is triggered by a medical condition or event is necessary and appropriate, or whether the consumer has the legal capacity to contract when a person seeks to exercise a power of attorney or act as a legal representative for a consumer based on an asserted medical condition or event. For example, if Person A is attempting to act on behalf of Person B under a Power of Attorney that is invoked based on a medical event, a creditor is allowed to obtain and use medical information to verify that Person B has experienced a medical condition or event such that Person A is allowed to act under the Power of Attorney.
2. To comply with applicable requirements of local, state, or Federal laws.
3. To determine, at the consumer's request, whether the consumer qualifies for a legally permissible special credit program or credit related assistance program that is:
 - a. Designed to meet the special needs of consumers with medical conditions; AND
 - b. Established and administered pursuant to a written plan that:
 - i. Identifies the class of persons that the program is designed to benefit; and
 - ii. Sets forth the procedures and standards for extending credit or providing other credit-related assistance under the program.
4. To the extent necessary for purposes of fraud prevention or detection.

5. In the case of credit for the purpose of financing medical products or services, to determine and verify the medical purpose of the loan and the use of the proceeds.
6. Consistent with safe and sound banking practices, if the consumer or the consumer's legal representative requests that the creditor use medical information in determining the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit, to accommodate the consumer's particular circumstances, and such request is documented by the creditor. For example, at the consumer's request, a creditor may grant an exception to its ordinary policy to accommodate a medical condition that the consumer has experienced. This exception allows a creditor to consider medical information in this context, but it does not require a creditor to make such an accommodation nor does it require a creditor to grant a loan that is unsafe or unsound.
7. Consistent with safe and sound practices, to determine whether the provisions of a forbearance practice or program that is triggered by a medical condition or event apply to a consumer. For example, if a creditor has a policy of delaying foreclosure in cases where a consumer is experiencing a medical hardship, this exception allows the creditor to use medical information to determine if the policy would apply to the consumer. Like the exception listed in item 6 above, this exception does not require a creditor to grant forbearance, it merely provides an exception so that a creditor may consider medical information in these instances.
8. To determine the consumer's eligibility for, the triggering of, or the reactivation of a debt cancellation contract or debt suspension agreement if a medical condition or event is a triggering event for the provision of benefits under the contract or agreement.
9. To determine the consumer's eligibility for, the triggering of, or the reactivation of a credit insurance product if a medical condition or event is a triggering event for the provision of benefits under the product.

Limits on redisclosure of information. If a creditor subject to the medical information rules receives medical information about a consumer from a consumer reporting agency or its affiliate, the creditor must not disclose that information to any other person, except as necessary to carry out the purpose for which the information was initially disclosed, or as otherwise permitted by statute, regulation, or order.

Sharing medical information with affiliates. In general, the exclusions from the definition of "consumer report" in section 603(d)(2) of the FCRA allow the sharing of information among affiliates. With regard to medical information, section 603(d)(3) of the FCRA provides that the exclusions in section 603(d)(2) do not apply when a person subject to the medical information rules shares the following information with an affiliate:

1. Medical information;
2. An individualized list or description based on the payment transactions of the consumer for medical products or services; or
3. An aggregate list of identified consumers based on payment transactions for medical products or services.

If a person who is subject to the medical rules shares with an affiliate the type of information discussed above, the exclusions from the definition of "consumer report" do not apply. Effectively, this means that if a person shares medical information, that person becomes a consumer reporting agency, subject to all of the other substantive requirements of the FCRA.

The rules provide exceptions to these limitations on sharing medical information with affiliates. A person, such as a bank, thrift, or credit union, may share medical information with its affiliates without becoming a consumer reporting agency under the following circumstances:

1. In connection with the business of insurance or annuities (including the activities described in section 18B of the model Privacy of Consumer Financial and Health Information Regulation issued by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, as in effect on January 1, 2003);
2. For any purpose permitted without authorization under the regulations promulgated by the Department of Health and Human Services pursuant to the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA);
3. For any purpose referred to in section 1179 of HIPAA;
4. For any purpose described in section 502(e) of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act;
5. In connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility, for credit consistent with the financial information exceptions or specific exceptions; or
6. As otherwise permitted by order of an FFIEC agency.

Examination Procedures

1. Review the financial institution's policies, procedures, and practices concerning the collection and use of medical information pertaining to a consumer in connection with any determination of the consumer's eligibility, or continued eligibility for credit.
2. If the financial institution's policies, procedures, and practices allow for obtaining and using medical information pertaining to a consumer in the context of a credit transaction, assess whether there are adequate controls in place to ensure that the information is only used subject to the financial information exception in the rules, or under a specific exception within the rules.

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

3. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain samples of credit transactions to determine if the use of medical information pertaining to a consumer was done strictly under the financial information exception or the specific exceptions under the regulation.
4. Determine whether the financial institution has adequate policies and procedures in place to limit the redisclosure of medical information about a consumer that was received from a consumer reporting agency or an affiliate.
5. Determine whether the financial institution shares medical information about a consumer with affiliates. If information is shared, determine whether it occurred under an exception in the rules that enables the financial institution to share the information without becoming a consumer reporting agency.

Section 624 Affiliate Marketing Opt Out

Section 624 gives a consumer the right to restrict an entity, with which it does not have a pre-existing business relationship, from using certain information obtained from an affiliate to make solicitations to that consumer. This provision is distinct from Section 603(d)(2)(A)(iii) which gives consumer the right to restrict the sharing of certain consumer information amongst affiliates.³

Under Section 624, an entity may not use information received from an affiliate to market its products or services to a consumer, unless the consumer is given notice and a reasonable opportunity and a reasonable and simple method to opt out of the making of such solicitations. The affiliate marketing opt-out applies to both transaction or experience information and “other” information, such as information from credit reports and credit applications. On November 7, 2007, the federal financial institution regulators published final regulations in the Federal Register to implement this section (72 FR 62910).⁴

Exceptions to the notice and opt out requirements apply when an entity uses eligibility information in certain ways, as described later in these procedures.

Key Definitions (12 CFR 1022.20)⁵

1. “Eligibility information” (12 CFR 1022.20(b)(3)) includes not only transaction and experience information, but also the type of information found in consumer reports, such as information from third party sources and credit scores. Eligibility information does not include aggregate or blind data that does not contain personal identifiers such as account numbers, names, or addresses.⁶

2. “Pre-existing business relationship” (12 CFR 1022.20(b)(4))⁷ means a relationship between a person, such as a financial institution (or a person’s licensed agent), and a consumer based on:
 - a. A financial contract between the person and the consumer which is in force on the date on which the consumer is sent a solicitation covered by the affiliate marketing regulation;
 - b. The purchase, rental, or lease by the consumer of the person’s goods or services, or a financial transaction (including holding an active account or a policy in force, or having another continuing relationship) between the consumer and the person, during the 18-month period immediately preceding the date on which the consumer is sent a solicitation covered by the affiliate marketing regulation; or
 - c. An inquiry or application by the consumer regarding a product or service offered by that person during the three-month period immediately preceding the date on which the consumer is sent a solicitation covered by the affiliate marketing regulation.
3. “Solicitation” (12 CFR 1022.20(b)(5)) means the marketing of a product or service initiated by a person, such as a financial institution, to a particular consumer that is:
 - a. Based on eligibility information communicated to that person by its affiliate; and
 - b. Intended to encourage the consumer to purchase or obtain such product or service.

Examples of a solicitation include a telemarketing call, direct mail, e-mail, or other form of marketing communication directed to a particular consumer that is based on eligibility information received from an affiliate. A solicitation does not include marketing communications that are directed at the general public (e.g., television, general circulation magazine, and billboard advertisements).

Initial Notice and Opt-out Requirement (12 CFR 1022.21(a), 1022.24, and 1022.25). A financial institution and its ³ See Module 2, Section 603(d) Consumer Report and Information Sharing, for provisions pertaining to the sharing of consumer information. Under section 603(d)(2)(A)(iii) of the FCRA, entities are responsible for complying with the affiliate sharing notice and opt-out requirement, where applicable. Thus, under the FCRA, certain consumer information will be subject to two opt-outs, a sharing opt-out (section 603(d)) and a marketing use opt-out (section 624). These two opt-outs may be consolidated.

⁵ See 12 CFR 1022.20 for other definitions.

subsidiaries (“financial institution”) generally may not use eligibility information about a consumer that it receives from an affiliate to make a solicitation for marketing purposes to the consumer, unless:

1. It is clearly and conspicuously disclosed to the consumer in writing or, if the consumer agrees, electronically, in a concise notice that the financial institution may use eligibility information about that consumer that it received from an affiliate to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer;
2. The consumer is provided a reasonable opportunity and a reasonable and simple method to “opt out” (that is, the consumer prohibits the financial institution from using eligibility information to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer);⁸ and
3. The consumer has not opted out.

For example, a consumer has a homeowner’s insurance policy with an insurance company. The insurance company shares eligibility information about the consumer with its affiliated depository institution. Based on that eligibility information, the depository institution wants to make a solicitation to the consumer about its home equity loan products. The depository institution does not have a pre-existing business relationship with the consumer and none of the other exceptions apply. The depository institution may not use eligibility information it received from its insurance affiliate to make solicitations to the consumer about its home equity loan products unless the insurance company gave the consumer a notice and opportunity to opt out and the consumer does not opt out.

Making Solicitations (12 CFR 1022.21(b)).⁹ A financial institution (or a service provider acting on behalf of the financial institution) makes a solicitation for marketing purposes if:

1. The financial institution receives eligibility information from an affiliate, including when the affiliate places that information into a common database that the financial institution may access;
2. The financial institution uses that eligibility information to do one or more of the following:
 - a. Identify the consumer or type of consumer to receive a solicitation;
 - b. Establish criteria used to select the consumer to receive a solicitation; or
 - c. Decide which of the financial institution’s products or services to market to the consumer or tailor the financial institution’s solicitation to that consumer; and

3. As a result of the financial institution’s use of the eligibility information, the consumer is provided a solicitation.

A financial institution does not make a solicitation for marketing purposes (and therefore the affiliate marketing regulation, with its notice and opt-out requirements, does not apply) in the situations listed below, commonly referred to as “constructive sharing.” Constructive sharing occurs when a financial institution provides criteria to an affiliate to use in marketing the financial institution’s product and the affiliate uses the criteria to send marketing materials to the affiliate’s own customers that meet the criteria. In this situation, the financial institution is not using shared eligibility information to make solicitations.

1. The financial institution provides criteria for consumers to whom it would like its affiliate to market the financial institution’s products. Then, based on this criteria, the affiliate uses eligibility information that the affiliate obtained in connection with its own pre-existing business relationship with the consumer to market the financial institution’s products or services (or directs its service provider to use the eligibility information in the same manner and the financial institution does not communicate with the service provider regarding that use).
2. A service provider, applying the financial institution’s criteria, uses information from an affiliate, such as that in a shared database, to market the financial institution’s products or services to the consumer, so long as it meets certain requirements, including:
 - a. The affiliate controls access to and use of its eligibility information by the service provider under a written agreement between the affiliate and the service provider;
 - b. The affiliate establishes, in writing, specific terms and conditions under which the service provider may access and use the affiliate’s eligibility information to market the financial institution’s products and services (or those of affiliates generally) to the consumer;
 - c. The affiliate requires the service provider, under a written agreement, to implement reasonable policies and procedures designed to ensure that the service provider uses the affiliate’s eligibility information in accordance with the terms and conditions established by the affiliate relating to the marketing of the financial institution’s products or services;
 - d. The affiliate is identified on or with the marketing materials provided to the consumer; and
 - e. The financial institution does not directly use its affiliate’s eligibility information in the manner described above under “Making Solicitations (12 CFR 1022.21(b)),” item 2.

⁸ See 12 CFR 1022.24 and 1022.25 for examples of “a reasonable opportunity to opt out” and “reasonable and simple methods for opting out.”

Exceptions to Initial Notice and Opt-out Requirements (12 CFR 1022.21(c)).¹⁰ The initial notice and opt-out requirements do not apply to a financial institution if it uses eligibility information that it receives from an affiliate:

1. To make a solicitation for marketing purposes to a consumer with whom the financial institution has a pre-existing business relationship;
2. To facilitate communications to an individual for whose benefit the financial institution provides employee benefit or other services pursuant to a contract with an employer;
3. To perform services on behalf of an affiliate (but this would not allow solicitation where the consumer has opted out);
4. In response to a communication about the financial institution’s products or services initiated by the consumer;
5. In response to a consumer’s authorization or request to receive solicitations; or
6. If the financial institution’s compliance with the affiliate marketing regulation would prevent it from complying with State insurance laws pertaining to unfair discrimination in any state in which the financial institution is lawfully doing business.

Contents of Opt-out Notice (12 CFR 1022.23). A financial institution must provide to the consumer a reasonable and simple method for the consumer to opt out. The opt-out notice must be clear, conspicuous, and concise, and must accurately disclose specific information outlined in 12 CFR 1022.23(a), including that the consumer may elect to limit the use of eligibility information to make solicitations to the consumer. See Appendix C to the regulation for the model notices contained in the affiliate marketing regulation.

Alternative contents. An affiliate that provides a consumer a broader right to opt out than that required by the affiliate marketing regulation may satisfy the regulatory requirements by providing the consumer with a clear, conspicuous, and concise notice that accurately discloses the consumer’s opt-out rights.

Coordinated, consolidated, and equivalent notices. Opt-out and renewal notices may be coordinated and consolidated with any other notice or disclosure required under any other provision of law, such as the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA), 15 USC 6801 et seq. Renewal notices, which have additional required content (12 CFR 1022.27), may be consolidated with the annual GLBA privacy notices.

Delivery of the Opt-out Notice (12 CFR 1022.21(a)(3) and 1022.26)¹¹ An affiliate that has or previously had a pre-existing business relationship with the consumer must provide the notice either individually or as part of a joint notice from two or more members of an affiliated group of companies. The opt-out notice must be provided so that each consumer can reasonably be expected to receive actual notice. A consumer may not reasonably be expected to receive actual notice if, for example, the affiliate providing the notice sends the notice via e-mail to a consumer who has not agreed to receive electronic disclosures by e-mail from the affiliate providing the notice.¹²

Scope of Opt-out (12 CFR 1022.22(a) and 1022.23(a)(2)).¹³ As a general rule, the consumer’s election to opt out prohibits any affiliate covered by the opt-out notice from using eligibility information received from another affiliate, described in the notice, to make solicitations to the consumer. If two or more consumers jointly obtain a product or service, any of the joint consumers may exercise the right to opt out. It is impermissible to require all joint consumers to opt out before implementing any opt-out direction.

Menu of alternatives. A consumer may be given the opportunity to choose from a menu of alternatives when electing to prohibit solicitations, such as by:

1. Electing to prohibit solicitations from certain types of affiliates covered by the opt-out notice but not other types of affiliates covered by the notice,
2. Electing to prohibit solicitations based on certain types of eligibility information but not other types of eligibility information, or
3. Electing to prohibit solicitations by certain methods of delivery but not other methods of delivery.

One of the alternatives, however, must allow the consumer to prohibit all solicitations from all of the affiliates that are covered by the notice.

¹¹ See 12 CFR 1022.26(b) and (c) for examples of “reasonable expectation of actual notice” and “no reasonable expectation of actual notice.”

¹³ See 12 CFR 1022.22(a) for examples of the scope of the opt-out, including examples of continuing relationships.

Continuing relationship. If the consumer establishes a continuing relationship with a financial institution or its affiliate, an opt-out notice may apply to eligibility information obtained from one or more continuing relationships (such as a deposit account, a mortgage loan, or a credit card), if the notice adequately describes the continuing relationships covered. The opt-out notice can also apply to future continuing relationships if the notice adequately describes the continuing future relationships that would be covered.

Special rule for a notice following termination of all continuing relationships. After all continuing relationships with a financial institution or its affiliate(s) are terminated, a consumer must be given a new opt-out notice if the consumer later establishes another continuing relationship with the financial institution or its affiliate(s) and the consumer's eligibility information is to be used to make a solicitation. The consumer's decision not to opt out after receiving the new opt-out notice would not override a prior opt-out election that applies to eligibility information obtained in connection with a terminated relationship.

No continuing relationship (isolated transaction). If the consumer does not establish a continuing relationship with a financial institution or its affiliate, but the financial institution or its affiliate obtains eligibility information about the consumer in connection with a transaction with the consumer (such as an ATM cash withdrawal, purchase of traveler's checks, or a credit application that is denied), an opt-out notice provided to the consumer only applies to eligibility information obtained in connection with that transaction.

Time, Duration, and Renewal of Opt-out (12 CFR 1022.22(b) and (c) and 1022.27). A consumer may opt out at any time. The opt-out must be effective for a period of at least five years beginning when the consumer's opt-out election is received and implemented, unless the consumer later revokes the opt-out in writing or, if the consumer agrees, electronically. An opt-out period may be set at more than five years, including an opt-out that does not expire unless the consumer revokes it.

Renewal after opt-out period expires. After the opt-out period expires, a financial institution may not make solicitations based on eligibility information it receives from an affiliate to a consumer who previously opted out, unless:

1. The consumer receives a renewal notice and opportunity to opt out, and the consumer does not renew the opt-out; or
2. An exception to the notice and opt-out requirements applies.¹⁴

¹⁴ See 12 CFR 1022.21(c) for exceptions.

Contents of renewal notice. The renewal notice must be clear, conspicuous, and concise, and must accurately disclose most of the elements of the original opt-out notice, as well as the facts that:

1. The consumer previously elected to limit the use of certain information to make solicitations to the consumer;
2. The consumer's election has expired or is about to expire;
3. The consumer may elect to renew the consumer's previous election; and
4. If applicable, that the consumer's election to renew will apply for the specified period of time stated in the notice and that the consumer will be allowed to renew the election once that period expires.

See 12 CFR 1022.27(b) for all the content requirements of renewal notice.

Renewal period. Each opt-out renewal must be effective for a period of at least five years.

Affiliate who may provide the notice. The renewal notice must be provided by the affiliate that provided the previous opt-out notice, or its successor; or as part of a joint renewal notice from two or more members of an affiliated group of companies, or their successors, that jointly provided the previous opt-out notice.

Timing of the renewal notice. A renewal notice may be provided to the consumer either a reasonable period of time before the expiration of the opt-out period¹⁵ or any time after the expiration of the opt-out period but before solicitations that would have been prohibited by the expired opt-out are made to the consumer.

Model forms for opt-out notices (12 CFR 1022, Appendix C). Appendix C of the affiliate marketing regulation contains model forms that may be used to comply with the requirement for clear, conspicuous, and concise notices. The five model forms are:

- C-1 Model Form for Initial Opt-out Notice (Single-Affiliate Notice)
- C-2 Model Form for Initial Opt-out Notice (Joint Notice)
- C-3 Model Form for Renewal Notice (Single-Affiliate Notice)
- C-4 Model Form for Renewal Notice (Joint Notice)

¹⁵ An opt-out period may not be shortened by sending a renewal notice to the consumer before expiration of the opt-out period, even if the consumer does not renew the opt-out. If a financial institution provides an annual privacy notice under the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act, providing a renewal notice with the last annual privacy notice provided to the consumer before expiration of the opt-out period is a reasonable period of time before expiration of the opt-out in all cases. 12 CFR 1022.27(d)

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

C-5 Model Form for Voluntary “No Marketing” Notice

Use of the model forms is not required and a financial institution may make certain changes to the language or format of the model forms without losing the protection from liability afforded by use of the model forms. These changes may not be so extensive as to affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the language in the model forms. Institutions making such extensive revisions will lose the safe harbor that Appendix C provides. Examples of acceptable changes are provided in Appendix C to the regulation.

Examination Procedures

Section 624 Affiliate Marketing Opt Out

1. Determine whether the financial institution receives consumer eligibility information from an affiliate. Stop here if it does not because Subpart C of 12 CFR 1022 does not apply.
2. Determine whether the financial institution uses consumer eligibility information received from an affiliate to make a solicitation for marketing purposes that is subject to the notice and opt-out requirements. If it does not, stop here.
3. Evaluate the institution’s policies, procedures, practices and internal controls to ensure that, where applicable, the consumer is provided with an appropriate notice, a reasonable opportunity, and a reasonable and simple method to opt out of the institution’s using eligibility information to make solicitations for marketing purposes to the consumer, and that the institution is honoring the consumer’s opt-outs.
4. If compliance risk management weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain and review a sample of notices to ensure technical compliance and a sample of opt-out requests from consumers to determine if the institution is honoring the opt-out requests.
 - a. Determine whether the opt-out notices are clear, conspicuous, and concise and contain the required information, including the name of the affiliate(s) providing the notice, a general description of the types of eligibility information that may be used to make solicitations to the consumer, and the duration of the opt out. (12 CFR 1022.23(a))
 - b. Review opt-out notices that are coordinated and consolidated with any other notice or disclosure that is required under other provisions of law for compliance with the affiliate marketing regulation. (12 CFR 1022.23(b))
 - c. Determine whether the opt-out notices and renewal notices provide the consumer a reasonable opportunity to opt out and a reasonable and simple method to opt out. (12 CFR 1022.24 and 1022.25)
 - d. Determine whether the opt-out notice and renewal notice are provided (by mail, delivery or electronically) so that a consumer can reasonably be expected to receive that actual notice. (12 CFR 1022.26)
 - e. Determine whether, after an opt-out period expires, a financial institution provides a consumer a renewal notice prior to making solicitations based on eligibility information received from an affiliate. (12 CFR 1022.27)

Module 3: Disclosures to Consumers and Miscellaneous RequirementsOverview

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) requires financial institutions to provide consumers with various notices and information under a variety of circumstances. This module contains examination responsibilities for these various areas.

Section 604(b) Use of Consumer Reports for Employment Purposes

Section 604(b) has specific requirements for financial institutions that obtain consumer reports of its employees or prospective employees prior to, and/or during, the term of employment. The FCRA generally requires the written permission of the consumer to procure a consumer report for “employment purposes.” Moreover, a clear and conspicuous disclosure that a consumer report may be obtained for employment purposes must be provided in writing to the consumer prior to procuring a report.

Prior to taking any adverse action involving employment that is based in whole or in part on the consumer report, the user generally must provide to the consumer:

1. A copy of the report; and
2. A description in writing of the rights of the consumer under this title, as prescribed by the FTC under section (609)(c)(3).

At the time a financial institution takes adverse action in an employment situation, the consumer must also be provided with an adverse action notice, required by section 615, described later in this module.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution obtains consumer reports on current or prospective employees.
2. Assess the financial institution’s policies and procedures to ensure that appropriate disclosures are provided to current and prospective employees when consumer reports are obtained for employment purposes, including situations where adverse actions are taken based on consumer report information.
3. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of the disclosures to determine if they are accurate and in compliance with the technical FCRA requirements.

Sections 604(c) and 615(d) of FCRA - Prescreened Consumer Reports and Opt out Notice [and Parts 642 and 698 of Federal Trade Commission Regulations]

Section 604(c)(1)(B) allows persons, including financial institutions, to obtain and use consumer reports on any consumer in connection with any credit or insurance transaction that is not initiated by the consumer, to make firm offers of credit or insurance. This process, known as prescreening, occurs when a financial institution obtains a list from a consumer reporting agency of consumers who meet certain predetermined creditworthiness criteria and who have not elected to be excluded from such lists. These lists may only contain the following information:

1. The name and address of a consumer;
2. An identifier that is not unique to the consumer and that is used by the person solely for the purpose of verifying the identity of the consumer; and
3. Other information pertaining to a consumer that does not identify the relationship or experience of the consumer with respect to a particular creditor or other entity.

Each name appearing on the list is considered an individual consumer report. In order to obtain and use these lists, financial institutions must make a “firm offer of credit or insurance” as defined in section 603(1) to each person on the list. An institution is not required to grant credit or insurance if the consumer is not creditworthy or insurable, or cannot furnish required collateral, provided that the underwriting criteria are determined in advance, and applied consistently.

Example 1: Assume a home mortgage lender obtains a list from a consumer reporting agency of everyone in County X, with a current home mortgage loan and a credit score of 700. The lender will use this list to market a 2nd lien home equity loan product. The lender’s other non-consumer report criteria, in addition to those used in the prescreened list for this product, include a maximum total debt-to-income ratio (DTI) of 50% or less. Some of the criteria can be screened by the consumer reporting agency, but others, such as the DTI, must be determined individually when consumers respond to the offer. If a consumer responds to the offer, but already has a DTI of 60%, the lender does not have to grant the loan.

In addition, the financial institution is allowed to obtain a full consumer report on anyone responding to the offer to verify that the consumer continues to meet the creditworthiness criteria. If the consumer no longer meets those criteria, the financial institution does not have to grant the loan.

Example 2: On January 1, a credit card lender obtains a list from a consumer reporting agency of consumers in County Y who have credit scores of 720, and no previous bankruptcy records. The lender mails solicitations offering a pre-approved credit card to everyone on the list on January 2. On January 31, a consumer responds to the offer and the lender obtains and reviews a full consumer report which shows that a bankruptcy record was added on January 15. Since this consumer no longer meets the lender's predetermined criteria, the lender is not required to issue the credit card.

These basic requirements help prevent financial institutions from obtaining prescreened lists without following through with an offer of credit or insurance. The financial institution must maintain the criteria used for the product (including the criteria used to generate the prescreened report and any other criteria such as collateral requirements) on file for a period of three years, beginning on the date that the offer was made to the consumer.

Technical Notice and Opt Out Requirements. Section 615(d) contains consumer protections and technical notice requirements concerning prescreened offers of credit or insurance. The FCRA requires nationwide consumer reporting agencies to jointly operate an "opt out" system, whereby consumers can elect to be excluded from prescreened lists by calling a toll-free number.

When a financial institution obtains and uses these lists, they must provide consumers with a Prescreened Opt Out Notice with the offer of credit or insurance. This notice alerts consumers that they are receiving the offer because they meet certain creditworthiness criteria. The notice must also provide the toll-free telephone number operated by the nationwide consumer reporting agencies for consumers to call to opt out of prescreened lists.

The FCRA contains the basic requirement to provide notices to consumers at the time the prescreened offers are made. The Federal Trade Commission published an implementing regulation containing the technical requirements of the notice at 16 CFR Parts 642 and 698. This regulation is applicable to anyone, including banks, credit unions, and thrifts that obtain and use prescreened consumer reports. These requirements became effective on August 1, 2005; however, the requirement to provide a notice containing the toll-free opt out telephone number has existed under the FCRA for many years.

Requirements Beginning August 1, 2005. 16 CFR 642 and 698 of the FTC regulations require a "short" notice and a "long" notice of the prescreened opt out information be given with each written solicitation made to consumers using prescreened consumer reports. These regulations also contain specific requirements concerning the content and appearance of these notices. The requirements are listed within the following paragraphs of these procedures. The regulations were published on January 31, 2005, in 70 Federal Register 5022.

The short notice must be a clear and conspicuous, simple, and easy-to-understand statement as follows:

1. Content. The short notice must state that the consumer has the right to opt out of receiving prescreened solicitations, provide the toll-free number, and direct consumers to the existence and location of the long notice, and shall state the title of the long notice. The short notice may not contain any other information.
2. Form. The short notice must be in a type size larger than the principal text on the same page, but it may not be smaller than 12 point type. If the notice is provided by electronic means, it must be larger than the type size of the principal text on the same page.
3. Location. The short form must be on the front side of the first page of the principal promotional document in the solicitation, or if provided electronically, it must be on the same page and in close proximity to the principal marketing message. The statement must be located so that it is distinct from other information, such as inside a border, and must be in a distinct type style, such as bolded, italicized, underlined, and/or in a color that contrasts with the principal text on the page, if the solicitation is provided in more than one color.

The long notice must also be a clear and conspicuous, simple, and easy to understand statement as follows:

1. Content. The long notice must state the information required by section 615(d) of the FCRA and may not include any other information that interferes with, detracts from, contradicts, or otherwise undermines the purpose of the notice.
2. Form. The notice must appear in the solicitation, be in a type size that is no smaller than the type size of the principal text on the same page, and, for solicitations provided other than by electronic means, the type size may not be smaller than 8-point type. The notice must begin with a heading in capital letters and underlined, and identifying the long notice as the "PRESCREEN & OPT OUT NOTICE." It must be in a type style that is distinct from the principal type style used on the same page, such as bolded, italicized, underlined, and/or in a color that contrasts from the principal text, if the solicitation is in more than one color. The notice must be set apart from other text on the page, such as by including a blank line above and below the statement, and by indenting both the left and right margins from other text on the page.

The FTC developed model Prescreened Opt Out Notices, which are contained in Appendix A to 16 CFR 698 of the FTC's regulations. Appendix A contains complete sample solicitations for context. The prescreen notice text is contained in the following:

Sample Short Notice:

You can choose to stop receiving “prescreened” offers of [credit or insurance] from this and other companies by calling toll-free [toll-free number]. See PRESCREEN & OPT-OUT NOTICE on other side [or other location] for more information about prescreened offers.

Sample Long Notice:

PRESCREEN & OPT-OUT NOTICE: This “prescreened” offer of [credit or insurance] is based on information in your credit report indicating that you meet certain criteria. This offer is not guaranteed if you do not meet our criteria [including providing acceptable property as collateral]. If you do not want to receive prescreened offers of [credit or insurance] from this and other companies, call the consumer reporting agencies [or name of consumer reporting agency] toll-free, [toll-free number]; or write: [consumer reporting agency name and mailing address].

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution obtained and used prescreened consumer reports in connection with offers of credit and/or insurance.
2. Evaluate the institution’s policies and procedures to ensure that criteria used for prescreened offers, including all post-application criteria, are maintained in the institution’s files and used consistently when consumers respond to the offers.
3. Determine whether written solicitations contain the required disclosures of the consumers’ right to opt out of prescreened solicitations and comply with all requirements applicable at the time of the offer.
4. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, obtain and review a sample of approved and denied responses to the offers to ensure that criteria were appropriately followed.

Section 605(g) Truncation of Credit and Debit Card Account Numbers

Section 605(g) provides that persons, including financial institutions that accept debit and credit cards for the transaction of business will be prohibited from issuing electronic receipts that contain more than the last five digits of the card number, or the card expiration dates, at the point of sale or transaction. This requirement applies only to electronically developed receipts and does not apply to hand-written receipts or those developed with an imprint of the card.

For Automatic Teller Machines (ATMs) and Point-of-Sale (POS) terminals or other machines that were put into operation before January 1, 2005, this requirement is effective on December 4, 2006. For ATMs and POS terminals or other machines that were put into operation on or after January 1, 2005, the effective date is the date of installation.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution’s policies and procedures ensure that electronically generated receipts from ATM and POS terminals or other machines do not contain more than the last five digits of the card number and do not contain the expiration dates.
2. For ATMs and POS terminals or other machines that were put into operation before January 1, 2005, determine if the institution has brought the terminals into compliance or has begun a plan to ensure that these terminals comply by the mandatory compliance date of December 4, 2006.
3. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review samples of actual receipts to ensure compliance.

Section 609(g) Disclosure of Credit Scores by Certain Mortgage Lenders

Section 609(g) requires financial institutions that make or arrange mortgage loans using credit scores to provide the score with accompanying information to the applicants.

Credit score. For purposes of this section, the term “credit score” is defined as a numerical value or a categorization derived from a statistical tool or modeling system used by a person who makes or arranges a loan to predict the likelihood of certain credit behaviors, including default (and the numerical value or the categorization derived from such analysis may also be referred to as a “risk predictor” or “risk score”). The credit score does not include:

- (a) any mortgage score or rating by an automated underwriting system that considers one or more factors in addition to credit information, such as the loan-to-value ratio, the amount of down payment, or the financial assets of a consumer; or
- (b) any other elements of the underwriting process or underwriting decision.

Covered transactions. The disclosure requirement applies to both closed-end and open-end loans that are for consumer purposes and are secured by 1-to-4 family residential real properties, including purchase and refinance transactions. This requirement will not apply in circumstances that do not involve a consumer purpose, such as when a borrower obtains a loan secured by his or her residence to finance his or her small business.

Specific required notice. Financial institutions in covered transactions that use credit scores must provide a disclosure containing the following specific language, which is contained in section 609(g)(1)(D):

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Notice to The Home Loan Applicant

In connection with your application for a home loan, the lender must disclose to you the score that a consumer reporting agency distributed to users and the lender used in connection with your home loan, and the key factors affecting your credit scores.

The credit score is a computer generated summary calculated at the time of the request and based on information that a consumer reporting agency or lender has on file. The scores are based on data about your credit history and payment patterns. Credit scores are important because they are used to assist the lender in determining whether you will obtain a loan. They may also be used to determine what interest rate you may be offered on the mortgage. Credit scores can change over time, depending on your conduct, how your credit history and payment patterns change, and how credit scoring technologies change.

Because the score is based on information in your credit history, it is very important that you review the credit-related information that is being furnished to make sure it is accurate. Credit records may vary from one company to another.

If you have questions about your credit score or the credit information that is furnished to you, contact the consumer reporting agency at the address and telephone number provided with this notice, or contact the lender, if the lender developed or generated the credit score. The consumer reporting agency plays no part in the decision to take any action on the loan application and is unable to provide you with specific reasons for the decision on a loan application.

If you have questions concerning the terms of the loan, contact the lender.

The notice must include the name, address, and telephone number of each consumer reporting agency that provided a credit score that was used.

Credit score and key factors disclosed. In addition to the notice, financial institutions must also disclose the credit score, the range of possible scores, the date that the score was created, and the “key factors” used in the score calculation. “Key factors” are defined as all relevant elements or reasons adversely affecting the credit score for the particular individual, listed in the order of their importance based on their effect on the credit score. The total number of factors to be disclosed shall not exceed four factors. However, if one of the key factors is the number of inquiries into a consumer’s credit information, then the total number of factors shall not exceed five. These key factors come from information supplied by the consumer reporting agencies with any consumer report that was furnished containing a credit score. (Section 605(d)(2)).

This disclosure requirement applies in any application for a covered transaction, regardless of the final action taken by the lender on the application. The FCRA requires a financial institution to disclose all of the credit scores that were used in these transactions. For example, if two joint applicants apply for a mortgage loan to purchase a single-family-residence and the lender uses both credit scores, then both need to be disclosed. The statute specifically does not require more than one disclosure per loan; therefore, if multiple scores are used, all of them can be included in one disclosure containing the Notice to the Home Loan Applicant.

If a financial institution uses a credit score that was not obtained directly from a consumer reporting agency, but may contain some information from a consumer reporting agency, this disclosure requirement may be satisfied by providing a score and associated key factor information that were supplied by a consumer reporting agency. For example, certain automated underwriting systems generate a score used in a credit decision. These systems are often populated by data obtained from a consumer reporting agency. If a financial institution uses this automated system, the disclosure requirement may be satisfied by providing the applicants with a score and key factors supplied by a consumer reporting agency based on the data, including credit score(s) that was imported into the automated underwriting system. This will provide applicants with information about their credit history and its role in the credit decision, in the spirit of this section of the statute.

Timing. With regard to the timing of the disclosure, the statute requires that it be provided as soon as is reasonably practicable after using a credit score.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution uses credit scores in connection with applications for closed-end or open-end loans secured by 1 to 4 family residential real property.
2. Evaluate the institution’s policies and procedures to determine whether accurate disclosures are provided to applicants as soon as is reasonably practicable after using credit scores.
3. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of disclosures given to home loan applicants to ensure technical compliance with the requirements.

Section 615(a) and (b) Adverse Action Disclosures

The FCRA requires certain disclosures when adverse actions are taken with respect to consumers, based on information received from third parties. Specific disclosures are required depending upon whether the source of the information is: a consumer reporting agency, a third party other than a consumer reporting agency, or an affiliate. The disclosure requirements are discussed separately below.

Information Obtained From a Consumer Reporting Agency.

Section 615(a) provides that when adverse action is taken with respect to any consumer that is based in whole or in part on any information contained in a consumer report, the financial institution must:

1. Provide oral, written, or electronic notice of the adverse action to the consumer;
2. Provide to the consumer orally, in writing, or electronically,
 - a. the name, address, and telephone number of the consumer reporting agency from which it received the information (including a toll-free telephone number established by the agency, if the consumer reporting agency maintains files on a nationwide basis); and
 - b. a statement that the consumer reporting agency did not make the decision to take the adverse action and is unable to provide the consumer the specific reasons why the adverse action was taken; and
3. Provide the consumer an oral, written or electronic notice of the consumer's right to obtain a free copy of the consumer report from the consumer reporting agency, within 60 days of receiving notice of the adverse action, and the consumer's right to dispute the accuracy or completeness of any information in the consumer report with the consumer reporting agency.

Information Obtained from a Source Other Than a Consumer Reporting Agency.

Section 615(b)(1) provides that if credit for personal, family, or household purposes involving a consumer is denied or the charge for such credit is increased, partially or wholly on the basis of information obtained from a person other than a consumer reporting agency and bearing upon the consumer's creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living, the financial institution:

1. At the time an adverse action is communicated to a consumer, must clearly and accurately disclose the consumer's right to file a written request for the reasons for the adverse action; and
2. If it receives such a request within 60 days after the consumer learns of the adverse action, must disclose, within a reasonable period of time, the nature of the adverse information. The information should be sufficiently detailed to enable the consumer to evaluate its accuracy. The source of the information need not be, but may be, disclosed. In some instances, it may be impossible to identify the nature of certain information without also revealing the source.

Information Obtained from an Affiliate. Section 615(b)(2) provides that if a person, including a financial institution, takes an adverse action involving credit (taken in connection with a transaction initiated by a consumer), insurance or employment, based in whole or in part on information provided by an affiliate, it must notify the consumer that the information:

1. Is furnished to the person taking the action by a person related by common ownership or affiliated by common corporate control, to the person taking the action;
2. Bears upon the consumer's creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living;
3. Is not information solely involving transactions or experiences between the consumer and the person furnishing the information; and
4. Is not information in a consumer report.

The notification must inform the consumer of the action and that the consumer may obtain a disclosure of the nature of the information relied upon by making a written request within 60 days of transmittal of the adverse action notice. If the consumer makes such a request, the user must disclose the nature of the information received from the affiliate not later than 30 days after receiving the request.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution's policies and procedures adequately ensure that appropriate disclosures are provided when adverse action is taken against consumers based on information received from consumer reporting agencies, other third parties, and/or affiliates.
2. Review the financial institution's policies and procedures for responding to requests for information in response to these adverse action notices.
3. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of adverse action notices to determine if they are accurate and in technical compliance.

Section 615(g) Debt Collector Communications Concerning Identity Theft

Section 615(g) has specific requirements for financial institutions that act as debt collectors, that is, the financial institution collects debts on behalf of a third party that is a creditor or other user of a consumer report. The requirements do not apply when a financial institution is collecting its own loans. When a financial institution is notified that any information relating to a debt that it is attempting to collect may be fraudulent or may be the result of identity theft, the financial institution must notify the third party of this fact. In addition, if the consumer, to whom the debt purportedly relates, requests information about the transaction, the financial institution must provide all of the information the consumer would otherwise be entitled to if the consumer wished to dispute the debt under other provisions of law applicable to the financial institution.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution collects debts for third parties.
2. Determine that the financial institution has policies and procedures to ensure that the third parties are notified if the financial institution obtains any information that may indicate the debt in question is the result of fraud or identity theft.
3. Determine if the institution has effective policies and procedures to provide information to consumers to whom the fraudulent debts relate.
4. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of instances where consumers have alleged identity theft and requested information related to transactions to ensure that all of the appropriate information was provided to the consumer.

Section 615(h) Duties of Users Regarding Risk-Based Pricing (Regulation V, Subpart H)

Background

Section 615(h) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) generally requires a user of consumer reports, such as a financial institution, to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer when the financial institution, based on a consumer report, extends credit to the consumer on terms that are “materially less favorable” than the terms the financial institution has extended to other consumers. On January 15, 2010, the Federal Reserve and the Federal Trade Commission published final rules in the Federal Register (75 FR 2724) implementing this section of the FCRA.

The risk-based pricing notice requirement is designed primarily to improve the accuracy of consumer reports by alerting consumers to the existence of negative information in their consumer reports so that the consumers can, if they choose, check their consumer reports for accuracy and correct any inaccurate information. This notice provision is meant to complement an existing provision of the FCRA, Section 615(a), whereby a creditor that denies a consumer’s application for credit, based in whole or in part on information in a consumer’s report, must provide an adverse action notice. The new provision, Section 615(h), covers the situation where credit is offered at “materially less favorable terms,” rather than being denied.

Definitions (12 CFR 1022.71)

The following definitions pertain to the rules governing the risk-based pricing regulation:

1. “Material terms” means in general:
 - a. For open-end credit, the annual percentage rate (APR) required to be disclosed in the account opening disclosures required under Regulation Z. This does not include a temporary initial rate that is lower than the rate that will apply when the temporary rate expires, any penalty rate that applies upon the occurrence of specific events (such as a late payment), or any fixed APR option for a home equity line of credit;
 - b. For credit cards (other than a credit card used to access a home equity line of credit or a charge card), the APR that applies for purchases. For credit cards without a purchase APR, “material terms” means the APR that varies based on consumer report information and that has the most significant financial impact on consumers;
 - c. For closed-end credit, the APR required to be disclosed prior to consummation under the closed-end provisions of Regulation Z; and
 - d. For credit that does not have an APR, the financial term that varies based on consumer report information and that has the most significant financial impact on consumers, such as an annual membership fee for a charge card.
2. “Materially less favorable” means, generally, that the cost of credit to a consumer would be significantly greater than the cost of credit to another consumer from or through the same creditor. Relevant factors in determining the significance of a difference in cost include the type of credit product, the term of the credit extension, and the extent of the difference.

General Requirements (12 CFR 1022.72-73)

A financial institution must provide to a consumer a notice (“risk-based pricing notice”) in the form and manner prescribed by the regulation if:

1. The institution uses a consumer report in connection with an application for, or a grant, extension, or other provision of, credit to a consumer for personal, family, or household purposes; and
2. Based in whole or in part on the consumer report, the institution grants, extends, or otherwise provides credit to that consumer on material terms that are materially less favorable than the most favorable material terms available to a substantial proportion of consumers from that institution.

The obligation to provide the notice applies to the creditor to whom the obligation is initially payable, i.e. the original creditor. This interpretation excludes brokers and other intermediaries who do not themselves grant, extend, or provide credit to consumers. See preamble to the final regulation (75 FR at 2730 - 2731).

Determination of which consumers must receive notice (12 CFR 1022.72(b))

A financial institution may determine, on a case-by-case basis, whether a consumer has received material terms that are materially less favorable by comparing the material terms offered to the consumer to the material terms offered to other consumers for a specific type of credit product. A “specific type of credit product” means one or more credit products with similar features that are designed for similar purposes. Examples include student loans, unsecured credit cards, secured credit cards, new automobile loans, used automobile loans, fixed-rate mortgage loans, and variable-rate mortgage loans.

Because making such a direct comparison between consumers may not be operationally feasible, the rules provide the two alternative methods, a credit score proxy method and a tiered pricing method, both of which are described as follows:

1. Credit score proxy method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(1)). If a creditor uses credit scores to set the material terms of credit, the creditor may determine a cutoff score that represents the point at which approximately 40 percent of its consumers have higher credit scores and 60 percent of its consumers have lower credit scores. The creditor may then provide a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer who has a credit score lower than the cutoff score.

Credit Score Proxy Example
The number of all, or a representative sample of, consumers to whom the institution granted credit for a specific type of credit product	10,000
40 percent of consumers	4,000
Credit scores of the 4,000 consumers with the highest credit scores	700 or higher
Cutoff score	700
Credit scores of those consumers to whom the creditor must provide a risk-based pricing notice, because the consumers' scores are lower than cutoff score	699 or lower

Alternative to 40/60 cutoff. The regulation provides an alternative to the 40/60 cutoff discussed above for situations where more than 40 percent of consumers (e.g., 80 percent) receive the most favorable material terms. In such situations, the creditor may set a different cutoff score based on its historical experience. The cutoff score would be set at a point at which the approximate percentage of consumers who historically have received the most favorable material terms based on their credit score would not receive a notice in the future. Under this alternative, the risk-based pricing notices would be provided to the approximate percentage of consumers who historically have been granted credit on material terms other than the most favorable terms.

For example, based on a sample of credit extended in the past six months, a creditor may determine that approximately 80 percent of its consumers received credit at its lowest APR (i.e., the most favorable material terms), and 20 percent of its consumers received credit at a higher APR (i.e., material terms other than the most favorable). Approximately 80 percent of the sampled consumers had a credit score at or above 750, and 20 percent had a credit score below 750. As a result, the card issuer could select 750 as its cutoff score. Consumers who have credit scores lower than 750 would receive the risk-based pricing notice. See preamble to the final regulation (75 FR at 2733).

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Recalculation. An institution must recalculate the score no less than every two years.

Specific type of product. A financial institution must calculate the cutoff score by considering the credit scores of all, or a representative sample of, the consumers who have received credit for a specific type of credit product.

New entrants or new products. For new entrants into the credit business or for new products subject to risk-based pricing, a financial institution may determine the cutoff score based on information from market research or other third-party sources. For a newly acquired credit portfolio, a financial institution may determine the cutoff score from information obtained from the party from which it acquired the portfolio. The institution must recalculate the cutoff score using the scores of its own consumers within one year after it begins using a score derived from market research, a third-party, or the party from which it acquired the portfolio. If, within that one year, it has not granted credit to a sufficient number of new consumers, thus preventing it from having sufficient data with which to recalculate a cut-off score based on the credit scores of its own consumers, it may continue to use the original cutoff score. However, within two years, it must calculate its own cutoff score if it has granted credit to some new consumers within those two years.

Use of multiple credit scores. For a financial institution that generally uses two or more credit scores to set material credit terms, the institution must determine the cutoff score using the same method used to evaluate multiple scores when making credit decisions (for example, using an average credit score). If the institution does not consistently use the same method for evaluating multiple scores, the institution must use a reasonable means. For example, the institution may use any one of the methods that the institution ordinarily uses or the average credit score of each consumer to calculate the credit score by a reasonable means.

No credit score available for a consumer. If no credit score is available for a consumer, a financial institution must assume that it is granting credit on materially less favorable terms and thus must provide a risk-based pricing notice to the consumer.

2. Tiered pricing method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(2)). If a financial institution sets the material terms of credit by assigning each consumer to one of a discrete number of pricing tiers for a specific type of credit product, based in whole or in part on a consumer report, the institution may provide a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer who is not assigned to the top pricing tier or tiers.

If the financial institution uses four or fewer pricing tiers, it complies by providing risk-based pricing notices to all consumers who do not qualify for the top, best-priced tier. If the institution uses five or more pricing tiers, it complies by providing the notices to all consumers who do not qualify for the two top, best-priced tiers and any other tier that, combined with the top two tiers, equal no less than the top 30 percent and no more than the top 40 percent of the total number of tiers.

Tiered Pricing Example
Four or fewer tiers
Top tier = best rate	APR	Notice requirement
Tier 1 (top)	8%	No risk-based pricing notice required.
Tier 2	10%	Risk-based pricing notice required for Tiers 2-4.
Tier 3	12%
Tier 4	14%
Five or more tiers (5 tiers)
Tier 1 (top)	8%	No risk-based pricing notice required for top 30% to 40% of tiers. Top two tiers comprise 2 out of 5 (40%) of the number of tiers.
Tier 2	10%
Tier 3	12%	Risk-based notices required for Tiers 3-5.
Tier 4	14%
Tier 5	16%
Five or more tiers (9 tiers)
Tier 1 (top)	8%	No risk-based pricing notice required for top 30% to 40% of tiers. Top three tiers comprise 3 out of 9 (33%) of the number of tiers.
Tier 2	10%
Tier 3	12%
Tier 4	14%	Risk-based notices required for Tiers 4-9.
Tier 5	16%
Tier 6	18%
Tier 7	20%
Tier 8	22%
Tier 9	24%

Application to credit card issuers (12 CFR 1022.72(c)). A credit card issuer may use any of the methods in 12 CFR 1022.72(b) to identify consumers to whom it must provide a risk-based pricing notice. Alternatively, the card issuer may provide the notice when:

- (a) a consumer applies for a credit card in connection with an application program or in response to a solicitation, and more than one purchase APR may apply under the program or solicitation, and
- (b) based in whole or in part on a consumer report, the credit card is issued to a consumer with an APR that is higher than the lowest APR available in connection with the application or solicitation.

The risk-based pricing requirements do not apply to a card issuer if the credit card program offers only a single annual APR (other than temporary initial rates or penalty rates) or if the issuer offers the consumer the lowest possible APR under the credit card program.

Content of the notice (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(1)). The risk-based pricing notice must include:

1. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;
2. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
3. The identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the credit decision;
4. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;
5. A statement informing the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and providing contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies;
6. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports;
7. A statement that the terms offered, such as the APR, have been set based on information from a consumer report; and
8. A statement that the terms offered may be less favorable than the terms offered to consumers with better credit histories.

See Appendix H-1 of the regulation for a model form for the risk-based pricing notice.

Account Review (12 CFR 1022.72(d)). Generally, creditors must provide an account review risk-based pricing notice to the consumer if the creditor, based in whole or in part on a consumer report, increases the consumer's APR after a review of the consumer's account, unless one of the exceptions in 12 CFR 1022.74(a), (b), or (c) applies (for example, the creditor provides an adverse action notice).

Content of account review risk-based pricing notice (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(2)). The account review risk-based pricing notice must include:

1. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;
2. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
3. The identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the account review;
4. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;
5. A statement informing the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and providing contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies;
6. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports;
7. A statement that the financial institution has conducted a review of the account using information from a consumer report; and
8. A statement that as a result of the review, the APR on the account has been increased based on information from a consumer report.

NOTE: Items 1 through 6 for account review risk-based pricing notice are substantially the same as items 1 through 6 for the risk-based pricing notice. Only the last two items in each list are different.

See Appendix H-2 of the regulation for a model form for the account review risk-based pricing notice.

Form of the notice (12 CFR 1022.73(b)). The risk-based pricing notices and the account review risk-based pricing notices must be clear and conspicuous and provided to the consumer in oral, written, or electronic form. Creditors are deemed to be in compliance with the disclosure requirements through use of the optional, applicable model forms, found in Appendix H of the regulation.

Timing (12 CFR 1022.73(c)). The timing requirement depends on the specific type of credit transaction as specified below:

- For closed-end credit, a risk-based pricing notice must be provided to the consumer after the decision to approve a credit request is communicated to the consumer, but before consummation of the transaction.
- For open-end credit, the notice must be provided after the decision to grant credit is communicated to the consumer, but before the first transaction under the plan has been made.
- For account reviews, the notice must be provided at the time that the decision to increase the APR is communicated to the consumer. If no notice of the increase in the APR is provided to the consumer prior to the effective date of the APR change, the notice must be provided no later than five days after the effective date of the APR change.
- For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer that is unaffiliated with the institution, the institution may provide a risk-based pricing notice in the time periods described above for closed-end credit. Alternatively, the institution may arrange to have the auto dealer provide a risk-based pricing notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notices to consumers within the applicable time periods.
- For instant credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone, the risk-based pricing notice may be provided at the earlier of:
 - The time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or
 - Within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit.

Exceptions (12 CFR 1022.74)

The rules contain a number of exceptions to the risk-based pricing notice requirement, as follows:

1. When a consumer applies for specific terms of credit, and receives them, unless those terms were specified by the creditor using a consumer report after the consumer applied for the credit and after the creditor obtained the consumer report (12 CFR 1022.74(a));
2. When a creditor provides a notice of adverse action (12 CFR 1022.74(b));
3. When a creditor makes a firm offer of credit in a prescreened solicitation (12 CFR 1022.74(c));
4. When an institution generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is or will be secured by residential real property (12 CFR 1022.74(d));
5. When an institution generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is not or will not be secured by residential real property (12 CFR 1022.74(e));
6. When an institution, which otherwise provides credit score disclosures to consumers that request loans, provides a disclosure about credit scores when no credit score is available (12 CFR 1022.74(f)).

The regulation contains specific disclosure requirements for Sections 1022.74(d)-(f) exceptions, as discussed below.

Section 1022.74(d) exception – credit score disclosure for loans secured by residential real property (12 CFR 1022.74(d)).

An institution is not required to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer under Sections 1022.72(a) or (c) if:

1. The consumer requests from an institution an extension of credit that is or will be secured by one to four units of residential real property; and
2. The institution generally provides to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit a notice that contains the following:
 - a. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer's credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;
 - b. A statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;
 - c. A statement that the consumer's credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;
 - d. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
 - e. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;

- f. Contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;
- g. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports;
- h. The information required to be disclosed to the consumer in Section 609(g) of the FCRA, and as described in Module 3 of these examination procedures, under “Disclosure of Credit Scores by Certain Mortgage Lenders (FCRA), Section 609(g)”;
- and
- i. The distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer’s credit score. The distribution must:
 - (i) Use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer; and
 - (ii) Be presented:
 - In the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar,
 - By other clear and readily understandable graphical means, or
 - In a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers.

The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements.

Form of the notice. (1022.74(d)) The notice must be:

- a. Clear and conspicuous;
- b. Provided on or with the notice required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA;
- c. Segregated from other information provided to the consumer, except for the notice required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA; and
- d. Provided to the consumer in writing and in a form that the consumer may keep.

Timing. (1022.74(d)) The notice must be provided to the consumer at the same time as the disclosure required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA is provided to the consumer, which must be provided as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained. In any event, the Section 1022.74(d) notice must be provided at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.

Content of the notice when using multiple credit scores.

When an institution obtains two or more credit scores from consumer reporting agencies in setting material terms of credit, the content of the Section 1022.74(d) notice varies depending upon whether the institution only relies upon one of the credit scores or relies upon multiple credit scores.

- a. If an institution only relies upon one of those credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by using the low, middle, high, or most recent score), the notice must include that credit score and the other information required by Section 1022.74(d).
- b. If an institution relies upon multiple credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by computing the average of all the credit scores obtained), the notice must include one of those credit scores and the other information required by Section 1022.74(d).

At the institution’s option, the notice may include more than one credit score, along with the additional information required by Section 1022.74(d) for each credit score disclosed.

Examples.

- a. An institution uses consumer reports to set the material terms of mortgage credit granted, extended, or provided to consumers and regularly requests credit scores from several consumer reporting agencies. It relies upon the low score when determining the material terms it will offer to the consumer. The institution must disclose the low score in the Section 1022.74(d) notice.
- b. An institution uses consumer reports to set the material terms of mortgage credit granted, extended, or provided to consumers and regularly requests credit scores from several consumer reporting agencies. The institution takes an average of all of the credit scores obtained in order to determine the material terms it will offer to the consumer, and thus relies upon all of the credit scores that it receives. The institution may choose one of these scores to include in the Section 1022.74(d) notice.

Model form. Appendix H-3 of the regulation contains a model form of the Section 1022.74(d) notice that is consolidated with the notice required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA. While use of the model form is optional, appropriate use of Model Form H-3 is deemed to comply with the requirements of Section 1022.74(d).

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Section 1022.74(e) exception – credit score disclosure for loans not secured by residential real property (12 CFR 1022.74(e)). An institution is not required to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer under Section 1022.72(a) or (c) if:

1. The consumer requests from an institution an extension of credit that is not or will not be secured by one to four units of residential real property; and
2. The institution provides to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit a notice that contains the following:
 - a. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer's credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;
 - b. A statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;
 - c. A statement that the consumer's credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;
 - d. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
 - e. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;
 - f. Contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;
 - g. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports;
 - h. The current credit score of the consumer or the most recent credit score of the consumer that was previously calculated by the consumer reporting agency for a purpose related to the extension of credit;
 - i. The distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer's credit score. The distribution must:
 - Use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer, and
 - Be presented:

- In the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar,
- By other clear and readily understandable graphical means, or
- In a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers.

The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements.

- j. The range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;
- k. The date on which the credit score was created; and
- l. The name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.

NOTE: Items a, b, c, d, e, f, g, and i for the Section 1022.74(e) notice are the same as items a, b, c, d, e, f, g, and i for the Section 1022.74(d) notice.

Form of the notice. 1022.74(e) The notice must be:

- a. Clear and conspicuous;
- b. Segregated from other information provided to the consumer; and
- c. Provided to the consumer in writing and in a form that the consumer may keep.

Timing. 1022.74(e) The notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained, but in any event at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan. The notice may alternatively be provided in the following manner:

1. For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer that is unaffiliated with the institution, the institution may provide a Section 1022.74(e) notice in the time periods described above. Alternatively, the institution may arrange to have the auto dealer provide a Section 1022.74(e) notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notice to the consumer within the applicable time periods. If the institution arranges to have the auto dealer provide a Section 1022.74(e) notice, the institution complies if the consumer receives a notice containing a credit score obtained by the dealer, even if a different credit score is obtained and used by the institution. (12 CFR 1022.73(c)(2))

2. For instant credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone, the Section 1022.74(e) notice may be provided at the earlier of:
 - a. The time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or
 - b. Within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit. 12 CFR 1022.73(c)(3)

Multiple credit scores. When an institution obtains two or more credit scores from consumer reporting agencies in setting material terms of credit, the content of the Section 1022.74(e) notice varies depending if the institution relies upon only one of the credit scores or relies upon multiple credit scores. These disclosures requirements are the same as those for the Section 1022.74(d) notices, as described previously.

Model form. Appendix H-4 of the regulation contains a model form of the Section 1022.74(e) notice. While use of the model form is optional, appropriate use of Model Form H-4 is deemed to comply with the requirements of Section 1022.74(e).

Section 1022.74(f) exception – credit score not available (12 CFR 1022.74(f)). An institution is not required to provide a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer under Section 1022.72(a) or (c) if the institution:

1. Regularly obtains credit scores from a consumer reporting agency and provides credit score disclosures to consumers in accordance with Sections 1022.74(d) or (e), but a credit score is not available from the consumer reporting agency from which the institution regularly obtains credit scores for a consumer to whom the institution grants, extends, or provides credit;
2. Does not obtain a credit score from another consumer reporting agency in connection with granting, extending, or providing credit to the consumer; and
3. Provides to the consumer a notice that contains the following:
 - a. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer’s credit history and the type of information included in that history;
 - b. A statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time in response to changes in the consumer’s credit history;
 - c. A statement that credit scores are important because consumers with higher credit scores generally obtain more favorable credit terms;

- d. A statement that not having a credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;
- e. A statement that a credit score about the consumer was not available from a consumer reporting agency, which must be identified by name, generally due to insufficient information regarding the consumer’s credit history;
- f. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the consumer report;
- g. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free consumer report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;
- h. The contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports; and
- i. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports.

NOTE: Items b, f, g, h, and i for the Section 1022.74(f) notice are the same as items b, f, g, h, and i for the Sections 1022.74(d) and (e) notices.

Example. An institution uses consumer reports to set the material terms of non-mortgage credit granted, extended, or provided to consumers and regularly requests credit scores from a particular consumer reporting agency. As required by Section 1022.74(e), the institution provides those credit scores and additional information to consumers. The consumer reporting agency provides to the institution a consumer report on a particular consumer that contains one trade line, but does not provide the institution with a credit score on that consumer. If the institution does not obtain a credit score from another consumer reporting agency and, based in whole or in part on information in a consumer report, grants, extends, or provides credit to the consumer, the institution may provide the Section 1022.74(f) notice. If, however, the institution obtains a credit score from another consumer reporting agency, the institution may not rely upon the Section 1022.74(f) exception, but must satisfy the requirements of Section 1022.74(e).

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Form of the notice. The Section 1022.74(f) notice must be:

1. Clear and conspicuous;
2. Segregated from other information provided to the consumer; and
3. Provided to the consumer in writing and in a form that the consumer may keep.

Timing. (1022.74(f)) The notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the institution has requested the credit score, but in any event not later than consummation of a transaction in the case of closed-end credit or when the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan. The notice may alternatively be provided in the following manner:

1. For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer that is unaffiliated with the institution, the institution may provide a Section 1022.74(f) notice in the time periods described above. Alternatively, the institution may arrange to have the auto dealer provide a Section 1022.74(f) notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notice to the consumer within the applicable time periods. 12 CFR 1022.73(c)(2)
2. For instant credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone, the Section 1022.74(f) notice may be provided at the earlier of:
 - a. The time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or
 - b. Within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit. 12 CFR 1022.73(c)(3)

Model form. Appendix H-5 of the regulation contains a model form of the Section 1022.74(f) notice. While use of the model form is optional, appropriate use of Model Form H-5 is deemed to comply with the requirements of Section 1022.74(f).

Rules of Construction (12 CFR 1022.75) The rules clarify that, in general, only one risk-based pricing notice or one credit score exception notice is required to be provided per credit extension (however, an account review would still be required, if applicable). In a transaction involving two or more consumers, a financial institution must provide a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer. If the consumers have the same address, a financial institution may satisfy the requirements by providing a single risk-based pricing notice addressed to both consumers. For credit score disclosure exception notices, whether the consumers have the same address or not, the financial institution must provide a separate notice to each consumer.

Appendix H Appendix H contains five optional model forms that may be used to comply with the regulatory requirements. The five model forms are:

1. H-1 Model form for risk-based pricing notice
2. H-2 Model form for account review risk-based pricing notice
3. H-3 Model form for credit score disclosure exception for credit secured by one to four units of residential real property
4. H-4 Model form for credit score disclosure exception for loans not secured by residential real property
5. H-5 Model form for credit score disclosure exception for loans where credit score is not available

Use of the model forms is not required. A financial institution may change the forms by rearranging the format or by making technical modifications to the language of the forms. However, any change may not be so extensive as to materially affect the substance, clarity, comprehensibility, or meaningful sequence of the forms. Institutions making such extensive revisions would lose the “safe harbor” that Appendix H provides. Examples of acceptable changes are provided in Appendix H to the regulation.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution uses consumer report information in consumer credit decisions.

If yes, determine whether the institution uses such information to provide credit on terms that are “materially less favorable” than the most favorable material terms available to a substantial proportion of its consumers. Relevant factors in determining the significance of differences in the cost of credit include the type of credit product, the term of the credit extension, and the extent of the difference.

If “yes,” the financial institution is subject to the risk-based pricing regulations.
2. Determine whether the financial institution provides a risk-based pricing notice to a consumer (12 CFR 1022.72(a)). If it does, proceed to step #3. If the institution does not provide a risk-based pricing notice, proceed to step #5 to determine whether an exception applies (12 CFR 1022.74).
3. Determine the method the financial institution uses to identify consumers who must receive a risk-based pricing notice and whether the method complies with the regulation (12 CFR 1022.72(b)).
 - a. For institutions that use the direct comparison method (12 CFR 1022.72(b)), determine whether the institution directly compares the material terms offered to each consumer and the material terms offer to the other consumers for a specific type of credit product.

- b. For institutions that use the credit score proxy method: (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(1))
 - i. Determine whether the institution calculates the cutoff score by considering the credit scores of all, or a representative sample, of consumers who have received credit for a specific type of credit product;
 - ii. Determine whether the institution recalculates the cutoff score no less than every two years;
 - iii. For new entrants into the credit business, for new products subject to risk-based pricing, or for acquired credit portfolios, determine whether the institution recalculates the cutoff scores within time periods specified in the regulation;
 - iv. For institutions using more than one credit score to set material terms, determine whether the institution establishes a cutoff score according to the methods specified in the regulation; and
 - v. If no credit score is available for a consumer, determine whether the institution provides the consumer a risk-based pricing notice.
- c. For institutions that use the tiered pricing method: (12 CFR 1022.72(b)(2))
 - i. When four or fewer pricing tiers are used, determine if the institution sends risk-based pricing notices to consumers who do not qualify for the top, best-priced tier; or
 - ii. When five or more pricing tiers are used, determine if the institution provides risk-based pricing notices to consumers who do not qualify for the two top, best-priced tiers and any other tier that, combined with the top two tiers, equal no less than the top 30 percent and no more than the top 40 percent of the total number of tiers.
- d. For credit card issuers:
 - i. Determine whether the card issuer uses the credit score proxy method or the tiered pricing method to identify consumers to whom it must provide a risk-based pricing notice.
 - ii. If the institution does not use the credit score proxy method or the tiered pricing method, determine whether the card issuer uses the following method as permitted by 12 CFR 1022.72(c) to identify consumers to whom it must provide a risk-based pricing notice.:
 - A consumer applies for a credit card either in connection with an application program, such as a direct-mail offer or a take-one application, or in response to a solicitation under 12 CFR 1026.5a, and more than a single possible purchase annual percentage rate may apply under the program or solicitation; and
 - Based in whole or in part on a consumer report, the credit card issuer provides a credit card to the consumer with a purchase APR that is greater than the lowest purchase APR available in connection with the application or solicitation.
 - iii. Determine whether the card issuer provides a risk-based pricing notice to each consumer that is provided a credit card with a purchase APR greater than the lowest purchase APR available under the program or solicitation.
4. Determine whether the risk based pricing notice contains: (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(1))
 - a. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;
 - b. A statement that the terms offered, such as the APR, have been set based on information from a consumer report;
 - c. A statement that the terms offered may be less favorable than the terms offered to consumers with better credit histories;
 - d. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
 - e. The identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the credit decision;
 - f. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;
 - g. A statement informing the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and providing contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies; and
 - h. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports.

Proceed to step #10.

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

5. If the institution does not provide a risk-based pricing notice, determine if one of the following situations that qualify for a regulatory exception applies: (12 CFR 1022.74(a)-(f))
 - a. When a consumer applies for specific terms of credit, and receives them, unless those terms were specified by the creditor using a consumer report after the consumer applied for the credit and after the creditor obtained the consumer report;
 - b. When a creditor provides a notice of adverse action;
 - c. When a creditor makes a firm offer of credit in a prescreened solicitation;
 - d. When an institution generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is or will be secured by residential real property;
 - e. When an institution generally provides a credit score disclosure to each consumer that requests a loan that is not or will not be secured by residential real property; and
 - f. When an institution, which otherwise provides credit score disclosures to consumers that request loans, provides a disclosure for when no credit score is available.
6. For institutions that choose to provide a credit score disclosure to consumers that request a loan that is or will be secured by residential real property, determine whether the Section 1022.74(d) notice generally is provided to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit and that each notice contains:
 - a. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer's credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;
 - b. A statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;
 - c. A statement that the consumer's credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;
 - d. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
 - e. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;
 - f. Contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;
 - g. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports;
 - h. The information required to be disclosed to the consumer in Section 609(g) of the FCRA, and as described in Module 3 of these examination procedures, under "Disclosure of Credit Scores by Certain Mortgage Lenders (FCRA), Section 609(g)"; and
 - i. The distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer's credit score. The distribution should:
 - Use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer, and
 - Be presented:
 - In the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar,
 - By other clear and readily understandable graphical means, or
 - In a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers.

The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements.
7. For institutions that choose to provide a credit score disclosure to consumers that request a loan that is not or will not be secured by residential real property, determine whether the Section 1022.74(e) notice generally is provided to each consumer that requests such an extension of credit and that each notice contains:
 - a. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) is a record of the consumer's credit history and includes information about whether the consumer pays his or her obligations on time and how much the consumer owes to creditors;
 - b. A statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time to reflect changes in the consumer's credit history;
 - c. A statement that the consumer's credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;

- d. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
 - e. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;
 - f. Contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports;
 - g. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports;
 - h. The current credit score of the consumer or the most recent credit score of the consumer that was previously calculated by the consumer reporting agency for a purpose related to the extension of credit;
 - i. The distribution of credit scores among consumers who are scored under the same scoring model that is used to generate the consumer's credit score. The distribution should:
 - Use the same scale as that of the credit score provided to the consumer, and
 - Be presented:
 - in the form of a bar graph containing a minimum of six bars that illustrates the percentage of consumers with credit scores within the range of scores reflected in each bar,
 - by other clear and readily understandable graphical means, or
 - in a clear and readily understandable statement informing the consumer how his or her credit score compares to the scores of other consumers.

The presentation may use a graph or statement obtained from the entity providing the credit score if it meets these requirements;
 - j. The range of possible credit scores under the model used to generate the credit score;
 - k. The date on which the credit score was created; and
 - l. The name of the consumer reporting agency or other person that provided the credit score.
8. For institutions that otherwise provide credit score disclosures to consumers that request loans, determine whether the Section 1022.74(f) notice is provided to the applicable consumers in situations where no credit score is available for the consumer, as required by 1022.74(f). Determine whether each notice contains:
- a. A statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;
 - b. A statement that a credit score is a number that takes into account information in a consumer report and that a credit score can change over time in response to changes in the consumer's credit history;
 - c. A statement that credit scores are important because consumers with higher credit scores generally obtain more favorable credit terms;
 - d. A statement that not having a credit score can affect whether the consumer can obtain credit and what the cost of that credit will be;
 - e. A statement that a credit score about the consumer was not available from a consumer reporting agency, which must be identified by name, generally due to insufficient information regarding the consumer's credit history;
 - f. A statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the consumer report;
 - g. A statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain copies of his or her consumer reports directly from the consumer reporting agencies, including a free consumer report from each of the nationwide consumer reporting agencies once during any 12-month period;
 - h. The contact information for the centralized source from which consumers may obtain their free annual consumer reports; and
 - i. A statement directing consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports.
9. For institutions that provide credit score exception notices and that obtain multiple credit scores in setting material terms of credit, determine whether the score(s) is disclosed in a manner consistent with the regulation: (12 CFR 1022.74(d)(4) and .74 (e)(4))
- a. If an institution only relies upon one of those credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by using the low, middle, high, or most recent score), determine whether the notice includes that credit score and the other information required by Section 1022.74(d).
 - b. If an institution relies upon multiple credit scores in setting the material terms of credit granted, extended, or otherwise provided to a consumer (for example, by

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

- computing the average of all the credit scores obtained), determine whether the notice includes one of those credit scores and the other information required by Section 1022.74(d).
10. Regardless of whether the institution provides risk-based pricing notices or credit score exception notices, if the institution increases the consumer's APR as the result of a review of a consumer's account, determine whether the financial institution provided the consumer with an account review risk-based pricing notice (12 CFR 1022.72(d)) if an adverse action notice was not already provided.
 11. Determine whether the account review risk-based pricing notice contains (12 CFR 1022.73(a)(2)):
 - a. a statement that a consumer report (or credit report) includes information about the consumer's credit history and the type of information included in that history;
 - b. a statement that the consumer is encouraged to verify the accuracy of the information contained in the consumer report and has the right to dispute any inaccurate information in the report;
 - c. the identity of each consumer reporting agency that furnished a consumer report used in the credit decision;
 - d. a statement that federal law gives the consumer the right to obtain a copy of a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice without charge for 60 days after receipt of the notice;
 - e. a statement that informs the consumer how to obtain a consumer report from the consumer reporting agency or agencies identified in the notice and provides contact information (including a toll-free telephone number, where applicable) specified by the consumer reporting agency or agencies;
 - f. a statement that directs consumers to the web site of the Bureau to obtain more information about consumer reports;
 - g. a statement that the financial institution has conducted a review of the account using information from a consumer report; and
 - h. a statement that, as a result of the review, the APR on the account has been increased based on information from a consumer report.
 12. For all notices, determine whether the notices are clear and conspicuous and comply with the specific format requirements for the notices (12 CFR 1022.73(b), .74(d)(2), .74(e)(2), and .74(f)(3)).
 13. For all notices, determine whether the notices are provided within the required timeframes: (12 CFR 1022.73(c), .74(d)(3), .74(e)(3), and .74(f)(4))
 - a. Risk-based pricing notices and account review risk-based pricing notices
 - For closed-end credit, the notice generally must be provided to the consumer after the decision to approve a credit request is communicated to the consumer, but before consummation of the transaction.
 - For open-end credit, the notice generally must be provided after the decision to grant credit is communicated to the consumer, but before the first transaction under the plan has been made.
 - For account reviews, the notice generally must be provided at the time that the decision to increase the APR is communicated to the consumer or no later than five days after the effective date of the change in the APR.
 - b. Credit score disclosures for loans secured by residential real property
 - The credit score disclosure for loans secured by residential real property must be provided to the consumer at the same time as the disclosure required by Section 609(g) of the FCRA is provided to the consumer. The 609(g) notice must be provided as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained. In any event, the credit score disclosure for loans secured by residential real property must be provided at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.
 - c. Credit score disclosures for loans not secured by residential real property
 - The notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the credit score has been obtained, but in any event at or before consummation in the case of closed-end credit or before the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.
 - d. Credit score exception notices when no credit score is available
 - The notice generally must be provided to the consumer as soon as reasonably practicable after the institution has requested the credit score, but in any event not later than consummation of a transaction in the case of closed-end credit or when the first transaction is made under an open-end credit plan.
 - e. All notices, except credit score disclosures for loans secured by residential real property
 - For automobile lending transactions made through an auto dealer that is unaffiliated with the institution, the institution may provide a notice in the time periods described above. Alternatively, the institution may arrange to have the auto dealer provide a notice to the consumer on its behalf within these time periods and maintain reasonable policies and procedures to verify that the auto dealer provides the notice to the consumer within the applicable time periods. If the institution arranges to have the auto dealer provide a credit score disclosure for loans not secured by residential real property, the institution complies if the consumer receives a notice containing a credit score obtained by the dealer with these time periods, even if a different credit score is obtained and used by the institution.

- For instant credit that is granted under an open-end credit plan to a consumer in person or by telephone, the notice may be provided at the earlier of:
 - The time of the first mailing to the consumer after the decision is made to approve the credit, such as in a mailing containing the account agreement or a credit card; or
 - Within 30 days after the decision to approve the credit.
14. For all notices, determine whether the financial institution follows the rules of construction pertaining to the number of notices provided to the consumer(s) (12 CFR 1022.75). In a transaction involving two or more consumers, a financial institution must provide a risk-based notice to each consumer. If the consumers have the same address, a financial institution may satisfy the requirements by providing a single risk-based pricing notice addressed to both consumers. For credit score disclosure exception notices, whether the consumers have the same address or not, the financial institution must provide a separate notice to each consumer.
15. For all notices, determine whether the financial institution uses the model forms in Appendix H of the regulation. If yes, determine that it does not modify the model form so extensively as to affect the substance, clarity, comprehensibility, or meaningful sequence of the forms (Appendix H).

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Module 4: Financial Institutions as Furnishers of Information

Overview

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) contains many responsibilities for financial institutions that furnish information to consumer reporting agencies. These requirements generally involve ensuring the accuracy of the data that is placed in the consumer reporting system. This examination module includes reviews of the various areas associated with furnishers of information. This module will not apply to financial institutions that do not furnish any information to consumer reporting agencies.

Section 605(h) Address Discrepancies

Section 605(h)(1) requires that, when providing a consumer report to a person that requests the report (a user), a nationwide consumer reporting agency (NCRA) must provide a notice of address discrepancy to the user if the address provided by the user in its request “substantially differs” from the address the NCRA has in the consumer’s file. Section 605(h)(2) requires the federal banking agencies and the NCUA (the Agencies) and the FTC to prescribe regulations providing guidance regarding reasonable policies and procedures that a user of a consumer report should employ when such user has received a notice of address discrepancy. On November 9, 2007, the agencies published final rules in the Federal Register implementing this section. (72 FR 63718)

Definitions

“Nationwide consumer reporting agency.” Section 603(p) defines an NCRA as one that compiles and maintains files on consumers on a nationwide basis and regularly engages in the practice of assembling or evaluating and maintaining the following two pieces of information about consumers residing nationwide for the purpose of furnishing consumer reports to third parties bearing on a consumer’s credit worthiness, credit standing, or credit capacity:

1. Public record information and
2. Credit account information from persons who furnish that information regularly and in the ordinary course of business.

“Notice of address discrepancy (12 CFR 1022.82(b)).” A “notice of address discrepancy” is a notice sent to a user by an NCRA (section 603(p)) that informs the user of a substantial difference between the address for the consumer that the user provided to request the consumer report and the address(es) in the NCRA’s file for the consumer.

“Requirement to form a reasonable belief” (12 CFR 1022.82(c)). A user must develop and implement reasonable policies and procedures designed to enable the user to form a reasonable belief that the consumer report relates to the consumer whose report was requested, when the user receives a notice of address discrepancy in connection with a new or existing account.

The rules provide the following examples of reasonable policies and procedures for forming a reasonable belief that a consumer report relates to the consumer whose report was requested:

1. Comparing information in the consumer report with information the user
 - a. has obtained and used to verify the consumer’s identity as required by the Customer Identification Program rules (31 CFR 103.121);
 - b. maintains in its records; or
 - c. obtains from a third party; or
2. Verifying the information in the consumer report with the consumer.

“Requirement to furnish a consumer’s address to an NCRA” (12 CFR 1022.82(d)). A user must develop and implement reasonable policies and procedures for furnishing to the NCRA an address for the consumer that the user has reasonably confirmed is accurate when the user

1. can form a reasonable belief that the report relates to the consumer whose report was requested;
2. establishes a continuing relationship with the consumer (i.e., in connection with a new account); and
3. regularly furnishes information to the NCRA that provided the notice of address discrepancy.

A user’s policies and procedures for furnishing a consumer’s address to an NCRA must require the user to furnish the confirmed address as part of the information it regularly furnishes to the NCRA during the reporting period when it establishes a continuing relationship with the consumer.

The rules also provide the following examples of how a user may reasonably confirm an address is accurate:

1. Verifying the address with the consumer whose report was requested;
2. Reviewing its own records;
3. Verifying the address through third-party sources; or
4. Using other reasonable means.

Examination Procedures

(12 CFR 1022.82)

1. Determine whether a user of consumer reports has policies and procedures to recognize notices of address discrepancy that it receives from a nationwide consumer reporting agency (NCRA)¹⁶ in connection with consumer reports.

2. Determine whether a user that receives notices of address discrepancy has policies and procedures to form a reasonable belief that the consumer report relates to the consumer whose report was requested. (12 CFR 1022.82(c))

See examples of reasonable policies and procedures “to form a reasonable belief” in 12 CFR 1022.82(c)(2).

3. Determine whether a user that receives notices of address discrepancy has policies and procedures to furnish to the NCRA an address for the consumer that the user has reasonably confirmed is accurate, if the user
 - a. can form a reasonable belief that the report relates to the consumer;
 - b. establishes a continuing relationship with the consumer; and
 - c. regularly furnishes information to the NCRA. (12 CFR 1022.82(d)(1))

See examples of reasonable confirmation methods in 12 CFR 1022.82(d)(2).

4. Determine whether the user’s policies and procedures require it to furnish the confirmed address as part of the information it regularly furnishes to an NCRA during the reporting period when it establishes a relationship with the consumer. (12 CFR 1022.82(d)(3))
5. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further information are noted, obtain a sample of consumer reports requested by the user from an NCRA that included notices of address discrepancy and determine:
 - a. How the user established a reasonable belief that the consumer reports related to the consumers whose reports were requested: and
 - b. If a consumer relationship was established:
 - Whether the institution furnished a consumer’s address that it reasonably confirmed to the NCRA from which it received the notice of address discrepancy; and
 - Whether it furnished the address in the reporting period during which it established the relationship.

Conclusion. On the basis of examination procedures completed, form a conclusion about the ability of user’s policies and procedures to meet regulatory requirements for the proper handling of address discrepancies reported by an NCRA.

Section 615(e) Change of Address

Section 615(e)(1)(C) requires the Agencies and the FTC to prescribe regulations for debit and credit card issuers regarding the assessment of the validity of address changes for existing accounts. The regulations require card issuers to have procedures to assess the validity of an address change if the card issuer receives a notice of change of address for an existing account, and within a short period of time (during at least the first 30 days) receives a request for an additional or replacement card for the same account. On November 9, 2007, the Agencies published final rules in the Federal Register implementing this section. (72 FR 63718)

Definitions (12 CFR 334.91(b))

The following definitions pertain to the rules governing the duties of card issuers regarding changes of address:

“Cardholder” a consumer who has been issued a credit or debit card.

“Clear and conspicuous” means reasonably understandable and designed to call attention to the nature and significance of the information presented.

Address validation requirements (12 CFR 334.91(c)). A card issuer must establish and implement policies and procedures to assess the validity of a change of address if it receives notification of a change of address for a consumer’s debit or credit card account and, within a short period of time afterwards (during at least the first 30 days after it receives such notification), the card issuer receives a request for an additional or replacement card for the same account. In such situations, the card issuer must not issue an additional or replacement card until it assesses the validity of the change of address in accordance with its policies and procedures.

The policies and procedures must provide that the card issuer will:

1. Notify the cardholder of the request for an additional or replacement card
 - a. at the cardholder’s former address; or
 - b. by any other means of communication that the card issuer and the cardholder have previously agreed to use; and
2. Provide to the cardholder a reasonable means of promptly reporting incorrect address changes; or
3. Assess the validity of the change of address according to the procedures the card issuer has established as a part of its Identity Theft Prevention Program (12 CFR 334.90).

Alternative timing of address validation (12 CFR 334.91(d)). A card issuer may satisfy the requirements of these rules prior to receiving any request for an additional or replacement card by validating an address when it receives an address change notification.

Form of notice (12 CFR 334.91(e))

Any written or electronic notice that a card issuer provides to satisfy these rules must be clear and conspicuous and provided separately from its regular correspondence with the cardholder.

Change of Address Examination Procedures (12 CFR 334.91)

1. Verify that the card issuer has policies and procedures to assess the validity of a change of address if:
 - a. it receives notification of a change of address for a consumer's debit or credit card account; and
 - b. within a short period of time afterwards (during at least the first 30 days after it receives such notification), the card issuer receives a request for an additional or replacement card for the same account. (12 CFR 334.91(c))
2. Determine whether the policies and procedures prevent the card issuer from issuing additional or replacement cards until it:
 - a. notifies the cardholder at the cardholder's former address or by any other means previously agreed to and provides the cardholder a reasonable means to promptly report an incorrect address (12 CFR 334.91(c)(1)(i)-(ii)); or
 - b. uses other reasonable means of evaluating the validity of the address change; (12 CFR 334.91(c)(2)).

In the alternative, a card issuer may validate a change of address request when it is received, using the above methods, prior to receiving any request for an additional or replacement card. (12 CFR 334.91(d))
3. Determine whether any written or electronic notice sent to cardholders for purposes of validating a change of address request is clear and conspicuous and is provided separately from any regular correspondence with the cardholder. (12 CFR 334.91(e))
4. If procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further information are noted, obtain a sample of notifications from cardholders of changes of address and requests for additional or replacement cards to determine whether the card issuer complied with the regulatory requirement to evaluate the validity of the notice of address change before issuing additional or replacement cards.

Conclusion. On the basis of examination procedures completed, form a conclusion about whether a card issuer's policies and procedures effectively meet regulatory requirements for evaluating the validity of change of address requests received in connection with credit or debit card accounts.

Section 623 Furnishers of Information – General

Background

Section 623 of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) requires the federal banking agencies (Agencies) and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to:

Issue guidelines for use by furnishers regarding the accuracy and integrity of the information about consumers that they furnish to consumer reporting agencies;

Prescribe regulations requiring furnishers to establish reasonable policies and procedures for implementing the guidelines; and

Issue regulations identifying the circumstances under which a furnisher must reinvestigate disputes concerning the accuracy of information contained in a consumer report based on a direct request from a consumer.

On July 1, 2009, the Agencies and the FTC published final rules in the Federal Register (74 FR 31484) implementing this section of FCRA.

Definitions (12 CFR 1022.41)

The following definitions pertain to the rules governing the furnishers of information to a consumer reporting agency:

“Accuracy” means that the information a furnisher provides to a consumer reporting agency about an account or other relationship with the consumer correctly:

1. Reflects the terms of and liability for the account or other relationship;
2. Reflects the consumer's performance and other conduct with respect to the account or other relationship; and
3. Identifies the appropriate consumer.

“Direct dispute” means a dispute submitted by a consumer directly to a furnisher (including a furnisher that is a debt collector) concerning the accuracy of any information contained in a consumer report and pertaining to an account or other relationship that the furnisher has or had with the consumer.

“Furnisher” means an entity that furnishes information relating to consumers to one or more consumer reporting agencies for inclusion in a consumer report. An entity is not a furnisher when it:

1. Provides information to a consumer reporting agency solely to obtain a consumer report in accordance with the permissible purposes outlined in sections 604(a) and (f) of the FCRA;
2. Is acting as a “consumer reporting agency” as defined in section 603(f) of the FCRA;

3. Is a consumer to whom the furnished information pertains; or
4. Is a neighbor, friend, or associate of the consumer, or another individual with whom the consumer is acquainted or who may have knowledge about the consumer, and who provides information about the consumer's character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living in response to a specific request from a consumer reporting agency.

“Identity theft” means a fraud committed or attempted using the identifying information of another person without authority. “Identifying information” means any name or number that may be used alone or in conjunction with any other information to identify a specific person (16 CFR 603.2).

“Integrity” means that the information a furnisher provides to a consumer reporting agency about an account or other relationship with the consumer:

1. Is substantiated by the furnisher's records at the time it is furnished;
2. Is furnished in a form and manner that is designed to minimize the likelihood that the information may be incorrectly reflected in a consumer report; and
3. Includes:
 - a. the information in the furnisher's possession about the account or other relationship that the relevant Agency has determined that the absence of which would likely be materially misleading in evaluating a consumer's creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living; and
 - b. the credit limit, if applicable and in the furnisher's possession.

Duties of furnishers to provide accurate information. Section 623(a) states that a person, including a financial institution, may, but need not, specify an address for receipt of notices from consumers concerning inaccurate information. If the financial institution specifies such an address, then it may not furnish information relating to a consumer to any consumer reporting agency, if (a) the financial institution has been notified by the consumer, at the specified address, that the information is inaccurate, and (b) the information is in fact inaccurate. If the financial institution does not specify an address, then it may not furnish any information relating to a consumer to any consumer reporting agency if the financial institution knows or has reasonable cause to believe that the information is inaccurate.

When a financial institution that (regularly and in the ordinary course of business) furnishes information to one or more consumer reporting agencies about its transactions or experiences with any consumer determines that any such information is not complete or accurate, the financial institution must promptly notify the consumer reporting agency of that determination. Corrections to that information or any additional information necessary to make the information complete and accurate must be provided to the consumer reporting agency. Further, any information that remains incomplete or inaccurate must not thereafter be furnished to the consumer reporting agency.

If the completeness or accuracy of any information furnished by a financial institution to a consumer reporting agency is disputed by a consumer, that financial institution may not furnish the information to any consumer reporting agency without notice that the information is disputed by the consumer.

Reasonable policies and procedures concerning the accuracy and integrity of furnished information (12 CFR 1022.42) and Interagency Guidelines (12 CFR 1022, Appendix E).

Each furnisher must establish and implement reasonable written policies and procedures regarding the accuracy and integrity of consumer information that it furnishes to a consumer reporting agency. The policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of each furnisher's activities. In developing its policies and procedures, a furnisher must consider the Interagency Guidelines and may include its existing policies and procedures that are relevant and appropriate. Each furnisher must also review its policies and procedures periodically and update them as necessary to ensure their continued effectiveness.

Voluntary closures of accounts. Section 623(a)(4) requires that any person, including a financial institution, that (regularly and in the ordinary course of business) furnishes information to a consumer reporting agency regarding a consumer who has a credit account with that financial institution, must notify the consumer reporting agency of the voluntary closure of the account by the consumer in information regularly furnished for the period in which the account is closed.

Notice involving delinquent accounts. Section 623(a)(5) requires that a person, including a financial institution, that furnishes information to a consumer reporting agency about a delinquent account being placed for collection, charged off, or subjected to any similar action, must, not later than 90 days after furnishing the information to the consumer reporting agency, notify the consumer reporting agency of the month and year of the commencement of the delinquency that immediately preceded the action.

Duties upon notice of dispute from a consumer reporting agency. Section 623(b) requires that whenever a financial institution receives a notice of dispute from a consumer reporting agency regarding the accuracy or completeness of any information provided by the financial institution to a consumer reporting agency pursuant to section 611 (Procedure in Case of Disputed Accuracy), that financial institution must, pursuant to section 623(b):

1. Conduct an investigation regarding the disputed information;
2. Review all relevant information provided by the consumer reporting agency along with the notice;
3. Report the results of the investigation to the consumer reporting agency; and
4. If the disputed information is found to be incomplete or inaccurate, report those results to all nationwide consumer reporting agencies to which the financial institution previously provided the information.
5. If the disputed information is incomplete, inaccurate, or not verifiable by the financial institution, the financial institution must promptly, for purposes of reporting to the consumer reporting agency:
 - a. Modify the item of information,
 - b. Delete the item of information, or
 - c. Permanently block the reporting of that item of information.

The investigations, reviews and reports required to be made must be completed within 30 days. The time period may be extended for 15 days if a consumer reporting agency receives additional relevant information from the consumer.

Duties upon notice of a direct dispute from a consumer (12 CFR 1022.43).

General rule. A furnisher must conduct a reasonable investigation of a direct dispute (unless exceptions, described later, apply) if the dispute relates to:

1. The consumer's liability for a credit account or other debt with the furnisher, such as direct disputes relating to whether there is or has been identify theft or fraud against the consumer, whether there is individual or joint liability on an account, or whether the consumer is an authorized user of a credit account;
2. The terms of a credit account or other debt with the furnisher, such as, direct disputes relating to the type of account, principal balance, scheduled payment amount on an account, or the amount of the credit limit on an open-end account.
3. The consumer's performance or other conduct concerning an account or other relationship with the furnisher such as, direct disputes relating to the current payment status, high balance, payment date, the payment amount, or the date an account was opened or closed; or

4. Any other information contained in a consumer report regarding an account or other relationship with the furnisher that bears on the consumer's creditworthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living.

Exceptions. The direct dispute requirements do not apply to a furnisher if the direct dispute relates to:

1. The consumer's identifying information such as name(s), date of birth, Social Security number, telephone number(s), or address(es);
2. The identity of past or present employers;
3. Inquiries or requests for a consumer report;
4. Information derived from public records, such as judgments, bankruptcies, liens, and other legal matters (unless the information was provided by a furnisher with an account or other relationship with the consumer);
5. Information related to fraud alerts or active duty alerts; or
6. Information provided to a consumer reporting agency by another furnisher.

The direct dispute requirements also do not apply if the furnisher has a reasonable belief that the direct dispute is:

1. submitted by a credit repair organization;
2. is prepared on behalf of the consumer by a credit repair organization; or
3. is submitted on a form supplied to the consumer by a credit repair organization.

Direct Dispute Address. A furnisher is required to investigate a direct dispute only if a consumer submits a dispute notice to the furnisher at:

1. The address provided by a furnisher and listed on a consumer report relating to the consumer;
2. An address clearly and conspicuously specified by the furnisher that is provided to the consumer in writing or electronically (if the consumer has agreed to the electronic delivery of information from the furnisher); or
3. Any business address of the furnisher if the furnisher has not provided a specific address for submitting direct disputes.

Direct Dispute Notice Contents. A dispute notice from a consumer must include:

1. Sufficient information to identify the account or other relationship that is in dispute, such as an account number and the name, address, and telephone number of the consumer;
2. The specific information that the consumer is disputing and an explanation of the basis for the dispute; and

3. All supporting documentation or other information reasonably required by the furnisher to substantiate the basis of the dispute. This documentation may include, for example, a copy of the relevant portion of the consumer report that contains the allegedly inaccurate information; a police report; a fraud or identity theft affidavit; a court order; or account statements.

Duties of a Furnisher after Receiving a Direct Dispute Notice from a Consumer. After receiving a dispute notice from a consumer, the furnisher must:

1. Conduct a reasonable investigation with respect to the disputed information;
2. Review all relevant information provided by the consumer with the dispute notice;
3. Complete its investigation of the dispute and report the results of the investigation to the consumer before the expiration of the period under section 611(a)(1) of the FCRA (15 U.S.C. 1681i(a)(1)) within which a consumer reporting agency would be required to complete its action if the consumer had elected to dispute the information under that section; and
3. If the investigation finds that the information reported was inaccurate, promptly notify each consumer reporting agency to which the furnisher provided inaccurate information of investigation findings and provide to the consumer reporting agency any correction to that information that is necessary to make the information provided by the furnisher accurate.

Frivolous or Irrelevant Disputes. A furnisher is not required to investigate a direct dispute if the furnisher has reasonably determined that the dispute is frivolous or irrelevant. A dispute qualifies as frivolous or irrelevant if:

1. The consumer did not provide sufficient information to investigate the disputed information;
2. The direct dispute is substantially the same as a dispute previously submitted by or on behalf of the consumer and the dispute is one with respect to which the furnisher has already complied with the statutory or regulatory requirements. However, a direct dispute would not be “substantially the same” as the one previously submitted if the dispute includes new information required by the regulation to be provided to the furnisher, but that had not previously been provided; or
3. The furnisher is not required to investigate the direct dispute because one or more of the exceptions listed in 12 CFR 1022.43(b) applies.

Upon making a determination that a dispute is frivolous or irrelevant, the furnisher must notify the consumer of the determination not later than five business days after making the determination, by mail or, if authorized by the consumer for that purpose, by any other means available to the furnisher. The furnisher’s notice that a dispute is frivolous or irrelevant must include the reasons for such determination and identify any information required to investigate the disputed information. The notice may consist of a standardized form describing the general nature of such information.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution furnishes consumer information to a consumer reporting agency about an account or other relationship with a consumer. If so, the institution is subject to 12 CFR 1022.40.
2. Determine whether the financial institution has established and implemented reasonable policies and procedures regarding the accuracy and integrity of information furnished to a consumer reporting agency (12 CFR 1022.42(a)).
3. Determine whether the institution considered the Interagency Guidelines in Appendix E of the regulation when developing its policies and procedures, and incorporated the guidelines as appropriate (12 CFR 1022.42(b)).
4. Determine whether the institution reviews its policies and procedures periodically and updates them as necessary to ensure their effectiveness (12 CFR 1022.42(c)).
5. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, such as a high number of consumer complaints regarding the accuracy of their consumer report information from the financial institution, select a sample of reported items and the corresponding loan or collection file to determine that the financial institution:
 - a. Did not report information that it knew, or had reasonable cause to believe, was inaccurate. Section 623(a)(1)(A) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(a)(1)(A)];
 - b. Did not report information to a consumer reporting agency if it was notified by the consumer that the information was inaccurate and the information was, in fact, inaccurate. Section 623(a)(1)(B) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(a)(1)(B)];
 - c. Did provide the consumer reporting agency with corrections or additional information to make the information complete and accurate, and thereafter did not send the consumer reporting agency the inaccurate or incomplete information in situations where the incomplete or inaccurate information was provided. Section 623(a)(2) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(a)(2)];
 - d. Furnished a notice to a consumer reporting agency of a dispute in situations where a consumer disputed the completeness or accuracy of any information the institution furnished, and the institution continued

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

- furnishing the information to a consumer reporting agency. Section 623(a)(3) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(a)(3)];
- e. Notified the consumer reporting agency of a voluntary account-closing by the consumer, and did so as part of the information regularly furnished for the period in which the account was closed. Section 623(a)(4) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(a)(4)]; and
 - f. Notified the consumer reporting agency of the month and year of commencement of a delinquency that immediately preceded the action. The notification to the consumer reporting agency must be made within 90 days of furnishing information about a delinquent account that was being placed for collection, charged-off, or subjected to any similar action. Section 623(a)(5) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(a)(5)].
6. If weaknesses within the financial institution's procedures for investigating errors are revealed, review a sample of notices of disputes received from a consumer reporting agency and determine whether the institution:
- a. Conducted an investigation with respect to the disputed information. Section 623(b)(1)(A) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(b)(1)(A)];
 - b. Reviewed all relevant information provided by the consumer reporting agency. Section 623(b)(1)(B) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(b)(1)(B)];
 - c. Reported the results of the investigation to the consumer reporting agency. Section 623(b)(1)(C) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(b)(1)(C)];
 - d. Reported the results of the investigation to all other nationwide consumer reporting agencies to which the information was furnished, if the investigation found that the reported information was inaccurate or incomplete. Section 623(b)(1)(D) [15 U.S.C. § 1681s-2(b)(1)(D)]; and
 - e. Modified, deleted, or blocked the reporting of information that could not be verified.
7. Determine whether the institution conducts reasonable investigations of direct disputes from consumers, including a review of all relevant information provided by the consumer (12 CFR 1022.43(e)(1) and (2)).
- a. Determine whether the institution completes the investigation and reports the results to the consumer within the required timeframe (12 CFR 1022.43(e)(3)).
 - b. Determine whether the institution notifies and provides corrected information to the consumer reporting agencies when the results of its investigation find that inaccurate information was furnished to the consumer reporting agencies (12 CFR 1022.43(e)(4)).
 - c. When the institution finds that a dispute is frivolous or irrelevant, determine whether the institution:

- Notifies the consumer within five days after finding the dispute frivolous or irrelevant (12 CFR 1022.43(f)(2)), and
- Includes in the consumer notification the reasons for the findings and the information necessary to investigate the disputed information (12 CFR 1022.43(f)(3)).

Section 623(a)(6) Prevention of Re-Pollution of Consumer Reports

Section 623(a)(6) has specific requirements for furnishers of information, including financial institutions, to a consumer reporting agency that receive notice from a consumer reporting agency that furnished information may be fraudulent as a result of identity theft. Section 605B requires consumer reporting agencies to notify furnishers of information, including financial institutions, that the information may be the result of identity theft, an identity theft report has been filed, and that a block has been requested. Upon receiving such notice, section 623(a)(6) requires financial institutions to establish and follow reasonable procedures to ensure that this information is not re-reported to the consumer reporting agency, thus "re-polluting" the victim's consumer report.

Section 615(f) of the FCRA also prohibits a financial institution from selling or transferring debt caused by an alleged identity theft.

Examination Procedures

1. If the financial institution provides information to a consumer reporting agency, review the institution's policies and procedures to ensure that items of information blocked due to an alleged identity theft are not re-reported to the consumer reporting agency.
2. If weaknesses are noted within the financial institution's policies and procedures, review a sample of notices from a consumer reporting agency of allegedly fraudulent information due to identity theft furnished by the financial institution to ensure that the institution does not re-report the item to a consumer reporting agency.
3. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, verify that the financial institution has not sold or transferred a debt that was caused by an alleged identity theft.

Section 623(a)(7) Negative Information Notice

Section 623(a)(7) requires financial institutions to provide consumers with a notice either before negative information is provided to a nationwide consumer reporting agency, or within 30 days after reporting the negative information.

"Negative information." For these purposes, negative information means any information concerning a customer's delinquencies, late payments, insolvency, or any form of default.

“Nationwide consumer reporting agency.” Section 603(p) defines a consumer reporting agency as one that compiles and maintains files on consumers on a nationwide basis and regularly engages in the practice of assembling or evaluating and maintaining the following two pieces of information about consumers residing nationwide for the purpose of furnishing consumer reports to third parties bearing on a consumer’s credit worthiness, credit standing, or credit capacity:

1. Public Record Information.
2. Credit account information from persons who furnish that information regularly and in the ordinary course of business.

Institutions may provide this disclosure on or with any notice of default, any billing statement, or any other materials provided to the customer, as long as the notice is clear and conspicuous. Institutions may also choose to provide this notice to all customers as an abundance of caution. However, this notice may not be included in the initial disclosures provided under section 127(a) of the Truth in Lending Act.

Model text. Institutions can use the following model text to comply with these requirements. The first model contains text to be used when institutions choose to provide a notice before furnishing negative information. The second model form contains text to be used when institutions provide notice within 30 days after reporting negative information:

1. Notice prior to communicating negative information (Model B-1):

“We may report information about your account to credit bureaus. Late payments, missed payments, or other defaults on your account may be reflected in your credit report.”

2. Notice within 30 days after communicating negative information (Model B-2):

“We have told a credit bureau about a late payment, missed payment or other default on your account. This information may be reflected in your credit report.”

Use of the model form(s) is not required; however, proper use of the model forms provides financial institutions with a safe harbor from liability. Financial institutions may make certain changes to the language or format of the model notices without losing the safe harbor from liability provided by the model notices. The changes to the model notices may not be so extensive as to affect the substance, clarity, or meaningful sequence of the language in the model notices. Financial institutions making such extensive revisions will lose the safe harbor from liability that the model notices provide. Acceptable changes include, for example,

1. Rearranging the order of the references to “late payment(s),” or “missed payment(s);”
2. Pluralizing the terms “credit bureau,” “credit report,” and “account;”
3. Specifying the particular type of account on which information may be furnished, such as “credit card account;” or
4. Rearranging in Model Notice B-1 the phrases “information about your account” and “to credit bureaus” such that it would read “We may report to credit bureaus information about your account.”

Examination Procedures

1. If the financial institution provides negative information to a nationwide consumer reporting agency, verify that the institution’s policies and procedures ensure that the appropriate notices are provided to customers.
2. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of notices provided to consumers to determine compliance with the technical content and timing requirements.

VIII. Privacy — Fair Credit Reporting Act

Module 5: Consumer Alerts and Identity Theft Protections

Overview

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) contains several provisions for both consumer reporting agencies and users of consumer reports including financial institutions that are designed to help combat identity theft. This module applies to financial institutions that are not consumer reporting agencies, but are users of consumer reports.

Two primary requirements exist: first, a user of a consumer report that contains a fraud or active duty alert must take steps to verify the identity of an individual to whom the consumer report relates, and second, a financial institution must disclose certain information when consumers allege that they are the victims of identity theft.

Section 605A(h) Fraud and Active Duty Alerts

Initial fraud and active duty alerts. Consumers who suspect that they may be the victims of fraud including identity theft may request nationwide consumer reporting agencies to place initial fraud alerts in their consumer reports. These alerts must remain in a consumer's report for no less than 90 days. In addition, members of the armed services who are called to active duty may also request that active duty alerts be placed in their consumer reports. Active duty alerts must remain in these service members' files for no less than 12 months.

Section 605A(h)(1)(B) requires users of consumer reports, including financial institutions, to verify a consumer's identity if a consumer report includes a fraud or active duty alert. Unless the financial institution uses reasonable policies and procedures to form a reasonable belief that they know the identity of the person making the request, the financial institution may not:

1. Establish a new credit plan or extension credit (other than under an open-end credit plan) in the name of the consumer;
2. Issue an additional card on an existing account; or
3. Increase a credit limit.

Extended Alerts. Consumers who allege that they are the victim of an identity theft may also place an extended alert, which lasts seven years, on their consumer report. Extended alerts require consumers to submit identity theft reports and appropriate proof of identity to the nationwide consumer reporting agencies.

Section 605A(h)(2)(B) requires a financial institution that obtains a consumer report that contains an extended alert to contact the consumer in person or by the method listed by the consumer in the alert prior to performing any of the three actions listed above.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution has effective policies and procedures in place to verify the identity of consumers in situations where consumer reports include fraud and/or active duty military alerts.
2. Determine if the financial institution has effective policies and procedures in place to contact consumers in situations where consumer reports include extended alerts.
3. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of transactions in which consumer reports including these types of alerts were obtained. Verify that the financial institution complied with the identity verification and/or consumer contact requirements.

Section 609(e) Information Available to Victims

Section 609(e) requires financial institutions to provide records of fraudulent transactions to victims of identity theft within 30 days after the receipt of a request for the records. These records include the application and business transaction records under the control of the financial institution whether maintained by the financial institution or another person on behalf of the institution (such as a service provider). This information should be provided to:

1. The victim;
2. Any federal, state, or local government law enforcement agency or officer specified by the victim in the request; or
3. Any law enforcement agency investigating the identity theft that was authorized by the victim to take receipt of these records.

The request for the records must be made by the victim in writing and be sent to the financial institution to the address specified by the financial institution for this purpose. The financial institution may ask the victim to provide information, if known, regarding the date of the transaction or application, and any other identifying information such as an account or transaction number.

Unless the financial institution, at its discretion, otherwise has a high degree of confidence that it knows the identity of the victim making the request for information before disclosing any information to the victim, the financial institution must take prudent steps to positively identify the person requesting information. Proof of identity can include:

1. A government-issued identification card;
2. Personally identifying information of the same type that was provided to the financial institution by the unauthorized person; or
3. Personally identifiable information that the financial institution typically requests from new applicants or for new transactions.

At the election of the financial institution, the victim must also provide the financial institution with proof of an identity theft complaint, which may consist of a copy of a police report evidencing the claim of identity theft and a properly completed affidavit. The affidavit can be either the standardized affidavit form prepared by the Federal Trade Commission (published in April 2005 in 70 Federal Register 21792), or an “affidavit of fact” that is acceptable to the financial institution for this purpose.

When these conditions are met, the financial institution must provide the information at no charge to the victim. However, the financial institution is not required to provide any information if, acting in good faith, the financial institution determines that:

1. Section 609(e) does not require disclosure of the information;
2. The financial institution does not have a high degree of confidence in knowing the true identity of the requestor, based on the identification and/or proof provided;
3. The request for information is based on a misrepresentation of fact by the requestor; or
4. The information requested is Internet navigational data or similar information about a person’s visit to a web site or online service.

Examination Procedures

1. Review financial institution policies, procedures, and/or practices to ensure that identities and claims of fraudulent transactions are verified and that information is properly disclosed to victims of identity theft and/or appropriately authorized law enforcement agents.
2. If procedural weaknesses are noted or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, review a sample of these types of requests to ensure that the financial institution properly verified the requestor’s identity prior to disclosing the information.

IX. Retail Sales

Retail Investment Sales

Introduction

These compliance examination procedures and guidance apply to retail recommendations or sales of securities by, on behalf of, or on the premises of FDIC supervised institutions. “Retail” in this context means securities recommendations or sales activities which are conducted separately from a bank’s trust or fiduciary activities.¹ While these “retail” activities are primarily conducted with consumers, they can be conducted with commercial customers under certain circumstances.

Generally, securities are financial instruments that grant an ownership position or the right to purchase one. They are not insured by the FDIC. Moreover, one of their most significant features is investment risk, i.e., the risk that purchasers may lose part or all of their invested principal. Securities include individual stocks and bonds, mutual funds, self-directed individual retirement accounts (IRA) that invest in securities,² and annuities.³ Securities sales activities have the potential to bolster bank earnings, increase bank competitiveness, and provide bank customers with additional services. However, these types of activities also have the potential to confuse customers, expose banks to contingent liabilities, and damage the reputation of these institutions. Therefore, examiners must evaluate an institution’s retail securities activities with care. A list of key terms is available under the Job Aids section of this chapter.

Supervisory Responsibility

Generally, parties that recommend or sell securities must register with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) as broker-dealers. Once registered, broker dealers are subject to regulation by the SEC and National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD). However, until the Gramm-

Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA) was enacted in 1999, banks were exempt from these requirements. Once Title II of GLBA becomes effective, banks that offer securities will have a choice. They may either register with the SEC as broker dealers or confine their programs to a list of activities exempt from registration. Due to the capital requirements imposed on broker dealers by the SEC, most banks prefer to limit their securities sales activities to those that do not require SEC registration. Pursuant to §1001 of GLBA, a bank is exempt from registration as a broker⁴ when it sells securities as part of:

- third party arrangements conducted pursuant to written agreements;
- certain stock purchase plans;
- sweep accounts;
- affiliate transactions;
- private securities offerings;
- safekeeping and custody activities;
- transactions defined as permissible under GLBA;
- banking products specifically identified by GLBA;
- municipal securities;
- a de minimis number of transactions, i.e., less than 500 per year; or
- trust and fiduciary activities.

Under GLBA, federal bank regulators will eventually become responsible for verifying that banks accurately document compliance with exemptions from registration. The FDIC and other banking agencies will issue the regulations necessary to do so once the SEC defines the scope of the registration exemptions.⁵ Until then, compliance examiners are not required to assess bank compliance with exemptions to registration. However, banks involved in securities sales should be made aware of the GLBA provisions that relate to this area.

NOTE: It is important to understand that a bank, an affiliate of a bank, or a third party vendor which is registered with the SEC as a broker-dealer is subject to regulation by the SEC and securities self-regulatory organizations such as the NASD. As a result, these examination procedures do not attempt to evaluate compliance with SEC or NASD rules or regulations. However, compliance examiners should confirm that registered broker dealers employ properly licensed sales representatives.

1 Bank trust and fiduciary activities are viewed as non-retail. RMS Trust Examination staff is responsible for the examination of these types of activities. Compliance examiners are responsible for reviewing retail investment sales activities regardless of where a bank conducts them, even if they occur within the same division or department where a bank conducts trust operations. In such situations, coordination with RMS Trust examiners is encouraged to ensure that activities receive the appropriate review.

2 This includes IRA and Keogh accounts offered outside of a bank’s Trust Department, when a bank offers self-directed custodial accounts that are established by individuals for their own benefit. When customers use such accounts to invest in securities sold by the bank or pursuant to a third party arrangement with the bank, they have engaged in a retail securities sales activity that should be reviewed by compliance examiners under these procedures.

3 The sale of annuities is supervised as both an insurance and an investment activity. Consequently, banks that offer these products should be examined under both these procedures and the Compliance Examination Procedures and Supervisory Guidance for Retail Insurance Sales.

4 GLBA also contains a list of activities that banks may conduct without registering with the SEC as securities dealers. These activities are reviewed as part of risk management examinations. They are beyond the scope of these procedures.

5 The SEC has made two proposals intended to define the bank brokerage exceptions. Neither has been finalized.

IX. Retail Sales — Investments

Overview of Examination Approach

During the compliance examination of a bank that offers investment products, examiners must consider the bank's retail securities activities when assessing the quality of the bank's compliance management system (CMS).

Examiners must determine whether the CMS appropriately manages the risks involved in retail securities sales activities, including adherence to the Interagency Statement on Retail Sales of Nondeposit Investment Products (Interagency Statement),⁶ FDIC Part 344 – Recordkeeping and Confirmation Requirements for Securities Transactions,⁷ Treasury Regulations Part 403.5(d) – Custody of Securities Held by Financial Institutions that are Government Securities Brokers and Dealers,⁸ and Treasury Regulations Part 450 – Custodial Holdings of Government Securities by Depository Institutions⁹. In doing so, examiners should consider all documentation related to retail securities sales, including, but not limited to, agreements with third parties, sales activity volume and financial reports, standard disclosures and acknowledgment forms, records which document the qualifications of sales personnel, and proprietary product management reports. Based on the examiner's conclusions about the bank's CMS as it relates to retail investment sales, a determination should be made about the extent of transaction sampling and testing necessary to complete the compliance examination.¹⁰

At the end of the examination, examiners should document their conclusions about the bank's retail securities activities in the examination work papers and Report of Examination, as appropriate. Banks that fail to comply with applicable laws and regulations, or fail to establish and observe appropriate policies and procedures consistent with the Interagency Statement in connection with retail securities sales activities, should be subject to criticism in the Report of Examination and appropriate corrective action.

Policy and Regulatory Requirements

The Interagency Statement on Retail Sales of Nondeposit Investment Products

- Applies to all retail securities activities transacted with *consumer customers*¹¹ of an insured depository institution, regardless of whether the institution offers securities directly or through an arrangement with a third party. Moreover, the Interagency Statement applies to a dual employee of the bank and a third party when the employee effects retail securities transactions.

- Provides for specific actions banks should take with regard to program management, disclosures, sales setting, personnel qualifications, suitability, and compensation to effectively manage its securities sales programs and protect securities customers.

FDIC Part 344, Recordkeeping and Confirmation Requirements for Securities Transactions

- Applies to any retail securities transactions effected by banks for consumer or commercial customers, with the following exceptions:
 - Transactions Effected by Registered Broker/Dealers: This regulation in its entirety does not apply to transactions in which: (1) the broker/dealer is fully disclosed to the bank customer, and (2) the bank customer has a direct contractual agreement with the broker/dealer. This broad exemption extends to arrangements which involve a dual employee of the bank and broker/dealer, when the employee is acting as an employee of, and subject to the supervision of, the registered broker dealer.
 - Municipal Securities: This regulation in its entirety does not apply to municipal securities transactions effected at a bank registered with the SEC as a municipal securities dealer.
 - Foreign Branches: This regulation in its entirety does not apply to transactions at foreign branches of a bank.
 - Small Number of Transactions: Certain recordkeeping and securities trading policies and procedures of the regulation do not apply to a bank effecting an average of fewer than 500 transactions (excluding government securities transactions) per year.¹²
 - Government Securities: The settlement and personal securities trading requirements of the regulation do not apply to banks conducting transactions in government securities; and the recordkeeping requirements do not apply to banks effecting fewer than 500 government securities transactions per year.
- Requires banks to provide customers with written confirmation notices and to maintain appropriate records and controls with respect to retail securities transactions they effect.

6 FDIC Laws, Regulations, Related Acts, and Statements of Policy.

7 See 12 CFR 344.

8 See 17 CFR 403.5(d).

9 See 17 CFR 450.

10 Examiners should refer to the general compliance examination procedures for guidance on transaction sampling and testing.

11 The Interagency Statement does not apply to trust activities. When trust powers are exercised, transactions should occur in segregated non-retail departments.

12 The average is to be determined using the prior three calendar year period.

Treasury Regulations Part 403.5(d), Custody of Securities Held by Financial Institutions that are Government Securities Brokers and Dealers

- Applies to any bank that retains custody of government securities that are part of a retail repurchase agreement between the bank and its consumer or commercial customers.
- Requires banks to provide customer disclosures, customer transaction confirmation notices, and maintain procedures pertaining to possession and control of government securities.

Treasury Regulations Part 450, Custodial Holdings of Government Securities by Depository Institutions

- Applies to any bank that retains possession of government securities sold under a repurchase agreement with consumer or commercial customers, or banks that hold customer government securities as custodian or in safekeeping.
- Requires banks to issue confirmation or safekeeping receipts for government securities held for customers, properly segregate the securities, and maintain appropriate controls and records for those securities.

Definitions

“Annuities” are contracts that guarantee income (typically for an individual’s lifetime) in exchange for a lump sum or periodic payment. The terms are usually based upon the individual’s expected lifetime and anticipated market conditions. A variable annuity guarantees payments, but does not guarantee the payment amounts. Variable annuities are securities, contain investment risk, and investors select level of investment risk.

“Bank Securities Representatives” are bank employees who solicit, recommend, and effect investment transactions for retail customers within an insured depository institution’s direct investment sales program. Dual and third-party employees are not bank securities representatives.

“Brokers” charge a fee or commission for executing customer transactions, or for providing services (for example, investment advice).

“Discount Brokers” simply execute transactions and maintain customer accounts in exchange for fees or commissions, but do not provide investment advice. All discount brokerage transactions are unsolicited.

“Dual Employees” are employed by both the bank and a third-party.

“Full-service Brokers” provide complete investment services, including investment advice, in exchange for fees or commissions.

“Hybrid Accounts” which include sweep accounts, combine elements of insured deposits and investments.

“Investments” are transactions in which money is contributed for the purpose of obtaining income or profit, but which carries the risk of loss of all or part of the principal contributed and income accumulated.

“Investment Advisers” include any individual who offers investment advice in exchange for compensation.

“Networking Arrangements” are agreements between banks and third-party vendors that enable vendors to sell or recommend investments to bank customers on bank premises or through customer referrals.

“Proprietary Products” are products that the bank or bank affiliate markets principally to bank or affiliate customers.

“Repurchase Agreements” are contracts to sell and subsequently repurchase securities at a specified date and price.

“Sales Representatives” recommend or sell investments on bank premises or through customer referrals, and may be NASD licensed and registered representatives or, where the bank sells securities directly to customers pursuant to an exception from registration, sales representatives may be Bank Securities Representatives.

“Sweep Accounts” include any accounts that employ prearranged, automatic funds transfers (above a preset dollar balance) from a deposit account to purchase securities. Sweep accounts also include accounts that use prearranged, automatic securities sales or redemptions to replenish a deposit account that falls below a preset dollar balance.

“Unsolicited Transactions” occur when customers direct sales representatives to initiate transactions that were not recommended or suggested by any individual connected with the investment sales operation.

Examination Procedures

Examiners should complete as many of the following examination procedures as necessary to effectively assess the quality of the bank’s CMS in this area and the bank’s adherence to the Interagency Statement and the regulations described above. Where risks are properly managed by the bank and transaction testing is not considered necessary to support the examiner’s conclusions, the review may be concluded after the core analysis of the CMS. However, if transaction testing is necessary, then examiners should continue the examination using the Expanded Analysis in the subsequent section of this chapter.

IX. Retail Sales — Investments

Compliance Management System Review

Pre-Examination Planning

Examiners should follow the general compliance examination procedures pertaining to pre-examination planning, found in the compliance examination procedures manual, to gather as much information as possible about a bank's retail securities sales activities. Discussions with bank management during the pre-examination planning phase of the examination, along with the Compliance Information and Document Request should be used by the examiner to gather enough current information from the bank to ascertain the following about the bank:

- Does the bank conduct retail securities sale activities?
- Is the bank conducting the sale of securities as a registered broker-dealer with the SEC or has the bank already limited its activities to those exempt from registration pursuant to GLBA?
- Does a third party conduct retail securities sales activities on bank premises or through customer referrals from the bank?
- Is the third party a registered broker/dealer with the SEC?
- What type of customers does the bank sell such products to – consumer and/or commercial customers?
- How many retail securities transactions (including both sales and purchases) were conducted for customers by the bank per year for the prior three calendar years?
- What type of securities sales activities are conducted – stocks, bonds, mutual funds, government securities, annuity products,¹³ repurchase agreements, sweep account arrangements, proprietary products, self-directed Individual Retirement Accounts/KEOGHs?

Banks should conduct independent compliance reviews of the retail securities program to ensure that it complies with all laws, regulations, Interagency Statement, and internal policies and procedures. An independent review report may be prepared separately from an audit report. As such, examiners should request a copy of the independent review report during the pre-examination planning phase of the examination, and use it as appropriate in developing the risk profile of the bank.

GLBA requires bank regulators to rely, to the fullest extent possible, on securities regulators for supervisory information concerning securities affiliates of state non-member banks. Reports and investor complaint data from other regulators can be an important source of information about a third party's securities sales activities and a bank's proprietary product activities. Therefore, relevant information should be requested from the SEC, NASD, or state as soon as reasonably possible to ensure that it is available for the Review and Analysis portion of the examination.¹⁴

Review and Analysis

After reviewing the information gathered during the pre-examination planning phase of the examination, the examiner should determine which, if any, of the above policy and regulations may apply to the bank (Job Aid available at the end of these procedures).

Examiners should use the guidance below to evaluate the bank's CMS (i.e., board and management oversight, compliance program, and audit function) as it pertains to retail securities activities to determine whether risks are adequately managed. After completing the review of the bank's CMS, examiners should document their conclusions about the retail securities program area through written responses to the Decision Factors described on page IX-1.8. The written response should be retained in the examination workpapers.

Board and Management Oversight Evaluation

Determine that the bank's board of directors has adopted a written retail securities sales policy statement that contains the elements required in the Interagency Statement. The policy statement, in detail commensurate with the level and complexity of the securities sales program, should:

- Address the risks associated with the program;
- Summarize the program's policies, procedures, and controls; and
- Clearly define the scope of any third party activities, and the bank's monitoring of the third parties adherence to the Interagency Statement and applicable laws and regulations.

¹³ For annuity product sales, also see the Compliance Examination Procedures and Supervisory Guidance for Retail Insurance Sales. Where the Interagency Statement and FDIC Part 343 Consumer Protections in Sales of Insurance overlap, a bank that engages in conduct that fails to adhere to both should only be criticized for violating Part 343.

Determine that the board of directors periodically reviews and updates, as necessary, the retail securities sales policy statement.

For retail securities activities conducted through a networking arrangement with a third-party vendor, also verify that:

- The bank conducted an appropriate review of the third party's qualifications, experience, regulatory history, financial condition, and references prior to entering into the arrangement;
- The arrangement is controlled by a written agreement that is approved by the bank's board of directors and contains, at a minimum, the following elements:
 - Description of each party's duties and responsibilities;
 - Description of the permissible activities by the third party on bank premises;
 - Controls for the use of bank space, personnel, and equipment;
 - Detailed compensation arrangements for all bank and third party personnel;
 - Requirement that sales representatives are appropriately trained, licensed, and qualified;
 - Requirement that the third party comply with all applicable laws, regulations, and the Interagency Statement;
 - Authorization for the bank to monitor the activities of the third party and its sales representatives and to periodically review compliance with the agreement;
 - Authorization for the bank and its banking regulatory agency to have access to such records of the third party as are necessary or appropriate to evaluate compliance;
 - Indemnification for the bank for potential liability caused by the third party's sales activities; and
 - Written employment contracts satisfactory to the bank for personnel employed by both the bank and the third party (dual employees); and
- Bank management periodically monitors the third party's compliance with the agreement. This function should be performed by individuals that are not involved in any part of the investment sales operation. Reviews may be conducted by internal auditors, external auditors, or other independent staffers.

For proprietary products offered by the bank, also:

- Determine that the board of directors established policies that guide the management and operations of any proprietary product, and maintains prudent oversight of all proprietary product operations, including those of the bank affiliates.

- Verify that the board's policies:
 - Require separation of duties between trading, sales, management, and accounting;
 - Define bank management's responsibilities;
 - Establish an independent review function; and
 - Outline strategies for potentially significant events, such as a capital injection.

Compliance Program Evaluation

Policies, Procedures and Internal Controls

Determine that the retail securities sales program's policies and procedures include a description of the following elements contained in the Interagency Statement:

- Types of products sold;
- Designation of employees to sell investment products;
- Supervision of personnel involved in sales;
- Permissible use of customer information; and
- Compliance procedures to ensure sales activities are conducted in accordance with applicable laws, regulations, and the Interagency Statement.

Review the policies, procedures and practices of the bank in the following areas to:

Sales Setting

Determine that the area in which security products are sold is physically distinct from the area in which retail deposits are taken.

- Verify that employees do not make investment recommendations, qualify customers, or take orders for investment products, even if unsolicited, while located in the routine deposit-taking area. (This includes reviewing a bank's policy, procedures, and any prepared scripts on handling deposit customers, or customers whose certificates of deposit are maturing.)

Referrals

Verify that employees who are not authorized and qualified to sell securities only make referrals, and do not make investment recommendations, qualify customers, or take orders for investment products. (This includes reviewing a bank's policy, procedures, and any prepared scripts on referring deposit customers, or customers whose certificates of deposit are maturing.)

- Determine that management and staff (including tellers and receptionists) adhere to all applicable laws,

IX. Retail Sales — Investments

regulations, the Interagency Statement, and the bank's securities sales policy when making customer referrals.

Suitability

Determine that in recommending to customers the purchase, sale, or exchange of any security, sales representatives gather appropriate and sufficient information from the customers and conduct a suitability analysis (sales representatives should have reasonable grounds for believing that a recommendation is suitable for a customer upon the basis of the information disclosed by the customer). Sales representatives should make reasonable efforts to obtain the following types of information:

- Customer Investment Goals
 - Risk tolerance
 - Return objectives
 - Tax considerations
 - Liquidity
- Customer Financial Information
 - Assets, liabilities, and net worth
 - Income and expenses
 - Investment portfolio composition
 - Tax status
 - Insurance
- Customer Nonfinancial Factors
 - Age and retirement plans
 - Family status
 - Current and anticipated education needs
 - Current and anticipated health care needs

Determine that sales representatives clearly explain all investment recommendations to customers and provide complete information to customers regarding investment risks.

Verify that the sales representatives document the suitability analysis of their investment recommendations to customers.

Compensation

Determine that compensation to bank employees for customer referrals is a one-time nominal fee of a fixed dollar amount for each referral, and that the compensation is paid regardless of whether the referral results in a transaction.

Determine that incentive compensation for bank employees authorized to sell securities products is not structured in such a way as to result in unsuitable recommendations or sales being made to customers.

Sales Practices

If the bank conducts the securities transactions, determine that the bank:

- Provides for the crossing of buy and sell orders on a fair and equitable basis to the parties to the transaction, where applicable and where permissible under local law; and
- Provides for the fair and equitable allocation of securities and prices to accounts when orders for the same security are received at approximately the same time and are placed for execution either individually or in combination.

Verify that specific individuals are designated to exercise supervisory responsibility for each of the bank's securities activities.

Verify that there is a separation of duties among securities sales, management, compliance, and accounting personnel.

Determine that bank personnel who make investment recommendations or obtain investment information as part of their duties report their own non-exempt securities transactions to the bank each quarter.

For banks that transact retail hold-in-custody repurchase agreements involving government securities, also:

- Determine that the bank enters into written repurchase agreements with customers that contain appropriate disclosures, including a disclosure that the funds held pursuant to the repurchase agreement are not deposits nor insured by the FDIC.
- Verify that the bank maintains proper possession and control of the government securities that are the subject of the agreement with its customers in accordance with Treasury Regulation 450.4(a). (See below)

For banks that hold government securities as a custodian or in safekeeping for the account of a customer,¹⁵ also:

- Determine that the bank maintains proper possession and control of the government securities it holds for its customer accounts (including where the bank uses another institution or the Federal Reserve Bank to hold the securities).
- Determine that the bank maintains proper possession and control of the government securities it holds as a custodian for customer accounts of other institutions or government securities broker/dealers.

¹⁵ Safety and Soundness and Trust examination staff remain responsible for evaluating custodial holdings of government securities which are based on a trust or fiduciary relationship. If a bank claims an exemption to the Treasury Regulation 450 under 450.3, Exemption for holdings subject to fiduciary standards, examiners should verify that the requirements are met under that part of the regulation.

Disclosures, Notices, Confirmations, and Advertisements

Determine that standard disclosures, oral and written, and confirmation notices contain the required content, and are provided to customers at the appropriate time in the proper format. In particular, verify that disclosures contain at least the following minimum required content:

- not insured by the FDIC;
- not deposits or obligations of the bank or its affiliates;
- not guaranteed by the bank or its affiliates; and
- are subject to investment risk, including possible loss of principal

Verify that the bank obtains the required customer acknowledgements of receipt of disclosures at the time the customer opens an account to purchase investment products.

Verify that the names of the security products being sold are not identical to the name of the bank.

Determine that advertisements or promotional material about retail securities are issued in accordance with the Interagency Statement, and in particular:

- Verify that any third party advertising or promotional material clearly identifies the company selling the security product and does not suggest that the bank is the seller.

Verify that the bank discloses, where applicable, the existence of any material relationships with an affiliate or an investment advisor as identified in the Interagency Statement.

Determine that when the bank represents that investment products are covered by insurance provided by any other entity than the FDIC, the bank also provides a clear and accurate explanation of this coverage.

For proprietary products offered by the bank, also determine that sales representatives provide customers with disclosures that clearly inform customers of:

- Additional compensation earned for selling a proprietary product rather than another product;
- The product's fee structure, as compared to other investment products offered at the bank;
- The product's risk profile, as compared to other investment products offered at the bank; and
- The product's historical performance, as compared to other investment products offered at the bank.

For banks that transact retail hold-in-custody repurchase agreements involving government securities, also:

- Determine that the bank provides written confirmations at the end of the day of initiation of the repurchase transaction.
- Determine that the written confirmations contain all required information.

For banks that hold government securities as a custodian or in safekeeping for the account of a customer, also:

- Determine that bank provides a written confirmation or safekeeping receipt for each security held for a customer.
- Determine that the written confirmations or safekeeping receipts contain all required information.

Personnel Qualifications

Determine that the bank investigates the backgrounds of employees and third party vendors it hires for its retail securities sales program, including confirming that applicants remain in good professional standing and are not subject to disciplinary or enforcement action by any securities self-regulatory agency, the SEC, or any state or federal bank regulatory agency.

Determine that security sales employees and management are qualified (appropriate licensing, registration, training, and experience) to conduct their authorized duties:

- Where the bank is registered as a broker-dealer, bank securities representatives must meet applicable professional qualification requirements.
 - The following NASD licenses, earned after passing standardized examinations, permit holders to engage in prescribed activities.
 - Series 6: Investment Company and Variable Contract Products Limited Representative, authorized to sell only mutual funds and annuities.
 - Series 7: General Securities Representative, may sell all securities except commodities.
 - Series 11: Assistant Representative - Order Processing, can take and enter unsolicited orders, but cannot determine suitability or provide investment recommendations.
 - Series 24: General Securities Principal, authorized to supervise all sales personnel.
 - Series 52: Municipal Securities Representative, may sell only municipal and government securities.
 - Series 62: Corporate Securities Limited Representative, may sell only corporate obligations.

IX. Retail Sales — Investments

- Where the bank sells securities pursuant to an exception from broker dealer registration, bank securities representatives must receive training which is the substantive equivalent of NASD licensing requirements required for personnel qualified to sell securities as registered representatives.
- Where the bank sells securities through a third party networking arrangement, sales representatives (dual employees and third party employees) must be NASD licensed and registered.

Assess the bank's securities sales training materials to determine that bank staff is trained on the requirements for referral and sales activities, including any appropriate and inappropriate customer referral activities.

Monitoring

Determine that the bank conducts independent compliance reviews (independent of security product sales and management review staff and their monitoring activities) of its retail securities sales program and that of any third party.

Verify that the findings of the independent reviews are periodically reported directly to the bank's board of directors, or committee of the board.

Determine that the bank reviews customer complaints to identify compliance issues, in particular, patterns of inadequate disclosure and/or unsuitable securities recommendations and sales.

For banks that hold government securities as a custodian or in safekeeping for the account of a customer, also:

- Determine that the bank conducts counts or verifications of government securities held for customers by the bank or by other institutions at least annually, reconciles them with account records, and documents findings within seven days.

Recordkeeping

If the bank conducts the securities transaction, determine that securities sales records containing all required information are properly maintained by the bank.

For banks that hold government securities as a custodian or in safekeeping for the account of a customer:

- Verify that customer government securities records are properly maintained and kept separate from other records of the bank.

Audit Function Evaluation

Determine that the bank's audit program includes its retail securities sales program, including third party activities, and assess the audit program's effectiveness.

Decision Factors

After completing the assessment of the compliance management system, examiners should document their conclusions as to whether risks in the securities sales program area are adequately managed by the institution, as well as their responses to each of the following Decision Factors:

1. Do the board of directors and management provide effective oversight of the retail securities sales program?
2. Are policies, procedures, information systems, training, and licensing adequate for such sales activities?
3. Does the institution adequately monitor customer referral and securities sales activities?
4. Does the audit function include the securities sales program, and is it adequate?

Based on the examiner's conclusions and responses to the above questions, examiners should determine the extent of transaction testing necessary to complete the compliance examination. If transaction testing is deemed appropriate, examiners should pull a sample of accounts and/or files and use the Expanded Analysis procedures and Job Aids below.

Expanded Analysis

The examination procedures in this section should be used when examiners identify material weaknesses in the bank's compliance management system that require further review to complete their assessment and to determine the bank's compliance with applicable laws, regulations, and the Interagency Statement. The entire set of expanded procedures should not be applied automatically. Examiners should implement only those expanded procedures that address specific areas of significant risk, weakness, or supervisory concern.

Disclosures, Notices, Confirmations, and Advertisements

Sample customer account files to review disclosures and written acknowledgments, including those incorporated into credit applications; investment sales confirmations; and investment account statements.

Review all advertising and promotional materials, including the text of prepared scripts (telemarketing and platform).

Personnel Qualifications

Sample sales representative personnel files to determine that they have the appropriate licenses and training, and to review their regulatory histories.

Sales Setting

Determine that the retail securities sales setting is physically distinct from the retail deposit area (visit additional sales locations when practical).

In those instances where there is limited space in the bank, determine that signage and other techniques are used to clearly distinguish the retail securities sales setting from the retail deposit area to avoid the potential for customer confusion.

Suitability

Sample customer account files to determine that retail securities sales staff obtain and evaluate information detailing each customer's investment goals, financial condition, and other factors before offering investment recommendations.

Sample customer account files to determine that:

- Customers sign appropriate disclosure forms;
- Customer data has been updated periodically;
- Securities sales staff provide complete information to customers regarding potential risks; and
- Recommendations conform to customer goals.

Analyze management and sales reports and promotions to:

- Evaluate sales activity for questionable practices, such as account churning.
- Determine if promotions have prompted unsuitable recommendation practices. For example, high volumes of volatile instruments or dramatic increases in a particular product's sales may indicate suitability concerns.

For unsolicited investment transactions (customers direct investment sales representatives to initiate transactions that were not recommended or suggested by any individual connected with the securities sales program) and discount brokerage operations (executes transactions directed by customer and maintains customer accounts, but does not provide investment advice):

- Verify that customers receive at least the minimum required disclosures; and

- Verify that securities sales staff retains documentation (preferably signed by the customer) which shows that the transaction was initiated solely at the customers' request.

Compensation

Review management reports, sales reports, and a sample of employee securities sales compensation records to:

- Verify that customer referral fees are paid as a one-time nominal fee of a fixed dollar amount for each referral, and that the referral fee is paid regardless of whether the referral results in a transaction.
- Determine that incentive compensation for bank employees authorized to sell securities products is not structured in such a way as to result in unsuitable recommendations or sales being made to customers.

Monitoring

Determine that the independent compliance review report findings are presented to the bank's board of directors.

Sample customer account files and evaluate the effectiveness of the bank's independent compliance review at identifying and eliminating documentation deficiencies.

Determine that the independent compliance review tracks all customer complaints.

Sales Practices

Review sales records to ensure that only specifically designated, authorized, and qualified personnel sell investments.

Custodial Holdings of Government Securities

For hold-in-custody repurchase agreements involving government securities:

- Review the repurchase agreements to ensure that they contain required disclosures pertaining to FDIC insurance and securities substitution, as necessary.
- Sample customer account files and verify that confirmations are delivered to appropriate individuals in the required format within the appropriate timeframe, and that they contain all required information.

For custodial or safekeeping of government securities:

- Review custodian bank's accounts and records to verify that customer government securities are:

IX. Retail Sales — Investments

- Properly segregated from the assets of the bank, custodian institution, and/or broker-dealer, as appropriate, and
- Kept free from any lien, charge, or claim.
- Sample customer account files and verify that confirmations are delivered to appropriate individuals in the required format and that they contain all required information.
- Determine that the annual counts of government securities held for customers, as conducted by the bank, are reconciled with customer account records and custodian accounts, and properly verified and documented.
- Determine that the bank's records contain all required information about each customer and each government security held in custody or safekeeping.

Proprietary Products

Sample customer account files and verify that proper disclosures are included.

NOTE: Where information is discovered which raises concern that a bank's sale of proprietary products raises safety and soundness concerns, such as risk to liquidity or capital adequacy, compliance examiners should promptly refer the information to the appropriate DCP Regional Office staff.

IRA and KEOGH Accounts

Where the bank offers self-directed IRA or Keogh accounts, the Interagency Statement generally applies,¹⁶ except with respect to the suitability guidelines.¹⁷ In addition, the following management and internal controls apply. Examiners should verify that:

- Asset and Accounting Controls
 - Customer assets are segregated from bank assets and from other account assets;
 - Accounting records reflect segregation of accounts; and
 - Accounting controls facilitate proper income reporting, record asset types, and identify individual instruments.

¹⁶ The Interagency Statement does not apply to self-directed IRAs that are invested entirely in insured deposits or that are part of a formal trust agreement (trustee accounts).

¹⁷ Because self-directed accounts permit account holders to select their own investments, no investment recommendations should be solicited and no suitability issues should arise. However, an account is not truly self-directed if the bank offers investment advice to the customer.

- Documentation
 - Documentation clearly identifies and supports each account.
NOTE: IRA documentation should include, at a minimum, the required IRS trust/custodian agreement (Form 5305, 5305A, or equivalent), consumer disclosure agreement, signature card(s), and beneficiary designation.
- Illegal Investments
 - Illegal investments are not permitted, regardless of any contrary customer instructions.
 - IRA funds are not used for certain insider transactions, including:
 - Loans to the account sponsor or beneficiaries.
 - Collateral for loans to the account sponsor or beneficiaries.
 - Purchasing assets from the account sponsor, beneficiaries, or custodian bank.
 - Selling assets to the account sponsor, beneficiaries, or custodian bank.
 - Investments in debt instruments of the custodian bank or its holding company.
 - Investments in equity securities of the custodian bank or its holding company, unless acquired from an independent third-party at fair market value.
- Broker Selection
 - Broker selection is based upon two principles:
 - Management selects the best broker for the account.
 - Brokers are selected based solely on the combination of lowest possible commission and best possible order execution.
NOTE: Management may not select a broker based on insider relationships, personal relationships, compensation of any type, or solely due to community ties (SEC Rule 28(e)).
- Bank Brokerage
 - The bank uses its own brokerage operations only when:
 - Management satisfies securities laws relative to broker selection.
 - The customer receives full written disclosure (pursuant to FDIC General Counsel's Opinion Number Six) of the bank's or affiliate's relationship to the broker and all compensation that the bank will earn.
 - The account agreement expressly authorizes the specific activity.

- The bank complies with Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) and Internal Revenue Code provisions stipulating that the bank must either charge no fees, or only charge fees that recover direct costs.
- The bank automatically uses its brokerage for all transactions unless requested to do otherwise, but provides 30-day advance notice to accounts of all fee increases and permits accounts to immediately cease using the bank’s brokerage without penalty.

Documenting the Examination

Findings should be documented in the workpapers and incorporated in the report of examination as appropriate. In addition, record in SOURCE under the tabbed section labeled “NDP Sales” whether the institution sells investments (yes/no).

When a bank does not adhere to the Interagency Statement, these findings must be recorded in SOURCE under the “NDP Sales” tab, “ 1: Findings” sub-tab. Examiners should also ensure that a violation code for each violation of FDIC Part 344 or the Treasury Regulations 403.5(d) and 450 is recorded in the system.

Retail Insurance Sales

Introduction

The following supervisory information and examination procedures apply to retail sales, solicitation, advertising, or offers of any insurance product or annuity¹ to a consumer² by a FDIC-supervised insured depository institution³ or any person engaged in such activities at an office of the institution or on behalf of the institution. These materials do not apply to sales of insurance or annuities that occur as part of an institution's trust or fiduciary activities.

Insurance products are not FDIC-insured and may involve investment risk. Consequently, examiners must assess the quality of an institution's compliance management system (CMS) as it pertains to the retail sale of insurance and annuities. Examiners must consider whether the CMS appropriately manages the risks involved in these activities, including whether the CMS produces compliance with Part 343 of the FDIC's regulations (Consumer Protection in Sales of Insurance) and adherence to the Interagency Policy Statement on Retail Sales of Nondeposit Investment Products (the Interagency Policy Statement)⁴ when variable annuities are sold.

Regulatory and Policy Requirements

The primary risks addressed by Part 343 and the Interagency Policy Statement are that consumers will:

- misunderstand the safety of insurance products sold by institutions, i.e., assume incorrectly that they are backed by the FDIC or another federal agency, or
- be coerced into believing they must purchase an insurance product or annuity in order to obtain a loan.

FDIC Part 343

Pursuant to the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA), the federal banking agencies have adopted regulations concerning consumer protection in the sale of insurance by institutions and thrifts. The regulations, which include the FDIC's Part 343, address matters that are the responsibility of the banking agencies to oversee and not the responsibility of state insurance departments.⁵

Part 343 applies to the institution as well as other parties that offer insurance or annuities on institution premises or on the institution's behalf. Under Part 343, a party offers these products on behalf of the institution when:

- it represents that it is doing so; or
- it pays the institution commissions for receiving customer referrals; or
- documents that evidence the sales transaction refer to the institution.

Interagency Policy Statement

The Interagency Policy Statement contains requirements that overlap with Part 343, particularly with respect to disclosures and the circumstances under which sales and recommendations may be made. To the extent that Part 343 addresses an area, it governs. However, because variable annuities have an investment component, institutions that offer them must also adhere to the program requirements explained in the Interagency Policy Statement. In particular, an institution that offers annuities should establish policies and procedures for its sales program and offer variable annuities only when suitable for customers. A detailed explanation of the requirements of the Interagency Policy Statement is contained in the Investment Sales Procedures.

Examination Procedures

During the compliance examination of an institution that offers insurance products, examiners must consider these activities when assessing the quality of the institution's compliance management system (CMS). The specific guidance and procedures contained in this chapter should be used within the framework of the general compliance examination procedures and, specifically, during the pre-examination planning and review and analysis stages of the compliance examination.

Examiners must determine whether the CMS appropriately manages the risks involved in retail insurance sales activities,

² In this context, a consumer is an individual who purchases, applies to purchase or is solicited to purchase any type of insurance product to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. See 12 CFR §343.20(d).

⁴ FDIC Statements of Policy, Law, Regulation and Related Acts.

⁵ The states continue to be responsible for insurance agent and company licensing, product oversight, rates and forms, and most market conduct regulations, which complement financial solvency regulations, regardless of whether an institution is involved. Moreover, where state law provides greater consumer protection in the sale of insurance than the protection provided by the federal rules, GLBA provides that state law governs. Decisions about which law or regulation provides greater protection are made on a case-by-case basis. The Legal Division should be consulted if such questions arise.

IX. Retail Sales — Insurance

including adherence to FDIC Part 343, and the Interagency Policy Statement if variable annuities are sold. In doing so, examiners should consider all documentation related to retail insurance sales, including, but not limited to, agreements with third parties, sales activity volume and financial reports, standard disclosures and acknowledgment forms, records which document the qualifications of sales personnel, and proprietary product management reports.

Based on the examiner's conclusions about the institution's CMS, a determination should be made about the extent of transaction testing or file review necessary to complete the compliance examination. The severity of the CMS weaknesses and operational risk should dictate the intensity of transaction testing. The expanded analysis should be carefully tailored to weaknesses identified in the CMS as it relates to specific retail insurance sales activities, focusing on those areas of the institution's program that present the greatest degree of risk to the institution or to consumers.

At the conclusion of the examination, examiners should document their conclusions about the institution's retail insurance sales activities in the examination work papers and Report of Examination, as appropriate. Institutions that fail to comply with applicable laws and regulations, or fail to establish and observe appropriate policies and procedures consistent with Part 343 or with the Interagency Policy Statement when applicable, should be subject to criticism in the Report of Examination and appropriate corrective action.

Pre-examination Planning

During the initial contact with the institution and through the Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR):

- identify any insurance or annuities sales activities the institution conducts directly or through other entities on its behalf; and
- obtain copies of relevant policies and procedures, third party agreements, disclosures and acknowledgment forms, advertising copy, records and reports.

In addition, state insurance officials should be contacted to obtain copies of any complaint records involving the institution. Information sharing agreements are in place with most states, and a list of contacts is posted on the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) website: http://www.naic.org/state_web_map.htm.

Review and Analysis

Examiners should use the guidance below to evaluate the institution's CMS as it pertains to retail insurance sales activities to determine whether risks are adequately managed. After completing the review of the institution's CMS, examiners should document their conclusions about the retail insurance sales program area through written responses to the Decision Factors described on page IX-2.4. The written response should be retained in the examination workpapers. A Job Aid is provided at the end of these procedures which may be helpful in conducting the review.

Board and Management Oversight Evaluation

Consider whether the institution's board of directors has adopted written policies and procedures for the institution's insurance sales program. If not, are they needed? Are the policies and procedures reviewed and updated as necessary?

Does the board of directors and management receive and review sufficient information to provide appropriate direction and control of insurance sales?

For retail insurance sales conducted through a networking arrangement with a third-party vendor, also consider whether:

- The institution conducted an appropriate review of the third party's qualifications, experience, regulatory history, financial condition, and references prior to entering into the arrangement;
- The arrangement is controlled by a written agreement that is approved by the institution's board of directors and contains the following elements:
 - Description of each party's duties and responsibilities;
 - Description of the permissible activities by the third party on institution premises;
 - Controls for the use of institution space, personnel, and equipment;
 - Detailed compensation arrangements for all institution and third party personnel;
 - Requirement that sales representatives are appropriately trained, licensed, and qualified;
 - Requirement that the third party comply with all applicable laws and regulations;
 - Authorization for the institution to monitor the activities of the third party and its sales representatives and to periodically review compliance with the agreement;
 - Authorization for the institution and its banking regulatory agency to have access to such records of the third party as are necessary or appropriate to evaluate compliance;
 - Indemnification for the institution for potential liability caused by the third party's sales activities; and

- Written employment contracts satisfactory to the institution for personnel employed by both the institution and the third party; and
- Institution management periodically monitors the third party's compliance with the agreement.

Compliance Program Evaluation

Policies, Procedures and Internal Controls

Consider whether the retail insurance sales program's policies and procedures include a description of the following elements:

- Types of products sold;
- Supervision of personnel involved in sales; and
- Compliance procedures to ensure sales activities are conducted in accordance with Part 343.

Review the policies and procedures, and through interviews and observation consider the practices of the institution in the following areas:

Sales Setting

Is the area in which insurance is sold physically distinct from the area in which retail deposits are taken?

- Employees do not make insurance recommendations, or take orders for insurance products, even if unsolicited, while located in the routine deposit-taking area. (This includes reviewing any prepared scripts on handling deposit customers, or customers whose certificates of deposit are maturing.)

Referrals

Employees who are not authorized and qualified to sell insurance only make referrals, and do not make insurance recommendations or take orders for insurance products. (This includes reviewing any prepared scripts on referring deposit customers, or customers whose certificates of deposit are maturing.)

- Management and staff (including tellers and receptionists) adhere to part 343 and the institution's insurance sales policy when making customer referrals.

Compensation

Compensation to institution employees for customer referrals is a one-time nominal fee of a fixed dollar amount for each referral, and that the compensation is paid regardless of whether the referral results in a transaction.

Sales Practices

Insurance sales practices, including advertising, would not lead consumers to believe that:

- extensions of credit are tied to the sale of insurance or annuities;
- insurance or annuities are backed by the federal government; or
- products that carry investment risk do not do so.

The institution prohibits insurance sales practices that discriminate against victims of domestic violence or providers of services to such victims.

Disclosures, Advertisements, and Acknowledgements

Standard disclosures and advertising contain at least the following minimum content required by Part 343:

- NOT A DEPOSIT
- NOT FDIC-INSURED
- NOT INSURED BY ANY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AGENCY
- NOT GUARANTEED BY THE INSTITUTION
- MAY GO DOWN IN VALUE

Where insurance is offered in connection with a credit application, standard disclosures explain that credit cannot be conditioned on the purchase of insurance from the institution or the consumer's agreement not to purchase insurance elsewhere.

Disclosures are provided consistently with the manner and timing requirements of Part 343.

Disclosures are understandable and meaningful, as required by Part 343.

The institution obtains the customer acknowledgement of receipt of disclosures as required by Part 343.

Personnel Qualifications

Insurance sales employees and management are qualified (appropriate licensing, training, and/or experience) to conduct their authorized duties.

The institution's insurance sales training materials appropriately cover the requirements for referral and sales activities, including any appropriate and inappropriate customer referral activities.

IX. Retail Sales — Insurance

Monitoring

Does the institution conduct monitoring of its retail insurance sales program and that of any third party? Does the monitoring include sales practices, the referral process, the manner and timing of disclosures, and customer acknowledgement of receiving disclosures?

Does the institution review customer complaints to identify compliance issues?

Audit Function Evaluation

Consider whether the institution's audit program includes its retail insurance sales program, including third party activities, and assess the audit program's effectiveness.

Decision Factors

After completing the assessment of the compliance management system, examiners should document their conclusions as to whether risks in the retail insurance sales program area are adequately managed by the institution, as well as their responses to each of the following Decision Factors:

1. Do the board of directors and management provide effective oversight of the retail insurance sales program?
2. Are policies, procedures, information systems, training, and licensing adequate for such sales activities?
3. Does the institution adequately monitor customer referral and insurance sales activities?
4. Does the audit function include the insurance sales program, and is it adequate?

Based on the conclusions and responses to the above questions, examiners should determine the extent of transaction testing or file review necessary to complete the compliance examination. If such review is deemed appropriate, examiners should pull a sample of accounts and/or files and use the Expanded Analysis procedures below.

Expanded Analysis

The examination procedures in this section should be used when examiners identify material weaknesses in the institution's compliance management system that require further review to complete their assessment and to determine the institution's compliance with part 343. The entire set of expanded procedures should not be applied automatically. Examiners should use only those expanded procedures that address specific areas of significant risk, weakness, or supervisory concern.

Sample customer account files to review disclosures and written acknowledgments, including those incorporated into credit applications.

Review all advertising and promotional materials, including the text of prepared scripts (telemarketing and platform).

Personnel Qualifications

Sample sales representative personnel files to determine whether they have the appropriate licenses and training, and to review their regulatory histories.

Sales Setting

Determine that the retail insurance sales setting is physically distinct from the retail deposit area (visit additional sales locations when practical).

In those instances where there is limited space in the institution, determine that signage and other techniques are used to clearly distinguish the retail insurance sales setting from the retail deposit area to avoid the potential for customer confusion.

Compensation

Review management reports, sales reports, and a sample of employee insurance sales compensation records to verify that customer referral fees are paid as a one-time nominal fee of a fixed dollar amount for each referral, and that the referral fee is paid regardless of whether the referral results in a transaction.

Monitoring

Sample customer account files and evaluate the effectiveness of the institution's monitoring at identifying and eliminating documentation deficiencies.

Review customer complaints and consider whether the institution addressed them adequately and used them to detect potential compliance breakdowns.

Sales Practices

Review sales records to ensure that only licensed personnel sell insurance.

Documenting Examination Findings.

Findings should be documented in the workpapers and incorporated in the report of examination as appropriate. In addition, record the information in FOCUS under the tabbed section labeled “NDP Sales” whether the institution sells insurance (yes/no).

Advertisement of Membership—Part 328 of FDIC Rules and Regulations

Introduction

These examination procedures were developed to assist examiners in the review of advertisements and signs for compliance with Part 328 of the FDIC Rules and Regulations.¹

The regulation contained in this part describes the official sign of the FDIC and prescribes its use by insured depository institutions. It also prescribes the official advertising statement insured depository institutions must include in their advertisements. For purposes of Part 328, the term “insured depository institution” includes insured branches of a foreign depository institution. The regulation does not apply to non-insured offices or branches of insured depository institutions located in foreign countries.

Examination Objective

The objective of the examination is to:

- Determine whether public advertisements and signs comply with applicable regulatory requirements and adhere to FDIC guidance.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the official sign is properly displayed at each station or window where deposits are received, in accordance with the requirements of §§ 328.1 and 328.2, including the requirements for varied signs in § 328.2(a)(2).

NOTE: Display of the official sign at automated teller machines (ATMs) is not required.

NOTE: If required official sign is missing or obsolete, inform management of the availability of this item from the FDIC upon request and that it may be obtained by faxing a written request on bank letterhead to:

FAX: (703) 516-5201

Or via FDICconnect at:

<https://www.fdicconnect.gov/index.asp>

Requests should indicate the number of each requested item needed and the name and address of the financial institution.

2. If the financial institution sells, on-premises, nondeposit investment products or insurance products, determine whether such activities (including any promotional materials) do not mislead consumers as to the products’ insured status and comport with the Interagency Statement on Retail Sales of Nondeposit Investment Products and Part 343 of the FDIC Rules and Regulations (Consumer Protection in Sales of Insurance).
3. Determine whether the official advertisement statement (as set forth in § 328.3(b)) is properly included in all advertisements (as defined in § 328.3(a)) that either promote deposit products or promote non-specific banking products and services, unless an exception in § 328.3(d) applies. Review for compliance with the restrictions in § 328.3(e)(4) on using the official advertising statement when advertising nondeposit products.
4. If the official advertisement statement “Member FDIC” is in a language other than English, determine whether prior written approval of the translation was obtained from the FDIC. (§328.3(f))
5. Provide a comment in the Report of Examination for any deficiencies noted during the examination.

Section 42 of the Federal Deposit Insurance (FDI) Act—Branch Closings

Introduction

Section 42 of the Federal Deposit Insurance (FDI) Act (12 USC §1831r) sets forth guidelines for financial institutions to notify the FDIC and its customers regarding proposals to close a branch. Financial institutions are also required to adopt policies for closings of branches, with special content requirements for closing notices relating to branches in low- or moderate-income areas.

Statutory Overview

For purposes of Section 42, a branch is considered to be a traditional brick-and-mortar branch, or any similar banking facility other than a main office, at which deposits are received or checks paid or money lent. Section 42 does not apply to the following:

- An ATM, a remote service facility, a loan production office, or a temporary branch;
- The relocation of a branch or consolidation of one or more branches into another branch, if the relocation or consolidation:
 - Occurs within the immediate neighborhood; and
 - Does not substantially affect the nature of the business or customers served; or
- A branch that is closed in connection with an emergency acquisition.

Examination Objectives

The objectives are to determine whether the institution is in compliance with the statutory requirements for branch closings, including those relating to the following:

- Providing prior notification of any branch closing to its appropriate Federal banking agency and customers of the branch.
- Establishing internal policies for branch closings.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the institution has adopted a branch closing policy that ensures compliance with the Interagency Policy Statement Concerning Branch Closing Notices and Policies, regarding branch closing notices and Section 42 of the FDI Act. (Section 42(c))
2. Determine whether the institution's procedures for closing a branch have been followed since the latter of December 19, 1991, or the last examination in which compliance was assessed with the Policy Statement concerning branch closing notices and Section 42 of the FDI Act.
3. Determine whether the institution provided adequate notice of all branch closings to the FDIC at least 90 days prior to the proposed closing of any branch closed on or after December 19, 1991. (Section 42(a))

- The notice must include:
 - A detailed statement of the reasons, and
 - Statistical or other information in support of such reasons.

4. Determine that the institution provided adequate notice of the proposed closing to its customers at least 90 days prior to the proposed closing of the branch. (Section 42(b))

The institution must:

- Post a notice in a conspicuous manner on the premises of the proposed branch for a period of not less than 30 days ending on the date proposed for that closing, and
- Include a notice in:
 - At least one regular account statement mailed to customers of the branch proposed to be closed, or
 - A separate mailing.

NOTE: In the case of an interstate bank which proposes to close any branch in a low- or moderate-income area, the notice required shall also contain the mailing address of the FDIC and a statement that comments on the proposed closing may be mailed to the FDIC. (Section 42(c))

5. Determine if the institution has posted a notice to branch customers in a conspicuous manner on the branch premises at least 30 days prior to the proposed closing of any branch closed on or after December 19, 1991.

The Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act)

Introduction

The Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act),¹ signed into law on June 30, 2000, provides a general rule of validity for electronic records and signatures for transactions in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce. The E-Sign Act allows the use of electronic records to satisfy any statute, regulation, or rule of law requiring that such information be provided in writing, if the consumer has affirmatively consented to such use and has not withdrawn such consent.

Subject to certain exceptions, the substantive provisions of the law were effective on October 1, 2000. Record retention requirements became effective on March 1, 2001. The E-Sign Act grandfathers existing agreements between a consumer and an institution to deliver information electronically. However, agreements made on or after October 1, 2000, are subject to the requirements of the E-Sign Act.

Summary of Major Provisions

Consumer Disclosures

Prior Consent, Notice of Availability of Paper Records

Prior to obtaining their consent, financial institutions must provide the consumer, a clear and conspicuous statement informing the consumer:

- of any right or option to have the record provided or made available on paper or in a non electronic form, and the right to withdraw consent, including any conditions, consequences, and fees in the event of such withdrawal;
- whether the consent applies only to the particular transaction that triggered the disclosure or to identified categories of records that may be provided during the course of the parties' relationship;
- describing the procedures the consumer must use to withdraw consent and to update information needed to contact the consumer electronically; and
- informing the consumer how the consumer may nonetheless request a paper copy of a record and whether any fee will be charged for that copy.

See Section 101(c)(1)(B).

Hardware and Software Requirements; Notice of Changes

Prior to consenting to the use of an electronic record, a consumer must be provided with a statement of the hardware and software requirements for access to and retention of electronic records. See Section 101(c)(1)(i).

Whether the consumer consents electronically, or confirms his or her consent electronically, it must be in a manner that reasonably demonstrates the consumer can access information in the electronic form that will be used to provide the information that is the subject of the consent. See Section 101(c)(1)(C)(ii).

If a change in the hardware or software requirements need to access or retain electronic records creates a material risk that the consumer will not be able to access or retain subsequent electronic records subject to the consent, a financial institution must:

- provide the consumer with a statement of (a) the revised hardware and software requirements for access to and retention of electronic records, and (b) the right to withdraw consent without the imposition of any condition, consequence, or fee for such withdrawal; and
- again comply with the requirements of subparagraph (c) of this section.

See Section 101(c)(1)(D).

Oral communications or a recording of an oral communication shall not qualify as an electronic record. See Section 101(c)(6).

Record Retention

The E-Sign Act requires a financial institution to maintain electronic records accurately reflecting the information contained in applicable contracts, notices or disclosures and that they remain accessible to all persons who are legally entitled to access for the period required by law in a form that is capable of being accurately reproduced for later reference. See Section 101(d).

Agreements reached with consumers prior to October 1, 2000, to deliver information electronically are exempt from the requirements of Section 101(d). However, for any agreements made with new or existing customers on or after October 1, 2000, the requirements of Section 101(c)(1) will supersede all other consumer consent procedures relating to the use of electronic disclosures set forth in other regulations.

Regulatory and Other Actions

The consumer consent provisions in the E-Sign Act became effective October 1, 2000, and did not require implementing regulations. Nonetheless, on March 30, 2001, the Federal Reserve Board (FRB) adopted interim final rules (Interim Final Rules) and on November 9, 2007, the FRB adopted final rules (Final Rules) establishing uniform standards for the electronic delivery of federally mandated disclosures for five consumer protection regulations: Regulation B, Equal Credit Opportunity; Regulation E, Electronic Fund Transfers; Regulation M, Consumer Leasing; Regulation Z, Truth in Lending, and Regulation DD, Truth in Savings.

The Final Rules provided guidance on the timing and delivery of electronic disclosures. Pursuant to the Final Rules, electronic disclosures should be made using a method best suited to the particular type of disclosure. If the consumer uses electronic means to open an account or request a service, the disclosures must be provided before the account is opened or the service is requested. In response to a consumer request, disclosures should be made available in a reasonable amount of time and may be electronic if the consumer agrees. There are exceptions to the consumer consent requirement for electronically providing certain types of disclosures when the consumer is using electronic means such as a home computer. Disclosures should be maintained on the website for a reasonable amount of time for consumers to access, view, and retain the disclosures. The mandatory compliance date was October 1, 2008.

Prohibition Against Use of Interstate Branches Primarily for Deposit Production

Introduction

The Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (“the agencies”), jointly issued a final rule, effective October 10, 1997, that adopted uniform regulations¹ implementing section 109 of the Riegle-Neal Interstate Banking and Branching Efficiency Act of 1994 (IBBEA).

IBBEA allows banks to branch across state lines. Section 109, however, prohibits any bank from establishing or acquiring a branch or branches outside of its home State, pursuant to IBBEA, primarily for the purpose of deposit production. Congress enacted section 109 to ensure that interstate branches would not take deposits from a community without the bank reasonably helping to meet the credit needs of that community.

Subsequently, section 106 of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act of 1999 (GLBA) amended section 109 by changing the definition of an “interstate branch” to include any branch of a bank controlled by an out-of State bank holding company. Interagency regulations implementing this amendment became effective October 1, 2002.

The language of section 109 and its legislative history make clear that the agencies are to administer section 109 without imposing additional regulatory burden on banks. Consequently, the agencies’ regulations do not impose additional data reporting requirements nor do they require a bank to produce, or assist in producing, relevant data.

Coverage

Section 109 applies to any bank that has covered interstate branches. Examples of covered interstate branches can be found at the end of the Examination Procedures in this section.

Definitions

“Covered Interstate Branch”

1. Any branch of a national bank, a State member bank, or a State nonmember bank, and any Federal branch of a foreign bank, or any uninsured or insured branch of a foreign bank licensed by a State, that:
 - (i) is established or acquired outside the bank’s home State pursuant to the interstatebranching authority granted by IBBEA or by any amendment made by IBBEA to any other provision of law; or
 - (ii) could not have been established or acquired outside of the bank’s home State but for the establishment or acquisition of a branch described in (i) and

2. any bank or branch of a bank controlled by an out-of-State bank holding company.

“Home State”

1. For State banks, home State means the State that chartered the bank.
2. With respect to a national bank, home State means the State in which the main office of the bank is located.
3. With respect to a bank holding company, home State means the State in which the total deposits of all banking subsidiaries of such company are the largest on the later of:
 - (i) July 1, 1966; or
 - (ii) the date on which the company becomes a holding company under the Bank Holding Company Act.
4. With respect to a foreign bank, home State means:
 - (i) for purposes of determining whether a U.S. branch of a foreign bank is a covered interstate branch, the home State of the foreign bank as determined in accordance with 12 USC 3103(c) and Section 211.22 of the Federal Reserve Board’s Regulations (12 CFR §211.22), Section 28.11(o)) of the OCC’s regulations (12 CFR §28.11(o), and Section 347.202(j) of the FDIC’s regulations (12 CFR §347.202(j)); and
 - (ii) for purposes of determining whether a branch of a U.S. bank controlled by a foreign bank is a covered interstate branch, the State in which the total deposits of all banking subsidiaries of such foreign bank are the largest on the later of:
 - (a) July 1, 1966; or
 - (b) the date on which the foreign bank becomes a bank holding company under the Bank Holding Company Act.

“Host State” – means a State in which a covered interstate branch is established or acquired.

“Host State Loan-to-Deposit Ratio” – is the ratio of total loans in the host State to total deposits from the host State for all banks that have that State as their home State.

“Out-of-State Bank Holding Company” – means, with respect to any State, a bank holding company whose home State is another State.

“Statewide Loan-to-Deposit Ratio” – relates to an individual bank and is the ratio of the bank’s loans to its deposits in a particular State where it has one or more covered interstate branches.

The Two Step Test

Beginning no earlier than one year after a covered interstate branch is acquired or established, the agency will determine whether a bank is complying with the provisions of section 109. Section 109 provides a two-step test for determining ¹ See 12 CFR 25, 12 CFR 208, and 12 CFR 369.

X. Other — Deposit Production Offices

compliance with the prohibition against interstate deposit production offices:

1. Loan-to-deposit ratio. The first step involves a loan-to-deposit (LTD) ratio screen, which is designed to measure the lending and deposit activities of covered interstate branches. The LTD ratio screen compares the bank's statewide LTD ratio to the host State LTD ratio. If the bank's statewide LTD ratio is at least one-half of the relevant host State LTD ratio, the bank passes the section 109 evaluation and no further review is required. Host State ratios are prepared, and made public, by the agencies annually. For the most recent ratios, see OCC bulletins, FDIC Financial Institution Letters, or FRB Press Releases.
2. Credit needs determination. The second step is a credit needs determination that is conducted if a bank fails the LTD ratio screen or if the LTD ratio cannot be calculated due to insufficient data or due to data that are not reasonably available. This step requires the examiner to review the activities of the bank, such as its lending activity and performance under the CRA, in order to determine whether the bank is reasonably helping to meet the credit needs of the communities served by the bank in the host State. Banks may provide the examiner with any relevant information including loan data, if a credit needs determination is performed.

Although Section 109 specifically requires the examiner to consider a bank's CRA rating when making a credit needs determination, a bank's CRA rating should not be the only factor considered. However, since most of the other factors (see procedure for Credit Needs Determination) are taken into account as part of a bank's performance context under CRA, it is expected that banks with a satisfactory or better CRA rating will receive a favorable credit needs determination. Banks with a less than satisfactory CRA rating may receive an adverse credit needs determination unless mitigated by the other factors enumerated in section 109. To ensure consistency, compliance with Section 109 generally should be reviewed in conjunction with the evaluation of a bank's CRA performance.

With respect to institutions designated as wholesale or limited purpose banks, a credit needs determination should consider a bank's performance using the appropriate CRA performance test provided in the CRA regulations. For banks not subject to CRA, including certain special purpose banks and uninsured branches of foreign banks,² the examiner should use the CRA regulations only as a guideline when making a credit needs determination for such institutions. Section 109 does not obligate the institution to have a record of performance under the CRA nor does it require the institution to pass any CRA performance tests.

Enforcement and Sanctions

Before a bank can be sanctioned under section 109, the appropriate agency is required to demonstrate that the bank failed to comply with the LTD ratio screen and failed to reasonably help meet the credit needs of the communities served by the bank in the host State. Since the bank must fail both the LTD ratio screen and the credit needs determination in order to be in noncompliance with Section 109, the agencies have an obligation to apply the LTD ratio screen before seeking sanctions, regardless of the regulatory burden imposed. Thus, if a bank receives an adverse credit needs determination, the LTD ratio screen must be applied even if the data necessary to calculate the appropriate ratio are not readily available. Consequently, the agencies are required to obtain the necessary data to calculate the bank's statewide LTD ratio before sanctions are imposed.

If a bank fails both steps of the section 109 evaluation, the statute outlines sanctions that the appropriate agency can impose. The sanctions are:

- (i) ordering the closing of the interstate branch in the host State; and
- (ii) prohibiting the bank from opening a new branch in the host State.

Sanctions, however, may not be warranted if a bank provides reasonable assurances to the satisfaction of the appropriate agency that it has an acceptable plan that will reasonably help to meet the credit needs of the communities served, or to be served. An examiner should consult with the RO before discussing possible sanctions with any bank. Also, before sanctions are imposed, the agencies stated in the preamble to the final 1997 regulation that they intend to consult with State banking authorities.

Examination Objective

To ensure that a bank is not operating a covered interstate branch(es), as defined, primarily for the purpose of deposit production, by determining if the bank meets (i) the loan-to-deposit (LTD) ratio screen, or (ii) the credit needs determination requirements of section 109 of IBBEA.

Examination Procedures³

Examples of covered interstate branches can be found at the end of this section.

Identification of Covered Interstate Branches

1. Banks controlled by an out-of-State bank holding company.

³ This reflects the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

- Determine if the bank is controlled by an out-of-State bank holding company by identifying the home State of the bank and the home State of the bank holding company. To determine the home State of a bank, refer to the definition. To determine the home State of a bank holding company, refer to home State data available from your agency and confirm the home State with bank management.
 - If the bank is not controlled by a bank holding company, or the home State of the bank holding company is the same state as the home State of the bank, the bank does not have any covered interstate branches under procedures #1. Go to procedure #2.
 - If the home State of the bank holding company is not the same as the home State of the bank, then the bank meets the definition of a covered interstate branch and is subject to section 109. Go to procedures #2 and #3.
2. Banks with interstate branches. Determine if the bank has any branches that were established or acquired pursuant to IBBEA in states other than the bank's home State. If so, the bank has a covered interstate branch. Go to procedure #3. If the bank has no covered interstate branches under procedures #1 and #2, the bank is not subject to section 109 and no further review is necessary.
 3. One-year rule. For the covered interstate branches identified in procedure #1 and/or #2, determine if any have been covered interstate branches for one year or more. Note that, if any of a bank's covered interstate branches within a particular state have been covered interstate branches for one year or more, then all of the bank's covered interstate branches within that State are subject to review. If any branch has been a covered interstate branch for one year or more, go to procedure #4. If not, no further review is necessary at this time.

Assessing Compliance with the LTD Ratio Screen

4. For a covered interstate branch subject to section 109, determine if the bank has sufficient data to calculate a statewide LTD ratio for each respective host State. (The bank is not required to provide this information or assist in providing this information.) For States where the bank has sufficient data, go to procedure #5. For States where the bank does not have sufficient data, go to procedure #6.
5. For each host State where the bank can provide loan and deposit data, calculate and compare the bank's statewide LTD ratio to the applicable host State LTD ratio provided by the agencies. If the bank's statewide LTD ratio equals or exceeds one-half of the relevant host State LTD ratio, the bank passes the LTD ratio screen and the section 109 evaluation in that state and no further review is necessary. If the bank's statewide LTD ratio is less than one-half of the host State LTD ratio in that state, the bank fails the LTD ratio screen. Go to procedure #6.

Credit Needs Determination

6. For each host State identified in procedure #4 and/or #5, determine whether the bank is reasonably helping to meet the credit needs of communities served by the bank in the host State. When making this determination, consider the following items:
 - whether the covered interstate branches were formerly part of a failed or failing depository institution;
 - whether the covered interstate branches were acquired under circumstances where there was a low LTD ratio because of the nature of the acquired institution's business or loan portfolio;
 - whether the covered interstate branches have a higher concentration of commercial or credit card lending, trust services, or other specialized activities, including the extent to which the covered interstate branches accept deposits in the host State;
 - the most recent ratings (overall rating, multistate MSA rating, and State ratings) received by the bank under the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA);
 - economic conditions, including the level of loan demand, within the communities served by the covered interstate branches;
 - the safe and sound operation and condition of the bank; and
 - the CRA regulation, examination procedures, and interpretations of the regulation.

If the bank passes the credit needs determination test, the bank complies with section 109 and no further review is necessary. If the bank fails the credit needs determination test but a LTD ratio screen has not been conducted, go to procedure #7. If the bank fails the credit needs determination test and has failed the LTD ratio screen, the bank is in noncompliance with section 109. Go to procedure #8.

Determining Whether Sanctions are Warranted

7. Calculate the bank's statewide LTD ratio for each host State in which the bank failed the credit needs determination test. The data used to calculate these ratios may be obtained from any reliable source. The bank may, but is not required to, provide the examiner with additional data at any time during the examination. If the bank's statewide LTD ratio(s) is equal to or greater than one-half of the host State LTD ratio, the bank complies with section 109 requirements and no further review is necessary. If a bank's statewide LTD ratio is less than one-half of the respective host State LTD ratio, the bank is in noncompliance with section 109. Go to procedure #8.
8. Consult the RO to determine whether sanctions are warranted.

Evaluation
1. Does the bank have any covered interstate branches? Determine: (a) if the bank has established or acquired any branches outside the bank's home State pursuant to the interstate branching authority granted by the Riegle-Neal Interstate Banking and Branching Efficiency Act of 1994, or (b) whether the bank, including a bank consisting of only a main office, is controlled by an out-of-State bank holding company as defined in section 2(o)(7) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.
If the answer to both (a) and (b) is No, no further review is necessary.
2. Have any covered interstate branches been covered interstate branches for one year or more? If any of a bank's covered interstate branches within a particular state have been covered interstate branches for one year or more, then all of the bank's covered interstate branches within that state are subject to review.

Examples of Covered Interstate Branches

Bank with branches outside of its home State.

Bank A is an interstate bank with branches in PA that were established or acquired under IBBEA. Bank A's home State is NY and its host State is PA. The PA branches are covered interstate branches subject to the section 109 review. Bank A's statewide loan-to-deposit (LTD) ratio in PA is compared to the host State LTD ratio for PA.

The section 109 screen is conducted at the same time as a bank's CRA examination.

Bank, consisting only of a main office, controlled by an out-of-State bank holding company.

Banks B and Bank C are both controlled by a BHC whose home State is NY. Bank B is an intrastate bank and is not subject to the section 109 review.

Bank C's home State is Connecticut and it is subject to the section 109 review because it is controlled by an out-of-State BHC whose home State is NY. Bank C's statewide LTD ratio in CT will be compared to the host State LTD ratio for CT.

The section 109 screen is conducted at the same time as a bank's CRA examination. The section 109 screen is conducted at the same time as a bank's CRA examination.

Covered interstate branches under a multi-tiered bank holding company structure.

This example illustrates the requirement to look to the top tier BHC when determining whether to conduct the section 109 review. Banks J, K, L, and M are all controlled by a top-tier BHC whose home State is NY.

Out-of-State BHC: Banks J and M are subject to section 109 reviews because an out-of-State top tier BHC controls both of them. Bank J's home State is PA; its statewide LTD ratio in PA will be compared to the host State LTD ratio for PA. Bank M's home State is CT; its statewide LTD ratio in CT will be compared to the host State LTD ratio for CT.

Out-of-State branches: Bank M's branches in NY also are subject to the section 109 review because Bank M is an interstate bank. Bank M's home State is CT; its statewide LTD ratio in NY is compared to the host State LTD ratio for NY. Bank L's branches in PA also are subject to the section 109 review because Bank L is an interstate bank. Bank L's home State is NY; its statewide LTD ratio in PA will be compared to the host State LTD ratio for PA.

Not subject to 109 review: Bank K is not subject to review for section 109 compliance because an out-of-State BHC does not control it and it does not have interstate branches.

The section 109 screen is conducted at the same time as a bank's CRA examination.

Bank Subsidiaries and Affiliates

These examination procedures were developed to provide examiners guidance regarding:

1. how to review bank subsidiaries and affiliates (including those that are not institution-affiliated parties (IAPs)) of an FDIC-supervised institution for compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations;
2. the information and documentation needed to determine whether an affiliate is an IAP; and
3. how to incorporate violations involving subsidiaries and affiliates in the Report of Examination (ROE).

These procedures should be used when, in the course of an examination, visitation, or investigation, examiners believe an affiliate or subsidiary of a state non-member bank may have violated fair lending or other consumer protection laws and regulations.

Background

FDIC examination authority over IAPs is derived from the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (FDI Act). The FDI Act permits examiners to examine affiliates of insured banks as needed to disclose the relationship between the bank and a given affiliate, as well as the effect of that relationship on the bank.¹ The term “affiliate” encompasses any company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with another company. Therefore, a subsidiary controlled by a non-member bank, whether wholly owned or not, is considered an “affiliate” of the bank² for purposes of the FDI Act.

The FDIC generally may only bring enforcement actions against insured state non-member banks and their IAPs.³ Accordingly, while affiliates of FDIC-supervised banks should be reviewed in all cases, it is necessary to determine whether the affiliate qualifies as an IAP of the bank both in order to properly document violations of the affiliate in the ROE and to determine whether such violations can be pursued directly by the FDIC or must be referred to another agency.

Once a potential violation of a consumer protection law or regulation is discovered during the review of the affiliate’s activities, then IAP status of the affiliate must be determined. An affiliate may be an IAP based on any one or more of the statutory bases set forth in section (u) of the FDI Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1813(u), where the term “institution-affiliated party” is defined as:

1. any director, officer, employee, or controlling stockholder (other than a bank holding company) of, or agent for, an insured depository institution;
2. any other person who has filed or is required to file a change-in-control notice with the appropriate Federal banking agency under section 7(j);
3. any shareholder (other than a bank holding company), consultant, joint venture partner, and any other person as determined by the appropriate Federal banking agency (by regulation or case-by-case) who participates in the conduct of the affairs of an insured depository institution;
4. any independent contractor (including any attorney, appraiser, or accountant) who knowingly or recklessly participates in
 - any violation of any law or regulation;
 - any breach of fiduciary duty; or
 - any unsafe or unsound practice, which caused or is likely to cause more than a minimal financial loss to, or a significant adverse effect on, the insured depository institution.

Most often, an affiliate or subsidiary of a bank could be an IAP:

- as an agent of the institution under subsection;
- as a consultant, joint venture partner, or “other person” participating in the affairs of the institution under subsection; or,
- less likely, as an independent contractor whose misconduct has caused serious loss to, or an adverse effect on the institution.

Examination Procedures

1. During the pre-examination process, an examiner should determine if the bank has an affiliate, and the relationship of that affiliate to the bank. Examiners should apply a risk-focused approach in determining if and to what extent an affiliate’s activities should be reviewed. The scope of the review of affiliate activity will be preliminarily established during the pre-examination process and should be refined during the examination as a result of discussions held or the presence of significant issues or violations.
2. Regardless of whether an affiliate is an IAP or not, examiners should review affiliates of FDIC-supervised banks. Affiliate activity is considered under many aspects of the examination process, such as during the review of Non-Deposit Insurance/Investment Products, Privacy of Consumer Financial Information, Fair Credit Reporting Act, Third-Party Risk, UDAP, RESPA, Fair Lending, and CRA, if applicable. Applicable examination procedures should be applied to the various activities of bank affiliates. Transactional testing may be necessary using examination procedures for applicable consumer laws and regulations. If a review of the affiliate's activities results in no apparent violation or issue, then determination of IAP status is not necessary, and no further examination procedures apply.

1 12 U.S.C. § 1820\(b\)\(4\).

2 Hereinafter “affiliate” will include both subsidiaries (wholly owned or otherwise) and affiliates of the bank.

3. Once an examiner identifies a potential violation of a consumer protection law or regulation during his or her review of an affiliate's activities, the next step should be to consult Legal to determine IAP status so that the FDIC can decide whether it has enforcement jurisdiction over the affiliate. An examiner initially should ascertain if this determination previously has been made (e.g., during a prior compliance or risk management examination). If so, verify that the facts relied upon in making the prior determination remain substantially unchanged. If a determination previously has not been made, the process of determining IAP status should begin as soon as a potential violation is discovered, but should not hold up the examiner's review if discovered prior to the determination.
4. If apparent violations exist and no IAP determination previously has been made, then during the examination proper documentation should be gathered to determine the relationship of any affiliates and the bank utilizing the guidance below. The Region should consult the Legal Division early in the process to discuss and determine which of the areas outlined below would be most fruitful in determining whether the affiliate is an IAP and in identifying the additional information or documentation necessary to support an IAP status determination.

The first and most important step in the analysis of IAP status is to fully understand the relationship between the bank and its affiliate with regard to its operations and its structure. Analysis of IAP status is fact-specific and can be complex. This includes, among other things, the extent to which the affiliate is involved in the activities of the bank. IAP determinations can also require an in-depth analysis of the effect of the affiliate's operations on the bank's financial stability and viability.

As a threshold matter, identify the asset size of the bank and the asset size of the affiliate. As you gather the information and documentation below, keep in mind that no single fact or element will prove institution affiliated or non-affiliated status.

- What is the legal relationship between the bank and the affiliate?
 - What is the contractual relationship between the bank and the affiliate?
 - Are the bank and the affiliate under common control (e.g., under the same holding company structure)?
 - How much of the affiliate is owned by the bank? (e.g., Is it a wholly owned subsidiary? If not, does the bank have a majority or minority interest?

What is the bank's ownership percentage of interest? What is the amount of the bank's investment?)

- What is the management relationship between the bank and the affiliate?
 - Does the composition of the board of directors of the affiliate mirror or overlap with the board of directors of the bank?
 - Do the affiliate and the bank share management or employees? If so, are expenses for the affiliate's employees reflected on the bank's Call Report?
 - Does the affiliate influence or have the ability to affect bank policies, procedures, activities, or operations?
- What is the financial relationship between the bank and the affiliate?
 - Has the bank funded affiliate loans either directly or indirectly through funding a revolving line of credit to the affiliate? If so, what are the amount and terms of the loan? Who else lends to the affiliate and what proportion of the outstanding credit comes from the bank versus outside sources? What is the ratio of the bank's total assets to the loan(s) or line(s) of credit to the affiliate?
 - What is the percentage of the bank's total net income that is derived from the affiliate services or accounts?
 - What effect would the failure or bankruptcy of the affiliate have on the bank? How closely is the bank's success linked to the affiliate's success?
 - Are customers referred between the bank and the affiliate? If so, on what basis? If so, what are the percentages of total referrals made and received by each entity, respectively?
 - If any customers are referred between the bank and affiliate, are any referral fees paid?
 - Are there any shared resources between the bank and affiliate (such as compliance consulting firms, audit firms, or marketing firms)?
- What is the professional relationship between the bank and the affiliate?
 - What services does the affiliate perform for the bank?
 - Who prepares and files the HMDA LAR on behalf of the bank?
 - If the affiliate makes loans, does the affiliate file its HMDA LAR independently, or with the bank?
 - Does the bank claim the affiliate's loans for CRA credit?

X. Other — Bank Subsidiaries and Affiliates

- What is the affiliate's involvement in developing the bank's loan program?
 - Does the affiliate develop the terms and conditions of the bank's loan program(s)? If so, to what extent does the bank participate?
 - Does the affiliate set underwriting standards for the bank (or vice versa)?
 - Who prepares marketing materials for the bank's loan programs? If the affiliate is involved, what is the level of the bank's oversight? To the extent that solicitation materials are reviewed for legal compliance, whose attorney does so? Who has final approval of the solicitation and marketing materials?
- What is the affiliate's involvement in loan processing?
 - To what extent does the affiliate receive loan applications, engage in underwriting activities, service loans, etc.?
 - Does the affiliate participate in credit decisions for loans originated by the bank? Are the decisions of the affiliate subject to review by the bank? What type of review does the bank conduct?
 - Who closes the loans? In whose name?
- What is the Bank's involvement in loan funding?
 - Who funds the loans?
 - What percentage of loans funded by the bank are originated by the affiliate?
 - If the affiliate focuses on one or a few loan categories, what portion of the loans the bank funds in those categories are originated by the affiliate?
 - To what extent do the bank and affiliate purchase loans from each other? What percentage of loans made by one entity are purchased by the other entity?
 - To what extent does the bank buy participation interests from the affiliate or vice versa? Are such purchases pursuant to an agreement?
- If the loans are sold to investors: 1) Does the bank guarantee any warranty obligation of the affiliate in the Loan Sale Agreement? 2) How are the participation interests, if any, transferred to investors?
- Are there any other facts or information that connect the affiliate with the bank, or that otherwise may be relevant?
 - What is the physical proximity between the affiliate and the bank? Do they share office space? If so, is the space leased or provided at no cost to the affiliate? If not, are the offices in close proximity to each other?
 - How do the bank and the affiliate define their relationship to the public?
 - Does the affiliate refer loan customers to the bank (and vice versa)?
 - Does the affiliate share the same website as the bank?
 - Does the website of the affiliate contain references or links to the bank (and vice versa)?
 - Who sends the bank's marketing materials to potential customers? In whose name are the materials sent?
 - Do the affiliate's marketing materials and solicitations reference the bank?
 - Do other public representations demonstrate a link between the bank and the affiliate?

Gathering Documents:

The following are examples of types of documents that may be relevant in conducting an IAP analysis. This list is not all-inclusive and examiners are encouraged to gather and consider any and all relevant documentation.

- Contracts or other written agreements between the bank and the affiliate;
- E-mails or other written correspondence between the affiliate and the bank relating to any services or programs conducted by the affiliate of the bank that are relevant in defining the relationship between the bank and its affiliate;
- Documentation relating to transactions conducted, and compensation arrangements between the affiliate and the bank;
- Policies governing the relationship between the affiliate and the bank and any other pertinent policies and procedures;
- Documents relating to marketing materials, transactions, loan terms and conditions, underwriting standards, and the extent to which the affiliate is involved;
- If the bank's website refers to the affiliate, a screen shot of that page, and other relevant pages, if any;
- If the affiliate's website refers to the bank, a screen shot of that page, and other relevant pages, if any;
- HMDA LARs;

X. Other — Bank Subsidiaries and Affiliates

- Organizational charts that show the relationship between the holding company (if any), the bank, and the affiliate;
 - Officer and Director lists for bank and affiliate;
 - Entity formation documents for the affiliate (Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws);
 - For loans originated by the affiliate: investor contracts, including Investor Lock Agreements, Loan Sale Agreements and Guarantees with investors, to determine the bank’s potential liability;
 - Interview notes with bank management and the affiliate about the relationship between the two entities and how it works in practice (not just as written);
 - Board minutes of bank and affiliate; and
 - Any line-of-credit agreements with the bank or any entities with which the bank and/or affiliate both have credit lines (reflecting shared source of funding).
5. If the Region has conducted a review of the affiliate’s activities and believes that a violation has occurred, in cases where a 15-day letter is appropriate, a 15-day letter must be sent to both the bank and the affiliate informing them of the preliminary finding and providing them an opportunity to respond. In instances where an affiliate is deemed not to be an IAP, and there is a potential fair lending violation, the FDIC must determine if the bank is liable on its own actions. Prior to sending the 15-day letter, the examiner must determine whether the bank participated in the credit decision for the loans at issue, and thus can be deemed a “Creditor” under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA). Regulation B defines the term “Creditor” as a person who, in the ordinary course of business, regularly participates in a credit decision, including setting the terms of the credit (i.e. did the bank establish the underwriting standards for the affiliate). The term “Creditor” includes a creditor’s assignee, transferee, or subrogee who so participates. For purposes of ECOA’s discrimination provision⁴ and its discouragement provision,⁵ the term “Creditor” also includes a person who, in the ordinary course of business, regularly refers applicants or prospective applicants to creditors, or selects or offers to select creditors to whom requests for credit may be made. A person⁶ is not a “Creditor” regarding any violation of ECOA committed by another “Creditor” unless the person knew or had reasonable notice of the act, policy, or practice that constituted the violation before becoming involved in the credit transaction.⁷ One of the primary purposes of this analysis is to determine whether the bank has any independent liability under ECOA.
6. The following applies: 1) in instances when a 15-day letter is not required, or 2) in instances when a 15-day letter has been sent and, after reviewing the response to the 15-day letter, DCP continues to believe that a violation has occurred. If the affiliate is an IAP, the violation should be cited in the ROE and enforcement action against the IAP directly should be considered. If the affiliate is deemed not to be an IAP, the FDIC will refer the case to the appropriate Federal agency with primary enforcement responsibility, such as the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) or the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB).
7. Regardless of the affiliate’s IAP status, the violation should be documented in the ROE. Section 10(b)(5)(B) of the FDI Act requires that FDIC examiners make “a full and detailed report of condition of any insured depository institution or affiliate examined to the Corporation.”
- The examiner should include appropriate comments on the Examiner’s Comments and Conclusion pages of the ROE. The comments should identify the specific affiliate and describe how that affiliate violated fair lending or other consumer protection laws and regulations.
 - The examiner should include a description of the affiliate’s violation on the Violations page of the ROE. In situations where the affiliate is not an IAP, a summary should be included at the top of the Violations page explaining that because the entity is not an IAP, the FDIC will refer the matter to the appropriate Federal agency with primary enforcement jurisdiction over the entity. However, violations of affiliates, whether an IAP or not, should not be entered in FOCUS.
 - Whether or not the affiliate is an IAP, the bank remains responsible for robust oversight of third-party activities and quality control over those products and services provided through third-party arrangements, in order to minimize exposure to potential significant financial loss, reputational damage and supervisory action. Where a bank has failed to fulfill its oversight responsibility, and particularly where the bank has had prior notice of affiliate violations, the bank should be criticized for a lack of proper oversight and required to establish proper controls.⁸

X. Other — Bank Subsidiaries and Affiliates

- Whether or not the affiliate is an IAP, the bank's overall CMS and consumer compliance rating (and potentially CRA rating) should be reflective of the affiliate's violations.

Sweep Account Disclosure Requirements—FDIC Part 360.8

Introduction

These examination procedures were developed to assist examiners in the review of disclosure requirements that apply to all sweep account contracts for compliance with Part 360.8(e) of the FDIC Rules and Regulations. The regulation contained in this part describes the requirement for institutions to prominently disclose to sweep account customers whether the swept funds are deposits and the status of the swept funds if the institution were to fail.

For purposes of FDIC Part 360, the term “sweep account” is an account held pursuant to a contract between an insured depository institution and its customer involving the pre-arranged, automated transfer of funds from a deposit account to either another account or investment vehicle located within the depository institution (internal sweep account), or an investment vehicle located outside the depository institution (external sweep account). Excluded from the requirement are sweep arrangements where funds are moved between deposit accounts and the deposit insurance available to the customer is unchanged.

Examination Objective

The objective of the examination is to:

- Determine whether the disclosures provided to sweep account customers comply with applicable regulatory requirements.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine for all new sweep account contracts and renewals of existing sweep account contracts, and no less than annually thereafter, that the institution prominently discloses in writing to sweep account customers whether their swept funds are deposits within the meaning of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(l)).
2. If the funds are not deposits, determine whether the institution discloses the status such funds would have if the institution fails.
3. Provide a comment in the Report of Examination for any deficiencies noted during the examination.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act

Community Reinvestment Act

Introduction

The Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) is intended to encourage depository institutions to help meet the credit needs of the communities in which they operate, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, consistent with safe and sound banking operations. It was enacted by the Congress in 1977 (12 USC 2901) and is implemented by Regulations 12 CFR Parts 25, 228, 345, and 563e. The Regulations were revised in 1995 and 2005.

The CRA requires that each insured depository institution's record in helping meet the credit needs of its entire community be evaluated periodically. That record is taken into account in considering an institution's application for deposit facilities, including mergers and acquisitions. CRA examinations are conducted by the federal agencies that are responsible for supervising depository institutions: the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC).

The Agencies¹, through the Federal Financial Institution Examination Council (FFIEC), have established interagency examination procedures for the following types of institutions: Small Institutions, Intermediate Small Institutions, Large Retail Institutions, Limited Purpose and Wholesale Institutions, and Institutions under Strategic Plans. The examination procedures vary based upon the classification of the institution relative to asset size as of December 31st of the prior two calendar years. The five different procedures correspond to the five alternative evaluation methods provided in the CRA regulations and are designed to respond to basic differences in institutions' structures and operations. All of the procedures reflect the intent of the regulation to establish performance-based CRA examinations that are complete and accurate but, to the maximum extent possible, mitigate the compliance burden for institutions. There are also instructions for writing public evaluations; the public evaluation template for each institution type is provided in Section XII.

Asset Thresholds for Determining CRA Performance Evaluation Procedures

The Federal Financial Institution Examination Council (FFIEC) releases the newly adjusted asset thresholds annually which determine the performance evaluation method to be performed by examiners. This information is located at www.ffiec.gov. As of January 2024, the FFIEC published the factors used to determine the size of the institution which also determine the performance evaluation methods used, as follows:

A Small institution means a bank that, as of December 31 of either of the prior two calendar years, had assets of less than $1.564 billion.

An Intermediate small institution means a small institution with assets of at least $391 million as of December 31 of both of the prior two calendar years, and less than $1.564 billion as of December 31 of either of the prior two calendar years. Since there is no CRA loan data requirement for an intermediate small institution, its next examination is under the intermediate small institution examination procedures even if that examination comes due during the institution's first year as an intermediate small institution.

A Large institution has total assets of at least $1.564 billion for December 31 of both of the prior two years. Large institutions are subject to CRA data collection requirements. Thus, they cannot be examined under the large institution examination procedures until they have at least one full year of data collected. In addition, any size institution may opt to be examined as a large institution provided it has collected and reported the required CRA loan data.

FFIEC examples of how the asset thresholds are utilized to determine the performance evaluation method follow:

¹ The "Agencies" include: the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB); the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC); and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC).

XI. Community Reinvestment Act

Bank	Total Assets 12/31/23	Total Assets 12/31/22	CRA Examination Procedures as of 1/1/22	Explanation
Bank A	$415 million	$340 million	Small bank	Bank did not have assets of at least $391 million as of December 31 of both of the prior two calendar years.
Bank B	$1.125 billion	$925 million	Intermediate small bank	Bank had assets of at least $391 million as of December 31 of both of the prior two calendar years, and less than $1.564 billion as of December 31 of either of the prior two calendar years.
Bank C	$1.625 billion	$1.325 billion	Intermediate small bank	Institution had assets of at least $391 million as of December 31 of both of the prior two calendar years, and less than $1.564 billion as of December 31 of either of the prior two calendar years.
Bank D	$1.875 billion	$1.625 billion	Large bank	Institution had total assets of at least $1.564 billion as of December 31 of both of the prior two years.

Small Bank¹

Small Institutions have a streamlined assessment method. The regulations contain only five performance criteria under the small bank lending test:

1. The institution's loan-to-deposit ratio adjusted for seasonal variation and, as appropriate, other lending related activities such as secondary market participation, community development loans or qualified investments;
2. The percentage of loans and other lending-related activities located in the institution's assessment area(s);
3. The distribution of lending among borrowers of different income levels and businesses and farms of different sizes;
4. The distribution of lending among geographies of different income levels; and
5. The institution's record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its CRA performance.

Small institutions are eligible for a rating of "Outstanding," as well as "Satisfactory." An examiner may conclude that an institution's performance so exceeds the standards for a "Satisfactory" rating under the five core criteria that it merits a rating of "Outstanding." In addition, at the institution's option, the examiner will consider the institution's performance in making qualified investments and in providing services that enhance credit availability in its assessment area(s) in order to determine whether the institution merits a rating of "Outstanding."

In carrying out their examination responsibilities, examiners should exercise judgment and common sense in deciding how much material to review and what steps are necessary to reach an accurate conclusion. For example, if an institution's assessment area(s) is comprised of only a few homogenous geographies, a geographic analysis of loans within the assessment area(s) may be unnecessary. Or, if an institution has done an analysis to determine where, and to whom, it is making loans in its assessment area(s) to assist itself in its business efforts, examiners may be able to validate and then use the institution's analysis rather than conduct a detailed analysis of their own. In other words, when evaluating the performance criteria, examiners should always consider and use available, reliable information.

Similarly, if an institution's average net loan-to-deposit ratio appears low, the examination procedures ask the examiner to evaluate the institution's lending-related activities, such as loan sales and community development lending and investments to determine if they materially supplement its lending performance as reflected in its average net loan-to-deposit ratio. However, such an analysis may not be necessary or a less extensive analysis may be sufficient if the average net loan-to-deposit ratio is high.

Examination Procedures for Small Institutions² Examination Scope

1. For institutions with more than one assessment area, identify assessment areas for full scope review. In making those selections, review prior CRA performance evaluations, available community contact materials, and reported lending data and demographic data on each assessment area. Consider factors such as:
 - a. The lending opportunities in the different assessment areas;
 - b. The level of the institution's lending activity in the different assessment areas, including low- and moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies³ designated by the Agencies⁴ based on
 - i. rates of poverty, unemployment, and population loss, or
 - ii. population size, density, and dispersion;
 - c. The number of other institutions in the different assessment areas and the importance of the institution under examination in serving the different areas, particularly any areas with relatively few other providers of financial services;
 - d. The existence of apparent anomalies in the reported HMDA data for any particular assessment area(s);
 - e. The length of time since the assessment area(s) was last examined using a full scope review;
 - f. The institution's prior CRA performance in different assessment areas;
 - g. Examiners' knowledge of the same or similar assessment areas; and
 - h. Comments from the public regarding the institution's CRA performance.

² These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

³ A list of distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies is available on the FFIEC web site at www.ffiec.gov.

⁴ The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

¹ Detailed in section XI - 1.1 are the asset threshold criteria used to determine the type of examination procedures that will be used for evaluating the institution's ability to meet the needs of its community.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act—Small Bank

2. For interstate institutions, a rating must be assigned for each state where the institution has a branch and for each multi-state metropolitan statistical area (MSA) or metropolitan division (MD) where the institution has branches in two or more states that comprise that multi-state MSA/MD. Select one or more assessment areas in each state for examination using these procedures.

Performance Context

1. Review standardized worksheets and other agency information sources to obtain relevant demographic, economic and loan data, to the extent available, for each assessment area under review.
2. Obtain for review the Consolidated Reports of Condition (Call Reports)⁵, Uniform Bank Performance Reports (UBPR)⁶, annual reports, supervisory reports, and prior CRA evaluations⁷ of the institution under examination. Review financial information and the prior CRA evaluations of institutions of similar size that serve the same or similar assessment area(s).
3. Consider any information the institution may provide on its local community and economy, its business strategy, its lending capacity, or that otherwise assists in the evaluation of the institution.
4. Review community contact forms prepared by the regulatory agencies to obtain information that assists in the evaluation of the institution. Contact local community, governmental or economic development representatives to update or supplement this information. Refer to the Community Contact Procedures for more detail.
5. Review the institution's public file for any comments received by the institution or the agency since the last CRA performance evaluation for information that assists in the evaluation of the institution.
6. Document the performance context information gathered for use in evaluating the institution's performance.

Assessment Area

1. Review the institution's stated assessment area(s) to ensure that it:

- a. Consists of one or more MSAs/MDs or contiguous political subdivisions (e.g., counties, cities, or towns);
 - b. Includes the geographies where the institution has its main office, branches, and deposit-taking ATMs, as well as the surrounding geographies in which the institution originated or purchased a substantial portion of its loans;
 - c. Consists only of whole census tracts;
 - d. Consists of separate delineations for areas that extend substantially across MSA/MD or state boundaries unless the assessment area is located in a multi-state MSA/MD;
 - e. Does not reflect illegal discrimination; and
 - f. Does not arbitrarily exclude any low- or moderate-income area(s), taking into account the institution's size, branching structure, and financial condition.
2. If an institution's assessment area(s) does not coincide with the boundaries of an MSA/MD or political subdivision(s), assess whether the adjustments to the boundaries were made because the assessment area would otherwise be too large for the institution to reasonably serve, have an unusual configuration, or include significant geographic barriers.
 3. If the assessment area(s) fails to comply with the applicable criteria described above, develop, based on discussions with management, a revised assessment area(s) that complies with the criteria. Use this assessment area(s) to evaluate the institution's performance, but do not otherwise consider the revision in determining the institution's rating.

Performance Criteria

Loan-to-Deposit Analysis

1. From data contained in Call Reports or UBPRs, calculate the average net loan-to-deposit ratio since the last examination by adding the quarterly net loan-to-deposit ratios and dividing by the number of quarters.
2. Evaluate whether the institution's average net loan-to-deposit ratio is reasonable in light of information from the performance context including, as applicable, the institution's capacity to lend, the capacity of other similarly-situated institutions to lend in the assessment area(s), demographic and economic factors present in the assessment area(s), and the lending opportunities available in the institution's assessment area(s).
3. If the average net loan-to-deposit ratio does not appear reasonable in light of the performance context, consider the number and the dollar volume of loans sold to the secondary market, or the innovativeness or complexity of community development loans and qualified investments to assess the extent to which these activities compensate for a low average net loan-to-deposit ratio or supplement the institution's lending performance as reflected in its loan-to-deposit ratio.

⁵ The Call Report and UBPR data for most FDIC financial institutions are available through the FFIEC Central Data Repository's Public Data Distribution web site at <https://cdr.ffiec.gov/public>.

⁶ Refer to note 3.

4. Discuss the preliminary findings in this section with management.
5. Summarize in workpapers conclusions regarding the institution's loan-to-deposit ratio.

Comparison of Credit Extended Inside and Outside of the Assessment Area(s)

1. If available, review HMDA data, automated loan reports, and any other reports that may have been generated by the institution to analyze the extent of lending inside and outside of the assessment area(s). If a report generated by the institution is used, test the accuracy of the output.
2. If loan reports or data analyzing lending inside and outside of the assessment area(s) are not available or comprehensive, or if their accuracy cannot be verified, use sampling guidelines to select a sample of loans originated, purchased or committed to calculate the percentage (by number and dollar amount) located within the assessment area(s).

Refer to 12 USC 2901 for additional definitions.

3. If the percentage of loans or other lending related activities in the assessment area is less than a majority, then the institution does not meet the standards for "Satisfactory" under this performance criterion. In this case, consider information from the performance context, such as information about economic conditions, loan demand, the institution's size, financial condition, branching network, and business strategies when determining the effect of not meeting the standards for satisfactory for this criterion on the overall rating for the institution.
4. Discuss the preliminary findings in this section with management.
5. Summarize in workpapers conclusions regarding the institution's level of lending or other lending related activities inside and outside of its assessment area(s).

Distribution of Credit Within the Assessment Area(s)

1. Determine whether the number and income distribution of geographies in the assessment area(s) are sufficient for a meaningful analysis of the geographic distribution of the institution's loans in its assessment area(s).

2. If a geographic distribution analysis of the institution's loans would be meaningful and the necessary geographic information (street address or census tract numbers) is collected by the institution in the ordinary course of its business, determine the distribution of the institution's loans in its assessment area(s) among low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies. Where possible, use the same loan reports, loan data, or sample used to compare credit extended inside and outside the assessment area(s).
3. If a geographic analysis of loans in the assessment area(s) is performed, identify groups of geographies, by income categories, in which there is little or no loan penetration. Note that institutions are not expected to lend in every geography.
4. To the extent information about borrower income (individuals) or revenues (businesses) is collected by the institution in the ordinary course of its business, determine the distribution of loans in the assessment area(s) by borrower income and by business revenues. Where possible, use the same loan reports, loan data, or sample used to compare credit extended inside and outside the assessment area(s).
5. Identify categories of borrowers by income or business revenue for which there is little or no loan penetration.
6. If an analysis of the distribution of loans among geographies of different income levels would not be meaningful (e.g., very few geographies in the assessment area(s)) or an analysis of lending to borrowers of different income or revenues could not be performed (e.g., income data are not collected for certain loans), consider possible proxies to use for analysis of the institution's distribution of credit. Possibilities include analyzing geographic distribution by street address rather than geography (if data are available and the analysis would be meaningful) or analyzing the distribution by loan size as a proxy for income or revenues of the borrower.
7. If there are categories of low penetration, form conclusions about the reasons for that low penetration. Consider available information from the performance context, including:
 - a. Information about the institution's size, branch network, financial condition, supervisory restrictions (if any) and prior CRA record;
 - b. Information from discussions with management, loan officers, and members of the community;
 - c. Information about economic conditions, particularly in the assessment area(s);

XI. Community Reinvestment Act—Small Bank

- d. Information about demographic or other characteristics of particular geographies that could affect loan demand, such as the existence of a prison or college; and
 - e. Information about other lenders serving the same or similar assessment area(s).
8. Discuss the preliminary findings in this section with management.
 9. Summarize in workpapers conclusions concerning the geographic distribution of loans and the distribution of loans by borrower characteristics in the institution's assessment area(s).

Review of Complaints

1. Review all complaints relating to the institution's CRA performance received by the institution (these should all be contained in the institution's public file) and those that were received by its supervisory agency.
2. If there were any complaints, evaluate the institution's record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its CRA performance.
3. If there were any complaints, discuss the preliminary findings in this section with management.
4. If there were any complaints, summarize in workpapers conclusions regarding the institution's record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its CRA performance. Include the total number of complaints and resolutions with examples that illustrate the nature, responsiveness to, and resolution of, the complaints.

Investments and Services (at the institution's option to enhance a "Satisfactory" rating)

1. If the institution chooses, review its performance in making qualified investments and providing branches and other services and delivery systems that enhance credit availability in its assessment area(s). Performance with respect to qualified investments and services may be used to enhance an institution's overall rating of "Satisfactory," but cannot be used to lower a rating that otherwise would have been assigned.
2. To evaluate the institution's performance in making qualified investments that enhance credit availability in its assessment area(s), consider:
 - a. The dollar amount of qualified investments, by type and location;
 - b. The impact of those investments on the institution's assessment area(s); and

- c. The innovativeness or complexity of the investments.
3. To evaluate the institution's record of providing branches and other services and delivery systems that enhance credit availability in its assessment area(s), consider:
 - a. The number of branches and ATMs located in the institution's assessment area(s);
 - b. The number of branches and ATMs located within, or that are readily accessible to, low- and moderate-income geographies compared to those located in, or readily accessible to middle- and upper-income geographies;
 - c. The type and level of service(s) offered at branches and ATMs and alternative delivery systems; and
 - d. The institution's record of opening and closing branches.

Ratings

1. Group the analyses of the assessment areas examined by MSA⁸ and nonmetropolitan areas within each state where the institution has branches. If an institution has branches in two or more states of a multi-state MSA, group the assessment areas that are in that MSA.
2. Summarize conclusions about the institution's performance in each MSA and the nonmetropolitan portion of each state in which an assessment area received a full scope review. If two or more assessment areas in an MSA or in the nonmetropolitan portion of a state received full scope reviews, weigh the different assessment areas considering such factors as:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The lending opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution in providing loans to each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
3. For assessment areas in MSAs and nonmetropolitan areas that were not examined using the full scope procedures, consider facts and data related to the institution's lending to ensure that performance in those assessment areas is not inconsistent with the conclusions based on the assessment areas that received full scope examinations.

⁸ The reference to MSA may also reference MD

4. For institutions operating in only one multi-state MSA or one state, assign one of the four preliminary ratings—“Satisfactory”, “Outstanding”, “Needs to Improve”, and “Substantial Noncompliance”—in accordance with step 6 below. To determine the relative significance of each MSA and nonmetropolitan area to the institution’s preliminary rating, consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution’s activities in each compared to the institution’s overall activities;
 - b. The lending opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution in providing loans to each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
5. For other institutions, assign one of the four preliminary ratings—“Satisfactory”, “Outstanding”, “Needs to Improve”, and “Substantial Noncompliance”—for each state in which the institution has at least one branch and for each multi-state MSA in which the institution has branches in two or more states in accordance with step #6 below. To determine the relative significance of each MSA and the nonmetropolitan area on the institution’s preliminary state rating, consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution’s activities in each compared to the institution’s overall activities;
 - b. The lending opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution in providing loans to each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
6. Consult the Small Institution Ratings Matrix and information in workpapers to assign a preliminary rating of:
 - a. “Satisfactory” if the institution’s performance meets each of the standards for a satisfactory rating or if exceptionally strong performance with respect to some of the standards compensates for weak performance in others;
 - b. “Needs to Improve” or “Substantial Noncompliance” if the institution’s performance fails to meet the standards for “Satisfactory” performance. Whether a rating is “Needs to Improve” or “Substantial Noncompliance” will depend upon the degree to which the institution’s performance has failed to meet the standards for a “Satisfactory” rating; or
 - c. “Outstanding” if the institution meets the rating descriptions and standards for “Satisfactory” for each of the five core criteria, and materially exceeds the standards for “Satisfactory” in some or all of the criteria to the extent that an “Outstanding” rating is warranted, or if the institution’s performance with respect to the five core criteria generally exceeds “Satisfactory” and its performance in making qualified investments and providing branches and other services and delivery systems in the assessment area(s) supplement its performance under the five core criteria sufficiently to warrant an overall rating of “Outstanding”.
7. For an institution with branches in more than one state or multi-state MSA, assign a preliminary rating to the institution as a whole taking into account the institution’s record in different states or multi-state MSAs by considering:
 - a. The significance of the institution’s activities in each compared to the institution’s overall activities;
 - b. The lending opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution in providing loans to each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
8. Review the results of the most recent compliance examination and determine whether evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices that violate an applicable law, rule, or regulation should lower the institution’s overall CRA rating or, if applicable, its CRA rating in any state or multi-state MSA.⁹ If evidence of discrimination or other illegal credit practices in any geography by the institution, or in any assessment area by any affiliate whose loans have been considered as part of the institution’s lending performance, was found, consider:
 - a. The nature, extent, and strength of the evidence of the practices;

⁹Evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices” includes, but is not limited to: (a) Discrimination against applicants on a prohibited basis in violation, for example, of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act or the Fair Housing Act; (b) Violations of the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act; (c) Violations of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act; (d) Violations of section 8 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act; and (e) Violations of the Truth in Lending Act regarding a consumer’s right of rescission.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act—Small Bank

- b. The policies and procedures that the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has in place to prevent the practices;
 - c. Any corrective action the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has taken, or has committed to take, including voluntary corrective action resulting from self-assessment; and
 - d. Any other relevant information.
9. Assign a final rating for the institution as a whole and, if applicable, each state in which the institution has at least one branch and each multi-state MSA in which it has branches in two or more states, considering:
- a. The institution's preliminary rating; and
 - b. Any evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices (see #8 above).
10. Discuss conclusions with management.
11. Write an evaluation of the institution's performance for the examination report and the public evaluation.
12. Prepare recommendations for a supervisory strategy and for matters that require attention or follow-up activities.

Public File Checklist

1. There is no need to review each branch or each complete public file during every examination. In determining the extent to which the institution's public files should be reviewed, consider the institution's record of compliance with the public file requirements in previous examinations, its branching structure and changes to it since its last examination, complaints about the institution's compliance with the public file requirements, and any other relevant information.
2. In any review of the public file undertaken, determine, as needed, whether branches display an accurate public notice in their lobbies, a complete public file is available in the institution's main office and at least one branch in each state, and the public file available in the main office and in a branch in each state contains:
 - a. All written comments from the public relating to the institution's CRA performance and responses to them for the current and preceding two calendar years (except those that reflect adversely on the good name or reputation of any persons other than the institution);
 - b. The institution's most recent CRA Public Performance Evaluation;
 - c. A map of each assessment area showing its boundaries and, on the map or in a separate list, the geographies contained within the assessment area;
 - d. A list of the institution's branches, branches opened and closed during the current and each of the prior two calendar years, and their street addresses and geographies;
 - e. The HMDA Disclosure Statement for the prior two calendar years, if applicable;
 - f. The institution's loan-to-deposit ratio for each quarter of the prior calendar year;
 - g. A quarterly report of the institution's efforts to improve its record if it received a less than satisfactory rating during its most recent CRA examination; and
 - h. A list of services (loan and deposit products and transaction fees generally offered, and hours of operation at the institution's branches), including a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services among locations.
3. In any branch review undertaken, determine whether the branch provides the most recent public evaluation and a list of services available at the branch or a description of material differences from the services generally available at the institution's other branches.

Intermediate Small Bank¹

On July 19, 2005, the FDIC, FRB, and OCC jointly approved amendments to the CRA regulations which took effect on September 1, 2005. Among the revisions to the regulations, “intermediate small banks” are defined under §345.12 (u). These banks are evaluated under two tests: the small bank lending test and a community development test.

Intermediate small institutions are not required to collect and report CRA loan data for small business, small farm, and community development loans. Nevertheless, the CRA regulations continue to allow small institutions, including intermediate small institutions, to opt for an evaluation under the (large bank) lending, investment, and service tests, provided the data is collected and reported.

To evaluate the distribution of loans under intermediate small bank procedures, examiners should review loan files, bank reports, or any other information or analyses a bank may provide. To evaluate community development loans, investments, and services under the intermediate small bank community development test, examiners will review (1) any information a bank may provide, including the results of any assessment of community development needs or opportunities if conducted by the bank, and (2) performance context information obtained by examiners from community, government, civic or other sources.

The following information should be incorporated into all ISB public evaluations, as applicable:

1. The total number and dollar amount of community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services, including:
 - a. The total number and dollar amount of community development activities on an annual basis, and
 - b. Complete listings of loans, investments, and services or consistent summary listings (by category such as affordable housing, economic development, etc.) of community development activities.
2. A determination of the opportunity and need for community development activities, including:
 - a. Information on any self-assessment performed by the bank,
 - b. Information from the examiner’s assessment based, for example, on review of current economic and demographic conditions, and
 - c. Activities of similarly situated banks based, for example, on review of recent public evaluations and information obtained from community contacts.

¹ Detailed in section XI - 1.1 are the asset threshold criteria used to determine the type of examination procedures that will be used for evaluating the institution’s ability to meet the needs of its community.

3. An analysis of the institution’s capacity to meet the community development needs of the assessment area(s), including the use of quantitative performance measures such as:
 - a. The ratio of community development loans to net loans,
 - b. The ratio of community development investments to total investments or total assets, and
 - c. Any other performance ratios which support the analysis.

Intermediate Small Institution Examination Procedures²

Examination Scope

For institutions (interstate and intrastate) with more than one assessment area, identify assessment areas for a full scope review. A full scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all of the procedures for an assessment area. For interstate institutions, a minimum of one assessment area from each state, and a minimum of one assessment area from each multistate MSA/MD, must be reviewed using the full scope examination procedures.

1. To identify assessment areas for full scope review, review prior CRA performance evaluations, available community contact materials, and reported lending data and demographic data on each assessment area. Consider factors such as:
 - a. The retail lending and community development opportunities in the different assessment areas, particularly areas where the need for credit and community development activities is significant;
 - b. The level of the institution’s activity in the different assessment areas, including in low- and moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved non-metropolitan middle-income geographies designated by the Agencies³ based on (a) rates of poverty, unemployment, and population loss or (b) population size, density, and dispersion;⁴
 - c. The number of other institutions in the different assessment areas and the importance of the institution under examination in serving the different areas, particularly any areas with relatively few other providers of financial services;
 - d. The existence of apparent anomalies in the reported data for any particular assessment area(s);
 - e. The length of time since the assessment area(s) was last examined using a full scope review;

² These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

³ The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal - Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

⁴ A list of distressed or underserved non-metropolitan middle-income geographies will be made available on the FFIEC web site at www.ffiec.gov.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Intermediate Small Bank

- f. The institution's prior CRA performance in different assessment areas;
 - g. Examiners' knowledge of the same or similar assessment areas; and
 - h. Comments from the public regarding the institution's CRA performance.
2. Select one or more assessment areas in each state, and one or more assessment areas in any multi-state MSA, for examination using these procedures. This is required because for interstate institutions, a rating must be assigned for each state where the institution has a branch and for each multi-state MSA/MD where the institution has branches in two or more states that comprise that MSA/MD.
 - a. Lending and community development opportunities available in the institution's assessment area(s) that are compatible with the institution's business strategy and consistent with safe and sound banking practices;
 - b. Constraints affecting the opportunities to make safe and sound retail loans, community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services compatible with the institution's business strategy in the assessment area(s); and
 - c. Successful CRA-related product offerings or activities utilized by other lenders serving the same or similar assessment area(s).
 7. Document the performance context information, particularly community development needs and opportunities, gathered for use in evaluating the institution's performance.

Performance Context

1. Review standardized worksheets and other agency information sources to obtain relevant demographic, economic, and loan data, to the extent available, for each assessment area under review.
2. Obtain for review the Consolidated Reports of Condition (Call Reports), Uniform Bank Performance Reports (UBPRs), annual reports, supervisory reports, and prior CRA evaluations of the institution under examination to help understand the institution's ability and capacity, including any limitations imposed by size, financial condition, or statutory, regulatory, economic or other constraints, to respond to safe and sound opportunities in the assessment area(s) for retail loans, and community development loans, qualified investments and community development services.
3. Discuss with the institution, and consider, any information the institution may provide about its local community and economy, including community development needs and opportunities, its business strategy, its lending capacity, or information that otherwise assists in the evaluation of the institution.
4. Review community contact forms prepared by the regulatory agencies to obtain information that assists in the evaluation of the institution. Contact local community, governmental or economic development representatives to update or supplement this information. Refer to the Community Contact Procedures for more detail.
5. Review any comments received by the institution or the agency since the last CRA examination.
6. By reviewing the public evaluations and other financial data, determine whether any similarly situated institutions (in terms of size, financial condition, product offerings, and business strategy) serve the same or similar assessment area(s) and would provide relevant and accurate information for evaluating the institution's CRA performance. Consider, for example, whether the information could help identify:

Assessment Area

1. Review the institution's stated assessment area(s) to ensure that it:
 - a. Consists of one or more MSAs/MDs or contiguous political subdivisions (e.g., counties, cities, or towns);
 - b. Includes the geographies where the institution has its main office, branches, and deposit-taking ATMs, as well as the surrounding geographies in which the institution originated or purchased a substantial portion of its loans;
 - c. Consists only of whole census tracts;
 - d. Consists of separate delineations for areas that extend substantially across MSA/MD or state boundaries unless the assessment area is located in a multistate MSA/MD;
 - e. Does not reflect illegal discrimination; and
 - f. Does not arbitrarily exclude any low- or moderate-income area(s), taking into account the institution's size, branching structure, and financial condition.
2. If an institution's assessment area(s) does not coincide with the boundaries of an MSA/MD or political subdivision(s), assess whether the adjustments to the boundaries were made because the assessment area would otherwise be too large for the institution to reasonably serve, have an unusual configuration, or include significant geographic barriers
3. If the assessment area(s) fails to comply with the applicable criteria described above, develop, based on discussions with management, a revised assessment area(s) that complies with the criteria. Use this assessment area(s) to evaluate the institution's performance, but do not otherwise consider the revision in determining the institution's rating.

Intermediate Small Institution Lending Test Performance CriteriaLoan-to-Deposit Analysis

1. From data contained in Call Reports or UBPRs, calculate the average loan-to-deposit ratio since the last examination by adding the quarterly loan-to-deposit ratios and dividing by the number of quarters.
2. Evaluate whether the institution's average loan-to-deposit ratio is reasonable in light of information from the performance context including, as applicable, the institution's capacity to lend, the capacity of other similarly situated institutions to lend in the assessment area(s), demographic and economic factors present in the assessment area(s), and the lending opportunities available in the institution's assessment area(s).
3. If the loan-to-deposit ratio does not appear reasonable in light of the performance context, consider whether the number and the dollar amount of loans sold to the secondary market compensate for a low loan-to-deposit ratio or supplement the institution's lending performance.
4. Summarize in work papers conclusions regarding the institution's loan-to-deposit ratio.

Comparison of Credit Extended Inside and Outside of the Assessment Area(s)

1. If available, review HMDA data, automated loan reports, and any other reports that may have been generated by the institution to analyze the extent of lending inside and outside of the assessment area(s). If a report generated by the institution is used, test the accuracy of the output.
2. If loan reports or data analyzing lending inside and outside of the assessment area(s) are not available or comprehensive, or if their accuracy cannot be verified, use sampling guidelines to select a sample of loans originated, purchased or committed to calculate the percentage (by number and dollar volume) located within the assessment area(s).
3. If the percentage of loans or other lending related activities in the assessment area is less than a majority, then the institution does not meet the standards for "Satisfactory" under this performance criterion. In this case, consider information from the performance context, such as information about economic conditions, loan demand, the institution's size, financial condition, branching network, and business strategies when determining the effect of not meeting the standards for satisfactory for this criterion on the overall rating for the institution.
4. Summarize in work papers conclusions regarding the institution's level of lending or other lending related activities inside and outside of its assessment area(s).

Distribution of Credit within the Assessment Area(s)

1. Determine whether the number and income distribution of geographies in the assessment area(s) are sufficient for a meaningful analysis of the geographic distribution of the institution's loans in its assessment area(s).
2. If a geographic distribution analysis of the institution's loans would be meaningful and the necessary geographic information (street address or census tract number) is collected by the institution in the ordinary course of its business, determine the distribution of the institution's loans in its assessment area(s) among low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies. Where possible, use the same loan reports, loan data, or sample used to compare credit extended inside and outside the assessment area(s).
3. If a geographic analysis of loans in the assessment area(s) is performed, identify groups of geographies, by income categories, in which there is little or no loan penetration. Note that institutions are not expected to lend in every geography.
4. To the extent information about borrower income (individuals) or revenues (businesses) is collected by the institution in the ordinary course of its business, determine the distribution of loans in the assessment area(s) by borrower income and by business revenues. Where possible, use the same loan reports, loan data, or sample used to compare credit extended inside and outside the assessment area(s).
5. Identify categories of borrowers by income or business revenue for which there is little or no loan penetration.
6. If an analysis of the distribution of loans among geographies of different income levels would not be meaningful (e.g., very few geographies in the assessment area(s)) or an analysis of lending to borrowers of different income or revenues could not be performed (e.g., income data are not collected for certain loans), consider possible proxies to use for analysis of the institution's distribution of credit. Possibilities include analyzing geographic distribution by street address rather than geography (if data are available and the analysis would be meaningful) or analyzing the distribution by loan size as a proxy for income or revenue of the borrower.
7. If there are categories of low penetration, form conclusions about the reasons for that low penetration. Consider available information from the performance context, including:
 - a. Information about the institution's size, branch network, financial condition, supervisory restrictions (if any) and prior CRA record;
 - b. Information from discussions with management, loan officers, and members of the community;
 - c. Information about economic conditions, particularly in the assessment area(s);

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Intermediate Small Bank

- d. Information about demographic or other characteristics of particular geographies that could affect loan demand, such as the existence of a prison or college; and
 - e. Information about other lenders serving the same or similar assessment area(s).
8. Summarize in work papers conclusions concerning the geographic distribution of loans and the distribution of loans by borrower characteristics in the institution's assessment area(s).

Review of Complaints

1. Review all complaints relating to the institution's CRA performance received by the institution (these should all be contained in the institution's public file) and those that were received by its supervisory agency.
2. If there were any complaints, evaluate the institution's record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its CRA performance.
3. If there were any complaints, discuss the preliminary findings in this section with management.
4. If there were any complaints, summarize in work papers conclusions regarding the institution's record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its CRA performance. Include the total number of complaints and resolutions with examples that illustrate the nature, responsiveness to, and resolution of, the complaints.
5. Discuss the preliminary findings in the lending test section with management.

Intermediate Small Institution Community Development Test

An institution should appropriately assess the needs in its community, engage in different types of community development activities based on those needs and the institution's capacities, and take reasonable steps to apply its community development resources strategically to meet those needs. The flexibility inherent in the community development test allows intermediate small institutions to focus on meeting the substance of community needs through these activities. Examiners will consider the results of any assessment by the institution of community needs along with information from community, government, civic, and other sources to gain a working knowledge of community needs.

1. Identify the number and amount of the institution's community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services. Obtain this information through discussions with management, HMDA data collected by the institution, as applicable; investment portfolios; any other relevant financial records; and materials available to the public. Include, at the institution's option:
 - a. Community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services provided by affiliates, if they are not claimed by any other institution; and
 - b. Community development lending by consortia or third parties.
2. Review community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services to verify that they qualify as community development.
3. If the institution participates in community development lending by consortia or third parties, or claims activities provided by affiliates, review records provided to the institution by the consortia or third parties or affiliates to ensure that the community development loans claimed by the institution do not account for more than the institution's share (based on the level of its participation or investment) of the total loans originated by the consortium or third party.
4. Considering the institution's capacity and constraints and other information obtained through the performance context review, form conclusions about:
 - a. The number and amount of community development loans and qualified investments;
 - b. The extent to which the institution provides community development services, including the provision and availability of services to low- and moderate-income people, including through branches and other facilities in low- and moderate-income areas;
 - c. The responsiveness to the opportunities for community development lending, qualified investments, and community development services, considering:
 - 1) The results of any assessment of community development needs and opportunities provided by the institution;
 - 2) The examiner's review of performance context information from community, government, civic, and other sources; and
 - 3) Whether the amount and combination of community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services, along with their qualitative aspects, are responsive to community needs and opportunities.
5. Summarize conclusions regarding the institution's community development performance and retain in the work papers.

Overall Intermediate Small Institution CRA Rating

1. Group the analyses of the assessment areas examined by MSA and non-MSA areas within each state where the institution has branches. If an institution has branches in two or more states of a multi-state MSA, group the assessment areas that are in that MSA.⁵
2. Summarize conclusions about the institution's performance in each MSA and the non-MSA portion of each state in which an assessment area received a full scope review. If two or more assessment areas in an MSA or in the non-MSA portion of a state received full scope reviews, weigh the different assessment areas considering such factors as:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The retail lending and community development opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution in providing loans and community development activities to each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
3. For assessment areas in MSAs and non-MSA areas that were not examined using these procedures, consider facts and data related to the institution's lending and community development activities to ensure that performance in those assessment areas is not inconsistent with the conclusions based on the assessment areas which received full scope reviews.
4. For institutions operating in only one multi-state MSA or one state, assign one of the four preliminary ratings — "Satisfactory," "Outstanding," "Needs to Improve," or "Substantial Noncompliance"—in accordance with step 6 below. To determine the relative significance of each MSA and non-MSA area to the institution's preliminary rating, consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities
 - b. The retail lending and community development opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution to each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
5. For other institutions, assign one of the four preliminary ratings—"Satisfactory," "Outstanding," "Needs to Improve," or "Substantial Noncompliance"—for each state in which the institution has at least one branch and for each multi-state MSA in which the institution has branches in two or more states in accordance with step #6 below. To determine the relative significance of each MSA and the non-MSA area on the institution's preliminary state rating, consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The retail lending and community development opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution in each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
6. Consult the intermediate small institution ratings matrices (lending and community development) and information in work papers to assign a preliminary rating of:
 - a. "Satisfactory" if the institution's performance is rated as "Satisfactory" in each test.
 - b. "Needs to Improve" or "Substantial Noncompliance," depending upon the degree to which the institution's performance has failed to meet the standards for a "Satisfactory" rating on a test; or
 - c. "Outstanding" if the institution is rated an "Outstanding" on both tests; or "Outstanding" on one test and the extent to which the institution meets or exceeds the "Satisfactory" criteria on the other test.
7. For an institution with branches in more than one state or multi-state MSA, assign a preliminary rating to the institution as a whole taking into account the institution's record in different states or multi-state MSAs by considering:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The retail lending and community development opportunities in each;
 - c. The importance of the institution in providing loans to each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
8. Review the results of the most recent compliance examination and determine whether evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices should lower the institution's overall CRA rating or, if applicable, its CRA rating in any state or multi-state MSA. If evidence of discrimination or other illegal credit practices in any geography by the institution, or in any assessment area by any affiliate whose loans were considered as part of the institution's lending performance, was found, consider:

- a. The nature, extent, and strength of the evidence of the practices;
 - b. The policies and procedures that the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has in place to prevent the practices;
 - c. Any corrective action that the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has taken, or has committed to take, including voluntary corrective action resulting from self-assessment; and
 - d. Any other relevant information.
9. Assign a final rating for the institution as a whole and, if applicable, each state in which the institution has at least one branch and each multi-state MSA in which it has branches in two or more states, considering:
- a. The institution's preliminary rating; and
 - b. Any evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices.
10. Discuss conclusions with management.
11. Write an evaluation of the institution's performance for the examination report and the public evaluation.
12. Prepare recommendations for a supervisory strategy and for matters that require attention or follow-up activities.

Public File Checklist

1. There is no need to review each branch or each complete public file during every examination. In determining the extent to which the institution's public files should be reviewed, consider the institution's record of compliance with the public file requirements in previous examinations, its branching structure and changes to it since its last examination, complaints about the institution's compliance with the public file requirements, and any other relevant information.
2. In any review of the public file undertaken, determine whether branches display an accurate public notice in their lobbies, a complete public file is available in the institution's main office and at least one branch in each state, and the public file(s) in the main office and in each state contain:

- a. All written comments from the public relating to the institution's CRA performance and any responses to them for the current and preceding two calendar years (except those that reflect adversely on the good name or reputation of any persons other than the institution);
 - b. The institution's most recent CRA Performance Evaluation;
 - c. A map of each assessment area showing its boundaries and, on the map or in a separate list, the geographies contained within the assessment area; d. A list of the institution's branches, branches opened and closed during the current and each of the prior two calendar years, their street addresses and geographies;
 - e. A list of services (loan and deposit products and transaction fees generally offered, and hours of operation at the institution's branches), including a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services between those locations;
 - f. The institution's loan-to-deposit ratio for each quarter of the prior calendar year;
 - g. A quarterly report of the institution's efforts to improve its record if it received a less than satisfactory rating during its most recent CRA examination; and h. HMDA Disclosure Statements for the prior two calendar years for the institution and for each non-depository affiliate the institution has elected to include in assessment of its CRA record, if applicable.
3. In any branch review undertaken, determine whether the branch provides the most recent public evaluation and a list of services generally available at its branches and a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services at the branch (or a list of services available at the branch).

Public Notice

Determine that the appropriate CRA public notice is displayed as required by § 345.44 and Appendix B.

Large Bank¹

The large institution performance criteria – the Lending, Investment, and Service Tests – cover institutions that meet large bank threshold criteria unless they requested designation and received approval as wholesale or limited-purpose institutions or have been approved for evaluation under a strategic plan.

As under the streamlined small institution procedures, examiners are expected to exercise judgment and common sense to minimize the burden imposed by the examination process, consistent with a complete and accurate assessment of performance. Therefore, for example, examiners may be able to use economic and demographic data analyzed in an examination of an institution in examinations of other institutions serving the same or similar assessment areas. Community contacts may also be combined to cover more than one institution in a given market. In cases where an institution has analyzed its CRA performance, examiners may use those analyses, after verifying their accuracy and reliability, and should supplement those analyses when questions are raised. Examiners should consider any performance related information offered by an institution, and should request information called for by examination procedures.

Large institutions are required to collect and report certain loan data relative to small business, small farm, and community development loans. The existence of those data in automated form will permit examiners to conduct much of the necessary analysis prior to the on-site examination and thereby reduce any disruptions caused by the presence of examiners at the institution.

Although large institutions are subject to CRA data collection requirements, they cannot be examined under the large institution examination procedures until they have at least one full year of data collected. In addition, any size institution may opt to be examined as a large institution provided it has collected and reported the required CRA loan data.

Examination Procedures for Large Institutions²

Examination Scope

For institutions (interstate and intrastate) with more than one assessment area, identify assessment areas for a full scope review. A full scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all of the procedures for an assessment area. For interstate institutions, a minimum of one assessment area from each state, and a minimum of one assessment area from each multistate metropolitan statistical area/metropolitan division (MSA/MD), must be reviewed using the full scope examination procedures.

² These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

1. Review prior CRA performance evaluations, available community contact materials, HMDA and CRA
2. Select assessment areas for full scope review by considering the factors below.
 - a. The lending, investment, and service opportunities in the different assessment areas, particularly areas where the need for bank credit, investments and services is significant;
 - b. The level of the institution's lending, investment, and service activity in the different assessment areas, including in low- and moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies designated by the Agencies³ based on (a) rates of poverty, unemployment, and population loss or (b) population size, density, and dispersion;⁴
 - c. The number of other institutions in the different assessment areas and the importance of the institution under examination in serving the different areas, particularly any areas with relatively few other providers of financial services;
 - d. Comments and feedback received from community groups and the public regarding the institution's CRA performance;
 - e. The size of the population;
 - f. The existence of apparent anomalies in the reported CRA or HMDA data for any particular assessment area(s);
 - g. The length of time since the assessment area(s) was last examined using a full scope review;
 - h. The institution's prior CRA performance in different assessment areas;
 - i. Examiners' knowledge of the same or similar assessment areas; and
 - j. Issues raised in CRA examinations of other institutions and prior community contacts in the institution's assessment areas or similar assessment areas.

³ The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

⁴ A list of distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies is available on the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) web site at www.ffiec.gov.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Large Bank

Performance Context

1. Review standardized worksheets and other agency information sources to obtain relevant demographic, economic, and loan data, to the extent available, for each assessment area under review. Compare the data to similar data for the MSA/MD, county, or state to determine how any similarities or differences will help in evaluating lending, investment, and service opportunities and community and economic conditions in the assessment area. Also consider whether the area has housing costs that are particularly high given area median income.
2. Obtain for review the Consolidated Reports of Condition (Call Reports), Uniform Bank Performance Reports (UBPR), annual reports, supervisory reports, and prior CRA evaluations of the institution to help understand the institution's ability and capacity, including any limitations imposed by size, financial condition, or statutory, regulatory, economic or other constraints, to respond to safe and sound opportunities in the assessment area(s) for retail loans, and community development loans, investments and services.
3. Discuss with the institution, and consider, any information the institution may provide about its local community and economy, including community development needs and opportunities, its business strategy, its lending capacity, or information that otherwise assists in the evaluation of the institution.
4. Review community contact forms prepared by the regulatory agencies to obtain information that assists in the evaluation of the institution. Contact local community, governmental or economic development representatives to update or supplement this information. Refer to the Community Contact Procedures for more detail.
5. Review the institution's public file and any comments received by the institution or the agency since the last CRA performance evaluation for information that assists in the evaluation of the institution.
6. By reviewing performance evaluations and other financial data, determine whether any similarly situated institutions (in terms of size, financial condition, product offerings, and business strategy) serve the same or similar assessment area(s) and would provide relevant and accurate information for evaluating the institution's CRA performance. Consider, for example, whether the information could help identify:
 - a. Lending and community development opportunities available in the institution's assessment area(s) that are compatible with the institution's business strategy and consistent with safe and sound banking practices;
 - b. Constraints affecting the opportunities to make safe and sound retail loans, community development loans, qualified investments and community development services compatible with the institution's business strategy in the assessment area(s); and
 - c. Successful CRA-related product offerings or activities utilized by other lenders serving the same or similar assessment area(s).
7. Document the performance context information, particularly community development needs and opportunities, gathered for use in evaluating the institution's performance.

Assessment Area

1. Review the institution's stated assessment area(s) to ensure that it:
 - a. Consists of one or more MSAs/MDs or contiguous political subdivisions (i.e., counties, cities, or towns);
 - b. Includes the geographies where the institution has its main office, branches, and deposit-taking (Automated Teller Machines (ATMs), as well as the surrounding geographies in which the institution originated or purchased a substantial portion of its loans;
 - c. Consists only of whole census tracts;
 - d. Consists of separate delineations for areas that extend substantially across MSA/MD or state boundaries unless the assessment area is in a multistate MSA/MD;
 - e. Does not reflect illegal discrimination; and
 - f. Does not arbitrarily exclude any low- or moderate-income area(s) taking into account the institution's size, branching structure, and financial condition.
2. If the assessment area(s) does not coincide with the boundaries of an MSA/MD or political subdivision(s), assess whether the adjustments to the boundaries were made because the assessment area would otherwise be too large for the institution to reasonably serve, have an unusual configuration, or include significant geographic barriers.
3. If the assessment area(s) fails to comply with the applicable criteria described above, develop, based on discussions with management, a revised assessment area(s) that complies with the criteria. Use this assessment area(s) to evaluate the institution's performance, but do not otherwise consider the revision in determining the institution's rating.

Lending, Investment, and Service Tests for Large Retail Institutions

Lending Test

1. Identify the institution's loans to be evaluated by reviewing:
 - a. The most recent HMDA and CRA Disclosure Statements, the interim HMDA Loan Application Register (LAR), and any interim CRA loan data collected by the institution;
 - b. A sample of consumer loans if consumer lending represents a substantial majority of the institution's business so that an accurate conclusion concerning the institution's lending record could not be reached without a review of consumer loans; and
 - c. Any other information the institution chooses to provide, such as small business loans secured by non-farm residential real estate, home equity loans not reported for HMDA, unfunded commitments, any information on loans outstanding, and loan distribution analyses conducted by or for the institution, including any explanations for identified concerns or actions taken to address them.
2. Test a sample of loan files to verify the accuracy of data collected and/or reported by the institution. In addition, ensure that:
 - a. Affiliate loans reported by the institution are not also attributed to the lending record of another affiliate subject to CRA. This can be accomplished by requesting the institution to identify how loans are attributed and how it ensures that all the loans within a given lending category (e.g., small business loans, home purchase loans, motor vehicle, credit card, home equity, other secured, and other unsecured loans) in a particular assessment area are reported for all of the institution's affiliates if the institution elects to count any affiliate loans;
 - b. Loans reported as community development loans (including those originated or purchased by consortia or third parties) meet the definition of community development loans. Determine whether community development loans benefit the institution's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution's assessment area(s). Except for multifamily loans, ensure that community development loans have not also been reported by the institution or an affiliate as HMDA, small business or farm, or consumer loans. Review records provided to the institution by consortia or third parties or affiliates to ensure that the amount of the institution's third party or consortia or affiliate lending does not account for more than the institution's percentage share (based on the level of its participation or investment) of the total loans originated by the consortia, third parties, or affiliates; and
 - c. All consumer loans in a particular loan category have been included when the institution collects and maintains the data for one or more loan categories and has elected to have the information evaluated.
3. Identify the volume, both in number and dollar amount, of each type of loan being evaluated that the institution has made or purchased within its assessment area. Evaluate the institution's lending volume considering the institution's resources and business strategy and other information from the performance context, such as population, income, housing, and business data. Note whether the institution conducts certain lending activities in the institution and other activities in an affiliate in a way that could inappropriately influence an evaluation of borrower or geographic distribution.
4. Review any analyses prepared by or for and offered by the institution for insight into the reasonableness of the institution's geographic distribution of lending. Test the accuracy of the data and determine if the analyses are reasonable. If areas of low or no penetration were identified, review explanations and determine whether action was taken to address disparities, if appropriate.
5. Supplement with an independent analysis of geographic distribution as necessary. As applicable, determine the extent to which the institution is serving geographies in each income category and whether there are conspicuous gaps unexplained by the performance context. Conclusions should recognize that institutions are not required to lend in every geography. The analysis should consider:
 - a. (Excluding affiliate lending) the number, dollar amount, and percentage of the institution's loans located within any of its assessment areas, as well as the number, dollar amount, and percentage of the institution's loans located outside any of its assessment areas;
 - b. The number, dollar amount, and percentage of each type of loan in the institution's portfolio in each geography, and in each category of geography (low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income);
 - c. The number of geographies penetrated in each income category, as determined in step (b), and the total number of geographies in each income category within the assessment area(s);

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Large Bank

- d. The number and dollar amount of its home purchase, home refinancing, and home improvement loans, respectively in each geography compared to the number of one-to-four family owner-occupied units in each geography;
 - e. The number and dollar amount of multifamily loans in each geography compared to the number of multifamily structures in each geography;
 - f. The number and dollar amount of small business and farm loans in each geography compared to the number of small businesses/farms in each geography; and
 - g. Whether any gaps exist in lending activity for each income category, by identifying groups of contiguous geographies that have no loans or those with low penetration relative to the other geographies.
6. If there are groups of contiguous geographies within the institution's assessment area with abnormally low penetration, the examiner may determine if an analysis of the institution's performance compared to other lenders for home mortgage loans (using reported HMDA data) and for small businesses and small farm loans (using data provided by lenders subject to CRA) would provide an insight into the institution's lack of performance in those areas. This analysis is not required, but may provide insight if:
- a. The reported loan category is substantially related to the institution's business strategies;
 - b. The area under analysis substantially overlaps the institution's assessment area(s);
 - c. The analysis includes a sufficient number and volume of transactions, and an adequate number of lenders with assessment area(s) substantially overlapping the institution's assessment area(s); and
 - d. The assessment area data is free from anomalies that can cause distortions such as dominant lenders that are not subject to the CRA, a lender that dominates a part of an area used in calculating the overall lending, or there is an extraordinarily high level of performance, in the aggregate, by lenders in the institution's assessment area(s).
7. Using the analysis from step #6, form a conclusion as to whether the institution's abnormally low penetration in certain areas should constitute a negative consideration under the geographic distribution performance criteria of the lending test by considering:
- a. The institution's share of reported loans made in low- and moderate-income geographies versus its share of reported loans made in middle- and upper-income geographies within the assessment area(s);
- b. The number of lenders with assessment area(s) substantially overlapping the institution's assessment area(s);
 - c. The reasons for penetration of these areas by other lenders, if any, and the lack of penetration by the institution being examined that are developed through discussions with management and the community contact process;
 - d. The institution's ability to serve the subject area in light of (i) the demographic characteristics, economic condition, credit opportunities and demand; and (ii) the institution's business strategy and its capacity and constraints;
 - e. The degree to which penetration by the institution in the subject area in a different reported loan category compensates for the relative lack of penetration in the subject area; and
 - f. The degree to which penetration by the institution in other low- and moderate-income geographies within the assessment area(s) in reported loan categories compensates for the relative lack of penetration in the subject area.
8. Review any analyses prepared by or for and offered by the institution for insight into the reasonableness of the institution's distribution of lending by borrower characteristics. Test the accuracy of the data and determine if the analyses are reasonable. If areas of low or no penetration were identified, review explanations and determine whether action was taken to address disparities, if appropriate.
9. Supplement with an independent analysis of the distribution of the institution's lending within the assessment area by borrower characteristics as necessary and applicable. Consider factors such as:
- a. The number, dollar amount, and percentage of the institution's total home mortgage loans and consumer loans, if included in the evaluation, to low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income borrowers;
 - b. The percentage of the institution's total home mortgage loans and consumer loans, if included in the evaluation, to low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income borrowers compared to the percentage of the population within the assessment area who are low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income;

- c. The number and dollar amount of small loans originated to businesses or farms by loan size of less than $100,000; at least $100,000 but less than $250,000; and at least $250,000 but less than or equal to $1,000,000;
 - d. The number and amount of the small loans to businesses or farms that had annual revenues of less than $1 million compared to the total reported number and amount of small loans to businesses or farms; and
 - e. If the institution adequately serves borrowers within the assessment area(s), whether the distribution of the institution's lending outside of the assessment area based on borrower characteristics would enhance the assessment of the institution's overall performance.
10. Review data on the number and amount of the institution's community development loans. Using information obtained in the performance context procedures, especially with regard to community credit needs and institutional capacity, evaluate the extent, innovativeness, and complexity of community development lending to determine:
- a. The number and amount of community development loans in:
 - i. The institution's assessment area(s); or
 - ii. The broader statewide or regional area that includes the assessment area(s) that support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving the geographies or individuals located within the institution's assessment area(s).
 - b. The extent to which community development lending opportunities have been available to the institution;
 - c. The institution's responsiveness to the opportunities for community development lending; and
 - d. The extent of leadership the institution has demonstrated in community development lending; and
 - e. The innovativeness or complexity involved.
11. If the institution has been responsive to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s) based on the analysis in step number 10, consider:
- a. The number and dollar amount of community development loans in the broader statewide or regional area that includes the assessment area(s), but:
 - i. Will not benefit the assessment area(s); and
 - ii. Do not support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving geographies or individuals located within the institution's assessment area(s).
 - b. The extent to which these loans enhance the institution's performance.
- NOTE: Refer to the appendix for additional guidance on addressing activities at the state or multistate MSA, or institution level.*
12. Evaluate whether the institution's performance under the lending test is enhanced by offering innovative loan products or products with more flexible terms to meet the credit needs of low- and moderate-income individuals or geographies. Consider:
- a. The degree to which the loans serve low- and moderate-income creditworthy borrowers in new ways or loans serve groups of creditworthy borrowers not previously served by the institution; and
 - b. The success of each product, including number and dollar amount of loans originated during the review period.
13. Discuss with management the preliminary findings in this section.
14. Summarize your conclusions regarding the institution's lending performance under the following criteria:
- a. Lending activity;
 - b. Geographic distribution;
 - c. Borrower characteristics;
 - d. Community development lending; and
 - e. Use of innovative or flexible lending practices.
15. Prepare comments for the performance evaluation and the compliance examination report. Refer to the appendix for guidance on addressing community development activities in the performance evaluation.
- Investment Test
- 1. Identify qualified investments by reviewing the institution's investment portfolio, and at the institution's option, its affiliate's investment portfolio. As necessary, obtain a prospectus, or other information that describes the investment(s) and the geographic area(s) or population(s) served. This review should encompass qualified investments, including investments in a broader statewide or regional area and in nationwide funds, that were made since the previous examination (including those that have been sold or have matured) and may consider qualified investments made prior to the previous examination still outstanding. Also, consider qualifying grants, donations, or in-kind contributions of property since the last examination that are for community development purposes. Determine:

- a. Whether the investments have been considered under the lending or service tests; and
 - b. Whether an affiliate's investments, if considered, have been claimed by another institution.
2. Evaluate investment performance using information obtained in the performance context procedures, especially with regard to community needs and institutional capacity. Determine:
- a. The number and amount of qualified investments in:
 - i. The institution's assessment area(s); or
 - ii. The broader statewide or regional area that includes the assessment area(s) that support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving the geographies or individuals located within the institution's assessment area(s).
 - b. The extent to which qualified investment opportunities have been available to the institution;
 - c. The institution's responsiveness to opportunities for qualified investments;
 - d. The use of any innovative or complex investments, in particular those that are not routinely provided by other investors; and
 - e. The degree to which investments serve low- and moderate-income areas or individuals, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies, and the available opportunities for qualified investments.
3. If the institution has been responsive to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s) based on the analysis in step number 2, consider:

- a. The number and dollar amount of qualified investments in the broader statewide or regional area that includes the assessment area(s), but:
 - i. Will not benefit the assessment area(s); and
 - ii. Do not support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving geographies or individuals located within the institution's assessment area(s).
 - iii. The extent to which these investments enhance the institution's performance.

NOTE: Refer to the appendix for additional guidance on addressing activities at the state or multistate MSA, or institution level.

4. Discuss with management the preliminary findings in this section.
5. Summarize conclusions about the institution's investment performance after considering:
 - a. The number and dollar amount of qualified investments;
 - b. The innovativeness and complexity of qualified investments;
 - c. The degree to which qualified investments are not routinely provided by other private investors; and
 - d. The responsiveness of qualified investments to available opportunities.
6. Prepare comments for the performance evaluation and the compliance examination report. Refer to the appendix for guidance on addressing community development activities in the performance evaluation.

Service Test

Retail Banking Services

1. Determine from information available in the institution's Public File:
 - a. The distribution of the institution's branches among low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies in the institution's assessment area(s); and
 - b. Banking services, including hours of operation and available loan and deposit products.
2. Obtain the institution's explanation for any material differences in the hours of operations of, or services available at, branches within low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies in the institution’s assessment area(s).

3. Evaluate the institution’s record of opening and closing branch offices since the previous examination and information that could indicate whether changes have had a positive or negative effect, particularly on low- and moderate-income geographies or individuals.
4. Evaluate the accessibility and use of alternative systems for delivering retail banking services, (e.g., proprietary and non-proprietary ATMs, loan production offices (LPOs), banking by telephone or computer, and bank-at- work or by-mail programs) in low- and moderate-income geographies and to low- and moderate-income individuals.
5. Assess the quantity, quality and accessibility of the institution’s service-delivery systems provided in low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies. Consider the degree to which services are tailored to the convenience and needs of each geography (e.g., extended business hours, including weekends, evenings or by appointment, providing bi-lingual services in specific geographies, etc.).

Community Development Services

6. Identify the institution’s community development services, including at the institution’s option, services through affiliates. Hold discussions with management and review materials. Determine:
 - a. Whether services have been considered under the lending or investment tests; and
 - b. If provided by affiliates of the institution, services are not claimed by other affiliated institutions.
7. Evaluate performance using information obtained in the performance context procedures especially with regard to community needs and institutional capacity. Determine:
 - a. The extent of community development services provided in:
 - i. The institution’s assessment area(s); or
 - ii. The broader statewide or regional area that includes the assessment area(s) that support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving the geographies or individuals located within the institution’s assessment area(s).
 - b. Their innovativeness, including whether they serve low- or moderate-income customers in new ways or serve groups of customers not previously served; and

- c. The degree to which they serve low- or moderate-income areas or individuals and their responsiveness to available opportunities for community development services.

8. If the institution has been responsive to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s) based on the analysis in step number 7, consider:
 - a. The extent of community development services in the broader statewide or regional area that includes the assessment area(s), but:
 - i. Will not benefit the assessment area(s); and
 - ii. Do not support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving geographies or individuals located within the institution’s assessment area(s).
 - b. The extent to which these services enhance the institution’s performance.

NOTE: Refer to the appendix for additional guidance on addressing activities at the state or multistate MSA, or institution level.

9. Discuss with management the preliminary findings.
10. Summarize conclusions about the institution’s system for delivering retail banking and community development services, considering:
 - a. The distribution of branches among low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies;
 - b. The institution’s record of opening and closing branches, particularly branches located in low- or moderate-income geographies or primarily serving low- or moderate-income individuals;
 - c. The availability and effectiveness of alternative systems for delivering retail banking services;
 - d. The extent to which the institution provides community development services;
 - e. The innovativeness and responsiveness of community development services; and
 - f. The range and accessibility of services provided in low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies.
11. Prepare comments for the performance evaluation and the compliance examination report. Refer to the appendix for guidance on addressing community development activities in the performance evaluation.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Large Bank

Ratings

1. Group the analyses of the assessment areas examined by MSA⁵ and nonmetropolitan areas within each state where the institution has branches. If an institution has branches in two or more states of a multistate MSA, group the assessment areas that are in that multistate MSA.
2. Summarize conclusions regarding the institution's performance in each MSA and nonmetropolitan portion of each state with an assessment area that was examined using these procedures. If two or more assessment areas in an MSA or in a nonmetropolitan portion of a state were examined using these procedures, determine the relative significance of the institution's performance in each assessment area by considering:
 - a. The significance of the institution's lending, qualified investments, and lending-related services in each compared to:
 - i. The institution's overall activities;
 - ii. The number of other institutions and the extent of their activities; and
 - iii. The lending, investment, and service opportunities in each.
 - b. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
3. Evaluate the institution's performance in those assessment area(s) not selected for examination using the full scope procedures.
 - a. Revisit the demographic and lending, investment, and service data considered in scoping the examination. Also, consider the institution's operations (branches, lending portfolio mix, etc.) in the assessment area;
 - b. Through a review of the public file(s), consider any services that are customized to the assessment area; and
 - c. Consider any other information provided by the institution (e.g., CRA self-assessment) regarding its performance in the area.
4. For MSAs, and the nonmetropolitan portion of the state, where one or more assessment areas were examined using the full scope procedures, ensure that performance in the assessment area(s) not examined using the full scope procedures is consistent with the conclusions based on the assessment area(s) examined in step 2, above. Select one of the following options for inclusion in the performance evaluation:
 - a. The institution's [lending, investment, service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] is consistent with the institution's [lending, investment, service] performance in the assessment areas within [the MSA/nonmetropolitan portion of the state] that were reviewed using the examination procedures; and
 - b. The institution's [lending/investment/service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] [exceeds/is below] the [lending/investment/service] performance in the assessment areas within [the MSA/nonmetropolitan portion of the state] that were reviewed using the evaluation; however, it does not change the conclusion for the [MSA/nonmetropolitan portion of the state].
5. For MSA, and nonmetropolitan portions of the state, where no assessment area was examined using the full scope procedures, form a conclusion regarding the institution's lending, investment, and service performance in the assessment area(s). When there are several assessment areas in the MSA, or the nonmetropolitan portion of the state, form a conclusion regarding the institution's performance in the MSA, or the nonmetropolitan portion of the state. Determine the relative significance of the institution's performance in each assessment area within the MSA, or the nonmetropolitan portion of the state, by considering:
 - a. The significance of the institution's lending, qualified investments, and lending-related services in each compared to the institution's overall activities; and
 - b. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
6. Also, select one of the following options for inclusion in the performance evaluation:
 - a. The institution's [lending, investment, service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] is consistent with the institution's [lending, investment, service] performance [overall/in the state]; and
 - b. The institution's [lending/investment/service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] [exceeds/is below] the [lending/investment/service] performance for the [institution/state], however, it does not change the [institution's/state] rating.
7. Determine the relative significance of each MSA and nonmetropolitan area to the institution's overall performance (institutions operating in one state) or statewide or multistate MSA performance (institutions operating in more than one state). Consider:

⁵ The reference to MSA may also reference MD

- a. The significance of the institution’s lending, qualified investments, and lending-related services in each compared to:
 - i. The institution’s overall activities;
 - ii. The number of other institutions and the extent of their activities; and
 - iii. The lending, investment, and service opportunities in each.
 - b. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
8. When determining the state or multistate MSA rating, as applicable, consider:
- a. Community development loans and services and qualified investments in the institution’s assessment area(s) in the state or multistate MSA;
 - b. Community development loans and services and qualified investments:
 - i. In the broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution’s assessment area(s) in the state or multistate MSA; and
 - ii. That support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving individuals or geographies in the institution’s assessment area(s); and
 - c. If the institution has been responsive to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s) based on the analysis in steps 8a and 8b, consider any community development loans and services and qualified investments in the broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution’s assessment area(s) in the state or multistate MSA that:
 - i. Will not benefit the assessment area(s); and
 - ii. Do not support organizations or activities with a purpose, mandate, or function that includes serving geographies or individuals located within the institution’s assessment area(s).
9. Using the Component Test Ratings chart below, assign component ratings that reflect the institution’s lending, investment, and service performance. In the case of an institution with branches in just one state, one set of component ratings will be assigned to the institution. In the case of an institution with branches in two or more states and multistate MSAs, component ratings will be assigned for each state or multistate MSA reviewed.

Component Test Ratings	Points for Lending	Points for Investment	Points for Service
Outstanding	12 points	6 points	6 points
High Satisfactory	9 points	4 points	4 points
Low Satisfactory	6 points	3 points	3 points
Needs to Improve	3 points	1 point	1 point
Substantial Noncompliance	0 points	0 points	0 points

10. Assign a preliminary composite rating for the institutions operating in only one state and a preliminary rating for each state or multistate MSA reviewed for institutions operating in more than one state. In assigning the rating, sum the numerical values of the component test ratings for the lending, investment and service tests and refer to the chart, below. No institution, however, may receive an assigned rating of “Satisfactory” or higher unless it receives a rating of at least “Low Satisfactory” on the lending test. In addition, an institution’s assigned rating can be no more than three times the score on the lending test.

Composite Rating	Points Needed
Outstanding	20 points or over
Satisfactory	11 through 19 points
Needs to Improve	5 through 10 points
Substantial Noncompliance	0 through 4 points

11. Consider an institution’s past performance if the prior rating was “Needs to Improve.” If the poor performance has continued, an institution could be considered for a “Substantial Noncompliance” rating.
12. For institutions with branches in more than one state or multistate MSA, assign a preliminary overall rating.
- a. To determine the relative importance of each state and multistate MSA to the institution’s overall rating, consider:

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Large Bank

- i. The significance of the institution's lending, qualified investments, and lending-related services in each compared to:
 1. The institution's overall activities;
 2. The number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 3. The lending, investment, and service opportunities in each.
 - ii. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
- b. Consider the community development loans and services and qualified investments that meet the geographic requirements and that have not been considered in assigning state or multistate MSA ratings. For example, a qualified investment in a regional or nationwide fund that meets the geographic requirements and benefits more than one state, but was not considered because the benefits are not attributable to a particular state or multistate MSA, would be considered at the overall institution level.
13. Review the results of the most recent compliance examination and determine whether evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices that violate an applicable law, rule, or regulation should lower the institution's preliminary overall CRA rating, or the preliminary CRA rating for a state or multistate MSA.⁶ If evidence of discrimination or other illegal credit practices by the institution in any geography, or in any assessment area by any affiliate whose loans have been considered as part of the bank's lending performance, was found, consider the following:
- a. The nature, extent, and strength of the evidence of the practices;
 - b. The policies and procedures that the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has in place to prevent the practices;
 - c. Any corrective action the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has taken, or has committed to take, including voluntary corrective action resulting from self-assessment; and
 - d. Any other relevant information.
14. Assign final overall rating to the institution. Consider:
- a. The preliminary rating; and
 - b. Any evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices, and discuss conclusions with management.
15. Write comments and conclusions, and create charts and tables reflecting area demographics, the institution's operation and its lending, investment and service activity in each assessment area for inclusion in the performance evaluation.
16. Prepare recommendations for supervisory strategy and matters that require attention for follow-up activities.

Public File Checklist

1. There is no need to review each branch or each complete public file during every examination. In determining the extent to which the institution's public files will be reviewed, consider the institution's record of compliance with the public file requirements in previous examinations; its branching structure and changes to it since its last examination; complaints about the institution's compliance with the public file requirements, and any other relevant information.
2. In any review of the public file undertaken, determine, as needed, whether branches display an accurate public notice in their lobbies and the file(s) in the main office and in each state contains:
 - a. All written comments from the public relating to the institution's CRA performance and responses to them for the current and preceding two calendar years (except those that reflect adversely on the good name or reputation of any persons other than the institution);
 - b. The institution's most recent CRA performance evaluation;
 - c. A map of each assessment area showing its boundaries, and on the map or in a separate list, the geographies contained within the assessment area;
 - d. A list of the institution's branches, branches opened and closed during the current and each of the prior two calendar years, and their street addresses and geographies;
 - e. A list of services (loan and deposit products and transaction fees generally offered, and hours of operation at the institution's branches), including a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services between these locations;

- f. The institution's CRA disclosure statements for the prior two calendar years;
 - g. A quarterly report of the institution's efforts to improve its record if it received a less than satisfactory rating in its most recent CRA performance evaluation;
 - h. The HMDA Disclosure Statement for the prior two calendar years for the institution and for each non-depository affiliate the institution has elected to include in assessment of its CRA record, if applicable; and
 - i. If applicable, the number and amount of consumer loans made to the four income categories of borrowers and geographies (low, moderate, middle and upper), and the number and amount located inside and outside of the assessment area(s).
3. In any branch review undertaken, determine whether the branch provides the most recent performance evaluation and a list of services generally available at its branches and a description of any material differences in availability or cost of services at the branch (or a list of services available at the branch).

Wholesale/Limited Purpose Institution

In order to be evaluated under the community development test, an institution must be designated as a wholesale or limited purpose institution following submission of a written request to and approval from its primary regulator. Once an institution has received a designation, it will not normally have to reapply for that designation. The designation will remain in effect until the institution requests that it be revoked or until one year after the agency determines that the institution no longer satisfies the criteria for designation and notifies the institution of this determination. As such, examiners should analyze the bank's operations to determine whether or not any significant changes result in the institution no longer satisfying the criteria for designation.

Wholesale or limited purpose institutions are evaluated on the basis of their:

- Community development lending, qualified investments, or community development services;
- Use of innovative or complex qualified investments, community development loans, or community development services and the extent to which investments are not routinely provided by private investors; and
- Responsiveness to community credit and development needs.

Examiners must be cognizant of the context within which a wholesale or limited purpose institution operates. Examiners should recognize that these institutions may tailor their community development activities based on their own circumstances and the community development opportunities available to them in their assessment areas or the broader statewide or regional areas that include the assessment areas.

Institutions need not engage in all three categories of community development activities to be considered satisfactory under the community development test. Community development loans, investments and services can be directed to a statewide or regional market that includes the institution's assessment area(s) and still qualify for consideration under the community development test as benefiting the assessment area(s). Moreover, if an institution has a satisfactory community development record in its assessment area(s), all community development activities regardless of their locations should be considered.

As with other performance tests, in applying the community development test, examiners should perform only those analyses that are necessary to reach an accurate conclusion about the institution's performance, use all available, reliable information, and avoid duplication of effort to reduce burden.

Examination Procedures for Limited Purpose and Wholesale Institutions

Examination Scope

1. For institutions with more than one assessment area, identify assessment areas for full scope review. In making those selections, review prior performance evaluations, available community contact materials, reported lending data and demographic data on each assessment area and consider factors such as:
 - a. The lending, investment, and service activity in the different assessment areas, particularly community development activities;
 - b. The lending, investment, and service opportunities available in the different assessment areas, particularly community development opportunities;
 - c. The length of time since the assessment area(s) received a full scope review;
 - d. The institution's prior CRA performance in different assessment areas;
 - e. The number of other institutions in the assessment areas and the importance of the institution under examination in addressing community development needs in the different assessment areas, particularly in areas with a limited number of financial service providers;
 - f. The existence of apparent anomalies in the reported HMDA data for any particular assessment area;
 - g. Examiners' knowledge of the same or similar assessment areas; and
 - h. Comments from the public regarding the institution's CRA performance.
2. For interstate institutions, a rating must be assigned for each state where the institution has a branch and for each multi-state metropolitan statistical areas/metropolitan divisions (MSA/MD) where the institution has branches in two or more of the states that comprise the multi-state MSA/MD. Select one or more assessment areas in each state for examination using the full scope procedures.

Performance Context

1. Review standardized worksheets and other agency information sources to obtain relevant demographic, economic, and loan data, to the extent available, for each assessment area under review. Consider, among other things, whether housing costs are particularly high in relation to area median income.
2. Consider any information the institution may provide on its local community and economy and its community development lending, qualified investment, and community development service capacity or that otherwise assists in the evaluation of the institution's community development activities.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Wholesale/Limited Purpose

3. Review community contact forms prepared by the regulatory agencies to obtain information that assists in the evaluation of the institution's community development activities. Contact local community, government, or economic development representatives to update or supplement information about community development activities in the assessment area(s) or the broader statewide or regional areas of which the assessment area(s) is a part.
 4. Identify barriers, if any, to participation by the institution in local community development activities. For example, evaluate the institution's ability and capacity to help meet the community development needs of its assessment area(s) through a review of the uniform bank performance report (UBPR), the consolidated report of condition (Call Report), annual reports, supervisory reports, prior CRA performance evaluations, and financial information for other wholesale/limited purpose institutions serving approximately the same assessment area(s).
 5. Review the institution's public file and any comments received by the institution or the agency since the last CRA performance evaluation for information that assists in the evaluation of the institution.
 6. Document the performance context information gathered for use in evaluating the institution's CRA record.
3. If the assessment area(s) fails to comply with the applicable criteria described above, develop, based on discussions with management, a revised assessment area(s) that complies with the criteria. Use this assessment area(s) to evaluate the institution's performance, but do not otherwise consider the revision in determining the institution's rating.

Community Development Test

1. Identify the number and amount of the institution's community development loans, (originations and purchases of loans and any other data the institution chooses to provide), qualified investments, and community development services. Obtain this information through discussions with management, HMDA data collected by the institution, as applicable; investment portfolios; any other relevant financial records; and materials available to the public. Include, at the institution's option:
 - a. Community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services provided by affiliates, if they are not claimed by any other institution; and
 - b. Community development lending by consortia or third parties.
2. Review community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services to verify that they qualify as community development.
3. If the institution participates in community development lending by consortia or third parties, or claims activities provided by affiliates, review records provided to the institution by the consortia or third parties or affiliates to ensure that the community development loans claimed by the institution do not account for more than the institution's share (based on the level of its participation or investment) of the total loans originated by the consortium or third party.
4. Considering the institution's capacity and constraints and other information obtained through the performance context review, form conclusions about:
 - a. The extent, by number and dollar amount of community development loans, services, and qualified investments;
 - b. The degree of innovation in community development activities (e.g., serving low- or moderate-income borrowers in new ways or serving groups of creditworthy borrowers not previously served by the institution);
 - c. The complexity of those community development activities, such as the use of enhancements or other features specifically designed to expand community development lending;

Assessment Area

1. Review the institution's stated assessment area(s) to ensure that it:
 - a. Consists of one or more MSAs/MDs or contiguous political subdivisions (i.e., counties, cities, or towns) where the institution has its main office, branches, and deposit-taking ATMs;
 - b. Consists only of whole census tracts;
 - c. Consists of separate delineations for areas that extend substantially across MSA/MD or state boundaries unless the assessment area is located in a multistate MSA/MD;
 - d. Does not reflect illegal discrimination; and
 - e. Does not arbitrarily exclude any low- or moderate-income area(s) taking into account the institution's size and financial condition.
2. If the assessment area(s) does not coincide with the boundaries of an MSA/MD or political subdivision(s), assess whether the adjustments to the boundaries were made because the assessment area would otherwise be too large for the institution to reasonably serve, have an unusual configuration, or include significant geographic barriers.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Wholesale/Limited Purpose

- d. The responsiveness to the opportunities for community development lending, qualified investments, and community development services; and
 - e. The degree to which the institution's qualified investments serve needs not routinely provided by other private investors.
5. Summarize conclusions regarding the institution's community development performance and retain in the work papers.

Ratings

1. Review the analyses of the institution's performance in each assessment area examined, considering only those community development activities that benefit the assessment area(s) and the broader statewide or regional area(s) that include the assessment area(s).
2. Group the analyses of the assessment areas examined by MSA¹ and nonmetropolitan areas within each state where the institution has branches. If an institution has branches in two or more states of a multi-state MSA, group the assessment areas in that MSA.
3. Summarize conclusions about the institution's performance in each MSA and the nonmetropolitan portion of each state in which an assessment area was examined using these procedures. If two or more assessment areas in an MSA or in the nonmetropolitan portion of a state were examined using these procedures, determine the relative significance of the institution's performance in each assessment area by considering:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The community development opportunities in each;
 - c. The significance of the institution's activities for each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
4. For assessment areas in MSAs and nonmetropolitan areas that were not examined, consider facts and data related to the institution's community development lending, investment, and service activities to ensure that performance in those areas is not inconsistent with the conclusions based on the assessment areas examined.
5. Assign a preliminary rating for an institution with operations in one state only using the Community Development Ratings Matrix. For an institution with operations in more than one state or multi-state MSA, assign a preliminary rating for each state, using the Community Development Ratings Matrix. To determine the relative significance of each MSA and nonmetropolitan area to the institution's overall rating (institutions operating in only one state) or state-wide or multi-state MSA rating (institutions operating in more than one state), consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The community development opportunities in each;
 - c. The significance of the institution's activities for each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
6. For institutions with operations in more than one state or multi-state MSA, assign a preliminary rating for the institution as a whole. To determine the relative significance of each state or multi-state MSA consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The community development opportunities in each;
 - c. The significance of the institution's activities for each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
7. If the institution is adequately meeting the community development needs of each of its assessment area(s), consider those community development activities, if any, that benefit areas outside of the assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the assessment area(s). Determine whether those activities enhance the preliminary rating. If so, adjust the rating(s) accordingly.
8. Consider an institution's past performance if the prior rating was "Needs to Improve." If the poor performance has continued, an institution could be considered for a "Substantial Noncompliance" rating.
9. Review the results of the most recent compliance examination and determine whether evidence of discrimination or other illegal credit practices that violate an applicable law, rule, or regulation should lower the institution's preliminary composite rating or the preliminary CRA rating for a state or multistate MSA.² If evidence of discrimination or other illegal credit practices by the institution in any geography, or in any assessment area by any affiliate whose loans have been considered as part of the bank's lending performance, was found, consider the following:

- a. The nature, extent, and strength of the evidence of the practices;
 - b. The policies and procedures that the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has in place to prevent the practices;
 - c. Any corrective action the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has taken, or has committed to take, including voluntary corrective action resulting from self-assessment; and
 - d. Any other relevant information.
10. Assign a final composite rating to the institution, considering the preliminary rating and any evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices, and discuss conclusions with management.
 11. Write comments for the public evaluation and examination report.
 12. Prepare recommendations for supervisory strategy and matters that require attention for follow-up activities.

Public File Checklist

1. There is no need to review each branch or each complete public file during every examination. In determining the extent to which the institution's public files should be reviewed, consider the institution's record of compliance with the public file requirements in previous examinations, its branching structure and changes to it since its last examination, complaints about the institution's compliance with the public file requirements, and any other relevant information.
 2. In any review of the public file undertaken, determine whether branches display an accurate public notice in their lobbies, a complete public file is available in the institution's main office and at least one branch in each state, and the public file(s) in the main office and in each state contain:
 - a. All written comments from the public relating to the institution's CRA performance and any responses to them for the current and preceding two calendar years
- b. The institution's most recent CRA Performance Evaluation;
 - c. A map of each assessment area showing its boundaries and, on the map or in a separate list, the geographies contained within the assessment area;
 - d. A list of the institution's branches, branches opened and closed during the current and each of the prior two calendar years, their street addresses and geographies;
 - e. A list of services (loan and deposit products and transaction fees generally offered, and hours of operation at the institution's branches), including a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services between those locations;
 - f. The institution's CRA Disclosure Statement(s) for the prior two calendar years;
 - g. A quarterly report of the institution's efforts to improve its record if it received a less than satisfactory rating during its most recent CRA examination;
 - h. HMDA Disclosure Statements for the prior two calendar years and those of each non-depository affiliate the institution has elected to include in assessment of its CRA record, if applicable; and
 - i. If applicable, the number and dollar amount of consumer loans made to the four income categories of borrowers and geographies (low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income), located inside and outside of the assessment area(s).
3. In any branch review undertaken, determine whether the branch provides the most recent public evaluation, and a list of services generally available at its branches, and a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services at the branch (or a list of services available at the branch).

Public Notice

Determine that the appropriate CRA public notice is displayed as required by § 345.44 and Appendix B.

² "Evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices" includes, but is not limited to: (a) Discrimination against applicants on a prohibited basis in violation, for example, of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act or the Fair Housing Act; (b) Violations of the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act; (c) Violations of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act; (d) Violations of section 8 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act; and (e) Violations of the Truth in Lending Act regarding a consumer's right of rescission.

Institutions with Strategic Plans

The regulations permit any institution to develop, and submit for approval by its primary supervisory agency, a strategic plan (Plan) for addressing its responsibilities with respect to CRA. A strategic plan enables the institution to tailor its CRA goals and objectives to address the needs of its community consistent with its business strategy, operational focus, and capacity and constraints. The required contents of the strategic plan and the FDIC's criteria for evaluating a strategic plan submission are set forth in Part 345 of the FDIC's regulations; specifically, at 12 C.F.R. §345.27.

Public Review and Comment

An important component in preparing a strategic plan is the requirement that the process include public review and comment. The plan must include a copy of the public notice and the name(s) of the newspaper of general circulation in which the notice was published for each assessment area covered by the plan. The institution should provide verification in the plan that comments were solicited for a minimum period of 30 days. Copies of all written comments received during the formal comment period must be submitted. If the final plan submitted to the FDIC is different from the initial plan released for comment, a copy of that initial plan must also be submitted with the request. During the FDIC's review process, the institution may need to revise the plan to respond to agency requests for additional information. These changes do not need to be released again for public comment unless they significantly alter the content of the original submission.

The institution can obtain public input in a variety of ways, such as holding meetings with community groups and other interested parties, seeking comments from customers through branch notifications, and mailing statement stuffers to customers.

The institution should also include copies of its response to the public comments. The public comments and the institution's response(s) will be reviewed by the FDIC to determine whether the institution considered the input from the community, the degree of support for the institutions goals, and the appropriateness of the goals.

Assessment Area

An institution must define assessment area(s) and list them in the plan. Only whole geographies should be included: census tracts, block numbering areas or block groups. The assessment area should consist of one or more metropolitan statistical areas (MSAs) or one or more contiguous political subdivisions (e.g., counties, cities or towns); however, the assessment area may be adjusted if including the political subdivision would create a larger area than the institution can be reasonably expected to serve. Whole census tracts and block numbering areas should be included even if these geographies cross MSA and political subdivision boundaries.

The institution should include those geographies in which it has its main office, branches and deposit-taking remote service facilities such as ATMs and point-of-sale terminals. The institution should also include the surrounding geographies in which it has originated or purchased a substantial amount of its loan portfolio, including home mortgage, small business and small farm loans, as well as any consumer loans, on which the institution chooses to have its performance assessed.

Measurable Goals

Each institution must determine not only which goals to include in the plan but also the levels at which these goals must be set to justify the proposed ratings. When an institution selects the strategic plan option, it should refer to both the examination procedures and those portions of the CRA regulations that establish the performance criteria for lending, investments, and services.

Examiners evaluate a strategic plan's measurable goals on the following criteria:

- Extent and breadth of lending or lending-related activities, including geographic and borrower distribution of loans.
- Extent of community development lending.
- Use of innovative or flexible lending practices.
- Amount, innovativeness, complexity and responsiveness of qualified investments.
- Availability and effectiveness of retail services and the extent and innovativeness of community development services.

The regulations state that the plan should include specific measurable goals to meet the credit needs of the assessment area, particularly the needs of low- and moderate-income geographies and individuals, through lending, investments and services. Generally, the plan should emphasize lending and lending-related activity. Nonetheless, a different emphasis may still be appropriate, provided that this emphasis is clearly explained and substantiated based on the characteristics and needs of the assessment area and the institution's financial capacity, product offerings and business focus. For example, there may be demonstrable intense loan competition within an assessment area, so the institution is concentrating its efforts on making qualified investments and providing community development services.

With respect to affiliates, the plan must include the names of each institution joining in the plan and a description of how it is affiliated with the submitting institution. The FDIC will approve a joint plan only if the plan provides measurable goals for each depository institution. Activities may be allocated among institutions, at their option, provided that the same activities are not counted for more than one institution. A joint plan must appropriately address the credit needs of each institution's assessment area(s).

If a proposed strategic plan is submitted on behalf of more than one institution, each institution must receive the approval of its own supervisory agency for those portions of the plan relating to that institution's CRA responsibilities. If a strategic plan covering multiple institutions must be approved by more than one regulatory agency, each agency will issue a decision approving or denying the request with respect to the institution(s) for which that agency has primary supervisory responsibility.

Determining the adequacy of the projected goals necessitates that they be well-supported by facts and information presented in the performance context portion of the plan. Although past performance does indicate the institution's ability to attain a certain goal, it does not necessarily denote whether the goal reflects the specific needs of the assessment area or is consistent with economic or market forecasts for the geographic area served by the institution.

Once an institution decides which goals should be included in its plan, it must establish levels for each of these goals. The balance is a delicate one: the goals must be realistic and achievable, yet sufficiently high to warrant the proposed Satisfactory or Outstanding ratings. In determining whether the goals are consistent with the ratings, the institution should take into account the factors typically considered during a CRA examination.

Performance Context

Essentially, this section of the plan should include any information developed in the institutions normal business planning that it would like the FDIC to consider regarding lending, investment and service opportunities for each assessment area covered by the plan. This information should include a description of any legal constraints or limitations that affect the type of loans, investments or services that the institution offers. Information submitted by the institution will be considered along with data that the FDIC has obtained from community, government, civic and other sources

Term

The institution must set a term, not to exceed five years, during which the plan will be in effect. If the term is longer than one year, interim goals must be established for each year of the plan. These interim goals should reflect yearly adjustments based on information furnished in the performance context of the plan, which describes both the financial institutions capacity and local economic and demographic conditions. There should also be a reasonable relationship between past performance by the institution in the categories of lending, investments and services, and the proposed goals.

Other Considerations

Effective Date

The plan should include a proposed effective date, which should be at least 90 days after the plan is submitted to the FDIC. The institution will not be evaluated under the strategic plan option until it has been operating under an approved plan that has been in effect for at least one year.

Confidentiality

Under the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), a strategic plan submitted to the FDIC is a public document that is available to the public upon request. This may include any written correspondence between the institution and the FDIC during the process of reviewing a proposed strategic plan.

An institution may request confidential treatment of information that would be exempt from public disclosure under FOIA. The request must be submitted in writing concurrently with the filing of the strategic plan and must discuss in detail the justification for confidentiality. The institution should explain the harm that would result from public release of the information. Examples of the types of information that the institution may deem confidential include potential product offerings, marketing strategies and merger, acquisition or expansion plans. The FDIC will advise an institution of a decision to make information labeled Confidential available to the public.

Alternative Evaluation

The institution may elect in its plan to be evaluated under an alternative assessment method (e.g., the lending, investment and service tests for large institutions, the small institution performance standards or the community development test, as appropriate) if it fails to substantially meet the strategic plan goals for a Satisfactory rating.

Amendments

During the term of the plan, mergers, acquisitions, branch expansions and closings or other events may occur that significantly change the context in which the institution operates. Moreover, there may be adverse impacts on the economic or market climate of the assessment area that hamper the institutions ability to meet the projected goals and activities in the plan. Consequently, an institution may request an amendment if material changes develop that were not anticipated in the initial performance context. Depending on the magnitude of these proposed changes, the amended plan may be required to undergo the public comment process.

Timing

The FDIC will act upon a plan within 60 calendar days after the FDIC receives the complete plan and other material required under the regulation. If the FDIC fails to act within this time period, the plan shall be deemed approved unless the FDIC extends the review period for good cause.

The 60-day processing period will be suspended on the date that the FDIC requests that additional information be provided. If the institution cannot satisfactorily respond to the FDIC's questions or cannot otherwise supply sufficient information to form a recommendation, the strategic plan submission may be returned to the institution as incomplete. Returning the strategic plan does not preclude a financial institution from submitting another request at a later date; however, this will start a new 60-day processing period. The FDIC will determine on a case-by-case basis whether additional public comment is needed. Generally, the submission of another plan would necessitate another public comment period.

If the plan is denied, the institution may request that the FDIC reconsider its decision within 30 days of its receipt of the notice of denial. The FDIC will determine whether the request for reconsideration sets forth substantive information that was not submitted for good cause in the original submission and whether there is justification to reverse the denial.

Evaluation

This approach to addressing an institution's CRA responsibilities presents an opportunity for a very straightforward examination. The first question an examiner should investigate is whether the goals were met. If they were, the appropriate rating should be assigned. The appropriateness of the goals will have already been determined in the process of public comment and agency review and approval.

The examination procedures permit an institution to receive a Satisfactory rating even if it has not fully met each of the goals in the plan. The examiners will consider whether the goals have been substantially met when assigning a rating. In determining whether an institution has substantially met its plan goals, the FDIC will consider circumstances beyond the control of the institution, such as economic conditions or other significant market factors or events that have adversely affected the institutions ability to perform. Examiners will review updated performance context and assessment area information to ascertain whether the institution's performance is commensurate with either a Satisfactory or Outstanding rating.

However, the examiner should approach an examination of an institution operating under a plan understanding that part of the purpose for these regulatory provisions was to give the institution significant latitude in designing a program that is appropriate to its own capabilities, business strategies and organizational framework, as well as to the communities that it serves. Consequently, the institution may develop plans for a single assessment area that it serves, for some, but not all, of the assessment areas that it serves, or for all of them. It may develop a plan that incorporates and coordinates the activities of various affiliates. It will be the examiner's challenge to evaluate institutions operating under one plan or a number of plans in a way that accurately reflects the results achieved and that sensibly wraps that evaluation into the overall assessment of the institution.

As with other aspects of the CRA examination, the examiner should first make the greatest use possible of information available from the agencies to evaluate performance under the plan. However, it is likely that some elements of a plan under review will not be reflected in public or other agency data. Consequently, the examiner may, of necessity, have to ask the institution for the data necessary to determine whether it has met its goals. The examiner should do so, to the greatest extent possible, by asking the institution to provide data for review prior to going on-site for the examination. The examiner should also seek to mitigate burden by, wherever possible, using data in the form maintained by the institution.

Examination Procedures for Institutions with Strategic Plans¹

Examination Scope

1. For institutions with more than one assessment area, identify assessment areas for full scope review. To select one or more assessment areas for full scope review, analyze prior performance evaluations, available community contact materials, reported lending data and demographic data on each assessment area and consider factors such as:
 - a. The level of the institution's lending, investment and service activity in the different assessment areas, including low- and moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies designated by the Agencies² based on (a) rates of poverty, unemployment, and population loss or (b) population size, density, and dispersion³;
 - b. The number of other institutions in the different assessment areas and the importance of the institution under examination in meeting credit needs in the different assessment areas, particularly in areas with a limited number of financial service providers;
 - c. The existence of apparent anomalies in the reported lending data for any particular assessment area(s);
 - d. The time since the assessment area(s) most recently received a full scope examination;
 - e. Performance that falls short of plan goals based on a review of available data;
 - f. The institution's prior CRA performance in the different assessment areas; and
 - g. Comments from the public regarding the institution's CRA performance.

² The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

³ A list of distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies is available on the FFIEC web site at www.ffiec.gov.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Institutions with Strategic Plans

2. For interstate institutions, a rating must be assigned for each state where the institution has a branch and in every multistate MSA where the institution has branches in two or more of the states that comprise that multistate MSA. Select one or more assessment areas in each state for examination using these procedures.

Performance Context

1. Review the institution's public file for any comments received by the institution or the agency since the last CRA performance evaluation that assists in evaluating the institution's record of meeting plan goals.
2. Consider any information that the institution provides on its record of meeting plan goals.
3. Contact local community, governmental or economic development representatives to update or supplement information about the institution's record of meeting plan goals.
4. As necessary, consider any information the institution or others may provide on local community and economic conditions that may affect the institution's ability to meet plan goals or otherwise assist in the evaluation of the institution.

Performance Criteria

1. Review the following:
 - a. The approved plan and approved amendments;
 - b. The agency's approval process files; and
 - c. Written comments from the public that the institution or the agency received since the plan became effective.
2. Determine whether the institution achieved its performance goals for each assessment area examined.
 - a. Review the plan's measurable annual goals for each performance category and assessment area(s) to be reviewed.
 - b. Obtain information and data about the institution's actual performance for the period that has elapsed since the previous examination.
 - c. Compare the plan goals for each assessment area reviewed to the institution's actual performance since its last examination in each assessment area reviewed to determine if all of the plan's goals have been met.
3. If any goals were not met, form a conclusion as to whether the plan goals were "substantially met." In doing so, consider the number of unmet goals, the degree to which the goals were not met, the importance of those goals to the plan as a whole, and the reasons why the goals were not met (e.g., economic factors beyond the institution's control).
4. Discuss preliminary findings with management.
5. Summarize conclusions about the institution's performance.

Ratings

These instructions assume that the strategic plan covers all of the institution's assessment areas. If not, the analysis of performance for the assessment area(s) covered by the strategic plan must be combined with the analyses for assessment areas that were subject to other assessment method(s) in order to assign a rating.

1. Group the analyses of the assessment areas examined by MSA⁴ and nonmetropolitan areas within each state where the institution has branches. If an institution has branches in two or more states of a multi-state MSA, group the assessment areas that are in that MSA.
2. If the institution has substantially met its plan goals for a satisfactory rating or, if applicable, an outstanding rating, in all assessment areas reviewed, summarize conclusions about the institution's performance in each MSA and the nonmetropolitan area of each state in which an assessment area was examined using these procedures. Assign the appropriate preliminary rating for the institution and, as applicable, each state or multistate MSA and proceed to Step 6, below.
3. If the institution did not substantially meet its plan goals in each assessment area, check to determine if the institution elected in its plan to be evaluated under an alternate assessment method.
 - a. If the institution did not elect in the plan to be evaluated under an alternate assessment method, assign a "Needs to Improve" or "Substantial Noncompliance" rating to those assessment areas in which plan goals were not substantially met, depending on the number of goals missed, the extent to which they were missed, and their importance to the plan overall.
 - b. If the institution elected in its plan to be evaluated under an alternate assessment method, perform the appropriate procedures to evaluate and rate the institution's performance in those assessment areas in which the institution did not meet plan goals.
4. For institutions operating in multiple assessment areas, determine the relative importance of the assessment areas reviewed in forming conclusions for each MSA and the nonmetropolitan area within each state and for any multistate MSA where the institution has branches in two or more states. In making that determination, consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The lending, service, and investment opportunities in each;
 - c. The significance of the institution's loans, qualified investments, and lending-related services, as applicable, for each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and ⁴ The reference to MSA may also reference metropolitan division (MD).

- d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
5. For an institution operating in multiple MSAs or nonmetropolitan areas in one or more states or multi-state MSAs, assign a preliminary rating for each state and multi-state MSA. To determine the relative significance of each MSA and nonmetropolitan area to the rating in a state, consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The lending, service, and investment opportunities in each;
 - c. The significance of the institution's loans, qualified investments, and lending-related services, as applicable, for each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
6. For institutions with operations in more than one state, assign a preliminary overall rating. In determining the relative significance of the institution's performance in each state or multistate MSA to its overall rating consider:
 - a. The significance of the institution's activities in each compared to the institution's overall activities;
 - b. The lending, service, and investment opportunities in each;
 - c. The significance of the institution's loans, qualified investments, and lending-related services, as applicable, for each, particularly in light of the number of other institutions and the extent of their activities in each; and
 - d. Demographic and economic conditions in each.
7. Review the results of the most recent compliance examination and determine whether evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices that violate an applicable law, rule, or regulation should lower the institution's overall CRA rating or, if applicable, its CRA rating in any state or multi-state MSA.⁵ If evidence of discrimination or other illegal credit practices in any geography by the institution, or in any assessment area by any affiliate whose loans were considered as part of the institution's lending performance, was found, consider:
 - a. The nature, extent, and strength of the evidence of the practices;
 - b. The policies and procedures that the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has in place to prevent the practices;
 - c. Any corrective action the institution (or affiliate, as applicable) has taken, or has committed to take, including voluntary corrective action resulting from self-assessment; and
 - d. Any other relevant information.
8. Discuss conclusions with management and assign a final rating to the institution and state or multi-state MSA ratings, as applicable, considering the preliminary rating and any evidence of discrimination and other illegal credit practices.
9. Write comments for the public evaluation and the examination report.

Public File Checklist

1. There is no need to review each branch or each complete public file during every examination. In determining the extent to which the institution's public files should be reviewed, consider the institution's record of compliance with the public file requirements in previous examinations, its branching structure and changes to it since its last examination, complaints about the institution's compliance with the public file requirements, and any other relevant information.
2. In any review of the public file undertaken, determine whether branches display an accurate public notice in their lobbies, a complete public file is available in the institution's main office and at least one branch in each state, and the public file available in the main office and in each state contains:
 - a. A copy of the approved strategic plan;
 - b. All written comments from the public relating to the institution's CRA performance and any responses to them for the current and preceding two calendar years (except those that reflect adversely on the good name or reputation of any persons other than the institution);
 - c. The institution's most recent CRA Performance Evaluation;
 - d. A map of each assessment area showing its boundaries and, on the map or in a separate list, the geographies contained within the assessment area;
 - e. A list of the institution's branches, branches opened and closed during the current and each of the prior two calendar years, their street addresses and geographies;
 - f. A list of services (loan and deposit products and transaction fees generally offered, and hours of operation at the institution's branches), including a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services between those locations;
 - g. The institution's CRA Disclosure Statement(s) for the prior two calendar years;
 - h. A quarterly report of the institution's efforts to improve its record if it received a less than satisfactory rating during its most recent CRA examination;

⁵ "Evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices" includes, but is not limited to: (a) Discrimination against applicants on a prohibited basis in violation, for example, of the Equal Credit Opportunity Act or the Fair Housing Act; (b) Violations of the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act; (c) Violations of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act; (d) Violations of section 8 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act; and (e) Violations of the Truth in Lending Act regarding a consumer's right of rescission.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Institutions with Strategic Plans

- i. HMDA Disclosure Statements for the prior two calendar years for the institution and for each non-depository affiliate the institution has elected to include in assessment of its CRA record, if applicable;
 - j. The number and dollar amount of consumer loans, for large banks, if applicable; and
 - k. The loan-to-deposit ratio, for small institutions.
3. In any branch review undertaken, determine whether the branch provides the most recent public evaluation and a list of services generally available at its branches and a description of any material differences in the availability or cost of services at the branch (or a list of services available at the branch).

Determine that the appropriate CRA public notice is displayed as required by § 345.44 and Appendix B.

CRA Ratings System

Introduction

In assigning a rating, the FDIC evaluates a bank's performance under the applicable performance criteria in the regulation, in accordance with Section 345.21 and Section 345.28, which provides for adjustments on the basis of evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices. A bank's performance need not fit each aspect of a particular rating profile in order to receive that rating, and exceptionally strong performance with respect to some aspects may compensate for weak performance in others. The bank's overall performance, however, must be consistent with safe and sound banking practices and generally with the appropriate profile as follows.

Ratings Definitions

The following ratings definitions are to be used.

“Outstanding” An institution in this group has an outstanding record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, in a manner consistent with its resources and capabilities.

“Satisfactory” An institution in this group has a satisfactory record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, in a manner consistent with its resources and capabilities.

“Needs to Improve” An institution in this group needs to improve its overall record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, in a manner consistent with its resources and capabilities.

“Substantial Noncompliance” An institution in this group has a substantially deficient record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, in a manner consistent with its resources and capabilities.

Banks Evaluated under the Lending, Investment, and Service Tests

 - To the extent changes have been made, its record of opening and closing branches has significantly adversely affected the accessibility of its delivery systems, particularly in low- or moderate-income geographies or to low- or moderate-income individuals;

- Wholesale or Limited-Purpose Banks
- The FDIC assigns each wholesale or limited-purpose bank's community development performance one of the four following ratings:

- Outstanding. The FDIC rates a wholesale or limited-purpose bank's community development performance "outstanding" if, in general, it demonstrates:
 - A high level of community development loans, community development services, or qualified investments, particularly investments that are not routinely provided by private investors;

Banks Evaluated under the Small Bank Performance Standards

Lending Test Ratings

- Eligibility for a Satisfactory lending test rating. The FDIC rates a small bank's lending performance "satisfactory" if, in general, the bank demonstrates:
 - A reasonable loan-to-deposit ratio (considering seasonal variations) given the bank's size, financial condition, the credit needs of its assessment area(s), and taking into account, as appropriate, other lending-related activities such as loan originations for sale to the secondary markets and community development loans and qualified investments;

- A majority of its loans and, as appropriate, other lending-related activities are in its assessment area(s);
 - A distribution of loans to and, as appropriate, other lending related-activities for individuals of different income levels (including low- and moderate-income individuals) and businesses and farms of different sizes that is reasonable given the demographics of the bank’s assessment area(s);
 - A record of taking appropriate action, as warranted, in response to written complaints, if any, about the bank’s performance in helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s); and
 - A reasonable geographic distribution of loans given the bank’s assessment area(s).
- Eligibility for an Outstanding lending test rating. A small bank that meets each of the standards for a “satisfactory” rating under this paragraph and exceeds some or all of those standards may warrant consideration for a lending test rating of “outstanding.”
 - Needs to Improve or Substantial Noncompliance ratings. A small bank also may receive a lending test rating of “needs to improve” or “substantial noncompliance” depending on the degree to which its performance has failed to meet the standards for a “satisfactory” rating.

Community Development Test Ratings for Intermediate Small Banks

- Eligibility for a Satisfactory community development test rating. The FDIC rates a an intermediate small bank’s community development performance “satisfactory” if the bank demonstrates adequate responsiveness to the community development needs of its assessment area(s) through community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services. The adequacy of the bank’s response will depend on its capacity for such community development activities, its assessment area’s need for such community development activities, and the availability of such opportunities for community development in the bank’s assessment area(s).
- Eligibility for an Outstanding community development test rating. The FDIC rates an intermediate small bank’s community development performance “outstanding” if the bank demonstrates excellent responsiveness to community development needs in its assessment area(s) through community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services, as appropriate, considering the bank’s capacity and the need and availability of such opportunities for community development in the bank’s assessment area(s).

- Needs to Improve or Substantial Noncompliance ratings. An intermediate small bank may also receive a community development test rating of “needs to improve” or “substantial noncompliance” depending on the degree to which its performance has failed to meet the standards for a “satisfactory” rating.

Overall Rating

- Eligibility for a Satisfactory overall rating. No intermediate small bank may receive an assigned overall rating of “satisfactory” unless it receives a rating of at least “satisfactory” on both the lending test and the community development test.
- Eligibility for an Outstanding overall rating. An intermediate small bank that receives an “outstanding” rating on one test and at least “satisfactory” on the other test may receive an assigned overall rating of “outstanding.”
- A small bank that is not an intermediate small bank that meets each of the standards for a “satisfactory” rating under the lending test and exceeds some or all of those standards may warrant consideration for an overall rating of “outstanding.” In assessing whether a bank’s performance is “outstanding,” the FDIC considers the extent to which the bank exceeds each of the performance standards for a “satisfactory” rating and its performance in making qualified investments and its performance in providing branches and other services and delivery systems that enhance credit availability in its assessment area(s).
- Needs to Improve or Substantial Noncompliance overall ratings. A small bank may also receive a rating of “needs to improve” or “substantial noncompliance” depending on the degree to which its performance has failed to meet the standards for a “satisfactory” rating.

Strategic Plan Assessments

The FDIC assesses the performance of a bank operating under an approved plan to determine if the bank has met its plan goals:

- Satisfactory. If the bank substantially achieves its plan goals for a satisfactory rating, the FDIC will rate the bank’s performance as “satisfactory”.
- Outstanding. If the bank exceeds its plan goals for a satisfactory rating and substantially achieves its plan goals for an outstanding rating, the FDIC will rate the bank’s performance under the plan as “outstanding”.
- If the bank fails to meet substantially its plan goals for a satisfactory rating, the FDIC will rate the bank as either Needs to Improve or Substantial Noncompliance, depending on the extent to which it falls short of its plan goals, unless the bank elected in its plan to be rated otherwise, as provided in Section 345.27(f)(4).

CRA Sunshine – Disclosure and Reporting of CRA-Related Agreements

Introduction

Section 711 of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA) added a new section 48 to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (FDI Act) entitled “CRA Sunshine Requirements.” This section requires nongovernmental entities or persons (NGEPs), insured depository institutions (IDIs), and affiliates of insured depository institutions that are parties to certain agreements that are in fulfillment of the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) to make the agreements available to the public and the appropriate agency and to file annual reports concerning the agreements with the appropriate agency. The interagency regulations implementing GLBA’s CRA Sunshine Requirements were published January 10, 2001. The GLBA CRA Sunshine Requirements and the implementing CRA Sunshine Regulations do not affect the Community Reinvestment Act of 1977, its implementing regulations, or the agencies’ interpretations or administration of that act or regulation.

The CRA Sunshine Regulations identify the types of written agreements that are covered by the statute (referred to as covered agreements), define many of the terms used in the statute, describe how the parties to a covered agreement must make the agreement available to the public and the appropriate agencies, and explain the type of information that must be included in the annual report filed by a party to a covered agreement. However, neither GLBA nor the CRA Sunshine Regulations give the agencies any authority to enforce the provisions of any covered agreement.

The CRA Sunshine Regulations, entitled “Disclosure and Reporting of CRA-Related Agreements,” became effective April 1, 2001. As described in the Regulations and outlined in the Summary of the Disclosure and Reporting Requirements of the Regulation, the disclosure requirements apply to covered agreements entered into after November 12, 1999, and the annual reporting requirements apply to covered agreements entered into on or after May 12, 2000.

Definitions

In addition to the definitions described below, §346.11 of the CRA Sunshine Regulations provide other definitions, including ones for “affiliate” and “term of agreement.”

“Covered Agreement” is any contract, arrangement, or understanding that meets all of the following criteria:

1. The agreement is in writing.
2. The parties to the agreement include:
 - a. One or more insured depository institutions or affiliates of an insured depository institution; and

- b. One or more NGEPs.
3. The agreement provides for the insured depository institution or any affiliate to:
 - a. Provide to one or more individuals or entities (whether or not parties to the agreement) cash payments, grants, or other consideration (except loans) that have an aggregate value of more than $10,000 in any calendar year; or
 - b. Make to one or more individuals or entities (whether or not parties to the agreement) loans that have an aggregate principal amount of more than $50,000 in any calendar year.
4. The agreement is made pursuant to, or in connection with, the fulfillment of the CRA.
5. The agreement is with a NGEP that has had a CRA communication prior to entering into the agreement.

A “Covered Agreement” does not include:

1. Any individual loan that is secured by real estate; or

 - a. The funds are loaned at rates that are not substantially below market rates; and
 - b. The loan application or other loan documentation does not indicate that the borrower intends or is authorized to use the borrowed funds to make a loan or extension of credit to one or more third parties.

A “CRA affiliate” of an insured depository institution is any company that is an affiliate of an insured depository institution to the extent, and only to the extent, that the activities of the affiliate were considered by the appropriate Federal banking agency when evaluating the CRA performance of the institution at its most recent CRA examination prior to the agreement. An insured depository institution or affiliate also may designate any company as a CRA affiliate at any time prior to the time a covered agreement is entered into by informing the NGEP that is a party to the agreement of such designation.

A “CRA communication” is any of the following that meet the timing and knowledge requirements of §346.3(b).

1. Any written or oral comment or testimony provided to a Federal banking agency concerning the adequacy of the performance under the CRA of the insured depository institution, any affiliated insured depository institution, or any CRA affiliate.

 - g. In the case of an insured depository institution that is evaluated on the basis of a strategic plan, any element of the strategic plan, as described in 12 CFR 345.27(f) of the CRA regulations.

Examples of actions that are CRA communications may be found in §346.3(c)(1), and examples of actions that are not CRA communication may be found in §346.3(c)(2).

2. each insured depository institution (or subsidiary thereof) or CRA affiliate that makes payments or loans or provides services that are subject to the covered agreement; and
3. any company (other than an insured depository institution or subsidiary thereof) that is a party to the covered agreement.

Disclosure and Reporting of CRA — Related Agreements Examination Objective

Community Contacts

Introduction

This section provides information and procedures for conducting community contact interviews. It broadly addresses a wide variety of subjects to accommodate varying communities and types of institutions. As a result, it is NOT meant to be used in the order presented. Examiners should select those steps and procedures that apply to the unique circumstances of the institution and/or the community.

Objectives

The primary objectives of conducting interviews with local community contacts are to:

- Gather information that might assist in the development of a community profile.
- Determine opportunities for participation by financial institutions in helping to meet local credit needs.
- Understand perceptions on the performance of financial institutions in helping meet local credit needs.
- Provide a context on the community to assist in the evaluation of an institution's CRA performance.

General Guidelines

Coverage and Frequency of Community Contacts

Community contacts typically take the form of personal meetings. Telephone conversations or larger group meetings are permitted as necessary and appropriate. Information from community contacts made by other financial regulatory agencies is maintained in the FDIC's Community Contact Database.

In conjunction with each examination, the FDIC will conduct community contacts in the MSA, county or assessment area(s) that the financial institution in question is serving. Where possible, those community contacts should be conducted early in the examination to help to provide information on the community to assist the examiner in the evaluation of the performance context.

Selection of Community Contacts

The number and nature of contacts will depend upon a variety of factors, including the:

- Complexity of the community.
- Size and type of the institution examined.
- Amount and age of community driven information already available to the examiner.

Treatment of Confidential Information

Confidentiality of Institution Records

Examiners must maintain the confidentiality of any institution's proprietary information. When making community contacts, the examiner should not reveal any confidential information obtained from the institution's files or through discussions with management, or any conclusions drawn about the institution's performance or CRA rating.

Protection of Community Contacts

Maintaining the confidentiality of the community contact's identity, when requested to do so, is essential. Examiners must not reveal the name or other identifying information about a community contact to anyone outside the agency without the contact's express permission, either written or verbal, to do so. Notwithstanding the confidentiality treatment, all community contact forms are shared with the federal financial regulatory agencies.

Compliance Report of Examination and CRA Performance Evaluation

Reporting CRA data

Include in the Compliance Report of Examination and the CRA Performance Evaluation, as appropriate, a discussion of the number and kinds of CRA-related community contacts that were performed and relevant information obtained and used, if any, in the CRA evaluation.

NOTE: Information should be factual. While opinions of contacts may be included when applicable, examiners should refrain from drawing conclusions or making judgments based solely on anecdotal evidence.

Sharing Information

Information Sharing Process

The agencies routinely share information obtained during outreach contacts.

Whenever community contacts are made, the examiner initiating the contact should complete the Community Contact Form in the Community Contact Database and submit it according to Regional Office Policy.

Preparation for the Interview

Before conducting interviews, review relevant background information to identify additional areas of inquiry.

Adequate preparation for the interviews includes:

- Reviewing information on the assessment area(s);
- Selecting community contacts; and
- Structuring the interview.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Community Contacts

Review of Information on Assessment Area(s)

A review of all available background materials prior to the community contact process is vital in developing a working understanding of the community you are about to enter. The nature, extent and age of the information available prior to conducting community contacts influences your objectives for the community contact process. A well developed context also allows for more detailed and in-depth community contact interviews.

Review Process

The examiner should do the following:

1. Assess prevailing economic conditions and demographic characteristics within and near the assessment area(s).

This includes a review of available data on:

- Various population segments within the community;
- Trends in migration;
- Labor and employment characteristics;
- Comparisons to state and county/MSA data; and
- Housing and real estate market statistics.

2. Assess infrastructural and geographic characteristics within the assessment area(s).

This includes a review of:

- Maps;
- Natural areas;
- Major thoroughfares;
- Access to public transportation;
- Locations of low- and moderate-income census tracts;
- Names of specific low- and moderate-income neighborhoods; and
- Proximity of the assessment area(s) to military bases, airport facilities, and metropolitan centers.

TIP: Internal mapping software, information from the financial institution, and information from local planning, transportation, economic development or real estate boards are good sources for possible information.

3. Assess distribution and availability of branch and ATM services especially with regard to low-income areas within the community. Include a review of check cashing facilities, if possible.

TIP: Internal mapping software, if available, can allow the examiner to map these locations.

4. Assess, to the extent information is available, local development issues and priorities in the areas of:
 - Affordable housing;

- Commercial activity; and
- Economic and community development.

A summary of such information may be available from the Community Affairs staff.

5. In addition, the examiner may wish to review previous community contacts for the locality including those from other regulatory agencies.
6. If the examiner is reviewing an MSA, he or she should contact the city's municipality and obtain a copy of its Consolidated Plan ("Conplans"). Conplans list the needs of an MSA as identified and prioritized by its officials.
7. The examiner may also consider obtaining public reports from Multiple Listings Services (MLS) and news articles on local development projects.

Quantitative sources may include:

- Feasibility studies;
- Market analysis; and
- Commercial appraisal reports for local development projects.

TIP: State or local economic development agencies, utility companies, real estate organizations, and universities present in the immediate or surrounding area are often good sources for such material. Refer to the topic "Identify Potential Community Contacts" for additional potential sources for these types of material.

8. Determine the priorities of the community and the opportunities for financial institutions to participate with local governmental and non-profit organizations in the areas of:

- Affordable housing;
- Small business/farm development; and
- Economic and community development.

9. Review the number and nature of government agencies, non-profit and neighborhood organizations that provide programs and resources to the assessment area(s) for these purposes.

TIP: Sources of information for this step include prior community contacts in the area, information on local programs from the institution, and discussions with appropriate agency staff.

10. Based upon information reviewed above, identify areas that require further inquiry through the community contacts process.

For example:

- Are there any significant conflicting pieces of information that may require further investigation in the contact interviews?

- Are there any pieces of quantitative information, such as housing and rental values, that are considerably outdated and need to be verified in the contact interviews?
- Does the data suggest particular areas of “need” in affordable housing, such as housing rehabilitation, multifamily development or single family home purchase that you can investigate further and verify through the contact interviews? Or alternatively, are needs for specific areas of the population, such as housing for the elderly, still unclear and therefore require further study through the contact interviews?
- Does the data suggest particular areas of need in services such as ATMs, branches, bilingual services that can be investigated further and verified through the contact interviews?
- Does the review identify organizations or projects requiring additional information?

Identify Potential Community Contacts

This section discusses the number and types of community contacts that should be made during an examination. It also identifies potential community contacts and provides guidance on the sources of information that are available from them.

Number and Type of Contacts

Identification Process

1. Select contacts that can best provide information on the assessment area(s).
2. Consider the nature of the information you are seeking to complete your analysis of the assessment area(s) and the purpose of the organizations in the assessment area(s).

TIP: Examiners may wish to initially consult or -select organizations on the telephone to determine which can best comment on particular issues

3. Consider the following factors when determining the appropriate number of contacts to make:
 - The nature of any information provided by the institution including information that specifies credit, service or community development needs in the institution’s assessment area(s);
 - The nature of public comments including information that specifies credit, service or community development needs in the institution’s assessment area(s);
 - The amount of community contact information available from other examinations conducted for this area, both in number and substance, and the date the information was gathered;

- The complexity of the community including the size of its population, its geographic breadth, and the diversity of its population; and
- The characteristics of the institution examined.

NOTE: Time constraints can limit the number of contacts that the examiner is able to conduct.

Organization Types

Grassroots Community Groups

Grassroots groups are formed when concerned individuals come together to solve common problems. Groups whose primary aim is to further the objectives of low-income residents are of particular interest. These groups can be difficult to identify because they tend to be smaller neighborhood groups and may not have readily recognizable names.

However, they will often share the following characteristics:

- Low-income representation is evident in policy and implementation aspects of the organization. This may be evident at the board level, in the committee structure, or the day-to-day management;
- Input from low-income residents is clearly sought in functional/program aspects and, information distribution to low-income individuals is a priority. Examples of this include door-to-door surveys and frequent neighborhood meetings; and
- Low-income individuals are encouraged or empowered to solve problems collectively.

Grassroots community groups include the following types of organizations:

- Churches;
- Block clubs;
- Tenants association;
- Low-income advocacy groups;
- Housing or credit counseling programs;
- Senior citizen groups;
- Shelter providers;
- Health clinics; and
- Community network/collaborative groups.

The following types of information are available from these sources:

- Development priorities and concerns of the local low-income populations;
- Available development programs and resources;

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Community Contacts

- Current partnerships and/or development projects in the area; and
- The role of financial institutions in the assessment area(s).

Secondary information available includes completed questionnaires or surveys.

TIP: School boards can update census information by providing demographic information on the makeup of their student body. This information is typically collected annually.

Community-Based Development or Financial Intermediaries

The primary aim of these organizations is typically to increase the economic standard of low-income individuals or areas. Thus they tend to be involved in technical aspects of development such as residential and commercial real estate ventures or financing. Though these groups encourage representation of low-income individuals, they are also likely to have a higher degree of staff or decision-makers that live outside of low-income areas that the organization is serving.

Conducting the Interview

Having determined the groups and/or individuals to be contacted and the information to be solicited from each interview, the examiner must then plan the structure and content of questions prior to the interview. This section provides a sample list of questions that the examiner may wish to consider. The examiner should select and tailor questions from the list of sample questions that would be the most effective for each specific contact.

The questions highlight the type of information that the examiner is seeking through the community contact process. They are meant to serve as a guide to assist the examiner in planning the substance and structure of the interview. Obviously, not all questions will be appropriate to each specific contact. The list is not all inclusive; particular questions may generate significant discussions and examiners are expected to probe and conduct follow-up questions appropriately. Examiners are encouraged to review the entire list before structuring their interview. As examiners gain experience, they are encouraged to engage in discussion with the community contact and not undertake a “question and answer” format.

Background Information on Community Contact

Obtain Background Information

Assessing Opportunities for Financial Institution Participation

The degree to which financial institutions are involved in community development projects or services depends in some part on the extent of other resources and partners available within the community.

Examiners are expected to:

- Obtain information on the availability of resources dedicated to the local credit or development needs that have been identified; and
- Gauge the level of the contact's efforts in approaching local financial institutions and the mechanisms of financing involved, if any.

In addition to any background materials reviewed in the preparation portion of the examination, contacts can provide relevant information on:

- The number and nature of community development or credit-related projects being developed for the benefit of the community;
- The number of organizations or government programs committed to those activities;
- The extent to which partnerships or other forms of coordination are evident in the area;
- The level of resources devoted to these activities; and
- How active these programs or resources are with respect to promoting the credit or banking needs that local representatives or residents have identified.

Assessing Opportunities for Participation

The individual conducting the interview should inform the interviewee that this information will be shared with other regulatory agencies.

Guidance for Full and Limited Scope Community Reinvestment Act Assessment Areas

Introduction

The Interagency Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) Examination Procedures (interagency procedures) provide instructions for examiners to follow when determining which assessment areas(s) should receive a full scope review and provide guidance on how to address assessment areas not selected for full scope review within a CRA performance evaluation. Assessment areas that are not reviewed using the full examination procedures are referred to as limited scope assessment areas.

This document clarifies the guidance provided in the interagency procedures to improve consistency in FDIC CRA examinations. Although Large Institution CRA Examination Procedures were used to develop this guidance, examiners should use this guidance when evaluating small or intermediate small banks and adjust as appropriate. For example, if community development activities are not considered in a small bank evaluation, examiners should not consider such activities in their review.

Selection of Full Scope Assessment Areas

Minimum Requirements

In accordance with the interagency procedures, examiners identify assessment areas for a full scope review where the performance evaluation involves interstate and intrastate institutions with more than one assessment area. A full scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all of the steps outlined in the interagency procedures for an assessment area. For interstate institutions, a minimum of one assessment area from each state, and a minimum of one assessment area from each multistate metropolitan statistical area/metropolitan division (MSA/MD), must be reviewed using the full scope examination procedures.

Consideration of Factors

Examiners review several sources of information when considering which assessment areas receive a full or limited scope review, including prior CRA performance evaluations; available community contact materials; Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) and CRA data; the institution's lending, investment, and service activities, as applicable, by assessment area; the lending of other lenders in those markets; and demographic and economic information from those markets. The interagency procedures provide a list of factors for examiners to consider when selecting full scope assessment areas. It is expected that examiners consider each of these factors in the CRA scoping process. Guidance for each factor from the Large Institution CRA Examination Procedures is provided below.

- a. The lending, investment, and service opportunities in the different assessment areas, particularly areas where the need for bank credit, investments and services is significant;

Examiners should consider readily-available information from sources such as discussions with bank management; a review of demographics and economic conditions; community contacts; other banks' CRA evaluations; and community groups in the area. For example, a review of local community group websites could yield important information on lending, investment, and service opportunities in the area. Assessment areas with greater needs and opportunities should receive greater consideration as full scope reviews.

- b. The level of the institution's lending, investment, and service activity in the different assessment areas, including in low- and moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies designated by the Agencies¹ based on (a) rates of poverty, unemployment, and population loss; or (b) population size, density, and dispersion;²

In addition to the level of lending, investment, and service activity, examiners also should consider significant changes in the level of activity in the different assessment areas since the last performance evaluation. For example, if a particular assessment area has experienced a significant increase in lending since the previous evaluation due to the bank offering a new product that met an identified credit need, that assessment area may receive increased consideration for a full scope review. If the bank has conducted any CRA self-assessments, examiners should consider the results of the assessments and any actions taken by the bank.

- c. The number of other institutions in the different assessment areas and the importance of the institution under examination in serving the different areas, particularly any areas with relatively few other providers of financial services;

Areas where the bank has a high concentration of its activity or maintains high market share should be strongly considered for a full scope review. In evaluating the importance of the institution in the area, examiners are encouraged to consider ¹ The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

² A list of distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies is available on the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) web site at www.ffiec.gov.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Scoping Guidance

summary of deposits, market share data, and CRA and HMDA data to determine the relative impact of the institution in its different assessment areas. The level of an institution's lending activity in a particular assessment area should be weighed against the overall level of lending activity in the area, not solely against the overall lending activity of the subject bank. For example, a relatively small institution may capture a significant share of the deposits or make a significant portion of the HMDA loans in the area. Similarly, a large institution may have a small share of its overall deposits or loans within a particular area but the relative level of deposits and loans in the area may cause it to be a market leader.

- d. Comments and feedback received from community groups and the public regarding the institution's CRA performance;

Comments and feedback received from community groups and the public regarding the institution's CRA performance are an essential factor to consider in the selection of full scope assessment areas. Special attention should be given to assessment area(s) that are the focus of non-frivolous CRA protests and comments about the institution, as well as the institution's response. In the event that affected assessment areas are not selected for a full scope review, examiners should document in the "Scope of Evaluation" section of the performance evaluation their reasons for not selecting the assessment areas for a full scope review. For example, "A CRA comment identified concerns with the bank's activities in seven assessment areas. Of the five assessment areas selected for full scope review, three were referenced in the CRA comment regarding the institution and will provide sufficient information to evaluate concerns raised."

- e. The size of the population;

When considering the size of the population, examiners should consider the number of potential customers within an assessment area relative to other assessment areas. However, examiners should not overlook assessment areas for full scope consideration solely due to small populations.

- f. The existence of apparent anomalies in the reported CRA or HMDA data for any particular assessment area(s);

Where applicable, examiners should consider apparent anomalies in reported CRA or HMDA data for any assessment area. Special attention should be given to assessment areas that are being evaluated for potential redlining or other fair lending risk factors. If a focal point review is under way for an assessment area(s) (e.g., redlining or marketing), examiners are strongly encouraged to select that same area for a full scope CRA review.

- g. The length of time since the assessment area(s) was last examined using a full scope review;

In considering this factor, examiners should give greater weight to selecting established assessment areas that were not recently evaluated with the full scope examination procedures. Conversely, new or recently added (in less than twelve months) assessment areas are typically not weighted as heavily.

- h. The institution's prior CRA performance in different assessment areas;

Examiners should consider the institution's prior CRA performance in different assessment areas. Assessment areas where the institution has shown weak performance in the past should receive greater consideration for full scope review relative to those assessment areas with reasonable performance at the previous evaluation.

- i. Examiners' knowledge of the same or similar assessment areas; and Examiners should consider their knowledge of the same or similar assessment areas in the selection of full scope assessment areas. After considering all the other factors, an examiner's knowledge of an assessment area(s) may influence his/her decision whether to select that or a similar assessment area for full scope review. For example, if an examiner was aware of concerns (minimal mortgage lending) within a specific assessment area, an examiner might be more likely to select that assessment area for full scope consideration.

- j. Issues raised in CRA performance evaluations of other institutions and prior community contacts in the institution's assessment areas or similar assessment areas.

Examiners are encouraged to consider issues in CRA performance evaluations of other institutions and prior community contacts in the institution's assessment areas or similar assessment areas. Known concerns in particular assessment areas may be relevant to assessing the current institution's CRA performance. These assessment areas may receive greater consideration for full scope review.

Assessment Areas Infrequently Reviewed under Full Scope Examination Procedures

Due to resources, examiners may not be able to review all assessment areas using the full scope examination procedures at each examination. After considering the factors discussed above, it is possible that certain assessment areas will be infrequently selected for a full scope review. In an effort to ensure that an institution's CRA performance in these infrequently reviewed assessment areas is regularly evaluated, examiners must conduct one additional full scope assessment area review unless examiners already selected an assessment area that did not receive a full scope review during the previous two CRA evaluations based on the factors discussed above. If an additional full scope assessment area must be selected, it would be selected at random from the pool of assessment areas that have not received a full scope review during the previous two CRA evaluations.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Scoping Guidance

For example, an institution has seven assessment areas which have not been evaluated using full scope procedures for the last two CRA evaluation periods. The examiner must randomly select one of these seven for full scope review unless one of the assessment areas already selected for review using the factors above had not been assessed using full scope procedures at the previous two CRA evaluations. Random selection ensures that any infrequently reviewed assessment area has an equal chance for full scope review. This encourages institutions to consider the needs of all their assessment areas, rather than concentrating on those most likely to be reviewed as full scope.

Documentation

Full Scope Assessment Areas

Justification for the selection of an assessment area for a full scope review should be documented in the “Scope of the Examination” section of the CRA performance evaluation. For example, “Bank of Anytown has 12 assessment areas within Anystate. Assessment areas A and B were chosen for full scope review due to the greatest level of lending, deposits, and branches in these assessment areas. Assessment area C was chosen due to a CRA comment that raised issues with the bank’s lending in this assessment area. During the scope of the examination, it was identified that some of Bank of Anytown’s assessment areas were not reviewed using the full scope examination procedures in the last two examinations. In an effort to ensure that an institution’s CRA performance in these infrequently reviewed assessment areas is regularly evaluated, assessment area D was selected at random from a list of those assessment areas infrequently reviewed under the full scope examination procedures.”

Limited Scope Assessment Areas

Examiners should follow the interagency procedures to document their conclusions regarding limited scope assessment areas. Specific templates are provided in the procedures, and examiners should use the prescribed language to present their conclusions. The relevant portion of the “Ratings” section from the Large Institution CRA Examination Procedures is summarized below:

1. Where one or more assessment areas were examined using full scope procedures within an MSA or nonmetropolitan portion of the state:

Examiners should ensure that performance in the assessment area(s) not examined using the full scope procedures is consistent with the conclusions based on the assessment area(s) examined using full scope procedures within that same MSA or nonmetropolitan portion of the state.

In these situations, examiners should select one of the following options for inclusion in the performance evaluation:

- a. The institution's [lending, investment, service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] is consistent with the institution's [lending, investment, service] performance in the assessment areas within [the MSA/nonmetropolitan portion of the state] that were reviewed using the full scope examination procedures.
 - b. The institution's [lending/investment/service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] [exceeds/is below] the [lending/investment/service] performance in the assessment areas within [the MSA/nonmetropolitan portion of the state] that were reviewed using the full scope examination procedures; however, it does not change the conclusion for the [MSA/nonmetropolitan portion of the state].
2. Where no assessment area was examined using full scope procedures within an MSA or nonmetropolitan portion of the state

Examiners should form a conclusion regarding the institution's lending, investment, and service performance in the assessment area(s). When there are several assessment areas in the MSA, or the nonmetropolitan portion of the state, form a conclusion regarding the institution's performance in the MSA, or the nonmetropolitan portion of the state. Determine the relative significance of the institution's performance in each assessment area within the MSA, or the nonmetropolitan portion of the state, by considering:

- The significance of the institution's lending, qualified investments, and lending-related services in each compared to the institution's overall activities.
- Demographic and economic conditions in each.

Using this information, examiners should select one of the following options for inclusion in the performance evaluation:

- a. The institution's [lending, investment, service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] is consistent with the institution's [lending, investment, service] performance [overall/in the state].
- b. The institution's [lending/investment/service] performance in [the assessment area/these assessment areas] [exceeds/is below] the [lending/investment/service] performance for the [institution/state], however, it does not change the [institution's/state] rating.

As discussed above, limited scope assessment areas that are inconsistent with lending/ investment/service performance in the applicable area should be documented in accordance with the interagency procedures. In cases where an examiner considers the performance in a limited scope reviewed assessment area to be materially inconsistent with the lending/investment/service performance in the applicable area, examiners should expand their review to full scope examination procedures for that assessment area. Materially inconsistent differences are those that are considered significant enough to affect the overall rating for a rated area (i.e., state) of the institution.

Assessment areas not examined under the full scope procedures are essential to the performance evaluation of an institution under the CRA. The primary difference between full scope and limited scope assessment area reviews is the inclusion of qualitative factors and presentation of full performance context in the performance evaluation for full scope assessment areas. As discussed in the interagency procedures, for limited scope assessment area(s), examiners should review sufficient information about each assessment area to ascertain whether performance is consistent with the institution's performance at the rated area level (state or multi-state MSA). In most cases, a review of the demographics and the quantitative information regarding the lending, investment, and service activity will be sufficient to make this evaluation. However, examiners should be aware of any significant differences pertaining to products, services, and investments along with any key or unique performance context information within the limited scope assessment area.

Additionally, according to the CRA, the FDIC is required to provide conclusions for each assessment factor identified in the regulation. Each conclusion must be supported by facts and data and, in turn, support overall conclusions for each assessment area. The FDIC must also provide a rating for each state or multistate MSA area and a description of the basis for the rating.

Examiners should document the facts and data supporting conclusions within the CRA performance evaluation (CRA PE) for limited scope assessment area reviews. In some cases, the information provided for limited scope assessment areas may be brief. For example, quantitative analysis could be presented in a brief narrative in the performance evaluation (for example, a few sentences) versus a full table. At a minimum, the following should be included either in a table format or in narrative under the appropriate heading in the CRA PE:

- Lending:
 - Volume/activity
 - Borrower & Geographic Distribution
 - Community development lending (numbers & dollars only)
 - The products used for evaluation in the assessment area if different than those reviewed in full scope areas.
- Investments
 - Volume/activity (including trends)
- Services
 - Branch and ATM distribution
 - Branch openings and closings
 - Community development services (quantitative)
- Any key or unique performance context information (if applicable)

An example of how to document a limited scope assessment area within the CRA PE is attached to this guidance. Additional facts and data should be presented in tables or in narrative, as needed.

For reference, below is a chart that highlights the differences between a full and limited scope review in the CRA Performance Evaluation for a large institution.

METROPOLITAN AREA USING LIMITED SCOPE EXAMINATION PROCEDURES

DESCRIPTION OF INSTITUTION'S OPERATIONS IN ASSESSMENT AREA

The assessment area contains 4 of the bank's 28 branch offices and 7 of the bank's 35 ATMs. This assessment area accounted for 11.8 percent of total loans, 12.6 percent of total deposits, and 14.0 percent of the bank's branches.

The below table shows demographic information for the assessment area:

Demographic Information of the Assessment Area

The assessment area's median housing value is $212,638 and the median family income is $56,571, which makes housing affordability a challenge in this assessment area. The unemployment rate for the county encompassing this assessment area (Any County) for the 3rd quarter of 2015 is 8.4 percent, which is above the state average of 5.9 percent. The assessment area's largest employers include Air Force Base, Someone's Farms, Whose Farms, ABC Production Company, ARB Incorporated, State Farm Insurance Company, Sun World Incorporated, and Chevron Texaco Corporation.

CONCLUSIONS ON PERFORMANCE CRITERIA IN ASSESSMENT AREA

LENDING TEST

The institution's Lending Test performance in the assessment area is consistent with the performance in the full scope assessment area. For 2013, 2014, and YTD 2015, AnyBank originated 165 small business loans totaling approximately $51.6 million, 24 home mortgage loans totaling approximately $6.3 million, and 15 small farm loans totaling approximately $4.1 million. Tables demonstrating the bank's geographic and borrower distribution performance for this lending are in Appendix D.

AnyBank's community development lending (CDL) performance in the assessment area is consistent with its performance in the full scope assessment area. During the review period, the institution originated five CDLs totaling $10.5 million within the assessment area.

INVESTMENT TEST

AnyBank's Investment Test performance in the assessment area is below the bank's performance in the full scope assessment area. While the performance was considered, it does not change the conclusions for the state. During the review period, the institution purchased two qualified investments totaling $100,000 within the assessment area, and made $5,000 in qualified donations.

SERVICE TEST

AnyBank's Service Test performance in the assessment area is consistent with its performance in the full scope assessment area. Products, services, and business hours are similar to those offered within the full scope assessment area. Employees provided 230 hours of financial and technical assistance to various qualified community development organizations in this assessment area.

CRA Data Review Timeframes and Sampling Guidelines

Introduction

This section provides guidelines to assist examiners in determining the timeframes within which to review loan products and other activities for a CRA evaluation, and how such information should be presented in the Performance Evaluation. Additionally, this section discusses when and how to select a sample of loans for review.

Background

Large institutions are required to collect and report CRA data, whereas small institutions (including intermediate small banks) are not required to collect data for CRA evaluation purposes. In addition, certain institutions are required to collect and report home mortgage loans for purposes of the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA). Other institutions may choose to provide data regarding their loans, including the census tract locations and borrower incomes or business revenues, similar to the data requirement for large institutions and HMDA reporters.

Examiners use an institution's data to analyze:

- Loans inside and outside an institution's assessment area(s);
- Loans in low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies in an assessment area;
- Home mortgage or consumer loans to low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income borrowers, and/or small business or small farm loans to businesses/farms of different revenue sizes within an assessment area; and
- Community development activities.

Review Timeframes

Lending Data that is Collected/Reported

For institutions required to report HMDA and/or CRA data, and in other cases when the institution collects but is not required to report the data (collected/reported), examiners must validate the accuracy of the data. For all loan types, the HMDA validation procedures should be followed, including for the scope of validation. When validating loan data for CRA purposes only, examiners should validate the necessary fields needed for CRA analysis which include loan type, loan amount, location, and income/revenue.

If loan data is considered accurate, all collected/reported data for each full calendar year since the previous CRA examination should be analyzed. This would include the year of the last examination. There is an exception for small institutions, which typically have a 48-72 month evaluation cycle (timeframe from date of previous CRA evaluation to date of current CRA evaluation). In this instance, examiners should analyze the most recent two full calendar years of HMDA and/or collected CRA data. In all cases, a separate analysis should be conducted for each year. It would only be appropriate to analyze partial calendar year data when there is a short evaluation cycle, such as a previous adverse CRA rating or a de novo institution. In these cases, a separate analysis should be conducted for each partial year.

Presentation of Data

At a minimum, examiners should present the latest full calendar year of data for which aggregate data is available for geographic distribution and borrower profile. Presentation of additional years of data may be necessary to support conclusions and rating(s) and should be considered in cases such as a borderline overall rating, a significant overall ratings change, an unfavorable rating at any level, lending anomalies between years, CRA complaints or comments, or upon the request of bank management. Examiners should use their judgment when and for which assessment area(s) additional years of data should be presented. If only one year of data is being presented, the scope comment should make it clear that all applicable years were analyzed. Examiners should provide the rationale for including only one year, such as consistent performance between years.

Even though each assessment area must be analyzed separately, in some cases the presentation of multiple assessment areas may be combined within the CRA performance evaluation. For example, in instances where two or more assessment areas consist of non-contiguous portions in the non-metropolitan area of one state and no anomalies are present, these assessment areas may be combined for presentation purposes. This also applies in cases where there are multiple assessment areas in the same MSA or CSA. These guidelines apply to all institutions, not just institutions that have collected CRA and/or HMDA data.

Lending Data that is Not Collected/Reported

For institutions where data is not collected for a particular product under review and sampling must be performed, the analysis should cover the lending activity in the previous full calendar year that is prior to the start of the examination. Reasons to analyze and present additional years of data are a borderline overall rating, a significant overall ratings change, an unfavorable rating at any level, or CRA complaints. In addition, examiners should confirm with bank management that a one-year sample of a loan product would be representative of the entire evaluation period. In cases where more than one year will be analyzed, a separate analysis should be conducted for each year.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Timeframes and Sampling Guidelines

Exceptions may exist to analyzing data by full calendar year, particularly for institutions that purge their loan system of paid off loans. In situations where the paid off loans are purged and using the previous full calendar year data would not capture the bank's actual lending performance, a universe comprised of the most recent 12 months may be appropriate. Examiners should understand the nature of the bank's lending when making this determination. If analyzing data that encompasses more than one calendar year, examiners should use the most recent available demographic data. If changes occur between years (for example, the release of American Community Survey Census data every five years), it is important to see how geographies are affected. In these situations, it would not be appropriate to combine lending between years if there are significant changes to the geographies because geographic and demographic data are different for each year.

Community Development Data

Community development data (loans, investments, and services) should be reviewed for the entire CRA evaluation cycle. The extent of validation that the activities qualify will depend on the number of activities. With large volumes, often the process of validation will include reviewing the process the bank goes through to qualify a particular activity and validating a sample following the CRA Sample Size table. If the number of activities is smaller, often the entire universe should be reviewed to ensure the activities qualify as community development.

Sampling Guidelines

Small institutions (including intermediate small institutions) are not required to collect small business and small farm data for CRA evaluation purposes. In addition, not all institutions collect and report home mortgage loan data for purposes of HMDA. In these cases, it may be impractical or impossible to review all loan files when evaluating a particular loan product, especially if there is a large volume of lending. Examiners should use sampling to draw conclusions from a random subset of a universe for each loan type and apply such conclusions for the population as a whole. Generally, samples are selected on a bankwide basis.

Examiners should also sample at large institutions if data for a specific loan product has not been collected. For example, if a large institution has chosen not to collect consumer loan information, yet it comprises over 50 percent of the bank's lending by both dollar and number, an examiner should review consumer loans and would need to sample.

In instances where collected data is found to be invalid, and the bank is unable to correct the data prior to the examination, examiners will need to rely on sampling to evaluate the institution's CRA performance. In these cases, examiners should separately sample and analyze the most recent two full calendar years.

Generally, if the data is readily available, examiners should validate and geocode the entire universe of loans for the loan products and timeframe under review. Examiners should analyze this data for the assessment area concentration, geographic distribution, and borrower profile lending criteria. When sufficient information is not available, or addresses do not geocode, examiners should use judgment in determining when sampling will have to be conducted. Using readily available data for analysis can result in a different number of loans analyzed for different criteria. One example is where borrower income is not available on the electronic data download and the geographic data is available and valid. In this case, the universe for assessment area concentration would be all loans originated or purchased during the review timeframe; the universe for the geographic distribution would be the number of loans inside the assessment area; and sampling would have to be conducted for borrower profile. The differences in number of loans analyzed should be adequately explained in the Scope of Examination comments. In these instances, examiners should use the review timeframes noted for lending data that is not collected/reported for all of the lending criteria for that product.

Sampling Process

For small institutions (including intermediate small institutions), examiners should determine major product lines from which to select a sample. Examiners should take into account factors such as total volume of lending, the institution's business strategy, and its areas of expertise when selecting product lines to sample. Initially, examiners may select for review from among the same categories of loans that are to be used when reviewing large institutions (home mortgage, small business loans, small farm loans, and consumer loans).

In order to determine the number of loans for the sample (known as the sample size), examiners should determine the total number of loans in the universe for each product category by year.

NOTE: The universe of loans is defined as the total number of loans, both originated and purchased by the institution in a calendar year, for a major product category. This should include outstanding and paid-off loans, including renewals. The definition of the loan category should dictate the universe of that lending product (i.e., small business loans are $1 million or less).

Next, examiners should determine the number of loans to be sampled for each year and product category by using the Sample Size Table below. Generally, sampling should be conducted at the institution level and not for each assessment area.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Timeframes and Sampling Guidelines

CRA Sample Size Table
Number of Orig- inations or Purchases	Sample Size Based on Precision Level
	5%	10%
≤30	Entire Universe
31-50	42*	30
51-75	59*	36
76-100	73	41
101-150	97	47
151-200	115	51
201-300	143	55
301-400	162	58
401-500	176	60
501-1,000	213	63
> 1,000	257	67

*or the entire universe if less than the sample size

The table indicates the sample size based on the universe of loans for each product at a 90 percent confidence level and the desired precision level. Initially, examiners should select samples based on a 10 percent precision level. This means that there is a 90 percent chance that the results from the sample will be within 10 percentage points of the true proportion for the criterion evaluated.

For loan products requiring further investigation or greater scrutiny for any reason, a larger sample may be necessary because examiners may need results with a higher degree of reliability. Examples of circumstances when increased sample sizes should be chosen include: the receipt of CRA comments or complaints or if management states the selected sample is not indicative of its true lending performance. Examiners should use their judgment to determine which sample size to use based on the initial scoping of the examination and subsequent findings onsite.

In addition, although examiners may draw conclusions based on a statistically valid sample, they may choose to consider a larger sample in cases where the institution has several as-essment areas in order to avoid the result that only a few loans are selected from certain assessment areas in the sample. Increasing the level of precision will result in an expanded sample. Examiners may increase the sample to include additional loans up to the 5 percent precision level when a larger sample is necessary to ensure a sufficient number of loans per assessment area for geographic and borrower analysis. Alternatively, a sample could be chosen for each assessment area using a 10 percent precision.

Regardless of sampling requirements, samples must be large enough to analyze and to draw meaningful conclusions. Therefore, analyze the entire universe when the number of loans is less than or equal to 30.

Sample Selection from Electronic Data Download or Loan Trial

Once the number of loans in the sample is determined, examiners should select loans from the financial institution's electronic data download or a loan trial as opposed to making a general request for loans and allowing bank management to select the loans for review. If an electronic data download is not available, examiners should select the sample using the financial institution's loan trial. The Sampling Job Aid explains the procedures for selecting loan samples from the electronic data download or loan trial.

Examiners should follow random selection methods as compared to those based on judgmental sampling. The use of random selection methods removes the potential for bias in results associated with the loan selection process.

Data to Collect when Sampling

Once the loans for each sample are identified, examiners should record relevant loan information. Data for each loan should include, at a minimum:

- Institution's internal loan ID number;
- Loan type;
- Loan dollar amount;
- Location – In cases where the census tract of the loan is not readily available, examiners are expected to geocode the loans;
- For the home mortgage and consumer loans sampled, the borrower income that was used to approve the loan; and
- For the small business and small farm loans sampled, the business's or farm's gross annual revenue. When income information used in the analysis of the applicant is not readily apparent and tax returns are present, this information can usually be obtained from the "gross receipts;"

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Timeframes and Sampling Guidelines

or “gross farm rental income” and “gross income” fields, respectively.

When data is missing, examiners should attempt to obtain this information through discussions with institution personnel. Obtaining information through these discussions can significantly reduce the number of records in the sample with “missing data” and thereby increase the validity of each sample.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

Interagency Questions and Answers Regarding Community Reinvestment

Background

The OCC, Board, and FDIC (Agencies) implement the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) (12 U.S.C. 2901 et seq.) through their CRA regulations. See 12 CFR parts 25, 195, 228, and 345. The CRA is designed to encourage regulated financial institutions to help meet the credit needs of their entire communities. The CRA regulations establish the framework and criteria by which the Agencies assess an institution's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its community, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, consistent with safe and sound operations. The regulations provide different evaluation standards for institutions of different asset sizes and types.

The Agencies publish the Questions and Answers¹ to provide guidance on the interpretation and application of the CRA regulations to agency personnel, financial institutions, and the public. The Agencies first published the Questions and Answers under the auspices of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) in 1996 (61 FR 54647). The Questions and Answers were most recently updated in July 2016 (81 FR 48505).

The Questions and Answers are grouped by the provision of the CRA regulations that they discuss, are presented in the same order as the regulatory provisions, and employ an abbreviated method of citing to the regulations. For example, for thrifts, the small savings association performance standards appear at 12 CFR 195.26; for national banks, the small bank performance standards appear at 12 CFR 25.26; for Federal Reserve System member banks supervised by the Board, they appear at 12 CFR 228.26; and for state nonmember banks, they appear at 12 CFR 345.26. Accordingly, the citation would be to 12 CFR __.26. Each Q&A is numbered using a system that consists of the regulatory citation and a number, connected by a dash. For example, the first Q&A addressing 12 CFR __.26 would be identified as § __.26 – 1.

Although a particular Q&A may provide guidance on one regulatory provision, e.g., 12 CFR __.22, which relates to the lending test applicable to large institutions, its content may also be applicable to, for example, small institutions, which are evaluated pursuant to small institution performance standards found at 12 CFR __.26. Thus, readers with a particular interest in small institution issues, for example, should review Q&As relevant to other financial institutions as well.

Interagency Questions and Answers Regarding Community Reinvestment

§ __.11--Authority, purposes, and scope

§ __.11(c) Scope

§§ __.11(c)(3) & 195.11(c)(2) Certain special purpose institutions

§§ __.11(c)(3) & 195.11(c)(2) – 1: Is the list of special purpose institutions exclusive?

A1. No, there may be other examples of special purpose institutions. These institutions engage in specialized activities that do not involve granting credit to the public in the ordinary course of business. Special purpose institutions typically serve as correspondent banks, trust companies, or clearing agents or engage only in specialized services, such as cash management controlled disbursement services. A financial institution, however, does not become a special purpose institution merely by ceasing to make loans and, instead, making investments and providing other retail banking services.

§§ __.11(c)(3) & 195.11(c)(2) – 2: To be a special purpose institution, must an institution limit its activities in its charter?

A2. No. A special purpose institution may, but is not required to, limit the scope of its activities in its charter, articles of association, or other corporate organizational documents. An institution that does not have legal limitations on its activities, but has voluntarily limited its activities, however, would no longer be exempt from Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) requirements if it subsequently engaged in activities that involve granting credit to the public in the ordinary course of business. An institution that believes it is exempt from CRA as a special purpose institution should seek confirmation of this status from its supervisory Agency.

§ __.12--Definitions

§ __.12(a) Affiliate

§ __.12(a) – 1: Does the definition of “affiliate” include subsidiaries of an institution?

A1. Yes, “affiliate” includes any company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with another company. An institution's subsidiary is controlled by the institution and is, therefore, an affiliate.

§ __.12(f) Branch

§ __.12(f) – 1: Do the definitions of “branch,” “automated teller machine (ATM),” and “remote service facility (RSF)” include mobile branches, ATMs, and RSFs?

¹ Throughout this document, “Questions and Answers” refers to the “Interagency Questions and Answers Regarding Community Reinvestment” in its entirety; “Q&A” refers to an individual question and answer within the Questions and Answers.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

A1. Yes. Staffed mobile offices that are authorized as branches are considered “branches,” and mobile ATMs and RSFs are considered “ATMs” and “RSFs.”

§ __.12(f) – 2: Are loan production offices (LPO) branches for purposes of the CRA?

A2. LPOs and other offices are not “branches” unless they are authorized as branches of the institution through the regulatory approval process of the institution’s supervisory Agency.

§ __.12(g) Community development

§ __.12(g) – 1: Are community development activities limited to those that promote economic development?

A1. No. Although the definition of “community development” includes activities that promote economic development by financing small businesses or farms, the rule does not limit community development loans and services and qualified investments to those activities. Community development also includes community- or tribal-based child care, educational, health, social services, or workforce development or job training programs targeted to low- or moderate-income persons, affordable housing for low- or moderate-income individuals, and activities that revitalize or stabilize low- or moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or underserved or distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies.

§ __.12(g) – 2: Must a community development activity occur inside a low- or moderate-income area, designated disaster area, or underserved or distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income area in order for an institution to receive CRA consideration for the activity?

A2. No. Community development includes activities, regardless of their location, that provide affordable housing for, or community services targeted to, low- or moderate-income individuals and activities that promote economic development by financing small businesses and farms. Activities that stabilize or revitalize particular low- or moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or underserved or distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income areas (including by creating, retaining, or improving jobs for low- or moderate-income persons) also qualify as community development, even if the activities are not located in these areas. One example is financing a supermarket that serves as an anchor store in a small strip mall located at the edge of a middle-income area, if the mall stabilizes the adjacent low-income community by providing needed shopping services that are not otherwise available in the low-income community.

§ __.12(g) – 3: Does the regulation provide flexibility in considering performance in high-cost areas?

A3. Yes, the flexibility of the performance standards allows examiners to account in their evaluations for conditions in high-cost areas. Examiners consider lending and services to individuals and geographies of all income levels and businesses of all sizes and revenues. In addition, the flexibility in the requirement that community development loans, community development services, and qualified investments have as their “primary” purpose community development allows examiners to account for conditions in high-cost areas. For example, examiners could take into account the fact that activities address a credit shortage among middle-income people or areas caused by the disproportionately high cost of building, maintaining or acquiring a house when determining whether an institution’s loan to or investment in an organization that funds affordable housing for middle-income people or areas, as well as low- and moderate-income people or areas, has as its primary purpose community development. See also Q&A § __.12(h) – 8 for more information on “primary purpose.”

§ __.12(g) – 4: Can examples of community development activities discussed in a particular Q&A also apply to other types of community development activities not specifically discussed in that Q&A if they have a similar community development purpose?

A4. Yes. The Interagency Questions and Answers Regarding Community Reinvestment (Questions and Answers) provide examples of particular activities that may receive consideration as community development activities. Because a particular Q&A often describes a single type of community development activity, such as a community development loan, the corresponding examples are of community development loans. However, because community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services all must have a primary purpose of community development, a qualified investment or community development service that supports a community development purpose similar to the activity described in the context of the community development loan would likely receive consideration under the applicable test. The same would be true if the community development activity described in a particular Q&A were a qualified investment or community development service. For example, Q&A § __.12(h) – 1 provides an example of a community development loan to a not-for-profit organization supporting primarily low- or moderate-income housing needs. Similarly, a grant to the same not-for-profit organization would be considered a qualified investment or technical assistance, such as writing a grant proposal for the not-for-profit organization, would be considered as a community development service. Further if a financial institution engaged in all of these activities, each would be considered under the applicable test. See Q&A § __.23(b) – 1.

Moreover, lists of examples included throughout the Questions and Answers are not exhaustive. A Q&A may include examples to demonstrate activities that may qualify under that Q&A, but the examples are not the only activities that might qualify. Financial institutions may submit information about activities they believe meet the definition of community development loan, qualified investment, or community development service to examiners for consideration.

§ __.12(g)(1) Affordable housing (including multifamily rental housing) for low- or moderate-income individuals

§ __.12(g)(1) – 1: When determining whether a project is “affordable housing for low- or moderate-income individuals,” thereby meeting the definition of “community development,” will it be sufficient to use a formula that relates the cost of ownership, rental, or borrowing to the income levels in the area as the only factor, regardless of whether the users, likely users, or beneficiaries of that affordable housing are low- or moderate-income individuals?

A1. The concept of “affordable housing” for low- or moderate-income individuals does hinge on whether low- or moderate-income individuals benefit, or are likely to benefit, from the housing. It would be inappropriate to give consideration to a project that exclusively or predominately houses families that are not low- or moderate-income simply because the rents or housing prices are set according to a particular formula.

For projects that do not yet have occupants, and for which the income of the potential occupants cannot be determined in advance, or in other projects where the income of occupants cannot be verified, examiners will review factors such as demographic, economic, and market data to determine the likelihood that the housing will “primarily” accommodate low- or moderate-income individuals. For example, examiners may look at median rents of the assessment area and the project; the median home value of either the assessment area, low- or moderate-income geographies or the project; the low- or moderate-income population in the area of the project; or the past performance record of the organization(s) undertaking the project. Further, such a project could receive consideration if its express, bona fide intent, as stated, for example, in a prospectus, loan proposal, or community action plan, is community development.

§ __.12(g)(2) Community services targeted to low- or moderate-income individuals

§ __.12(g)(2) – 1: Community development includes community services targeted to low- or moderate-income individuals. What are examples of ways that an institution could determine that community services are offered to low- or moderate-income individuals?

A1. Examples of ways in which an institution could determine that community services are targeted to low- or moderate-income persons include, but are not limited to:

- The community service is targeted to the clients of a nonprofit organization that has a defined mission of serving low- and moderate-income persons, or, because of government grants, for example, is limited to offering services only to low- or moderate-income persons.

- The community service is offered by a nonprofit organization that is located in and serves a low- or moderate-income geography.
- The community service is conducted in a low- or moderate-income area and targeted to the residents of the area.
- The community service is a clearly defined program that benefits primarily low- or moderate-income persons, even if it is provided by an entity that offers other programs that serve individuals of all income levels.
- The community service is offered at a workplace to workers who are low- and moderate-income, based on readily available data for the average wage for workers in that particular occupation or industry (see, e.g., <http://www.bls.gov/bls/blswage.htm> (Bureau of Labor Statistics)).
- The community service is provided to students or their families from a school at which the majority of students qualify for free or reduced-price meals under the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s National School Lunch Program.
- The community service is targeted to individuals who receive or are eligible to receive Medicaid.
- The community service is provided to recipients of government assistance programs that have income qualifications equivalent to, or stricter than, the definitions of low- and moderate-income as defined by the CRA Regulations. Examples include U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development’s section 8, 202, 515, and 811 programs or U.S. Department of Agriculture’s section 514, 516, and Supplemental Nutrition Assistance programs.

§ __.12(g)(3) Activities that promote economic development by financing businesses or farms that meet certain size eligibility standards

§ __.12(g)(3) – 1: “Community development” includes activities that promote economic development by financing businesses or farms that meet certain size eligibility standards. Are all activities that finance businesses and farms that meet the size eligibility standards considered to be community development?

A1. No. The concept of “community development” under 12 CFR __.12(g)(3) involves both a “size” test and a “purpose” test that clarify what economic development activities are considered under CRA. An institution’s loan, investment, or service meets the “size” test if it finances, either directly, or through an intermediary, businesses or farms that either meet the size eligibility standards of the Small Business Administration’s Development Company (SBDC) or Small Business Investment Company (SBIC) programs, or have gross annual revenues of $1 million or less. For consideration under the “size test,” the term financing is considered broadly and includes technical assistance that readies a business that meets the size eligibility standards to obtain financing. To meet the “purpose test,” the institution’s loan, investment, or service must promote economic development. These activities are considered to promote economic development if they support

- permanent job creation, retention, and/or improvement
 - for low- or moderate-income persons;
 - in low- or moderate-income geographies;
 - in areas targeted for redevelopment by Federal, state, local, or tribal governments;
 - by financing intermediaries that lend to, invest in, or provide technical assistance to start-ups or recently formed small businesses or small farms; or
 - through technical assistance or supportive services for small businesses or farms, such as shared space, technology, or administrative assistance; or
- Federal, state, local, or tribal economic development initiatives that include provisions for creating or improving access by low- or moderate-income persons to jobs or to job training or workforce development programs.

The agencies will presume that any loan or service to or investment in a SBDC, SBIC, Rural Business Investment Company, New Markets Venture Capital Company, New Markets Tax Credit-eligible Community Development Entity, or Community Development Financial Institution that finances small businesses or small farms, promotes economic development. (See also Q&As § __.42(b)(2) – 2, § __.12(h) – 2, and § __.12(h) – 3 for more information about which loans may be considered community development loans.)

Examiners will employ appropriate flexibility in reviewing any information provided by a financial institution that reasonably demonstrates that the purpose, mandate, or function of the activity meets the “purpose test.” Examiners will also consider the qualitative aspects of performance. For example, activities will be considered more responsive to community needs if a majority of jobs created, retained, and/or improved benefit low- or moderate-income individuals.

§ __.12(g)(4) Activities that revitalize or stabilize certain geographies

§ __.12(g)(4) – 1: Is the definition of “community development” applicable to all institutions?

A1. The definition of “community development” is applicable to all institutions, regardless of a particular institution’s size or the performance criteria under which it is evaluated.

§ __.12(g)(4) – 2: Will activities that provide housing for middle-income and upper-income persons qualify for favorable consideration as community development activities when they help to revitalize or stabilize a distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geography or designated disaster areas?

A2. An activity that provides housing for middle- or upper-income individuals qualifies as an activity that revitalizes or stabilizes a distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income geography or a designated disaster area if the housing directly helps to revitalize or stabilize the community by attracting new, or retaining existing, businesses or residents and, in the case of a designated disaster area, is related to disaster recovery. The Agencies generally will consider all activities that revitalize or stabilize a distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income geography or designated disaster area, but will give greater weight to those activities that are most responsive to community needs, including needs of low- or moderate-income individuals or neighborhoods. Thus, for example, a loan solely to develop middle- or upper-income housing in a community in need of low- and moderate-income housing would be given very little weight if there is only a short-term benefit to low- and moderate-income individuals in the community through the creation of temporary construction jobs. (Except in connection with intermediate small institutions, a housing-related loan is not evaluated as a “community development loan” if it has been reported or collected by the institution or its affiliate as a home mortgage loan, unless it is a multifamily dwelling loan. See 12 CFR __.12(h)(2)(i) and Q&As § __.12(h) – 2 and § __.12(h) – 3.) An activity will be presumed to revitalize or stabilize such a geography or area if the activity is consistent with a bona fide government revitalization or stabilization plan or disaster recovery plan. See Q&As § __.12(g)(4)(i) – 1 and § __.12(h) – 5.

In underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies, activities that provide housing for middle- and upper-income individuals may qualify as activities that revitalize or stabilize such underserved areas if the activities also provide housing for low- or moderate-income individuals. For example, a loan to build a mixed-income housing development that provides housing for middle- and upper-income individuals in an underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geography would receive positive consideration if it also provides housing for low- or moderate-income individuals.

§ __.12(g)(4)(i) Activities that revitalize or stabilize low- or moderate-income geographies

§ __.12(g)(4)(i) – 1: What activities are considered to “revitalize or stabilize” a low- or moderate-income geography, and how are those activities considered?

A1. Activities that revitalize or stabilize a low- or moderate-income geography are activities that help to attract new, or retain existing, businesses or residents. Examiners will presume that an activity revitalizes or stabilizes a low- or moderate-income geography if the activity has been approved by the governing board of an Enterprise Community or Empowerment Zone (designated pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 1391) and is consistent with the board’s strategic plan. They will make the same presumption if the activity has received similar official designation as consistent with a Federal, state, local, or tribal government plan for the revitalization or stabilization of the low- or moderate-income geography. For example, foreclosure prevention programs with the objective of providing affordable, sustainable, long-term loan restructurings or modifications to homeowners in low- or moderate-income geographies, consistent with safe and sound banking practices, may help to revitalize or stabilize those geographies.

To determine whether other activities revitalize or stabilize a low- or moderate-income geography, examiners will evaluate the activity's actual impact on the geography, if information about this is available. If not, examiners will determine whether the activity is consistent with the community's formal or informal plans for the revitalization and stabilization of the low- or moderate-income geography. For more information on what activities revitalize or stabilize a low- or moderate-income geography, see Q&As § __.12(g) – 2 and § __.12(h) – 5.

§ __.12(g)(4)(ii) Activities that revitalize or stabilize designated disaster areas

§ __.12(g)(4)(ii) – 1: What is a “designated disaster area” and how long does it last?

A1. A “designated disaster area” is a major disaster area designated by the Federal government. Such disaster designations include, in particular, Major Disaster Declarations administered by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) (<http://www.fema.gov>), but excludes counties designated to receive only FEMA Public Assistance Emergency Work Category A (Debris Removal) and/or Category B (Emergency Protective Measures).

Examiners will consider institution activities related to disaster recovery that revitalize or stabilize a designated disaster area for 36 months following the date of designation. Where there is a demonstrable community need to extend the period for recognizing revitalization or stabilization activities in a particular disaster area to assist in long-term recovery efforts, this time period may be extended.

§ __.12(g)(4)(ii) – 2: What activities are considered to “revitalize or stabilize” a designated disaster area, and how are those activities considered?

A2. The Agencies generally will consider an activity to revitalize or stabilize a designated disaster area if it helps to attract new, or retain existing, businesses or residents and is related to disaster recovery. An activity will be presumed to revitalize or stabilize the area if the activity is consistent with a bona fide government revitalization or stabilization plan or disaster recovery plan. The Agencies generally will consider all activities relating to disaster recovery that revitalize or stabilize a designated disaster area, but will give greater weight to those activities that are most responsive to community needs, including the needs of low- or moderate-income individuals or neighborhoods. Qualifying activities may include, for example, providing financing to help retain businesses in the area that employ local residents, including low- and moderate-income individuals; providing financing to attract a major new employer that will create long-term job opportunities, including for low- and moderate-income individuals; providing financing or other assistance for essential community-wide infrastructure, community services, and rebuilding needs; and activities that provide housing, financial assistance, and services to individuals in designated disaster areas and to individuals who have been displaced from those areas, including low- and moderate-income individuals (see, e.g., Q&As § __.12(i) – 3; § __.12(t) – 4; § __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 4; § __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 5; and § __.24(d)(3) – 1).

§ __.12(g)(4)(iii) Activities that revitalize or stabilize distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies

§ __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 1: What criteria are used to identify distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan, middle-income geographies?

A1. Eligible nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies are those designated by the Agencies as being in distress or that could have difficulty meeting essential community needs (underserved). A particular geography could be designated as both distressed and underserved. As defined in 12 CFR __.12(k), a geography is a census tract delineated by the U.S. Bureau of the Census.

A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as distressed if it is in a county that meets one or more of the following triggers: (1) an unemployment rate of at least 1.5 times the national average, (2) a poverty rate of 20 percent or more, or (3) a population loss of 10 percent or more between the previous and most recent decennial census or a net migration loss of five percent or more over the five-year period preceding the most recent census.

A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as underserved if it meets criteria for population size, density, and dispersion that indicate the area's population is sufficiently small, thin, and distant from a population center that the tract is likely to have difficulty financing the fixed costs of meeting essential community needs. The Agencies will use as the basis for these designations the “urban influence codes,” numbered “7,” “10,” “11,” and “12,” maintained by the Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The Agencies publish data source information along with the list of eligible nonmetropolitan census tracts on the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) Web site (<http://www.ffiec.gov>).

§ __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 2: How often will the Agencies update the list of designated distressed and underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies?

A2. The Agencies will review and update the list annually. The list is published on the FFIEC Web site (<http://www.ffiec.gov>).

To the extent that changes to the designated census tracts occur, the Agencies have determined to adopt a one-year

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

“lag period.” This lag period will be in effect for the 12 months immediately following the date when a census tract that was designated as distressed or underserved is removed from the designated list. Revitalization or stabilization activities undertaken during the lag period will receive consideration as community development activities if they would have been considered to have a primary purpose of community development if the census tract in which they were located were still designated as distressed or underserved.

§ __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 3: What activities are considered to “revitalize or stabilize” a distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income geography, and how are those activities evaluated?

A3. An activity revitalizes or stabilizes a distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income geography if it helps to attract new, or retain existing, businesses or residents. An activity will be presumed to revitalize or stabilize the area if the activity is consistent with a bona fide government revitalization or stabilization plan. The Agencies generally will consider all activities that revitalize or stabilize a distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income geography, but will give greater weight to those activities that are most responsive to community needs, including needs of low- or moderate-income individuals or neighborhoods. Qualifying activities may include, for example, providing financing to attract a major new employer that will create long-term job opportunities, including for low- and moderate-income individuals, and activities that provide financing or other assistance for essential infrastructure or facilities necessary to attract or retain businesses or residents. See Q&As § __.12(g)(4)(i) – 1 and § __.12(h) – 5.

§ __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 4: What activities are considered to “revitalize or stabilize” an underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geography, and how are those activities evaluated?

A4. The regulation provides that activities revitalize or stabilize an underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geography if they help to meet essential community needs, including needs of low- or moderate-income individuals. Activities, such as financing for the construction, expansion, improvement, maintenance, or operation of essential infrastructure or facilities for health services, education, public safety, public services, industrial parks, affordable housing, or communication services, will be evaluated under these criteria to determine if they qualify for revitalization or stabilization consideration. Examples of the types of projects that qualify as meeting essential community needs, including needs of low- or moderate-income individuals, would be

- a new or expanded hospital that serves the entire county, including low- and moderate-income residents;
- an industrial park for businesses whose employees include low- or moderate-income individuals;
- a new or rehabilitated sewer line that serves community residents, including low- or moderate-income residents;
- a mixed-income housing development that includes affordable housing for low- and moderate-income families;

- a renovated elementary school that serves children from the community, including children from low- and moderate-income families;
- a new or rehabilitated communications infrastructure, such as broadband internet service, that serves the community, including low- and moderate-income residents; or
- a new or rehabilitated flood control measure, such as a levee or storm drain, that serves the community, including low- and moderate-income residents.

Other activities in the area, such as financing a project to build a sewer line spur that connects services to a middle- or upper-income housing development while bypassing a low- or moderate-income development that also needs the sewer services, generally would not qualify for revitalization or stabilization consideration in geographies designated as underserved. If an underserved geography is also designated as a distressed or a disaster area, additional activities may be considered to revitalize or stabilize the geography, as explained in Q&As § __.12(g)(4)(ii) – 2 and § __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 3.

§ __.12(h) Community development loan

§ __.12(h) – 1: What are examples of community development loans?

A1. Examples of community development loans include, but are not limited to, loans to

- borrowers for affordable housing rehabilitation and construction, including construction and permanent financing of multifamily rental property serving low- and moderate-income persons;
- not-for-profit organizations serving primarily low- and moderate-income housing or other community development needs;
- borrowers to construct or rehabilitate community facilities that are located in low- and moderate-income areas or that serve primarily low- and moderate-income individuals;
- financial intermediaries including Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFI), New Markets Tax Credit-eligible Community Development Entities, Community Development Corporations (CDC), minority- and women-owned financial institutions, community loan funds or pools, and low-income or community development credit unions that primarily lend or facilitate lending to promote community development;
- local, state, and tribal governments for community development activities;
- borrowers to finance environmental clean-up or redevelopment of an industrial site as part of an effort to revitalize the low- or moderate-income community in which the property is located;
- businesses, in an amount greater than $1 million, when made as part of the Small Business Administration’s 504 Certified Development Company program; and
- borrowers to finance renewable energy, energy-efficient,

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

or water conservation equipment or projects that support the development, rehabilitation, improvement, or maintenance of affordable housing or community facilities, such as a health clinic that provides services for low- or moderate-income individuals. For example, the benefit to low- or moderate-income individuals may result in either a reduction in a tenant's utility cost or the cost of providing utilities to common areas in an affordable housing development. Further, a renewable energy facility may be located on-site or off-site, so long as the benefit from the energy generated is provided to an affordable housing project or a community facility that has a community development purpose.

The rehabilitation and construction of affordable housing or community facilities, referred to above, may include the abatement or remediation of, or other actions to correct, environmental hazards, such as lead-based paint, asbestos, mold, or radon that are present in the housing, facilities, or site.

§ __.12(h) – 2: If a retail institution that is not required to report under the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) makes affordable home mortgage loans that would be HMDA-reportable home mortgage loans if it were a reporting institution, or if a small institution that is not required to collect and report loan data under the CRA makes small business and small farm loans and consumer loans that would be collected and/or reported if the institution were a large institution, may the institution have these loans considered as community development loans?

A2. No. Although small institutions are not required to report or collect information on small business and small farm loans and consumer loans, and some institutions are not required to report information about their home mortgage loans under HMDA, if these institutions are retail institutions, the Agencies will consider in their CRA evaluations the institutions' originations and purchases of loans that would have been collected or reported as small business, small farm, consumer or home mortgage loans, had the institution been a collecting and reporting institution under the CRA or the HMDA. Therefore, these loans will not be considered as community development loans, unless the small institution is an intermediate small institution (see Q&A § __.12(h) – 3). Multifamily dwelling loans, however, may be considered as community development loans as well as home mortgage loans. See also Q&A § __.42(b)(2) – 2.

§ __.12(h) – 3: May an intermediate small institution that is not subject to HMDA reporting have home mortgage loans considered as community development loans? Similarly, may an intermediate small institution have small business and small farm loans and consumer loans considered as community development loans?

A3. Yes. In instances where intermediate small institutions are not required to report HMDA or small business or small farm loans, these loans may be considered, at the institution's option, as community development loans, provided they meet the regulatory definition of "community development." If small business or small farm loan data have been reported to the Agencies to preserve the option to be evaluated as a large institution, but the institution ultimately chooses to be evaluated under the intermediate small institution examination standards, then the institution would continue to have the option to have such loans considered as community development loans. However, if the institution opts to be evaluated under the lending, investment, and service tests applicable to large institutions, it may not choose to have home mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loans considered as community development loans.

Loans other than multifamily dwelling loans may not be considered under both the lending test and the community development test for intermediate small institutions. Thus, if an institution elects to have certain loans considered under the community development test, those loans may not also be considered under the lending test, and would be excluded from the lending test analysis.

Intermediate small institutions may choose individual loans within their portfolio for community development consideration. Examiners will evaluate an intermediate small institution's community development activities within the context of the responsiveness of the activity to the community development needs of the institution's assessment area(s).

§ __.12(h) – 4: Do secured credit cards or other credit card programs targeted to low- or moderate-income individuals qualify as community development loans?

A4. No. Credit cards issued to low- or moderate-income individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures, whether as part of a program targeted to such individuals or otherwise, do not qualify as community development loans because they do not have as their primary purpose any of the activities included in the definition of "community development."

§ __.12(h) – 5: The regulation indicates that community development includes "activities that revitalize or stabilize low- or moderate-income geographies." Do all loans in a low- to moderate-income geography have a stabilizing effect?

A5. No. Some loans may provide only indirect or short-term benefits to low- or moderate-income individuals in a low- or moderate-income geography. These loans are not considered to have a community development purpose. For example, a loan for upper-income housing in a low- or moderate-income area is not considered to have a community development purpose simply because of the indirect benefit to low- or moderate-income persons from construction jobs or the increase in the local tax base that supports enhanced services to low- and moderate-income area residents. On the other hand, a loan for an anchor business in a low- or moderate-income area (or a nearby area) that employs or serves residents of the area and, thus, stabilizes the area, may be considered to have a community development purpose. For example, in a low-income area, a loan for a pharmacy that employs and serves residents of the area promotes community development.

§ __.12(h) – 6: Must there be some immediate or direct benefit to the institution’s assessment area(s) to satisfy the regulations’ requirement that qualified investments and community development loans or services benefit an institution’s assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution’s assessment area(s)?

A6. No. The regulations recognize that community development organizations and programs are efficient and effective ways for institutions to promote community development. These organizations and programs often operate on a statewide or even multistate basis. Therefore, an institution’s activity is considered a community development loan or service or a qualified investment if it supports an organization or activity that covers an area that is larger than, but includes, the institution’s assessment area(s). The institution’s assessment area(s) need not receive an immediate or direct benefit from the institution’s participation in the organization or activity, provided that the purpose, mandate, or function of the organization or activity includes serving geographies or individuals located within the institution’s assessment area(s).

In addition, a retail institution will receive consideration for certain other community development activities. These activities must benefit geographies or individuals located somewhere within a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution’s assessment area(s). Examiners will consider these activities even if they will not benefit the institution’s assessment area(s), as long as the institution has been responsive to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s).

§ __.12(h) – 7: What is meant by the term “regional area”?

A7. A “regional area” may be an intrastate area or a multistate area that includes the financial institution’s assessment area(s). Regional areas typically have some geographic, demographic, and/or economic interdependencies and may conform to commonly accepted delineations, such as “the tri-county area” or the “mid-Atlantic states.” Regions are often defined by the geographic scope and specific purpose of a community development organization or initiative.

§ __.12(h) – 8: What is meant by the term “primary purpose” as that term is used to define what constitutes a community development loan, a qualified investment, or a community development service?

A8. A loan, investment, or service has as its primary purpose community development when it is designed for the express purpose of revitalizing or stabilizing low- or moderate-income areas, designated disaster areas, or underserved or distressed nonmetropolitan middle-income areas, providing affordable housing for, or community services targeted to, low- or moderate-income persons, or promoting economic development by financing small businesses or farms that meet the requirements set forth in 12 CFR __.12(g). To determine whether an activity is designed for an express community development purpose, the agencies apply one of two approaches. First, if a majority of the dollars or beneficiaries of the activity are identifiable to one or more of the enumerated community development purposes, then the activity will be considered to possess the requisite primary purpose. Alternatively, where the measurable portion of any benefit bestowed or dollars applied to the community development purpose is less than a majority of the entire activity’s benefits or dollar value, then the activity may still be considered to possess the requisite primary purpose, and the institution may receive CRA consideration for the entire activity, if (1) the express, bona fide intent of the activity, as stated, for example, in a prospectus, loan proposal, or community action plan, is primarily one or more of the enumerated community development purposes; (2) the activity is specifically structured (given any relevant market or legal constraints or performance context factors) to achieve the expressed community development purpose; and (3) the activity accomplishes, or is reasonably certain to accomplish, the community development purpose involved.

Generally, a loan, investment, or service will be determined to have a “primary purpose” of community development only if it meets the criteria described above. However, an activity involving the provision of affordable housing also may be deemed to have a “primary purpose” of community development in certain other limited circumstances in which these criteria have not been met. Specifically, activities related to the provision of mixed-income housing, such as in connection with a development that has a mixed-income housing component or an affordable housing set-aside required by Federal, state, or local government, also would be eligible for consideration as an activity that has a “primary purpose” of community development at the election of the institution. In such cases, an institution may receive pro rata consideration for the portion of such activities that helps to provide affordable housing to low- or moderate-income individuals. For example, if an institution makes a $10 million loan to finance a mixed-income housing development in which 10 percent of the units will be set aside as affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals, the institution may elect to treat $1 million of such loan as a community development loan. In other words, the pro rata dollar amount of the total activity will be based on the percentage of units set-aside for affordable housing for low- or moderate-income individuals.

The fact that an activity provides indirect or short-term benefits to low- or moderate-income persons does not make the activity community development, nor does the mere presence of such indirect or short-term benefits constitute a primary purpose of community development. Financial institutions that want examiners to consider certain activities should be prepared to demonstrate the activities’ qualifications.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.12(i) Community development service

§ __.12(i) – 1: In addition to meeting the definition of “community development” in the regulation, community development services must also be related to the provision of financial services. What is meant by “provision of financial services”?

A1. Providing financial services means providing services of the type generally provided by the financial services industry. Providing financial services often involves informing community members about how to get or use credit or otherwise providing credit services or information to the community. For example, service on the board of directors of an organization that promotes credit availability or finances affordable housing is related to the provision of financial services. Providing technical assistance about financial services to community-based groups, local or tribal government agencies, or intermediaries that help to meet the credit needs of low- and moderate-income individuals or small businesses and farms is also providing financial services. By contrast, activities that do not take advantage of the employees’ financial expertise, such as neighborhood cleanups, do not involve the provision of financial services.

§ __.12(i) – 2: Are personal charitable activities provided by an institution’s employees or directors outside the ordinary course of their employment considered community development services?

A2. No. Services must be provided as a representative of the institution. For example, if a financial institution’s director, on her own time and not as a representative of the institution, volunteers one evening a week at a local community development corporation’s financial counseling program, the institution may not consider this activity a community development service.

§ __.12(i) – 3: What are examples of community development services?

A3. Examples of community development services include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Providing technical assistance on financial matters to nonprofit, tribal, or government organizations serving low- and moderate-income housing or economic revitalization and development needs;
- Providing technical assistance on financial matters to small businesses or community development organizations, including organizations and individuals who apply for loans or grants under the Federal Home Loan Banks’ (FHLB) Affordable Housing Program;
- Lending employees to provide financial services for organizations facilitating affordable housing construction and rehabilitation or development of affordable housing;
- Providing credit counseling, home-buyer and home maintenance counseling, financial planning or other financial services education to promote community development and affordable housing, including credit counseling to assist low-or moderate-income borrowers in avoiding foreclosure on their homes;

- Establishing school savings programs or developing or teaching financial education or literacy curricula for low- or moderate-income individuals; and
- Providing foreclosure prevention programs to low- or moderate-income homeowners who are facing foreclosure on their primary residence with the objective of providing affordable, sustainable, long-term loan modifications and restructurings.

Examples of technical assistance activities that are related to the provision of financial services and that might be provided to community development organizations include

- serving on the board of directors;
- serving on a loan review committee;
- developing loan application and underwriting standards;
- developing loan-processing systems;
- developing secondary market vehicles or programs;
- assisting in marketing financial services, including development of advertising and promotions, publications, workshops and conferences;
- furnishing financial services training for staff and management;
- contributing accounting/bookkeeping services;
- assisting in fund raising, including soliciting or arranging investments; and
- providing services reflecting a financial institution’s employees’ areas of expertise at the institution, such as human resources, information technology, and legal services.

Refer to Q&A § __.24(a) – 1 for information about how retail services are evaluated under the large institution service test.

§ __.12(j) Consumer loan

§ __.12(j) – 1: Are home equity loans considered “consumer loans”?

A1. Home equity loans made for purposes other than home purchase, home improvement, or refinancing home purchase or home improvement loans are consumer loans if they are extended to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures.

§ __.12(j) – 2: May a home equity line of credit be considered a “consumer loan” even if part of the line is for home improvement purposes?

A2. If the predominant purpose of the line is home improvement, the line may only be reported under HMDA and may not be considered a consumer loan. However, the full amount of the line may be considered a “consumer loan” if its predominant purpose is for household, family, or other personal expenditures, and to a lesser extent home improvement, and the full amount of the line has not been reported under HMDA. This is the case even though there may be “double counting” because part of the line may also have been reported under HMDA.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.12(j) – 3: How should an institution collect or report information on loans the proceeds of which will be used for multiple purposes?

A3. If an institution makes a single loan or provides a line of credit to a customer to be used for both consumer and small business purposes, consistent with the instructions for the Consolidated Reports of Condition and Income (Call Report), the institution should determine the major (predominant) component of the loan or the credit line and collect or report the entire loan or credit line in accordance with the regulation’s specifications for that loan type.

§ __.12(l) Home mortgage loan

§ __.12(l) – 1: Does the term “home mortgage loan” include loans other than “home purchase loans”?

A1. Yes. “Home mortgage loan” includes “home improvement loan,” “home purchase loan,” and “refinancing,” as defined in the HMDA regulation, Regulation C, 12 CFR part 1003. This definition also includes multifamily (five-or-more families) dwelling loans, and loans for the purchase of manufactured homes. See also Q&A § __.22(a)(2) – 7.

§ __.12(l) – 2: Some financial institutions broker home mortgage loans. They typically take the borrower’s application and perform other settlement activities; however, they do not make the credit decision. The broker institutions may also initially fund these mortgage loans, then immediately assign them to another lender. Because the broker institution does not make the credit decision, under Regulation C (HMDA), they do not record the loans on their HMDA loan application registers (HMDA-LAR), even if they fund the loans. May an institution receive any consideration under CRA for its home mortgage loan brokerage activities?

A2. Yes. A financial institution that funds home mortgage loans but immediately assigns the loans to the lender that made the credit decisions may present information about these loans to examiners for consideration under the lending test as “other loan data.” Under Regulation C, the broker institution does not record the loans on its HMDA-LAR because it does not make the credit decisions, even if it funds the loans. An institution electing to have these home mortgage loans considered must maintain information about all of the home mortgage loans that it has funded in this way. Examiners will consider these other loan data using the same criteria by which home mortgage loans originated or purchased by an institution are evaluated.

Institutions that do not provide funding but merely take applications and provide settlement services for another lender that makes the credit decisions will receive consideration for this service as a retail banking service. Examiners will consider an institution’s mortgage brokerage services when evaluating the range of services provided to low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income geographies and the degree to which the services are tailored to meet the needs of those geographies. Alternatively, an institution’s mortgage brokerage service may be considered a community development service if the primary purpose of the service is community development. An institution wishing to have its mortgage brokerage service considered as a community development service must provide sufficient information to substantiate that its primary purpose is community development and to establish the extent of the services provided.

§ __.12(m) Income level

§ __.12(m) – 1: Where do institutions find income level data for geographies and individuals?

A1. The median family income (MFI) levels for geographies, i.e., census tracts, are calculated using income data from the U.S. Census Bureau’s American Community Survey (ACS) and geographic definitions from the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), and are updated approximately every five years. Geographic income data, along with detailed information about the FFIEC’s calculation of geographic MFI data, are available on the FFIEC Web site at <http://www.ffiec.gov/cra.htm>.

The income levels for individuals are calculated annually by the FFIEC using geographic definitions from the OMB, income data from the ACS, and the Consumer Price Index from the Congressional Budget Office. Individual MFI data for metropolitan statistical areas (MSA) and statewide nonmetropolitan areas, along with detailed information about the FFIEC’s calculation of individual MFI data, are available on the FFIEC Web site at <http://www.ffiec.gov/cra.htm>.

§ __.12(n) Limited purpose institution

§ __.12(n) – 1: What constitutes a “narrow product line” in the definition of “limited purpose institution”?

A1. An institution offers a narrow product line by limiting its lending activities to a product line other than a traditional retail product line required to be evaluated under the lending test (i.e., home mortgage, small business, and small farm loans). Thus, an institution engaged only in making credit card or motor vehicle loans offers a narrow product line, while an institution limiting its lending activities to home mortgages is not offering a narrow product line.

§ __.12(n) – 2: What factors will the Agencies consider to determine whether an institution that, if limited purpose, makes loans outside a narrow product line, or, if wholesale, engages in retail lending, will lose its limited purpose or wholesale designation because of too much other lending?

A2. Wholesale institutions may engage in some retail lending without losing their designation if this activity is incidental and done on an accommodation basis. Similarly, limited purpose institutions continue to meet the narrow product line requirement if they provide other types of loans on an infrequent basis. In reviewing other lending activities by these institutions, the Agencies will consider the following factors:

- Is the retail lending provided as an incident to the institution's wholesale lending?
- Are the retail loans provided as an accommodation to the institution's wholesale customers?
- Are the other types of loans made only infrequently to the limited purpose institution's customers?
- Does only an insignificant portion of the institution's total assets and income result from the other lending?
- How significant a role does the institution play in providing that type(s) of loan(s) in the institution's assessment area(s)?
- Does the institution hold itself out as offering that type(s) of loan(s)?
- Does the lending test or the community development test present a more accurate picture of the institution's CRA performance?

§ __.12(n) – 3: Do “niche institutions” qualify as limited purpose (or wholesale) institutions?

A3. Generally, no. Institutions that are in the business of lending to the public, but specialize in certain types of retail loans (for example, home mortgage or small business loans) to certain types of borrowers (for example, to high-end income level customers or to corporations or partnerships of licensed professional practitioners) (“niche institutions”) generally would not qualify as limited purpose (or wholesale) institutions.

§ __.12(t) Qualified investment

§ __.12(t) – 1: Does the CRA regulation provide authority for institutions to make investments?

A1. No. The CRA regulation does not provide authority for institutions to make investments that are not otherwise allowed by Federal law.

§ __.12(t) – 2: Are mortgage-backed securities or municipal bonds “qualified investments”?

A2. As a general rule, mortgage-backed securities and municipal bonds are not qualified investments because they do not have as their primary purpose community development, as defined in the CRA regulations. Nonetheless, mortgage-backed securities or municipal bonds designed primarily to finance community development generally are qualified investments. Municipal bonds or other securities with a primary purpose of community development need not be housing-related. For example, a bond to fund a community facility or park or to provide sewage services as part of a plan to redevelop a low-income neighborhood is a qualified investment. Certain municipal bonds in underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies may also be qualified investments. See Q&A § __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 4. Housing-related bonds or securities must primarily address affordable housing (including multifamily rental housing) needs of low- or moderate-income individuals in order to qualify. See also Q&A § __.23(b) – 2.

§ __.12(t) – 3: Are FHLB stocks or unpaid dividends and membership reserves with the Federal Reserve Banks “qualified investments”?

A3. No. FHLB stocks or unpaid dividends, and membership reserves with the Federal Reserve Banks do not have a sufficient connection to community development to be qualified investments. However, FHLB member institutions may receive CRA consideration as a community development service for technical assistance they provide on behalf of applicants and recipients of funding from the FHLB's Affordable Housing Program. See Q&A § __.12(i) – 3.

§ __.12(t) – 4: What are examples of qualified investments?

A4. Examples of qualified investments include, but are not limited to, investments, grants, deposits, or shares in or to:

- Financial intermediaries (including CDFIs, New Markets Tax Credit-eligible Community Development Entities, CDCs, minority- and women-owned financial institutions, community loan funds, and low-income or community development credit unions) that primarily lend or facilitate lending in low- and moderate-income areas or to low- and moderate-income individuals in order to promote community development, such as a CDFI that promotes economic development on an Indian reservation;
- Organizations engaged in affordable housing rehabilitation and construction, including multifamily rental housing;
- Organizations, including, for example, SBICs, specialized SBICs, and Rural Business Investment Companies (RBIC) that promote economic development by financing small businesses;
- Community development venture capital companies that promote economic development by financing small businesses;
- Facilities that promote community development by providing community services for low- and moderate-income individuals, such as youth programs, homeless centers, soup kitchens, health care facilities, battered women's centers, and alcohol and drug recovery centers;
- Projects eligible for low-income housing tax credits;
- State and municipal obligations, such as revenue bonds, that specifically support affordable housing or other community development;
- Not-for-profit organizations serving low- and moderate-income housing or other community development needs, such as counseling for credit, home-ownership, home maintenance, and other financial literacy programs; and
- Organizations supporting activities essential to the capacity of low- and moderate-income individuals or geographies to utilize credit or to sustain economic development, such as, for example, day care operations and job training programs or workforce development programs that enable low- or moderate-income individuals to work.

§ __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 3; § __.12(g)(4)(iii) – 4.

§ __.12(t) – 5: Will an institution receive consideration for charitable contributions as “qualified investments”?

A5. Yes, provided they have as their primary purpose community development as defined in the regulations. A charitable contribution, whether in cash or an in-kind contribution of property, is included in the term “grant.” A qualified investment is not disqualified because an institution receives favorable treatment for it (for example, as a tax deduction or credit) under the Internal Revenue Code.

§ __.12(t) – 6: An institution makes or participates in a community development loan. The institution provided the loan at below-market interest rates or “bought down” the interest rate to the borrower. Is the lost income resulting from the lower interest rate or buy-down a qualified investment?

A6. No. The Agencies will, however, consider the responsiveness, innovativeness, and complexity of the community development loan within the bounds of safe and sound banking practices.

§ __.12(t) – 7: Will the Agencies consider as a qualified investment the wages or other compensation of an employee or director who provides assistance to a community development organization on behalf of the institution?

A7. No. However, the Agencies will consider donated labor of employees or directors of a financial institution as a community development service if the activity meets the regulatory definition of “community development service.”

§ __.12(t) – 8: When evaluating a qualified investment, what consideration will be given for prior-period investments?

A8. When evaluating an institution’s qualified investment record, examiners will consider investments that were made prior to the current examination, but that are still outstanding. Qualitative factors will affect the weight given to both current period and outstanding prior-period qualified investments. For example, a prior-period outstanding investment with a multi-year impact that addresses assessment area community development needs may receive more consideration than a current period investment of a comparable amount that is less responsive to area community development needs.

§ __.12(t) – 9: How do examiners evaluate loans or investments to organizations that, in turn, invest in instruments that do not have a community development purpose, and use only the income, or a portion of the income, from those investments to support their community development purpose?

A9. Examiners will give quantitative consideration for the dollar amount of funds that benefit an organization or activity that has a primary purpose of community development. If an institution invests in (or lends to) an organization that, in turn, invests those funds in instruments that do not have as their primary purpose community development, such as Treasury securities, and uses only the income, or a portion of the income, from those investments to support the organization’s community development purposes, the Agencies will consider only the amount of the investment income used to benefit the organization or activity that has a community development purpose for CRA purposes. Examiners will, however, provide consideration for such instruments when the organization invests solely as a means of securing capital for leveraging purposes, securing additional financing, or in order to generate a return with minimal risk until funds can be deployed toward the originally intended community development activity. The organization must express a bona fide intent to deploy the funds from investments and loans in a manner that primarily serves a community development purpose in order for the institution to receive consideration under the applicable test.

§ __.12(u) Small institution

§ __.12(u) – 1: How are Federal and state branch assets of a foreign bank calculated for purposes of the CRA?

A1. A Federal or state branch of a foreign bank is considered a small institution if the Federal or state branch has assets less than the asset threshold delineated in 12 CFR __.12(u)(1) for small institutions.

§ __.12(u)(2) Small institution adjustment

§ __.12(u)(2) – 1: How often will the asset size thresholds for small institutions and intermediate small institutions be changed, and how will these adjustments be communicated?

A1. The asset size thresholds for “small institutions” and “intermediate small institutions” will be adjusted annually based on changes to the Consumer Price Index. More specifically, the dollar thresholds will be adjusted annually based on the year-to-year change in the average of the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers, not seasonally adjusted for each 12-month period ending in November, with rounding to the nearest million. Any changes in the asset size thresholds will be published in the Federal Register. Historical and current asset-size threshold information may be found on the FFIEC’s Web site at <http://www.ffiec.gov/cra>.

§ __.12(v) Small business loan

§ __.12(v) – 1: Are loans to nonprofit organizations considered small business loans or are they considered community development loans?

A1. To be considered a small business loan, a loan must meet the definition of “loans to small businesses” in the instructions in the Call Report. In general, a loan to a nonprofit organization, for business or farm purposes, where the loan is secured by nonfarm nonresidential property and the original amount of the loan is $1 million or less, if a business loan, or $500,000 or less, if a farm loan, would be reported in the Call Report as a small business or small farm loan. If a loan to a nonprofit organization is reportable as a small business or small farm loan, it cannot also be considered as a community development loan, except by a wholesale or limited purpose institution. Loans to nonprofit organizations that are not small business or small farm loans for Call Report purposes may be considered as community development loans if they meet the regulatory definition of “community development.”

§ __.12(v) – 2: Are loans secured by commercial real estate considered small business loans?

A2. Yes, depending on their principal amount. Small business loans include loans secured by “nonfarm nonresidential properties,” as defined in the Call Report, in amounts of $1 million or less.

§ __.12(v) – 3: Are loans secured by nonfarm residential real estate to finance small businesses “small business loans”?

A3. Typically not. Loans secured by nonfarm residential real estate that are used to finance small businesses are not included as “small business” loans for Call Report purposes unless the security interest in the nonfarm residential real estate is taken only as an abundance of caution. (See Call Report Glossary definition of “Loan Secured by Real Estate.”) The Agencies recognize that many small businesses are financed by loans that would not have been made or would have been made on less favorable terms had they not been secured by residential real estate. If these loans promote community development, as defined in the regulation, they may be considered as community development loans. Otherwise, at an institution’s option, the institution may collect and maintain data separately concerning these loans and request that the data be considered in its CRA evaluation as “Other Secured Lines/Loans for Purposes of Small Business.” See also Q&A § __.22(a)(2) – 7.

§ __.12(v) – 4: Are credit cards issued to small businesses considered “small business loans”?

A4. Credit cards issued to a small business or to individuals to be used, with the institution’s knowledge, as business accounts are small business loans if they meet the definitional requirements in the Call Report instructions.

§ __.12(x) Wholesale institution

§ __.12(x) – 1: What factors will the Agencies consider in determining whether an institution is in the business of extending home mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loans to retail customers?

A1. The Agencies will consider whether

- the institution holds itself out to the retail public as providing such loans.
- the institution’s revenues from extending such loans are significant when compared to its overall operations, including off-balance sheet activities.

A wholesale institution may make some retail loans without losing its wholesale designation as described above in Q&A § __.12(n) – 2.

§ __.21--Performance tests, standards, and ratings, in general

§ __.21(a) Performance tests and standards

§ __.21(a) – 1: How will examiners apply the performance criteria?

A1. Examiners will apply the performance criteria reasonably and fairly, in accord with the regulations, the examination procedures, and this guidance. In doing so, examiners will disregard efforts by an institution to manipulate business operations or present information in an artificial light that does not accurately reflect an institution’s overall record of lending performance.

§ __.21(a) – 2: Are all community development activities weighted equally by examiners?

A2. No. Examiners will consider the responsiveness to credit and community development needs, as well as the innovativeness and complexity, if applicable, of an institution’s community development lending, qualified investments, and community development services. These criteria include consideration of the degree to which they serve as a catalyst for other community development activities. The criteria are designed to add a qualitative element to the evaluation of an institution’s performance. (“Innovativeness” and “complexity” are not factors in the community development test applicable to intermediate small institutions.)

§ __.21(a) – 3: “Responsiveness” to credit and community development needs is either a criterion or otherwise a consideration in all of the performance tests. How do examiners evaluate whether a financial institution has been “responsive” to credit and community development needs?

A3. There are three important factors that examiners consider when evaluating responsiveness: quantity, quality, and performance context. Examiners evaluate the volume and type of an institution’s activities, i.e., retail and community development loans and services and qualified investments, as a first step in evaluating the institution’s responsiveness to credit and community development needs. In addition, an assessment of “responsiveness” encompasses the qualitative aspects of performance, including the effectiveness of the activities. For example, some community development activities require specialized expertise or effort on the part of the institution or provide a benefit to the community that would not otherwise be made available. In some cases, a smaller loan may have more benefit to a community than a larger loan. In other words, when evaluated qualitatively, some activities are more responsive than others. Activities are more responsive if they are successful in meeting identified credit and community development needs. For example, investing in a community development organization that specializes in originating home mortgage loans to low- or moderate-income individuals would be considered more responsive than an investment of the same amount in a single-family mortgage-backed security in which the majority of the loans are to low- or moderate-income borrowers. Although both of these activities may receive consideration as a qualified investment, the former example would be considered to be more responsive than the latter.

Examiners evaluate the responsiveness of an institution's activities to credit and community development needs in light of the institution's performance context. That is, examiners consider the institution's capacity, its business strategy, the needs of the community, and the opportunities for lending, investments, and services in the community. To inform their assessment, examiners may consider information about credit and community development needs and opportunities from many sources, including

- demographic and other information compiled by local, state, and Federal government entities;
- public comments received by the Agency, for example, in response to its publication of its planned examination schedule;
- information from community leaders or organizations;
- studies and reports from academic institutions and other research bodies;
- consumer complaint information; and
- any relevant information provided to examiners by the financial institution that is maintained by the institution in its ordinary course of business.

Responsiveness to community development needs and opportunities in an institution's assessment area(s) is also a key consideration when an institution plans to engage in community development activities that benefit areas outside of its assessment area(s). Q&A § __.12(h) – 6 states that an institution will receive consideration for activities that benefit geographies or individuals located somewhere within a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution's assessment area(s) even if they will not benefit the institution's assessment area(s), as long as the institution has been responsive to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s). When considering whether an institution has been responsive to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s), examiners will consider all of the institution's community development activities in its assessment area(s). Examiners will also consider as responsive to assessment area needs community development activities that support an organization or activity that covers an area that is larger than, but includes, the institution's assessment area(s). This is true if the purpose, mandate, or function of the organization or activity includes serving geographies or individuals located within the institution's assessment area(s), even though the institution's assessment area(s) did not receive an immediate or direct benefit from the institution's participation in the organization or activity. For example, suppose an institution were to invest in a statewide community development fund that was organized with the purpose of providing community development loans throughout the state in which the institution is located. Examiners would consider this investment when evaluating the institution's responsiveness to community development needs and opportunities in its assessment area(s) even if the fund had not provided a loan within the institution's assessment area(s).

§ __.21(a) – 4: What is meant by “innovativeness”?

A4. “Innovativeness” is one of several qualitative considerations under the lending, investment, and service tests. The community development test for wholesale and limited purpose institutions similarly considers “innovative” loans, investments, and services in the evaluation of performance. Under the CRA regulations, all innovative practices or activities will be considered when an institution implements meaningful improvements to products, services, or delivery systems that respond more effectively to customer and community needs, particularly those segments enumerated in the definition of community development.

Institutions should not innovate simply to meet this criterion of the applicable test, particularly if, for example, existing products, services, or delivery systems effectively address the needs of all segments of the community. See Q&A § __.28 – 1. Innovative activities are especially meaningful when they emphasize serving, for example, low- or moderate-income consumers or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies in new or more effective ways. Innovativeness may also include products, services, or delivery systems already present in the assessment area by institutions that are not leaders in innovation—due, for example, to the lack of available financial resources or technological expertise—when they subsequently introduce those products, services, or delivery systems to their low- or moderate-income customers or segments of consumers or markets not previously served. Practices that cease to be innovative may still receive qualitative consideration for being flexible, complex, or responsive.

§ __.21(b) Performance context

§ __.21(b) – 1: What is the performance context?

A1. The performance context is a broad range of economic, demographic, and institution- and community-specific information that an examiner reviews to understand the context in which an institution's record of performance should be evaluated. The Agencies will provide examiners with some of this information. The performance context is not a formal assessment of community credit needs.

§ __.21(b)(2) Information maintained by the institution or obtained from community contacts

§ __.21(b)(2) – 1: Will examiners consider performance context information provided by institutions?

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

A1. Yes. An institution may provide examiners with any information it deems relevant, including information on the lending, investment, and service opportunities in its assessment area(s). This information may include data on the business opportunities addressed by lenders not subject to the CRA. Institutions are not required, however, to prepare a formal needs assessment. If an institution provides information to examiners, the Agencies will not expect information other than what the institution normally would develop to prepare a business plan or to identify potential markets and customers, including low- and moderate-income persons and geographies in its assessment area(s). The Agencies will not evaluate an institution's efforts to ascertain community credit needs or rate an institution on the quality of any information it provides.

§ __.21(b)(2) – 2: Will examiners conduct community contact interviews as part of the examination process?

A2. Yes. Examiners will consider information obtained from interviews with local community, civic, and government leaders. These interviews provide examiners with knowledge regarding the local community, its economic base, and community development initiatives. To ensure that information from local leaders is considered – particularly in areas where the number of potential contacts may be limited – examiners may use information obtained through an interview with a single community contact for examinations of more than one institution in a given market. In addition, the Agencies may consider information obtained from interviews conducted by other Agency staff and by the other Agencies. In order to augment contacts previously used by the Agencies and foster a wider array of contacts, the Agencies may share community contact information.

§ __.21(b)(4) Institutional capacity and constraints

§ __.21(b)(4) – 1: Will examiners consider factors outside of an institution's control that prevent it from engaging in certain activities?

A1. Yes. Examiners will take into account statutory and supervisory limitations on an institution's ability to engage in any lending, investment, and service activities. For example, a savings association that has made few or no qualified investments due to its limited investment authority may still receive a low satisfactory rating under the investment test if it has a strong lending record.

§ __.21(b)(5) Institution's past performance and the performance of similarly situated lenders

§ __.21(b)(5) – 1: Can an institution's assigned rating be adversely affected by poor past performance?

A1. Yes. The Agencies will consider an institution's past performance in its overall evaluation. For example, an institution that received a rating of "needs to improve" in the past may receive a rating of "substantial noncompliance" if its performance has not improved.

§ __.21(b)(5) – 2: How will examiners consider the performance of similarly situated lenders?

A2. The performance context section of the regulation permits the performance of similarly situated lenders to be considered, for example, as one of a number of considerations in evaluating the geographic distribution of an institution's loans to low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies. This analysis, as well as other analyses, may be used, for example, where groups of contiguous geographies within an institution's assessment area(s) exhibit abnormally low penetration. In this regard, the performance of similarly situated lenders may be analyzed if such an analysis would provide accurate insight into the institution's lack of performance in those areas. The regulation does not require the use of a specific type of analysis under these circumstances. Moreover, no ratio developed from any type of analysis is linked to any lending test rating.

§ __.21(f) Activities in cooperation with minority- or women-owned financial institutions and low-income credit unions

§ __.21(f) – 1: The CRA provides that, in assessing the CRA performance of nonminority- and non-women-owned (majority-owned) financial institutions, examiners may consider as a factor capital investments, loan participations, and other ventures undertaken by the institutions in cooperation with minority- or women-owned financial institutions and low-income credit unions (MWLI), provided that these activities help meet the credit needs of local communities in which the MWLIs are chartered. Must such activities also benefit the majority-owned financial institution's assessment area(s)?

A1. No. Although the regulations generally provide that an institution's CRA activities will be evaluated for the extent to which they benefit the institution's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution's assessment area(s), the Agencies apply a broader geographic criterion when evaluating capital investments, loan participations, and other ventures undertaken by that institution in cooperation with MWLIs, as provided by the CRA. Thus, such activities will be favorably considered in the CRA performance evaluation of the institution (as loans, investments, or services, as appropriate), even if the MWLIs are not located in, or such activities do not benefit, the assessment area(s) of the majority-owned institution or the broader statewide or regional area that includes its assessment area(s). The activities must, however, help meet the credit needs of the local communities in which the MWLIs are chartered. The impact of a majority-owned institution's activities in cooperation with MWLIs on the majority-owned institution's CRA rating will be determined in conjunction with its overall performance in its assessment area(s).

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

Examples of activities undertaken by a majority-owned financial institution in cooperation with MWLIs that would receive CRA consideration may include

- making a deposit or capital investment;
- purchasing a participation in a loan;
- loaning an officer or providing other technical expertise to assist an MWLI in improving its lending policies and practices;
- providing financial support to enable an MWLI to partner with schools or universities to offer financial literacy education to members of its local community; or
- providing free or discounted data processing systems, or office facilities to aid an MWLI in serving its customers.

§ __.22--Lending test

§ __.22(a) Scope of test

§ __.22(a) – 1: Are there any types of lending activities that help meet the credit needs of an institution's assessment area(s) and that may warrant favorable consideration as activities that are responsive to the needs of the institution's assessment area(s)?

A1. Credit needs vary from community to community. However, there are some lending activities that are likely to be responsive in helping to meet the credit needs of many communities. These activities include

- providing loan programs that include a financial education component about how to avoid lending activities that may be abusive or otherwise unsuitable;
- establishing loan programs that provide small, unsecured consumer loans in a safe and sound manner (i.e., based on the borrower's ability to repay) and with reasonable terms;
- offering lending programs, which feature reporting to consumer reporting agencies, that transition borrowers from loans with higher interest rates and fees (based on credit risk) to lower-cost loans, consistent with safe and sound lending practices. Reporting to consumer reporting agencies allows borrowers accessing these programs the opportunity to improve their credit histories and thereby improve their access to competitive credit products; and
- establishing loan programs with the objective of providing affordable, sustainable, long-term relief, for example, through loan refinancings, restructures, or modifications, to homeowners who are facing foreclosure on their primary residences.

Examiners may consider favorably such lending activities, which have features augmenting the success and effectiveness of the small, intermediate small, or large institution's lending programs.

§ __.22(a)(1) Types of loans considered

§ __.22(a)(1) – 1: If a large retail institution is not required to collect and report home mortgage data under the HMDA, will the Agencies still evaluate the institution's home mortgage lending performance?

A1. Yes. The Agencies will sample the institution's home mortgage loan files in order to assess its performance under the lending test criteria.

§ __.22(a)(1) – 2: When will examiners consider consumer loans as part of an institution's CRA evaluation?

A2. Consumer loans will be evaluated if the institution so elects and has collected and maintained the data; an institution that elects not to have its consumer loans evaluated will not be viewed less favorably by examiners than one that does. However, if consumer loans constitute a substantial majority of the institution's business, the Agencies will evaluate them even if the institution does not so elect. The Agencies interpret "substantial majority" to be so significant a portion of the institution's lending activity by number and dollar volume of loans that the lending test evaluation would not meaningfully reflect its lending performance if consumer loans were excluded.

§ __.22(a)(2) Loan originations and purchases/other loan data

§ __.22(a)(2) – 1: How are lending commitments (such as letters of credit) evaluated under the regulation?

A1. The Agencies consider lending commitments (such as letters of credit) only at the option of the institution, regardless of examination type. Commitments must be legally binding between an institution and a borrower in order to be considered. Information about lending commitments will be used by examiners to enhance their understanding of an institution's performance, but will be evaluated separately from the loans.

§ __.22(a)(2) – 2: Will examiners review application data as part of the lending test?

A2. Application activity is not a performance criterion of the lending test. However, examiners may consider this information in the performance context analysis because this information may give examiners insight on, for example, the demand for loans.

§ __.22(a)(2) – 3: May a financial institution receive consideration under CRA for home mortgage loan modification, extension, and consolidation agreements (MECA), in which it obtains home mortgage loans from other institutions without actually purchasing or refinancing the home mortgage loans, as those terms have been interpreted under CRA and HMDA, as implemented by 12 CFR part 1003?

A3. Yes. In some states, MECAs, which are not considered loan refinancings because the existing loan obligations are not satisfied and replaced, are common. Although these transactions are not considered to be purchases or refinancings, as those terms have been interpreted under CRA, they do achieve the same results. A small, intermediate small, or large institution may present information about its

MECA activities with respect to home mortgages to examiners for consideration under the lending test as “other loan data.”

§ __.22(a)(2) – 4: In addition to MECAs, what are other examples of “other loan data”?

A4. Other loan data include, for example,

- loans funded for sale to the secondary markets that an institution has not reported under HMDA;
- unfunded loan commitments and letters of credit;
- commercial and consumer leases;
- loans secured by nonfarm residential real estate, not taken as an abundance of caution, that are used to finance small businesses or small farms and that are not reported as small business/small farm loans or reported under HMDA; and
- an increase to a small business or small farm line of credit if the increase would cause the total line of credit to exceed $1 million, in the case of a small business line; or $500,000, in the case of a small farm line.

§ __.22(a)(2) – 5: Do institutions receive consideration for originating or purchasing loans that are fully guaranteed?

A5. Yes. For all examination types, examiners evaluate an institution’s record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) through the origination or purchase of specified types of loans. Examiners do not take into account whether or not such loans are guaranteed.

§ __.22(a)(2) – 6: Do institutions receive consideration for purchasing loan participations?

A6. Yes. Examiners will consider the amount of loan participations purchased when evaluating an institution’s record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) through the origination or purchase of specified types of loans, regardless of examination type. As with other loan purchases, examiners will evaluate whether loan participations purchased by an institution, which have been sold and purchased a number of times, artificially inflate CRA performance. See, e.g., Q&A § __.21(a) – 1.

§ __.22(a)(2) – 7: How are refinancings of small business loans, which are secured by a one-to-four family residence and that have been reported under HMDA as a refinancing, evaluated under CRA?

A7. A loan of $1 million or less with a business purpose that is secured by a one-to-four family residence is considered a small business loan for CRA purposes only if the security interest in the residential property was taken as an abundance of caution and where the terms have not been made more favorable than they would have been in the absence of the lien. (See Call Report Glossary definition of “Loan Secured by Real Estate.”) If this same loan is refinanced and the new loan is also secured by a one-to-four family residence, but only through an abundance of caution, this loan is reported not only as a refinancing under HMDA, but also as a small business loan under CRA. (Note that small farm loans are similarly treated.)

It is not anticipated that “double-reported” loans will be so numerous as to affect the typical institution’s CRA rating. In the event that an institution reports a significant number or amount of loans as both home mortgage and small business loans, examiners will consider that overlap in evaluating the institution’s performance and generally will consider the “double-reported” loans as small business loans for CRA consideration.

The origination of a small business or small farm loan that is secured by a one-to-four family residence is not reportable under HMDA, unless the purpose of the loan is home purchase or home improvement. Nor is the loan reported as a small business or small farm loan if the security interest is not taken merely as an abundance of caution. Any such loan may be provided to examiners as “other loan data” (“Other Secured Lines/Loans for Purposes of Small Business”) for consideration during a CRA evaluation. See Q&A § __.12(v) – 3. The refinancings of such loans would be reported under HMDA.

§ __.22(b) Performance criteria

§ __.22(b)(1) Lending activity

§ __.22(b)(1) – 1: How will the Agencies apply the lending activity criterion to discourage an institution from originating loans that are viewed favorably under CRA in the institution itself and referring other loans, which are not viewed as favorably, for origination by an affiliate?

A1. Examiners will review closely institutions with (1) a small number and amount of home mortgage loans with an unusually good distribution among low- and moderate-income areas and low- and moderate-income borrowers and (2) a policy of referring most, but not all, of their home mortgage loans to affiliated institutions. If an institution is making loans mostly to low- and moderate-income individuals and areas and referring the rest of the loan applicants to an affiliate for the purpose of receiving a favorable CRA rating, examiners may conclude that the institution’s lending activity is not satisfactory because it has inappropriately attempted to influence the rating. In evaluating an institution’s lending, examiners will consider legitimate business reasons for the allocation of the lending activity.

§ __.22(b)(2) & (3) Geographic distribution and borrower characteristics

§ __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 1: How do the geographic distribution of loans and the distribution of lending by borrower characteristics interact in the lending test applicable to either large or small institutions?

A1. Examiners generally will consider both the distribution of an institution’s loans among geographies of different income levels, and among borrowers of different income levels and businesses and farms of different sizes. The importance of the borrower distribution criterion, particularly in relation to the geographic distribution criterion, will depend on the performance context. For example, distribution among borrowers with different income levels may be more important in areas without identifiable geographies of different income categories. On the other hand, geographic distribution may be more important in areas with the full range of geographies of different income categories.

§ __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 2: Must an institution lend to all portions of its assessment area?

A2. The term “assessment area” describes the geographic area within which the agencies assess how well an institution, regardless of examination type, has met the specific performance tests and standards in the rule. The Agencies do not expect that simply because a census tract is within an institution’s assessment area(s), the institution must lend to that census tract. Rather the Agencies will be concerned with conspicuous gaps in loan distribution that are not explained by the performance context. Similarly, if an institution delineated the entire county in which it is located as its assessment area, but could have delineated its assessment area as only a portion of the county, it will not be penalized for lending only in that portion of the county, so long as that portion does not reflect illegal discrimination or arbitrarily exclude low- or moderate-income geographies. The capacity and constraints of an institution, its business decisions about how it can best help to meet the needs of its assessment area(s), including those of low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, and other aspects of the performance context, are all relevant to explain why the institution is serving or not serving portions of its assessment area(s).

§ __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 3: Will examiners take into account loans made by affiliates when evaluating the proportion of an institution’s lending in its assessment area(s)?

A3. Examiners will not take into account loans made by affiliates when determining the proportion of an institution’s lending in its assessment area(s), even if the institution elects to have its affiliate lending considered in the remainder of the lending test evaluation. However, examiners may consider an institution’s business strategy of conducting lending through an affiliate in order to determine whether a low proportion of lending in the assessment area(s) should adversely affect the institution’s lending test rating.

§ __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 4: When will examiners consider loans (other than community development loans) made outside an institution’s assessment area(s)?

A4. Consideration will be given for loans to low- and moderate-income persons and small business and farm loans outside of an institution’s assessment area(s), provided the institution has adequately addressed the needs of borrowers within its assessment area(s). The Agencies will apply this consideration not only to loans made by large retail institutions being evaluated under the lending test, but also to loans made by small and intermediate small institutions being evaluated under their respective performance standards. Loans to low- and moderate-income persons and small businesses and farms outside of an institution’s assessment area(s), however, will not compensate for poor lending performance within the institution’s assessment area(s).

§ __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 5: Under the lending test applicable to small, intermediate small, or large institutions, how will examiners evaluate home mortgage loans to middle- or upper-income individuals in a low- or moderate-income geography?

A5. Examiners will consider these home mortgage loans under the performance criteria of the lending test, i.e., by number and amount of home mortgage loans, whether they are inside or outside the financial institution’s assessment area(s), their geographic distribution, and the income levels of the borrowers. Examiners will use information regarding the financial institution’s performance context to determine how to evaluate the loans under these performance criteria. Depending on the performance context, examiners could view home mortgage loans to middle-income individuals in a low-income geography very differently. For example, if the loans are for homes or multifamily housing located in an area for which the local, state, tribal, or Federal government or a community-based development organization has developed a revitalization or stabilization plan (such as a Federal enterprise community or empowerment zone) that includes attracting mixed-income residents to establish a stabilized, economically diverse neighborhood, examiners may give more consideration to such loans, which may be viewed as serving the low- or moderate-income community’s needs as well as serving those of the middle- or upper-income borrowers. If, on the other hand, no such plan exists and there is no other evidence of governmental support for a revitalization or stabilization project in the area and the loans to middle- or upper-income borrowers significantly disadvantage or primarily have the effect of displacing low- or moderate-income residents, examiners may view these loans simply as home mortgage loans to middle- or upper-income borrowers who happen to reside in a low- or moderate-income geography and weigh them accordingly in their evaluation of the institution.

§ __.22(b)(4) Community development lending

§ __.22(b)(4) – 1: When evaluating an institution’s record of community development lending under the lending test applicable to large institutions, may an examiner distinguish among community development loans on the basis of the actual amount of the loan that advances the community development purpose?

A1. Yes. When evaluating the institution’s record of community development lending under 12 CFR __.22(b)(4), it is appropriate to give greater weight to the amount of the loan that is targeted to the intended community development purpose. For example, consider two $10 million projects (with a total of 100 units each) that have as their express primary purpose affordable housing and are located in the same community. One of these projects sets aside 40 percent of its units for low-income residents and the other project allocates 65 percent of its units for low-income residents. An institution would report both loans as $10 million community development loans under the 12 CFR __.42(b)(2) aggregate reporting obligation. However, transaction complexity, innovation and all other relevant considerations being equal, an examiner should also take into account that the 65 percent project provides more affordable housing for more people per dollar expended.

Under 12 CFR __.22(b)(4), the extent of CRA consideration an institution receives for its community development loans should bear a direct relation to the benefits received by the community and the innovation or complexity of the loans required to accomplish the activity, not simply to the dollar amount expended on a particular transaction. By applying all lending test performance criteria, a community development loan of a lower dollar amount could meet the credit needs of the institution's community to a greater extent than a community development loan with a higher dollar amount, but with less innovation, complexity, or impact on the community.

§ __.22(b)(4) – 2: How do examiners consider community development loans in the evaluation of an institution's record of lending under the lending test applicable to large institutions?

A2. An institution's record of making community development loans may have a positive, neutral, or negative impact on the lending test rating. Community development lending is one of five performance criteria in the lending test criteria and, as such, it is considered at every examination. As with all lending test criteria, examiners evaluate an institution's record of making community development loans in the context of an institution's business model, the needs of its community, and the availability of community development opportunities in its assessment area(s) or the broader statewide or regional area(s) that includes the assessment area(s). For example, in some cases community development lending could have either a neutral or negative impact when the volume and number of community development loans are not adequate, depending on the performance context, while in other cases, it would have a positive impact when the institution is a leader in community development lending. Additionally, strong performance in retail lending may compensate for weak performance in community development lending, and conversely, strong community development lending may compensate for weak retail lending performance.

§ __.22(b)(5) Innovative or flexible lending practices

§ __.22(b)(5) – 1: What do examiners consider in evaluating the innovativeness or flexibility of an institution's lending under the lending test applicable to large institutions?

A1. In evaluating the innovativeness or flexibility of an institution's lending practices (and the complexity and innovativeness of its community development lending), examiners will not be limited to reviewing the overall variety and specific terms and conditions of the credit product themselves. Examiners also consider whether, and the extent to which, innovative or flexible terms or products augment the success and effectiveness of the institution's community development loan programs or, more generally, of its loan programs that address the credit needs of low- or moderate-income geographies or individuals. Historically, many institutions have used innovative and flexible lending practices to customize loans to their customers' specific needs in a safe and sound manner. However, an innovative or flexible lending practice is not required in order to obtain a specific CRA rating. See Q&A § __.28 – 1. Examples of lending practices that are considered innovative or flexible include:

- In connection with a community development loan program, an institution may establish a technical assistance program under which the institution, directly or through third parties, provides affordable housing developers and other loan recipients with financial consulting services. Such a technical assistance program may, by itself, constitute a community development service eligible for consideration under the service test of the CRA regulations. In addition, the technical assistance may be considered as an innovative or flexible practice that augments the success and effectiveness of the related community development loan program.
- In connection with a small business lending program in a low- or moderate-income area and consistent with safe and sound lending practices, an institution may implement a program under which, in addition to providing financing, the institution also contracts with the small business borrowers. Such a contracting arrangement would not, itself, qualify for CRA consideration. However, it may be considered as an innovative or flexible practice that augments the loan program's success and effectiveness, and improves the program's ability to serve community development needs by helping to promote economic development through support of small business activities and revitalization or stabilization of low- or moderate-income geographies.
- In connection with a small dollar loan program with reasonable terms and offered in a safe and sound manner, which includes evaluating an individual's ability to repay, an institution may establish outreach initiatives or financial counseling targeted to low- or moderate-income individuals or communities. The institution's efforts to encourage the availability, awareness, and use of the small dollar loan program to meet the credit needs of low- and moderate-income individuals, in lieu of higher-cost credit, should augment the success and effectiveness of the lending program. Such loans may be considered responsive under Q&A § __.22(a) – 1, and the use of such outreach initiatives in conjunction with financial literacy education or linked savings programs also may be considered as an innovative or flexible practice to the extent that they augment the success and effectiveness of the related loan program. Such initiatives may receive consideration under other performance criteria as well. For example, an initiative to partner with a nonprofit organization to provide financial counseling that encourages responsible use of credit may, by itself, constitute a community development service eligible for consideration under the service test.

- In connection with a mortgage or consumer lending program targeted to low- or moderate-income geographies or individuals, consistent with safe and sound lending practices, an institution may establish underwriting standards that utilize alternative credit histories, such as utility or rent payments, in an effort to evaluate low- or moderate-income individuals who lack sufficient conventional credit histories and who would be denied credit under the institution's traditional underwriting standards. The use of alternative credit histories in this manner to demonstrate that consumers have a timely and consistent record of paying their obligations may be considered as an innovative or flexible practice that augments the success and effectiveness of the lending program.

§ __.22(c) Affiliate lending

§ __.22(c)(1) In general

§ __.22(c)(1) – 1: If an institution, regardless of examination type, elects to have loans by its affiliate(s) considered, may it elect to have only certain categories of loans considered?

A1. Yes. An institution may elect to have only a particular category of its affiliate's lending considered. The basic categories of loans are home mortgage loans, small business loans, small farm loans, community development loans, and the five categories of consumer loans (motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured loans, and other unsecured loans).

§ __.22(c)(2) Constraints on affiliate lending

§ __.22(c)(2)(i) No affiliate may claim a loan origination or loan purchase if another institution claims the same loan origination or purchase

§ __.22(c)(2)(i) – 1: Regardless of examination type, how is this constraint on affiliate lending applied?

A1. This constraint prohibits one affiliate from claiming a loan origination or purchase claimed by another affiliate. However, an institution can count as a purchase a loan originated by an affiliate that the institution subsequently purchases, or count as an origination a loan later sold to an affiliate, provided the same loans are not sold several times to inflate their value for CRA purposes. For example, assume that two institutions are affiliated. Institution A originates a loan and claims it as a loan origination. Institution B later purchases the loan. Institution B may count the loan as a purchased loan.

The same institution may not count both the origination and purchase. Thus, for example, if an institution claims loans made by an affiliated mortgage company as loan originations, the institution may not also count the loans as purchased loans if it later purchases the loans from its affiliate. See also Q&As § __.22(c)(2)(ii) – 1 and § __.22(c)(2)(ii) – 2.

§ __.22(c)(2)(ii) If an institution elects to have its supervisory Agency consider loans within a particular lending category made by one or more of the institution's affiliates in a particular assessment area, the institution shall elect to have the Agency consider all loans within that lending category in that particular assessment area made by all of the institution's affiliates

§ __.22(c)(2)(ii) – 1: Regardless of examination type, how is this constraint on affiliate lending applied?

A1. This constraint prohibits "cherry-picking" affiliate loans within any one category of loans. The constraint requires an institution that elects to have a particular category of affiliate lending in a particular assessment area considered to include all loans of that type made by all of its affiliates in that particular assessment area. For example, assume that an institution has several affiliates, including a mortgage company that makes loans in the institution's assessment area. If the institution elects to include the mortgage company's home mortgage loans, it must include all of its affiliates' home mortgage loans made in its assessment area. In addition, the institution cannot elect to include only those low- and moderate-income home mortgage loans made by its affiliates and not home mortgage loans to middle- and upper-income individuals or areas.

§ __.22(c)(2)(ii) – 2: Regardless of examination type, how is this constraint applied if an institution's affiliates are also insured depository institutions subject to the CRA?

A2. Strict application of this constraint against "cherry-picking" to loans of an affiliate that is also an insured depository institution covered by the CRA would produce the anomalous result that the other institution would, without its consent, not be able to count its own loans. Because the Agencies did not intend to deprive an institution subject to the CRA of receiving consideration for its own lending, the Agencies read this constraint slightly differently in cases involving a group of affiliated institutions, some of which are subject to the CRA and share the same assessment area(s). In those circumstances, an institution that elects to include all of its mortgage affiliate's home mortgage loans in its assessment area would not automatically be required to include all home mortgage loans in its assessment area of another affiliate institution subject to the CRA. However, all loans of a particular type made by any affiliate in the institution's assessment area(s) must either be counted by the lending institution or by another affiliate institution that is subject to the CRA. This reading reflects the fact that a holding company may, for business reasons, choose to transact different aspects of its business in different subsidiary institutions. However, the method by which loans are allocated among the institutions for CRA purposes must reflect actual business decisions about the allocation of banking activities among the institutions and should not be designed solely to enhance their CRA evaluations.

§ __.22(d) Lending by a consortium or a third party

§ __.22(d) – 1: Will equity and equity-type investments in a third party receive consideration under the lending test?

A1. If an institution has made an equity or equity-type investment in a third party, community development loans made by the third party may be considered under the lending test. On the other hand, asset-backed and debt securities that do not represent an equity-type interest in a third party will not be considered under the lending test unless the securities are booked by the purchasing institution as a loan. For example, if an institution purchases stock in a CDC that primarily lends in low- and moderate-income areas or to low- and moderate-income individuals in order to promote community development, the institution may claim a pro rata share of the CDC's loans as community development loans. The institution's pro rata share is based on its percentage of equity ownership in the CDC. Q&A § __.23(b) – 1 provides information concerning consideration of an equity or equity-type investment under the investment test and both the lending and investment tests. (Note that in connection with an intermediate small institution's CRA performance evaluation, community development loans, including pro rata shares of community development loans, are considered only in the community development test.)

§ __.22(d) – 2: Regardless of examination type, how will examiners evaluate loans made by consortia or third parties?

A2. Loans originated or purchased by consortia in which an institution participates or by third parties in which an institution invests will be considered only if they qualify as community development loans and will be considered only under the community development criterion. However, loans originated directly on the books of an institution or purchased by the institution are considered to have been made or purchased directly by the institution, even if the institution originated or purchased the loans as a result of its participation in a loan consortium. These loans would be considered under the lending test or community development test criteria appropriate to them depending on the type of loan and type of examination.

§ __.22(d) – 3: In some circumstances, an institution may invest in a third party, such as a community development bank, that is also an insured depository institution and is thus subject to CRA requirements. If the investing institution requests its supervisory Agency to consider its pro rata share of community development loans made by the third party, as allowed under 12 CFR __.22(d), may the third party also receive consideration for these loans?

A3. Yes, regardless of examination type, as long as the financial institution and the third party are not affiliates. The regulations state, at 12 CFR __.22(c)(2)(i), that two affiliates may not both claim the same loan origination or loan purchase. However, if the financial institution and the third party are not affiliates, the third party may receive consideration for the community development loans it originates, and the financial institution that invested in the third party may also receive consideration for its pro rata share of the same community development loans under 12 CFR __.22(d).

§ __.23--Investment test

§ __.23(a) Scope of test

§ __.23(a) – 1: May an institution, regardless of examination type, receive consideration under the CRA regulations if it invests indirectly through a fund, the purpose of which is community development, as that is defined in the CRA regulations?

A1. Yes, the direct or indirect nature of the qualified investment does not affect whether an institution will receive consideration under the CRA regulations because the regulations do not distinguish between "direct" and "indirect" investments. Thus, an institution's investment in an equity fund that, in turn, invests in projects that, for example, provide affordable housing to low- and moderate-income individuals, would receive consideration as a qualified investment under the CRA regulations, provided the investment benefits one or more of the institution's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area(s) that includes one or more of the institution's assessment area(s). Similarly, an institution may receive consideration for a direct qualified investment in a nonprofit organization that, for example, supports affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals in the institution's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area(s) that includes the institution's assessment area(s).

§ __.23(a) – 2: In order to receive CRA consideration, what information may an institution provide that would demonstrate that an investment in a nationwide fund with a primary purpose of community development will directly or indirectly benefit one or more of the institution's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution's assessment area(s)?

A2. There may be several ways to demonstrate that the institution's investment in a nationwide fund meets the geographic requirements, and the Agencies will employ appropriate flexibility in this regard in reviewing information the institution provides that reasonably supports this determination.

In making this determination, the Agencies will consider any information provided by a financial institution that reasonably demonstrates that the purpose, mandate, or function of the fund includes serving geographies or individuals located within the institution's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution's assessment area(s). Typically, information about where a fund's investments are expected to be made or targeted will be found in the fund's prospectus, or other documents provided by the fund prior to or at the time of the institution's investment, and the institution, at its option, may provide such documentation in connection with its CRA evaluation.

Nationwide funds are important sources of investments in low- and moderate-income and underserved communities throughout the country and can be an efficient vehicle for institutions in making qualified investments that help meet community development needs. Nationwide funds may be suitable investment opportunities, particularly for large financial institutions with a nationwide branch footprint. Other financial institutions, including those with a nationwide business focus, may find such funds to be efficient investment vehicles to help meet community development needs in their assessment area(s) or the broader statewide or regional area that includes their assessment area(s). Prior to investing in such a fund, an institution should consider reviewing the fund's investment record to see if it is generally consistent with the institution's investment goals and the geographic considerations in the regulations. Examiners will consider investments in nationwide funds that benefit the institution's assessment area(s). Examiners will also consider investments in nationwide funds that benefit the broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution's assessment area(s) consistent with the treatment detailed in Q&A § __.12(h) – 6.

§ __.23(b) Exclusion

§ __.23(b) – 1: Even though the regulations state that an activity that is considered under the lending or service tests cannot also be considered under the investment test, may parts of an activity be considered under one test and other parts be considered under another test?

A1. Yes, in some instances the nature of an activity may make it eligible for consideration under more than one of the performance tests. For example, certain investments and related support provided by a large retail institution to a CDC may be evaluated under the lending, investment, and service tests. Under the service test, the institution may receive consideration for any community development services that it provides to the CDC, such as service by an executive of the institution on the CDC's board of directors. If the institution makes an investment in the CDC that the CDC uses to make community development loans, the institution may receive consideration under the lending test for its pro rata share of community development loans made by the CDC. Alternatively, the institution's investment may be considered under the investment test, assuming it is a qualified investment. In addition, an institution may elect to have a part of its investment considered under the lending test and the remaining part considered under the investment test. If the investing institution opts to have a portion of its investment evaluated under the lending test by claiming its pro rata share of the CDC's community development loans, the amount of investment considered under the investment test will be offset by that portion. Thus, the institution would receive consideration under the investment test for only the amount of its investment multiplied by the percentage of the CDC's assets that meet the definition of a qualified investment.

§ __.23(b) – 2: If home mortgage loans to low- and moderate-income borrowers have been considered under an institution's lending test, may the institution that originated or purchased them also receive consideration under the investment test if it subsequently purchases mortgage-backed securities that are primarily or exclusively backed by such loans?

A2. No. Because the institution received lending test consideration for the loans that underlie the securities, the institution may not also receive consideration under the investment test for its purchase of the securities. Of course, an institution may receive investment test consideration for purchases of mortgage-backed securities that are backed by loans to low- and moderate-income individuals as long as the securities are not backed primarily or exclusively by loans that the same institution originated or purchased.

§ __.23(e) Performance criteria

§ __.23(e) – 1: When applying the four performance criteria of 12 CFR __.23(e), may an examiner distinguish among qualified investments based on how much of the investment actually supports the underlying community development purpose?

A1. Yes. By applying all the criteria, a qualified investment of a lower dollar amount may be weighed more heavily under the investment test than a qualified investment with a higher dollar amount that has fewer qualitative enhancements. The criteria permit an examiner to qualitatively weight certain investments differently or to make other appropriate distinctions when evaluating an institution's record of making qualified investments. For instance, an examiner should take into account that a targeted mortgage-backed security that qualifies as an affordable housing issue that has only 60 percent of its face value supported by loans to low- or moderate-income borrowers would not provide as much affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals as a targeted mortgage-backed security with 100 percent of its face value supported by affordable housing loans to low- and moderate-income borrowers. The examiner should describe any differential weighting (or other adjustment), and its basis in the Performance Evaluation. See also Q&A § __.12(t) – 8 for a discussion about the qualitative consideration of prior-period investments.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.23(e) – 2: How do examiners evaluate an institution’s qualified investment in a fund, the primary purpose of which is community development, as defined in the CRA regulations?

A2. When evaluating qualified investments that benefit an institution’s assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes its assessment area(s), examiners will look at the following four performance criteria:

- (1) The dollar amount of qualified investments;
- (2) The innovativeness or complexity of qualified investments;
- (3) The responsiveness of qualified investments to credit and community development needs; and
- (4) The degree to which the qualified investments are not routinely provided by private investors.

With respect to the first criterion, examiners will determine the dollar amount of qualified investments by relying on the figures recorded by the institution according to generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP). Although institutions may exercise a range of investment strategies, including short-term investments, long-term investments, investments that are immediately funded, and investments with a binding, up-front commitment that are funded over a period of time, institutions making the same dollar amount of investments over the same number of years, all other performance criteria being equal, would receive the same level of consideration. Examiners will include both new and outstanding investments in this determination. The dollar amount of qualified investments also will include the dollar amount of legally binding commitments recorded by the institution according to GAAP.

The extent to which qualified investments receive consideration, however, depends on how examiners evaluate the investments under the remaining three performance criteria -- innovativeness and complexity, responsiveness, and degree to which the investment is not routinely provided by private investors. Examiners also will consider factors relevant to the institution’s CRA performance context, such as the effect of outstanding long-term qualified investments, the pay-in schedule, and the amount of any cash call, on the capacity of the institution to make new investments.

§ __.24--Service test

§ __.24(a) Scope of test

§ __.24(a) – 1: How do examiners evaluate retail banking services and community development services under the large institution service test?

A1. Retail banking services and community development services are the two components of the service test and are both important in evaluating a large institution’s performance. In evaluating retail banking services, examiners consider the availability and effectiveness of an institution’s systems for delivering banking services, particularly in low- and moderate-income geographies and to low- and moderate income individuals; the range of services provided in low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies; and the degree to which the services are tailored to meet the needs of those geographies. Examples of retail banking services that improve access to financial services, or decrease costs, for low- or moderate-income individuals include

- low-cost deposit accounts;
- electronic benefit transfer accounts and point of sale terminal systems;
- individual development accounts;
- free or low-cost government, payroll, or other check cashing services; and
- reasonably priced international remittance services.

In evaluating community development services, examiners consider the extent to which the institution provides such services and their innovativeness and responsiveness to community needs. Examples of community development services are listed in Q&A § __.12(i) – 3. Examiners will consider any information provided by the institution that demonstrates community development services benefit low- or moderate-income individuals or are responsive to community development needs.

§ __.24(d) Performance criteria – retail banking services

§ __.24(d) – 1: How do examiners evaluate the availability and effectiveness of an institution’s systems for delivering retail banking services?

A1. Convenient access to full service branches within a community is an important factor in determining the availability of credit and non-credit services. Therefore, the service test performance standards place primary emphasis on full service branches while still considering alternative systems. The principal focus is on an institution’s current distribution of branches and its record of opening and closing branches, particularly branches located in low- or moderate-income geographies or primarily serving low- or moderate-income individuals. However, an institution is not required to expand its branch network or operate unprofitable branches. Under the service test, alternative systems for delivering retail banking services are considered only to the extent that they are effective alternatives in providing needed services to low- and moderate-income areas and individuals.

§ __.24(d) – 2: How do examiners evaluate an institution’s activities in connection with Individual Development Accounts (IDA)?

A2. Although there is no standard IDA program, IDAs typically are deposit accounts targeted to low- and moderate-income families that are designed to help them accumulate savings for education or job-training, down-payment and closing costs on a new home, or start-up capital for a small business. Once participants have successfully funded an IDA, their personal IDA savings are matched by a public or private entity. Financial institution participation in IDA programs comes in a variety of forms, including providing retail banking services to IDA accountholders, providing matching dollars or operating funds to an IDA program, designing or implementing IDA programs, providing consumer financial education to IDA accountholders or prospective accountholders, or other means. The extent of financial institutions' involvement in IDAs and the products and services they offer in connection with the accounts will vary. Thus, subject to 12 CFR __.23(b), examiners evaluate the actual services and products provided by an institution in connection with IDA programs as one or more of the following: community development services, retail banking services, qualified investments, home mortgage loans, small business loans, consumer loans, or community development loans. See, e.g., Q&A § __.12(i) – 3.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

Note that all types of institutions may participate in IDA programs. Their IDA activities are evaluated under the performance criteria of the type of examination applicable to the particular institution.

§ __.24(d)(3) Availability and effectiveness of alternative systems for delivering retail banking services

§ __.24(d)(3) – 1: How do examiners evaluate alternative systems for delivering retail banking services?

A1. There are a number of alternative systems used by financial institutions to deliver retail banking services to customers. Non-branch delivery systems, such as ATMs, online and mobile banking, and other means by which institutions provide services to their customers evolve over time. No matter the means of delivery, examiners evaluate the extent to which the alternative delivery systems are available and effective in providing financial services to low- and moderate-income geographies and individuals. For example, a system may be determined to be effective based on the accessibility of the system to low- and moderate-income geographies and individuals. To determine whether a financial institution's alternative delivery system is an available and effective means of delivering retail banking services in low- and moderate-income geographies and to low- and moderate-income individuals, examiners may consider a variety of factors, including

- the ease of access, whether physical or virtual;
- the cost to consumers, as compared with the institution's other delivery systems;
- the range of services delivered;
- the ease of use;
- the rate of adoption and use; and
- the reliability of the system.

Examiners will consider any information an institution maintains and provides to examiners demonstrating that the institution's alternative delivery systems are available to, and used by, low- or moderate-income individuals, such as data on customer usage or transactions.

§ __.24(d)(3) – 2: Are debit cards considered under the service test as an alternative delivery system?

A2. By themselves, no. However, if debit cards are a part of a larger combination of products, such as a comprehensive electronic banking service, that allows an institution to deliver needed services to low- and moderate-income areas and individuals in its community, the overall delivery system that includes the debit card feature would be considered an alternative delivery system.

§ __.24(d)(4) Range of services provided in geographies of different incomes

§ __.24(d)(4) – 1: How do examiners evaluate the range of services provided in low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies and the degree to which those services are tailored to meet the needs of those geographies?

A1. Examiners review both information from the institution's public file and other information provided related to the range of services offered and how they are tailored to meet the particular needs of low- and moderate-income geographies. Examiners always review the information that institutions must maintain in their public files: a list of services generally offered at their branches, including their hours of operation; available loan and deposit products; transaction fees, as well as descriptions, where applicable, of material differences in the availability or cost of services at particular branches. See 12 CFR __.43(a)(5). The information provided by the financial institution to identify the types of services offered and any differences in services among its branches in different geographies may indicate how its services (including, where appropriate, business hours) are tailored to the convenience and needs of its assessment area(s), particularly low- or moderate-income geographies or low- or moderate-income individuals. See 12 CFR __ app. A(b)(3). Examiners also review any other information provided by the institution, such as data regarding the costs and features of loan and deposit products, account usage and retention, geographic location of accountholders, the availability of information in languages other than English, and any other relevant information demonstrating that its services are tailored to meet the needs of its customers in the various geographies in its assessment area(s). Any information that institutions may maintain regarding services offered through alternative delivery systems (see Q&A § __.24(d)(3) – 1) and through collaborations with government, community, educational or employer organizations to offer or expand the range of services or access to services, particularly designed to meet the needs of their assessment area(s), including low- and moderate-income communities will also be considered. Examiners will also review information provided by the public through comments or community contacts.

§ __.24(e) Performance criteria – community development services

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.24(e) – 1: Under what conditions may an institution receive consideration for community development services offered by affiliates or third parties?

A1. At an institution's option, the Agencies will consider services performed by an affiliate or by a third party on the institution's behalf under the service test if the services provided enable the institution to help meet the credit needs of its community. Indirect services that enhance an institution's ability to deliver credit products or deposit services within its community and that can be quantified may be considered under the service test, if those services have not been considered already under the lending or investment test. See Q&A § __.23(b) – 1. For example, an institution that contracts with a community organization to provide home ownership counseling to low- and moderate-income home buyers as part of the institution's mortgage program may receive consideration for that indirect service under the service test. In contrast, donations to a community organization that offers financial services to low- or moderate-income individuals may be considered under the investment test, but would not also be eligible for consideration under the service test. Services performed by an affiliate will be treated the same as affiliate loans and investments made in the institution's assessment area and may be considered if the service is not claimed by any other institution. See 12 CFR __.22(c) and __.23(c).

§ __.24(e) – 2: In evaluating community development services, what quantitative and qualitative factors do examiners review?

A2. The community development services criteria are important factors in the evaluation of a large institution's service test performance. According to the regulation, the Agencies evaluate the extent to which the financial institution provides community development services as well as the innovativeness and responsiveness of such services.

Examiners consider both quantitative and qualitative aspects of community development services during the evaluation. Examiners assess quantitative factors to determine the extent to which community development services are offered and used. The review is not limited to a single quantitative factor. For example, quantitative factors may include the number of

- low- or moderate-income participants;
- organizations served;
- sessions sponsored; or
- financial institution staff hours devoted.

Examiners will also consider qualitative factors by assessing the degree to which community development services are innovative or responsive to community needs. See Q&As § __.21(a) – 4 and § __.21(a) – 3. These performance criteria recognize that community development services sometimes require special expertise and effort on the part of the institution and provide benefit to the community that would not otherwise be possible. Such an assessment will depend on the impact of a particular activity on community needs and the benefits received by a community. See Q&A § __.28(b) – 1. For example, a financial institution employee's unique expertise and service on the board of a community organization may demonstrate these qualitative factors when the employee's ongoing engagement significantly improves the products, services or operations of the community development organization.

Examiners will consider any relevant information provided by the institution and from third parties that documents the extent, innovativeness, and responsiveness of community development services.

§ __.25 Community development test for wholesale or limited purpose institutions

§ __.25(a) Scope of test

§ __.25(a) – 1: How can certain credit card banks help to meet the credit needs of their communities without losing their exemption from the definition of "bank" in the Bank Holding Company Act (BHCA), as amended by the Competitive Equality Banking Act of 1987 (CEBA)?

A1. Although the BHCA restricts institutions known as CEBA credit card banks to credit card operations, a CEBA credit card bank can engage in community development activities without losing its exemption under the BHCA. A CEBA credit card bank could provide community development services and investments without engaging in operations other than credit card operations. For example, the bank could provide credit card counseling, or the financial expertise of its executives, free of charge, to community development organizations. In addition, a CEBA credit card bank could make qualified investments, as long as the investments meet the guidelines for passive and noncontrolling investments provided in the BHCA and the Board's Regulation Y. Finally, although a CEBA credit card bank cannot make any loans other than credit card loans, under 12 CFR __.25(d)(2) (community development test – indirect activities), the bank could elect to have part of its qualified passive and noncontrolling investments in a third-party lending consortium considered as community development lending, provided that the consortium's loans otherwise meet the requirements for community development lending. When assessing a CEBA credit card bank's CRA performance under the community development test, examiners will take into account the bank's performance context. In particular, examiners will consider the legal constraints imposed by the BHCA on the bank's activities, as part of the bank's performance context in 12 CFR __.21(b)(4).

§ __.25(d) Indirect activities

§ __.25(d) – 1: How are investments in third-party community development organizations considered under the community development test?

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

A1. Similar to the lending test for retail institutions, investments in third-party community development organizations may be considered as qualified investments or as community development loans or both (provided there is no double counting), at the institution's option, as described above in the discussion regarding 12 CFR __.22(d) and __.23(b).

§ __.25(e) Benefit to assessment area(s)

§ __.25(e) – 1: How do examiners evaluate a wholesale or limited purpose institution's qualified investment in a fund that invests in projects nationwide and which has a primary purpose of community development, as that is defined in the regulations?

A1. If examiners find that a wholesale or limited purpose institution has adequately addressed the needs of its assessment area(s), they will give consideration to qualified investments, as well as community development loans and community development services, by that institution nationwide. In determining whether an institution has adequately addressed the needs of its assessment area(s), examiners will consider qualified investments that benefit a broader statewide or regional area that includes the institution's assessment area(s).

§ __.25(f) Community development performance rating

§ __.25(f) – 1: Must a wholesale or limited purpose institution engage in all three categories of community development activities (lending, investment, and service) to perform well under the community development test?

A1. No, a wholesale or limited purpose institution may perform well under the community development test by engaging in one or more of these activities.

§ __.26--Small institution performance standards

§ __.26 – 1: When evaluating a small or intermediate small institution's performance, will examiners consider, at the institution's request, retail and community development loans originated or purchased by affiliates, qualified investments made by affiliates, or community development services provided by affiliates?

A1. Yes. However, a small institution that elects to have examiners consider affiliate activities must maintain sufficient information that the examiners may evaluate these activities under the appropriate performance criteria and ensure that the activities are not claimed by another institution. The constraints applicable to affiliate activities claimed by large institutions also apply to small and intermediate small institutions. See Q&As addressing 12 CFR __.22(c)(2) and related guidance provided to large institutions regarding affiliate activities. Examiners will not include affiliate lending in calculating the percentage of loans and, as appropriate, other lending-related activities located in an institution's assessment area(s).

§ __.26(a) Performance criteria

§ __.26(a)(2) Intermediate small institutions

§ __.26(a)(2) – 1: When is an institution examined as an intermediate small institution?

A1. When a small institution has met the intermediate small institution asset threshold delineated in 12 CFR __.12(u)(1) for two consecutive calendar year-ends, the institution may be examined under the intermediate small institution examination procedures. The regulation does not specify an additional lag period between becoming an intermediate small institution and being examined as an intermediate small institution, as it does for large institutions, because an intermediate small institution is not subject to CRA data collection and reporting requirements. Institutions should contact their primary regulator for information on examination schedules.

§ __.26(b) Lending test

§ __.26(b) – 1: May examiners consider, under one or more of the performance criteria of the small institution performance standards, lending-related activities, such as community development loans and lending-related qualified investments, when evaluating a small institution?

A1. Yes. Examiners can consider "lending-related activities," including community development loans and lending-related qualified investments, when evaluating the first four performance criteria of the small institution performance test. Although lending-related activities are specifically mentioned in the regulation in connection with only the first three criteria (i.e., loan-to-deposit ratio, percentage of loans in the institution's assessment area(s), and lending to borrowers of different incomes and businesses of different sizes), examiners can also consider these activities when they evaluate the fourth criteria – geographic distribution of the institution's loans.

Although lending-related community development activities are evaluated under the community development test applicable to intermediate small institutions, these activities may also augment the loan-to-deposit ratio analysis (12 CFR __.26(b)(1)) and the percentage of loans in the intermediate small institution's assessment area(s) analysis (12 CFR __.26(b)(2)), if appropriate.

§ __.26(b) – 2: What is meant by "as appropriate" when referring to the fact that lending-related activities will be considered, "as appropriate," under the various small institution performance criteria?

A2. "As appropriate" means that lending-related activities will be considered when it is necessary to determine whether an institution meets or exceeds the standards for a satisfactory rating. Examiners will also consider other lending-related activities at an institution's request, provided they have not also been considered under the community development test applicable to intermediate small institutions.

§ __.26(b) – 3: When evaluating a small institution's lending performance, will examiners consider, at the institution's request, community development loans originated or purchased by a consortium in which the institution participates or by a third party in which the institution has invested?

A3. Yes. However, a small institution that elects to have examiners consider community development loans originated or purchased by a consortium or third party must maintain sufficient information on its share of the community development loans so that the examiners may evaluate these loans under the small institution performance criteria.

§ __.26(b) – 4: Under the small institution lending test performance standards, will examiners consider both loan originations and purchases?

A4. Yes, consistent with the other assessment methods in the regulation, examiners will consider both loans originated and purchased by the institution. Likewise, examiners may consider any other loan data the small institution chooses to provide, including data on loans outstanding, commitments, and letters of credit.

§ __.26(b) – 5: Under the small institution lending test performance standards, how will qualified investments be considered for purposes of determining whether a small institution receives a satisfactory CRA rating?

A5. The small institution lending test performance standards focus on lending and other lending-related activities. Therefore, examiners will consider only lending-related qualified investments for the purpose of determining whether a small institution that is not an intermediate small institution receives a satisfactory CRA rating.

§ __.26(b)(1) Loan-to-deposit ratio

§ __.26(b)(1) – 1: How is the loan-to-deposit ratio calculated?

A1. A small institution's loan-to-deposit ratio is calculated in the same manner that the Uniform Bank Performance Report (UBPR) determines the ratio. It is calculated by dividing the institution's net loans and leases by its total deposits. The ratio is found in the Liquidity and Investment Portfolio section of the UBPR. Examiners will use this ratio to calculate an average since the last examination by adding the quarterly loan-to-deposit ratios and dividing the total by the number of quarters.

§ __.26(b)(1) – 2: How is the "reasonableness" of a loan-to-deposit ratio evaluated?

A2. No specific ratio is reasonable in every circumstance, and each small institution's ratio is evaluated in light of information from the performance context, including the institution's capacity to lend, demographic and economic factors present in the assessment area(s), and the lending opportunities available in the assessment area(s). If a small institution's loan-to-deposit ratio appears unreasonable after considering this information, lending performance may still be satisfactory under this criterion taking into consideration the number and the dollar volume of loans sold to the secondary market or the number and amount and innovativeness or complexity of community development loans and lending-related qualified investments.

§ __.26(b)(1) – 3: If an institution makes a large number of loans off-shore, will examiners segregate the domestic loan-to-deposit ratio from the foreign loan-to-deposit ratio?

A3. No. Examiners will look at the institution's net loan-to-deposit ratio for the whole institution, without any adjustments.

§ __.26(b)(2) Percentage of lending within assessment area(s)

§ __.26(b)(2) – 1: Must a small institution have a majority of its lending in its assessment area(s) to receive a satisfactory performance rating?

A1. No. The percentage of loans and, as appropriate, other lending-related activities located in the institution's assessment area(s) is but one of the performance criteria upon which small institutions are evaluated. If the percentage of loans and other lending-related activities in an institution's assessment area(s) is less than a majority, then the institution does not meet the standards for satisfactory performance only under this criterion. The effect on the overall performance rating of the institution, however, is considered in light of the performance context, including information regarding economic conditions; loan demand; the institution's size, financial condition, business strategies, and branching network; and other aspects of the institution's lending record.

§ __.26(b)(3) & (4) Distribution of lending within assessment area(s) by borrower income and geographic location

§ __.26(b)(3) & (4) – 1: How will a small institution's performance be assessed under these lending distribution criteria?

A1. Distribution of loans, like other small institution performance criteria, is considered in light of the performance context. For example, a small institution is not required to lend evenly throughout its assessment area(s) or in any particular geography. However, in order to meet the standards for satisfactory performance under this criterion, conspicuous gaps in a small institution's loan distribution must be adequately explained by performance context factors such as lending opportunities in the institution's assessment area(s), the institution's product offerings and business strategy, and institutional capacity and constraints. In addition, it may be impracticable to review the geographic distribution of the lending of an institution with very few demographically distinct geographies within an assessment area. If sufficient information on the income levels of individual borrowers or the revenues or sizes of business borrowers is not available, examiners may use loan size as a proxy for estimating borrower characteristics, where appropriate.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.26(c) Intermediate small institution community development test

§ __.26(c) – 1: How will the community development test be applied flexibly for intermediate small institutions?

A1. Generally, intermediate small institutions engage in a combination of community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services. An institution may not simply ignore one or more of these categories of community development, nor do the regulations prescribe a required threshold for community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services. Instead, based on the institution's assessment of community development needs in its assessment area(s), it may engage in different categories of community development activities that are responsive to those needs and consistent with the institution's capacity.

An intermediate small institution has the flexibility to allocate its resources among community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services in amounts that it reasonably determines are most responsive to community development needs and opportunities. Appropriate levels of each of these activities would depend on the capacity and business strategy of the institution, community needs, and number and types of opportunities for community development.

§ __.26(c)(3) Community development services

§ __.26(c)(3) – 1: What will examiners consider when evaluating the provision of community development services by an intermediate small institution?

A1. In addition to the examples listed in Q&A § __.12(i) – 3, examiners will consider retail banking services as community development services if they provide benefit to low- or moderate-income individuals. Examples include:

- low-cost deposit accounts;
- electronic benefit transfer accounts and point of sale terminal systems;
- individual development accounts;
- free or low-cost government, payroll, or other check cashing services; and
- reasonably priced international remittance services.

In addition, providing services to low- and moderate-income individuals through branches and other facilities located in low- and moderate-income, designated disaster, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income areas is considered. Generally, the presence of branches located in low- and moderate-income geographies will help to demonstrate the availability of banking services to low- and moderate-income individuals.

§ __.26(c)(4) Responsiveness to community development needs

§ __.26(c)(4) – 1: When evaluating an intermediate small institution's community development record, what will examiners consider when reviewing the responsiveness of community development lending, qualified investments, and community development services to the community development needs of the area?

A1. When evaluating an intermediate small institution's community development record, examiners will consider not only quantitative measures of performance, such as the number and amount of community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services, but also qualitative aspects of performance. In particular, examiners will evaluate the responsiveness of the institution's community development activities in light of the institution's capacity, business strategy, the needs of the community, and the number and types of opportunities for each type of community development activity (its performance context). Examiners also will consider the results of any assessment by the institution of community development needs, and how the institution's activities respond to those needs.

An evaluation of the degree of responsiveness considers the following factors: the volume, mix, and qualitative aspects of community development loans, qualified investments, and community development services. Consideration of the qualitative aspects of performance recognizes that community development activities sometimes require special expertise or effort on the part of the institution or provide a benefit to the community that would not otherwise be made available. (However, "innovativeness" and "complexity" – factors examiners consider when evaluating a large institution under the lending, investment, and service tests – are not criteria in the intermediate small institutions' community development test.) In some cases, a smaller loan may have more qualitative benefit to a community than a larger loan. Activities are considered particularly responsive to community development needs if they benefit low- and moderate-income individuals in low- or moderate-income geographies, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies. Activities are also considered particularly responsive to community development needs if they benefit low- or moderate-income geographies.

§ __.26(d) Performance rating

§ __.26(d) – 1: How can a small institution that is not an intermediate small institution achieve an "outstanding" performance rating?

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

A1. A small institution that is not an intermediate small institution that meets each of the standards in the lending test for a “satisfactory” rating and exceeds some or all of those standards may warrant an “outstanding” performance rating. In assessing performance at the “outstanding” level, the Agencies consider the extent to which the institution exceeds each of the performance standards and, at the institution’s option, its performance in making qualified investments and providing services that enhance credit availability in its assessment area(s). In some cases, a small institution may qualify for an “outstanding” performance rating solely on the basis of its lending activities, but only if its performance materially exceeds the standards for a “satisfactory” rating, particularly with respect to the penetration of borrowers at all income levels and the dispersion of loans throughout the geographies in its assessment area(s) that display income variation. An institution with a high loan-to-deposit ratio and a high percentage of loans in its assessment area(s), but with only a reasonable penetration of borrowers at all income levels or a reasonable dispersion of loans throughout geographies of differing income levels in its assessment area(s), generally will not be rated “outstanding” based only on its lending performance. However, the institution’s performance in making qualified investments and its performance in providing branches and other services and delivery systems that enhance credit availability in its assessment area(s) may augment the institution’s satisfactory rating to the extent that it may be rated “outstanding.”

§ __.26(d) – 2: Will a small institution’s qualified investments, community development loans, and community development services be considered if they do not directly benefit its assessment area(s)?

A2. Yes. These activities are eligible for consideration if they benefit a broader statewide or regional area that includes a small institution’s assessment area(s), as discussed more fully in Q&As § __.12(h) – 6 and § __.12(h) – 7.

§ __.27--Strategic plan

§ __.27(c) Plans in general

§ __.27(c) – 1: To what extent will the Agencies provide guidance to an institution during the development of its strategic plan?

A1. An institution will have an opportunity to consult with and provide information to the Agencies on a proposed strategic plan. Through this process, an institution is provided guidance on procedures and on the information necessary to ensure a complete submission. For example, the Agencies will provide guidance on whether the level of detail as set out in the proposed plan would be sufficient to permit Agency evaluation of the plan. However, the Agencies’ guidance during plan development and, particularly, prior to the public comment period, will not include commenting on the merits of a proposed strategic plan or on the adequacy of measurable goals.

§ __.27(c) – 2: How will a joint strategic plan be reviewed if the affiliates have different primary Federal supervisors?

A2. The Agencies will coordinate review of and action on the joint plan. Each Agency will evaluate the measurable goals for those affiliates for which it is the primary regulator.

§ __.27(f) Plan content

§ __.27(f)(1) Measurable goals

§ __.27(f)(1) – 1: How should annual measurable goals be specified in a strategic plan?

A1. Annual measurable goals (e.g., number of loans, dollar amount, geographic location of activity, and benefit to low- and moderate-income areas or individuals) must be stated with sufficient specificity to permit the public and the Agencies to quantify what performance will be expected. However, institutions are provided flexibility in specifying goals. For example, an institution may provide ranges of lending amounts in different categories of loans. Measurable goals may also be linked to funding requirements of certain public programs or indexed to other external factors as long as these mechanisms provide a quantifiable standard.

§ __.27(g) Plan approval

§ __.27(g)(2) Public participation

§ __.27(g)(2) – 1: How will the public receive notice of a proposed strategic plan?

A1. An institution submitting a strategic plan for approval by the Agencies is required to solicit public comment on the plan for a period of 30 days after publishing notice of the plan at least once in a newspaper of general circulation. The notice should be sufficiently prominent to attract public attention and should make clear that public comment is desired. An institution may, in addition, provide notice to the public in any other manner it chooses.

§ __.28--Assigned ratings

§ __.28 – 1: Are innovative lending practices, innovative or complex qualified investments, and innovative community development services required for a “satisfactory” or “outstanding” CRA rating?

A1. No. The performance criterion of “innovativeness” applies only under the lending, investment, and service tests applicable to large institutions and the community development test applicable to wholesale and limited purpose institutions. Moreover, even under these tests, the lack of innovative lending practices, innovative or complex qualified investments, or innovative community development services alone will not result in a “needs to improve” CRA rating. However, under these tests, the use of innovative lending practices, innovative or complex qualified investments, and innovative community development services may augment the consideration given to an institution's performance under the quantitative criteria of the regulations, resulting in a higher performance rating. See also Q&A § __.26(c)(4) – 1 for a discussion about responsiveness to community development needs under the community development test applicable to intermediate small institutions.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.28(a) Ratings in general

§ __.28(a) – 1: How are institutions with domestic branches in more than one state assigned a rating?

A1. The evaluation of an institution that maintains domestic branches in more than one state (“multistate institution”) will include a written evaluation and rating of its CRA record of performance as a whole and in each state in which it has a domestic branch. The written evaluation will contain a separate presentation on a multistate institution's performance for each MSA and the nonmetropolitan area within each state, if it maintains one or more domestic branch offices in these areas. This separate presentation will contain conclusions, supported by facts and data, on performance under the performance tests and standards in the regulation. The evaluation of a multistate institution that maintains a domestic branch in two or more states in a multistate metropolitan area will include a written evaluation (containing the same information described above) and rating of its CRA record of performance in the multistate metropolitan area. In such cases, the statewide evaluation and rating will be adjusted to reflect performance in the portion of the state not within the multistate MSA.

§ __.28(a) – 2: How are institutions that operate within only a single state assigned a rating?

A2. An institution that operates within only a single state (“single-state institution”) will be assigned a rating of its CRA record based on its performance within that state. In assigning this rating, the Agencies will separately present a single-state institution's performance for each metropolitan area in which the institution maintains one or more domestic branch offices. This separate presentation will contain conclusions, supported by facts and data, on the single-state institution's performance under the performance tests and standards in the regulation.

§ __.28(a) – 3: How do the Agencies weight performance under the lending, investment, and service tests for large retail institutions?

A3. A rating of “outstanding,” “high satisfactory,” “low satisfactory,” “needs to improve,” or “substantial noncompliance,” based on a judgment supported by facts and data, will be assigned under each performance test. Points will then be assigned to each rating as described in the first matrix set forth below. A large retail institution's overall rating under the lending, investment and service tests will then be calculated in accordance with the second matrix set forth below, which incorporates the rating principles in the regulation.

POINTS ASSIGNED FOR PERFORMANCE UNDER LENDING, INVESTMENT AND SERVICE TESTS

	Lending	Service	Investment
Outstanding	12	6	6
High Satisfactory	9	4	4
Low Satisfactory	6	3	3
Needs to Improve	3	1	1

COMPOSITE RATING POINT REQUIREMENTS

(Add points from three tests)

Rating	Total Points
Outstanding	20 or over
Satisfactory	11 through 19
Needs to Improve	5 through 10
Substantial Noncompliance	0 through 4

Note: There is one exception to the Composite Rating matrix. An institution may not receive a rating of “satisfactory” unless it receives at least “low satisfactory” on the lending test. Therefore, the total points are capped at three times the lending test score.

§ __.28(b) Lending, investment, and service test ratings

§ __.28(b) – 1: How is performance under the quantitative and qualitative performance criteria weighed when examiners assign a CRA rating?

A1. The lending, investment, and service tests each contain a number of performance criteria designed to measure whether an institution is effectively helping to meet the credit needs of its entire community, including low- and moderate-income neighborhoods, in a safe and sound manner. Some of these performance criteria are quantitative, such as number and amount, and others, such as the use of innovative or flexible lending practices, the innovativeness or complexity of qualified investments, and the innovativeness and responsiveness of community development services, are qualitative. The performance criteria that deal with these qualitative aspects of performance recognize that these loans, qualified investments, and community development services sometimes require special expertise and effort on the part of the institution and provide a benefit to the community that would not otherwise be possible. As such, the Agencies consider the qualitative aspects of an institution's activities when measuring the benefits received by a community. An institution's performance under these qualitative criteria may augment the consideration given to an institution's performance under the quantitative criteria of the regulations, resulting in a higher level of performance and rating.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.28(c) Effect of evidence of discriminatory or other illegal credit practices

§ __.28(c) – 1: What is meant by “discriminatory or other illegal credit practices”?

A1. An institution engages in discriminatory credit practices if it discourages or discriminates against credit applicants or borrowers on a prohibited basis, in violation, for example, of the Fair Housing Act or the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (as implemented by Regulation B).

Examples of other illegal credit practices inconsistent with helping to meet community credit needs include violations of

- the Truth in Lending Act regarding rescission of certain mortgage transactions and regarding disclosures and certain loan term restrictions in connection with credit transactions that are subject to the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act;
- the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act regarding the giving and accepting of referral fees, unearned fees, or kick-backs in connection with certain mortgage transactions; and
- the Federal Trade Commission Act regarding unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

Examiners will determine the effect of evidence of illegal credit practices as set forth in examination procedures and § __.28(c) of the regulation.

Violations of other provisions of the consumer protection laws generally will not adversely affect an institution's CRA rating, but may warrant the inclusion of comments in an institution's performance evaluation. These comments may address the institution's policies, procedures, training programs, and internal assessment efforts.

§ __.29--Effect of CRA performance on applications

§ __.29(a) CRA performance

§ __.29(a) – 1: What weight is given to an institution's CRA performance examination in reviewing an application?

A1. In reviewing applications in which CRA performance is a relevant factor, information from a CRA examination of the institution is a particularly important consideration. The examination is a detailed evaluation of the institution's CRA performance by its supervisory Agency. In this light, an examination is an important, and often controlling, factor in the consideration of an institution's record. In some cases, however, the examination may not be recent, or a specific issue raised in the application process, such as progress in addressing weaknesses noted by examiners, progress in implementing commitments previously made to the reviewing Agency, or a supported allegation from a commenter, is relevant to CRA performance under the regulation and was not addressed in the examination. In these circumstances, the applicant should present sufficient information to supplement its record of performance and to respond to the substantive issues raised in the application proceeding.

§ __.29(a) – 2: What consideration is given to an institution's commitments for future action in reviewing an application by those Agencies that consider such commitments?

A2. Commitments for future action are not viewed as part of the CRA record of performance. In general, institutions cannot use commitments made in the applications process to overcome a seriously deficient record of CRA performance. However, commitments for improvements in an institution's performance may be appropriate to address specific weaknesses in an otherwise satisfactory record or to address CRA performance when a financially troubled institution is being acquired.

§ __.29(b) Interested parties

§ __.29(b) – 1: What consideration is given to comments from interested parties in reviewing an application?

A1. Materials relating to CRA performance received during the application process can provide valuable information. Written comments, which may express either support for or opposition to the application, are made a part of the record in accordance with the Agencies' procedures, and are carefully considered in making the Agencies' decisions. Comments should be supported by facts about the applicant's performance and should be as specific as possible in explaining the basis for supporting or opposing the application. These comments must be submitted within the time limits provided under the Agencies' procedures.

§ __.29(b) – 2: Is an institution required to enter into agreements with private parties?

A2. No. Although communications between an institution and members of its community may provide a valuable method for the institution to assess how best to address the credit needs of the community, the CRA does not require an institution to enter into agreements with private parties. The Agencies do not monitor compliance with nor enforce these agreements.

§ __.41--Assessment area delineation

§ __.41(a) In general

§ __.41(a) – 1: How do the Agencies evaluate “assessment areas” under the CRA regulations?

A1. The rule focuses on the distribution and level of an institution's lending, investments, and services rather than on how and why an institution delineated its assessment area(s) in a particular manner. Therefore, the Agencies will not evaluate an institution's delineation of its assessment area(s) as a separate performance criterion. Rather, the Agencies will only review whether the assessment area(s) delineated by the institution complies with the limitations set forth in the regulations at 12 CFR __.41(e).

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.41(a) – 2: If an institution elects to have the Agencies consider affiliate lending, will this decision affect the institution's assessment area(s)?

A2. If an institution elects to have the lending activities of its affiliates considered in the evaluation of the institution's lending, the geographies in which the affiliate lends do not affect the institution's delineation of assessment area(s).

§ __.41(a) – 3: Can a financial institution identify a specific racial or ethnic group rather than a geographic area as its assessment area?

A3. No, assessment areas must be based on geography. The only exception to the requirement to delineate an assessment area based on geography is that an institution, the business of which predominantly consists of serving the needs of military personnel or their dependents who are not located within a defined geographic area, may delineate its entire deposit customer base as its assessment area.

§ __.41(c) Geographic area(s) for institutions other than wholesale or limited purpose institutions

§ __.41(c)(1) Generally consist of one or more MSAs or metropolitan divisions or one or more contiguous political subdivisions

§ __.41(c)(1) – 1: Besides cities, towns, and counties, what other units of local government are political subdivisions for CRA purposes?

A1. Townships and Indian reservations are political subdivisions for CRA purposes. Institutions should be aware that the boundaries of townships and Indian reservations may not be consistent with the boundaries of the census tracts (i.e., geographies) in the area. In these cases, institutions must ensure that their assessment area(s) consists only of whole geographies by adding any portions of the geographies that lie outside the political subdivision to the delineated assessment area(s).

§ __.41(c)(1) – 2: Are wards, school districts, voting districts, and water districts political subdivisions for CRA purposes?

A2. No. However, an institution that determines that it predominantly serves an area that is smaller than a city, town, or other political subdivision may delineate as its assessment area the larger political subdivision and then, in accordance with 12 CFR __.41(d), adjust the boundaries of the assessment area to include only the portion of the political subdivision that it reasonably can be expected to serve. The smaller area that the institution delineates must consist of entire geographies, may not reflect illegal discrimination, and may not arbitrarily exclude low- or moderate-income geographies.

§ __.41(d) Adjustments to geographic area(s)

§ __.41(d) – 1: When may an institution adjust the boundaries of an assessment area to include only a portion of a political subdivision?

A1. Institutions must include whole geographies (i.e., census tracts) in their assessment areas and generally should include entire political subdivisions. Because census tracts are the common geographic areas used consistently nationwide for data collection, the Agencies require that assessment areas be made up of whole geographies. If including an entire political subdivision would create an area that is larger than the area the institution can reasonably be expected to serve, an institution may, but is not required to, adjust the boundaries of its assessment area to include only portions of the political subdivision. For example, this adjustment is appropriate if the assessment area would otherwise be extremely large, of unusual configuration, or divided by significant geographic barriers (such as a river, mountain, or major highway system). When adjusting the boundaries of their assessment areas, institutions must not arbitrarily exclude low- or moderate-income geographies or set boundaries that reflect illegal discrimination.

§ __.41(e) Limitations on delineation of an assessment area
§ __.41(e)(3) May not arbitrarily exclude low- or moderate-income geographies

§ __.41(e)(3) – 1: How will examiners determine whether an institution has arbitrarily excluded low- or moderate-income geographies?

A1. Examiners will make this determination on a case-by-case basis after considering the facts relevant to the institution's assessment area delineation. Information that examiners will consider may include

- income levels in the institution's assessment area(s) and surrounding geographies;
- locations of branches and deposit-taking ATMs;
- loan distribution in the institution's assessment area(s) and surrounding geographies;
- the institution's size;
- the institution's financial condition; and
- the business strategy, corporate structure, and product offerings of the institution.

§ __.41(e)(4) May not extend substantially beyond an MSA boundary or beyond a state boundary unless located in a multistate MSA

§ __.41(e)(4) – 1: What are the maximum limits on the size of an assessment area?

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

A1. An institution may not delineate an assessment area extending substantially across the boundaries of an MSA unless the MSA is in a combined statistical area (CSA). Although more than one MSA in a CSA may be delineated as a single assessment area, an institution's CRA performance in individual MSAs in those assessment areas will be evaluated using separate median family incomes and other relevant information at the MSA level rather than at the CSA level.

An assessment area also may not extend substantially across state boundaries unless the assessment area is located in a multistate MSA. An institution may not delineate a whole state as its assessment area unless the entire state is contained within an MSA. These limitations apply to wholesale and limited purpose institutions as well as other institutions.

An institution must delineate separate assessment areas for the areas inside and outside an MSA if the area served by the institution's branches outside the MSA extends substantially beyond the MSA boundary. Similarly, the institution must delineate separate assessment areas for the areas inside and outside of a state if the institution's branches extend substantially beyond the boundary of one state (unless the assessment area is located in a multistate MSA). In addition, the institution should also delineate separate assessment areas if it has branches in areas within the same state that are widely separate and not at all contiguous. For example, an institution that has its main office in New York City and a branch in Buffalo, New York, and each office serves only the immediate areas around it, should delineate two separate assessment areas.

§ __.41(e)(4) – 2: May an institution delineate one assessment area that consists of an MSA and two large counties that abut the MSA but are not adjacent to each other?

A2. As a general rule, an institution's assessment area should not extend substantially beyond the boundary of an MSA. Therefore, the MSA would be a separate assessment area, and because the two abutting counties are not adjacent to each other and, in this example, extend substantially beyond the boundary of the MSA, the institution would delineate each county as a separate assessment area, assuming branches or deposit-taking ATMs are located in each county and the MSA. So, in this example, there would be three assessment areas. However, if the MSA and the two counties were in the same CSA, then the institution could delineate only one assessment area including them all. But, the institution's CRA performance in the MSAs and the non-MSA counties in that assessment area would be evaluated using separate median family incomes and other relevant information at the MSA and state, non-MSA level, rather than at the CSA level.

§ __.42--Data collection, reporting, and disclosure

§ __.42 – 1: When must an institution collect and report data under the CRA regulations?

A1. All institutions except small institutions are subject to data collection and reporting requirements. ("Small institution" is defined in the Agencies' CRA regulations at 12 CFR __.12(u).) Examples describing the data collection requirements of institutions, in particular those that have just surpassed the asset-size threshold of a small institution, may be found on the FFIEC Web site at <http://www.ffiec.gov/cra>. All institutions that are subject to the data collection and reporting requirements must report the data for a calendar year (CY) by March 1 of the subsequent year. For example, data for CY 2015 would be reported by March 1, 2016.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System processes the reports for all of the primary regulators. Data may be submitted on diskette, CD-ROM, or via Internet e-mail.

CRA respondents are encouraged to use the free FFIEC Data Entry Software to send their CRA data. "Submission via Web" is the preferred option. CRA respondents may also send a properly encrypted CRA file (using the "Export to Federal Reserve Board via Internet e-mail" option) to CRASUB@FRB.GOV.

Please mail diskette or CD-ROM submissions to:
Federal Reserve Board

20th & Constitution Avenue, NW
MS N402
Washington, DC 20551-0001.

For questions about submitting or resubmitting CRA data, please contact the FFIEC at CRAHELP@FRB.GOV.

§ __.42 – 2: Should an institution develop its own program for data collection, or will the regulators require a certain format?

A2. An institution may use the free software that is provided by the FFIEC to reporting institutions for data collection and reporting or develop its own program. Those institutions that develop their own programs may create a data submission using the File Specifications and Edit Validation Rules that have been set forth to assist with electronic data submissions. For information about specific electronic formatting procedures, contact CRAHELP@FRB.GOV.

§ __.42 – 3: How should an institution report data on lines of credit?

A3. Institutions must collect and report data on lines of credit in the same way that they provide data on loan originations. Lines of credit are considered originated at the time the line is approved or increased; and an increase is considered a new origination. Generally, the full amount of the credit line is the amount that is considered originated. In the case of an increase to an existing line, the amount of the increase is the amount that is considered originated and that amount should be reported. However, consistent with the Call Report instructions, institutions would not report an increase to a small business or small farm line of credit if the increase would cause the total line of credit to exceed $1 million, in the case of a small business line, or $500,000, in the case of a small farm line. Of course, institutions may provide information about such line increases to examiners as “other loan data.”

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.42 – 4: Should renewals of lines of credit be collected and/or reported?

A4. Renewals of lines of credit for small business, small farm, consumer, or community development purposes should be collected and reported, if applicable, in the same manner as renewals of small business or small farm loans. See Q&A § __.42(a) – 5. Institutions that are HMDA reporters continue to collect and report home equity lines of credit at their option in accordance with the requirements of 12 CFR part 1003.

§ __.42 – 5: When should merging institutions collect data?

A5. Three scenarios of data collection responsibilities for the calendar year of a merger and subsequent data reporting responsibilities are described below.

- Two institutions are exempt from CRA collection and reporting requirements because of asset size. The institutions merge. No data collection is required for the year in which the merger takes place, regardless of the resulting asset size. Data collection would begin after two consecutive years in which the combined institution had year-end assets at least equal to the small institution asset-size threshold amount described in 12 CFR __.12(u)(1).
- Institution A, an institution required to collect and report the data, and Institution B, an exempt institution, merge. Institution A is the surviving institution. For the year of the merger, data collection is required for Institution A’s transactions. Data collection is optional for the transactions of the previously exempt institution. For the following year, all transactions of the surviving institution must be collected and reported.
- Two institutions that each are required to collect and report the data merge. Data collection is required for the entire year of the merger and for subsequent years so long as the surviving institution is not exempt. The surviving institution may file either a consolidated submission or separate submissions for the year of the merger but must file a consolidated report for subsequent years.

§ __.42 – 6: Can small institutions get a copy of the data collection software even though they are not required to collect or report data?

A6. Yes. Any institution that is interested in receiving a copy of the software may download it from the FFIEC Web site at <http://www.ffiec.gov/cra>. For assistance, institutions may send an e-mail to CRAHELP@FRB.GOV.

§ __.42 – 7: If a small institution is designated a wholesale or limited purpose institution, must it collect data that it would not otherwise be required to collect because it is a small institution?

A7. No. However, small institutions that are designated as wholesale or limited purpose institutions must be prepared to identify those loans, investments, and services to be evaluated under the community development test.

§ __.42(a) Loan information required to be collected and maintained

§ __.42(a) – 1: Must institutions collect and report data on all commercial loans of $1 million or less at origination?

A1. No. Institutions that are not exempt from data collection and reporting are required to collect and report only those commercial loans that they capture in Call Report Schedule RC-C, Part II. Small business loans are defined as those whose original amounts are $1 million or less and that were reported as either “Loans secured by nonfarm or nonresidential real estate” or “Commercial and industrial loans” in Call Report Schedule RC-C, Part I.

§ __.42(a) – 2: For loans defined as small business loans, what information should be collected and maintained?

A2. Institutions that are not exempt from data collection and reporting are required to collect and maintain, in a standardized, machine-readable format, information on each small business loan originated or purchased for each calendar year:

- A unique number or alpha-numeric symbol that can be used to identify the relevant loan file.
- The loan amount at origination.
- The loan location.
- An indicator whether the loan was to a business with gross annual revenues of $1 million or less.

The location of the loan must be maintained by census tract. In addition, supplemental information contained in the file specifications includes a date associated with the origination or purchase and whether a loan was originated or purchased by an affiliate. The same requirements apply to small farm loans.

§ __.42(a) – 3: Will farm loans need to be segregated from business loans?

A3. Yes.

§ __.42(a) – 4: Should institutions collect and report data on all agricultural loans of $500,000 or less at origination?

A4. Institutions are to report those farm loans that they capture in Call Report Schedule RC-C, Part II. Small farm loans are defined as those whose original amounts are $500,000 or less and were reported as either “Loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers” or “Loans secured by farmland” in Call Report Schedule RC-C, Part I.

§ __.42(a) – 5: Should institutions collect and report data about small business and small farm loans that are refinanced or renewed?

A5. An institution should collect information about small business and small farm loans that it refinances or renews as loan originations. (A refinancing generally occurs when the existing loan obligation or note is satisfied and a new note is written, while a renewal refers to an extension of the term of a loan. However, for purposes of small business and small farm CRA data collection and reporting, it is not necessary to distinguish between the two.) When reporting small business and small farm data, however, an institution may only report one origination (including a renewal or refinancing treated as an origination) per loan per year, unless an increase in the loan amount is granted. However, a demand loan that is merely reviewed annually is not reported as a renewal because the term of the loan has not been extended.

If an institution increases the amount of a small business or small farm loan when it extends the term of the loan, it should always report the amount of the increase as a small business or small farm loan origination. The institution should report only the amount of the increase if the original or remaining amount of the loan has already been reported one time that year. For example, a financial institution makes a term loan for $25,000; principal payments have resulted in a present outstanding balance of $15,000. In the next year, the customer requests an additional $5,000, which is approved, and a new note is written for $20,000. In this example, the institution should report both the $5,000 increase and the renewal or refinancing of the $15,000 as originations for that year. These two originations may be reported together as a single origination of $20,000.

§ __.42(a) – 6: Does a loan to the “fishing industry” come under the definition of a small farm loan?

A6. Yes. Instructions for Call Report Schedule RC-C, Part I include loans “made for the purpose of financing fisheries and forestries, including loans to commercial fishermen” as a component of the definition for “Loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers.” Call Report Schedule RC-C, Part II, which serves as the basis of the definition for small business and small farm loans in the regulation, captures both “Loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers” and “Loans secured by farmland.”

§ __.42(a) – 7: How should an institution report a home equity line of credit, part of which is for home improvement purposes and part of which is for small business purposes?

A7. When an institution originates a home equity line of credit that is for both home improvement and small business purposes, the institution has the option of reporting the portion of the home equity line that is for home improvement purposes as a home improvement loan under HMDA. Examiners would consider that portion of the line when they evaluate the institution’s home mortgage lending. When an institution refinances a home equity line of credit into another home equity line of credit, HMDA reporting continues to be optional. If the institution opts to report the refinanced line, the entire amount of the line would be reported as a refinancing and examiners will consider the entire refinanced line when they evaluate the institution’s home mortgage lending.

If an institution that has originated a home equity line of credit for both home improvement and small business purposes (or if an institution that has refinanced such a line into another line) chooses not to report a home improvement loan (or a refinancing) under HMDA, and if the line meets the regulatory definition of a “community development loan,” the institution should collect and report information on the entire line as a community development loan. If the line does not qualify as a community development loan, the institution has the option of collecting and maintaining (but not reporting) the entire line of credit as “Other Secured Lines/Loans for Purposes of Small Business.”

§ __.42(a) – 8: When collecting small business and small farm data for CRA purposes, may an institution collect and report information about loans to small businesses and small farms located outside the United States?

A8. At an institution’s option, it may collect data about small business and small farm loans located outside the United States; however, it cannot report this data because the CRA data collection software will not accept data concerning loan locations outside the United States.

§ __.42(a) – 9: Is an institution that has no small farm or small business loans required to report under CRA?

A9. Each institution subject to data reporting requirements must, at a minimum, submit a transmittal sheet, definition of its assessment area(s), and a record of its community development loans. If the institution does not have community development loans to report, the record should be sent with “0” in the community development loan composite data fields. An institution that has not purchased or originated any small business or small farm loans during the reporting period would not submit the composite loan records for small business or small farm loans.

§ __.42(a) – 10: How should an institution collect and report the location of a loan made to a small business or farm if the borrower provides an address that consists of a post office box number or a rural route and box number?

A10. Prudent banking practices and Bank Secrecy Act regulations dictate that institutions know the location of their customers and loan collateral. Further, Bank Secrecy Act regulations specifically state that a post office box is not an acceptable address. Therefore, institutions typically will know the actual location of their borrowers or loan collateral beyond an address consisting only of a post office box.

Many borrowers have street addresses in addition to rural route and box numbers. Institutions should ask their borrowers to provide the street address of the main business facility or farm or the location where the loan proceeds otherwise will be applied. Moreover, in many cases in which the borrower’s address consists only of a rural route number, the institution knows the location (i.e., the census tract) of the borrower or loan collateral. Once the institution has this information available, it should assign the census tract to that location (geocode) and report that information as required under the regulation.

However, if an institution cannot determine a rural borrower’s street address, and does not know the census tract, the institution should report the borrower’s state, county, MSA or metropolitan division, if applicable, and “NA,” for “not available,” in lieu of a census tract code.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.42(a)(2) Loan amount at origination

§ __.42(a)(2) – 1: When an institution purchases a small business or small farm loan, in whole or in part, which amount should the institution collect and report – the original amount of the loan or the amount at purchase?

A1. When collecting and reporting information on purchased small business and small farm loans, including loan participations, an institution collects and reports the amount of the loan at origination, not at the time of purchase. This is consistent with the Call Report’s use of the “original amount of the loan” to determine whether a loan should be reported as a “loan to a small business” or a “loan to a small farm” and in which loan size category a loan should be reported. When assessing the volume of small business and small farm loan purchases for purposes of evaluating lending test performance under CRA, however, examiners will evaluate an institution’s activity based on the amounts at purchase.

§ __.42(a)(2) – 2: How should an institution collect data about multiple loan originations to the same business?

A2. If an institution makes multiple originations to the same business, the loans should be collected and reported as separate originations rather than combined and reported as they are on the Call Report, which reflects loans outstanding, rather than originations. However, if institutions make multiple originations to the same business solely to inflate artificially the number or volume of loans evaluated for CRA lending performance, the Agencies may combine these loans for purposes of evaluation under the CRA.

§ __.42(a)(2) – 3: How should an institution collect data pertaining to credit cards issued to small businesses?

A3. If an institution agrees to issue credit cards to a business’s employees, all of the credit card lines opened on a particular date for that single business should be reported as one small business loan origination rather than reporting each individual credit card line, assuming the criteria in the “small business loan” definition in the regulation are met. The credit card program’s “amount at origination” is the sum of all of the employee/business credit cards’ credit limits opened on a particular date. If subsequently issued credit cards increase the small business credit line, the added amount is reported as a new origination.

§ __.42(a)(3) The loan location

§ __.42(a)(3) – 1: Which location should an institution record if a small business loan’s proceeds are used in a variety of locations?

A1. The institution should record the loan location by either the location of the small business borrower’s headquarters or the location where the greatest portion of the proceeds are applied, as indicated by the borrower.

§ __.42(a)(4) Indicator of gross annual revenue

§ __.42(a)(4) – 1: When indicating whether a small business borrower had gross annual revenues of $1 million or less, upon what revenues should an institution rely?

A1. Generally, an institution should rely on the revenues that it considered in making its credit decision. For example, in the case of affiliated businesses, such as a parent corporation and its subsidiary, if the institution considered the revenues of the entity’s parent or a subsidiary corporation of the parent as well, then the institution would aggregate the revenues of both corporations to determine whether the revenues are $1 million or less. Alternatively, if the institution considered the revenues of only the entity to which the loan is actually extended, the institution should rely solely upon whether gross annual revenues are above or below $1 million for that entity. However, if the institution considered and relied on revenues or income of a cosigner or guarantor that is not an affiliate of the borrower, such as a sole proprietor, the institution should not adjust the borrower’s revenues for reporting purposes.

§ __.42(a)(4) – 2: If an institution that is not exempt from data collection and reporting does not request or consider revenue information to make the credit decision regarding a small business or small farm loan, must the institution collect revenue information in connection with that loan?

A2. No. In those instances, the institution should enter the code indicating “revenues not known” on the individual loan portion of the data collection software or on an internally developed system. Loans for which the institution did not collect revenue information may not be included in the loans to businesses and farms with gross annual revenues of $1 million or less when reporting this data.

§ __.42(a)(4) – 3: What gross revenue should an institution use in determining the gross annual revenue of a start-up business?

A3. The institution should use the actual gross annual revenue to date (including $0 if the new business has had no revenue to date). Although a start-up business will provide the institution with pro forma projected revenue figures, these figures may not accurately reflect actual gross revenue and, therefore, should not be used.

§ __.42(a)(4) – 4: When indicating the gross annual revenue of small business or small farm borrowers, do institutions rely on the gross annual revenue or the adjusted gross annual revenue of their borrowers?

A4. Institutions rely on the gross annual revenue, rather than the adjusted gross annual revenue, of their small business or small farm borrowers when indicating the revenue of small business or small farm borrowers. The purpose of this data collection is to enable examiners and the public to judge whether the institution is lending to small businesses and small farms or whether it is only making small loans to larger businesses and farms.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

The regulation does not require institutions to request or consider revenue information when making a loan; however, if institutions do gather this information from their borrowers, the Agencies expect them to collect and rely upon the borrowers' gross annual revenue for purposes of CRA. The CRA regulations similarly do not require institutions to verify revenue amounts; thus, institutions may rely on the gross annual revenue amount provided by borrowers in the ordinary course of business. If an institution does not collect gross annual revenue information for its small business and small farm borrowers, the institution should enter the code "revenues not known." See Q&A § __.42(a)(4) – 2.

§ __.42(b) Loan information required to be reported

§ __.42(b)(1) Small business and small farm loan data

§ __.42(b)(1) – 1: For small business and small farm loan information that is collected and maintained, what data should be reported?

A1. Each institution that is not exempt from data collection and reporting is required to report in machine-readable form annually by March 1 the following information, aggregated for each census tract in which the institution originated or purchased at least one small business or small farm loan during the prior year:

- The number and amount of loans originated or purchased with original amounts of $100,000 or less.
- The number and amount of loans originated or purchased with original amounts of more than $100,000 but less than or equal to $250,000.
- The number and amount of loans originated or purchased with original amounts of more than $250,000 but not more than $1 million, as to small business loans, or $500,000, as to small farm loans.
- To the extent that information is available, the number and amount of loans to businesses and farms with gross annual revenues of $1 million or less (using the revenues the institution considered in making its credit decision).

§ __.42(b)(2) Community development loan data

§ __.42(b)(2) – 1: What information about community development loans must institutions report?

A1. Institutions subject to data reporting requirements must report the aggregate number and amount of community development loans originated and purchased during the prior calendar year.

§ __.42(b)(2) – 2: If a loan meets the definition of a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan AND qualifies as a community development loan, where should it be reported? Can Federal Housing Administration, Veterans Affairs, and Small Business Administration loans be reported as community development loans?

A2. Except for multifamily affordable housing loans, which may be reported by retail institutions both under HMDA as home mortgage loans and as community development loans, in order to avoid double counting, retail institutions must report loans that meet the definition of "home mortgage loan," "small business loan," or "small farm loan" only in those respective categories even if they also meet the definition of "community development loan." As a practical matter, this is not a disadvantage for institutions evaluated under the lending, investment, and service tests because any affordable housing mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loan that would otherwise meet the definition of "community development loan" will be considered elsewhere in the lending test. Any of these types of loans that occur outside the institution's assessment area(s) can receive consideration under the borrower characteristic criteria of the lending test. See Q&A § __.22(b)(2) & (3) – 4.

Limited purpose and wholesale institutions that meet the size threshold for reporting purposes also must report loans that meet the definitions of home mortgage, small business, or small farm loans in those respective categories. However, these institutions must also report any loans from those categories that meet the regulatory definition of "community development loan" as community development loans. There is no double counting because wholesale and limited purpose institutions are not subject to the lending test and, therefore, are not evaluated on their level and distribution of home mortgage, small business, small farm, and consumer loans.

§ __.42(b)(2) – 3: When the primary purpose of a loan is to finance an affordable housing project for low- or moderate-income individuals, but, for example, only 40 percent of the units in question will actually be occupied by individuals or families with low or moderate incomes, should the entire loan amount be reported as a community development loan?

A3. It depends. As long as the primary purpose of the loan is a community development purpose as described in Q&A § __.12(h) – 8, the full amount of the institution's loan should be included in its reporting of aggregate amounts of community development lending. Even though the entire amount of the loan is reported, as noted in Q&A § __.22(b)(4) – 1, examiners may make qualitative distinctions among community development loans on the basis of the extent to which the loan advances the community development purpose.

In addition, if an institution that reports CRA data elects to request consideration for loans that provide mixed-income housing where only a portion of the loan has community development as its primary purpose, such as in connection with a development that has a mixed-income housing component or an affordable housing set-aside required by Federal, state, or local government, the institution must report only the pro rata dollar amount of the portion of the loan that provides affordable housing to low- or moderate-income individuals. The pro rata dollar amount of the total activity will be based on the percentage of units that are affordable. See Q&A § __.12(h) – 8 for a discussion of "primary purpose" of community development describing the distinction between the types of loans that would be reported in full and those for which only the pro rata amount would be reported.

§ __.42(b)(2) – 4: When an institution purchases a participation in a community development loan, which amount should the institution report – the entire amount of the credit originated by the lead lender or the amount of the participation purchased?

A4. The institution reports only the amount of the participation purchased as a community development loan. However, the institution uses the entire amount of the credit originated by the lead lender to determine whether the original credit meets the definition of a “loan to a small business,” “loan to a small farm,” or “community development loan.” For example, if an institution purchases a $400,000 participation in a business credit that has a community development purpose, and the entire amount of the credit originated by the lead lender is over $1 million, the institution would report $400,000 as a community development loan.

§ __.42(b)(2) – 5: Should institutions collect and report data about community development loans that are refinanced or renewed?

A5. Yes. Institutions should collect information about community development loans that they refinance or renew as loan originations. Community development loan refinancings and renewals are subject to the reporting limitations that apply to refinancings and renewals of small business and small farm loans. See Q&A § __.42(a) – 5.

§ __.42(b)(3) Home mortgage loans

§ __.42(b)(3) – 1: Must institutions that are not required to collect home mortgage loan data by the HMDA collect home mortgage loan data for purposes of the CRA?

A1. No. If an institution is not required to collect home mortgage loan data by the HMDA, the institution need not collect home mortgage loan data under the CRA. Examiners will sample these loans to evaluate the institution’s home mortgage lending. If an institution wants to ensure that examiners consider all of its home mortgage loans, the institution may collect and maintain data on these loans.

§ __.42(c) Optional data collection and maintenance

§ __.42(c)(1) Consumer loans

§ __.42(c)(1) – 1: What are the data requirements regarding consumer loans?

A1. There are no data reporting requirements for consumer loans. Institutions may, however, opt to collect and maintain data on consumer loans. If an institution chooses to collect information on consumer loans, it may collect data for one or more of the following categories of consumer loans: motor vehicle, credit card, home equity, other secured, and other unsecured. If an institution collects data for loans in a certain category, it must collect data for all loans originated or purchased within that category. The institution must maintain these data separately for each category for which it chooses to collect data. The data collected and maintained should include for each loan

- a unique number or alpha-numeric symbol that can be used to identify the relevant loan file;
- the loan amount at origination or purchase;
- the loan location; and
- the gross annual income of the borrower that the institution considered in making its credit decision.

Generally, guidance given with respect to data collection of small business and small farm loans, including, for example, guidance regarding collecting loan location data, and whether to collect data in connection with refinanced or renewed loans, will also apply to consumer loans.

§ __.42(c)(1)(iv) Income of borrower

§ __.42(c)(1)(iv) – 1: If an institution does not consider income when making an underwriting decision in connection with a consumer loan, must it collect income information?

A1. No. Further, if the institution routinely collects, but does not verify, a borrower’s income when making a credit decision, it need not verify the income for purposes of data maintenance.

§ __.42(c)(1)(iv) – 2: May an institution list “0” in the income field on consumer loans made to employees when collecting data for CRA purposes as the institution would be permitted to do under HMDA?

A2. Yes.

§ __.42(c)(1)(iv) – 3: When collecting the gross annual income of consumer borrowers, do institutions collect the gross annual income or the adjusted gross annual income of the borrowers?

A3. Institutions collect the gross annual income, rather than the adjusted gross annual income, of consumer borrowers. The purpose of income data collection in connection with consumer loans is to enable examiners to determine the distribution, particularly in the institution’s assessment area(s), of the institution’s consumer loans, based on borrower characteristics, including the number and amount of consumer loans to low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income borrowers, as determined on the basis of gross annual income.

The regulation does not require institutions to request or consider income information when making a loan; however, if institutions do gather this information from their borrowers, the Agencies expect them to collect the borrowers’ gross annual income for purposes of CRA. The CRA regulations similarly do not require institutions to verify income amounts; thus, institutions may rely on the gross annual income amount provided by borrowers in the ordinary course of business.

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

§ __.42(c)(1)(iv) – 4: Whose income does an institution collect when a consumer loan is made to more than one borrower?

A4. An institution that chooses to collect and maintain information on consumer loans collects the gross annual income of all primary obligors for consumer loans, to the extent that the institution considered the income of the obligors when making the decision to extend credit. Primary obligors include co-applicants and co-borrowers, including co-signers. An institution does not, however, collect the income of guarantors on consumer loans, because guarantors are only secondarily liable for the debt.

§ __.42(c)(2) Other loan data

§ __.42(c)(2) – 1: Call Report Schedule RC-C, Part II does not allow institutions to report loans for commercial and industrial purposes that are secured by residential real estate, unless the security interest in the nonfarm residential real estate is taken only as an abundance of caution. (See Q&A § __.12(v) – 3.) Loans extended to small businesses with gross annual revenues of $1 million or less may, however, be secured by residential real estate. May an institution collect this information to supplement its small business lending data at the time of examination?

A1. Yes. If these loans promote community development, as defined in the regulation, the institution should collect and report information about the loans as community development loans. Otherwise, at the institution's option, it may collect and maintain data concerning loans, purchases, and lines of credit extended to small businesses and secured by nonfarm residential real estate for consideration in the CRA evaluation of its small business lending. An institution may collect this information as “Other Secured Lines/Loans for Purposes of Small Business” in the individual loan data. This information should be maintained at the institution but should not be submitted for central reporting purposes.

§ __.42(c)(2) – 2: Must an institution collect data on loan commitments and letters of credit?

A2. No. Institutions are not required to collect data on loan commitments and letters of credit. Institutions may, however, provide for examiner consideration information on letters of credit and commitments.

§ __.42(c)(2) – 3: Are commercial and consumer leases considered loans for purposes of CRA data collection?

A3. Commercial and consumer leases are not considered small business or small farm loans or consumer loans for purposes of the data collection requirements in 12 CFR __.42(a) & (c)(1). However, if an institution wishes to collect and maintain data about leases, the institution may provide this data to examiners as “other loan data” under 12 CFR __.42(c)(2) for consideration under the lending test.

§ __.42(d) Data on affiliate lending

§ __.42(d) – 1: If an institution elects to have an affiliate's home mortgage lending considered in its CRA evaluation, what data must the institution make available to examiners?

A1. If the affiliate is a HMDA reporter, the institution must identify those loans reported by its affiliate under 12 CFR part 1003 (Regulation C, implementing HMDA). At its option, the institution may provide examiners with either the affiliate's entire HMDA Disclosure Statement or just those portions covering the loans in its assessment area(s) that it is electing to consider. If the affiliate is not required by HMDA to report home mortgage loans, the institution must provide sufficient data concerning the affiliate's home mortgage loans for the examiners to apply the performance tests.

§ __.43--Content and availability of public file

§ __.43(a) Information available to the public

§ __.43(a)(1) Public comments related to an institution's CRA performance

§ __.43(a)(1) – 1: What happens to comments received by the Agencies?

A1. Comments received by an Agency will be on file at the Agency for use by examiners. Those comments are also available to the public unless they are exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act.

§ __.43(a)(1) – 2: Is an institution required to respond to public comments?

A2. No. All institutions should review comments and complaints carefully to determine whether any response or other action is warranted. A small institution subject to the small institution performance standards is specifically evaluated on its record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its performance in helping to meet the credit needs in its assessment area(s). See 12 CFR __.26(b)(5). For all institutions, responding to comments may help to foster a dialogue with members of the community or to present relevant information to an institution's supervisory Agency. If an institution responds in writing to a letter in the public file, the response must also be placed in that file, unless the response reflects adversely on any person or placing it in the public file violates a law.

§ __.43(a)(2) CRA performance evaluation

§ __.43(a)(2) – 1: May an institution include a response to its CRA performance evaluation in its public file?

A1. Yes. However, the format and content of the evaluation, as transmitted by the supervisory Agency, may not be altered or abridged in any manner. In addition, an institution that received a less than satisfactory rating during its most recent examination must include in its public file a description of its current efforts to improve its performance in helping to meet the credit needs of its entire community. See 12 CFR __.43(b)(5). The institution must update the description on a quarterly basis.

§ __.43(b) Additional information available to the public

§ __.43(b)(1) Institutions other than small institutions

§ __.43(b)(1) – 1: Must an institution that elects to have affiliate lending considered include data on this lending in its public file?

A1. Yes. The lending data to be contained in an institution's public file covers the lending of the institution's affiliates, as well as of the institution itself, considered in the assessment of the institution's CRA performance. An institution that has elected to have mortgage loans of an affiliate considered must include either the affiliate's HMDA Disclosure Statements for the two prior years or the parts of the Disclosure Statements that relate to the institution's assessment area(s), at the institution's option.

§ __.43(b)(1) – 2: May an institution retain its CRA disclosure statement in electronic format in its public file, rather than printing a hard copy of the CRA disclosure statement for retention in its public file?

A2. Yes, if the institution can readily print out its CRA disclosure statement from an electronic medium (e.g., CD, DVD, or Internet Web site) when a consumer requests the public file. If the request is at a branch other than the main office or the one designated branch in each state that holds the complete public file, the institution should provide the CRA disclosure statement in a paper copy, or in another format acceptable to the requestor, within five calendar days, as required by 12 CFR __.43(c)(2)(ii).

§ __.43(c) Location of public information

§ __.43(c) – 1: What is an institution's "main office"?

A1. An institution's main office is the main, home, or principal office as designated in its charter.

§ __.43(c) – 2: May an institution maintain a copy of its public file on an intranet or the Internet?

A2. Yes, an institution may keep all or part of its public file on an intranet or the Internet, provided that the institution maintains all of the information, either in paper or electronic form, that is required in 12 CFR __.43. An institution that opts to keep part or all of its public file on an intranet or the Internet must follow the rules in 12 CFR __.43(c)(1) and (2) as to what information is required to be kept at a main office and at a branch. The institution also must ensure that the information required to be maintained at a main office and branch, if kept electronically, can be readily downloaded and printed for any member of the public who requests a hard copy of the information.

§ __.44--Public notice by institutions

§ __.44 – 1: Are there any placement or size requirements for an institution's public notice?

A1. The notice must be placed in the institution's public lobby, but the size and placement may vary. The notice should be placed in a location and be of a sufficient size that customers can easily see and read it.

§ __.45--Publication of planned examination schedule

§ __.45 – 1: Where will the Agencies publish the planned examination schedule for the upcoming calendar quarter?

A1. The Agencies may use the Federal Register, a press release, the Internet, or other existing Agency publications for disseminating the list of the institutions scheduled for CRA examinations during the upcoming calendar quarter. Interested parties should contact the appropriate Federal financial supervisory Agency for information on how the Agency is publishing the planned examination schedule.

§ __.45 – 2: Is inclusion on the list of institutions that are scheduled to undergo CRA examinations in the next calendar quarter determinative of whether an institution will be examined in that quarter?

A2. No. The Agencies attempt to determine as accurately as possible which institutions will be examined during the upcoming calendar quarter. However, whether an institution's name appears on the published list does not conclusively determine whether the institution will be examined during that quarter. The Agencies may need to defer a planned examination or conduct an unforeseen examination because of scheduling difficulties or other circumstances.

APPENDIX A to Part __ – Ratings

APPENDIX A to Part __ – 1: Must an institution's performance fit each aspect of a particular rating profile in order to receive that rating?

A1. No. Exceptionally strong performance in some aspects of a particular rating profile may compensate for weak performance in others. For example, a retail institution other than an intermediate small institution that uses non-branch delivery systems to obtain deposits and to deliver loans may have almost all of its loans outside the institution's assessment area(s). Assume that an examiner, after consideration of performance context and other applicable regulatory criteria, concludes that the institution has weak performance under the lending criteria applicable to lending activity, geographic distribution, and borrower characteristics within the assessment area(s). The institution may compensate for such weak performance by exceptionally strong performance in community development lending in its assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes its assessment area(s).

XI. Community Reinvestment Act — Interagency Questions and Answers

APPENDIX B to Part __ – CRA Notice

APPENDIX B to Part __ – 1: What agency information should be added to the CRA notice form?

A1. The following information should be added to the form:

OCC-supervised institutions only: For all national banks and Federal savings associations (collectively, banks), in connection with the nationwide list of banks that are scheduled for CRA evaluation in a particular quarter, you may insert the following Web site along with the postal mailing address of the deputy comptroller: <http://www.occ.treas.gov>. In addition, in connection with the invitation for comments on the bank's performance in helping to meet community credit needs, you may insert the following e-mail address along with the postal mailing address of the deputy comptroller: CRACOMMENTS@OCC.TREAS.GOV.

For community banks, insert in the appropriate blank the postal mailing address of the deputy comptroller of the district in which the institution is located. These addresses can be found at <http://www.occ.gov>. For banks supervised under the large bank program, insert in the appropriate blank the following postal mailing address: "Large Bank Supervision, 400 7th Street, SW., Washington, DC 20219-0001." For banks supervised under the midsize/credit card bank program, insert in the appropriate blank the following postal mailing address: "Midsize and Credit Card Bank Supervision, 400 7th Street, SW., Washington, DC 20219-0001."

OCC-, FDIC-, and Board-supervised institutions: "Officer in Charge of Supervision" is the title of the responsible official at the appropriate Federal Reserve Bank.

A Guide to CRA Data Collection and Reporting

All state member banks, state nonmember banks, national banks, and savings associations, except small institutions, are subject to data collection and reporting requirements. A small institution is a bank or thrift that, as of December 31 of either of the prior two calendar years, had total assets of less than $1 billion. All institutions that are subject to the data collection and reporting requirements must report the data for a calendar year by March 1 of the subsequent year, reporting in electronic format: 1) a transmittal sheet, 2) a definition of its assessment area(s), and 3) a record of its Community Development (CD) loans. In addition, any institution that wants to be evaluated under the Large Bank evaluation method must also collect and report CRA loan data.

Using the loan data submitted by the financial institutions, the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) creates aggregate and disclosure reports for each metropolitan area (MA). These reports are made available to the public each summer. The MA aggregate and disclosure reports for calendar years since 1996 are available on the FFIEC's CRA web site at <http://www.ffiec.gov/cra>. The FFIEC also provides to the public various electronic, paper and magnetic media items.

FFIEC Geocoding/Mapping System: A web-based tool designed to help institutions report information on mortgage, business, and farm loans. Geocoding refers to the Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA), State, County, Census Tract combination (address information) that must be provided for each reported loan. The system allows institutions to enter a street address, and it then determines the census tract. When an address is not found, the mapping feature enables the user to determine the property location based on known landmarks, without resorting to a paper map. The system also provides Census demographic information about a particular census tract, including income, population, and housing data. Institutions use this information to assess whether they are meeting the credit needs of the communities in which they operate.

Lending Test

The Lending Test evaluates the bank's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) by considering the following criteria:

- 1) The bank's loan-to-deposit ratio, adjusted for seasonal variation, and, as appropriate, other lending-related activities, such as loan originations for sale to the secondary markets, community development loans, or qualified investments;
- 2) The percentage of loans, and as appropriate, other lending-related activities located in the bank's assessment area(s);
- 3) The bank's record of lending to and, as appropriate, engaging in other lending-related activities for borrowers of different income levels and businesses and farms of different sizes;
- 4) The geographic distribution of the bank's loans; and
- 5) The bank's record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its performance in helping to meet credit needs in its assessment area(s).

GLOSSARY

Aggregate Lending: The number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in specified income categories as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Area Median Income: The median family income for the MSA, if a person or geography is located in an MSA; or the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income, if a person or geography is located outside an MSA.

Assessment Area: A geographic area delineated by the bank under the requirements of the Community Reinvestment Act.

Census Tract: A small, relatively permanent statistical subdivision of a county or equivalent entity. The primary purpose of census tracts is to provide a stable set of geographic units for the presentation of statistical data. Census tracts generally have a population size between 1,200 and 8,000 people, with an optimum size of 4,000 people. Census tract boundaries generally follow visible and identifiable features, but they may follow nonvisible legal boundaries in some instances. State and county boundaries always are census tract boundaries.

Combined Statistical Area (CSA): A combination of several adjacent metropolitan statistical areas or micropolitan statistical areas or a mix of the two, which are linked by economic ties.

Consumer Loan(s): A loan(s) to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures. A consumer loan does not include a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan. This definition includes the following categories: motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured consumer loans, and other unsecured consumer loans.

Core Based Statistical Area (CBSA): The county or counties or equivalent entities associated with at least one core (urbanized area or urban cluster) of at least 10,000 population, plus adjacent counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the core as measured through commuting ties with the counties associated with the core. Metropolitan and Micropolitan Statistical Areas are the two categories of CBSAs.

Family: Includes a householder and one or more other persons living in the same household who are related to the householder by birth, marriage, or adoption. The number of family households always equals the number of families; however, a family household may also include non-relatives living with the family. Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: A full-scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (e.g., innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. The reports include such data as the race, gender, and the income of applicants; the amount of loan requested; and the disposition of the application (approved, denied, and withdrawn).

Home Mortgage Loans: Includes closed-end mortgage loans or open-end line of credits as defined in the HMDA regulation that are not an excluded transaction per the HMDA regulation.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: A limited scope review is accomplished when examiners do not complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is often analyzed using only quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

Market Share: The number of loans originated and purchased by the institution as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Median Income: The median income divides the income distribution into two equal parts, one having incomes above the median and other having incomes below the median.

Metropolitan Division (MD): A county or group of counties within a CBSA that contain(s) an urbanized area with a population of at least 2.5 million. A MD is one or more main/secondary counties representing an employment center or centers, plus adjacent counties associated with the main/secondary county or counties through commuting ties.

XII. Performance Evaluation — Small Bank Single-Rated Area

Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA): CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 50,000. The MSA comprises the central county or counties or equivalent entities containing the core, plus adjacent outlying counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the central county or counties as measured through commuting.

Middle-Income: Individual income that is at least 80 percent and less than 120 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 80 and less than 120 percent in the case of a geography.

Owner-Occupied Units: Includes units occupied by the owner or co-owner, even if the unit has not been fully paid for or is mortgaged.

Rated Area: A rated area is a state or multistate metropolitan area. For an institution with domestic branches in only one state, the institution's CRA rating would be the state rating. If an institution maintains domestic branches in more than one state, the institution will receive a rating for each state in which those branches are located. If an institution maintains domestic branches in two or more states within a multistate metropolitan area, the institution will receive a rating for the multistate metropolitan area.

Rural Area: Territories, populations, and housing units that are not classified as urban.

More specifically, “urban” consists of territory, persons, and housing units in places of 2,500 or more persons incorporated as cities, villages, boroughs (except in Alaska and New York), and towns (except in the New England states, New York, and Wisconsin).

“Urban” excludes the rural portions of “extended cities”; census designated place of 2,500 or more persons; and other territory, incorporated or unincorporated, including in urbanized areas.

GLOSSARY

Aggregate Lending: The number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in specified income categories as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Area Median Income: The median family income for the MSA, if a person or geography is located in an MSA; or the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income, if a person or geography is located outside an MSA.

Assessment Area: A geographic area delineated by the institution under the requirements of the Community Reinvestment Act.

Census Tract: A small, relatively permanent statistical subdivision of a county or equivalent entity. The primary purpose of census tracts is to provide a stable set of geographic units for the presentation of statistical data. Census tracts generally have a population size between 1,200 and 8,000 people, with an optimum size of 4,000 people. Census tract boundaries generally follow visible and identifiable features, but they may follow nonvisible legal boundaries in some instances. State and county boundaries always are census tract boundaries.

Combined Statistical Area (CSA): A combination of several adjacent metropolitan statistical areas or micropolitan statistical areas or a mix of the two, which are linked by economic ties.

Consumer Loan(s): A loan(s) to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures. A consumer loan does not include a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan. This definition includes the following categories: motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured consumer loans, and other unsecured consumer loans.

Core Based Statistical Area (CBSA): The county or counties or equivalent entities associated with at least one core (urbanized area or urban cluster) of at least 10,000 population, plus adjacent counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the core as measured through commuting ties with the counties associated with the core. Metropolitan and Micropolitan Statistical Areas are the two categories of CBSAs.

Family: Includes a householder and one or more other persons living in the same household who are related to the householder by birth, marriage, or adoption. The number of family households always equals the number of families; however, a family household may also include non-relatives living with the family. Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: A full-scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (e.g, geographic distribution, borrower profile, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (e.g, innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. The reports include such data as the race, gender, and the income of applicants; the amount of loan requested; and the disposition of the application (approved, denied, and withdrawn).

Home Mortgage Loans: Includes closed-end mortgage loans or open-end line of credits as defined in the HMDA regulation that are not an excluded transaction per the HMDA regulation.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: A limited-scope review is accomplished when examiners do not complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is often analyzed using only quantitative factors (e.g, geographic distribution, borrower profile, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

Market Share: The number of loans originated and purchased by the institution as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Median Income: The median income divides the income distribution into two equal parts, one having incomes above the median and other having incomes below the median.

Metropolitan Division (MD): A county or group of counties within a CBSA that contain(s) an urbanized area with a population of at least 2.5 million. A MD is one or more main/secondary counties representing an employment center or centers, plus adjacent counties associated with the main/secondary county or counties through commuting ties.

- 5) The bank's record of taking action, if warranted, in response to written complaints about its performance in helping to meet credit needs in its assessment area(s).

Community Development Test

The Community Development Test considers the following criteria:

- 1) The number and amount of community development loans;
- 2) The number and amount of qualified investments;
- 3) The extent to which the bank provides community development services; and
- 4) The bank's responsiveness through such activities to the area's community development needs considering the amount and combination of these activities, along with their qualitative aspects.

GLOSSARY

Assessment Area: A geographic area delineated by the bank under the requirements of the Community Reinvestment Act.

Census Tract: A small, relatively permanent statistical subdivision of a county or equivalent entity. The primary purpose of census tracts is to provide a stable set of geographic units for the presentation of statistical data. Census tracts generally have a population size between 1,200 and 8,000 people, with an optimum size of 4,000 people. Census tract boundaries generally follow visible and identifiable features, but they may follow nonvisible legal boundaries in some instances. State and county boundaries always are census tract boundaries.

Combined Statistical Area (CSA): A combination of several adjacent metropolitan statistical areas or micropolitan statistical areas or a mix of the two, which are linked by economic ties.

Community Development: For loans, investments, and services to qualify as community development activities, their primary purpose must:

- (1) Support affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (2) Target community services toward low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (3) Promote economic development by financing small businesses or farms; or
- (4) Provide activities that revitalize or stabilize low- and moderate-income geographies, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies.

Community Development Corporation (CDC): A CDC allows banks and holding companies to make equity type of investments in community development projects. Institution CDCs can develop innovative debt instruments or provide near-equity investments tailored to the development needs of the community. Institution CDCs are also tailored to their financial and marketing needs. A CDC may purchase, own, rehabilitate, construct, manage, and sell real property. Also, it may make equity or debt investments in development projects and in local businesses. The CDC activities are expected to directly benefit low- and moderate-income groups, and the investment dollars should not represent an undue risk on the banking organization.

Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs): CDFIs are private intermediaries (either for profit or nonprofit) with community development as their primary mission. A CDFI facilitates the flow of lending and investment capital into distressed communities and to individuals who have been unable to take advantage of the services offered by traditional financial institutions. Some basic types of CDFIs include community development banks, community development loan funds, community development credit unions, micro enterprise funds, and community development venture capital funds.

A certified CDFI must meet eligibility requirements. These requirements include the following:

- Having a primary mission of promoting community development;
- Serving an investment area or target population;
- Providing development services;
- Maintaining accountability to residents of its investment area or targeted population through representation on its governing board of directors, or by other means;
- Not constituting an agency or instrumentality of the United States, of any state or political subdivision of a state.

Community Development Loan: A loan that:

- (1) Has as its primary purpose community development; and
- (2) Except in the case of a wholesale or limited purpose institution:
 - (i) Has not been reported or collected by the institution or an affiliate for consideration in the institution's assessment area as a home mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loan, unless it is a multifamily dwelling loan (as described in Appendix A to Part 203 of this title); and

- (3) Has not been considered in the evaluation of the institution's retail banking services under § 345.24(d).

Consumer Loan(s): A loan(s) to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures. A consumer loan does not include a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan. This definition includes the following categories: motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured consumer loans, and other unsecured consumer loans.

Core Based Statistical Area (CBSA): The county or counties or equivalent entities associated with at least one core (urbanized area or urban cluster) of at least 10,000 population, plus adjacent counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the core as measured through commuting ties with the counties associated with the core. Metropolitan and Micropolitan Statistical Areas are the two categories of CBSAs.

Distressed Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as distressed if it is in a county that meets one or more of the following triggers:

- (1) An unemployment rate of at least 1.5 times the national average;
- (2) A poverty rate of 20 percent or more; or

XII. Performance Evaluation — Intermediate Small Bank Single-Rated Area

- (3) A population loss of 10 percent or more between the previous and most recent decennial census or a net migration loss of 5 percent or more over the 5-year period preceding the most recent census.

Family: Includes a householder and one or more other persons living in the same household who are related to the householder by birth, marriage, or adoption. The number of family households always equals the number of families; however, a family household may also include non-relatives living with the family. Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: A full-scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (e.g, geographic distribution, borrower profile, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (e.g, innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. Home Mortgage Loans: Includes closed-end mortgage loans or open-end line of credits as defined in the HMDA regulation that are not an excluded transaction per the HMDA regulation.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: A limited scope review is accomplished when examiners do not complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is often analyzed using only quantitative factors (e.g, geographic distribution, borrower profile, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

XII. Performance Evaluation — Intermediate Small Bank Single-Rated Area

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

Low Income Housing Tax Credit: The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit Program is a housing program contained within the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended. It is administered by the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service. The U.S. Treasury Department distributes low-income housing tax credits to housing credit agencies through the Internal Revenue Service. The housing agencies allocate tax credits on a competitive basis.

Developers who acquire, rehabilitate, or construct low-income rental housing may keep their tax credits. Or, they may sell them to corporations or investor groups, who, as owners of these properties, will be able to reduce their own federal tax payments. The credit can be claimed annually for ten consecutive years. For a project to be eligible, the developer must set aside a specific percentage of units for occupancy by low-income residents. The set-aside requirement remains throughout the compliance period, usually 30 years.

Market Share: The number of loans originated and purchased by the institution as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Median Income: The median income divides the income distribution into two equal parts, one having incomes above the median and other having incomes below the median.

Metropolitan Division (MD): A county or group of counties within a CBSA that contain(s) an urbanized area with a population of at least 2.5 million. A MD is one or more main/secondary counties representing an employment center or centers, plus adjacent counties associated with the main/secondary county or counties through commuting ties.

Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA): CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 50,000. The MSA comprises the central county or counties or equivalent entities containing the core, plus adjacent outlying counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the central county or counties as measured through commuting.

Middle-Income: Individual income that is at least 80 percent and less than 120 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 80 and less than 120 percent in the case of a geography.

Moderate-Income: Individual income that is at least 50 percent and less than 80 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 50 and less than 80 percent in the case of a geography.

Multi-family: Refers to a residential structure that contains five or more units.

Nonmetropolitan Area (also known as non-MSA): All areas outside of metropolitan areas. The definition of nonmetropolitan area is not consistent with the definition of rural areas. Urban and rural classifications cut across the other hierarchies. For example, there is generally urban and rural territory within metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas.

XII. Performance Evaluation — Intermediate Small Bank Single-Rated Area

Owner-Occupied Units: Includes units occupied by the owner or co-owner, even if the unit has not been fully paid for or is mortgaged.

Qualified Investment: A lawful investment, deposit, membership share, or grant that has as its primary purpose community development.

Rated Area: A rated area is a state or multistate metropolitan area. For an institution with domestic branches in only one state, the institution's CRA rating would be the state rating. If an institution maintains domestic branches in more than one state, the institution will receive a rating for each state in which those branches are located. If an institution maintains domestic branches in two or more states within a multistate metropolitan area, the institution will receive a rating for the multistate metropolitan area.

Rural Area: Territories, populations, and housing units that are not classified as urban.

Small Business Investment Company (SBIC): SBICs are privately-owned investment companies which are licensed and regulated by the Small Business Administration (SBA). SBICs provide long-term loans and/or venture capital to small firms. Because money for venture or risk investments is difficult for small firms to obtain, SBA provides assistance to SBICs to stimulate and supplement the flow of private equity and long-term loan funds to small companies. Venture capitalists participate in the SBIC program to supplement their own private capital with funds borrowed at favorable rates through SBA's guarantee of SBIC debentures. These SBIC debentures are then sold to private investors. An SBIC's success is linked to the growth and profitability of the companies that it finances. Therefore, some SBICs primarily assist businesses with significant growth potential, such as new firms in innovative industries. SBICs finance small firms by providing straight loans and/or equity-type investments. This kind of financing gives them partial ownership of those businesses and the possibility of sharing in the companies' profits as they grow and prosper.

Small Business Loan: A loan included in "loans to small businesses" as defined in the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $1 million or less and are either secured by nonfarm nonresidential properties or are classified as commercial and industrial loans.

Small Farm Loan: A loan included in "loans to small farms" as defined in the instructions for preparation of the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $500,000 or less and are either secured by farmland, including farm residential and other improvements, or are classified as loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers.

Underserved Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as underserved if it meets criteria for population size, density, and dispersion indicating the area's population is sufficiently small, thin, and distant from a population center that the tract is likely to have difficulty financing the fixed costs of meeting essential community needs.

GLOSSARY

Aggregate Lending: The number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in specified income categories as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Area Median Income: The median family income for the MSA, if a person or geography is located in an MSA; or the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income, if a person or geography is located outside an MSA.

Assessment Area: A geographic area delineated by the bank under the requirements of the Community Reinvestment Act.

Census Tract: A small, relatively permanent statistical subdivision of a county or equivalent entity. The primary purpose of census tracts is to provide a stable set of geographic units for the presentation of statistical data. Census tracts generally have a population size between 1,200 and 8,000 people, with an optimum size of 4,000 people. Census tract boundaries generally follow visible and identifiable features, but they may follow nonvisible legal boundaries in some instances. State and county boundaries always are census tract boundaries.

Combined Statistical Area (CSA): A combination of several adjacent metropolitan statistical areas or micropolitan statistical areas or a mix of the two, which are linked by economic ties.

Community Development: For loans, investments, and services to qualify as community development activities, their primary purpose must:

- (1) Support affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (2) Target community services toward low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (3) Promote economic development by financing small businesses or farms; or
- (4) Provide activities that revitalize or stabilize low- and moderate-income geographies, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies.

Community Development Corporation (CDC): A CDC allows banks and holding companies to make equity type of investments in community development projects. Bank CDCs can develop innovative debt instruments or provide near-equity investments tailored to the development needs of the community. Bank CDCs are also tailored to their financial and marketing needs. A CDC may purchase, own, rehabilitate, construct, manage, and sell real property. Also, it may make equity or debt investments in development projects and in local businesses. The CDC activities are expected to directly benefit low- and moderate-income groups, and the investment dollars should not represent an undue risk on the banking organization.

Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs): CDFIs are private intermediaries (either for profit or nonprofit) with community development as their primary mission. A CDFI facilitates the flow of lending and investment capital into distressed communities and to individuals who have been unable to take advantage of the services offered by traditional financial institutions. Some basic types of CDFIs include community development banks, community development loan funds, community development credit unions, micro enterprise funds, and community development venture capital funds.

A certified CDFI must meet eligibility requirements. These requirements include the following:

- Having a primary mission of promoting community development;
- Serving an investment area or target population;
- Providing development services;
- Maintaining accountability to residents of its investment area or targeted population through representation on its governing board of directors, or by other means;
- Not constituting an agency or instrumentality of the United States, of any state or political subdivision of a state.

Community Development Loan: A loan that:

- (1) Has as its primary purpose community development; and
- (2) Except in the case of a wholesale or limited purpose bank:
 - (i) Has not been reported or collected by the bank or an affiliate for consideration in the bank's assessment area as a home mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loan, unless it is a multifamily dwelling loan (as described in Appendix A to Part 203 of this title); and
 - (ii) Benefits the bank's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area including the bank's assessment area(s).

Community Development Service: A service that:

- (1) Has as its primary purpose community development;
- (2) Is related to the provision of financial services; and
- (3) Has not been considered in the evaluation of the bank's retail banking services under § 345.24(d).

Consumer Loan(s): A loan(s) to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures. A consumer loan does not include a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan. This definition includes the following categories: motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured consumer loans, and other unsecured consumer loans.

Core Based Statistical Area (CBSA): The county or counties or equivalent entities associated with at least one core (urbanized area or urban cluster) of at least 10,000 population, plus adjacent counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the core as measured through commuting ties with the counties associated with the core. Metropolitan and Micropolitan Statistical Areas are the two categories of CBSAs.

Distressed Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as distressed if it is in a county that meets one or more of the following triggers:

- (1) An unemployment rate of at least 1.5 times the national average;
- (2) A poverty rate of 20 percent or more; or

XII. Performance Evaluation — Intermediate Small Bank Multi-Rated Area

- (3) A population loss of 10 percent or more between the previous and most recent decennial census or a net migration loss of 5 percent or more over the 5-year period preceding the most recent census.

Family: Includes a householder and one or more other persons living in the same household who are related to the householder by birth, marriage, or adoption. The number of family households always equals the number of families; however, a family household may also include non-relatives living with the family. Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: A full-scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (e.g., innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. The reports include such data as the race, gender, and the income of applicants; the amount of loan requested; and the disposition of the application (approved, denied, and withdrawn).

Home Mortgage Loans: Includes closed-end mortgage loans or open-end line of credits as defined in the HMDA regulation that are not an excluded transaction per the HMDA regulation.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: A limited-scope review is accomplished when examiners do not complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is often analyzed using only quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

XII. Performance Evaluation — Intermediate Small Bank Multi-Rated Area

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

Low Income Housing Tax Credit: The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit Program is a housing program contained within the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended. It is administered by the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service. The U.S. Treasury Department distributes low-income housing tax credits to housing credit agencies through the Internal Revenue Service. The housing agencies allocate tax credits on a competitive basis.

Developers who acquire, rehabilitate, or construct low-income rental housing may keep their tax credits. Or, they may sell them to corporations or investor groups, who, as owners of these properties, will be able to reduce their own federal tax payments. The credit can be claimed annually for ten consecutive years. For a project to be eligible, the developer must set aside a specific percentage of units for occupancy by low-income residents. The set-aside requirement remains throughout the compliance period, usually 30 years.

Market Share: The number of loans originated and purchased by the institution as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Median Income: The median income divides the income distribution into two equal parts, one having incomes above the median and other having incomes below the median.

Metropolitan Division (MD): A county or group of counties within a CBSA that contain(s) an urbanized area with a population of at least 2.5 million. A MD is one or more main/secondary counties representing an employment center or centers, plus adjacent counties associated with the main/secondary county or counties through commuting ties.

Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA): CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 50,000. The MSA comprises the central county or counties or equivalent entities containing the core, plus adjacent outlying counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the central county or counties as measured through commuting.

Middle-Income: Individual income that is at least 80 percent and less than 120 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 80 and less than 120 percent in the case of a geography.

Moderate-Income: Individual income that is at least 50 percent and less than 80 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 50 and less than 80 percent in the case of a geography.

Multi-family: Refers to a residential structure that contains five or more units.

Nonmetropolitan Area (also known as non-MSA): All areas outside of metropolitan areas. The definition of nonmetropolitan area is not consistent with the definition of rural areas. Urban and rural classifications cut across the other hierarchies. For example, there is generally urban and rural territory within metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas.

XII. Performance Evaluation — Intermediate Small Bank Multi-Rated Area

Owner-Occupied Units: Includes units occupied by the owner or co-owner, even if the unit has not been fully paid for or is mortgaged.

Qualified Investment: A lawful investment, deposit, membership share, or grant that has as its primary purpose community development.

Rated Area: A rated area is a state or multistate metropolitan area. For an institution with domestic branches in only one state, the institution's CRA rating would be the state rating. If an institution maintains domestic branches in more than one state, the institution will receive a rating for each state in which those branches are located. If an institution maintains domestic branches in two or more states within a multistate metropolitan area, the institution will receive a rating for the multistate metropolitan area.

Rural Area: Territories, populations, and housing units that are not classified as urban.

Small Business Investment Company (SBIC): SBICs are privately-owned investment companies which are licensed and regulated by the Small Business Administration (SBA). SBICs provide long-term loans and/or venture capital to small firms. Because money for venture or risk investments is difficult for small firms to obtain, SBA provides assistance to SBICs to stimulate and supplement the flow of private equity and long-term loan funds to small companies. Venture capitalists participate in the SBIC program to supplement their own private capital with funds borrowed at favorable rates through SBA's guarantee of SBIC debentures. These SBIC debentures are then sold to private investors. An SBIC's success is linked to the growth and profitability of the companies that it finances. Therefore, some SBICs primarily assist businesses with significant growth potential, such as new firms in innovative industries. SBICs finance small firms by providing straight loans and/or equity-type investments. This kind of financing gives them partial ownership of those businesses and the possibility of sharing in the companies' profits as they grow and prosper.

Small Business Loan: A loan included in "loans to small businesses" as defined in the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $1 million or less and are either secured by nonfarm nonresidential properties or are classified as commercial and industrial loans.

Small Farm Loan: A loan included in "loans to small farms" as defined in the instructions for preparation of the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $500,000 or less and are either secured by farmland, including farm residential and other improvements, or are classified as loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers.

Underserved Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as underserved if it meets criteria for population size, density, and dispersion indicating the area's population is sufficiently small, thin, and distant from a population center that the tract is likely to have difficulty financing the fixed costs of meeting essential community needs.

Upper-Income: Individual income that is 120 percent or more of the area median income, or a median family income that is 120 percent or more in the case of a geography.

Urban Area: All territories, populations, and housing units in urbanized areas and in places of 2,500 or more persons outside urbanized areas. More specifically, “urban” consists of territory, persons, and housing units in places of 2,500 or more persons incorporated as cities, villages, boroughs (except in Alaska and New York), and towns (except in the New England states, New York, and Wisconsin).

“Urban” excludes the rural portions of “extended cities”; census designated place of 2,500 or more persons; and other territory, incorporated or unincorporated, including in urbanized areas.

LARGE BANK PERFORMANCE CRITERIA

Lending Test

The Lending Test evaluates the bank's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) through its lending activities by considering a bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and community development lending. If consumer lending constitutes a substantial majority of a bank's business, the FDIC will evaluate the bank's consumer lending in one or more of the following categories: motor vehicle, credit card, other secured, and other unsecured. The bank's lending performance is evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The number and amount of the bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and consumer loans, if applicable, in the bank's assessment area;
- 2) The geographic distribution of the bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and consumer loans, if applicable, based on the loan location, including:
 - i. The proportion of the bank's lending in the bank's assessment area(s);
 - ii. The dispersion of lending in the bank's assessment areas(s); and
 - iii. The number and amount of loans in low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income geographies in the bank's assessment area(s);
- 3) The distribution, particularly in the bank's assessment area(s), of the bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and consumer loans, if applicable, based on borrower characteristics, including the number and amount of:
 - i. Home mortgage loans low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income individuals
 - ii. Small business and small farm loans to businesses and farms with gross annual revenues of $1 million or less;
 - iii. Small business and small farm loans by loan amount at origination; and
 - iv. Consumer loans, if applicable, to low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income individuals;
- 4) The bank's community development lending, including the number and amount of community development loans, and their complexity and innovativeness; and
- 5) The bank's use of innovative or flexible lending practices in a safe and sound manner to address the credit needs of low- and moderate-income individuals or geographies.

Investment Test

The Investment Test evaluates the institution's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) through qualified investments that benefit its assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the bank's assessment area(s). Activities considered under the Lending or Service Test may not be considered under the investment test. The bank's investment performance is evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The dollar amount of qualified investments;
- 2) The innovativeness or complexity of qualified investments;
- 3) The responsiveness of qualified investments to available opportunities; and
- 4) The degree to which qualified investments are not routinely provided by private investors.

Service Test

The Service Test evaluates the bank's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) by analyzing both the availability and effectiveness of the bank's systems for delivering retail banking services and the extent and innovativeness of its community development services.

The bank's retail banking services are evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The current distribution of the bank's branches among low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies;
- 2) In the context of its current distribution of the bank's branches, the bank's record of opening and closing branches, particularly branches located in low- or moderate-income geographies or primarily serving low- or moderate-income individuals;
- 3) The availability and effectiveness of alternative systems for delivering retail banking services (e.g., RSFs, RSFs not owned or operated by or exclusively for the bank, banking by telephone or computer, loan production offices, and bank-at-work or bank-by-mail programs) in low- and moderate-income geographies and to low- and moderate-income individuals; and
- 4) The range of services provided in low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies and the degree to which the services are tailored to meet the needs of those geographies.

The bank's community development services are evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The extent to which the bank provides community development services; and
- 2) The innovativeness and responsiveness of community development services.

Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: A full-scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (e.g., innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. The reports include such data as the race, gender, and the income of applicants; the amount of loan requested; and the disposition of the application (approved, denied, and withdrawn).

Home Mortgage Loans: Includes closed-end mortgage loans or open-end line of credits as defined in the HMDA regulation that are not an excluded transaction per the HMDA regulation.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: A limited scope review is accomplished when examiners do not complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is often analyzed using only quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

Low Income Housing Tax Credit: The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit Program is a housing program contained within the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended. It is administered by the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service. The U.S. Treasury Department distributes low-income housing tax credits to housing credit agencies through the Internal Revenue Service. The housing agencies allocate tax credits on a competitive basis.

Developers who acquire, rehabilitate, or construct low-income rental housing may keep their tax credits. Or, they may sell them to corporations or investor groups, who, as owners of these properties, will be able to reduce their own federal tax payments. The credit can be claimed annually for ten consecutive years. For a project to be eligible, the developer must set aside a specific percentage of units for occupancy by low-income residents. The set-aside requirement remains throughout the compliance period, usually 30 years.

Market Share: The number of loans originated and purchased by the institution as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Median Income: The median income divides the income distribution into two equal parts, one having incomes above the median and other having incomes below the median.

Metropolitan Division (MD): A county or group of counties within a CBSA that contain(s) an urbanized area with a population of at least 2.5 million. A MD is one or more main/secondary counties representing an employment center or centers, plus adjacent counties associated with the main/secondary county or counties through commuting ties.

Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA): CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 50,000. The MSA comprises the central county or counties or equivalent entities containing the core, plus adjacent outlying counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the central county or counties as measured through commuting.

Micropolitan Statistical Area: CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 10,000, but less than 50,000.

Middle-Income: Individual income that is at least 80 percent and less than 120 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 80 and less than 120 percent in the case of a geography.

Moderate-Income: Individual income that is at least 50 percent and less than 80 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 50 and less than 80 percent in the case of a geography.

Multi-family: Refers to a residential structure that contains five or more units.

XII. Performance Evaluation — Large Bank Single-Rated Area

Nonmetropolitan Area (also known as non-MSA): All areas outside of metropolitan areas. The definition of nonmetropolitan area is not consistent with the definition of rural areas. Urban and rural classifications cut across the other hierarchies. For example, there is generally urban and rural territory within metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas.

Owner-Occupied Units: Includes units occupied by the owner or co-owner, even if the unit has not been fully paid for or is mortgaged.

Qualified Investment: A lawful investment, deposit, membership share, or grant that has as its primary purpose community development.

Rated Area: A rated area is a state or multistate metropolitan area. For an institution with domestic branches in only one state, the institution's CRA rating would be the state rating. If an institution maintains domestic branches in more than one state, the institution will receive a rating for each state in which those branches are located. If an institution maintains domestic branches in two or more states within a multistate metropolitan area, the institution will receive a rating for the multistate metropolitan area.

Rural Area: Territories, populations, and housing units that are not classified as urban.

Small Business Investment Company (SBIC): SBICs are privately-owned investment companies which are licensed and regulated by the Small Business Administration (SBA). SBICs provide long-term loans and/or venture capital to small firms. Because money for venture or risk investments is difficult for small firms to obtain, SBA provides assistance to SBICs to stimulate and supplement the flow of private equity and long-term loan funds to small companies. Venture capitalists participate in the SBIC program to supplement their own private capital with funds borrowed at favorable rates through SBA's guarantee of SBIC debentures. These SBIC debentures are then sold to private investors. An SBIC's success is linked to the growth and profitability of the companies that it finances. Therefore, some SBICs primarily assist businesses with significant growth potential, such as new firms in innovative industries. SBICs finance small firms by providing straight loans and/or equity-type investments. This kind of financing gives them partial ownership of those businesses and the possibility of sharing in the companies' profits as they grow and prosper.

Small Business Loan: A loan included in "loans to small businesses" as defined in the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $1 million or less and are either secured by nonfarm nonresidential properties or are classified as commercial and industrial loans.

Small Farm Loan: A loan included in "loans to small farms" as defined in the instructions for preparation of the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $500,000 or less and are either secured by farmland, including farm residential and other improvements, or are classified as loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers.

Underserved Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as underserved if it meets criteria for population size, density, and dispersion indicating the area's population is sufficiently small, thin, and distant from a population center that the tract is likely to have difficulty financing the fixed costs of meeting essential community needs.

Upper-Income: Individual income that is 120 percent or more of the area median income, or a median family income that is 120 percent or more in the case of a geography.

Urban Area: All territories, populations, and housing units in urbanized areas and in places of 2,500 or more persons outside urbanized areas. More specifically, "urban" consists of territory, persons, and housing units in places of 2,500 or more persons incorporated as cities, villages, boroughs (except in Alaska and New York), and towns (except in the New England states, New York, and Wisconsin).

"Urban" excludes the rural portions of "extended cities"; census designated place of 2,500 or more persons; and other territory, incorporated or unincorporated, including in urbanized areas.

LARGE BANK PERFORMANCE CRITERIA

Lending Test

The Lending Test evaluates the bank's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) through its lending activities by considering a bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and community development lending. If consumer lending constitutes a substantial majority of a bank's business, the FDIC will evaluate the bank's consumer lending in one or more of the following categories: motor vehicle, credit card, other secured, and other unsecured. The bank's lending performance is evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The number and amount of the bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and consumer loans, if applicable, in the bank's assessment area;
- 2) The geographic distribution of the bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and consumer loans, if applicable, based on the loan location, including:
 - i. The proportion of the bank's lending in the bank's assessment area(s);
 - ii. The dispersion of lending in the bank's assessment areas(s); and
 - iii. The number and amount of loans in low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income geographies in the bank's assessment area(s);
- 3) The distribution, particularly in the bank's assessment area(s), of the bank's home mortgage, small business, small farm, and consumer loans, if applicable, based on borrower characteristics, including the number and amount of:
 - i. Home mortgage loans low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income individuals
 - ii. Small business and small farm loans to businesses and farms with gross annual revenues of $1 million or less;
 - iii. Small business and small farm loans by loan amount at origination; and
 - iv. Consumer loans, if applicable, to low-, moderate-, middle- and upper-income individuals;
- 4) The bank's community development lending, including the number and amount of community development loans, and their complexity and innovativeness; and
- 5) The bank's use of innovative or flexible lending practices in a safe and sound manner to address the credit needs of low- and moderate-income individuals or geographies.

Investment Test

The Investment Test evaluates the institution's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) through qualified investments that benefit its assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area that includes the bank's assessment area(s). Activities considered under the Lending or Service Test may not be considered under the investment test. The bank's investment performance is evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The dollar amount of qualified investments;
- 2) The innovativeness or complexity of qualified investments;
- 3) The responsiveness of qualified investments to available opportunities; and
- 4) The degree to which qualified investments are not routinely provided by private investors.

Service Test

The Service Test evaluates the bank's record of helping to meet the credit needs of its assessment area(s) by analyzing both the availability and effectiveness of the bank's systems for delivering retail banking services and the extent and innovativeness of its community development services.

The bank's retail banking services are evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The current distribution of the bank's branches among low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies;
- 2) In the context of its current distribution of the bank's branches, the bank's record of opening and closing branches, particularly branches located in low- or moderate-income geographies or primarily serving low- or moderate-income individuals;
- 3) The availability and effectiveness of alternative systems for delivering retail banking services (e.g., RSFs, RSFs not owned or operated by or exclusively for the bank, banking by telephone or computer, loan production offices, and bank-at-work or bank-by-mail programs) in low- and moderate-income geographies and to low- and moderate-income individuals; and
- 4) The range of services provided in low-, moderate-, middle-, and upper-income geographies and the degree to which the services are tailored to meet the needs of those geographies.

The bank's community development services are evaluated pursuant to the following criteria:

- 1) The extent to which the bank provides community development services; and
- 2) The innovativeness and responsiveness of community development services.

DESCRIPTION OF LIMITED-SCOPE ASSESSMENT AREAS

GLOSSARY

Aggregate Lending: The number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in specified income categories as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Area Median Income: The median family income for the MSA, if a person or geography is located in an MSA; or the statewide nonmetropolitan median family income, if a person or geography is located outside an MSA.

Assessment Area: A geographic area delineated by the bank under the requirements of the Community Reinvestment Act.

Census Tract: A small, relatively permanent statistical subdivision of a county or equivalent entity. The primary purpose of census tracts is to provide a stable set of geographic units for the presentation of statistical data. Census tracts generally have a population size between 1,200 and 8,000 people, with an optimum size of 4,000 people. Census tract boundaries generally follow visible and identifiable features, but they may follow nonvisible legal boundaries in some instances. State and county boundaries always are census tract boundaries.

Combined Statistical Area (CSA): A combination of several adjacent metropolitan statistical areas or micropolitan statistical areas or a mix of the two, which are linked by economic ties.

Community Development: For loans, investments, and services to qualify as community development activities, their primary purpose must:

- (1) Support affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (2) Target community services toward low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (3) Promote economic development by financing small businesses or farms; or
- (4) Provide activities that revitalize or stabilize low- and moderate-income geographies, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies.

Community Development Corporation (CDC): A CDC allows banks and holding companies to make equity type of investments in community development projects. Bank CDCs can develop innovative debt instruments or provide near-equity investments tailored to the development needs of the community. Bank CDCs are also tailored to their financial and marketing needs. A CDC may purchase, own, rehabilitate, construct, manage, and sell real property. Also, it may make equity or debt investments in development projects and in local businesses. The CDC activities are expected to directly benefit low- and moderate-income groups, and the investment dollars should not represent an undue risk on the banking organization.

Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs): CDFIs are private intermediaries (either for profit or nonprofit) with community development as their primary mission. A CDFI facilitates the flow of lending and investment capital into distressed communities and to individuals who have been unable to take advantage of the services offered by traditional financial institutions. Some basic types of CDFIs include community development banks, community development loan funds, community development credit unions, micro enterprise funds, and community development venture capital funds.

A certified CDFI must meet eligibility requirements. These requirements include the following:

- Having a primary mission of promoting community development;
- Serving an investment area or target population;
- Providing development services;
- Maintaining accountability to residents of its investment area or targeted population through representation on its governing board of directors, or by other means;
- Not constituting an agency or instrumentality of the United States, of any state or political subdivision of a state.

Community Development Loan: A loan that:

- (1) Has as its primary purpose community development; and
- (2) Except in the case of a wholesale or limited purpose bank:
 - (i) Has not been reported or collected by the bank or an affiliate for consideration in the bank's assessment area as a home mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loan, unless it is a multifamily dwelling loan (as described in Appendix A to Part 203 of this title); and
 - (ii) Benefits the bank's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area including the bank's assessment area(s).

Community Development Service: A service that:

- (1) Has as its primary purpose community development;
- (2) Is related to the provision of financial services; and
- (3) Has not been considered in the evaluation of the bank's retail banking services under § 345.24(d).

Consumer Loan(s): A loan(s) to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures. A consumer loan does not include a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan. This definition includes the following categories: motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured consumer loans, and other unsecured consumer loans.

Core Based Statistical Area (CBSA): The county or counties or equivalent entities associated with at least one core (urbanized area or urban cluster) of at least 10,000 population, plus adjacent counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the core as measured through commuting ties with the counties associated with the core. Metropolitan and Micropolitan Statistical Areas are the two categories of CBSAs.

Distressed Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as distressed if it is in a county that meets one or more of the following triggers:

- (1) An unemployment rate of at least 1.5 times the national average;
- (2) A poverty rate of 20 percent or more; or

- (3) A population loss of 10 percent or more between the previous and most recent decennial census or a net migration loss of 5 percent or more over the 5-year period preceding the most recent census.

Family: Includes a householder and one or more other persons living in the same household who are related to the householder by birth, marriage, or adoption. The number of family households always equals the number of families; however, a family household may also include non-relatives living with the family. Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: A full-scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (for example, geographic distribution, borrower profile, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (for example, innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. The reports include such data as the race, gender, and the income of applicants; the amount of loan requested; and the disposition of the application (approved, denied, and withdrawn).

Home Mortgage Loans: Includes closed-end mortgage loans or open-end line of credits as defined in the HMDA regulation that are not an excluded transaction per the HMDA regulation.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: A limited scope review is accomplished when examiners do not complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is often analyzed using only quantitative factors (for example, geographic distribution, borrower profile, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

XII. Performance Evaluation — Large Bank Multi-Rated Area

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

The primary purpose of census tracts is to provide a stable set of geographic units for the presentation of statistical data. Census tracts generally have a population size between 1,200 and 8,000 people, with an optimum size of 4,000 people. Census tract boundaries generally follow visible and identifiable features, but they may follow nonvisible legal boundaries in some instances. State and county boundaries always are census tract boundaries.

Combined Statistical Area (CSA): A combination of several adjacent metropolitan statistical areas or micropolitan statistical areas or a mix of the two, which are linked by economic ties.

Community Development: For loans, investments, and services to qualify as community development activities, their primary purpose must:

- (1) Support affordable housing for low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (2) Target community services toward low- and moderate-income individuals;
- (3) Promote economic development by financing small businesses or farms; or
- (4) Provide activities that revitalize or stabilize low- and moderate-income geographies, designated disaster areas, or distressed or underserved nonmetropolitan middle-income geographies.

Community Development Corporation (CDC): A CDC allows banks and holding companies to make equity type of investments in community development projects. Bank CDCs can develop innovative debt instruments or provide near-equity investments tailored to the development needs of the community. Bank CDCs are also tailored to their financial and marketing needs. A CDC may purchase, own, rehabilitate, construct, manage, and sell real property. Also, it may make equity or debt investments in development projects and in local businesses. The CDC activities are expected to directly benefit low- and moderate-income groups, and the investment dollars should not represent an undue risk on the banking organization.

Community Development Financial Institutions (CDFIs): CDFIs are private intermediaries (either for profit or nonprofit) with community development as their primary mission. A CDFI facilitates the flow of lending and investment capital into distressed communities and to individuals who have been unable to take advantage of the services offered by traditional financial institutions. Some basic types of CDFIs include community development banks, community development loan funds, community development credit unions, micro enterprise funds, and community development venture capital funds.

A certified CDFI must meet eligibility requirements. These requirements include the following:

- Having a primary mission of promoting community development;
- Serving an investment area or target population;
- Providing development services;
- Maintaining accountability to residents of its investment area or targeted population through representation on its governing board of directors, or by other means;
- Not constituting an agency or instrumentality of the United States, of any state or political subdivision of a state.

Community Development Loan: A loan that:

- (1) Has as its primary purpose community development; and
- (2) Except in the case of a wholesale or limited purpose bank:
 - (i) Has not been reported or collected by the bank or an affiliate for consideration in the bank's assessment area as a home mortgage, small business, small farm, or consumer loan, unless it is a multifamily dwelling loan (as described in Appendix A to Part 203 of this title); and
 - (ii) Benefits the bank's assessment area(s) or a broader statewide or regional area including the bank's assessment area(s).

Community Development Service: A service that:

- (1) Has as its primary purpose community development;
- (2) Is related to the provision of financial services; and
- (3) Has not been considered in the evaluation of the bank's retail banking services under § 345.24(d).

Consumer Loan(s): A loan(s) to one or more individuals for household, family, or other personal expenditures. A consumer loan does not include a home mortgage, small business, or small farm loan. This definition includes the following categories: motor vehicle loans, credit card loans, home equity loans, other secured consumer loans, and other unsecured consumer loans.

Core Based Statistical Area (CBSA): The county or counties or equivalent entities associated with at least one core (urbanized area or urban cluster) of at least 10,000 population, plus adjacent counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the core as measured through commuting ties with the counties associated with the core. Metropolitan and Micropolitan Statistical Areas are the two categories of CBSAs.

Distressed Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as distressed if it is in a county that meets one or more of the following triggers:

- (1) An unemployment rate of at least 1.5 times the national average;
- (2) A poverty rate of 20 percent or more; or

- (3) A population loss of 10 percent or more between the previous and most recent decennial census or a net migration loss of 5 percent or more over the 5-year period preceding the most recent census.

Family: Includes a householder and one or more other persons living in the same household who are related to the householder by birth, marriage, or adoption. The number of family households always equals the number of families; however, a family household may also include non-relatives living with the family. Families are classified by type as either a married-couple family or other family. Other family is further classified into “male householder” (a family with a male householder and no wife present) or “female householder” (a family with a female householder and no husband present).

FFIEC-Estimated Income Data: The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC) issues annual estimates which update median family income from the metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas. The FFIEC uses American Community Survey data and factors in information from other sources to arrive at an annual estimate that more closely reflects current economic conditions.

Full-Scope Review: A full-scope review is accomplished when examiners complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is analyzed considering performance context, quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, and total number and dollar amount of investments), and qualitative factors (e.g., innovativeness, complexity, and responsiveness).

Geography: A census tract delineated by the United States Bureau of the Census in the most recent decennial census.

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA): The statute that requires certain mortgage lenders that do business or have banking offices in a metropolitan statistical area to file annual summary reports of their mortgage lending activity. The reports include such data as the race, gender, and the income of applicants; the amount of loan requested; and the disposition of the application (approved, denied, and withdrawn).

Home Mortgage Loans: Includes closed-end mortgage loans or open-end line of credits as defined in the HMDA regulation that are not an excluded transaction per the HMDA regulation.

Housing Unit: Includes a house, an apartment, a mobile home, a group of rooms, or a single room that is occupied as separate living quarters.

Limited-Scope Review: A limited scope review is accomplished when examiners do not complete all applicable interagency examination procedures for an assessment area. Performance under applicable tests is often analyzed using only quantitative factors (e.g., geographic distribution, borrower profile, total number and dollar amount of investments, and branch distribution).

XII. Performance Evaluation — Strategic Plan

Low-Income: Individual income that is less than 50 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is less than 50 percent in the case of a geography.

Low Income Housing Tax Credit: The Low-Income Housing Tax Credit Program is a housing program contained within the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended. It is administered by the U.S. Department of the Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service. The U.S. Treasury Department distributes low-income housing tax credits to housing credit agencies through the Internal Revenue Service. The housing agencies allocate tax credits on a competitive basis.

Developers who acquire, rehabilitate, or construct low-income rental housing may keep their tax credits. Or, they may sell them to corporations or investor groups, who, as owners of these properties, will be able to reduce their own federal tax payments. The credit can be claimed annually for ten consecutive years. For a project to be eligible, the developer must set aside a specific percentage of units for occupancy by low-income residents. The set-aside requirement remains throughout the compliance period, usually 30 years.

Market Share: The number of loans originated and purchased by the institution as a percentage of the aggregate number of loans originated and purchased by all reporting lenders in the metropolitan area/assessment area.

Median Income: The median income divides the income distribution into two equal parts, one having incomes above the median and other having incomes below the median.

Metropolitan Division (MD): A county or group of counties within a CBSA that contain(s) an urbanized area with a population of at least 2.5 million. A MD is one or more main/secondary counties representing an employment center or centers, plus adjacent counties associated with the main/secondary county or counties through commuting ties.

Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA): CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 50,000. The MSA comprises the central county or counties or equivalent entities containing the core, plus adjacent outlying counties having a high degree of social and economic integration with the central county or counties as measured through commuting.

Micropolitan Statistical Area: CBSA associated with at least one urbanized area having a population of at least 10,000, but less than 50,000.

Middle-Income: Individual income that is at least 80 percent and less than 120 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 80 and less than 120 percent in the case of a geography.

Moderate-Income: Individual income that is at least 50 percent and less than 80 percent of the area median income, or a median family income that is at least 50 and less than 80 percent in the case of a geography.

Multi-family: Refers to a residential structure that contains five or more units.

Nonmetropolitan Area (also known as non-MSA): All areas outside of metropolitan areas. The definition of nonmetropolitan area is not consistent with the definition of rural areas. Urban and rural classifications cut across the other hierarchies. For example, there is generally urban and rural territory within metropolitan and nonmetropolitan areas.

Owner-Occupied Units: Includes units occupied by the owner or co-owner, even if the unit has not been fully paid for or is mortgaged.

Qualified Investment: A lawful investment, deposit, membership share, or grant that has as its primary purpose community development.

Rated Area: A rated area is a state or multistate metropolitan area. For an institution with domestic branches in only one state, the institution's CRA rating would be the state rating. If an institution maintains domestic branches in more than one state, the institution will receive a rating for each state in which those branches are located. If an institution maintains domestic branches in two or more states within a multistate metropolitan area, the institution will receive a rating for the multistate metropolitan area.

Rural Area: Territories, populations, and housing units that are not classified as urban.

Small Business Investment Company (SBIC): SBICs are privately-owned investment companies which are licensed and regulated by the Small Business Administration (SBA). SBICs provide long-term loans and/or venture capital to small firms. Because money for venture or risk investments is difficult for small firms to obtain, SBA provides assistance to SBICs to stimulate and supplement the flow of private equity and long-term loan funds to small companies. Venture capitalists participate in the SBIC program to supplement their own private capital with funds borrowed at favorable rates through SBA's guarantee of SBIC debentures. These SBIC debentures are then sold to private investors. An SBIC's success is linked to the growth and profitability of the companies that it finances. Therefore, some SBICs primarily assist businesses with significant growth potential, such as new firms in innovative industries. SBICs finance small firms by providing straight loans and/or equity-type investments. This kind of financing gives them partial ownership of those businesses and the possibility of sharing in the companies' profits as they grow and prosper.

Small Business Loan: A loan included in "loans to small businesses" as defined in the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $1 million or less and are either secured by nonfarm nonresidential properties or are classified as commercial and industrial loans.

Small Farm Loan: A loan included in "loans to small farms" as defined in the instructions for preparation of the Consolidated Report of Condition and Income (Call Report). These loans have original amounts of $500,000 or less and are either secured by farmland, including farm residential and other improvements, or are classified as loans to finance agricultural production and other loans to farmers.

XII. Performance Evaluation — Strategic Plan

Underserved Middle-Income Nonmetropolitan Geographies: A nonmetropolitan middle-income geography will be designated as underserved if it meets criteria for population size, density, and dispersion indicating the area’s population is sufficiently small, thin, and distant from a population center that the tract is likely to have difficulty financing the fixed costs of meeting essential community needs.

Upper-Income: Individual income that is 120 percent or more of the area median income, or a median family income that is 120 percent or more in the case of a geography.

Urban Area: All territories, populations, and housing units in urbanized areas and in places of 2,500 or more persons outside urbanized areas. More specifically, “urban” consists of territory, persons, and housing units in places of 2,500 or more persons incorporated as cities, villages, boroughs (except in Alaska and New York), and towns (except in the New England states, New York, and Wisconsin).

“Urban” excludes the rural portions of “extended cities”; census designated place of 2,500 or more persons; and other territory, incorporated or unincorporated, including in urbanized areas.
