 - d. Provide owners and assignees of mortgage loans with accurate information and documents about all the mortgage loans that they own. This includes information about a servicer's evaluations of borrowers for loss mitigation options and a servicer's loss mitigation agreements with borrowers, including loan modifications. Such information includes, for example: (a) a loan modification's date, terms, and features; (b) the components of any capitalized arrears; (c) the amount of any servicer advances; and (d) any assumptions regarding the value of property used in evaluating any loss mitigation options.
 - e. Submit documents or filings required for a foreclosure process, including documents or filings required by a court, that reflect accurate and current information and that comply with applicable law.
 - f.
 1. Upon notification of a borrower's death, promptly identify and facilitate communication with the borrower's successor in interest concerning the secured property. (Effective until April 19, 2018).
 2. Upon receiving notice of a borrower's death or of any transfer of the secured property, promptly facilitate communication with any potential or confirmed successors in interest regarding the property. (Effective April 19, 2018).
 - g. Upon receiving notice of the existence of a potential successor in interest, promptly determine the documents the servicer reasonably requires to confirm the person's identity and ownership interest in the property (see commentary to 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(1)(vi) for illustrative examples) and promptly provide to the potential successor in interest a description of those documents and how the person may submit a written request under 12 CFR 1024.36(i). (Effective April 19, 2018).
 - h. Upon the receipt of such documents, promptly make a confirmation determination and promptly notify the person, as applicable, that the servicer has confirmed the person's status, has determined that additional documents are required (and what those documents are), or has determined that the person is not a successor in interest. (Effective April 19, 2018).
- II. Properly evaluating loss mitigation applications. The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can:
- a. Provide accurate information regarding loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the owner or assignee of the borrower's loan.
 - b. Identify specifically all loss mitigation options available to a borrower from the owner or assignee of the borrower's mortgage loan. This includes identifying, with respect to each owner or assignee all of the loss mitigation options the servicer may consider when evaluating a borrower, as well as the criteria the servicer should apply for each option. The policies and procedures should be reasonably designed to address how the servicer will apply any specific thresholds for eligibility for particular loss mitigation options established by an owner or assignee of a mortgage loan (e.g., if the owner requires that a particular option be limited to a certain percentage of loans, then the policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to determine in advance how the servicer will apply that threshold). The policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that such information is readily accessible to the servicer's loss mitigation personnel.
 - c. Provide the loss mitigation personnel assigned to the borrower's mortgage loan with prompt access to all of the documents and information that the borrower submitted in connection with a loss mitigation option.
 - d. Identify the documents and information a borrower must submit to complete a loss mitigation application, and facilitate compliance with the notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B).
 - e. In response to a complete loss mitigation application, properly evaluate the borrower for all eligible loss mitigation options pursuant to any requirements established by the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan, even if those requirements are otherwise beyond the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41. For example, an owner or assignee may require that the servicer review a loss mitigation application submitted less than 37 days before a foreclosure sale or re-evaluate a borrower who has demonstrated a material change in financial circumstances.
 - f. Promptly identify and obtain documents or information not in the borrower's control that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, to offer the borrower in accordance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4).
- III. Facilitating oversight of, and compliance by, service providers. The servicer's policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can:
- a. Provide appropriate personnel with access to accurate and current documents and information concerning service providers' actions.

- b. Facilitate periodic reviews of service providers.
- c. Facilitate the sharing of accurate and current information regarding the status of any evaluation of a borrower’s loss mitigation application and any foreclosure proceeding among appropriate servicer personnel, including the loss mitigation personnel assigned the borrower’s mortgage loan, and appropriate service provider personnel, including service provider personnel responsible for handling foreclosure proceedings.
 - o Further a servicer’s policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that servicer personnel promptly inform service provider personnel handling foreclosure proceedings that the servicer has received a complete loss mitigation application and promptly instruct foreclosure counsel to take any step required by 12 CFR 1024.41(g)—which generally sets forth limitations on moving for judgment or order of sale, or conducting a foreclosure sale—sufficiently timely to avoid violating the prohibition against moving for judgment or order of sale, or conducting a foreclosure sale.(Comment 38(b)(3)(iii)-1).

IV. Facilitating transfer of information during servicing transfers.

- a. Transferor Servicer. The servicer’s policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that when it transfers a mortgage loan to another servicer, it (i) timely and accurately transfers all information and documents in its possession and control related to a transferred mortgage loan to the transferee servicer, and (ii) transfers the information and documents in a form and manner that ensures their accuracy and that allows the transferee to comply with the terms of the mortgage loan and applicable law. For example, where data is transferred electronically, a transferor servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that data can be properly and promptly boarded by a transferee servicer’s electronic systems. The information that must be transferred includes information reflecting the current status of discussions with the borrower concerning loss mitigation options, any loss mitigation agreements entered into with the borrower, and analysis the servicer performed with respect to potential recovery from a non-performing mortgage loan.
- b. Transferee Servicer. The servicer’s policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that when it receives a mortgage loan from another servicer, it can (i) identify necessary documents or information that may not have been transferred, and (ii) obtain such documentation or information from the transferor servicer. The servicer’s policies and procedures must also be reasonably designed to address obtaining missing information regarding loss mitigation from the transferor servicer before attempting to obtain it from the borrower. For example, if a servicer receives information indicating that a borrower has made payments consistent with a trial or permanent loan modification but the servicer has not received information about the actual modification, the servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to identify whether any such modification agreement exists and to obtain any such agreement from the transferor servicer.

V. Informing borrowers of the written error resolution and information request procedures.

- a. The servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to inform borrowers of the procedures for submitting written error notices under 12 CFR 1024.35 and written information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36. A servicer may comply with these requirements by informing borrowers of these procedures by notice (mailed or delivered electronically) or a website. For example, a servicer may comply with this provision by including a statement in the 12 CFR 1026.41 periodic statement advising borrowers that they have certain rights under federal law related to resolving errors and requesting information, that they may learn more about their rights by contacting the servicer, and directing borrowers to a website.
- b. A servicer’s policies and procedures also must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer provides borrowers who are dissatisfied with the servicer’s response to oral complaints or information requests with information about submitting a written error notice or written information request.
- c. The commentary addresses the circumstance in which a borrower incorrectly submits an error notice to any address given to the borrower in connection with the submission of a loss mitigation application or continuity of contact. A servicer’s policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer informs a borrower of the correct procedures for submitting written error notices under such circumstances, including the correct address. Alternatively, the servicer could redirect the error notice to the correct address.

Standard Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.38(c)

Servicers must also retain certain records and maintain particular documents in a manner that facilitates compiling such documents and data into a servicing file.

V. Lending — RESPA

Record Retention – 12 CFR 1024.38(c)(1)

Servicers must retain records that document any actions the servicer took with respect to a borrower's mortgage loan account until one year after the loan is discharged or the servicer transfers servicing for the mortgage loan. Servicers may use any retention method that reproduces records accurately (such as computer programs) and that ensures that a servicer can access the records easily (such as a contractual right to access records another entity holds).

Servicing File – 12 CFR 1024.38(c)(2)

Servicers must maintain the following documents and data in a manner that facilitates compiling such documents and data into a servicing file within five days: a schedule of all credits and debits to the account (including escrow accounts and suspense accounts), a copy of the security instrument establishing the lien securing the mortgage, any notes created by servicer personnel concerning communications with the borrower, a report of the data fields created by the servicer's electronic systems relating to the borrower's account (if applicable), and copies of any information or documents provided by the borrower in connection with error notices or loss mitigation.

For purposes of this section, a report of data fields relating to a borrower's account means a report listing the relevant data fields by name, populated with any specific data relating to the borrower's account. Examples of such data fields include fields used to identify the terms of the borrower's mortgage loan, the occurrence of automated or manual collection calls, the evaluation of borrower for a loss mitigation option, the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan, and any credit reporting history.

These requirements apply only to information created on or after January 10, 2014.

Early Intervention Requirements for Certain Borrowers – 12 CFR 1024.39

Servicers must engage in certain efforts to contact delinquent borrowers. These requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence. The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii) if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5, or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor.

The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Qualified lenders are those defined to be qualified lenders under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and the Farm Credit Administration's accompanying regulations set forth at 12 CFR 617.7000 et seq.

For purposes of this section, a borrower who is performing under a loss mitigation agreement is not considered delinquent and is not covered by this section.

Live Contact – 12 CFR 1024.39(a)

Servicers must make good faith efforts to establish live contact with a borrower no later than the 36th day of delinquency. The servicer's live contact requirement is continuous so long as the borrower remains delinquent.

Under 12 CFR 1024.31, "delinquency" for Subpart C's provisions means a period of time during which a borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent. A borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent beginning on the date a periodic payment sufficient to cover principal, interest, and, if applicable, escrow becomes due and unpaid, until such time as no periodic payment is due and unpaid. See also the related commentary to 1024.31 for more on the delinquency definition. Borrowers are not delinquent for purposes of early intervention requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39 if they are performing as agreed according to the terms of a loss mitigation plan designed to bring the borrower current on a previously missed payment, but they may be considered delinquent for other purposes under the servicing rules and may also become delinquent for purposes of early intervention requirements if and when they fail to make a payment required under such a plan.

The commentary also states that good faith efforts to establish live contact consist of “reasonable steps, under the circumstances,” and these efforts “may include telephoning the borrower on more than one occasion or sending written or electronic communication encouraging the borrower to establish live contact with the servicer.”

Promptly after establishing live contact, the servicer must inform the borrower of any loss mitigation options, if appropriate. It is within the servicer's reasonable discretion to determine whether it is appropriate under the circumstances to inform a borrower of the availability of loss mitigation options. Examples of a servicer making a reasonable determination include a servicer informing a borrower about loss mitigation options after the borrower notifies the servicer during live contact of a material adverse change in financial circumstances that is likely to cause a long-term delinquency for which loss mitigation options may be available, or a servicer not providing information about loss mitigation options to a borrower who has missed a January 1 payment and notified the servicer that the full late payment will be transmitted to the servicer by February 15.

If the servicer has established and is maintaining ongoing contact with the borrower under the loss mitigation procedures in 12 CFR 1024.41, including during the borrower's completion of a loss mitigation application or the servicer's evaluation of the borrower's complete loss mitigation application, or if the servicer has sent the borrower a notice pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii) that the borrower is not eligible for any loss mitigation options, the servicer complies with its live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) and need not otherwise establish or make good faith efforts to establish live contact. A servicer must resume compliance with the live contact requirements for a borrower who becomes delinquent again after curing a prior delinquency. (Comment 39(a)-6).

Servicers must send a borrower a written notice within 45 days after the borrower becomes delinquent and again no later than 45 days after each payment due date so long as the borrower remains delinquent. The written notice must encourage the borrower to contact the servicer, provide the servicer's telephone number and address to access assigned loss mitigation personnel, describe examples of loss mitigation options that may be available (if applicable), provide loss mitigation application instructions or advise how to obtain more information about loss mitigation options such as contacting the servicer (if applicable), and list either the CFPB's or HUD's website to access a list of homeownership counselors or counseling organization and HUD's toll-free number to access homeownership counselors or counseling organizations.

Appendix MS-4 contains model clauses at MS-4(A), MS-4(B), MS-4(C), and MS-4(D) that servicers subject to the FDCPA can use to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice, as discussed more below.

A servicer is not required to provide the written notice under this section to a borrower more than once in any 180-day period. For example, a servicer who provided the written notice to the borrower within 45 days after the borrower became delinquent on January 1 would not be required to send another written notice if the borrower failed to make the February 1 payment. If a borrower is 45 days or more delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, a servicer must provide the written notice again no later than 180 days after the provision of the prior written notice. If the borrower is less than 45 days delinquent at the end of that period, a servicer must provide the notice again no later than 45 days after the payment due date for which the borrower remains delinquent.

A transferee servicer is required to provide the written notice to the borrower regardless of whether the transferor servicer provided a written notice in the preceding 180-day period. However, a transferee servicer is not required to provide a written notice if the transferor servicer provided one within 45 days of the transfer date. For example, assume a borrower has monthly payments, with a payment due on March 1. The transferor servicer provides the notice required by 12 CFR 1024.39(b) on April 10. The loan is transferred on April 12. Assuming the borrower remains delinquent, the transferee servicer is not required to provide another written notice until 45 days after May 1, the first post-transfer payment due date—i.e., by June 15. (Comment 39(b)(1)-5).

Borrowers in bankruptcy – 12 CFR 1024.39(c)

Partial Exemption

Servicers are exempt from complying with the live contact obligations under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) while any borrower on a mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code, with regard to that mortgage loan. Servicers are also exempt from providing the written notice under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) while any borrower on a mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code, with regard to that mortgage loan, if no loss mitigation option is available or if any borrower on the mortgage loan has provided a cease communication notice under the FDCPA with respect to that mortgage loan (and the servicer is subject to the FDCPA for that loan).

If the above conditions relating to the written notice exemption are not met, and any borrower on the mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy, then the servicer must comply with modified written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b):

- Content: the notice may not contain a request for payment.
- Timing:
 - If a borrower is delinquent when the borrower becomes a debtor in bankruptcy, the servicer must provide the written notice not later than the 45th day after the borrower files a bankruptcy petition under Title 11 of the United States Code.
 - However, if the borrower is not delinquent at the time of the bankruptcy petition filing, but subsequently becomes delinquent while a debtor in bankruptcy, the servicer must provide the written notice not later than the 45th day of the borrower's delinquency.
 - A servicer must comply with these timing requirements regardless of whether the servicer provided the written notice in the preceding 180-day period.
 - A servicer is not required to provide the written notice more than once during a single bankruptcy case.

Resuming Compliance

A servicer that was exempt from the live contact and written early intervention notice requirements must resume compliance with such requirements after the next payment due date that follows the earliest of the following events:

- The bankruptcy case is dismissed,
- The bankruptcy case is closed, and
- The borrower reaffirms personal liability for the mortgage loan.

A servicer is not required to resume compliance with the live contact requirements with respect to a mortgage loan for which the borrower has discharged personal liability pursuant to sections 727, 1141, 1228, or 1328 of Title 11 of the United States Code, but must resume compliance with the written notice requirement if the borrower has made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the borrower's bankruptcy case.

Fair Debt Collections Practices Act Partial Exemption – 12 CFR 1024.39(d)

If a mortgage servicer is a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan, 12 CFR 1024.39(d) clarifies the servicer's early intervention obligations when that borrower has invoked cease communication protections by providing a notification pursuant to Section 805(c) of the FDCPA.

For such borrowers invoking their FDCPA cease communication protections, servicers are exempt from the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a).

Servicers are also exempt from the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) when such a borrower on the loan has invoked the FDCPA cease communication protections and either of the following applies: (1) no loss mitigation option is available or (2) any borrower on the mortgage loan is a debtor in bankruptcy under Title 11 of the United States Code. However, servicers are required to comply with modified written notice requirements if the borrower has invoked FDCPA cease communication protections and these conditions are not met (e.g., a loss mitigation option is available or no borrower on that loan is a debtor in bankruptcy):

- Content:
 - The modified written notice must include a statement that the servicer may or intends to invoke its remedy of foreclosure.
 - The written notice, however, may not contain a request for payment.

Servicers subject to the FDCPA can use MS-4(D) to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice.

- Timing:
 - A servicer is prohibited from providing the written notice more than once during any 180-day period. If a borrower is 45 days or more delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, a servicer must provide the written notice again no later than 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice. If a borrower is less than 45 days delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, a servicer must provide the written notice again no later than 45 days after the payment due date for which the borrower remains delinquent or 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice, whichever is later.²⁴

Further, such servicers do not violate FDCPA Section 805(c) with respect to the mortgage loan when providing the written early intervention notice required by 12 CFR 1024.39(b)(3), as modified by 12 CFR 1024.39(d)(3), to a borrower who has invoked the cease communication rights.²⁵ Nor does a servicer violate FDCPA Section 805(c) by providing loss mitigation information or assistance in response to a borrower-initiated communication after the borrower has invoked the cease communication rights.²⁶ A servicer subject to the FDCPA, however, must continue to comply with all other applicable provisions of the FDCPA, including restrictions on communications and prohibitions on harassment or abuse, false or misleading representations, and unfair practices.²⁷

Continuity of Contact – 12 CFR 1024.40

Servicers must maintain policies and procedures to facilitate continuity of contact between the borrower and the servicer.

These requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence. The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5, or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(I)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor. The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Qualified lenders are those defined to be qualified lenders under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and the Farm Credit Administration's accompanying regulations set forth at 12 CFR 617.7000 et seq.

General Continuity of Contact Policies and Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.40(a)

Servicers must have policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to assign personnel (one or more persons) to a delinquent borrower at the time the servicer provides the borrower with the written notice required under 12 CFR 1024.39(b), and in any event, not later than the 45th day of the borrower's delinquency. The assigned personnel should be available by telephone to answer the borrower's questions and assist the borrower with available loss mitigation options until the borrower makes two consecutive timely payments under a permanent loss mitigation agreement. If the borrower contacts the assigned personnel and does not receive an immediate live response, the servicer must have policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure the servicer can provide a live response in a timely

The servicer must also maintain policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the assigned personnel can perform certain functions, including: providing the borrower with accurate information about (1) loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the owner or assignee of the borrower's loan, (2) actions the borrower must take to be evaluated for such options, including the steps the borrower needs to take to submit a complete loss mitigation application and appeal a denial of a loan modification option (if applicable), (3) the status of any loss mitigation application the borrower has submitted, (4) the circumstances under which the servicer may refer the borrower's account to foreclosure, and (5) any loss mitigation deadlines.

The servicer must also have policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that assigned personnel are able to (1) timely retrieve a complete record of the borrower's payment history and all written information the borrower has provided to the servicer (or prior servicers) in connection with a loss mitigation application, (2) provide these documents to other people required to evaluate the borrower for loss mitigation options, if applicable, and (3) provide the borrower with information about submitting an error notice or information request under 12 CFR 1024.35 or 12 CFR 1024.36.

Loss Mitigation Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.41

Servicers must comply with certain loss mitigation procedures. The procedures differ depending on how far in advance of foreclosure a borrower submits a loss mitigation application. Regulation X does not impose a duty on a servicer to provide any borrower with any specific loss mitigation option.

The requirements set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41 apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence. Except as noted below in 12 CFR 1024.41(j), the requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, or (iii) mortgage loans for which the servicer is a qualified lender.

As noted above, an institution qualifies as a small servicer if it (a) services, together with any affiliates, 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, for all of which the institution (or an affiliate) is the creditor or assignee, (b) is a Housing Finance Agency, as defined in 24 CFR 266.5 or (c) is a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit entity is the creditor. The determination as to whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer is generally made based on the mortgage loans, as that term is used in 12 CFR 1026.41(a)(1), serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of that calendar year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. A servicer that ceases to qualify as a small servicer will have six months from the time it ceases to qualify or until the next January 1, whichever is later, to comply with any requirements from which the servicer is no longer exempt as a small servicer.

As specified in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Qualified lenders are those defined to be qualified lenders under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and the Farm Credit Administration's accompanying regulations set forth at 12 CFR 617.7000 et seq.

The CFPB issued an interpretive rule clarifying, among other things, that when a servicer that is a debt collector under the FDCPA with respect to a borrower's mortgage loan responds to a borrower-initiated communication concerning loss mitigation after the borrower's invocation of FDCPA Section 805(c)'s cease communication protections with regard to that loan, the servicer does not violate FDCPA Section 805(c) with respect to such communications as long as the servicer's response is limited to a discussion of any potentially available loss mitigation option.²⁸ Only if the borrower provides a communication to the servicer specifically withdrawing the request for loss mitigation does the cease communication prohibition apply to communicating about

Receipt of a Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(b)

A servicer that receives a loss mitigation application at least 45 days before a foreclosure sale must take two steps. First, the servicer must promptly review the application to determine if it is complete. Second, the servicer must notify the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) that, among other things, it has received the application and state whether it is complete or incomplete.

A loss mitigation application includes an oral or written request by the borrower where the borrower expresses an interest in applying for a loss mitigation option and provides information a servicer would evaluate in connection with a loss mitigation application. A loss mitigation application is considered expansively and includes any “prequalification” for a loss mitigation option. For example, if a borrower requests that a servicer determine whether the borrower is “prequalified” for a loss mitigation program by evaluating the borrower against preliminary criteria to determine eligibility for a loss mitigation option, the request constitutes a loss mitigation application. A loss mitigation application does not include oral inquiries about loss mitigation options where the borrower does not provide any information that the servicer would use to evaluate an application, including where the borrower requests information only about the application process but does not provide any information to the servicer.

Complete Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)

An application is complete when it contains all the information the servicer requires from the borrower to evaluate an application for loss mitigation options. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)). Upon receiving an application that is not complete, a servicer is generally required to exercise reasonable diligence²⁹ in obtaining documents and information to complete the application. A servicer has flexibility to establish its own application requirements, but, with certain exceptions, a servicer is generally prohibited from offering a loss mitigation based on an evaluation of any information provided by a borrower in connection with an incomplete loss mitigation application.

Review of Loss Mitigation Application Submission – 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)

As stated above, if the servicer receives a loss mitigation application 45 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must notify the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) that it has received the application and state whether it is complete or incomplete. If the application is incomplete, the notice must advise (i) what additional documents or information are needed, and (ii) a reasonable date by which the borrower must submit them.

Generally, 30 days from the date the servicer provides the written notice is a “reasonable date.” (Comment 41(b)(2)(ii)-1). Furthermore, the reasonable date must be no later than the earliest of:

- The date by which any document or information submitted by a borrower will be considered stale or invalid pursuant to any requirements applicable to any loss mitigation option available to the borrower,
- The date that is the 120th day of the borrower’s delinquency,
- The date that is 90 days before a foreclosure sale,
- The date that is 38 days before a foreclosure sale.

(Comment 41(b)(2)(ii)-2).

A reasonable date, however, must never be less than seven days from the date on which the servicer provides the written notice. (Comment 41(b)(2)(ii)-3).

As explained above, servicers must exercise reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete an incomplete loss mitigation application (e.g., promptly contacting the borrower to obtain missing information or determining whether information exists in the servicer’s files already that may provide the information missing from the borrower’s application). (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)).

In the course of gathering documents and information from a borrower to complete a loss mitigation application, a servicer may stop collecting documents and information for a particular loss mitigation option after receiving information confirming that, pursuant to any requirements established by the owner or assignee of the borrower’s mortgage loan, the borrower is ineligible for that option. A servicer may not stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based solely upon the borrower’s stated preference. The servicer, however, may stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based on the borrower's stated preference in conjunction with other information, as prescribed by any requirements established by the owner or assignee. A servicer must continue to exercise reasonable diligence to obtain documents and information from the borrower that the servicer requires to evaluate the borrower as to all other loss mitigation options available to the borrower. (Comment 41(b)(1)-1).

For example, assume applicable requirements established by the owner or assignee provide that a borrower is not eligible for home retention options if the borrower states a preference for a short sale and provides evidence of another applicable hardship, such as military Permanent Change of Station orders or a specified employment transfer more than 50 miles away. If the borrower indicates a preference for a short sale, the servicer may not stop collecting documents and information pertaining to available home retention options solely because the borrower has indicated the preference. The servicer, however, may stop collecting such documents and information once it receives information confirming that the borrower meets the applicable hardship standards.

If a servicer has informed a borrower that the application was complete (or identified particular information needed to complete the application), and the servicer subsequently determines that additional information or corrected documents are required, the servicer must promptly request such information or documents from the borrower and treat the application as complete under 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2) and (g) until the borrower is given a reasonable opportunity to complete the application.

Calculating Time Periods and Determining Protections – 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(3)

12 CFR 1024.41 provides borrowers certain protections depending on whether the servicer received a complete loss mitigation application at least a specified number of days before a foreclosure sale. See, e.g., 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1) (37 days); 12 CFR 1024.41(e) and (h) (90 days). These time periods are calculated as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application. Thus, scheduling or rescheduling a foreclosure sale after the servicer receives the complete loss mitigation application will not affect the borrower's protections.

If no foreclosure sale is scheduled as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application, the application is considered received more than 90 days before a foreclosure sale.

Evaluation of a Timely Complete Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)

A servicer that receives a complete loss mitigation application more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale must take two steps within 30 days:

- First, the servicer must evaluate the borrower for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the owner or investor of the borrower's mortgage loan. The criteria on which a servicer offers or does not offer a loss mitigation option need not meet any particular standard. Nonetheless, a servicer's failure to follow requirements imposed by an owner or investor may demonstrate the servicer's failure to comply with the 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(2)(v) requirement that the servicer must maintain policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer can properly evaluate a borrower for all loss mitigation options for which the borrower may be eligible pursuant to any requirements established by the mortgage loan's owner or assignee; and
- Second, the servicer must provide the borrower with a written notice stating which loss mitigation options, if any, the servicer will offer to the borrower. The notice must state the amount of time the borrower has to accept or reject an offered loss mitigation option pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(e), and, if applicable, that the borrower has the right to appeal a denial of a loan modification option as well as the time period and any requirements for making an appeal pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h).

Evaluation of Incomplete Loss Mitigation Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(i)-(iii)

With limited exceptions, a servicer may not offer a loss mitigation option based on an evaluation of an incomplete application.

- I. Offers permitted if not based on an evaluation of an incomplete application. Regulation X does not prohibit a servicer from offering loss mitigation options to a borrower who has not submitted a loss mitigation application. Further, nothing prohibits a servicer from offering a loss mitigation option to a borrower who has submitted an incomplete loss mitigation application where the offer of the loss mitigation option is not based on any evaluation of information submitted by the borrower in connection with such application.
- II. Reasonable Time Exception. If the servicer has exercised reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete the application but the application still remains incomplete for a significant period of time without further progress by the borrower, the servicer may evaluate an incomplete application and offer the borrower a loss mitigation option. What qualifies as a significant period of time may depend on the timing of the foreclosure process. For example, 15 days may be a more significant period of time if the borrower is less than 50 days before a foreclosure sale than if the borrower is less than 120 days delinquent. The requirements in 12 CFR 1024.41 do not apply to this evaluation, and it is not considered an evaluation of a complete loss mitigation application for purposes of determining whether a request for a loss mitigation evaluation is duplicative under 12 CFR 1024.41(i).

III. Short-Term Loss Mitigation Options Exception. A servicer may offer a short-term payment forbearance program or a short-term repayment plan to a borrower based upon an evaluation of an incomplete loss mitigation application. Promptly after offering a payment forbearance program or a repayment plan, unless the borrower has rejected the offer, the servicer must provide the borrower a written notice stating:

- The specific payment terms and duration of the program or plan,
- That the servicer offered the program or plan based on an evaluation of an incomplete application,
- That other loss mitigation options may be available, and
- That the borrower has the option to submit a complete loss mitigation application to receive an evaluation for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower regardless of whether the borrower accepts the program or plan.

If the borrower is performing pursuant to the terms of a forbearance program or repayment plan offered under this provision, a servicer may not make the first notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, and it may not move for foreclosure judgment or an order of sale or conduct a foreclosure sale. A servicer may also offer a short-term payment forbearance program in conjunction with a short-term repayment plan.

A servicer must comply with the remaining loss mitigation requirements in 12 CFR 1024.41 with respect to the incomplete application, such as the requirement in 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2) to review the application to determine if it is complete, the requirement in 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1) to exercise reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete a loss mitigation application, and the requirement in 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) to provide the borrower with written notice that the servicer acknowledges the receipt of the application and has determined that the application is incomplete. (Comment 41(c)(2)(iii)-2).

For instance, a servicer must exercise reasonable diligence as clarified in part in Comment 41(b)(1)-4.iii. The comment states that, if a borrower is complying with a short-term payment forbearance program or short-term repayment plan and the borrower does not request further assistance, the servicer may suspend reasonable diligence efforts until near the end of the program or plan. However, if the borrower fails to comply with the short-term loss mitigation option or requests further assistance, the servicer must immediately resume reasonable diligence efforts. Additionally, near the end of a short-term payment forbearance program, and prior to the end of the forbearance period, if the borrower remains delinquent, a servicer must contact the borrower to determine if the borrower wishes to complete the loss mitigation application and proceed with a full loss mitigation evaluation. (Comment 41(b)(1)-4.iii).

If the borrower completes the loss mitigation application, the servicer must comply with all of the loss mitigation procedure requirements in 12 CFR 1024.41 even if the servicer has offered a short-term payment forbearance program or short-term repayment plan based on an evaluation of an incomplete application. (Comment 41(c)(2)(iii)-3).

Facially Complete Applications – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)

A loss mitigation application is facially complete when (i) the servicer's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b) advised the borrower that the application was complete, (ii) the servicer's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b) requested additional information from the borrower to complete the application and the borrower submits such additional information, or (iii) the servicer is required to provide the borrower a written notice of a complete application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(i).

If the servicer later discovers that additional information or corrections to a previously submitted document are required to complete the facially complete application, the servicer must promptly request the missing information or corrected documents and treat the application as complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2) and (g) until the borrower is given a reasonable opportunity to complete the application. A reasonable opportunity depends on the particular facts and circumstances, but must provide the borrower sufficient time to gather the necessary information and documents.

If the borrower completes the application within this period, the application is considered complete as of the date it was actually complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(c), and the application is considered complete as of the date it was facially complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(d), (e), (f)(2), (g), and (h).

If the borrower does not complete the application within this period, the application is considered incomplete.

V. Lending — RESPA

Notice of Complete Application – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)

Within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the borrower's complete loss mitigation application, the servicer shall provide the borrower a written notice setting forth the following information:

- That the loss mitigation application is complete;
- The date the servicer received the complete application;
- That the servicer expects to complete its evaluation within 30 days of the date it received the complete application;
- That the borrower is entitled to certain foreclosure protections because the servicer has received the complete application, and, as applicable, either:
 - If the servicer has not made the first foreclosure notice or filing required by applicable law, that the servicer cannot make the first notice or filing to commence a foreclosure before evaluating the borrower's complete application; or
 - If the servicer has made the first foreclosure notice or filing, that the servicer has begun the foreclosure process and that the servicer cannot conduct a foreclosure sale before evaluating the borrower's complete application.
- That the servicer may need additional information at a later date; and
- That the borrower may be entitled to additional protections under state or federal law.

A servicer is not required, however, to provide a notice of complete application if:

- The servicer has already provided the borrower a notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) informing the borrower the application is complete and the servicer has not requested any additional information;
- The application was not complete more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale; or
- The servicer has already provided the borrower a notice regarding its determination of the borrower's application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii).

Information not in the Borrower's Control – 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)

If a servicer requires documents or information not in the borrower's control to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower, the servicer must exercise reasonable diligence in obtaining such documents or information. A servicer must not deny a complete loss mitigation application solely because the servicer lacks required documents or information not in the borrower's control, unless the servicer has been unable to obtain the documents and information for a significant period of time following the 30-day evaluation period provided under Section 1024.41(c)(1) and is unable to make a determination on the complete application. However, a servicer is permitted to offer a borrower a loss mitigation option, even if the servicer does not obtain the requested documents or information.

The servicer lacking third-party information must provide the borrower a written notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B) informing the borrower:

- That the servicer has not received the third-party documents or information that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower;
- Of the specific documents or information that the servicer lacks;
- That the servicer has requested such documents or information; and
- That the servicer will complete its evaluation of the borrower for all available loss mitigation options promptly upon receiving the documents or information.

If a servicer has exercised reasonable diligence to obtain the third-party information, but the servicer has been unable to do so for a significant period of time and cannot complete its determination without the required documents or information, the servicer may deny the application and provide the borrower with a written notice in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii). In conjunction with such notice, the servicer must provide a copy of the written notice provided under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B).

If the servicer denies a loss mitigation application for any trial or permanent loan modification option, the notice provided to the borrower must also state the servicer's specific reason or reasons for denying each trial or permanent loan modification option, and, if applicable, that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria. Certain disclosures are required when a servicer denies an application for the following reasons or using the following procedures:

- Investor criteria and use of a waterfall.
 - If the servicer denies a loan modification option based upon investor criteria, the servicer must identify the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan and the specific criteria that the borrower failed to satisfy.
 - When an owner or assignee has established an evaluation criteria that sets an order ranking for evaluation of loan modification options (commonly known as a “waterfall”) and a borrower has qualified for a particular loan modification option in the waterfall, it is sufficient for the servicer to inform the borrower, with respect to other loan modification options ranked below any such option offered to a borrower, that the investor’s requirements include the use of such a waterfall and that an offer of a loan modification option necessarily results in a denial for any other loan modification options below the option for which the borrower is eligible in the ranking.
- Net present value calculation. If the denial was based upon a net present value calculation, the servicer must disclose the inputs used in the calculation.
- Reasons listed. The following applies if the servicer uses a hierarchy of eligibility criteria and, after reaching the first criterion that causes a denial, does not evaluate whether the borrower would have satisfied the remaining criteria. In this instance, the servicer need only (i) provide the specific reason or reasons why the borrower was actually rejected, and (ii) notify the borrower that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria. A servicer is not required to determine or disclose whether a borrower would have been denied based on other criteria if the servicer did not actually evaluate these additional criteria.

Borrower Response – 12 CFR 1024.41(e)

A servicer offering a loss mitigation option must provide the borrower with a minimum period of time to accept or reject the option, depending on when the servicer receives a complete application. If the application was complete 90 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must give the borrower at least 14 days to decide. If it was complete fewer than 90 but more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must give the borrower at least seven days to decide.

A borrower’s failure to respond on time can be treated as a rejection of the loss mitigation options, with two exceptions. First, a borrower who is offered a trial loan modification plan and submits payments that would have been owed under that plan before the deadline for accepting must be given a reasonable time to fulfill any remaining requirements of the servicer for acceptance of the trial loan modification plan.

Second, a servicer must give a borrower who has a pending appeal until 14 days after the servicer provides notice of its determination regarding resolution of that appeal to decide whether to accept any offered loss mitigation option.

Prohibition on Foreclosure Referral – 12 CFR 1024.41(f)

A servicer cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing for any judicial or non-judicial process until (i) the borrower is more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower’s violation of a due-on-sale clause, or (iii) the servicer is joining a superior or subordinate lienholder’s foreclosure action. The commentary states that whether a document qualifies as the first notice or filing depends on the foreclosure process at issue:

- Judicial foreclosure. Where foreclosure procedure requires a court action or proceeding, the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be filed with a court or other judicial body to commence the action or proceeding. Depending on the particular foreclosure process, examples of these documents could be a complaint, petition, order to docket, or notice of hearing;
- Non-judicial foreclosure – recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding (such as under a power of sale), the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be recorded or published to initiate the foreclosure process; or
- Non-judicial foreclosure – no recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding, and also does not require any document to be recorded or published, the first notice or filing is the earliest document that establishes, sets, or schedules a date for the foreclosure sale.

The commentary further states that a document provided to the borrower but not initially required to be filed, recorded, or published is not considered the first notice or filing on the sole basis that the documents must later be included as an attachment accompanying another document that is required to be filed, recorded, or published to carry out a foreclosure.

If a borrower submits a complete loss mitigation application before the 120th day of delinquency or before the servicer makes the first foreclosure notice or filing, then the servicer cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing unless one of the following occurs: (i) the servicer sends a notice to the borrower stating that the borrower is ineligible for any loss mitigation option and if an appeal is available, either the borrower did not timely appeal, or the appeal has been denied; (ii) the borrower rejects all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower fails to perform under a loss mitigation agreement.

Prohibition on Foreclosure Sale – 12 CFR 1024.41(g)

If a borrower submits a complete loss mitigation application after the servicer has made the first foreclosure notice or filing but more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, the servicer cannot conduct a foreclosure sale or move for foreclosure judgment or order of sale. The servicer must instruct foreclosure counsel promptly not to make a dispositive motion for foreclosure judgment or order of sale; to avoid a ruling on the motion or issuance of an order of sale where such a dispositive motion is pending; and, where a sale is scheduled, to prevent conduct of a foreclosure sale, except as provided below. The servicer may move forward with those specific foreclosure proceedings (or need not instruct foreclosure counsel as provided above) if one of the following occurs: (i) the servicer sends a notice to the borrower stating that the borrower is ineligible for any loss mitigation option and the appeal process is inapplicable, the borrower did not timely appeal, or the appeal has been denied; (ii) the borrower rejects all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower fails to perform under a loss mitigation agreement. A servicer is not relieved of its obligations because foreclosure counsel's actions or inaction caused a violation. Absent one of the specified circumstances, conduct of the sale violates the regulation, even if a person other than the servicer administers or conducts the foreclosure sale proceedings.

Appeal Process – 12 CFR 1024.41(h)

A borrower has the right to appeal a servicer's denial of a loss mitigation application for any trial or permanent loan modification available to the borrower if the borrower submitted a complete application 90 days or more before a foreclosure sale (or during the pre-foreclosure period set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41(f)). The borrower must commence the appeal within 14 days after the servicer provides the notice stating the servicer's determination of which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower.

Within 30 days of the borrower making the appeal, the servicer must provide a notice to the borrower stating: (i) whether it will offer the borrower a loss mitigation option based on the appeal, and (ii) if applicable, how long the borrower has to accept or reject this loss mitigation option or a previously offered loss mitigation option. If the servicer offers a loss mitigation option after an appeal, the servicer must provide the borrower at least 14 days to decide whether to accept the offered loss mitigation option.

The servicer's personnel who evaluated the borrower's application cannot also evaluate the appeal, although personnel who supervised the initial evaluation may evaluate the appeal so long as they were not directly involved in the initial evaluation.

Duplicative Requests – 12 CFR 1024.41(i)

A servicer must comply with these loss mitigation procedures for a borrower's loss mitigation application, unless the servicer has previously complied with the loss mitigation requirements for a complete loss mitigation application submitted by the borrower and the borrower has been delinquent at all times since submitting the prior complete application.

Thus, for example, if the borrower has previously submitted a complete loss mitigation application and the servicer complied fully with 12 CFR 1024.41 for that application, but the borrower then ceased to be delinquent and later became delinquent again, the servicer is required to again comply with 12 CFR 1024.41 for any subsequent loss mitigation application submitted by the borrower.

Small Servicer Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.41(j)

Although small servicers are exempt from most of the policy-and-procedure requirements (12 CFR 1024.38), continuity of contact requirements (12 CFR 1024.40), and loss mitigation requirements (12 CFR 1024.41) of Regulation X, certain provisions still apply to them. Small servicers cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing required by any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process until (i) the borrower is more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower's violation of a due-on-sale clause, or (iii) the servicer is joining a superior or subordinate lienholder's foreclosure action. If the borrower is performing according to the terms of a loss mitigation agreement, a small servicer also cannot make the first foreclosure notice or filing, move for a foreclosure judgment or order of sale, or conduct a foreclosure sale.

Servicing Transfers – 12 CFR 1024.41(k)

When a transferee servicer acquires the servicing of a mortgage loan for which there is a loss mitigation application pending as of the transfer date, it must comply with 12 CFR 1024.41(k), which addresses and clarifies how loss mitigation procedures and timelines apply to these pending loss mitigation applications. A loss mitigation application is considered pending if the application is subject to the loss mitigation rules but was not fully resolved prior to the transfer date. (Comment 41(k)-1). The transfer date is defined for these provisions as the date on which the transferee servicer will begin accepting payments relating to the mortgage loan, as disclosed on the notice of transfer of loan servicing pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.33(b)(4)(iv).

Specifically:

- Subject to the exceptions below, for loss mitigation applications pending as of the transfer date, a transferee servicer must comply with the loss mitigation requirements within the same timeframes that applied to the transferor servicer based on the date the transferor servicer received the loss mitigation application;
 - A transferor servicer must timely transfer, and a transferee servicer must obtain from the transferor servicer, documents and information submitted by a borrower in connection with a loss mitigation application.
 - Subject to the modifications of timing requirements below, a borrower’s rights and protections under the loss mitigation procedures to which the borrower was entitled to before a transfer continue to apply post-transfer.
 - In the transfer context, reasonable diligence under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1) includes ensuring that a borrower is informed of any changes to the application process, such as a change in address to which the borrower should submit documents and information to complete the application, as well as ensuring that the borrower is informed about which documents and information are necessary to complete the application.
- Within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of the transfer date, a transferee servicer must provide the borrower an acknowledgement notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) if the prior transferor had not provided such notice and the applicable period to provide the notice has not expired as of the transfer date;
 - If a transferee servicer is required to provide the acknowledgment notice as described above, the transferee servicer is prohibited from making the first foreclosure notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process until a date that is after the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgment notice.
 - If a borrower submits a complete loss mitigation application to the transferee or transferor servicer 37 or fewer days before the foreclosure sale but on or before the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgment notice, the servicer must evaluate the application in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(c) and provide a denial notice in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(d) (if applicable), and is prohibited from moving for foreclosure judgment or sale in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(g).

- For a complete application pending as of the transfer date, the transferee servicer must evaluate the application within 30 days of the transfer date;
- A transferee servicer must make a determination on appeals pending as of the transfer date if it is able to do so or, if unable to do so, must treat the appeal as a pending complete loss mitigation application;
 - If the transferee servicer is required to make a determination on an appeal, the servicer must complete the determination and provide the notice required under 12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4) within the later of 30 days of the transfer date or 30 days of the date the borrower made the appeal.
- A transfer does not affect a borrower’s ability to accept or reject a pending loss mitigation offer if the time period to accept or reject has not expired as of the transfer date. In this instance, the transferee servicer must allow the borrower to accept or reject the offer during the unexpired balance of the applicable time period.

Loss Mitigation Applications from Potential Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

If a servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a potential successor in interest before confirming that person’s identity and ownership interest in the property, the servicer may, but need not, review and evaluate the loss mitigation application in accordance with the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41. (Comment 41(b)-1.i).

If a servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a potential successor in interest and elects not to review and evaluate the loss mitigation application before confirming that person’s identity and ownership interest in the property, the servicer must preserve the loss mitigation application and all documents submitted in connection with the application. Upon confirmation of the successor in interest’s status, the servicer must review and evaluate the loss mitigation application in accordance with the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41 if the property is the confirmed successor in interest’s principal residence and the loss mitigation procedures are otherwise applicable. For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41, the servicer must treat the loss mitigation application as if it had been received on the date that the servicer confirmed the successor in interest’s status. If the loss mitigation application is incomplete at the time of confirmation because documents submitted by the successor in interest became stale or invalid after they were submitted and confirmation is 45 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must identify the stale or invalid documents that need to be updated in a notice pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2). Comment 41(b)-1.ii.

Examination Objectives

- To determine the financial institution's compliance with the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) and Regulation X.
- To initiate corrective action when policies or internal controls are deficient, or when violations of law or regulation are identified.

Examination Procedures³⁰

Each examination should be risk-based and may not require an examiner to address all of the procedures below. In addition, each supervising agency may have its own supervisory strategy that will dictate which examination procedures are required to be completed.

If the financial institution has loans covered by RESPA, determine whether the institution's policies, practices, and procedures ensure compliance with RESPA and Regulation X.

General Procedures

1. Review the types of loans covered by RESPA, applicable exemptions, loan policies, and operating procedures in connection with federally related mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1024.5 provides RESPA's general coverage and applicable exemptions, though other RESPA and Regulation X provisions include additional exemptions.
2. Assess whether mortgage personnel are knowledgeable about the requirements of RESPA and Regulation X.
3. Determine whether the loan disclosure and timing requirements of Regulation X (rather than Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f)) apply to the loans being reviewed (generally for closed-end reverse mortgages).
4. Review the Special Information Booklet, good faith estimate (GFE) form, Uniform Settlement Statement form (HUD-1 or HUD-1A), and mortgage servicing transfer disclosure forms for compliance with the requirements of Regulation X. Review standardized and model forms and clauses in the appendices to the regulation.

5. Review the affiliated business arrangement disclosure form for compliance with the requirements of Regulation X. Review standardized and model forms and clauses in the appendices to the regulation.
6. If electronic disclosures are provided, determine whether the institution has policies and procedures to provide electronic delivery in accordance with the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign).
7. Through reviewing written loan policies and operating procedures in connection with federally related mortgage loans that are not partially exempt under 12 CFR 1024.5(d) (i.e., reverse mortgages) and by discussing them with institution personnel, or through other appropriate methods, determine whether the financial institution has policies and procedures that address the following:
 - The information that will be collected from applicants in connection with issuing a GFE, and what information will be relied on to issue a GFE.
 - Provision of a revised GFE in the event of changed circumstances, both in the course of a new home purchase and in other kinds of transactions.
 - To cure a tolerance violation by reimbursing the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded within 30 calendar days from date of settlement.
 - To cure a technical or inadvertent error on the HUD-1/1A by providing a revised settlement statement to the borrower within 30 calendar days of settlement.
8. Through interviews with mortgage lending personnel or other appropriate methods, determine:
 - The identity of persons or entities referring federally related mortgage loan business;
 - The nature of services provided by referral sources, if any;
 - Settlement service providers used by the institution; and
 - Any providers whose services are required by the institution.
9. Through interviews with mortgage lending personnel or other appropriate methods, assess how the institution complies with the general servicing policies and procedures required by Regulation X, as applicable, including:

- How and for how long the institution maintains documentation and information related to a mortgage loan account and the institution's process for aggregating such information into a servicing file within five days;
- How the institution determines whether to engage third-party service providers, including the criteria the institution considers to evaluate potential service providers;
- How the institution monitors the performance of third-party service providers;
- How the institution ensures that it receives all necessary documentation and information concerning mortgage loan files that are transferred to it by another institution; and
- How the institution ensures that it sends all necessary documentation and information concerning mortgage loan files to another institution when it transfers files to that institution.

10. Determine if the institution is a small servicer. (12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii)). Small servicers are exempt from a number of Regulation X requirements.

NOTE: A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Subpart B – Mortgage Settlement and Escrow Accounts

Special Information Booklet – 12 CFR 1024.6

11. For mortgages that are not subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule under 12 CFR 1026.19(e) and (f), other than reverse mortgages, determine through appropriate methods such as discussions with management and reviewing credit files whether the Special Information Booklet, if required, is provided within three business days after the financial institution or broker receives a written application for a loan (12 CFR 1024.6(a)(1)).

NOTE: The Special Information Booklet may be required under 12 CFR 1026.19(g) for closed-end mortgage loans subject to the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosure Rule.

Good Faith Estimate – 12 CFR 1024.7

12. For closed-end reverse mortgages (see 12 CFR 1024.5(d)), determine whether the financial institution provides a GFE of charges for settlement services, if required, within three business days after receipt of a written application (12 CFR 1024.7(a)).
13. Review the GFE to determine if it appears exactly as set forth in Appendix C to Part 1024.
14. Review a sample of loan files that include GFEs to determine the following:
- Whether the financial institution followed GFE application requirements.
 - Whether the institution provided revised GFEs to applicants when warranted due to changed circumstances.
 - If the institution provided a revised GFE to the applicant due to changed circumstances, determine whether the institution followed regulatory requirements for issuing a revised GFE due to changed circumstances.
 - Whether the GFE was completed as required in the regulations and instructions (12 CFR 1024.7 and

V. Lending — RESPA

Appendix C to 12 CFR Part 1024) and whether it included the following information:

- Interest rate expiration date;
 - Settlement charges expiration date;
 - Rate lock period;
 - Number of days before settlement the interest rate must be locked, if applicable;
 - Summary of loan information;
 - Escrow account information;
 - Estimates for settlement charges; and
 - Left hand column on trade-off table completed for loan in the GFE.
- Whether, for no cost loans, all third-party fees paid by the financial institution are itemized and listed in the appropriate blocks on the second page of the GFE.
 - Whether a separate sheet was provided with the GFE that identifies the settlement service providers for the services listed on the GFE.

Uniform Settlement Statement Form (HUD-1 and HUD-1A) – 12 CFR 1024.8

15. Using the same sample of loan files as used for the review of the GFE (i.e., for reverse mortgages), review the Uniform Settlement Statement (HUD-1 or HUD-1A, as appropriate) (12 CFR 1024.8 and Appendix A to 12 CFR Part 1024) to determine whether:

- Charges are properly itemized in accordance with the instructions for completion of the HUD-1 or HUD-1A (Appendix A to 12 CFR Part 1024);
- All charges paid by the borrower and the seller are itemized and include the name of the recipient (12 CFR 1024.8(b), Appendix A);
- Average charges for settlement services are calculated in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.8(b)(2); and
- Charges required by the financial institution but paid outside of closing are itemized on the settlement statement, marked as “paid outside of closing” or “P.O.C.,” but not included in cost totals (12 CFR 1024.8(b); Appendix A).

16. If the financial institution conducts the settlement, determine whether:

- The borrower, upon request, is allowed to inspect the HUD-1 or HUD-1A at least one business day prior to settlement (12 CFR 1024.10(a));
- The HUD-1 or HUD-1A is provided to the borrower and seller at or before settlement (except where the borrower has waived the right to delivery and in the case of exempt transactions) (12 CFR 1024.10(b)); or
- In cases where the right to delivery is waived or the transaction is exempt, the HUD-1/1A is mailed as soon as practicable after settlement (12 CFR 1024.10(b), (c), and (d)).

17. Determine whether, in the case of an inadvertent or technical error on the HUD-1/1A, the financial institution provides a revised HUD-1/1A to the borrower within 30 calendar days after settlement (12 CFR 1024.8(c)).

18. Review the HUD-1 or HUD-1A form prepared in connection with each GFE reviewed to determine if the amount stated for any itemized service exceeds the amount shown on the GFE for that service. If the amount stated on the HUD-1 exceeds the amount shown on the GFE and such overcharge violates the tolerance for that category of settlement services, determine whether the financial institution cured the tolerance violation by reimbursing to the borrower the amount by which the tolerance was exceeded, at settlement or within 30 calendar days from date of settlement (12 CFR 1024.7(i)).

19. Determine whether HUD-1 and HUD-1A forms are retained for five years after settlement if the institution retains its interest in the mortgage and/or services. If the financial institution disposes of its interest in the mortgage and does not service the loan, determine whether the HUD-1 or HUD-1A form is transferred to the new asset owner with the loan file (12 CFR 1024.10(e)).

Homeownership Counseling Organization List – 12 CFR 1024.20

20. Determine whether the lender (or a mortgage broker or dealer) provided a clear and conspicuous written list of homeownership counseling services in the applicant’s location no later than three business days after the lender, mortgage broker or dealer received the application or information sufficient to complete an application (for RESPA-covered loans except for reverse mortgages or timeshare loans) (12 CFR 1024.20(a) and (c)). The written list does not need to be provided if, within the three-business-day period, the lender denies the application or the applicant withdraws it (12 CFR 1024.20(a)(5)).

21. Determine whether the lender obtained the list from either the website maintained by the CFPB or data made available by the CFPB or HUD for lenders complying with this requirement, no earlier than 30 days prior to the time it was provided to the applicant (12 CFR 1024.20(a)).

No Fees for RESPA Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.12

22. Determine whether the financial institution charges a fee specifically for preparing and distributing the HUD-1 forms, escrow statements or documents required under the Truth in Lending Act (12 CFR 1024.12).
23. If any fee is charged before providing a GFE in a reverse mortgage transaction, determine whether such fee is limited to the cost of a credit report (12 CFR 1024.7(a)(4)).

Purchase of Title Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.16

24. When the financial institution owns the property being sold, determine whether it requires that title insurance be purchased from a particular company (12 CFR 1024.16).

Payment or Receipt of Referral or Unearned Fees – 12 CFR 1024.14

25. Through interviews with institution management and reviews of audits, policies, and procedures or other appropriate methods, determine if management is aware of the prohibition against payment and receipt of any fee, kickback, or thing of value in return for the referral of settlement services business. (12 CFR 1024.14).
26. Through interviews with institution management and reviews of audits, policies, and procedures or other appropriate methods, determine if management is aware of the prohibition against unearned fees where a charge for settlement services is divided between two or more parties.
27. Through interviews with institution management and personnel, file reviews, review of: good faith estimates and HUD-1 or HUD-1A (for closed-end reverse mortgages), the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (for other closed-end mortgages secured by a dwelling), or other appropriate methods, determine if federally related mortgage loan transactions are referred to the institution by brokers, affiliates, or other parties. Also, identify persons or entities to which the institution refers settlement services business in connection with a federally related mortgage transaction.

- Identify the types of services rendered by the broker, affiliate, or service provider.
- By a review of the institution’s general ledger or otherwise determine if fees were paid to the institution or any parties identified.

- Determine whether any fees paid or received by the institution are for goods or facilities actually furnished or services actually performed and are not kickbacks or referral fees (12 CFR 1024.14(b)). This includes payments by the institution to an affiliate or the affiliate’s employees in connection with real estate settlements.
- In cases where a fee is split between the institution and one or more other parties, determine whether each party actually performed services for that fee (12 CFR 1024.14(c)). This includes payments by the institution to an affiliate or the affiliate’s employees in connection with real estate settlements.

Affiliated Business Arrangements – 12 CFR 1024.15

28. Determine from the TILA-RESPA Integrated Disclosures (or the HUD-1 or HUD-1A for reverse mortgages) and from interviews with institution management, or through other appropriate methods, if the institution referred a borrower to a settlement service provider with which the institution was affiliated or in which the institution had a direct or beneficial ownership interest of more than one percent (hereinafter, an “affiliated business arrangement”).
29. If the financial institution had an affiliated business arrangement, determine whether the affiliated business arrangement disclosure statement (Appendix D to Part 1024) was provided as required by 12 CFR 1024.15(b)(1).
30. Other than an attorney, credit reporting agency, or appraiser representing the lender, if the financial institution referred a borrower to a settlement service provider, determine whether the institution required the use of the provider (12 CFR 1024.15(b)(2)).
31. Determine if compensation received by the lender in connection with an affiliated business arrangement is limited to a return on an ownership interest or other amounts permissible under RESPA (12 CFR 1024.15(b)(3)).

Escrow Accounts – 12 CFR 1024.17

If the institution maintains escrow accounts in connection with a federally related mortgage loan, complete the following procedures. (NOTE: Effective April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat a confirmed successor in interest, as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, as a borrower for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.17).

32. Determine whether the institution performed an initial escrow analysis (12 CFR 1024.17(c)(2)) and provided the initial escrow statement required by 12 CFR 1024.17(g). The statement must contain the following:

V. Lending — RESPA

- Amount of monthly payment;
 - Portion of the monthly payment being placed in escrow;
 - Charges to be paid from the escrow account during the first 12 months;
 - Disbursement dates; and
 - Amount of cushion.
33. If the institution is a transferee (new) servicer and changed either the monthly payment amount or the accounting method used by the transferor (old) servicer, determine whether the institution provided a borrower with an initial escrow account statement within 60 days of the date of the servicing transfer. (12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)). A transferee servicer providing an initial escrow statement must use the effective date of transfer of servicing to establish the new escrow account computation year. (12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)(i)).
34. If the institution is a transferee servicer and retains the monthly payments and accounting method used by the prior servicer, but chooses to change the computation year, determine whether the institution provided a short-year statement to the borrower. (12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)(ii)). See also procedures related to 12 CFR 1024.17(i)(4).
- NOTE: Where the new servicer retains the monthly payments and accounting method used by the transferor servicer, then the new servicer may continue to use the escrow account computation year established by the transferor servicer or may choose to establish a different computation year using a short-year statement. At the completion of the escrow account computation year or any short year, the new servicer shall perform an escrow analysis and provide the borrower with an annual escrow account statement. 12 CFR 1024.17(e)(1)(ii).*
35. Determine whether the institution treats shortages, surpluses, and deficiencies in the escrow account according to the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.17(f).
36. Determine if the statement was given to the borrower at settlement or within 45 days after the escrow account was established. This statement may be incorporated into the HUD-1 statement (12 CFR 1024.17(g)(1) and (2)).
37. Determine whether the institution performs an annual analysis of the escrow account (12 CFR 1024.17(c)(3) and (7), and 1024.17(i)).
38. Determine whether the annual escrow account statement is provided to the borrower within 30 days of the end of the computation year (12 CFR 1024.17(i)).
39. Determine if the annual escrow statement contains the following:
- Amount of monthly mortgage payment and portion placed in escrow;
 - Amount of past year's monthly mortgage payment and portion that went into escrow;
 - Total amount paid into escrow during the past computation year;
 - Total amount paid out of escrow account during same period for taxes, insurance, and other charges;
 - Balance in the escrow account at the end of the period;
 - How a surplus, shortage, or deficiency is to be paid/handled; and
 - If applicable, the reason why the estimated low monthly balance was not reached (12 CFR 1024.17(i)(1)).
40. Determine whether the servicer complied with the requirements relating to short-year statements in 12 CFR 1024.17(i)(4) within 60 days from the end of the short year or within 60 days after receiving funds that pay off the loan.
41. Determine whether monthly escrow payments following settlement are within the limits of 12 CFR 1024.17(c).

Timely Payment of Hazard Insurance; Force-Placed Insurance

NOTE: The procedures in this section do not apply to small servicers.³¹ In addition to the information provided in this

³¹ Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to section, examiners should also refer to 12 CFR 1024.37, which sets forth further requirements relating to force-placed insurance.

In addition, the procedures related to 12 CFR 1024.34 and 1024.37 may be applicable to escrow accounts and fees or charges for force-placed insurance.

42. If the institution purchased force-placed insurance for a borrower who had established an escrow account for the payment of hazard insurance, determine whether the institution was permitted to do so under 12 CFR 1024.17(k)(5). Under that provision, an institution may not purchase force-placed insurance unless (i) the borrower was more than 30 days delinquent, and (ii) the institution was unable to disburse funds from the escrow account to ensure that the borrower's hazard insurance premium charges were paid in a timely manner.

An institution is unable to disburse funds if it has a reasonable basis to believe that either (a) the borrower's property is vacant, or (b) the borrower's hazard insurance has terminated for reasons other than non-payment of the premium charges. An institution is not unable to disburse funds from the borrower's escrow account solely because the account has insufficient funds for paying hazard insurance premium charges (12 CFR 1024.17(k)(5)(ii)).

43. Small servicer exception. Notwithstanding the above, a small servicer may charge borrowers for force-placed insurance. If the institution is a small servicer and charged borrowers for force-placed insurance, determine whether the cost to each borrower of the force-placed insurance was less than the amount the institution would have needed to disburse from the borrower's escrow account to ensure that hazard insurance charges were paid in a timely manner (12 CFR 1024.17(k)(5)(iii)).

Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing

Applicability: Except as otherwise noted below, the provisions of Subpart C – Mortgage Servicing, 12 CFR 1024.30-41, apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31. Effective April 19, 2018, a servicer must treat confirmed successors in interest as borrowers under the provisions of Subpart C. (12 CFR 1024.30(d)).

come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

General Disclosure Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.32(c) (Effective April 19, 2018)

Successors in Interest

44. For servicers providing the optional written notice and acknowledgment form under 12 CFR 1024.32(c) to confirmed successors in interest who have not assumed the mortgage loan and are otherwise liable on it:
- Determine whether the written notice explains that the confirmed successor in interest may be entitled to receive certain notices and communications about the mortgage loan if the servicer is not providing them to another confirmed successor in interest or borrower on the account. The notice also must explain that in order to receive such notices and communications, the successor in interest must execute and provide to the servicer the acknowledgment form.
- NOTE: Servicers that send this type of notice and acknowledgement form are not required to provide to the confirmed successor in interest any written disclosure required by 12 CFR 1024.17, 1024.33, 1024.34, 1024.37, or 1024.39, or to comply with the live contact requirements in 12 CFR 1024.39(a) with respect to the confirmed successor in interest until the confirmed successor in interest either assumes the mortgage loan or executes the acknowledgment form.
- Determine whether the servicer stated in the written notice that, regardless of whether the successor in interest executes the acknowledgement form, the successor in interest is entitled to submit notices of error under 12 CFR 1024.35, requests for information under 12 CFR 1024.36, and requests for a payoff statement under 12 CFR 1026.36. The notice must include a brief explanation of those rights and how to exercise them, including appropriate address information.

Mortgage Servicing Transfer Disclosures – 12 CFR 1024.33

Reverse Mortgage Disclosure Statement

Complete the following if the institution received an application for a reverse mortgage loan, as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

45. Determine whether the lender, mortgage broker who anticipates using table funding, or dealer in a first-lien dealer loan provided a proper servicing disclosure statement to the borrower within three days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receipt of the application. The disclosure statement must advise whether the servicing of the mortgage loan may be assigned, sold, or transferred to any other person at any time. A model disclosure statement is set forth in Appendix MS-1 (12 CFR 1024.33(a)).

Additionally, the disclosure statement is not required if the institution denied the application within the three-day period.

Transfers of Mortgage Servicing Rights – Disclosures

Complete the following if the institution has transferred or received mortgage servicing rights. The following are generally not considered transfers: (1) transfers between affiliates; (2) transfers resulting from mergers or acquisitions of servicers or subservicers; and (3) transfers between master servicers, when the subservicer remains the same. Additionally, the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) is not required to provide a notice of transfer to the borrower where a mortgage insured under the National Housing Act is assigned to FHA (12 CFR 1024.33(b)).

46. If the institution has transferred mortgage servicing rights, determine whether notice to the borrower was given at least 15 days prior to the transfer (12 CFR 1024.33(b)(3)). This notice may be combined with the transferee's notice (discussed below) into one notice if delivered to the borrower at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Notices provided at the time of settlement satisfy the timing requirements.
47. If the institution has received mortgage servicing rights, determine whether notice was given to the borrower within 15 days after the transfer (12 CFR 1024.33(b)(3)). This notice may be combined with the transferor's notice (discussed above) into one notice if delivered to the borrower at least 15 days before the effective date of the transfer. Notices provided at the time of settlement satisfy the timing requirements.
48. Determine whether the notice sent by the institution includes the following information (12 CFR 1024.33(b)(4)). Sample language for the notice of transfer is contained in Appendix MS-2 to 12 CFR Part 1024.
 - The effective date of the transfer;
 - The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferee servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries;
 - The name, address, and toll-free or collect-call telephone number for an employee or department of the transferor servicer that can be contacted by the borrower to obtain answers to servicing transfer inquiries;

- The date on which the transferor servicer will cease accepting payments relating to the loan and the date on which the transferee servicer will begin to accept such payments. The dates must either be the same or consecutive dates;
 - Whether the transfer will affect the terms or the availability of optional insurance and any action the borrower must take to maintain such coverage; and
 - A statement that the transfer does not affect the terms or conditions of the mortgage (except as directly related to servicing) (Appendix MS-2 to 12 CFR Part 1024).
49. Determine whether the notice by the transferor and transferee was sent to the borrower's address listed in the mortgage loan documents, unless the borrower notified the institution of a new address pursuant to the institution's requirements (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.33(b)(3)-1).

Transfers of Mortgage Servicing Rights – Treatment of Post-Transfer Payments

Complete the following if the institution has transferred or received mortgage servicing rights.

50. If the borrower sent any payments to the transferor servicer within the 60 days following a transfer of servicing rights, determine whether the institution imposed late fees or otherwise treated such payments as late (12 CFR 1024.33(c)(1)).
51. If the borrower sent any payments to the transferor servicer within the 60 days following a transfer of servicing rights, determine whether the transferor servicer either (a) forwarded the payment to the transferee servicer, or (b) returned the payment and informed the payor of the proper recipient of the payment (12 CFR 1024.33(c)(2)).

Complete the following if the terms of a borrower's mortgage loan, as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, require the borrower to make payments to the institution for deposit into an escrow account to pay taxes, insurance premiums, and other charges for the mortgaged property.

52. Determine whether the institution made payments from the escrow account in a timely manner (12 CFR 1024.34). A "timely manner" means on or before the deadline to avoid a penalty, as governed by the requirements in 12 CFR 1024.17(k).

53. Determine whether the institution returned amounts remaining in escrow within 20 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after the borrower paid the mortgage loan in full (12 CFR 1024.34(b)). The institution does not need to return this amount if it and the borrower agree to credit the remaining funds towards an escrow account for certain new mortgage loans.

Error Resolution Procedures – 12 CFR 1024.35

Complete the following based upon a review of a sample of mortgage loan (as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31) files that included written error notices from borrowers or through other appropriate methods.

Address for Error Notices

54. If the institution designates an address or addresses to which borrowers must send error notices, complete the following:
- Determine whether the institution provided written notice of the address to the borrower, along with a statement that the borrower must use that address to assert errors (12 CFR 1024.35(c)).
 - Determine whether the institution also provided that address to the borrower in each of the following three types of communications:
 - Any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41;
 - Any website the institution maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and
 - Any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or .41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(c)-2).
 - Determine whether the institution designated the same address for receiving information requests pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.36(b) (12 CFR 1024.35(c)).
 - If the institution establishes an electronic method for submitting error notices that is its exclusive online intake process, determine whether this electronic process was in addition to, and not in lieu of, any process for receiving error notices by mail (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(c)-4).

55. If the institution does not establish a specific address to which to send error notices, determine whether the institution responds to error notices sent to any of its offices (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(c)-1).

Acknowledgement of Error Notices

56. Determine whether:
- The institution properly acknowledged the error notice by providing written acknowledgement of the error notice to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving an error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(d)); or
 - Acknowledgment was not required because:
 - The institution corrected the errors asserted and notified the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of receiving the error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(f));
 - The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice, with the basis for its decision not to take any action, to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.35(g)); or
 - The error notice related to violations of certain loss mitigation procedures under 12 CFR 1024.35(b)(9) or (10) and was received by the institution seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale. With respect to such error notices, the institution must make a good faith attempt to respond orally or in writing to the borrower and either correct the error or state the reason the institution determined that no error occurred (12 CFR 1024.35(f)(2)).

Response to Error Notices

57. Determine whether:
- The institution properly responded to a borrower's written error notice by:
 - Correcting the errors identified by the borrower as well as any different or additional errors that were discovered during the investigation and providing written notice to the borrower of the corrections, the date the corrections took effect, and contact information for further assistance; or

V. Lending — RESPA

- Conducting a reasonable investigation and providing the borrower with a written notice stating that the institution has determined that no error occurred, the reasons for its determination, the borrower's right to request documents relied upon by the institution in reaching its determination and how to do so, and contact information for further assistance (12 CFR 1024.35(e)); AND
- Undertaking one of the above within the following time frames:
 - If the alleged error was a failure to provide an accurate payoff balance amount, the institution responded within seven days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(3)(A));
 - If the alleged error was either (1) making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(f) or (j), or (2) moving for foreclosure judgment or order of sale or conducting a foreclosure sale in violation of 12 CFR 1024.41(g) or (j), the institution responded by the earlier of 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) or the date of a foreclosure sale (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(3)(B)). However, if the institution received the error notice seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale, the institution is not required to respond in writing, but must nevertheless make a good faith attempt to respond orally or in writing to the borrower and either correct the error or state the reason the institution determined that no error occurred (12 CFR 1024.35(f)(2));
 - For all other alleged errors, the institution responded within 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) unless, prior to the expiration of that 30-day period, the institution extended the time for responding by an additional 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) by notifying the borrower in writing of the extension and the reasons for it (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(3)); OR
- The above responses were not required because:
 - The institution corrected the errors asserted and notified the borrower in writing within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of receiving the error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(f));
 - The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice, with the basis for its decision not to take any action, to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.35(g)); or
 - The error notice related to violations of certain loss mitigation procedures under 12 CFR 1024.35(b)(9) or (10) and was received by the institution seven or fewer days before a foreclosure sale. With respect to such error notices, the institution must make a good faith attempt to respond orally or in writing to the borrower and either correct the error or state the reason the institution determined that no error occurred (12 CFR 1024.35(f)(2)).

Determination that No Error Occurred

58. If the institution stated that no error occurred and the borrower requested supporting documentation, determine whether the institution provided the documents that it relied upon to determine that no error occurred within 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(4)). If the institution withheld documents that constituted confidential, proprietary, or privileged information, determine whether it provided written notification to the borrower within 15 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(4)).

NOTE: A servicer responding to a notice of error request for documentation may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(5)) (Effective April 19, 2018).

Determination that No Response was Required

59. If the institution determined that it was exempt from the requirement to respond, determine whether the institution reasonably determined that one of the following three exemptions applied:
- The error asserted is substantially the same as an error previously asserted by the borrower for which the institution complied with 12 CFR 1024.35(d) and (e), unless the borrower provides new and material information to support the error;

- The error notice was overbroad. An error notice is overbroad if the institution cannot reasonably determine from the error notice the specific error that has occurred on a borrower's account; or
- The error notice was untimely. An error notice is untimely if it is delivered to the institution more than one year after either (i) the institution transferred servicing responsibility to another institution, or (ii) the mortgage loan was discharged (12 CFR 1024.35(g)(1)). A mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

Asserted Errors Related to Non-Bona Fide Fees

60. If the borrower asserted that the institution charged a fee without a reasonable basis to do so, determine whether the institution in fact had a reasonable basis to impose the fee (12 CFR 1024.35(b)(5)). An institution lacks a reasonable basis to impose fees that are not bona fide, such as (i) a late fee for a payment that was not late, (ii) a charge for a service that a service provider did not actually provide, (iii) a default management fee for borrowers who are not delinquent, or (iv) a charge for force-placed insurance that is not permitted by 12 CFR 1024.37 (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.35(b)-2).

Impermissible Fees and Conditions and Other Restrictions

- 61. Determine whether the institution conditioned its investigation of the asserted error on the borrower providing supporting documentation (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(2)(i)).
- 62. Determine whether the institution determined that no error occurred because the borrower failed to provide any requested information without conducting a reasonable investigation (12 CFR 1024.35(e)(2)(ii)).
- 63. Determine whether the institution charged a fee or required the borrower to make any payments as a condition to responding to an error notice (12 CFR 1024.35(h)).
- 64. Determine whether the institution furnished adverse information to any consumer reporting agency regarding a payment that was the subject of an error notice within 60 days after receiving the notice (12 CFR 1024.35(i)).

Requests for Information – 12 CFR 1024.36

Complete the following based upon a review of a sample of mortgage loan (as defined in 12 CFR 1024.31) files that included written information requests from borrowers or other appropriate methods.

Address for Information Requests

- 65. If the institution designates an address or addresses to which borrowers must send information requests, complete the following:
 - Determine whether the institution provided written notice of the address to the borrower, along with a statement that the borrower must use that address to request information (12 CFR 1024.36(b)).
 - Determine whether the institution also provided that address to the borrower in each of the following three communications:
 - Any periodic statement or coupon book required under 12 CFR 1026.41;
 - Any website the institution maintains in connection with the servicing of the loan; and
 - Any notice required pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.39 (early intervention) or .41 (loss mitigation) that includes contact information for assistance (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(c)-2).
 - Determine whether the institution designated the same address for receiving information requests pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.35(c) (12 CFR 1024.36(b)).
 - If the institution establishes an electronic method for submitting information requests that is its exclusive online intake process, determine whether this electronic process was in addition to, and not in lieu of, any process for receiving information requests by mail (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(c)-4).
- 66. If the institution does not establish a specific address to which to send information requests, determine whether the institution responds to information requests sent to any of its offices (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(b)-1).

Acknowledgement of Information Requests

- 67. Determine whether:
 - The institution properly acknowledged the information request by providing written acknowledgement to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the information request (12 CFR 1024.36(c)); or

V. Lending — RESPA

- Acknowledgement was not required because:
 - The institution provided the borrower with the information requested and contact information (including telephone number) for further assistance within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.36(e)); or
 - The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice with the basis for its determination not to respond to the request to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.36(f)).
- The above responses were not required because:
 - The institution provided the borrower with the information requested and contact information (including telephone number) for further assistance within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) (12 CFR 1024.36(e)); or
 - The institution determined that it was not required to respond and provided written notice with the basis for its determination not to respond to the request to the borrower within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after making that determination (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(2)).

Response to Information Requests

68. Determine whether:

- The institution properly responded to the information request by:
 - Providing the requested information and contact information for further assistance (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(1)(i)); or
 - Conducting a reasonable search for the requested information and providing the borrower with a written notice advising the borrower that the institution has determined that the requested information is not available to it, the basis for the institution's determination, and contact information for further assistance (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(1)(ii)). Information is not available to the institution if the information is not in the institution's control or possession or if it cannot be retrieved in the ordinary course of business through reasonable efforts such as, for example, if electronic back-up media is not normally accessible to the institution's personnel and would take an extraordinary effort to identify and restore. Information stored offsite but which personnel can access upon request is available to the institution; AND
 - Undertaking one of the above within the following time frames:
 - If the borrower requested the identity of or contact information for the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan, responding within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays);
 - For all other information requests, responding within 30 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays)

NOTE: A servicer in its response to a request for information may omit location, contact, and personal financial information (other than information about the terms, status, and payment history of the mortgage loan) if: (i) the information pertains to a potential or confirmed successor in interest who is not the requester; or (ii) the requester is a confirmed successor in interest and the information pertains to any borrower who is not the requester. (12 CFR 1024.36(d)(3)) (Effective April 19, 2018).

Information Requests Regarding the Identity or Contact Information of the Owner or Assignee of a Mortgage Loan

69. For a borrower's information request regarding the owner or assignee of a mortgage loan, when a loan is not held in trust for which an appointed trustee receives payments on behalf of the trust, determine whether the institution complied by identifying the person on whose behalf the institution receives payments (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2.i).

However, when the loan is held in a trust for which an appointed trustee receives payments on behalf of the trust, determine first what specific information is being requested, and second whether the servicer complied with the requirements clarified in 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2.ii:

- For loans held in trust in which the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac) is not the owner of the loan or the trustee, determine that the institution complied by identifying the name of the trust, and the name, address, and appropriate contact information for the trustee. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2.ii.A)

- For loans held in a trust in which Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac is the owner of the loan or trustee, determine that the institution complied by providing the following information:
 1. If the request did not expressly request the name or number of the trust or pool, the name and contact information for Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, as applicable. The institution does not need to provide the name of the trust.
 2. If the request did expressly request the name or number of the trust or pool, the name of the trust, and the name, address, and appropriate contact information for the trustee. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2(ii)(B)-(C)).

NOTE: Comment 36(a)-2 clarifies that a servicer is not the owner or assignee for purposes of information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36 if the servicer holds title to the loan, or title is assigned to the servicer, solely for the administrative convenience of the servicer in servicing the mortgage loan obligation. It also states that the Government National Mortgage Association (Ginnie Mae) is not the owner or assignee for purposes of such requests for information solely as a result of its role as the guarantor of the security in which the loan serves as the collateral. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(a)-2).

Determination that No Response was Required

70. If the institution determined that it was exempt from the requirement to respond, determine whether the institution reasonably determined that one of the following five exemptions applied:
- The information requested is substantially the same as information the borrower previously requested for which the institution has already complied with the requirements for responding to written information requests (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(i));
 - The information requested is confidential, proprietary, or privileged (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(ii));
 - The information requested is not directly related to the borrower’s mortgage loan account (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(iii));
 - The information request is overbroad or unduly burdensome. A request is overbroad if the borrower requests that the institution provide an unreasonable volume of documents or information. A request is unduly burdensome if a diligent institution could not respond within the time periods set forth in 12 CFR 1024.46(d)(2) or would incur costs (or have to dedicate resources) that would be unreasonable in light of the circumstances (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(iv)); or

- The information request is sent more than one year after either the mortgage loan balance was discharged or the institution transferred the mortgage loan to another servicer (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(v)). A mortgage loan is discharged when both the debt and all corresponding liens have been extinguished or released, as applicable.

Determination that Information Request was Overbroad

71. If the institution determined that a submitted request was overbroad or unduly burdensome, determine whether the institution could reasonably have identified a valid information request in the submission and whether the institution did so (12 CFR 1024.36(f)(1)(iv)).

Impermissible Fees and Conditions

72. Determine whether the institution charged a fee, or required a borrower to make any payment that was owed on the borrower’s account, as a condition of responding to an information request (12 CFR 1024.36(g)).

Potential Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

73. In response to a written request from a potential successor in interest, determine whether the servicer provided the potential successor in interest with a written description of the documents the servicer reasonably required to confirm the person’s identity and ownership interest in the property as well as contact information, including a telephone number, for further assistance. (12 CFR 1024.36(i)(1)).
74. With respect to the written request, determine whether the servicer treated the potential successor in interest as a borrower for purposes of the requirements in 12 CFR 1024.36 (c)-(g), including responding to the request not later than the time limits set forth in 12 CFR 1024.36(d)(2). (12 CFR 1024.36(i)(1); 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.36(i)-2).

Force-Placed Insurance – 12 CFR 1024.37

Applicability: Servicers must comply with restrictions on purchasing, renewing, and assessing fees for “force-placed insurance,” which is defined as hazard insurance that a servicer obtains on behalf of the owner or assignee to insure the property securing the mortgage loan (but does not include (i) flood insurance required by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973; (ii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower’s servicer in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.17(k)(1), (2), or (5); or (iii) hazard insurance obtained by a borrower but renewed by the borrower's servicer at its discretion with the borrower's agreement).

V. Lending — RESPA

The provisions of 12 CFR 1024.37 regulate when an institution may assess a premium charge or fee on borrowers related to force-placed insurance. These provisions apply to any mortgage loan, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31.

Assessing Charges or Fees Related to Force-Placed Insurance

Complete the following if the institution assessed a charge or fee on a borrower related to force-placed insurance.

Reasonable Basis

75. Determine whether the institution had a reasonable basis to believe that the borrower has failed to comply with the mortgage loan contract's requirement to maintain hazard insurance (12 CFR 1024.37(b)). An institution's "reasonable basis" may be based upon information about a borrower's hazard insurance which the institution receives from the borrower, the borrower's insurance provider, or the borrower's insurance agent. If the institution receives no such information, the institution may satisfy the "reasonable basis" standard if it acts with reasonable diligence to ascertain the borrower's hazard insurance status and does not receive evidence of hazard insurance. A servicer that complies with the initial and reminder notice requirements (below) has acted with reasonable diligence (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I, Comment 1024.37(b)-1).

Initial Notice

76. Determine whether the institution provided the initial written notice to the borrower at least 45 days before assessing a fee or charge (12 CFR 1024.37(c)).

77. Determine whether the initial notice included the following information (12 CFR 1024.37(c)). Sample language for the initial notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(A) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

- The date of the notice;
- The institution's name and mailing address;
- The borrower's name and mailing address;
- A statement that requests the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower's property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the borrower's hazard insurance has expired, is expiring, or provides insufficient coverage (as applicable), that the institution lacks evidence that the borrower has hazard insurance coverage past the expiration date or lacks evidence that the borrower has hazard insurance that provides sufficient coverage (as applicable), and (if applicable) that identifies the type of hazard insurance lacking. (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(2)(v));

- A statement that hazard insurance is required on the borrower's property and that the institution has purchased or will purchase insurance at the borrower's expense;
 - A request that the borrower promptly provide the institution with insurance information;
 - A description of the requested insurance information, how the borrower may provide such information, and (if applicable) that the requested information must be in writing;
 - A statement that the insurance coverage the institution has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
 - The institution's phone number for borrower inquiries; and
 - A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable).
78. Determine whether the initial notice was in the correct form. The notice must provide certain information in bold text and, other than the specific statements listed above and the loan number, the institution cannot provide any information on the initial notice (though the institution can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal) (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(3)-(4)). A sample notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(A) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

Reminder Notice

79. If the institution received no hazard insurance information or did not receive evidence of continuous coverage, determine whether the institution provided a reminder notice (i) at least 30 days after mailing or delivering the initial notice, and (ii) at least 15 days before assessing any charges or fees for force-placed insurance (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(1)).
80. For borrowers who did not provide hazard insurance information, determine whether the reminder notice (i) contains the date of the reminder notice and all of the other information provided in the initial notice; (ii) advises that it is a second and final notice; and (iii) identifies the annual cost of force-placed insurance or, if unknown, a reasonable estimate (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(2)(i)). Sample language for the reminder notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(B) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

81. When the institution receives hazard insurance information but does not receive evidence of continuous sufficient coverage, determine whether the reminder notice includes the following information (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(2)(ii)). Sample language for the reminder notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(C) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

- The date of the reminder notice;
- The institution’s name and mailing address;
- The borrower’s name and mailing address;
- A statement requesting that the borrower provide hazard insurance information for the borrower’s property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
- A statement that the insurance coverage the servicer has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, hazard insurance purchased by the borrower;
- The institution’s phone number for borrower inquiries;
- A statement advising that the borrower review additional information provided in the same transmittal (if applicable);
- A statement that it is the second and final notice;
- The annual cost of force-placed insurance, or if unknown, a reasonable estimate;
- A statement that the institution has received the hazard insurance information that the borrower provided;
- A request that the borrower provide the missing information; and
- A statement that the borrower will be charged for insurance the institution purchases for the time period in which the institution cannot verify coverage.

82. Determine whether the reminder notice was in the correct form. The notice must provide certain information in bold text and, other than the specific statements listed above and the loan number, the institution cannot provide any information on the reminder notice (though the institution can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal) (12 CFR 1024.37(d)(3)-(4)). Sample notices are contained in Appendix MS-3(B) and (C) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

83. Determine whether, by the end of the 15-day period after the institution sent the reminder notice, the borrower provided evidence that it has had hazard insurance that complies with the loan contract continuously in place. As evidence, the institution may require a copy of the borrower’s hazard insurance policy declaration page, the borrower’s insurance certificate, the borrower’s insurance policy, or other similar forms of written confirmation (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(1)(iii) and 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I, Comment 1024.37(c)(1)(iii)-2).

Assessing Charges or Fees for Renewing or Replacing Force-Placed Insurance

If the institution assessed a charge or fee on a borrower for renewing or replacing force-placed insurance, complete the following.

84. Determine whether the institution provided a written renewal notice to the borrower at least 45 days before assessing any fee or charge (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(1)(i)).
85. Determine whether the renewal notice includes the following information (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(2)). Sample language for the renewal of force-placed insurance notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(D) to 12 CFR Part 1024.
- The date of the renewal notice;
 - The institution’s name and mailing address;
 - The borrower’s name and mailing address;
 - A statement that requests the borrower to update the hazard insurance information for the borrower’s property and that identifies the property by its physical address;
 - A statement that the institution previously purchased force-placed insurance at the borrower’s expense because the institution did not have evidence that the borrower had hazard insurance coverage;
 - A statement that the force-placed insurance has expired or is expiring, as applicable, and that the institution intends to renew or replace it because hazard insurance is required on the property;
 - A statement that the insurance coverage the institution has purchased or will purchase may cost significantly more than, and provide less coverage than, insurance purchased by the borrower, and identifying the annual premium cost of force-placed insurance or a reasonable estimate;

- A statement that if the borrower purchases hazard insurance, the borrower should promptly provide the institution with insurance information;
- A description of the requested insurance information and how the borrower may provide such information, and if applicable, that the requested information must be in writing;
- The institution's telephone number for borrower inquiries; and
- A statement advising the borrower to review additional information provided in the same mailing (if applicable).

86. Determine whether the renewal notice was in the correct form. The notice must provide certain information in bold text and, other than the specific statements listed above and the loan number, the institution cannot provide any information on the renewal notice (though the institution can provide additional information on separate pages of paper contained in the same transmittal) (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(3)-(4)). A sample notice is contained in Appendix MS-3(D) to 12 CFR Part 1024.

87. Determine whether in the 45 days after sending the renewal notice the institution received evidence demonstrating that the borrower had purchased hazard insurance coverage (12 CFR 1024.37(e)(1)(ii)). As evidence, the institution may require a copy of the borrower's hazard insurance policy declaration page, the borrower's insurance certificate, the borrower's insurance policy, or other similar forms of written confirmation.

General Mailing Requirements, Canceling Force-Placed Insurance, and Bona Fide and Reasonable Fee Requirements

88. If the institution mailed any of the written initial, reminder, or renewal notices (12 CFR 1024.37(c)(1)(i), (c)(1)(ii), or (e)(1)), determine whether the servicer used a class of mail not less than first-class mail (12 CFR 1024.27(f)).

89. If the institution received evidence that the borrower had required hazard insurance coverage in place, determine whether the institution did the following within 15 days:

- Canceled the force-placed insurance;
- Refunded force-placed insurance premiums charges and fees for the period of overlapping coverage; and

- Removed all force-placed charges and fees from the borrower's account for the period of overlapping coverage (12 CFR 1024.37(g)).

90. Determine whether all fees or charges assessed on the borrower related to force-placed insurance are bona fide and reasonable (except for charges subject to State regulation and charges authorized by the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973). A "bona fide and reasonable charge" is one that is reasonably related to the institution's cost of providing the service and is not otherwise prohibited by law (12 CFR 1024.37(h)).

General Servicing Policies, Procedures, and Requirements – 12 CFR 1024.38

Applicability: The general servicing policies, procedures, and requirements apply to all mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, except that the requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii);³² (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.33(a); and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations.

Policies and Procedures – Accessing and Providing Timely and Accurate Information

91. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure that it has access to and provides timely and accurate information (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(1)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:

³² Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

- Providing accurate and timely disclosures to the borrower;
- Investigating, responding to, and making corrections in response to borrowers' complaints, including promptly obtaining information from service providers to investigate and if applicable correct errors resulting from actions of service providers;
- Providing borrowers with accurate and timely information and documents in response to borrower requests for information with respect to the borrower's mortgage loan;
- Providing owners and assignees of mortgage loans with accurate and current information and documents about all the mortgage loans they own, including information about the institution's evaluations of borrowers for loss mitigation options and loss mitigation agreements with borrowers;
- Submitting accurate and current information and documents that comply with applicable law during the foreclosure process;
- Upon notification of a borrower's death, promptly communicating with the borrower's successor in interest concerning the secured property (Effective until April 19, 2018);
- Upon receiving notice of a borrower's death or of any transfer of the secured property, promptly facilitating communication with any potential or confirmed successors in interest regarding the property (Effective April 19, 2018);
- Upon receiving notice of the existence of a potential successor in interest, promptly determining the documents the servicer reasonably requires to confirm the person's identity and ownership interest in the property (see commentary to 12 CFR 1024.38(b)(1)(vi) for illustrative examples) and promptly providing to the potential successor in interest a description of those documents and how the person may submit a written request under 12 CFR 1024.36(i) (Effective April 19, 2018); and
- Upon the receipt of such documents, promptly making a confirmation determination and promptly notifying the person, as applicable, that the servicer has confirmed the person's status, has determined that additional documents are required (and what those documents are), or has determined that the person is not a successor in interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

Policies and Procedures – Proper Evaluation of Loss Mitigation Applications

92. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure that its personnel properly evaluate loss mitigation applications (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(2)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:
 - Providing accurate information regarding available loss mitigation options from the owner or assignee of the borrower's loan;
 - Identifying with specificity all loss mitigation options for which a borrower may be eligible, including identifying, with respect to each owner or assignee, all of the loss mitigation options the institution may consider when evaluating a borrower, as well as the criteria the institution should apply for each option;
 - Providing the loss mitigation personnel assigned to the borrower's mortgage loan pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.40 with prompt access to all of the documents and information that the borrower submitted in connection with a loss mitigation option;
 - Identifying the documents and information a borrower must submit to complete a loss mitigation application;
 - In response to a complete loss mitigation application, properly evaluating the borrower for all eligible loss mitigation options pursuant to any requirements established by the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan, even if those requirements are otherwise beyond the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41; and
 - Promptly identifying and obtaining documents or information not in the borrower's control that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, to offer the borrower in accordance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4).

Policies and Procedures – Oversight of Servicer Providers

93. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to facilitate oversight of, and compliance by, service providers (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(3)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:
 - Providing appropriate personnel with access to accurate and current documents and information concerning the service providers' actions;

- Facilitating periodic reviews of service providers; and
- Facilitating the sharing of accurate and current information regarding the status of a borrower's loss mitigation application and any foreclosure proceeding among appropriate institution personnel, including the loss mitigation personnel assigned to the borrower's mortgage loan, and appropriate service provider personnel, including service provider personnel responsible for handling foreclosure proceedings.
 - For instance, the policies and procedures must be reasonably designed to ensure that the servicer promptly informs service provider personnel handling foreclosure proceedings that the servicer has received a complete loss mitigation application and promptly instructs foreclosure counsel to take any step required by 12 CFR 1024.41(g) sufficiently timely to avoid violating the prohibition against moving for judgment or order of sale, or conducting a foreclosure sale.

Policies and Procedures – Transfer of Information

94. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to facilitate the transfer of information during servicing transfers (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(4)). This includes policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to ensure the following:
- For a transferor servicer, the timely and accurate transfer of all information and documents in its possession and control related to a transferred mortgage loan to the transferee servicer in a manner that ensures its accuracy and that allows the transferee to comply with the terms of the mortgage loan and applicable law, including any information about the status of any loss mitigation agreements or discussions with the borrower and any analysis performed with respect to potential recovery from non-performing mortgage loans; and
 - For a transferee servicer, identifying necessary documents or information that may not have been transferred, obtaining such missing documentation or information from the transferor servicer (for documents and information related to loss mitigation, the transferee's policies and procedures must address obtaining missing documents from the transferor servicer before attempting to obtain such documents from the borrower).

Policies and Procedures – Notifying Borrowers of Error Notice and Information Request Procedures

95. Determine whether the institution has policies and procedures that are reasonably designed to inform borrowers of procedures for submitting written error notices and written information requests (12 CFR 1024.38(a) and (b)(5)). This includes policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the institution informs borrowers who are dissatisfied with the institution's response to oral complaints or information requests of the procedures for submitting written error notices under 12 CFR 1024.35 and written information requests under 12 CFR 1024.36.

Record Retention – Accurate Records

96. For any mortgage loan, determine if the institution is retaining accurate records that document actions with respect to the mortgage loan account (which includes any mortgage loan that has been transferred or paid in full). The institution must retain these records until one year after the loan is discharged or the institution transfers servicing for the mortgage loan to a transferee servicer. (12 CFR 1024.38(c)(1)).

Servicing File – Facilitating Aggregation of Information

97. For documents or information created on or after January 10, 2014, determine whether the institution maintains the following five items for each mortgage loan file in a manner that allows the institution to aggregate these items into a servicing file within five days:
- A schedule of all credits and debits to the account (including escrow accounts and suspense accounts);
 - A copy of the security instrument that establishes the lien securing the mortgage loan;
 - Any notes created by institution personnel reflecting communications with the borrower concerning the account;
 - A report of the data fields relating to the borrower's account created by the institution's electronic systems (if applicable); and
 - Copies of any information or documents provided by the borrower to the institution in connection with written error notices or loss mitigation (12 CFR 1024.38(c)(2)).

Early Intervention Requirements for Certain Borrowers – 12 CFR 1024.39

Applicability: The early intervention requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence (12 CFR 1024.30(c)(2)). The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii),³³ (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.33(a), and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations (12 CFR 1024.30(b)). Refer to 12 CFR 1024.39(c)-(d) and associated commentary for an institution's obligation to comply with the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) and written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) for borrowers in bankruptcy and for borrowers who have invoked cease communication rights under the FDCPA.

Complete the following for any delinquent borrowers.

NOTE: Delinquency for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.39 (and certain other sections in Regulation X) means a period of time during which a borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent. A borrower and a borrower's mortgage loan obligation are delinquent beginning on the date a periodic payment sufficient to cover principal, interest, and, if applicable, escrow becomes due and unpaid, until such time as no periodic payment is due and unpaid. (12 CFR 1024.31). For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.39, this definition does not include borrowers performing as agreed under a loss mitigation agreement designed to bring the borrower current on a previously missed payment. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.39(a)-1.ii).

³³ Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

Live Contact

98. Determine whether the institution made good faith efforts to establish live contact with the borrower within 36 days after each time the borrower became delinquent (12 CFR 1024.39(a)).
99. After the institution established live contact, determine whether the institution promptly informed the borrower of loss mitigation options, if appropriate (as determined based on the institution's reasonable discretion) (12 CFR 1024.39(a)).

Written Notice

100. Determine whether the institution sent a written notice to the borrower within 45 days after the borrower became delinquent (12 CFR 1024.39(b)(1)). The institution generally does not need to send the notice to a borrower more than once in a 180-day period. Different timing requirements might apply when a borrower has filed for bankruptcy (see 12 CFR 1024.39(c)) or has provided a cease communication notice pursuant to section 805(c) of the FDCPA (see 12 CFR 1024.39(d)).
101. Determine whether the notice included the following items (12 CFR 1024.39(b)(2)). Sample language for the notice is contained in Appendix MS-4(A), MS-4(B), MS-4(C), and MS-4(D) (that servicers subject to the FDCPA can use to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice) to 12 CFR Part 1024.
 - A statement encouraging the borrower to contact the institution;
 - The telephone number to access assigned loss mitigation personnel;
 - A brief description of examples of loss mitigation options that may be available to the borrower (if applicable);
 - Loss mitigation application instructions or instructions as to how to obtain more information about loss mitigation options (such as by contacting the institution), if applicable;
 - Either the CFPB's or HUD's website to access homeownership counselors or counseling organizations list and HUD's toll-free number to access homeownership counselors or counseling organizations; and
 - If a mortgage servicer is a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan, a statement that the servicer may or intends to invoke its specified remedy of foreclosure.

V. Lending — RESPA

Borrowers in Bankruptcy

102. Determine whether the institution is exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(i) for purposes of the live contact requirements or exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(ii) for purposes of the written notice requirements.
103. For servicers that are not exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(i) or (ii), determine whether the servicer complied with, as applicable, the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) or the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) as modified by 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(iii).
104. For servicers that were exempt under 12 CFR 1024.39(c)(1)(i) and (ii) (unless they have discharged personal liability for the mortgage loan through bankruptcy), determine whether the servicer resumed compliance with the live contact and written notice requirements after the next payment due date that followed the earliest of the following events: (i) the bankruptcy case is dismissed; (ii) the bankruptcy case is closed; or (iii) the borrower reaffirms personal liability for the mortgage loan. (12 CFR 1024.39(c)(2)(i)).
105. With respect to a mortgage loan for which the borrower has discharged personal liability under sections 727, 1141, 1228, or 1328 of title 11 of the United States Code, determine whether the servicer resumed compliance with the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) if the borrower has made any partial or periodic payment on the mortgage loan after the commencement of the borrower's bankruptcy case. (12 CFR 1024.39(c)(2)(ii)). (The servicer need not resume compliance with the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a) if the borrower has discharged personal liability as set forth above.)

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA)

Note: Servicers subject to the FDCPA can use MS-4(D) to comply with a new disclosure requirement for the written notice.

106. If a mortgage servicer was a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan for which any borrower has invoked cease communication rights pursuant to Section 805(c) of the FDCPA:
- Determine whether the servicer was exempt from the written notice requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(b) because either:
 - No loss mitigation option was available; or
 - A borrower on the mortgage loan was a debtor in bankruptcy under title 11 of the United States Code. (12 CFR 1024.39(d)(2)).

- Determine whether the servicer was required to provide a modified written early intervention notice and that notice complied with the following:
 - Content:
 - The modified written notice included a statement that the servicer may or intends to invoke its remedy of foreclosure.
 - The written notice did not contain a request for payment.
 - Timing:
 - The servicer did not provide the written notice more than once during any 180-day period.
 - If a borrower was 45 days or more delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer had provided the written notice, determine whether the servicer provided the written notice again no later than 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice.
 - If a borrower was less than 45 days delinquent at the end of any 180-day period after the servicer has provided the written notice, determine whether the servicer provided the written notice again no later than 45 days after the payment due date for which the borrower remained delinquent or 190 days after the provision of the prior written notice, whichever was later.

(12 CFR 1024.39(d)(3)).

NOTE: A mortgage servicer that is a debt collector under the FDCPA with regard to a borrower's mortgage loan for which any borrower has invoked cease communication rights pursuant to section 805(c) of the FDCPA institution is exempt from the live contact requirements under 12 CFR 1024.39(a).

Continuity of Contact – 12 CFR 1024.40

Applicability: The continuity of contact requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower's principal residence (12 CFR 1024.30(c)(2)). The requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii),³⁴ (ii) reverse mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.33(a), and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations (12 CFR 1024.30(b)).

107. Determine whether the institution had policies and procedures reasonably designed to assign personnel to a delinquent borrower by the time the written early intervention notice was provided, and in any event, within 45 days after the borrower became delinquent (12 CFR 1024.40(a)).

108. Determine whether the institution had policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the assigned personnel were available, via telephone, to answer the borrower’s questions and (as applicable) assist the borrower with available loss mitigation options until the borrower has made, without incurring a late charge, two consecutive mortgage payments in accordance with the terms of a permanent loss mitigation agreement (12 CFR 1024.40(a)(2)).

109. Determine whether the institution had policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that, if a borrower contacts the assigned personnel and does not immediately receive a live response, the institution can provide a live response in a timely manner (12 CFR 1024.40(a)(3)).

110. Determine whether the institution maintains policies and procedures reasonably designed to ensure that the assigned personnel can perform, among others, the following tasks:

- Provide the borrower with accurate information about available loss mitigation options, including the steps the borrower must take to be evaluated for such options, including how to complete a loss mitigation application or appeal a denial of a loan modification option (if applicable);

- Provide the borrower with accurate information about the status of any loss mitigation application submitted;
- Provide the borrower with accurate information about the circumstances under which the institution may refer the account to foreclosure;
- Provide the borrower with accurate information about applicable loss mitigation deadlines;
- Timely retrieve a complete record of the borrower’s payment history and all written information the borrower has provided to the institution (or the institution’s predecessors) in connection with a loss mitigation application, and provide these documents to other persons required to evaluate the borrower for available loss mitigation options; and
- Provide the borrower with information about submitting a written error notice or written request for information (12 CFR 1024.40(b)).

Applicability: The loss mitigation procedure requirements apply to only those mortgage loans, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1024.31, that are secured by the borrower’s principal residence (12 CFR 1024.30(c)(2)). Except for the requirements of 12 CFR 1024.41(j), the loss mitigation procedure requirements do not apply to (i) small servicers, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii),³⁵ (ii) reverse

³⁴ Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers’ interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

³⁵ Refer to 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii) and (iii). A small servicer is defined as (1) a servicer that, together with any affiliates, services 5,000 or fewer loans, for all of which the servicer or any affiliate is the creditor or assignee; (2) a servicer that is a housing finance agency under 24 CFR 226.5; or (3) a nonprofit entity (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(1)) that services 5,000 or fewer mortgage loans, including any mortgage loans serviced on behalf of associated nonprofit entities (defined in 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(ii)(C)(2)), for all of which the servicer or an associated nonprofit is the creditor. Small servicer status is generally based on the loans serviced by the servicer and any affiliates as of January 1 for the remainder of the year. However, to determine small servicer status under the nonprofit small servicer definition, a nonprofit servicer should be evaluated based on the mortgage loans serviced by the servicer (and not those serviced by associated nonprofit entities) as of January 1 for the remainder of the calendar year. Servicers that cease to qualify as a small servicer will have the later of six months after the date they ceased to qualify, or until the next January 1 to come into compliance. Under 12 CFR 1026.41(e)(4)(iii), the following mortgage loans are not considered in determining whether a servicer qualifies as a small servicer: (a) mortgage loans voluntarily serviced by the servicer for mortgage transactions, as that term is defined in 12 CFR 1026.33(a), and (iii) qualified lenders, as defined under the Farm Credit Act of 1971 and accompanying regulations (12 CFR 1024.30(b)). A servicer must comply with the loss mitigation procedures for subsequent loss mitigation applications, unless the servicer previously complied with the requirements for a complete loss mitigation application from a borrower and the borrower has been delinquent at all times since submitting the prior complete application. (12 CFR 1024.41(i)).

Calculating Time Periods: 12 CFR 1024.41 provides borrowers certain protections if the institution receives a complete loss mitigation application at least a specified number of days before a foreclosure sale. See, e.g., 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1) (37 days), and 12 CFR 1024.41(e) and (h) (90 days). These time periods are calculated as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application. Thus, scheduling or rescheduling a foreclosure sale after the servicer receives the complete loss mitigation application will not affect the borrower's protections (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(3)-2). (However, scheduling the sale is not necessarily the same as making the first notice or filing. If the servicer has not made the first notice or filing required by applicable law by the time it receives a complete application, it is generally prohibited from doing so before evaluating the application, pursuant to 1024.41(c).) If no foreclosure sale is scheduled as of the date the servicer receives a complete loss mitigation application, the application is considered received more than 90 days before a foreclosure sale (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(3)-1).

Definition of First Notice or Filing: 12 CFR 1024.41 includes certain prohibitions on making the first notice or filing for a judicial or non-judicial foreclosure and provides borrowers certain protections depending on whether such a notice or filing has been made at the time the servicer receives a complete application. Whether a particular document qualifies as the first notice or filing depends on the foreclosure process under the applicable state law at issue:

- Judicial foreclosure. Where foreclosure procedure requires a court action or proceeding, the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be filed with a court or other judicial body to commence the action or proceeding. Depending on the particular foreclosure process, examples of these documents could be a complaint, petition, order to docket, or notice of hearing;
- Non-judicial foreclosure – recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding (such as under a power of sale), the first notice or filing is the earliest document required to be recorded or published to initiate the foreclosure process; or
- Non-judicial foreclosure – no recording or publication requirement. Where foreclosure procedure does not require an action or court proceeding, and also does not require any document to be recorded or published, the first notice or filing is the earliest document that establishes, sets, or schedules a date for the foreclosure sale.

Note that a document provided to the borrower but not initially required to be filed, recorded, or published is not considered the first notice or filing on the sole basis that the documents must later be included as an attachment accompanying another document that is required to be filed, recorded, or published to carry out a foreclosure (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(f)-1).

Review of an application received at least 45 days before a foreclosure sale (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2))

111. If the institution received a loss mitigation application at least 45 days before a foreclosure sale, determine that the institution:

- Promptly upon receipt of a loss mitigation application, reviewed the loss mitigation application to determine if the loss mitigation application was complete. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(A); 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)).

NOTE: A loss mitigation application that would trigger this requirement is viewed expansively and includes oral inquiries by the borrower where the borrower also provides information the institution would use to evaluate loss mitigation applications, or where a borrower requests that the institution determines whether the borrower is “prequalified” for a loss mitigation application by evaluating the borrower against preliminary criteria (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-2).

a non-affiliate of the servicer and for which the servicer does not receive any compensation or fees; (b) reverse mortgage transactions; and (c) mortgage loans secured by consumers' interests in timeshare plans; and (d) certain seller-financed transactions that meet the criteria identified in 12 CFR 1026.36(a)(5).

A complete loss mitigation application means an application in connection with which a servicer has received all the information that the servicer requires from a borrower in evaluating applications for the loss mitigation options available to the borrower. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1)). If no foreclosure sale has been scheduled as of the date a servicer receives a loss mitigation application, the servicer must treat the application as having been received 45 days or more before any foreclosure sale. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(2)(i)-1).

- Notified the borrower in writing within 5 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving the loss mitigation application that the servicer acknowledged receipt of the loss mitigation application and determined that the loss mitigation application was either complete or incomplete. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)).
 - If the application is complete, determine that the written acknowledgement stated that the application was complete and included a statement that the borrower should consider contacting servicers of any other mortgage loans secured by the same property to discuss available loss mitigation options (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) and (b)(2)(ii)).
 - If a loss mitigation application is incomplete, stated, in the notice: (i) the additional documents and information the borrower must submit to make the loss mitigation application complete, (ii) the reasonable date by which the borrower must submit such documents or information, and (iii) a statement that the borrower should consider contacting servicers of any other mortgage loans secured by the same property to discuss available loss mitigation options. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)).

NOTE: For the reasonable date deadline, 30 days from the date the servicer provides the written notice is generally reasonable. The reasonable date, however, must be no later than the earliest of following milestones, but not less than seven days from the date of the notice: (a) the date by which any document or information submitted by the borrower will be stale or invalid, (b) the 120th day of the borrower's delinquency, (c) 90 days before a foreclosure sale; or (d) 38 days before a foreclosure sale (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comments 1024.41(b)(2)(ii)-1 through .41(b)(2)(ii)-3).

112.If the institution received an incomplete loss mitigation application, determine whether the institution exercised reasonable diligence to collect information needed to complete the application after receiving the loss mitigation application. (12 CFR 1024.41(b)(1); 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comments 1024.41(b)(1)-1, and .41(b)(1)-4).

NOTE: Examples of reasonable diligence include: (a) where the institution requires additional information from the borrower (such as an address or telephone number to verify employment), promptly contacting the borrower to obtain the information; and (b) where the borrower's loan is transferred to the institution from another servicer, reviewing documents the institution received from the prior servicer to determine if the required information is contained in those documents. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comments 1024.41(b)(1)-4i and .41(b)(1)-4ii).

- For borrowers offered short-term payment forbearance programs or short-term repayment plans on the basis of an incomplete application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iii), refer to Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-4.iii for guidance relating to a servicer's reasonable diligence obligations. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(2)(ii)).

113.If the institution stopped collecting documents and information for a particular loss mitigation option, determine whether its decision was based on receiving information confirming that, pursuant to requirements established by the owner or assignee of the borrower's mortgage loan, the borrower was ineligible for that option. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-1).

NOTE: A servicer may not stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based solely upon the borrower's stated preference but may stop collecting documents and information for any loss mitigation option based on the borrower's stated preference in conjunction with other information, as prescribed by any requirements established by the owner or assignee. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)(1)-1).

Complete loss mitigation application evaluation (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1))

114.If the institution received a complete loss mitigation application more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, determine whether the institution, within 30 days of receiving the complete loss mitigation application:

V. Lending — RESPA

- Evaluated the borrower for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(i)); and
- Provided the borrower with a written notice of the institution's determination stating:
 - Which loss mitigation options (if any) the institution would offer the borrower,
 - The amount of time the borrower has to accept or reject an offered loss mitigation option pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(e), and
 - If applicable, that the borrower has the right to appeal a denial of a loan modification option and the time period for making any appeal pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h)

Incomplete loss mitigation application evaluation (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(i)-(iii))

115.If the borrower submitted an incomplete application and the institution has offered a loss mitigation option, determine whether the institution's offer was permitted because:

- The offer of the loss mitigation option was not based on any evaluation of information submitted by the borrower in connection with such application (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(i)-1);
- The institution offered a loss mitigation option upon the evaluation of an incomplete application after it exercised reasonable diligence in obtaining documents and information to complete the loss mitigation application, but the application remained incomplete for a significant period of time under circumstances without any further progress by the borrower to complete the application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(ii)); or

Note: Any such evaluation and offer is not subject to the requirements of this section and shall not constitute an evaluation of a single complete loss mitigation application for purposes of the duplicative request exception in 12 CFR 1024.41(i)

- The institution offered a short-term payment forbearance program or a short-term repayment plan based upon an evaluation of an incomplete application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)).

116.If the institution offered the borrower a short-term payment forbearance plan or short-term repayment plan based upon information contained in an incomplete loss mitigation application, determine whether the institution promptly provided the borrower, unless the borrower rejected the offer, a written notice stating:

- The specific payment terms and duration of the program or plan;
- That the servicer offered the program or plan based on an evaluation of an incomplete application,
- That other loss mitigation options may be available; and
- That the borrower has the option to submit a complete loss mitigation application to receive an evaluation for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower regardless of whether the borrower accepts the program or plan.

NOTE: A short-term payment forbearance program for these purposes allows a borrower to forgo making certain payments or portions of payments due over a period of no more than six months (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)-1). A short-term repayment plan for these purposes is a loss mitigation option with terms under which a borrower would repay all past due payments over a specified period of time to bring the mortgage loan account current. A short-term repayment plan allows for the repayment of no more than three months of past due payments and allows a borrower to repay the arrearage over a period lasting no more than six months. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)-4).

117.If the institution offered the borrower a short-term payment forbearance plan or short-term repayment plan based upon information contained in an incomplete loss mitigation application, determine whether the institution improperly (a) made the first notice or filing for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, (b) moved for foreclosure judgment or an order of sale, or (c) conducted a foreclosure sale while the borrower was performing under such plan (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iii)).

Facially Complete Application – Additional Information or Corrected Documents Required (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv))

118.If the application was facially complete but the servicer later discovered that additional information or corrected documents were required to complete the application, determine whether:

- The institution (i) promptly requested the missing information or corrected documents, and (ii) gave the borrower a reasonable opportunity to complete the application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)).

NOTE: A loss mitigation application is facially complete when (i) the institution's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) advised the borrower that the application was complete, (ii) the institution's initial notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) requested additional information from the borrower to complete the application and the borrower submits such additional information; or (iii) the servicer is required to provide the borrower a written notice of a complete application under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(i). A reasonable opportunity depends on the particular facts and circumstances, but must provide the borrower sufficient time to gather the necessary information and documents (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)-1).

119. In this same scenario, determine whether the institution treated the borrower's application as complete for purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2) ("Application received before foreclosure referral") and 12 CFR 1024(g) ("Prohibition on foreclosure sale") until the borrower is given a reasonable opportunity to submit additional information or corrected documents (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(2)(iv)).

Notice of Complete Application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3))

120. If none of the exceptions to the notice of complete application requirement listed in 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(ii) apply (see Note below), determine whether the institution has provided a written notice that the application is complete in accordance with 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(i). The notice of complete application must be provided within five days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) after receiving a borrower's complete loss mitigation application and must include the following information:

- That the loss mitigation application is complete;
- The date the servicer received the complete application;
- That the servicer expects to complete its evaluation within 30 days of the date it received the complete application;
- That the borrower is entitled to certain foreclosure protections because the servicer has received the complete application, and, as applicable, either:
 - If the servicer has not made the first notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, that the servicer cannot make the first notice or filing required to commence or initiate the foreclosure process under applicable law before evaluating the borrower's complete application; or

- If the servicer has made the first notice or filing required by applicable law for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, that the servicer has begun the foreclosure process, and that the servicer cannot conduct a foreclosure sale before evaluating the borrower's complete application;
- That the servicer may need additional information at a later date to evaluate the application, in which case the servicer will request that information from the borrower and give the borrower a reasonable opportunity to submit it, the evaluation process may take longer, and the foreclosure protections could end if the servicer does not receive the information as requested; and
- That the borrower may be entitled to additional protections under state or federal law.

NOTE: Under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(3)(ii), a servicer is not required to provide a notice of complete application if: The servicer has already provided the borrower an acknowledgement notice under 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) stating the application is complete and the servicer has not subsequently requested additional information or corrected versions of previously submitted documents; The application was not complete or facially complete more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale; or The servicer has already provided the borrower a notice of its determination under 1024.41(c)(1)(ii).

Information not in the borrower's control (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4))

121. Determine whether the servicer exercised reasonable diligence in obtaining information not in the borrower's control that the servicer needs to determine which loss mitigation options to offer the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(i)).

122. Determine whether the servicer improperly denied the borrower's complete loss mitigation application solely because the servicer lacks required documents or information not in the borrower's control, (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(A)(i), unless it was unable to obtain the documents and information for a significant period of time following the 30-day evaluation period and was unable to make a determination on the complete application. (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(A)(2)). If this is the case, determine whether the servicer provided the written denial notice in accordance with 12

CFR1024.41(c)(1)(ii) and the written notice required under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B) (see question below).

NOTE: A servicer, however, is permitted to offer a borrower a loss mitigation option, even if the servicer does not obtain the requested documents or information. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)-2).

123.If the servicer is unable to make a determination within 30 days of receiving a borrower’s complete loss mitigation application due to the lack of the third-party information, review whether the servicer provided the written required notice to the borrower under 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)(ii)(B) containing the following information:

- That the servicer has not received the third-party documents or information that the servicer requires to determine which loss mitigation options, if any, it will offer to the borrower;
- The specific documents or information that the servicer lacks;
- That the servicer has requested such documents or information; and
- That the servicer will complete its evaluation of the borrower for all available loss mitigation options promptly upon receiving the documents or information.

Denial of loan modification options (12 CFR 1024.41(d))

124.If the institution denied the borrower’s complete application for any trial or permanent loan modification option available to the borrower, determine whether the notice provided to the borrower pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)(ii) also stated the specific reason or reasons for denying each such option, and, if applicable, that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria (12 CFR 1024.41 (d)). Specifically:

- If the institution denied an application for a loan modification option due to a failure to meet investor guidelines, determine whether the institution identified in its notice to the borrower (i) the owner or assignee of the mortgage loan, and (ii) the specific criteria the borrower failed to meet (12 CFR 1024.41(d); 12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-1).

Note: If the borrower’s application was evaluated under an investor’s waterfall and the borrower qualified for a particular option, it is sufficient for the institution to inform the borrower that the investor’s requirements include a ranking of options and that an offer of a loan modification option necessarily results in a denial of any other options ranked below the option for which the borrower is eligible (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-1).

- If the institution denied the application due to a net present value calculation, determine whether the institution disclosed the inputs used in that calculation (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-2).
- If the institution established a hierarchy of eligibility criteria and, after reaching the first criterion that causes a denial, did not evaluate whether the borrower would have satisfied the remaining criteria, determine whether the institution identified in the notice: (i) the specific reason or reasons why the borrower was actually rejected, and (ii) that the borrower was not evaluated on other criteria. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-4).

Note: An institution is not required to determine or disclose whether a borrower would have been denied based on other criteria if the servicer did not actually evaluate these additional criteria (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(d)-4).

125.If institution received the complete application at least 90 days before a foreclosure sale and offered a loss mitigation option, determine whether the institution provided the borrower with at least 14 days to accept or reject any offered loan modification option after the servicer provided notice of the offer to the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(1)).

Note: If no foreclosure sale was scheduled when the servicer received the application, the application is considered to have been received more than 90 days before any foreclosure sale. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(b)(3)-1). The acceptance period can be extended if, within 14 days, the borrower makes an appeal of a denial of any loan modification option pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h). (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(2)(iii)). In the event of an appeal, the borrower’s time for acceptance is extended to 14 days after the institution provides a notice of its determination of the appeal. (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(2)(iii)).

126.If institution received the complete application fewer than 90 days before a foreclosure sale but more than 37 days before the sale and offered a loss mitigation option, determine whether the institution provided the borrower with at least seven days to accept or reject any offered loss mitigation options after the servicer provided notice of the offer to the borrower (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(1)).

127. If the institution offered a borrower a trial loan modification plan and the borrower did not respond within seven or 14 days (as applicable under 12 CFR 1024.41(e)(1)), determine (i) whether the borrower submitted payments in accordance with the offered plan, and (ii) if so, whether the institution gave the borrower a reasonable period of time to fulfill any remaining requirements to accept the plan (12 CFR 1024.41(e)(2)(ii)).

Prohibition on foreclosure referral and sale (12 CFR 1024.41(f) and 1024.41(g))

128. Determine whether the institution made the first judicial or non-judicial foreclosure notice or filing without meeting one of the following conditions: (i) the borrower was more than 120 days delinquent; (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower's violation of a due-on-sale clause; or (iii) the institution is joining the foreclosure action of a subordinate or superior lienholder (12 CFR 1024.41(f)(1)). (Note that this requirement as applicable to small servicers is addressed below.)
129. If the institution received a complete loss mitigation application either within the first 120 days of delinquency or before the institution made the first judicial or non-judicial foreclosure notice or filing, determine whether the institution made the first foreclosure notice or filing only after one of the following occurred: (i) the institution notified the borrower that the borrower is ineligible for any loss mitigation option and if an appeal is available, either the appeal period expired or the appeal had been denied; (ii) the borrower rejected all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower failed to perform under a loss mitigation agreement (12 CFR 1024.41(f)(2)).
130. If the institution received a complete loss mitigation application after the institution made the first foreclosure notice or filing required under applicable law but more than 37 days before a foreclosure sale, determine whether the institution improperly conducted a foreclosure sale or moved for foreclosure judgment or order of sale before one of the following occurred: (i) the institution notified the borrower that it had denied the loss mitigation application for any loss mitigation option and if an appeal is available, either the appeal period had expired or the appeal had been denied; (ii) the borrower rejected all the offered loss mitigation options; or (iii) the borrower fails to perform under a loss mitigation agreement (12 CFR 1024.41(g)).

NOTE: A servicer must instruct foreclosure counsel promptly not to make a dispositive motion for foreclosure judgment or order of sale; where such a dispositive motion is pending, to avoid a ruling on the motion or issuance of an order of sale; and, where a sale is scheduled, to prevent conduct of a foreclosure sale, unless one of the conditions in 12 CFR 1024.41(g)(1) through (3) is met. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 41(g)-3). A servicer is not relieved of its obligations because foreclosure counsel's actions or inaction caused a violation. Absent one of the specified circumstances, conduct of the sale violates the regulation, even if a person other than the servicer administers or conducts the foreclosure sale proceedings.

Complete the following if (a) the institution denied a complete loss mitigation application for any trial or permanent loan modification option, and (b) the institution received that complete application (i) before the borrower was more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) before the institution made the first judicial or non-judicial foreclosure notice or filing, or (iii) at least 90 days before a foreclosure sale.

131. For any borrower who timely appealed a denial of an available loan modification option, determine whether the institution provided a notice to the borrower within 30 days stating (i) whether it will offer the borrower a loss mitigation option based on the appeal, and (ii) if applicable, how long the borrower has to accept or reject this loss mitigation option or a previously offered loss mitigation option. (12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4)).
132. For any appeal that the institution granted, determine whether the institution afforded the borrower 14 days to accept or reject any offered loan modification option (12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4)).
133. Determine whether the institution used different personnel to evaluate the appeal than the personnel who had evaluated the borrower's loss mitigation application (12 CFR 1024.41(h)(3)).

Duplicative Requests (12 CFR 1024.41(i))

134. Determine whether the institution complied with the loss mitigation procedures for all loss mitigation applications, unless the servicer previously complied for a complete loss mitigation application from a borrower and the borrower has been delinquent at all times since submitting the prior complete application.

Small Servicers (12 CFR 1024.41(j))

135. If the institution is a small servicer, determine whether the institution made the first foreclosure notice or filing before (i) the borrower was more than 120 days delinquent, (ii) the foreclosure is based on a borrower's violation of a due-on-sale clause, or (iii) the institution is joining a subordinate or superior lienholder's foreclosure action (12 CFR 1024.41(j)).

V. Lending — RESPA

136. If the institution is a small servicer and the borrower is performing according to the terms of a loss mitigation agreement, determine whether the institution (i) made the first foreclosure notice or filing, (ii) moved for a foreclosure judgment or order of sale, or (iii) conducted a foreclosure sale (12 CFR 1024.41(j)).

Servicing Transfers – (12 CFR 1024.41(k))

137. If the transferee (new) servicer acquired the servicing of a mortgage loan with a pending loss mitigation application as of the transfer date, determine whether the transferee servicer complied with the requirements of the loss mitigation procedures within the applicable timeframes. (The transfer date is defined for these provisions as the date on which the transferee servicer will begin accepting payments relating to the mortgage loan, as disclosed on the notice of transfer of servicing pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.33(b)(4)(iv). (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(1)(ii)).)

NOTE: In general, subject to the modifications below, the institution must comply within the timeframes that were applicable to the transferor (previous) servicer based on the date the transferor servicer received the loss mitigation application. A borrower continues to retain the rights and protections under 12 CFR 1024.41(c) through (h) to which a borrower was entitled before the servicing was transferred. (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(1)(i)). A loss mitigation application is considered pending if the application is subject to the loss mitigation rules but was not fully resolved prior to the transfer date. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. 1., Comment 41(k)-1).

- a. If a transferee servicer acquired the servicing of a mortgage loan for which the period to provide the acknowledgement notice required by 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2)(i)(B) had not expired as of the transfer date and the transferor did not provide the acknowledgement notice, determine whether the transferee servicer provided the acknowledgment notice within 10 days (excluding legal public holidays, Saturdays, and Sundays) of the transfer date. (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(2)(i)).
- b. If a transferee servicer was required to provide the acknowledgment notice as discussed in the previous question:
 - i. Determine that the servicer did not make the first notice or filing for any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process prior to the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgment notice to submit documents and information necessary to complete the application, notwithstanding the exceptions contained in 12 CFR 1024.41(f)(1). (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(2)(ii)(A)).

- ii. And the borrower submitted a complete loss mitigation application to the transferee or transferor servicer 37 or fewer days before the foreclosure sale but on or before the reasonable date disclosed in the acknowledgment notice, determine whether the servicer complied with the requirements regarding the evaluation of the loss mitigation application (12 CFR 1024.41(c)); denial of loan modification options (12 CFR 1024.41(d), and prohibition on foreclosure sale (1024.41(g)). (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(2)(ii)(B)).
- c. For pending complete loss mitigation applications as of the transfer date, determine whether the transferee servicer complied with the applicable requirements regarding complete loss mitigation applications (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(1)) and information not in the borrower's control (12 CFR 1024.41(c)(4)) within 30 days of the transfer date. (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(3)).
- d. For applications subject to the appeal process, if a transferee servicer acquired the servicing of a mortgage loan for which an appeal of a transferor servicer's determination pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(h) had not been resolved by the transferor servicer as of the transfer date or was timely filed after the transfer date, determine whether:
 - i. The transferee servicer made a determination on the appeal, if it was able to do so, and provided the required appeal determination notice under 12 CFR 1024.41(h)(4) within 30 days of the transfer date or 30 days of the date the borrower made the appeal, whichever is later. (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(4)(i)).
- e. If a transferee servicer was unable to make a determination on an application subject to the appeal process, determine whether the servicer complied with the loss mitigation provisions, including evaluating the borrower for all loss mitigation options available to the borrower from the transferee servicer. (12 CFR 1024.41(k)(4)(ii)).
- f. Determine whether the transferee servicer allowed the borrower to accept or reject a pending loss mitigation offer during the unexpired balance of the applicable time period as required by 12 CFR 1024.41(k)(5).

Applications Received from Successors in Interest (Effective April 19, 2018)

138. If the servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a confirmed successor in interest, determine whether the servicer is treating a confirmed successor in interest as a borrower for purposes of the loss mitigation procedures and complying with the relevant requirements. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.i).

139. If the servicer receives a loss mitigation application from a potential successor in interest and elects not to review and evaluate the loss mitigation application before confirming the person's identity and ownership interest in the property:

- Determine whether the servicer has preserved the loss mitigation application and all documents submitted in connection with the application. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.ii).
- Upon confirmation of the successor in interest's status, determine whether the servicer has reviewed and evaluated the loss mitigation application in accordance with the procedures set forth in 12 CFR 1024.41 if the property is the confirmed successor in interest's principal residence and the loss mitigation procedures are otherwise applicable. (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.ii).

NOTE: For purposes of 12 CFR 1024.41, the servicer must treat the loss mitigation application as if it had been received on the date that the servicer confirmed the successor in interest's status. If the loss mitigation application is incomplete at the time of confirmation because documents submitted by the successor in interest became stale or invalid after they were submitted and confirmation is 45 days or more before a foreclosure sale, the servicer must identify the stale or invalid documents that need to be updated in a notice pursuant to 12 CFR 1024.41(b)(2). (12 CFR Part 1024, Supp. I., Comment 1024.41(b)-1.ii).

Homeownership Counseling Act

Introduction

Section 106(c)(5) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 (the Act) (12 U.S.C. 1701x (c)(5)) requires that creditors servicing a home loan provide homeownership counseling notification to eligible homeowners.

Statutory Overview

Applicability

All creditors that service loans secured by a mortgage or lien on a one-family residence (home loans) are subject to the homeownership counseling notification requirements. Home loans include conventional mortgage loans and loans insured by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). In addition, the original purpose of the loan is not relevant to the notification requirement. Therefore, a mortgage on the primary residence or a commercial or agriculture loan that includes the primary residence as collateral would also be subject to this notification requirement.

Requirements

Notice Requirements¹

A creditor must provide notification of the availability of homeownership counseling to any eligible homeowner who fails to pay any amount by the due date under the terms of the home loan.

Eligibility

A homeowner is eligible for counseling if:

- The loan is secured by the homeowner's principal residence;
- The home loan is not assisted by the Farmers Home Administration; and
- The homeowner is, or is expected to be, unable to make payments, correct a home loan delinquency within a reasonable time, or resume full home loan payments due to a reduction in the homeowner's income because of:

- An involuntary loss of, or reduction in, the homeowner's employment, the homeowner's self-employment, or income from the pursuit of the homeowner's occupation;
- Any similar loss or reduction experienced by any person who contributes to the homeowner's income;
- A significant reduction in the income of the household due to divorce or death; or
- Under certain circumstances, a significant increase in basic expenses of the homeowner or an immediate family member of the homeowner.

Contents of Notice

The notice must:

- notify the homeowner of the availability of any homeownership counseling offered by the creditor;
- provide either a list of HUD-approved nonprofit homeownership counseling organizations or the toll-free number² HUD has established through which a list of such organizations may be obtained;
- if applicable, notify the homeowner by a statement or notice, written in plain English by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Treasury, explaining the mortgage and foreclosure rights of servicemembers, and the dependents of such servicemembers, under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (50 U.S.C. App. 501 et seq.), including the toll-free military one source number to call if servicemembers, or the dependents of such servicemembers, require further assistance; and
- notify the housing or mortgage applicant of the availability of mortgage software systems provided pursuant to subsection (g)(3).

Timing of Notice

The notice must be given to a delinquent homeowner borrower no later than 45 days after the date on which the homeowner becomes delinquent. If, within the 45-day period, the borrower brings the loan current again, no notification is required.

¹ The FFIEC Consumer Compliance Task Force has requested clarification from HUD on HUD's current position regarding notice requirements to first-time homebuyers. These interagency examination procedures are currently limited to determining compliance with the Act's notice provisions related to delinquent borrowers. However, should a response from HUD to the Task Force indicate that notices to first-time homebuyers should be provided under the Act, the agencies will expand these examination procedures to cover notices to first-time homebuyers.

V. Lending — Homeownership Counseling Act

Definitions

For purposes of these requirements, the following definitions apply:

“Creditor” means a person or entity that is servicing a home loan on behalf of itself or another person or entity.

“Home loan” means a loan secured by a mortgage or lien on residential property.

“Homeowner” means a person who is obligated under a home loan.

“Residential property” means a 1-family residence, including a 1-family unit in a condominium project, a membership interest and occupancy agreement in a cooperative housing project, and a manufactured home and the lot on which the home is situated.

Examination Objective

The examination objective is to determine whether the financial institution has established procedures regarding homeownership counseling notification to ensure that it complies with the provisions of §106(c)(5) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968.

Examination Procedures³

Determine if the financial institution is informing eligible homeowners, within 45 days of initial loan default, of:

- the availability of any homeownership counseling offered by the creditor; and
- the availability of any homeownership counseling by non-profit organizations approved by HUD or the toll-free telephone number through which the homeowner can obtain a list of such organizations.

Examination Checklist

Does the financial institution notify eligible homeowners, within 45 days of initial loan default, of any homeownership counseling the institution (creditor) provides?

Does the financial institution provide eligible homeowners with the names of nonprofit organizations approved by HUD or the toll-free telephone number to obtain a list of such organizations?

Homeowners Protection Act

Introduction

The Homeowners Protection Act of 1998 (the Act) was signed into law on July 29, 1998, and became effective on July 29, 1999. The Act was amended on December 27, 2000, to provide technical corrections and clarification. The Act, also known as the “PMI Cancellation Act,” addresses homeowners’ difficulties in canceling private mortgage insurance (PMI)¹ coverage. It establishes provisions for canceling and terminating PMI, establishes disclosure and notification requirements, and requires the return of unearned premiums.

PMI is insurance that protects lenders from the risk of default and foreclosure. PMI allows prospective buyers who cannot, or choose not to, provide significant down payments to obtain mortgage financing at affordable rates. It is used extensively to facilitate “high-ratio” loans (generally, loans in which the loan to value (LTV) ratio exceeds 80 percent). With PMI, the lender can recover costs associated with the resale of foreclosed property, and accrued interest payments or fixed costs, such as taxes or insurance policies, paid prior to resale.

Excessive PMI coverage provides little extra protection for a lender and does not benefit the borrower. In some instances, homeowners have experienced problems in canceling PMI. At other times, lenders may have agreed to terminate coverage when the borrower’s equity reached 20 percent, but the policies and procedures used for canceling or terminating PMI coverage varied widely among lenders. Prior to the Act, homeowners had limited recourse when lenders refused to cancel their PMI coverage. Even homeowners in the few states that had laws pertaining to PMI cancellation or termination noted difficulties in canceling or terminating their PMI policies. The Act now protects homeowners by prohibiting life of loan PMI coverage for borrower-paid PMI products and establishing uniform procedures for the cancellation and termination of PMI policies.

Regulation Overview

Scope and Effective Date

The Act applies primarily to “residential mortgage transactions,” defined as mortgage loan transactions consummated on or after July 29, 1999, to finance the acquisition, initial construction, or refinancing² of a single-family dwelling that serves as a borrower’s principal residence.³ The Act also includes provisions for annual written disclosures for “residential mortgages,” defined as mortgages, loans or other evidences of a security interest created for a single-family dwelling that is the principal residence of the borrower (12 USC §4901(14) and (15)). A condominium, townhouse, cooperative, or mobile home is considered to be a single-family dwelling covered by the Act.

The Act’s requirements vary depending on whether a mortgage is:

- A “residential mortgage” or a “residential mortgage transaction”;
- Defined as high risk (either by the lender in the case of non-conforming loans, or Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac in the case of conforming loans);
- Financed under a fixed or an adjustable rate; or
- Covered by borrower-paid private mortgage insurance (BPMI) or lender-paid private mortgage insurance (LPMI).⁴

Cancellation and Termination of PMI for Non High Risk Residential Mortgage Transactions

Borrower Requested Cancellation

A borrower may initiate cancellation of PMI coverage by submitting a written request to the servicer. The servicer must take action to cancel PMI when the cancellation date occurs, which is when the principal balance of the loan reaches (based on actual payments) or is first scheduled to reach 80 percent of the “original value,”⁵ irrespective of the outstanding balance, ² For purposes of these procedures, “refinancing” means the refinancing of loans any portion of which was to provide financing for the acquisition or initial construction of a single-family dwelling that serves as a borrower’s principal residence. See 15 USC §1601 et seq. and 12 CFR §1026.20.

³ For purposes of these procedures, junior mortgages that provide financing for the acquisition, initial construction or refinancing of a single-family dwelling that serves as a borrower’s principal residence are covered.

⁴ All sections of these procedures and Handbook apply to BPMI. For LPMI, relevant sections begin under that heading and follow thereafter.

⁵ “Original value” is defined as the lesser of the sales price of the secured property as reflected in the purchase contract or, the appraised value at the time of loan consummation. In the case of a refinancing, the term means the appraised value relied upon by the lender to approve the refinance transaction.

V. Lending — HOPA

based upon the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan⁶), or any date thereafter that:

- the borrower submits a written cancellation request;
- the borrower has a good payment history;⁷
- the borrower is current;⁸ and
- the borrower satisfies any requirement of the mortgage holder for: (i) evidence of a type established in advance that the value of the property has not declined below the original value; and (ii) certification that the borrower's equity in the property is not subject to a subordinate lien (12 USC §4902(a)(4)).

Once PMI is canceled, the servicer may not require further PMI payments or premiums more than 30 days after the later of: (i) the date on which the written request was received or (ii) the date on which the borrower satisfied the evidence and certification requirements of the mortgage holder described previously (12 USC §4902(e)(1)).

Automatic Termination

The Act requires a servicer to automatically terminate PMI for residential mortgage transactions on the date that:

- the principal balance of the mortgage is first scheduled to reach 78 percent of the original value of the secured property (based solely on the initial amortization schedule in the case of a fixed rate loan or on the amortization schedule then in effect in the case of an adjustable rate loan, irrespective of the outstanding balance), if the borrower is current; or
- if the borrower is not current on that date, on the first day of the first month following the date that the borrower becomes current (12 USC §4902(b)).

6 The Act includes as an adjustable rate mortgage, a balloon loan that "contains a conditional right to refinance or modify the unamortized principal at the maturity date." Therefore, if a balloon loan contains a conditional right to refinance, the initial disclosure for an adjustable rate mortgage would be used even if the interest rate is fixed.

7 A borrower has a good payment history if the borrower: (1) has not made a payment that was 60 days or more past due within the first 12 months of the last 2 years prior to the later of the cancellation date, or the date that the borrower requests cancellation; or (2) has not made a payment that was 30 days or more past due within the 12 months prior to the later of the cancellation date or the date that the borrower requests cancellation.

8 The Act does not define current.

If PMI is terminated, the servicer may not require further payments or premiums of PMI more than 30 days after the termination date or the date following the termination date on which the borrower becomes current on the payments, whichever is sooner (12 USC §4902(e)(2)).

There is no provision in the automatic termination section of the Act, as there is with the borrower-requested PMI cancellation section, that protects the lender against declines in property value or subordinate liens. The automatic termination provisions make no reference to good payment history (as prescribed in the borrower-requested provisions), but state only that the borrower must be current on mortgage payments (12 USC §4902(b)).

Final Termination

If PMI coverage on a residential mortgage transaction was not canceled at the borrower's request or by the automatic termination provision, the servicer must terminate PMI coverage by the first day of the month immediately following the date that is the midpoint of the loan's amortization period if, on that date, the borrower is current on the payments required by the terms of the mortgage (12 USC §4902(c)). (If the borrower is not current on that date, PMI should be terminated when the borrower does become current.)

The midpoint of the amortization period is halfway through the period between the first day of the amortization period established at consummation and ending when the mortgage is scheduled to be amortized. The servicer may not require further payments or premiums of PMI more than 30 days after PMI is terminated (12 USC §4902(e)(3)).

Loan Modifications

If a borrower and mortgage holder agree to modify the terms and conditions of a loan pursuant to a residential mortgage transaction, the cancellation, termination or final termination dates shall be recalculated to reflect the modification (12 USC §4902(d)).

Exclusions

The Act's cancellation and termination provisions do not apply to residential mortgage transactions for which Lender Paid Mortgage Insurance (LPMI) is required (12 USC §4905(b)).

Return of Unearned Premiums

The servicer must return all unearned PMI premiums to the borrower within 45 days after cancellation or termination of PMI coverage. Within 30 days after notification by the servicer of cancellation or termination of PMI coverage, a mortgage insurer must return to the servicer any amount of unearned premiums it is holding to permit the servicer to return such premiums to the borrower (12 USC §4902(f)).

Accrued Obligations for Premium Payments

The cancellation or termination of PMI does not affect the rights of any lender, servicer or mortgage insurer to enforce any obligation of a borrower for payments of premiums that accrued before the cancellation or termination occurred (12 USC §4902 (h)).

Exceptions to Cancellation and Termination Provisions for High Risk Residential Mortgage Transactions

The borrower-requested cancellation at 80 percent LTV and the automatic termination at 78 percent LTV requirements of the Act do not apply to “high risk” loans. However, high-risk loans are subject to final termination and are divided into two categories - conforming (Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac-defined high risk loans) and non-conforming (lender-defined high risk loans) (12 USC §4902(g)(1)).

Conforming Loans (Fannie Mae/Freddie Mac-Defined High Risk Loans)

Conforming loans are those loans with an original principal balance not exceeding Freddie Mac’s and Fannie Mae’s conforming loan limits.⁹ Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are authorized under the Act to establish a category of residential mortgage transactions that are not subject to the Act’s requirements for borrower-requested cancellation or automatic termination, because of the high risk associated with them.¹⁰ They are however, subject to the final termination provision of the Act. As such, PMI on a conforming high risk loan must be terminated by the first day of the month following the date that is the midpoint of the loan’s initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan) if, on that date, the borrower is current on the loan (12 USC § 4902(g)). (If the borrower is not current on that date, PMI should be terminated when the borrower does become current.)

⁹ This limit was $417,000 in 2015; however, it is reviewed annually and has differing tiers based on geography and number of units.

¹⁰ Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have not defined high-risk loans as of the date of this publication.

Non-Conforming Loans (Lender-Defined High Risk Loans)

Non-conforming loans are those residential mortgage transactions that have an original principal balance exceeding Freddie Mac’s and Fannie Mae’s conforming loan limits. Lender-defined high-risk loans are not subject to the Act’s requirements for borrower-requested cancellation or automatic termination. However, if a residential mortgage transaction is a lender-defined high risk loan, PMI must be terminated on the date on which the principal balance of the mortgage, based solely on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan) for that mortgage and irrespective of the outstanding balance for that mortgage on that date, is first scheduled to reach 77 percent of the original value of the property securing the loan.

Like conforming loans that are determined to be high risk by Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, a residential mortgage transaction that is a lender-defined high-risk loan is subject to the final termination provision of the Act.

Notices

The lender must provide written initial disclosures at consummation for all high-risk residential mortgage transactions (as defined by the lender or Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac), that in no case will PMI be required beyond the midpoint of the amortization period of the loan, if the loan is current. More specific notice as to the 77 percent LTV termination standards for lender defined high-risk loans is not required under the Act.

Basic Disclosure and Notice Requirements Applicable to Residential Mortgage Transactions and Residential Mortgages

The Act requires the lender in a residential mortgage transaction to provide to the borrower, at the time of consummation, certain disclosures that describe the borrower’s rights for PMI cancellation and termination. A borrower may not be charged for any disclosure required by the Act. Initial disclosures vary, based upon whether the transaction is a fixed rate mortgage, adjustable rate mortgage, or high-risk loan. The Act also requires that the borrower be provided with certain annual and other notices concerning PMI cancellation and termination. Residential mortgages are subject to certain annual disclosure requirements.

V. Lending — HOPA

Initial Disclosures for Fixed Rate Residential Mortgage Transactions

When PMI is required for non high risk fixed rate mortgages, the lender must provide to the borrower at the time the transaction is consummated: (i) a written initial amortization schedule, and (ii) a written notice that discloses:

- The borrower's right to request cancellation of PMI, and, based on the initial amortization schedule, the date the loan balance is scheduled to reach 80 percent of the original value of the property;
- The borrower's right to request cancellation on an earlier date, if actual payments bring the loan balance to 80 percent of the original value of the property sooner than the date based on the initial amortization schedule;
- That PMI will automatically terminate when the LTV ratio reaches 78 percent of the original value of the property and the specific date that is projected to occur (based on the initial amortization schedule); and,
- The Act provides for exemptions to the cancellation and automatic termination provisions for high risk mortgages and whether these exemptions apply to the borrower's loan (12 USC §4903(a)(1)(A)).

Initial Disclosures for Adjustable Rate Residential Mortgage Transactions

When PMI is required for non high-risk adjustable rate mortgages, the lender must provide to the borrower at the time the transaction is consummated a written notice that discloses:

- The borrower's right to request cancellation of PMI on (i) the date the loan balance is first scheduled to reach 80 percent of the original value of the property based on the amortization schedule then in effect or (ii) the date the balance actually reaches 80 percent of the original value of the property based on actual payments. The notice must also state that the servicer will notify the borrower when either (i) or (ii) occurs;
- That PMI will automatically terminate when the loan balance is first scheduled to reach 78 percent of the original value of the property based on the amortization schedule then in effect. The notice must also state that the borrower will be notified when PMI is terminated (or that termination will occur when the borrower becomes current on payments); and,

- That there are exemptions to the cancellation and automatic termination provisions for high-risk mortgages and whether such exemptions apply to the borrower's loan (12 USC §4903(a)(1)(B)).

Initial Disclosures for High Risk Residential Mortgage Transactions

When PMI is required for high risk residential mortgage transactions, the lender must provide to the borrower a written notice stating that PMI will not be required beyond the date that is the midpoint of the loan's amortization period if, on that date, the borrower is current on the payments as required by the terms of the loan. The lender must provide this notice at consummation. The lender need not provide disclosure of the termination at 77 percent LTV for lender defined high-risk mortgages (12 USC §4903(a)(2)).

Annual Disclosures for Residential Mortgage Transactions

For all residential mortgage transactions, including high risk mortgages for which PMI is required, the servicer must provide the borrower with an annual written statement that sets forth the rights of the borrower to PMI cancellation and termination and the address and telephone number that the borrower may use to contact the servicer to determine whether the borrower may cancel PMI (12 USC §4903(a)(3)).

Disclosures for Existing Residential Mortgages

When PMI was required for a residential mortgage consummated before July 29, 1999, the servicer must provide to the borrower an annual written statement that:

- States that PMI may be canceled with the consent of the lender or in accordance with state law; and
- Provides the servicer's address and telephone number, so that the borrower may contact the servicer to determine whether the borrower may cancel PMI (12 USC §4903(b)).

Notification Upon Cancellation or Termination of PMI Relating to Residential Mortgage Transactions

General

The servicer must, not later than 30 days after PMI relating to a residential mortgage transaction is canceled or terminated, notify the borrower in writing that:¹¹

- PMI has terminated and the borrower no longer has PMI; and
- No further premiums, payments or other fees are due or payable by the borrower in connection with PMI (12 USC §4904(a)).

Notice of Grounds/Timing

If a servicer determines that a borrower in a residential mortgage transaction does not qualify for PMI cancellation or automatic termination, the servicer must provide the borrower with a written notice of the grounds relied on for that determination. If an appraisal was used in making the determination, the servicer must give the appraisal results to the borrower. If a borrower does not qualify for cancellation, the notice must be provided not later than 30 days following the later of: (i) the date the borrower's request for cancellation is received; or (ii) the date on which the borrower satisfies any evidence and certification requirements of the mortgage holder. If the borrower does not meet the requirements for automatic termination, the notice must be provided not later than 30 days following the scheduled termination date (12 USC §4904(b)).

Disclosure Requirements for Lender-Paid Mortgage Insurance

Definitions

Borrower paid mortgage insurance (BPMI) means PMI is required for a residential mortgage transaction, the payments for which are made by the borrower.

Lender paid mortgage insurance (LPMI) means PMI that is required for a residential mortgage transaction, the payments for which are made by a person other than the borrower.

Loan commitment means a prospective lender's written confirmation of its approval, including any applicable closing conditions, of the application of a prospective borrower for a residential mortgage loan (12 USC 4905(a)).

Initial Notice

In the case of LPMI required for a residential mortgage transaction, the Act requires that the lender provide a written notice to the borrower not later than the date on which a loan commitment is made. The written notice must advise the borrower of the differences between LPMI and BPMI by notifying the borrower that LPMI:

- Differs from BPMI because it cannot be canceled by the borrower or automatically terminated as provided under the Act;
- Usually results in a mortgage having a higher interest rate than it would in the case of BPMI; and,
- Terminates only when the mortgage is refinanced (as that term is defined in the Truth in Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. §1601 et seq., and Regulation Z, 12 CFR §1026.20), paid off, or otherwise terminated.

The notice must also provide:

- That LPMI and BPMI have both benefits and disadvantages;
- A generic analysis of the costs and benefits of a mortgage in the case of LPMI versus BPMI over a ten-year period, assuming prevailing interest and property appreciation rates; and,
- That LPMI may be tax-deductible for federal income taxes, if the borrower itemizes expenses for that purpose (12 USC §4905(c)(1)).

Notice at Termination Date

Not later than 30 days after the termination date that would apply in the case of BPMI, the servicer shall provide to the borrower a written notice indicating that the borrower may wish to review financing options that could eliminate the requirement for LPMI in connection with the mortgage (12 USC §4905(c)(2)).

Fees for Disclosures

As stated previously, no fee or other cost may be imposed on a borrower for the disclosures or notifications required to be given to a borrower by lenders or servicers under the Act (12 USC §4906).

¹¹ For adjustable rate mortgages, the initial notice to borrowers must state that the servicer will notify the borrower when the cancellation and automatic termination dates are reached (12 USC §4903(a)(1)(B)). Servicers should take care that the appropriate notices are made to borrowers when those dates are reached.

V. Lending — HOPA

Civil Liability

Liability Dependent upon Type of Action

Servicers, lenders and mortgage insurers that violate the Act are liable to borrowers as follows:

- Individual Action
 - In the case of individual borrowers:
 - Actual damages (including interest accruing on such damages);
 - Statutory damages not to exceed $2,000;
 - Costs of the action, and
 - Reasonable attorney fees.
- Class Action
 - In the case of a class action suit against a defendant that is subject to section 10 of the Act, (i.e., regulated by the federal banking agencies, NCUA or the Farm Credit Administration):
 - Such statutory damages as the court may allow up to the lesser of $500,000 or 1 percent of the liable party's net worth;
 - Costs of the action; and
 - Reasonable attorney fees.
 - In the case of a class action suit against a defendant that is not subject to section 10 of the Act, (i.e., not regulated by the federal banking agencies, NCUA, or the Farm Credit Administration):
 - Actual damages (including interest accruing on such damages);
 - Statutory damages up to $1,000 per class member but not to exceed the lesser of $500,000; or 1 percent of the liable party's gross revenues;
 - Costs of the action; and
 - Reasonable attorney fees (12 USC §4907(a)).

Statute of Limitations

A borrower must bring an action under the Act within two years after the borrower discovers the violation (12 USC §4907(b)).

Mortgage Servicer Liability Limitation

A servicer shall not be liable for its failure to comply with the requirements of the Act if the servicer's failure to comply is due to the mortgage insurer's or lender's failure to comply with the Act (12 USC §4907(c)).

Enforcement

The Act directs the federal banking agencies to enforce the Act under 12 USC §1818 or any other authority conferred upon the agencies by law. Under the Act the agencies shall:

- Notify applicable lenders or servicers of any failure to comply with the Act;
- Require the lender or servicer, as applicable, to correct the borrower's account to reflect the date on which PMI should have been canceled or terminated under the Act; and,
- Require the lender or servicer, as applicable, to return unearned PMI premiums to a borrower who paid premiums after the date on which the borrower's obligation to pay PMI premiums ceased under the Act (12 USC §4909).

Examination Objectives

The objectives of the examination are:

1. To determine the financial institution's compliance with the Homeowners Protection Act of 1998 (HOPA), as amended.
2. To assess the quality of the financial institution's policies and procedures for implementing the HOPA.
3. To determine the reliance that can be placed on the financial institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution's compliance with the HOPA.
4. To initiate corrective action when violations of HOPA are identified, or when policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures¹²

1. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine if the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance with the HOPA. Consider the following:
 - a. Organization charts;
 - b. Process flowcharts;
 - c. Policies and procedures;
 - d. Loan documentation;
 - e. Checklists;
 - f. Training; and,
 - g. Computer program documentation.
2. Review any compliance audit material, including work papers and reports, to determine whether:
 - a. The institution's procedures address all applicable provisions of HOPA;
 - b. Steps are taken to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies;
 - c. The procedures used include samples covering all product types and decision centers;
 - d. The compliance audit work performed is accurate;
 - e. Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and/or to the Board of Directors;
 - f. Corrective action is taken in a timely and appropriate manner; and
 - g. The frequency of compliance review is appropriate.
3. Obtain a sample of recent residential mortgage transactions, including those serviced by the bank and conducted electronically, if applicable. Complete the Homeowners Protection Act worksheet (page V-5.8). Also, obtain a copy of the bank's disclosure and notification forms and policies and procedures to complete the worksheet. As applicable, the forms should include:
 - a. Initial disclosures for: (i) fixed rate mortgages; (ii) adjustable rate mortgages; (iii) high risk loans; and (iv) lender-paid mortgage insurance.
 - b. Annual notices for: (i) fixed and adjustable rate mortgages and high-risk loans and (ii) existing residential mortgages.
 - c. Notices of: (i) cancellation; (ii) termination; (iii) grounds for not canceling PMI; (iv) grounds for not terminating PMI; (v) cancellation date for adjustable rate mortgages; and (vi) termination date for lender paid mortgage insurance.
4. Using the above sample and bank policies and procedures, determine that borrowers are not charged for any required disclosures or notifications (12 USC §4906).
5. Obtain and review a sample of recent written requests from borrowers to cancel their private mortgage insurance (PMI) on "non-high risk" residential mortgage transactions. Verify that the insurance was canceled on either: (a) the date on which the principal balance of the loan was first scheduled to reach 80 percent of the original value of the property based on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan); or (b) the date on which the principal balance of the loan actually reached 80 percent of the original value of the property based on actual payments, in accordance with the applicable provisions in 12 USC §4902(a) of HOPA (i.e., good payment history, current payments and, if required by the lender, evidence that the value of the mortgaged property did not decline, and certification that the borrower's equity was unencumbered by a subordinate lien) (12 USC §4902(a)).
6. Obtain and review a sample of "non-high risk" PMI residential mortgage transactions where the borrower did not request cancellation. Select loans from the sample that have reached a 78 percent or lower LTV ratio based on the original value of the property and that are current. Verify that PMI was terminated, based on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan) on the date that the principal balance of the loan was first scheduled to reach 78 percent of the original value of the mortgaged property (if the borrower was current) or on the first day of the first month after the date that the borrower became current (12 USC §4902(b)).
7. Obtain a sample of PMI-covered residential mortgage transactions (including high risk loans, if any) that are at or beyond the midpoint of their amortization period. Determine whether PMI was terminated by the first day of the following month if the loan was current. If the loan was not current at the midpoint, determine that PMI was terminated by the first day of the month following the day the loan became current. If, at the time of the examination, a loan at the midpoint is not current, determine whether the financial institution is monitoring the loan and has systems in place to ensure that PMI is terminated when the borrower becomes current (12 USC §4902(c) and 12 USC §4902(g)(2)).

¹² These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

8. Obtain a sample of any lender defined “high risk” PMI residential mortgage transactions that have a 77 percent or lower LTV based on the original value of the property. Verify that PMI was canceled, based on the initial amortization schedule (in the case of a fixed rate loan) or the amortization schedule then in effect (in the case of an adjustable rate loan), on the date that the principal balance of the loan was scheduled to reach 77 percent of the original value of the mortgaged property (12 USC §4902(g)(1)(B)).
9. Obtain a sample of loans that have had PMI canceled or terminated (the samples obtained above can be used). For PMI loans canceled upon the borrowers’ requests, determine that the financial institution did not require any PMI payment(s) beyond 30 days of the borrower satisfying the evidence and certification requirements to cancel PMI (12 USC §4902(e)(1)). For the PMI loans that received automatic termination or final termination, determine that the financial institution did not require any PMI payment(s) beyond 30 days of termination (12 USC §4902(e)(2) and 12 USC §4902(e)(3)).

10. Using the samples in steps 5, 6, and 7, determine if the financial institution returned unearned premiums, if any, to the borrower within 45 days after cancellation or termination (12 USC §4902(f)(1)).

Conclusions

11. Summarize all violations and internal deficiencies.
12. If the violation(s) or internal deficiencies noted above represent(s) a pattern or practice, determine the root cause by identifying weaknesses in internal controls, compliance review, training, management oversight, or other factors.
13. Identify action needed to correct violations and weaknesses in the institution’s compliance system, as appropriate.
14. Discuss findings with the institution’s management and obtain a commitment for corrective action.
15. Determine if enforcement action is appropriate. If so, contact appropriate agency personnel for guidance. Section 10(c) of the Act contains a provision requiring restitution of unearned PMI premiums.

Flood Disaster Protection Act

The National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) is administered primarily under the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 (1968 Act) and the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973 (FDPA).¹ The 1968 Act made federally subsidized flood insurance available to owners of improved real estate or mobile homes located in special flood hazard areas (SFHA) if their community participates in the NFIP. The NFIP, administered by a department of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) known as the Federal Insurance and Mitigation Administration (FIMA), makes federally backed flood insurance available to consumers through NFIP Direct Program agents who deal directly with FEMA or through the Write Your Own Program (WYO), which allows consumers to purchase federal flood insurance from private insurance carriers. The NFIP aims to reduce the impact of flooding by providing affordable insurance to property owners and by encouraging communities to adopt and enforce floodplain management regulations. The FDPA requires federal financial regulatory agencies to adopt regulations prohibiting their regulated lending institutions from making, increasing, extending or renewing a loan secured by improved real estate or a mobile home located or to be located in an SFHA in a community participating in the NFIP unless the property securing the loan is covered by flood insurance. Flood insurance may be provided through the NFIP or through a private insurance carrier.

Title V of the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994² which is called the National Flood Insurance Reform Act of 1994 (1994 Act), comprehensively revised the Federal flood insurance statutes. The purpose of the 1994 Act was to increase compliance with flood insurance requirements and participation in the NFIP in order to provide additional income to the National Flood Insurance Fund and to decrease the financial burden of flooding on the Federal government, taxpayers, and flood victims.³ The 1994 Act required the federal financial regulatory agencies, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB); the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC); the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA); and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) to revise their current flood insurance regulations and brought lenders regulated by the Farm Credit Administration (FCA) under the coverage of the Federal flood insurance statutes. The federal financial regulatory agencies and the FCA (collectively, the Agencies) jointly issued regulations on August 29, 1996 (61 FR 45684).⁴

The 1994 Act also made the flood insurance requirements directly applicable to the loans purchased by the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac) and to agencies that provide government insurance or guarantees such as the Small Business Administration (SBA), Federal Housing Administration (FHA), and the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA).

The mandatory flood insurance purchase requirements of the FDPA were again significantly amended with the passage of the Biggert-Waters Flood Insurance Reform Act of 2012 (Biggert-Waters Act) and the Homeowner Flood Insurance Affordability Act of 2014 (HFIAA). These statutes made changes to the provisions pertaining to force placement of flood insurance; escrowing of flood insurance premiums and fees; exemptions to the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement; and civil money penalties. Moreover, a new provision mandating the acceptance of a private flood insurance policy meeting certain criteria as satisfaction of the mandatory purchase requirement was added to the FDPA. The Agencies jointly issued rules addressing force placement, escrow, and the exemption to the mandatory purchase requirement for detached structures on July 21, 2015 (80 FR 43215). The Agencies jointly issued rules implementing the private flood insurance provisions of the Biggert-Waters Act on February 20, 2019 (84 FR 4953).

Objectives of the FDPA:

- Provide flood insurance to owners of improved real estate located in SFHAs of communities participating in the NFIP.
- Require communities to enact measures designed to reduce or avoid future flood losses as a condition for making federally subsidized flood insurance available.
- Require federal financial regulatory agencies to adopt regulations prohibiting their regulated lending institutions from making, increasing, extending, or renewing a loan secured by improved real estate or a mobile home located or to be located in an SFHA of a community participating in the NFIP, unless the property securing the loan is covered by flood insurance.
- Require federal agencies, such as the FHA, SBA and the VA not to subsidize, insure, or guarantee any loan if the property securing the loan is in an SFHA of a community not participating in the NFIP.

Structures Eligible for Flood Insurance Under the NFIP

The NFIP covers improved real property or mobile homes located or to be located in an area identified by FEMA as having special flood hazards. Generally, each insurable structure requires a separate insurance policy. The following types of structures are eligible for coverage:

V. Lending - Flood Disaster Protection

- Residential, industrial, commercial, and agricultural buildings that are walled and roofed structures that are principally above ground.
- Buildings under construction where a development loan is made to construct insurable improvements on the land. Insurance can be purchased to keep pace with the new construction.
- Mobile homes that are affixed to a permanent site, including mobile homes that are part of a dealer's inventory and affixed to permanent foundations.
- Condominiums.
- Co-operative buildings.
- Flood insurance coverage is also available for personal property and other insurable contents contained in real property or mobile homes located in SFHAs. The property must be insured in order for the contents to be eligible.

Structures Not Eligible for Flood Insurance Under the NFIP

- Unimproved land, bridges, dams, and roads.
- Mobile homes not affixed to a permanent site.
- Travel trailers and campers.
- Converted buses or vans.
- Buildings entirely in, on, or over water into which boats are floated.
- Buildings newly constructed or substantially improved on or after October 1, 1983, in an area designated as an undeveloped coastal barrier with the Coastal Barrier Resource System established by the Coastal Barrier Resources Act (Public Law 97-348).

Flood Insurance Requirements for Lending Institutions

Basic Requirement

Flood insurance, either issued through the NFIP or from a private insurance provider, is required for the term of the loan on buildings or mobile homes when an institution makes, increases, extends or renews a designated loan, meaning all three of the following factors are present:

- The loan (commercial or consumer) is secured by improved real estate or a mobile home that is affixed to a permanent foundation (security property);
- The property securing the loan is located or will be located in an SFHA as identified by FEMA; and
- The community in which the property is located participates in the NFIP.

The FDPA provides that a regulated lending institution may not make, increase, extend, or renew any loan secured by improved real property that is located in an SFHA unless the improved real property is covered by the minimum amount of flood insurance required by statute. This includes situations where a security interest in improved real property is taken only "out of an abundance of caution."

Nonparticipating Communities

Although a lender may make, increase, extend, or renew a loan in a nonparticipating community, a lender is still required to determine whether the security property is located in an SFHA and if so, to notify the borrower. The lender must also notify the borrower that flood insurance coverage under the NFIP is not available because the community does not participate in the NFIP. If the nonparticipating community has been identified for at least one year as containing an SFHA, properties located in the community will not be eligible for federal disaster relief assistance in the event of a federally declared disaster.

Because of the lack of NFIP flood insurance coverage and limited federal disaster assistance available, a lender should carefully evaluate the risk involved in making such a loan. A lender making a loan in a nonparticipating community may want to require the purchase of private flood insurance, if available. Also, a lender with significant lending in nonparticipating communities should establish procedures to ensure that such loans do not constitute an unacceptably large portion of the financial institution's loan portfolio.

Federal agency lenders such as the FHA, the SBA and the VA will not subsidize, insure or guarantee any loan if the property securing the loan is in a SFHA of a community not participating in the NFIP. In addition, Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae will not purchase mortgages secured by improved properties located in SFHAs in nonparticipating communities.

Special Situation—Table Funded Loans

In the typical table funding situation, the party providing the funding reviews and approves the credit standing of the borrower and issues a commitment to the broker or dealer to purchase the loan at the time the loan is originated. Frequently, all loan documentation and other statutorily mandated notices are supplied by the party providing the funding, rather than the broker or dealer. The funding party provides the original funding "at the table" when the broker or dealer and the borrower close the loan. Concurrent with the loan closing, the funding party acquires the loan from the broker or dealer.

For flood hazard determination purposes, the substance of the table funded transaction should control and the typical table funded transaction should be considered a loan made, rather than purchased, by the entity that actually supplies the funds. Regulated institutions that provide table funding to close loans originated by a mortgage broker or mobile home dealer will be considered to be "making" a loan for purposes of the flood insurance requirements.

Treating table funded loans as loans made by the funding entity need not result in duplication of flood hazard determinations and borrower notices. The funding entity may delegate to the broker or dealer originating the transaction the responsibility for fulfilling the flood insurance requirements or may otherwise divide the responsibilities with the broker or dealer.

Exemptions to the Purchase Requirement

The flood insurance purchase requirement does not apply to the following three loan situations:

- Loans on state-owned property covered under an adequate policy of self-insurance satisfactory to the Administrator of FEMA. The Administrator will periodically publish a list of state property falling within this exemption.
- Loans with an original principal balance of $5,000 or less, and having an original repayment term of one year or less.
- Any structure that is a part of any residential property but is detached from the primary residential structure of such property and does not serve as a residence.
 - A structure that is part of a residential property is a structure used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, and not used primarily for agricultural, commercial, industrial, or other business purposes. It is detached from the primary residential structure if it is not joined by any structural connection to that structure.
 - Whether a structure serves as a residence is based on the institution's good faith determination that the structure is intended for residential use or actually used as a residence, which generally includes sleeping, bathroom, or kitchen facilities, but not necessarily all three.

Amount of Flood Insurance Required

The minimum amount of flood insurance required must be at least equal to the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the loan, the maximum amount available under the NFIP for the type of structure, or the insurable value of the property. Flood insurance coverage under the NFIP is limited to the building or mobile home and any personal property that secures the loan and not the land itself.

The limits of coverage for flood policies are:

- $250,000 for residential property structures and $100,000 for personal contents.
- $500,000 for non-residential structures and $500,000 for contents.
- $500,000 for non-condominium residential buildings of five units or greater and $100,000 for personal contents.⁵

Acceptance of Private Insurance Policies

A regulated lending institution is required to accept a private insurance policy to satisfy the flood insurance purchase requirement if the policy meets the definition of "private flood insurance" as set forth in the regulation (mandatory acceptance).

A regulated lending institution may choose to accept certain flood insurance policies that do not meet the definition of "private flood insurance" set forth in the regulation if the policy meets certain criteria (discretionary acceptance). A regulated lending institution may also exercise its discretion to accept certain plans providing flood coverage issued by "mutual aid societies" provided that certain criteria are met.

Mandatory Acceptance

- Under the regulation, "private flood insurance" means an insurance policy that is issued by an insurance company that is licensed, admitted or otherwise approved to engage in the business of insurance by the insurance regulator of the State or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located, or
- is recognized, or not disapproved as a surplus lines insurer by the insurance regulator of the State or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located in the case of a policy of difference in conditions, multiple peril, all risk, or other blanket coverage insuring nonresidential commercial property;
- provides flood insurance coverage that is at least as broad as the coverage provided under the NFIP's Standard Flood Insurance Policy (SFIP) for the same type of property, including when considering deductibles, exclusions and conditions offered by the insurer; to be at least as broad as the coverage provided under an SFIP, the policy must at a minimum:
 - define the term "flood" to include the events defined as "flood" in an SFIP;
 - contain the coverage specified in an SFIP, including that relating to building property coverage; personal property coverage; other coverages; and increased cost of compliance coverage;
 - contain deductibles no higher than the specified maximum, and include similar non-applicability provisions, as under an SFIP, for any total policy coverage amount up to the maximum available under the NFIP at the time the policy is provided to the institution;
 - provide coverage for direct physical loss caused by a flood and may only exclude other causes of loss that are excluded in an SFIP. Any exclusions other than those in an SFIP may pertain only to coverage that is in addition to the amount and type of coverage that could be provided by an SFIP or have the effect of providing broader coverage to the policyholder; and

- not contain conditions that narrow the coverage provided in an SFIP;
- provides that the insurer will give written notice 45 days before cancellation or non-renewal of flood insurance coverage to the insured and the regulated lending institution, or servicer acting on its behalf;
- includes information about the availability of flood insurance coverage under the NFIP;
- includes a mortgage interest clause similar to the clause contained in an SFIP; includes a provision requiring an insured to file suit not later than one year after the date of a written denial of all or part of a claim under the policy; and
- contains cancellation provisions that are as restrictive as the provisions in an SFIP.

For purposes of the definition of “private flood insurance,” the SFIP is the policy that is in effect as of the date the private flood insurance policy is provided to the regulated lending institution. The SFIP is available on the FEMA website: <https://www.fema.gov/national-flood-insurance-program/standard-flood-insurance-policy-forms>. The regulation includes a compliance aid provision to help a regulated lending institution determine whether a flood insurance policy meets the definition of “private flood insurance” and must be accepted under the regulation. A regulated lending institution may determine that a policy meets the definition of “private flood insurance” without further review of the policy if the policy or an endorsement to the policy states: “This policy meets the definition of private flood insurance contained in 42 U.S.C. 4012a(b)(7) and the corresponding regulation.”

Discretionary Acceptance

Under the regulation, a regulated lending institution may, at its discretion, accept a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, even if the policy does not meet the statutory and regulatory definition of “private flood insurance” as set forth above. A regulated lending institution may, at its discretion, accept a private flood insurance policy in satisfaction of the flood insurance purchase requirement if the policy:

- provides coverage in the amount as required under the regulation;
- is issued by an insurer that is licensed, admitted or otherwise approved to engage in the business of insurance by the insurance regulator of the State or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located; or in the case of a policy of difference in conditions, multiple peril, all risk or other blanket coverage insuring nonresidential commercial property, is issued by a surplus lines insurer recognized, or not disapproved by the insurance regulator of the State or jurisdiction where the property to be insured is located;

- covers both the mortgagor(s) and the mortgagee(s) as loss payees, except in the case of a policy that is provided by a condominium association, cooperative, homeowners association, or other applicable group and for which the premium is paid by the condominium association, cooperative, homeowners association, or other applicable group as a common expense; and
- provides sufficient protection of the designated loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles, and the regulated lending institution documents its conclusion regarding sufficiency of the protection of the loan in writing.

Some factors that a regulated lending institution could consider in determining whether a flood insurance policy provides sufficient protection of a loan include:

- whether the flood insurance policy’s deductibles are reasonable based on the borrower’s financial condition;
- whether the insurer provides adequate notice of cancellation to the mortgagor and mortgagee to ensure timely force placement of flood insurance, if necessary;
- whether the terms and conditions of the flood insurance policy with respect to payment per occurrence or per loss and aggregate limits are adequate to protect the regulated lending institution’s interest in the collateral;
- whether the flood insurance policy complies with applicable State insurance laws; and
- whether the private insurance company has the financial solvency, strength, and ability to satisfy claims.

Plans Provided by Mutual Aid Societies

The regulation defines a “mutual aid society” as an organization: (1) whose members share a common religious, charitable, educational, or fraternal bond; (2) that covers losses caused by damage to members’ property pursuant to an agreement, including damages caused by flooding, in accordance with this common bond; and (3) that has a demonstrated history of fulfilling the terms of agreements to cover losses to members’ property caused by flooding. A regulated lending institution may, at its discretion, accept a plan issued by a mutual aid society in satisfaction of the flood insurance purchase requirement, if the following criteria are met:

- the regulated lending institution’s primary Federal supervisory agency has determined that such plans qualify as flood insurance for purposes of the Federal flood insurance statute;
- the plan provides coverage in the amount required under the regulation;
- the plan covers both the mortgagor(s) and the mortgagee(s) as loss payees; and

- the plan provides sufficient protection of the designated loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles, and the regulated lending institution documents its conclusion regarding sufficiency of the protection of the loan in writing.

FDIC Instructions for the Qualification of Plans Provided by Mutual Aid Societies

In general, FDIC examiners will evaluate whether mutual aid society plans qualify as flood insurance on a case-by-case basis. To satisfy the first criterion listed above for the acceptance of plans offered by a mutual aid society, a plan can be deemed to qualify as flood insurance for purposes of the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, if either the:

- (1) mutual aid society issuing the plan is licensed, admitted, or otherwise approved to engage in the business of insurance by the insurance regulator of the state or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located; or
 - (2) mutual aid plan is considered and regulated as insurance by that state or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located.
- When a financial institution uses its discretion to accept a mutual aid society plan, FDIC examiners will rely on the requirements of individual states' laws and the financial institution's due diligence when assessing compliance with the final rule's first criterion. Evidence of compliance may include, among other things, for example, a certificate or other documentation indicating that either the mutual aid society is licensed, admitted, or otherwise approved to engage in the business of insurance in the state or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located, or the mutual aid plan is considered and regulated as insurance by that state or jurisdiction.

Waiting Period

NFIP flood insurance policies that are not issued in conjunction with the making, increasing, extending or renewing of a loan have a 30-day waiting period. The congressional intent behind this requirement was to prevent the purchase of flood insurance (and any direct loss to the U.S. government) in times of imminent loss. However, if the initial purchase of flood insurance is made during the 13-month period following revision or update of a Flood Insurance Rate Map for the community, there is a one-day waiting period.

There is no waiting period when an additional amount of NFIP insurance is required in connection with the making, increasing, extending or renewing of a loan, such as a second mortgage, home equity loan, or refinancing.

Special Situations—Second Mortgages/Home Equity Loans

Both second mortgages and home equity loans are transactions that may be subject to the mandatory purchase requirements of the FDPA. Because only one NFIP flood insurance policy can be issued on a building, an institution should not request a new NFIP flood insurance policy if one already exists. Instead, the institution should have the borrower contact the insurance agent:

- To inform the agent of the intention to obtain a loan involving a subordinate lien
- To obtain verification of the existence of a flood insurance policy, and
- To check whether the amount of insurance covers all loan amounts.

After obtaining this information, the insurance agent should increase the amount of NFIP coverage if necessary and issue an endorsement that will reflect the institution as a lien holder.

As an alternative, the borrower may also consider obtaining a private flood insurance policy in the proper amount.

For loans with approved lines of credit to be used in the future, it may be difficult to calculate the amount of insurance for the loan since the borrower will be drawing down differing amounts on the line at different times. If there is no policy on the collateral, the borrower must, at a minimum, obtain a policy as a requirement for drawing on the line. As a matter of administrative convenience to ensure compliance with the requirements, an institution may take the following alternative approaches:

- As part of its procedures, an institution should review its records periodically so that as draws are made against the line or repayments made to the account, the appropriate amount of insurance coverage can be maintained; or
- Upon origination, require the purchase of flood insurance for the total amount of the line, the value of the improved property or the maximum amount of flood insurance coverage available, whichever is less.

Special Situations—Condominium Policies

FEMA's condominium master policy is called a Residential Condominium Building Association Policy (RCBAP). The RCBAP covers both the common and individually owned building elements within the units, improvements within the units, and contents owned in common if contents coverage is purchased. The maximum amount of building flood insurance coverage that can be purchased under an RCBAP is either 100 percent of the replacement cost value of the building, or the total number of units in the condominium building times $250,000, whichever is less.

An institution must ensure that the minimum amount of flood insurance covering the condominium unit is the lesser of:

V. Lending - Flood Disaster Protection

- the outstanding principal balance of the loan, or
- the maximum amount of insurance available under the NFIP which is the lesser of:
 - the maximum limit available for the residential condominium unit, or
 - the insurable value allocated to the residential condominium unit which is the replacement cost value of the condominium building divided by the number of units.

Therefore, an institution must require a borrower whose loan is secured by a residential condominium unit to either:

- Ensure the condominium owners association has purchased an RCBAP, or other flood insurance policy, covering either 100 percent of the replacement cost value of the building, or the total number of units in the condominium building times $250,000, whichever is less; or
- Obtain a Dwelling Policy if the condominium owners association has not purchased flood insurance as described above or if that coverage is less than either 100 percent of the replacement cost value of the building or the total number of units in the condominium building times $250,000, whichever is less. The amount of coverage under a Dwelling Policy required to be purchased by the individual unit owner would be the difference between the condominium policy's coverage allocated to that unit and the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirements discussed above.

For instance, the maximum amount of coverage on a 50-unit condominium building would be $12,500,000 ($250,000 x 50). If the replacement cost value of the building was $10,000,000, the condominium association could purchase a policy of $10,000,000. This amount of insurance would meet the requirements of the regulations for any individual unit insurance requirement in the condominium.

Non-residential condominium buildings are not eligible for coverage under the RCBAP. The NFIP offers a maximum amount of building coverage up to $500,000 for these buildings and $500,000 for commonly owned contents. Under the NFIP, the owner of a non-residential condominium unit within a non-residential condominium building may purchase only contents coverage for that unit. Building coverage may not be purchased in the name of the unit owner. The maximum allowable contents coverage for non-residential owners is $500,000.

Other Special Situations

- Multiple Structures— Multiple structures that secure a loan located in an SFHA must each be covered by flood insurance, even though the value of one structure may be sufficient to cover the loan amount.

Under the NFIP, FEMA generally requires one policy per building, but also permits borrowers to insure non-residential buildings using one policy with a schedule separately listing each building. This coverage alternative may be especially useful for loans secured by agricultural properties and improvements.

- Other Real Estate Owned— An institution with other real estate owned (OREO) in SFHAs should, as a prudent practice, purchase flood insurance policies on its OREO property, although it is not required to do so by the regulations.

Escrow Requirements

The regulations require the escrowing of flood insurance premiums and fees for designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home made, increased, renewed, or extended on or after January 1, 2016. In addition, institutions must offer and make available the option to escrow for flood insurance premiums and fees to borrowers with designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home outstanding as of January 1, 2016. The escrow provisions are designed to improve compliance with flood insurance requirements by ensuring that borrowers with designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home set aside funds to maintain flood insurance for the life of the loan.

While the escrow requirement pertains generally to any designated loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home, there are two types of exceptions: a small lender exception and a loan-type exception. The regulation provides that an institution is not required to escrow if it has total assets of less than $1 billion as of December 31 of either of the two prior calendar years and, as of July 6, 2012:

- The institution was not required by Federal or State law to escrow taxes, insurance premiums, fees, or any other charges for the term of the loan; and
- The institution did not have a policy of uniformly and consistently escrowing the same.

If an excepted institution no longer qualifies for the exception because its assets exceeded the threshold for two consecutive calendar year ends, it must begin escrowing for any designated loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home made, increased, extended, or renewed on or after July 1 of the first calendar year of changed status. If a financial institution provides escrow accounts only upon requests from borrowers, this does not constitute a uniform or consistent policy of requiring escrows.

In addition, the escrow requirement does not apply to the following types of loans:

- Extensions of credit primarily for business, commercial, or agricultural purposes even if secured by residential real estate;

- Loans in a subordinate position to a senior lien secured by the same property upon which the borrower has obtained sufficient flood insurance;
- Loans secured by a property that is covered by a flood insurance policy with sufficient flood insurance coverage, which is provided by a condominium, cooperative, or homeowners association;
- Home equity lines of credit;
- Nonperforming loans; or
- Loans with a term of no longer than 12 months.

A nonperforming loan in this instance is a loan that is 90 or more days past due and remains nonperforming until it is permanently modified or until the entire amount past due, including principal, accrued interest, and penalty interest incurred as the result of the past due status, is collected or otherwise discharged in full.

A loan that has a term exceeding 12 months does not qualify for the 12 month exception, even if one phase of the loan is for 12 months or less.

If the institution determines that a loan no longer qualifies for one of these loan-type exceptions, the institution must begin escrowing as soon as reasonably practicable.

Option to escrow: An institution (or its servicer) must offer and make available to borrowers the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees for designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home that are outstanding as of January 1, 2016. In addition, an institution must provide the option to escrow notice to borrowers by June 30, 2016. A model clause for the notice on the option to escrow is provided in Appendix B of the regulations.

An institution that no longer qualifies for the small lender exception must provide a notice of the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees for loans outstanding on July 1 of the first calendar year in which it has a change in status by September 30 of that year. Further, the financial institution must begin escrowing as soon as reasonably practicable after receiving a borrower's request to escrow. The notice regarding the option to escrow does not have to be provided in conjunction with any other disclosure or be segregated from other information provided to the borrower. An institution may choose whether to provide a separate notice or add it to any other disclosure the lender provides the borrower, such as a periodic statement.

Standard Flood Hazard Determination Form

When an institution makes, increases, extends, or renews any loan secured by improved real estate or by a mobile home, it must use the standard flood hazard determination form (SFHDF) developed by FEMA⁶ to determine whether the building or mobile home offered as security property is or will be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Federal flood insurance statutes.

An institution can use a printed, computerized, or electronic form. It must retain a copy of the completed form, in either hard copy or electronic format, for the period of time it owns the loan. FEMA has stated that if an electronic format is used, the format and exact layout of the SFHDF is not required, but the fields and elements listed on the form are required. Accordingly, any electronic format used by an institution must contain all mandatory fields indicated on the SFHDF.

<http://www.fema.gov/media-library/assets/documents/225>

Decisions as to the applicability of flood insurance may not be based on an institution's unilateral determination of elevations at which floods may occur. Official elevation determinations and, therefore, map revisions or amendments, Letter of Map Revision (LOMR) or Letter of Map Amendment (LOMA), respectively, may be performed only by FEMA.

Letter of Map Amendment (LOMA)

- A flood map will occasionally show a property as being in an SFHA, even though the building on the property is actually above the base flood elevation. In practice, flood insurance maps do not reflect every rise in terrain, and there may be instances of high ground inadvertently included in the SFHAs. Nevertheless, lenders are bound by the information shown on the FEMA maps until the map is changed by FEMA.
- To resolve such a situation, a property owner can submit elevation materials with a request to FEMA for a LOMA to remove the property from the SFHA. The request must be submitted on the appropriate FEMA application form available at: <https://www.fema.gov/flood-maps/change-your-flood-zone>.
- Upon receiving a complete application package, FEMA will normally complete its review and issue its determination within 4-6 weeks.
- After obtaining a LOMA, a borrower must submit it to the lender for the flood insurance requirement to be waived. The lender has the discretion to continue to require flood insurance if the lender determines it is prudent to do so.

Letter of Map Revision (LOMR)

- A LOMR is appropriate when physical changes are necessary to raise the land above the base flood elevation 100-year flood level. For example, a LOMR request is appropriate when a property, located within a SFHA, is graded and filled to raise ⁶ See 63 FR 27857 (May 21, 1998) (codified at 44 CFR § 65.16).

V. Lending - Flood Disaster Protection

the level of the land above the base flood elevation 100-year flood level. The request for a LOMR must be initiated and approved by the community since changes in land level may affect other property owners. Community approval also confirms that the change in the land has been reviewed and is compatible with the community's planning.

- A LOMR request must be submitted to FEMA on the appropriate form, available at: <https://www.fema.gov/flood-maps/change-your-flood-zone>.
- After obtaining a LOMR, the borrower must submit it to the lender before the flood insurance requirement is waived. The lender has the discretion to continue to require flood insurance if the lender determines that it is prudent to do so.

Flood maps, Standard Flood Hazard Determination forms, and Community Status Books may be obtained from FEMA by:

- Calling: 1-800-358-9616 or 1-800-611-6125, or
- Ordering online: www.msc.fema.gov

To obtain information on a community's participation status, contact a FEMA representative at 1-800-358-9616 to request a community status book. Information on community status is also available on the Internet at www.fema.gov/national-flood-insurance-program/national-flood-insurance-program-community-status-book.

Reliance on Prior Determination

An institution may rely on a prior flood determination, whether or not the security property is located in an SFHA, and it is exempt from liability for errors in the previous determination if:

- The previous determination is not more than seven years old, and
- The basis for the previous determination was recorded on the SFHDF.

There are, however some circumstances in which an institution may not rely on a previous determination, such as:

- If FEMA's map revisions or updates show that the security property has been remapped into an SFHA, or
- If the lender contacts FEMA and discovers that map revisions or updates affecting the security property have been made after the date of the previous determination.

An institution may also rely on a previous determination, which is not more than seven years old and is set forth on an SFHDF, when it increases, extends, renews, or purchases a loan. The making of a loan is not listed as a permissible event that permits an institution to rely on a previous determination. However, when the loan involves a refinancing or assumption by the same lender who obtained the original flood determination on the same property, the institution may rely on the previous determination, but only if the original determination was made not more than seven years before the date of the transaction, the basis for the determination was set forth on the SFHDF, and there were no map revisions affecting the property since the original determination was made. The same is true for multiple loans made by the same lender to the same borrower secured by the same property. A new determination is required when a loan refinancing or assumption is made by a lender different from the one who obtained the original determination because this constitutes a new loan.

Force Placement Requirements

An institution is not required to monitor for map changes, and flood determinations are not required to be made at any time other than when a loan is made, increased, extended, or renewed. If, however, at any time during the life of the loan the institution or its servicer determines that required flood insurance is deficient, the Agencies' regulations require initiation of force placement procedures.

An institution or a servicer acting on its behalf is required to purchase or "force place" flood insurance for the borrower if the institution or the servicer determines that coverage is inadequate. An institution, or servicer acting on its behalf, upon discovering that the security property is not covered by an adequate amount of flood insurance, must provide notice to the borrower that the borrower should obtain flood insurance. If the borrower fails to purchase flood insurance in the appropriate amount within 45 days, the lender must purchase insurance on the borrower's behalf. If there is a brief delay in force placing coverage, the Agencies expect the lender to be able to provide a reasonable explanation, for example, because the lender uses batch processing when purchasing force-placed flood insurance policies.

An institution or its servicer continues to be responsible for ensuring that if flood insurance was required at origination, the borrower renews the flood insurance policy and continues to renew it for as long as flood insurance is required for the security property. If a borrower allows a policy to lapse when insurance is required, the institution or its servicer is required to commence force placement procedures.

Under the Biggert-Waters Act, an institution may force place and charge for insurance beginning on the date on which flood insurance coverage lapsed or did not provide a sufficient coverage amount. The Biggert-Waters Act also provides that an institution must terminate force-placed insurance within 30 days of receipt of confirmation of a borrower's existing flood insurance coverage. Additionally, an institution must refund to the borrower all premiums and fees for force-placed insurance paid by the borrower during any period of overlap between the borrower's policy and the force-placed policy. Because an insurer is the entity that actually cancels the policy, an institution need only notify the insurer to terminate the force-placed policy in order to comply with the termination requirement.

Force placement authority is designed to be used if, over the term of the loan, the institution or its servicer determines that flood insurance coverage on the security property is deficient; that is, whenever the amount of coverage in place is not equal to the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the loan or the maximum coverage available under the NFIP. If a borrower fails to obtain the required amount of flood insurance coverage upon notification by an institution or its servicer, the amount that must be force placed is equal to the difference between the present amount of coverage, if any, and the lesser of the outstanding principal balance or the maximum coverage limit.

There is no required form of notice to borrowers for use in connection with the force placement procedures. An institution or its servicer may choose to send the notice directly or may use the insurance company that issues the force placement policy to send the notice. Force-placed flood insurance policies are available through private insurers or through the NFIP. FEMA has developed the Mortgage Portfolio Protection Program (MPPP) to assist lenders in connection with force placement procedures. For information concerning the MPPP, lenders and others should consult FEMA's Website.⁷

Determination Fees

The regulations permit an institution or its servicer to charge a reasonable fee to the borrower for the costs of making a flood hazard determination under the following circumstances:

- The borrower initiates a transaction (making increasing, extending, or renewing a loan) that triggers a flood hazard determination;
- There is a revision or updating of floodplain areas or risk zones by FEMA;
- The determination is due to FEMA's publication of a notice that affects the area in which the loan is located; or
- The determination results in the purchase of flood insurance under the force placement provision.

The loan agreement or other contractual documents between the parties may also permit the imposition of fees.

The authority to charge a borrower a reasonable fee for a flood hazard determination extends to a fee for life-of-loan monitoring by either the institution, its servicer, or by a third party, such as a flood hazard determination company.

Truth in Lending Act Issues

The Commentary to Regulation Z states that a fee for services that will be performed periodically during the loan term is a finance charge, regardless of whether the fee is imposed at closing, or when the service is performed. This would include the fee for life-of-loan monitoring. The fee for the original flood determination (i.e., whether a security property is in an SFHA) is excluded from the finance charge. The Commentary further indicates that any portion of a fee that does not relate to the initial decision to grant credit must be included in the finance charge.⁸ If creditors are uncertain about what portion of a fee is related to the initial decision to grant credit, the entire fee may be treated as a finance charge.

Notice of Special Flood Hazards and Availability of Federal Disaster Relief Assistance

When an institution makes, increases, extends or renews a loan secured by property that is or will be located in a SFHA, the institution must provide a written notice of special flood hazards to the borrower and the servicer, if there is one. This notice of special flood hazards must be provided regardless of whether the security property is located in a participating or non-participating community. The written notice must contain the following information:

- A warning that the building or mobile home is or will be located in a SFHA.
- A description of the flood purchase requirements contained in section 102(b) of the FDPA, as amended.
- A statement, if applicable, that flood insurance coverage is available under the NFIP and may also be available from private insurers.
- A statement that flood insurance coverage is available from private insurance companies that issue standard flood insurance policies on behalf of the NFIP or directly from the NFIP.
- A statement that flood insurance that provides the same level of coverage as a standard flood insurance policy under the NFIP may also be available from a private insurance company that issues policies on behalf of the company.
- A statement that the borrower is encouraged to compare flood insurance policies issued on behalf of the NFIP and policies issued on behalf of private insurance companies, and that the borrower should inquire about the availability, cost, and comparisons of flood insurance coverage to an insurance agent.
- A statement whether Federal disaster relief assistance may be available in the event of damage to the building or mobile home, caused by flooding in a Federally declared disaster.

V. Lending - Flood Disaster Protection

For any loan for which an institution is required to escrow under the regulations, the institution must provide a written notice with the notice of special flood hazards informing the borrower that the institution is required to escrow all premiums and fees for flood insurance required under the regulations. The language in the notice about escrow should be substantially similar to the model clauses provided in Appendix A of the regulations, under the section titled “Escrow Requirements for Residential Loans.” The escrow notice may be provided in the notice of special flood hazards or separately.

An institution may use the sample form contained in Appendix A to the regulations to comply with the notice requirements. The sample form is an example of an acceptable form the notice may take and contains additional information not required under the regulations. Lenders may also personalize, change the format of, and add information to the sample form if they wish to do so. However, to ensure compliance with the notice requirements, a lender-revised notice form must provide the borrower, at a minimum, with the information required by the regulations.

The regulations permit an institution to rely on assurances from a seller or lessor that the seller or lessor has provided the requisite notice to the purchaser or lessee. As an example, this alternate form of notice might arise in a situation in which the lender is providing financing through a developer for the purchase of condominium units by multiple borrowers. The lender may not deal directly with the individual condominium unit purchaser and need not provide notice to each purchaser but may instead rely on the developer/seller’s assurances that the developer/seller has given the required notice.

Delivery of the notice of special flood hazards must take place within a “reasonable time” before the completion of the transaction. What constitutes “reasonable” notice will necessarily vary according to the circumstances of particular transactions. An institution should bear in mind, however, that a borrower should receive notice timely enough to ensure that:

- The borrower has the opportunity to become aware of the borrower’s responsibilities under the NFIP; and
- Where applicable, the borrower can purchase flood insurance before completion of the loan transaction.

The Agencies generally regard ten days as a “reasonable” time interval.

Notice to Servicer

Loan servicers must also be notified of special flood hazards. In many cases, the servicer’s identity will not be known until well after the loan closing; consequently, notification to the servicer in advance of the loan closing would not be possible or would serve no purpose. Notice to the servicer is required as promptly as practicable after the institution provides notice to the borrower, and must be given no later than at the time the lender transmits to the servicer other loan data concerning hazard insurance and taxes. Delivery to the servicer of a copy of the borrower’s notice suffices as notice to the servicer.

Notice to the Administrator of FEMA

An institution must notify the Administrator of FEMA, or the Administrator’s designee, of the identity of the loan servicer and of any change in the servicer. FEMA has designated the insurance carrier as its designee to receive notice of the servicer’s identity and of any change thereof, and at FEMA’s request this designation is stated in the regulations. Notice of the identity of the servicer will enable FEMA’s designee to provide notice to the servicer of a loan 45 days before the expiration of a flood insurance contract. Notice is required to be sent within 60 days of the effective date of the transfer of servicing. No standard form of notice is required to be used; however, the information should be sufficient for the Administrator, or the Administrator’s designee, to identify the security property and the loan, as well as the new servicer and its address.

Notice of Option to Escrow

When an institution must offer and make available to a borrower the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees, the institution is required to mail or deliver to the borrower a written notice of the option to escrow for required flood insurance. The language in this notice must be similar to the language in the model clause of Appendix B of the regulations. The notice must also include the method(s) by which the borrower may request the escrow. Institutions must mail or deliver the notice no later than June 30, 2016 for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding on January 1, 2016.

Institutions that no longer qualify for the small lender exception must mail or deliver, for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding on July 1 of the first calendar year in which the institution had a change in status, the notice by September 30 of that year.

Record-Keeping Requirements

The record keeping requirements of the regulations include retention of:

- Copies of completed SFHDFs in either hard copy or electronic form, for as long as the institution owns the loan; and
- Records of the receipt of the notice of special flood hazards to the borrower and the servicer for as long as the institution owns the loan.

There is no particular form required for the record of receipt; however, it should contain a statement from the borrower indicating that the borrower has received the notification. Examples of records of receipt may include:

- A borrower's signed acknowledgment on a copy of the notice,
- A borrower-initialed list of documents and disclosures that the lender provided the borrower, or
- A scanned electronic image of a receipt or other document signed by the borrower.

An institution may keep the record of receipt provided by the borrower and the servicer in the form that best suits the institution's business. Institutions that retain these records electronically must be able to retrieve them within a reasonable time.

Penalties and Liabilities

The FDPA provides penalties for violations of:

- Mandatory flood purchase requirement;
- Escrow requirements;
- Notice requirements; and
- Force placement requirements.

If an institution is found to have a pattern or practice of committing any of these violations, the Agencies are required to assess civil money penalties in an amount not to exceed $2,000 per violation. Any penalty assessed will be paid into the FEMA National Flood Mitigation Fund. Liability for violations cannot be transferred to a subsequent purchaser of a loan. No penalty may be imposed after the expiration of four years beginning on the date of the occurrence of the violation.

Examination Objectives

1. To determine whether an institution performs required flood determinations for loans secured by improved real estate or a mobile home affixed to a permanent foundation in accordance with the regulations.
2. To determine if the institution requires flood insurance in the correct amount when it makes, increases, extends, or renews a loan secured by improved real estate or a mobile home located or to be located in a SFHA in a participating community.
3. To determine if the institution provides the required notices to the borrower and servicer when the property is located in a SFHA, and to the Administrator of FEMA whenever flood insurance is required as a condition of the loan.
4. To determine if the institution requires flood insurance premiums to be escrowed when required by law.
5. To determine if the institution complies with the force placement provisions if, at any time during the term of a loan, it determines that flood insurance on the loan is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the regulation.

6. To determine if the institution complies with the private flood insurance requirements of the regulation.
7. To require corrective action when policies or internal controls are deficient, or when violations of law are identified.

Examination Procedures⁹

The following procedures should be performed, as appropriate:

- By reviewing previous examinations and supervisory correspondence;
- By obtaining and reviewing the institution's policies, procedures, and other pertinent information;
- By reviewing the institution's system of internal controls;
- By reviewing consumer complaints submitted to the institution.¹⁰
- By discussing procedures with management; and
- By reviewing a sample of loan files.

Coverage and Internal Control

1. Determine if the institution has effective internal controls in place through appropriate policies, procedures, training, and monitoring to ensure compliance with the requirements of the regulations.
2. Determine the method(s) used by the institution to ascertain whether improved real estate or mobile homes are or will be located in an SFHA.
3. Verify that the process used accurately identifies special flood hazard areas.
4. For those special flood hazard areas identified, determine if the communities in which they are located participate in the NFIP.
5. If the detached structure is not covered by flood insurance, review the institution's documented conclusion and verify that the structure meets the exemption.
6. If the institution provides "table funding" to close loans originated by mortgage brokers or dealers, verify that it complies with regulatory requirements.
7. If the institution purchases servicing rights, review the contractual obligations placed on the institution as servicer by the owner of the loans to ascertain if flood insurance requirements are identified and compliance responsibilities are adequately addressed.
8. If the institution utilizes a third party to service loans, review the contractual obligations between the parties to ascertain that flood insurance requirements are identified and compliance responsibilities are adequately addressed.

⁹ These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

¹⁰ Consumer complaints can be a source of information about private flood policies that the institution did not accept.

V. Lending - Flood Disaster Protection

Property Determination Requirements

1. Verify that flood zone determinations are accurately recorded on the SFHDF. (Note: An institution is required to prepare a flood hazard determination for all detached structures, including those that may not be in a SFHA or require flood insurance coverage. Because a flood hazard determination is often needed to identify the number and types of structures on the property, conducting a flood hazard determination remains necessary to ensure compliance with the flood insurance requirements.)
2. Verify that the institution relies on a previous determination only if it is not more than seven years old; the determination was recorded on the SFHDF; and the determination is not on a property located in a community that has been remapped.
3. If the institution utilizes a third party to prepare flood zone determinations, review the contractual obligations between the parties to ascertain that flood insurance requirements are identified and compliance responsibilities are adequately covered, including the extent of the third party's guarantee of work and the procedures in place to resolve disputes relating to determinations.
4. Verify that the institution retains a copy of the completed SFHDF, in either hard copy or electronic form, for as long as it owns the loan.

Purchase Requirements

1. For loans that require flood insurance, determine that sufficient insurance was obtained prior to loan closing and is maintained for the life of the loan.
 - a. If the institution accepted a private flood insurance policy in accordance with the mandatory acceptance requirements, verify that the policy either: (a) contains the compliance aid assurance clause exactly as follows: "This policy meets the definition of private flood insurance contained in 42 U.S.C. 4012a(b)(7) and the corresponding regulation" or (b) that the policy meets the definition of "private flood insurance" as set forth in the regulation.
 - b. If the institution accepted a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer in accordance with the discretionary acceptance requirements, verify the following:
 - the policy provides a sufficient amount of insurance;
 - the policy is issued by an insurer permitted under the regulation;
 - the policy covers both the mortgagor(s) and the mortgagee(s) as loss payees; and
 - the institution determined that the policy provides sufficient protection of the designated loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles, and that the institution documented its conclusion regarding sufficiency of the protection of the loan in writing.

- c. If the institution accepted a plan issued by a mutual aid society in accordance with the requirements for acceptance of such a plan, verify the following:
 - the institution's regulator has determined that such plans qualify as flood insurance;
 - for FDIC-regulated institutions, assess whether the regulated lending institution has completed the due diligence necessary to determine that the mutual aid plan is considered insurance under applicable state law. (See page 5 for more information)
 - the plan provides coverage in the amount required;
 - the plan covers both the mortgagor(s) and the mortgagee(s) as loss payees; and
 - the institution documented in writing its conclusion that the plan provides sufficient protection of the designated loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles.
2. In connection with a residential property, if flood insurance was not required for a detached structure, determine whether the institution followed its internal policies and procedures and verify that the institution documented its decision in writing not to require insurance for such structure at the time of loan origination.
3. If the institution makes loans insured or guaranteed by a government agency (SBA, VA, or FHA) determine how it complies with the prohibition against making these loans if the security property is in an SFHA within a non-participating community.

Determination Fee Requirements

1. Determine that any fees charged to the borrower by the institution for flood zone determinations (absent some other authority such as contract language) are charged only when a loan:
 - Is made, increased, renewed, or extended;
 - Is made in response to a remapping by FEMA; or
 - Results in the purchase of flood insurance under the force placement provisions.

2. If other authority permits the institution to charge fees for determinations in situations other than the ones listed above, determine if the institution is consistent in this practice.
3. Determine the reasonableness of any fees charged to a borrower for flood determinations by evaluating the method used by the institution to determine the amount of the charge. Consider, for example, the relationship of the fees charged to the cost of services provided.

Notice Requirements

Notice of Special Flood Hazards and Availability of Federal Disaster Relief Assistance

1. Ascertain that when an institution makes, increases, extends or renews a loan secured by property located in an SFHA, written notice is mailed or delivered to the borrower within a reasonable time prior to completion of the transaction.
2. Verify that the notice contains:
 - A warning that the property securing the loan is or will be located in an SFHA;
 - A description of the flood insurance purchase requirements;
 - A statement, where applicable, that flood insurance coverage is available under the NFIP and may also be available from private insurers, if applicable;
 - A statement that flood insurance coverage is available from private insurance companies that issue standard flood insurance policies on behalf of the NFIP or directly from the NFIP;
 - A statement that flood insurance that provides the same level of coverage as a standard flood insurance policy under the NFIP may also be available from a private insurance company that issues policies on behalf of the company;
 - A statement that the borrower is encouraged to compare flood insurance policies issued on behalf of the NFIP and policies issued on behalf of private insurance companies, and that the borrower should inquire about the availability, cost, and comparisons of flood insurance coverage to an insurance agent;
 - A statement whether Federal disaster relief assistance may be available in the event of damage to the property caused by flooding in a federally declared disaster, if applicable.
3. If an institution is required to escrow under the regulations, verify that the institution provided a written notice with the notice of special flood hazards informing the borrower that the institution is required to escrow all premiums and fees for flood insurance, similar to the model clause in Appendix A of the regulations.
4. If the seller or lessor provided the notice to the purchaser or lessee, verify that the institution obtained satisfactory written assurance that the notice was provided within a reasonable time before the completion of the sale or lease transaction.

5. Verify that the institution retains a record of receipt of the notice provided to the borrower for as long as it owns the loan.
6. If applicable, verify that the institution provided written notice to the servicer of the loan within the prescribed time frames and that the institution retains a record of receipt of the notice for as long as it owns the loan.

Notice of the Option to Escrow

1. If the institution is required to send a notice of option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees, ascertain that written notice is mailed or delivered to the borrower: 1) by June 30, 2016 for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding on January 1, 2016; or, if applicable, 2) by September 30 of the first calendar year in which the institution has had a change in status and no longer qualifies for the small lender exception for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding as of July 1 of that calendar year.
2. Verify that the notice contains:
 - A statement that the borrower has an option to escrow required flood insurance premiums and fees.
 - A statement about the methods the borrower may use to request the escrow.

Notice of Servicer's Identity

If the institution transfers servicing of loans to another servicer, ascertain whether it provides notice of the new servicer's identity to the flood insurance carrier (the Administrator of FEMA's designee) within prescribed time frames.

Escrow Requirements

1. Verify that the institution escrows for flood insurance premiums and fees for designated loans made, increased, renewed, or extended on or after January 1, 2016 unless the loan qualifies for one of the exceptions or the institution qualifies for the small lender exception.
2. If a designated loan no longer qualifies for a loan-related exception, verify that the institution established an escrow account as soon as reasonably practicable.
3. If the institution no longer qualifies for the small lender exception, verify that the institution started requiring escrow on designated loans made, increased, extended or renewed on or after July 1 of the first calendar year of changed status.
4. Verify that an institution (or its servicer) offered and made available to borrowers the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees for loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home that are outstanding as of January 1, 2016. In addition, verify that an institution started escrowing

- as soon as reasonably practicable after receiving the borrower's request to escrow.
5. Verify that, for institutions that no longer qualify for the small lender exception, the institution mailed or delivered, for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding on July 1 of the first calendar year in which the institution no longer qualifies for the small lender exception, the notice of the option to escrow by September 30 of that year. In addition, verify that the institution started escrowing as soon as reasonably practicable after receiving a borrower's request to escrow.
 6. Verify that the institution's escrow procedures comply with section 10 of RESPA.

Force Placement Requirements

1. If the institution determines that flood insurance coverage is less than the amount required by the FDPA, ascertain that it has appropriate policies and procedures in place to exercise its force placement authority.
2. If the institution is required to force place insurance, verify:
 - That it provides written notice to the borrower that flood insurance is required, and
 - That if the required insurance is not purchased by the borrower within 45 days from the time that the institution provides the written notice, that the institution purchases the required insurance on the borrower's behalf.
3. If the institution purchases required flood insurance on the borrower's behalf and charges the borrower for premiums and fees incurred for coverage, verify that within 30 days of receiving confirmation of a borrower's existing flood insurance coverage, the institution:
 - Notifies the insurance provider to terminate the existing force-placed insurance, and
 - Refunds to the borrower all force-placed insurance premiums and any fees paid for by the borrower during any period of overlap between the borrower's policy and the force-placed policy.

FDPA Examination Checklist

The following questions are designed to be used in conjunction with the Examination Procedures to guide the examiner in a comprehensive review of the requirements of the regulation as it is applied to depository institutions:

Coverage

1. Does the institution offer or extend credit (consumer or commercial) that is secured by improved real estate or mobile homes as defined in the regulations? If yes, complete the remainder of this checklist.

2. If the institution provides "table funding" to close loans originated by mortgage brokers or dealers, does it have procedures to ensure that the requirements of the regulations are followed?
3. If the institution purchases servicing rights to loans covered by the regulation, do the documents between the parties specify the contractual obligations on the institution with respect to flood insurance compliance?
4. If the institution utilizes third parties to service loans covered by the regulation, do the contractual documents between the parties require the servicer to meet the requirements of the regulations?

Property Determination

1. If the institution utilizes a third-party to prepare flood zone determinations, do the contractual documents between the parties:
 - Provide for the third-party's guarantee of work?
 - Contain provisions to resolve disputes relating to determinations, to allocate responsibility for compliance, and to address which party will be responsible for penalties incurred for noncompliance?
2. Are the determinations prepared on the SFHDF developed and authorized by FEMA?
 - If the form is maintained in an electronic format does it contain the elements required by FEMA?
3. Does the institution maintain a record of the SFHDF either in hard copy or electronic form for as long as it owns the loan?
4. When increasing, extending, renewing, or purchasing a loan (not making a loan), does the institution rely on a prior determination only if it is made on the SFHDF, is no more than seven years old, and the community has not been remapped?

Determination Fees

1. Absent some other authority (such as contract language) does the institution charge a fee to the borrower for a flood determination only when:
 - It is made when a loan is made, increased, renewed or extended, or
 - It is made in response to a remapping by FEMA, or
 - It results in the purchase of flood insurance under the force placement provisions?
2. If the institution has other authority to charge fees for determinations in situations other than those noted above, is the practice followed consistently?
3. For those loans subject to TILA, if the institution requires the borrower to obtain life-of-loan monitoring and passes that charge along to the borrower, does it either:
 - Break out the original determination charge from the charge for life-of-loan monitoring or

- Include the full amount of the charge as a finance charge?
4. Are the fees charged by the institution for making a flood determination reasonable?

Notice Requirements*Notice of Special Flood Hazards and Availability of Federal Disaster Relief Assistance*

1. Are borrowers whose security property is located in an SFHA provided written notice of special flood hazards within a reasonable time prior to loan closing?
2. Does the notice contain the following required information?
 - A warning that the building or mobile home is located in a SFHA;
 - A description of the flood insurance requirements;
 - A statement that flood insurance is available under the NFIP and is also available from private insurers;
 - A statement that flood insurance coverage is available from private insurance companies that issue standard flood insurance policies on behalf of the NFIP or directly from the NFIP;
 - A statement that flood insurance that provides the same level of coverage as a standard flood insurance policy under the NFIP may also be available from a private insurance company that issues policies on behalf of the company;
 - A statement that the borrower is encouraged to compare flood insurance policies issued on behalf of the NFIP and policies issued on behalf of private insurance companies, and that the borrower should inquire about the availability, cost, and comparisons of flood insurance coverage to an insurance agent;
 - A statement whether Federal disaster relief assistance may be available in the event of damage to the property caused by flooding in a federally declared disaster, if applicable.
3. If an institution is required to escrow under the regulations, verify that the institution provided a written notice with the notice of special flood hazards informing the borrower that the institution is required to escrow all premiums and fees for flood insurance, similar to the model clause in Appendix A of the regulations.
4. If the institution uses the alternate notice procedures in certain instances as permitted by the regulation, does it obtain the required satisfactory written assurance from the seller or lessor?
5. Does the institution provide a copy of the notice of special flood hazards to the servicer of the loan within the required time frames?

6. Does the institution retain a record of receipt of the notifications provided to the borrower and the servicer for as long as it owns the loan?

Notice of Option to Escrow

1. If the institution is required to mail or deliver a notice of the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees, ascertain that written notice is mailed or delivered to the borrower: 1) by June 30, 2016 for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding as of January 1, 2016; or 2) if applicable, by September 30 of the first calendar year in which the institution has had a change in status and no longer qualifies for the small lender exception in the regulation for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding on July 1 of that calendar year.
2. Verify that the notice contains:
 - A statement that the borrower has an option to escrow required flood insurance premiums and fees.
 - A statement about the methods the borrower may use to request the escrow.

Insurance Requirements

1. If an improved property or mobile home is located in an SFHA and flood insurance is required, does the institution have the borrower obtain a policy, with the institution as loss payee, in the correct amount prior to closing?
2. When multiple properties securing the loan are located in SFHAs, does the institution have sufficient insurance, either through a single policy with a scheduled list of several buildings or multiple policies, to meet the minimum requirements of the regulation? (See narrative for description of minimum requirements.)
3. If the institution accepts a private flood insurance policy in accordance with the mandatory acceptance requirements set forth in the regulation, does the institution verify that either: (a) the policy or an endorsement to the policy contains the compliance aid assurance clause exactly as follows: "This policy meets the definition of private flood insurance contained in 42 U.S.C. 4012a(b)(7) and the corresponding regulation"; or (b) the policy meets the definition of "private flood insurance" as set forth in the regulation?
4. If the institution exercises its discretion to accept flood insurance issued by a private insurer that does not meet the statutory definition of private flood insurance, does the institution comply with the regulation's discretionary acceptance requirements?
5. If the institution accepts mutual aid plans, are the plans accepted in accordance with the regulation's requirements?

V. Lending - Flood Disaster Protection

Escrow Requirements

1. Does the institution require the escrow of premiums and fees for flood insurance on designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home made, increased, extended, or renewed after January 1, 2016 unless the loan qualifies for one of the exceptions or the institution qualifies for the small lender exception?
2. If a designated loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home no longer qualifies for the loan-related exception, does the lender establish an escrow as soon as reasonably practicable?
3. If the institution no longer qualifies for the small lender exception, did the lender begin requiring escrow on designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home made, increased, extended, or renewed on or after July 1 of the first calendar year of changed status?
4. Did the institution (or its servicer) offer and make available to borrowers the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees for designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home that are outstanding as of January 1, 2016? In addition, did the institution start escrowing as soon as reasonably practicable after receiving a borrower's request to escrow?
5. If the institution no longer qualifies for the small lender exception, did the institution mail or deliver, for any loan covered by flood insurance and outstanding on July 1 of the first calendar year in which the institution no longer qualifies for the small lender exception, the notice of the option to escrow by September 30 of that year? In addition, did the institution start escrowing as soon as reasonably practicable after receiving a borrower's request to escrow?
6. Does the institution comply with the provisions of section 10 of RESPA (12 CFR §1024.17 of Regulation X) for escrows?

Force Placement Requirements

1. If at any time during the life of the loan, the institution determines that property securing a designated loan lacks adequate flood insurance coverage:
 - Does the institution provide written notice to the borrower stating that the necessary coverage must be obtained or the institution will purchase it on the borrower's behalf?
 - Does the institution purchase the coverage on the borrower's behalf if the borrower does not obtain the required policy 45 days after the notice to the borrower has been sent?
2. If the institution purchases required flood insurance on the borrower's behalf and charges the borrower for premiums and fees incurred for coverage, verify that within 30 days of receiving confirmation of a borrower's existing flood insurance coverage, the institution:
 - Notifies the insurance provider to terminate the existing force-placed insurance, and
 - Refunds to the borrower all force-placed insurance premiums and any fees paid for by the borrower during any period of overlap between the borrower's policy and the force-placed policy.

Notice to Administrator of FEMA

1. Does the institution provide the appropriate notice to the carrier of the insurance policy (the Administrator of FEMA's designee) regarding the identity of the servicer of a designated loan?
2. If the institution sells or transfers the servicing of designated loans to another party, does it have procedures in place to provide the appropriate notice to the Administrator's designee within 60 days of the effective date of the transfer of the servicing?

Loans in Areas Having Special Flood Hazards; Interagency Questions and Answers Regarding Flood Insurance

Background

The National Flood Insurance Reform Act of 1994 (the Reform Act) (Title V of the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994) comprehensively revised the two federal flood insurance statutes, the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 and the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973. The Reform Act required the OCC, Board, FDIC, and NCUA to revise their flood insurance regulations and required the FCA to promulgate a flood insurance regulation for the first time. The OCC, Board, FDIC, NCUA, and FCA (collectively, “the Agencies”) fulfilled these requirements by issuing a joint final rule in the summer of 1996. See 61 FR 45684 (August 29, 1996).

In October 2013, the Agencies jointly issued proposed rules¹ to implement the escrow, force placement, and private flood insurance provisions of the Biggert-Waters Flood Insurance Reform Act of 2012 (the Biggert-Waters Act).² In March 2014, Congress enacted the HFIAA, which, among other things, amended the Biggert-Waters Act’s requirements regarding the escrow of flood insurance premiums and fees and created a new exemption from the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement for certain detached structures.³ The Agencies finalized the regulations to implement provisions in the Biggert-Waters Act and HFIAA under the Agencies’ jurisdiction, except for the provisions in the Biggert-Waters Act related to private flood insurance, with a final rule issued in July 2015.⁴ In February 2019, the Agencies finalized regulations to implement the private flood insurance related provisions of the Biggert-Waters Act.⁵

The Agencies have previously issued Flood Insurance Questions and answers in 2009 and 2011. In light of the significant changes to flood insurance requirements pursuant to the Biggert-Waters Act and HFIAA, as well as the Agencies’ regulations issued to implement these laws, the Agencies issued interagency proposed questions and answers (Q&As) in July, 2020 that covered flood insurance requirements related to the escrow of flood insurance premiums, the detached structure exemption, and force placement procedures. Separately, in March, 2021, the Agencies issued proposed new private flood insurance Q&As to supplement the proposed July 2020 Flood Insurance

Q&As. The proposed Q&As covered private flood insurance requirements implemented by the Agencies’ February 2019 final rule. The Q&As included provisions related to mandatory acceptance, discretionary acceptance and other general compliance topics. The Agencies have analyzed all comments received and revised the Q&As as appropriate. Further the Agencies have combined both sets of Q&As into one document and issued 144 new and revised Interagency Q&As in May, 2022. These 2022 Interagency Q&As supersede the 2009 and 2011 Interagency Q&As and supplement other guidance or interpretations issued by the Agencies related to loans in areas having special flood hazards.

Interagency Questions and Answers Regarding Flood Insurance

The Interagency Questions and Answers (Q&As) are organized by topic. Each topic addresses a major area of the Act and Regulation. For ease of reference, the Q&As provide a logical flow based on the flood insurance process for lenders, servicers. Each Q&A is designated by the category to which it belongs and then designated in numerical order for that particular category. The categories are abbreviated in the actual Q&A identifier. For example, the topic Determining the Applicability of Flood Insurance Requirements for Certain Loans has a corresponding Q&A identifier of APPLICABILITY, followed by the numeric question in the series.

Additionally, the following terms are used throughout this document: “Act” refers to the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 and the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, as revised by the National Flood Insurance Reform Act of 1994 (codified at 42 U.S.C. 4001 et seq.). “Regulation” refers to each agency’s current final rule.⁶ The agencies are providing answers to questions pertaining to the following topics:

2. Exemptions from the Mandatory Flood Insurance Purchase Requirements [Exemptions]
3. Private Flood Insurance – Mandatory Acceptance [Mandatory]

Determining the applicability of flood insurance requirements for certain loans (APPLICABILITY)

1. APPLICABILITY 1. Does the Regulation apply to a loan where the building or mobile home securing such loan is located in a community that does not participate in the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP)?

Answer: Yes, the Regulation does apply; however, a lender need not require borrowers to obtain flood insurance for a building or mobile home located in a community that does not participate in the NFIP, even if the building or mobile home securing the loan is located in an SFHA. Nonetheless, a lender, using the Standard Flood Hazard Determination Form, must still determine whether the building or mobile home is located in an SFHA.⁷ If the building or mobile home is determined to be located in an SFHA, a lender is required to mail or deliver a written notice to the borrower.⁸ In this case, a lender, generally, may make a conventional loan without requiring flood insurance. However, because Federal agencies such as the Small Business Administration, Veterans Administration, or Federal Housing Administration are prohibited from guaranteeing or insuring a loan secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA in a community that does not participate in the NFIP, a lender would not be able to make a Federally guaranteed or insured loan. See 42 U.S.C. 4106(a). Also, a lender is responsible for exercising sound risk management practices to avoid making a loan secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA where no flood insurance is available, if doing so would pose an unacceptable risk to the lender.

2. APPLICABILITY 2. Some borrowers have buildings with limited utility or value and, in many cases, the borrower would not replace them if lost in a flood. Must a lender require flood insurance for such buildings?

Lenders must require flood insurance on a building or mobile home when those structures are part of the property securing the loan and are located in an SFHA in a participating community.⁹ However, flood insurance is not required on a structure that is part of a residential property but is detached from the primary residential structure of such property and does not serve as a residence.¹⁰ If the limited utility or value structure does not qualify for the detached structure exemption, a lender may consider “carving out” the building from the security it takes on the loan to avoid having to require flood insurance on the structure. However, the lender should fully analyze the risks of this option. In particular, a lender should consider whether and how it would be able to market and sell the property securing its loan in the event of foreclosure. See also Q&A Exemptions 1.

3. APPLICABILITY 3. What are a lender’s requirements under the Regulation for a loan secured by multiple buildings when some of the buildings are located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available and other buildings are not? What if the buildings are located in different communities and some of the communities participate in the NFIP and others do not?

A lender must determine whether a building securing the loan is in an SFHA.¹¹ In cases in which the loan is secured by multiple buildings and some of the buildings are located in an¹² SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act, but other buildings are not located in an SFHA (or are located in an SFHA, but not in a participating community), a lender is required to obtain flood insurance only on the buildings securing the loan that are located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.⁸ For example, assume a loan is secured by five buildings as follows:

¹² 12 CFR 22.3(a) (OCC); 12 CFR 208.25(c)(1) (Board); 12 CFR 339.3(a) (FDIC); 12 CFR 614.4930(a) (FCA); and 12 CFR 760.3(a) (NCUA).

V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers

- Buildings 1 and 2 are located in an SFHA and the community participates in the NFIP;
- Building 3 is not located in an SFHA; and
- Buildings 4 and 5 are located in an SFHA, but the communities do not participate in the NFIP.

In this scenario, the lender is required to obtain insurance only on buildings 1 and 2. As a matter of safety and soundness, however, a lender may decide to require the purchase of flood insurance (from a private insurer) on buildings 4 and 5 because these buildings are located in an SFHA. In addition, depending on the risk factors of building 3, the lender may elect to require flood insurance as a matter of safety and soundness, even if the building is not located in an SFHA.

Further, if any portion of a building is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act, the flood insurance requirement applies even if the entire structure is not located in the SFHA. However, a building located on a portion of a plat or lot that is not in an SFHA is not subject to the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement even if a portion of the plat or lot not containing a building extends into an SFHA.¹³

4. APPLICABILITY 4. What is a lender's responsibility if a particular building or mobile home that secures a loan is not located within an SFHA, or is no longer located within an SFHA due to a map change?

Answer: Although a lender is not obligated to require mandatory flood insurance on a building or mobile home securing a loan that is not located within an SFHA or is no longer located within an SFHA, a lender may, at its discretion and taking into consideration State law, as appropriate, require flood insurance for property outside of SFHAs for safety and soundness purposes as a condition of a loan being made. Each lender should tailor its own flood insurance policies and procedures to suit its business needs and protect its ongoing interest in the collateral.

5. APPLICABILITY 5. Does a lender's purchase from another lender of a loan secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act trigger any requirements under the Regulation?

Answer: No. A lender's purchase of a loan, secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act, alone, is not an event that triggers the Regulation's requirements, such as making a new flood determination or requiring a borrower to purchase flood insurance. Requirements under the Regulation are triggered when a lender makes, increases, extends, or renews a designated loan.¹⁴ A lender's purchase of a loan does not fall within any of those categories.

However, if a lender becomes aware at any point during the life of a designated loan that flood insurance is required, the requirements of the Regulation apply, including force-placing insurance, if necessary.¹⁵ Depending on the circumstances, the lender may need to conduct due diligence for safety and soundness reasons, which could include determining whether flood insurance on purchased loans is required. Additionally, if the purchasing lender subsequently refinances, extends, increases, or renews a designated loan, it must comply with the Regulation.¹⁶

6. APPLICABILITY 6. If a loan is being restructured or modified, does that constitute a triggering event under the Regulation?

Answer: It depends. If a loan modification or restructuring involves recapitalizing into the loan's outstanding principal balance: (1) delinquent payments and other amounts due under the loan and the maturity date of the loan otherwise stays the same, or (2) amounts that were otherwise originally contemplated to be part of the loan pursuant to the contract with the borrower and the maturity date of the loan otherwise stays the same, the Regulation would not apply because the modification or restructuring would not increase, extend, or renew the terms of the loan.

In contrast, if the loan modification or restructuring changes terms of the loan such as by increasing the outstanding principal balance beyond what was contemplated as part of the loan under the contract with the borrower, or by extending the maturity date of the loan, the Regulation would apply because the lender increased or extended the terms of the loan beyond what was originally contemplated to be part of the loan.¹⁷

7. APPLICABILITY 7. Are table funded loans treated as new loan originations?

Answer: Yes. Table funding, as defined in the Regulation, means a settlement at which a loan is funded by a contemporaneous advance of loan funds and an assignment of the loan to the person advancing the funds.¹⁸ A loan made through a table funding process is treated as though the party advancing the funds has originated the loan.¹⁹ The funding party is required to comply with the Regulation. The table funding lender can meet the administrative requirements of the Regulation by requiring the party processing and underwriting the application to perform those functions on its behalf.

8. APPLICABILITY 8. Is a lender required by the Act or the Regulation to perform a review of its, or of its servicer's, existing loan portfolio for compliance with the flood insurance requirements under the Act and Regulation?

Answer: No. Apart from the requirements mandated when a loan is made, increased, extended, or renewed,²⁰ a lender need only review and take action on any part of its existing portfolio for safety and soundness purposes, or if it knows or has reason to know of the need for NFIP coverage.²¹ Regardless of the lack of such requirement in the Act and Regulation, however, sound risk management practices may lead a lender to conduct scheduled periodic reviews that track the need for flood insurance on a loan portfolio.

9. APPLICABILITY 9. Do the mandatory purchase requirements under the Act and Regulation apply when a lender participates in a loan syndication or participation?

Answer: The acquisition by a lender of an interest in a loan either by participation or syndication after that loan has been made does not trigger the requirements of the Act or the Regulation, such as making a new flood determination or requiring a borrower to purchase flood insurance. Nonetheless, as with purchased loans, depending upon the circumstances, the lender may undertake due diligence for safety and soundness purposes to protect itself against the risk of flood or other types of loss.

Lenders who pool or contribute funds that will be simultaneously advanced to a borrower or borrowers as a loan secured by improved real estate would be making a loan that triggers the requirements of the Act and Regulation.²² Federal flood insurance requirements also would apply when a group of lenders refinances, extends, renews or increases a loan.²³ Although the agreement among the lenders may assign compliance duties to a lead lender or agent, and include clauses in which the lead lender or agent indemnifies participating lenders against flood losses, each participating lender remains individually responsible for compliance with the Act and Regulation. Therefore, the Agencies will examine whether the regulated institution/participating lender has performed upfront due diligence to determine whether the lead lender or agent has undertaken the necessary activities to ensure that the borrower obtains appropriate flood insurance and that the lead lender or agent has adequate controls to monitor the loan(s) on an ongoing basis for compliance with the flood insurance requirements. Further, the Agencies expect the participating lender to have adequate controls to monitor the activities of the lead lender or agent for compliance with flood insurance requirements over the term of the loan. This due diligence and monitoring is especially important when the lead lender itself is not subject to Federal flood insurance requirements.

10. APPLICABILITY 10. Is a lender expected to consider any triggering event or any cashless roll of which it becomes aware in any tranche of a multi-tranche credit facility, regardless of whether the lender participates in the affected tranche?

Answer: No. Consistent with Q&A Applicability 9, the Agencies expect that a lender participating in a multi-tranche credit facility will perform upfront due diligence to determine whether the lead lender has adequate controls to monitor the loan on an ongoing basis for compliance with the flood insurance requirements. This due diligence is especially important when the lead lender itself is not subject to Federal flood insurance requirements. Even though each lender participating in a tranche in a multi-tranche credit facility remains individually responsible for compliance with the flood insurance requirements relating to structures securing the tranche in which it participates, this obligation can be achieved through the upfront due diligence process when determining the lead lender/administrative agent's ongoing monitoring for compliance with flood insurance requirements. A multi-tranche credit facility is analogous in many respects to a loan syndication or participation. Q&A Applicability 9 addresses applicability of the mandatory purchase requirements when a lender participates in a loan syndication or participation. Similar to a loan syndication or participation, a multi-tranche credit facility involves one credit agreement that describes and governs all the tranches. In addition, similar to a loan syndication or participation, a multi-tranche credit facility typically has one lead lender that acts as the administrative agent for the credit facility and its tranches. Thus, the Agencies do not expect a lender participating in one tranche in a multi-tranche credit facility to be responsible for taking direct steps to comply with flood insurance requirements in connection with a triggering event (i.e., making, increasing, extending or renewing) or cashless roll that occurs in a tranche in which the lender does not participate.

A multi-tranche commercial credit facility is a loan arrangement containing more than one type of loan or tranche. Each loan within the overall credit facility is made to the same borrower or group of related borrowers, but the loans may have different lenders and different terms and conditions. For example, a credit facility might have one tranche that is a revolving line of credit with a one-year maturity date and one or more additional tranches that are fixed rate loans with different interest rates and different maturity dates. Various lenders may participate in each tranche. Generally, the tranches share the same collateral and there is one credit agreement that describes and governs all the tranches.

²² 12 CFR 22.3(a) (OCC); 12 CFR 208.25(c)(1) (Board); 12 CFR 339.3(a) (FDIC); 12 CFR 614.4930(a) (FCA); and 12 CFR 760.3(a) (NCUA).

V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers

Under most multi-tranche credit facility agreements, a triggering event can occur within a particular tranche without any requirement to notify and obtain the consent of the lenders not participating in that tranche. Lenders may also participate in a cashless roll, which is an exchange of an existing loan for a new or amended loan without any transfer of cash. A cashless roll may be used to replace or supplement existing tranches, but not to increase the total amount of committed debt; therefore, this is not considered a triggering event.

11. APPLICABILITY 11. Does an automatic extension of a credit facility, that was agreed upon by the borrower and the lender at loan origination and memorialized in the loan agreement, constitute a triggering event (i.e., making, increasing, extending or renewing) that would trigger the Federal flood insurance requirements?

Answer: No. An automatic extension of a credit facility that was agreed upon by the lender and the borrower at loan origination and memorialized in the loan agreement does not constitute a triggering event (i.e., making, increasing, extending or renewing) that would trigger the Federal flood insurance requirements, because the automatic extension was agreed to in the original loan contract.

12. APPLICABILITY 12. What is the applicability of the mandatory purchase requirement during a period of time when coverage under the NFIP is not available?

Answer: During a period when coverage under the NFIP is not available, such as due to a lapse in authorization or in appropriations, lenders may continue to make loans subject to the Regulation without requiring flood insurance coverage. However, lenders must continue to make flood determinations,²⁴ provide timely, complete, and accurate notices to borrowers,²⁵ and comply with other applicable parts of the Regulation.

In addition, lenders should evaluate safety and soundness and legal risks and prudently manage those risks during a period when coverage under the NFIP is not available. Lenders should take appropriate measures or consider possible options in consultation with the borrower to mitigate loss exposures in the event of a flood during such periods. For example,

- Lenders may determine the risk of loss is sufficient to justify a postponement in closing the loan until the NFIP coverage is available again.
- Lenders may require the borrower to obtain private flood insurance if available, as a condition of closing the loan. However, after considering the cost of the private flood policy, a lender or the borrower may decide to postpone closing rather than incur a long-term obligation to address a possible short-term lapse.

- Lenders may make the loan without requiring the borrower to apply for flood insurance and pay the premium while NFIP coverage is unavailable. However, this option poses a number of risks that should be carefully evaluated. Moreover, once NFIP coverage becomes available again, the Agencies expect that flood insurance will be obtained for these loans, including, if necessary, by force placement.²⁶ Before making such loans, lenders should make borrowers aware of the flood insurance requirements and that force-placed insurance is typically more costly than borrower-obtained insurance. Lenders also should have a process to identify these loans to ensure that insurance is promptly purchased when NFIP coverage becomes available subsequent to their closing.
13. APPLICABILITY 13. What is a “triggering event” under the Regulation? If there is a triggering event, what is required under the Regulation?

Answer: Under the Regulation, a triggering event occurs when a designated loan is made, increased, extended, or renewed (also known as a “MIER” or “MIRE” event).²⁷ If a triggering event occurs with respect to a designated loan, the lender must comply with the Regulation as applicable, including the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement, the requirement to provide the Notice of Special Flood Hazards to the borrower, the requirement to notify the Administrator of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) or the Administrator’s designee (the insurance provider) in writing of the identity of the servicer of the loan, and the requirement to escrow for a loan secured by residential property, unless either the lender or the loan qualifies for an exception.²⁸

Examples of events that are not considered triggering events for purposes of the Regulation include: the purchase of a loan from another lender (see Q&A Applicability 5); a loan restructuring or modification that does not increase the amount of the loan nor extend or renew the terms of the loan (see Q&A Applicability 6); the assumption of the loan by another borrower; the remapping of a building securing the loan into an SFHA; the acquisition by a lender of an interest in a loan either by participation or syndication (see Q&A Applicability 9); a cashless roll (see Q&A Applicability 10); certain automatic extensions of credit (see Q&A Applicability 11); and certain treatments of force placement premiums and fees (see Q&A Force Placement 10).

Answer: It depends. A lender may not rely on an insurance policy providing portfolio-wide coverage to meet the flood insurance purchase or force placement requirements if the policy only provides coverage to the lender (“single interest”). When a flood insurance policy has expired and the borrower has failed to renew coverage, insurance policies providing portfolio-wide coverage may be useful protection for the lender for a gap in coverage in the period of time before a force-placed policy takes effect. However, even if a lender has portfolio-wide coverage to address gaps, the lender must still ensure the flood insurance purchase requirement is satisfied at the time a loan is made, increased, renewed or extended, and the lender must still force place coverage on the borrower’s behalf in a timely manner, as required,²⁹ and may not rely on an insurance policy that provides portfolio-wide coverage as a substitute for a force-placed policy.

In contrast, lenders may purchase a master flood insurance policy that provides coverage for its entire portfolio and covers both the lender and the borrower (“dual interest”). Such policies provide coverage for the entire portfolio as well as individual coverage, and include the issuance of an individual property policy or certificate after the required notice period.

15. APPLICABILITY 15. When does mandatory flood insurance on a designated loan need to be in place during the closing process?

Answer: The Regulation states that a lender cannot “make” a loan secured by a property in an SFHA without adequate flood insurance coverage being in place.³⁰ A lender should use the loan “closing date” to determine the date by which flood insurance must be in place for a designated loan. FEMA deems the “closing date” as the day the ownership of the property transfers to the new owner based on State law.

“Wet funding” and “dry funding,” which varies by State, refer to when a mortgage is considered officially closed. In a “wet” settlement State, the signing of closing documents, funding, and transfer of title occur all on the same day. By contrast, in a “dry” settlement State, documents are signed on one date, but loan funding and/or transfer of title/recording occur on subsequent date(s). Therefore, in “dry” settlement States, the “closing date” is the date of property transfer, regardless of loan signing or funding date.

For transactions where there is no transfer of property ownership, such as a refinance, and the borrower is purchasing a new flood insurance policy or is required to increase flood insurance coverage, the lender should use the loan’s consummation date as the effective date for the flood insurance policy, as noted above.

It is also important to note that the application and premium payment for NFIP flood insurance must be provided at or prior to the “closing date” since this impacts the FEMA flood insurance effective date and any resulting 30-day waiting period for new policies not made in connection with a triggering event. This application requirement applies for properties located in both dry and wet settlement States. See NFIP Flood Insurance Manual.

Exemptions from the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirements (EXEMPTIONS)

16. EXEMPTIONS 1. What are the exemptions from the mandatory purchase requirement?

Answer: There are only three exemptions from the mandatory requirement to purchase flood insurance on a designated loan. The first applies to State-owned property covered under a policy of self-insurance satisfactory to the Administrator of FEMA.³¹ The second applies if both the original principal balance of the loan is $5,000 or less, and the original repayment term is one year or less.³² The third applies to any structure that is a part of any residential property but is detached from the primary residential structure of such property and does not serve as a residence. For purposes of the detached structure exemption, a “structure that is a part of residential property” is a structure used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, and not used primarily for agricultural, commercial, industrial, or other business purposes. In addition, a structure is “detached” from the primary residential structure if it is not joined by any structural connection to that structure. Furthermore, whether a structure “does not serve as a residence” is based up on the good faith determination of the lender that the structure is not intended for use or actually used as a residence, which generally includes sleeping, bathroom, or kitchen facilities.³³ See also Q&A Exemptions 2. If one of these exemptions applies, a borrower may still elect to purchase flood insurance. Also, a lender may require flood insurance as a condition of making the loan, as a matter of safety and soundness.

17. *EXEMPTIONS 2. Does a lender have to take a security interest in the primary residential structure for detached structures to be eligible for the detached structure exemption? V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers used for farm production), and a detached garage where the homeowner keeps his car, are taken as collateral. May the lender apply the detached structure exemption to the outbuildings?

Answer: The lender does not have to take a security interest in the primary residential structure for detached structures to be eligible for the exemption, but the lender needs to evaluate the uses of detached structures to determine if they are eligible.³⁴ The term “a structure that is part of a residential property” in the detached structure exemption applies only to structures for which there is a residential use and not to structures for which there is a commercial, agricultural, or other business use.³⁵ In this example, only the garage is serving a residential use, so it could qualify for the exemption. The barn, equipment storage shed, and silo, which are used for farm production, would not qualify for the exemption.

18. EXEMPTIONS 3. Is a flood hazard determination required even where the secured property may contain detached structures for which coverage is not required under the Regulation?

Answer: Yes, as required under the Regulation, a flood hazard determination is needed to determine whether a building or mobile home securing a loan is or will be located in an SFHA where flood insurance is available under the Act.

In order to determine whether the exemption for non-residential detached structures that are part of a residential property may apply, a flood hazard determination must be conducted first, without regard to whether there may be any detached structures that could be exempt.³⁶

19. EXEMPTIONS 4. If a borrower currently has a flood insurance policy on a detached structure that is part of residential property and the detached structure does not serve as a residence, may the lender or its servicer cancel its requirement to carry flood insurance on that structure?

Answer: Yes. If a borrower has a flood insurance policy on a detached structure that is part of a residential property and does not serve as a residence, the lender is no longer mandated by the Act to require flood insurance on that structure.³⁷ The lender may allow the borrower to cancel the policy. If warranted as a matter of safety and soundness, the lender may continue to require flood insurance coverage on the detached structure.

20. EXEMPTIONS 5. In the event that a triggering event has occurred, is the lender required to review the intended use of each detached structure?

Answer: Yes, a lender must examine the status of a detached structure up on a qualifying triggering event to determine whether the detached structure exemption still applies.³⁸ See Applicability 13. There is no duty to monitor the status of a detached structure following the lender’s initial determination unless a triggering event occurs. However, regardless of the absence of a duty to monitor the status of a detached structure in the Regulation, sound risk management practices may lead a lender to conduct scheduled periodic reviews that track the need for flood insurance on a loan portfolio.

21. EXEMPTIONS 6. May a lender review current loans in its portfolio as the flood insurance policies renew and determine that it will no longer require flood insurance on a detached structure in an SFHA if the structure does not contribute to the value of the property securing the loan?

Answer: A lender or servicer could initiate such a review; however, the Regulation does not permit the exemption of structures from the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement based solely on whether the detached structure contributes value to the overall residential property securing the loan.³⁹ In the case of any residential property, flood insurance is not required on any structure that is part of such property as long as it is detached from the primary residential structure and does not serve as a residence.⁴⁰ In addition, there are other exemptions that could apply: the exemption for State-owned property covered under a policy of self-insurance satisfactory to the Administrator of FEMA or the exemption for property securing any loan with an original principal balance of $5,000 or less and a repayment term of one year or less.⁴¹

22. EXEMPTIONS 7. If a loan is secured by a residential property and the primary residential structure is joined to another building by a stairway or covered walkway, for purposes of Federal flood insurance requirements, would the other building qualify as a detached structure?

Answer: For purposes of the detached structure exemption, a structure is “detached” from the primary residential structure if it is not joined by any structural connection to that structure.⁴² That is, a structure is “detached” if it stands alone. This definition is consistent with the coverage provision of the NFIP’s Standard Flood

23. MANDATORY 1. May a lender decide to only accept private flood insurance policies under the mandatory acceptance provision of the Regulation?

Answer: Yes. A lender is only required to accept flood insurance policies issued by a private insurer that meet the definition of “private flood insurance” under the Regulation, as long as the policy meets the amount of insurance required under the Regulation. A lender is not required to accept flood insurance policies that only meet the criteria set forth in the discretionary acceptance or mutual aid provision of the Regulation.

24. MANDATORY 2. If a lender has a policy not to originate a mortgage in non-participating communities or coastal barrier regions where the NFIP is not available, do the private flood insurance requirements under the Regulation require a lender to change its policy?

Answer: The Regulation does not require that a lender originate a loan that does not meet the lender’s underwriting criteria. The flood insurance purchase requirement only applies to loans secured by structures located or to be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.⁴³ The flood insurance purchase requirement does not apply within non-participating communities, where NFIP insurance is not available under the Act. See Q&A Applicability 1. Therefore, the lender does not need to change its policy of not originating mortgages in areas where NFIP insurance is unavailable solely because of the private flood insurance requirements under the Regulation.

25. MANDATORY 3. Did the Agencies intend the compliance aid statement to act as a conformity clause that would make a private policy conform to the definition of “private flood insurance”?

Answer: No. The Agencies did not intend the compliance aid statement to act as a conformity clause. Rather, the compliance aid statement is intended to facilitate the ability of lenders, as well as consumers, to recognize policies that meet the definition of “private flood insurance” and promote the consistent acceptance of policies that meet this definition. The compliance aid statement is intended to leverage the expertise of insurers to assist lenders in satisfying the “private flood insurance” definition of the Regulation.

26. MANDATORY 4. Is a lender required to accept a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer that includes the compliance aid statement? Conversely, may a lender reject a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer solely because it does not contain the compliance aid statement?

Answer: If a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer includes the compliance aid statement, the lender may choose to rely upon the statement and would not need to review the policy further to determine if the policy meets the definition of “private flood insurance.”

However, the lender is not required to accept this policy based upon inclusion of the compliance aid statement alone and may choose to make its own determination about whether the policy meets the definition of “private flood insurance” or whether the policy is acceptable under the discretionary acceptance or mutual aid criteria.⁴⁴

If a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer does not include the compliance aid statement, the lender may not reject the policy solely because it does not include this statement. The lender is not relieved from the requirement to accept a policy that meets the definition of “private flood insurance,” as long as the policy meets the amount of insurance required under the Regulation.⁴⁵ Further, the lender may determine the policy is acceptable under the discretionary acceptance or mutual aid criteria.

27. MANDATORY 5. If a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer includes the compliance aid statement, does a lender need to conduct an additional review of the policy for compliance with the mandatory acceptance provision of the Regulation?

Answer: No, under the mandatory acceptance provision of the Regulation, if a policy or an endorsement to the policy contains the compliance aid statement, further review is not necessary in order for the lender to determine that a policy meets the definition of “private flood insurance.”⁴⁶ It is important to note that, in order for the lender to rely on the compliance aid statement without further review of the policy, the language of the compliance aid statement must be stated in the policy, or as an endorsement to the policy, as set forth in the Regulation.⁴⁷ If the language is different from the compliance aid statement set forth in the Regulation, the lender cannot rely on the protections of the compliance aid statement in the Regulation and should review the policy to determine if it meets the definition of “private flood insurance.” However, a policy containing the compliance aid statement need not be rejected if there are stylistic differences, such as formatting, font, and punctuation that do not change the substantive meaning of the clause, from the compliance aid statement included in the Regulation. See also Q&A Mandatory 6.

28. MANDATORY 6. Under the Regulation, what additional reviews does a lender need to conduct if the flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer includes the compliance aid statement?

Answer: Although a lender may rely on the compliance aid statement to determine that a flood insurance policy meets the definition of “private flood insurance” in the Regulation, the lender must also ensure that the amount of insurance is at least equal to the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the designated loan, or the maximum limit of coverage available for the particular type of property under the Act.⁴⁸ See also Q&A Mandatory 5.

29. MANDATORY 7. If a flood insurance policy issued by a private issuer does not include a compliance aid statement, can a lender use the criteria under the discretionary acceptance provision to decide whether to accept the policy without first checking to see if the policy meets the criteria under the mandatory acceptance provision?

Answer: Yes, the lender may first review the policy to determine whether it meets the criteria under the discretionary acceptance provision.⁴⁹ However, if the policy does not meet the discretionary acceptance criteria, the lender will still need to determine whether it must accept the policy under the mandatory acceptance criteria.⁵⁰

Note that if the lender accepts a policy under the discretionary acceptance provision, the Regulation requires the lender to document that the policy provides sufficient protection of the loan.⁵¹ See also Q&A Discretionary 2.

30. MANDATORY 8. If a lender only receives a declarations page without receiving a copy of the policy, and the declarations page includes the compliance aid statement, may the lender accept the policy?

Answer: If the compliance aid statement is included on the declarations page, a lender may determine the policy meets the definition of “private flood insurance” without further review. However, a lender also must ensure that the policy meets the amount of insurance required under the Regulation. See Q&A Mandatory 6.

statement, but also includes a disclaimer explaining that the “insurer is not licensed in the State or jurisdiction in which the property is located,” which suggests that the policy is issued by a surplus lines insurer?

Answer: Even if the policy includes a statement indicating that the insurer is not licensed in the State or jurisdiction in which the property is located, suggesting that the policy is issued by a surplus lines insurer, but contains a compliance aid statement, lenders may accept the policy as long as the policy complies with the Regulation and applicable State laws. See Q&A Private Flood Compliance 10.

Private flood insurance – Discretionary acceptance (DISCRETIONARY)

32. DISCRETIONARY 1. Are lenders required to accept flood insurance policies that meet the discretionary acceptance criteria?

Answer: No, the discretionary acceptance criteria in the Regulation sets forth the minimum acceptable criteria that a flood insurance policy must have for the lender to accept the policy under the discretionary acceptance provision. It is at the lender’s discretion to accept a policy that meets the discretionary acceptance criteria so long as the policy does not meet the mandatory acceptance criteria.

33. DISCRETIONARY 2. If the lender determines that a flood insurance policy meets the discretionary acceptance criteria and accepts that policy, what documentation will demonstrate that the policy provides sufficient protection of the loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles?

Answer: The Regulation requires the lender to document its conclusion in writing that the policy provides sufficient protection of the loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles. See also Q&A Discretionary 4. This review may be performed and recorded electronically. While the Regulation does not require any specific documentation to demonstrate that the policy provides sufficient protection of the loan, lenders may include any information that reasonably supports the lender’s conclusion following review of the policy.

34. DISCRETIONARY 3. How can a lender evaluate the sufficiency of an insurer’s solvency, strength, and ability to satisfy claims when determining whether a flood insurance policy provides sufficient protection of the loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles?

the State in which the property securing the loan is located, among other options. A lender can rely on the licensing or other processes used by the State insurance regulator for such an evaluation. See Q&A Discretionary 4.

35. DISCRETIONARY 4. What are some factors to consider when determining whether a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer under the discretionary acceptance provision or a mutual aid plan provides sufficient protection of a loan secured by improved real property located in an SFHA, consistent with general safety and soundness principles?

Answer: Some factors, among others, that a lender could consider in determining whether a policy provides sufficient protection of a loan include whether: (1) a policy's deductible is reasonable based on the borrower's financial condition; (2) the insurer provides adequate notice of cancellation to the mortgagor and mortgagee to allow for timely force placement of flood insurance, if necessary; (3) the terms and conditions of the policy, with respect to payment per occurrence or per loss and aggregate limits, are adequate to protect the regulated lending institution's interest in the collateral; (4) the flood insurance policy complies with applicable State insurance laws; and (5) the private insurance company has the financial solvency, strength, and ability to satisfy claims.

Private flood insurance – General compliance (PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE)

36. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 1. What is the maximum deductible a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer can have for residential or commercial properties located in an SFHA?

Answer: The maximum deductible for a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer varies depending on whether the lender accepts the policy under the mandatory acceptance or the discretionary acceptance provision. For purposes of compliance with the mandatory acceptance provision, the Regulation provides that a policy must provide coverage at least as broad as the coverage provided under an SFIP for the same type of property, including a deductible that is no higher than the specified maximum under an SFIP for any total coverage amount up to the maximum available under the NFIP at the time the policy is provided to the lender.⁵² For a private policy with a coverage amount exceeding that available under the NFIP, the deductible may exceed the specific maximum deductible under an SFIP. However, for safety and soundness purposes, the lender should consider whether the deductible is reasonable based on the borrower's financial condition, among other factors. See Q&A Amount 9.

- For example, if a private policy for a commercial building provided $1,000,000 of flood insurance coverage, which is in excess of the NFIP maximum coverage of $500,000 for a commercial building, then it would be acceptable for a million-dollar policy to have a deductible higher than the maximum deductible for a policy available under the NFIP. The lender should consider whether the deductible is reasonable based on the borrower's financial condition.
- Similarly, if a private policy for a residential building provided $1,000,000 of flood insurance coverage, which is in excess of the NFIP maximum coverage of $250,000 for a residential building, then it would be acceptable for a million-dollar policy to have a deductible higher than the maximum deductible for a policy available under the NFIP. The lender should consider whether the deductible is reasonable based on the borrower's financial condition.

For purposes of compliance with the discretionary acceptance provision, the Regulation requires that the policy provide sufficient protection of the loan, consistent with safety and soundness principles.⁵³ Among the factors a lender could consider in determining whether a policy provides sufficient protection of a loan is whether the policy's deductible is reasonable based on the borrower's financial condition. Unlike the limitation on deductibles for policies accepted under the mandatory acceptance provision for any total coverage amount up to the maximum available under the NFIP, a lender can accept a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer under the discretionary acceptance provision with a deductible higher than that for an SFIP for a similar type of property, provided the lender has determined the policy provides sufficient protection of the loan, consistent with safety and soundness principles.

Whether the lender is evaluating the policy under the mandatory acceptance provision or the discretionary acceptance provision, a lender may not allow the borrower to use a deductible amount equal to the insurable value of the property to avoid the mandatory purchase requirement for flood insurance.⁵⁴ However, a lender may accept a private flood insurance policy covering multiple buildings regardless of whether any single building covered by the policy has an insurable value lower than the amount of the per occurrence deductible. See Q&A Amount 9, Q&A Amount 10, and Q&A Private Flood Compliance 2.

V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers

issued by a private insurer be lower than the maximum deductible for an SFIP?

Answer: Yes. If the lender is accepting the private flood insurance policy under the mandatory acceptance provision, the Regulation requires that the private flood insurance policy be at least as broad as an SFIP, which includes a requirement that the private flood insurance policy contain a deductible no higher than the specified maximum deductible for an SFIP.⁵⁵ The lender may require a borrower's private flood insurance policy deductible to be lower than the maximum deductible for an SFIP in connection with a policy that the lender accepts under the mandatory acceptance provision, consistent with general safety and soundness principles and based on a borrower's financial condition, among other factors.

If the lender is accepting a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer under the discretionary acceptance provision, the lender need only consider whether the policy, including the stated deductible, provides sufficient protection of the loan, consistent with general safety and soundness principles.⁵⁶ See also Q&A Private Flood Compliance 1.

38. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 3. If a lender utilizes a third party to review flood insurance policies, would it be permissible for a lender to charge the borrower a fee for this review?

Answer: The Act and the Regulation do not prohibit lenders from charging fees to borrowers for contracting with third parties to review flood insurance policies issued by private insurers. As explained in Q&A Fees 1 and Q&A Fees 2, lenders may charge limited, reasonable fees for flood determinations and life-of-loan monitoring. Similarly, the Act and the Regulation do not prohibit lenders from charging a fee to a borrower when a third party reviews a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer. However, lenders should be aware of any other applicable requirements regarding fees and disclosures of fees.

39. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 4. If the policy is not available prior to closing, what can the lender rely on to make sure the policy meets the private flood insurance requirements of the Regulation?

Answer: The Act and Regulation do not specify the acceptable types of documentation for a lender to rely on when reviewing a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer. Lenders should determine whether they have sufficient evidence to show the policy meets the private flood insurance requirements under the Regulation.

Lenders can take steps to help mitigate against closing delays such as designating employees responsible for reviewing flood policies, training employees, and requesting additional information from insurers early in the process. If the lender does not have enough information to determine if the policy meets the private flood insurance requirements under the Regulation, then the lender should timely request additional information as necessary to complete its review. See also Q&A Private Flood Compliance 5.

40. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 5. Under existing force placement requirements, a declarations page is sufficient to evidence a borrower's purchase of a flood insurance policy. Does the declarations page have sufficient information for a lender to determine whether the policy complies with the private flood insurance requirements of the Regulation?

Answer: It depends. If the declarations page provides enough information for the lender to determine whether the policy meets the mandatory acceptance provision or discretionary acceptance provision of the Regulation or if the declarations pages contains the compliance aid statement, then the lender may rely on the declarations pages. However, if the declarations page does not provide enough information for the lender to determine whether the policy satisfies the mandatory acceptance provision or discretionary acceptance provision of the Regulation, the lender should request additional information about the policy to aid in making its determination.

41. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 6. May a lender accept a multiple-peril policy issued by a private insurer to satisfy the mandatory purchase of flood insurance requirement?

Answer: Yes. A lender can accept a multiple-peril policy that covers the hazard of flood, either in the policy or as an endorsement, under the private flood insurance provisions of the Regulation.

42. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 7. How do the private flood insurance requirements of the Regulation, especially the compliance aid statement, work in conjunction with the requirements from secondary market investors (for example, the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac))?

Answer: Lenders must comply with Federal flood insurance requirements. The requirements for the secondary market are separate from the Regulation. A lender should carefully review these separate requirements for secondary market investors regarding acceptable private flood insurance if the lender plans to sell loans to such investors and should direct questions regarding these requirements to the appropriate entities.

the Regulation, which requirements must a servicer follow in evaluating the acceptance of a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer?

Answer: For loans serviced on behalf of lenders supervised by the Agencies, the servicer must comply with the Regulation in determining whether a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer must be accepted under the mandatory acceptance provision or may be accepted under the discretionary acceptance provision or mutual aid provision. For loans serviced on behalf of other entities not supervised by the Agencies, the servicer should comply with the terms of its contract with that entity. For example, when servicing loans on behalf of Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac, where there are insurer rating requirements specified within those entities' servicing guidance or other relevant authorities that are not required in the Regulation, the servicer should adhere to those servicing requirements.

44. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 9. How can a lender determine: (i) whether an insurer is licensed or admitted in a particular State, (ii) or whether a surplus lines or nonadmitted alien insurer is permitted to issue an insurance policy in a particular State?

Answer: A lender may refer to the website of the State insurance regulator where the collateral property is located to determine whether a particular insurer is licensed, admitted, or otherwise permitted to issue an insurance policy in a particular State. If the lender cannot determine this information from the website, the lender could contact the State insurance regulator directly. Further, information with respect to surplus lines insurer eligibility also may be available in the Consumer Insurance Search (CIS) tool available on the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) website. Lenders may consult commercial service providers regarding the eligibility of surplus lines insurers in particular States provided the lenders have a reasonable basis to believe that these service providers have reliable information. With regard to nonadmitted alien insurers in particular, lenders could review the NAIC's Quarterly Listing of Alien Insurers.⁵⁷

45. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 10. May lenders accept policies issued by private insurers that are surplus lines insurers for noncommercial properties?

Answer: Yes, if the surplus lines insurer is eligible or not disapproved to place insurance in the State or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located, lenders may accept policies issued by surplus lines insurers as coverage for noncommercial (i.e., residential) properties.

Consistent with the Act and the Regulation, the Agencies confirm that policies issued by surplus lines insurers for noncommercial properties are covered in the definition of "private flood insurance" and in the discretionary acceptance provision. In the definition of "private flood insurance," surplus lines policies for noncommercial properties are covered as policies that are issued by insurance companies that are "otherwise approved to engage in the business of insurance by the insurance regulator of the State or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located."⁵⁸ Similarly, within the discretionary acceptance provision, noncommercial residential policies issued by surplus lines carriers are covered as policies that are issued by private insurance companies that are "otherwise approved to engage in the business of insurance by the insurance regulator of the State or jurisdiction in which the property to be insured is located."⁵⁹

For purposes of the Regulation, the meaning of "otherwise approved" is based on whether applicable State law provides that the surplus lines insurer is eligible or not disapproved to place insurance in that State. Even if the surplus lines insurer is not considered to be engaged in the business of insurance under applicable State law, the surplus lines insurer would still be "otherwise approved" only for purposes of this provision of the Regulation if the insurer is eligible or not disapproved to place insurance in the State.

46. PRIVATE FLOOD COMPLIANCE 11. When must a lender review a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer under the private flood insurance requirements of the Regulation?

Answer: Any time the borrower presents the lender with a new flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, regardless of whether a triggering event occurred, the lender must review the policy to determine whether it meets the private flood insurance requirements of the Regulation.⁶⁰ A lender may determine that the policy meets the mandatory acceptance criteria without further review if the policy or an endorsement to the policy includes the compliance aid statement.⁶¹ If there is no compliance aid statement, or the lender chooses not to rely on the compliance aid statement, the lender must conduct its own review to determine if the policy meets the mandatory acceptance criteria. See Q&A Mandatory 4. If the policy does not meet the mandatory acceptance criteria, the lender may still accept the policy if it meets the discretionary acceptance criteria, or, if applicable, the mutual aid plan criteria. See also Q&A Mandatory 7. discretionary acceptance, or mutual aid plan criteria, the lender may not accept the policy.⁶² If the lender has previously reviewed the flood insurance policy under the mandatory acceptance provision, the discretionary acceptance provision, or the mutual aid plan provision the lender may rely on its previous review, provided there are no changes to the terms of the policy that would affect the acceptance under the Regulation. The lender's previous written documentation will constitute the documentation required under the Regulation each time the policy comes up for renewal. The lender should have effective internal controls in place through appropriate policies, procedures, training, and monitoring to ensure compliance with the requirements of the Regulation.

47. SFHDF 1. Does the SFHDF replace the borrower notification form?

Answer: No. The SFHDF is used by the lender to determine whether the building or mobile home offered as collateral security for a loan is or will be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.⁶³ The notification form, on the other hand, is used to notify the borrower(s) that the building or mobile home is or will be located in an SFHA and to inform the borrower(s) about flood insurance requirements and the availability of Federal disaster relief assistance.⁶⁴

48. SFHDF 2. May a lender provide the SFHDF to the borrower?

Answer: Yes. Although not a statutory requirement, a lender may provide a copy of the flood determination to the borrower. In the event a lender provides the SFHDF to the borrower, the signature of the borrower is not required to acknowledge receipt of the form. The Agencies note that under the FEMA process for a Letter of Determination Review (LODR), a lender would need to make the determination available to the borrower.

49. SFHDF 3. May the SFHDF be used in electronic format?

Answer: Yes.⁶⁵ In the final rule adopting the SFHDF, FEMA stated: "If an electronic format is used, the format and exact layout of the Standard Flood Hazard Determination Form is not required, but the fields and elements listed on the form are required. Any electronic format used by lenders must contain all mandatory fields indicated on the form." It should be noted that the lender must be able to reproduce the form upon receiving a document request by its Federal supervisory agency.

50. SFHDF 4. May a lender rely on a previous determination for a refinancing or assumption of a loan or multiple loans to the same borrower secured by the same property?

Answer: It depends. The Act (42 U.S.C. 4104b(e)) permits a lender to rely on a previous flood determination using the SFHDF when it increases, extends, renews, or purchases a loan secured by a building or a mobile home. Under the Act, the "making" of a loan is not listed as a permissible event that permits a lender to rely on a previous determination. When the loan involves a refinancing or assumption by the same lender who obtained the original flood determination on the same property, the lender may rely on the previous determination only if the original determination was made not more than seven years before the date of the transaction, the basis for the determination was set forth on the SFHDF, and there were no map revisions or updates affecting the security property since the original determination was made. Further, if the same lender makes multiple loans to the same borrower secured by the same improved real estate, the lender may rely on its previous determination if the original determination was made not more than seven years before the date of the transaction, the basis for the determination was set forth on the SFHDF, and there were no map revisions or updates affecting the security property since the original determination was made. These loans are extended by the same lender, to the same borrower, and are secured by the same improved real estate, and, therefore, these types of transactions are the functional equivalent of an increase of a loan.

When the loan involves a refinancing or assumption made by a lender different from the one who obtained the original determination, this would constitute the making of a new loan, thereby requiring a new determination.

Flood insurance determination fees (FEES)

51. FEES 1. When can lenders or servicers charge the borrower a fee for making a determination?

Answer: There are four instances under the Act and Regulation when the borrower can be charged a fee for a flood determination:

- When the determination is made in connection with the making, increasing, extending, or renewing of a loan that is initiated by the borrower;
- When the determination reflects a revision or updating by FEMA of floodplain areas or flood-risk zones;
- When the determination reflects FEMA's publication of a notice or compendium that affects the area in which the security property is located, or FEMA requires a determination as to whether the building securing the loan is located in an SFHA; or

- When the determination results in force placement of insurance.⁶⁶

Loan or other contractual documents between the parties may also permit the imposition of fees.

52. FEES 2. May charges made for life-of-loan reviews by flood determination firms be passed along to the borrower?

Answer: Yes, with limitations noted below. In addition to the initial determination at the time a loan is made, increased, renewed, or extended, many flood determination firms provide a service to the lender to review and report changes in the flood status of a dwelling for the entire term of the loan (i.e., life-of-loan monitoring). The fee charged for the service at loan closing is a composite fee for conducting both the original and subsequent reviews. Charging a fee for the original determination is clearly authorized by the Act. The Agencies agree that a determination fee may include, among other things, reasonable fees for a lender, servicer, or third party to monitor the flood hazard status of property securing a loan in order to make determinations on an ongoing basis.

However, the life-of-loan fee is based on the authority to charge a determination fee and, therefore, the composite determination/life-of-loan monitoring fee may be charged only if the events specified in the answer to Q&A Fees 1 occur.⁶⁷ Further, a lender may not charge a composite determination and life-of-loan fee if the loan does not close, because such life-of-loan fee would be an unearned fee in violation of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act.⁶⁸

Flood zone discrepancies (ZONE)

53. ZONE 1. Does a lender need to reconcile a discrepancy between the flood zone designation on the flood determination form and the flood zone associated with a flood insurance policy?

Answer: No, a lender need not reconcile or otherwise be concerned with a flood zone discrepancy. For NFIP policies issued under FEMA's Risk Rating 2.0 - Equity in Action (Risk Rating 2.0),⁶⁹ premium rates are no longer determined by the flood zone in which the property is located. Moreover, the flood zone is no longer included on the declarations page for NFIP policies issued under Risk Rating 2.0.

Flood insurance policies issued by a private insurer may still include the flood zone on the declarations page. Further, NFIP policies that have not been issued or renewed under Risk Rating 2.0 will include the flood zone on the declarations page.⁷⁰ In these cases, lenders also need not reconcile any discrepancy.

The flood zone determination is still necessary to determine if a property is located in an SFHA. If the SFHDF indicates that the building securing the loan is in an SFHA, the lender must require the appropriate amount of insurance coverage in accordance with the Act and Regulation.⁷¹ For disputes regarding whether a property is located in an SFHA, see Q&A Zone 3.

54. ZONE 2. Is a lender in violation of the Regulation if there is a discrepancy between the flood zone on the SFHDF and the flood zone associated with a flood insurance policy?

Answer: No, a lender is not in violation of the Regulation if there is a discrepancy between the flood zone on the SFHDF and the flood zone associated with the policy. See Q&A Zone 1.

55. ZONE 3. What should a lender do when the lender's flood zone determination specifies that a building securing the loan is located in an SFHA requiring mandatory flood insurance coverage, but the borrower disputes that determination?

Answer: If a borrower disputes a lender's determination that the building securing the loan is located in an SFHA requiring mandatory flood insurance coverage, the parties involved in making the determination are encouraged to resolve the flood zone discrepancy before contacting FEMA for a final determination. If the flood zone discrepancy cannot be resolved, an appeal may be filed with FEMA. Depending on the nature of the dispute, FEMA has different options for review, including:

- Letters of Determination Review (LODR), and
- Letters of Map Change (LOMC), which include Letters of Map Amendment (LOMA), Letters of Map Revision (LOMR), and Letters of Map Revision Based on Fill (LOMR-F).

Lenders and borrowers should consult FEMA guidance on the appropriate process to follow, any applicable fees, and any deadlines by which the request to review must be made. However, as long as the lender's flood determination specifies that a building securing the loan is located in an SFHA and requires mandatory flood insurance coverage, sufficient coverage must be in place in accordance with the Act and the Regulation until

FEMA has determined that the building is not in an SFHA.⁷²

Notice of special flood hazards and availability of federal disaster relief (NOTICE)

56. NOTICE 1. Does the Notice of Special Flood Hazards have to be provided to each borrower for a real estate related loan?

Answer: No. The Notice of Special Flood Hazards must be provided to one borrower when the lender determines that the property securing the loan is or will be located in an SFHA.⁷³ In a transaction involving multiple borrowers, the lender need only provide the Notice of Special Flood Hazards to any one of the borrowers in the transaction. Lenders may provide multiple notices if they choose. The lender and borrower(s) typically designate the borrower to whom the Notice of Special Flood Hazards will be provided.

57. NOTICE 2. When should a lender provide the Notice of Special Flood Hazards to the borrower? How does this requirement apply in situations regarding mobile homes where the lender may not know where the home is to be located until just prior to, or sometimes after, the time of loan closing?

Answer: As required by the Regulation, a lender must provide the Notice of Special Flood Hazards to the borrower within a reasonable time before the completion of the transaction.⁷⁴ What constitutes “reasonable” notice will necessarily vary according to the circumstances of particular transactions. A lender should bear in mind, however, that a borrower should receive timely notice to ensure that (1) the borrower has the opportunity to become aware of the borrower’s responsibilities under the Act; and (2) where applicable, the borrower can purchase flood insurance before completion of the loan transaction. The Agencies generally regard 10 calendar days as a “reasonable” time interval.

If a lender determines that a mobile home securing a designated loan will be located in an SFHA just prior to closing, the lender may need to delay the closing until the Notice of Special Flood Hazards has been provided in accordance with the Regulation.

In the case of loan transactions secured by mobile homes not located on a permanent foundation, the Agencies note that such “home only” transactions are excluded from the definition of mobile home and the notice requirements would not apply to these transactions. However, the Agencies encourage a lender to advise the borrower that if the mobile home is later located on a permanent foundation in an SFHA, flood insurance will be required. If the lender, when notified of the location of the mobile home subsequent to the loan closing, determines that it has been placed on a permanent foundation and is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act, flood insurance coverage becomes mandatory and a force placement notice must be given to the borrower under those provisions.⁷⁵ If the borrower fails to purchase flood insurance coverage within 45 days after notification, the lender must force-place the insurance.⁷⁶

58. NOTICE 3. When is the lender required to provide notice to the servicer of a loan that flood insurance is required?

Answer: Because the servicer of a loan is often not identified prior to the closing of a loan, the Regulation requires that notice be provided no later than the time the lender transmits other loan data, such as information concerning hazard insurance and taxes, to the servicer.⁷⁷

59. NOTICE 4. What will constitute appropriate form of notice to the servicer?

Answer: Delivery to the servicer of a copy of the notice given to the borrower is appropriate notice. The Regulation also provides that the notice can be made either electronically or by a written copy.⁷⁸

In the case of a servicer affiliated with the lender, the Act requires the lender to notify the servicer of special flood hazards and the Regulation reflects this requirement. Neither the Act nor the Regulation contains an exception for affiliates.⁷⁹

60. NOTICE 5. How long must the lender maintain the record of receipt by the borrower of the Notice of Special Flood Hazards?

Answer: The record of receipt provided by the borrower must be maintained for the period of time that the lender owns the loan.⁸⁰ Examples of a record of receipt include: the borrower’s signed acknowledgment of receipt of the Notice of Special Flood Hazards; the borrower’s initials on a form that acknowledges receipt; the borrower’s electronic signature that acknowledges receipt, or a certified return receipt if the Notice of Special Flood Hazards was mailed to the borrower. the record in the form that best suits the lender’s business practices. Lenders may retain the record electronically, but they must be able to retrieve the record within a reasonable time pursuant to a document request from their Federal supervisory agency.

61. NOTICE 6. Can a lender rely on a previous Notice of Special Flood Hazards if it is less than seven years old, and it is the same property, same borrower, and same lender?

Answer: The Regulation does not waive the requirement to provide the Notice of Special Flood Hazards to the borrower. Although subsequent transactions by the same lender with respect to the same property are the functional equivalent of a renewal and do not require a new determination, the lender must still provide a new Notice of Special Flood Hazards to the borrower.⁸¹

62. NOTICE 7. Is use of the sample form of Notice of Special Flood Hazards mandatory?

Answer: Although lenders are required to provide a Notice of Special Flood Hazards to a borrower when they make, increase, extend, or renew a loan secured by an improved structure located in an SFHA,⁸² use of the sample form of Notice of Special Flood Hazards provided in Appendix A of the Regulation is not mandatory. It should be noted that the sample form includes other information in addition to what is required by the Act and the Regulation. Lenders may personalize, change the format of, and add information to the sample form of notice, if they choose. However, a lender-revised Notice of Special Flood Hazards must provide the borrower with at least the minimum information required by the Act and Regulation.⁸³ Therefore, lenders should consult the Act and Regulation to determine the information needed.

Determining the appropriate amount of flood insurance required (AMOUNT)

63. AMOUNT 1. The Regulation states that the amount of flood insurance required “must be at least equal to the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the designated loan or the maximum limit of coverage available for the particular type of property under the Act.” What is meant by the “maximum limit of coverage available for the particular type of property under the Act”?

Answer: The maximum limit of coverage available for the particular type of property under the Act depends on the value of the secured collateral. First, under the NFIP, there are maximum caps on the amount of insurance available for buildings located in a participating community under the Regular Program. For single-family and two-to-four family dwellings and individually owned condominium units insured under the Dwelling Form policy, the maximum limit is $250,000. For a residential condominium building insured under the Residential Condominium Building Association Policy (RCBAP) form, the maximum amount of insurance available is $250,000 multiplied by the number of units. For all other buildings insured under the General Property Form, the maximum limit of building coverage available is $500,000. This includes all non-residential buildings, mixed-use condominium buildings not eligible for coverage under the RCBAP, and other residential buildings of five or more families, such as cooperatives or apartment buildings in the non-condominium form of ownership. (In participating communities that are under the emergency program phase, the maximum limits of insurance are different.) The maximum limit for contents insured under the Dwelling Form and RCBAP is $100,000 ($100,000 total, not per unit) and $500,000 for contents insured under the General Property Form. See NFIP Flood Insurance Manual.

In addition to the maximum caps under the NFIP, the Regulation also provides that “flood insurance coverage under the Act is limited to the building or mobile home and any personal property that secures a loan and not the land itself,” which is commonly referred to as the “insurable value” of a structure.⁸⁴ The NFIP does not insure land; therefore, land values are not included in the calculation.⁸⁵

An NFIP policy will not cover an amount exceeding the “insurable value” of the structure, so the maximum amount of insurance coverage is the applicable limit available under the NFIP or the insurable value, whichever is less. In determining coverage amounts for flood insurance, lenders often follow the same practice used to establish other hazard insurance coverage amounts. However, unlike the insurable valuation used to underwrite most other hazard insurance policies, the insurable value of improved real estate for flood insurance purposes also includes the repair or replacement cost of the foundation and supporting structures. It is very important to calculate the correct insurable value of the property; otherwise, the lender might inadvertently require the borrower to purchase too much or too little flood insurance coverage. For example, if the lender fails to exclude the value of the land when determining the insurable value of the improved real estate, the borrower will be asked to purchase coverage that exceeds the amount the NFIP will pay in the event of a loss. (Please note, however, when taking a security interest in improved real estate where the value of the land, excluding the value of the improvements, is sufficient collateral for the debt, the lender must nonetheless require flood insurance to cover the value of the structure if it is located in a participating community's SFHA).⁸⁶

64. AMOUNT 2. What is the "insurable value" of a building and how is it used to determine the required amount of flood insurance?

Answer: The insurable value of the building may generally be the same as 100 percent Replacement Cost Value (RCV), which is the cost to replace the building with the same kind of material and construction without deduction for depreciation. In calculating the amount of insurance to require, the lender and borrower (either by themselves or in consultation with the flood insurance provider or other appropriate professional) may choose from a variety of approaches or methods to establish the insurable value. They may use an appraisal based on a cost-value (not market-value) approach, a construction-cost calculation, the insurable value used on a hazard insurance policy (recognizing that the insurable value for flood insurance purposes may differ from the coverage provided by the hazard insurance and that adjustments may be necessary), the replacement cost value listed on the flood insurance policy declarations page, or any other reasonable approach, so long as it can be supported.

65. AMOUNT 3. What are examples of residential buildings?

Answer: A residential building is a non-commercial building designed for habitation by one or more families or a mixed-use building that qualifies as a single-family, 2-4 family, or other residential building.

The NFIP provides the following definitions:

- A single family dwelling is either a residential single-family building in which the total floor area devoted to non-residential uses is less than 50 percent of the building's total floor area, or a single-family residential unit within a 2-4 family building, other-residential building, business, or non-residential building, in which commercial uses within the unit are limited to less than 50 percent of the unit's total floor area.
- A 2-4 family residential building is a residential building, containing 2-4 residential units and in which non-residential uses are limited to less than 25 percent of the building's total floor area. This category includes apartment buildings and condominium buildings. It excludes hotels and motels with normal room rentals for less than six months.
- An other residential building is a residential building containing five or more residential units or a mixed-use building in which the total floor area devoted to non-residential uses is less than 25 percent of the building's total floor area. This category includes condominium and apartment buildings as well as hotels, motels, tourist homes, and rooming houses where the normal occupancy of a guest is six months or more. Additional examples of other residential buildings include dormitories and assisted-living facilities.

For more complete information, refer to the NFIP Flood Insurance Manual.

66. AMOUNT 4. What are examples of non-residential buildings?

Answer: Pursuant to the NFIP Flood Insurance Manual, a non-residential building includes:

1. A building in which the named insured is a commercial enterprise primarily carried out to generate income and the coverage is for:
 - A building not designed for habitation or residential uses;
 - A mixed-use building in which the total floor area devoted to residential uses is 50 percent or less of the total floor area within the building if the residential building is a single-family property; or 75 percent or less of the total floor area within the building for all other residential properties; or
 - A building designed for use as office or retail space, wholesale space, hospitality space, or for similar uses.
 - The following buildings where the normal occupancy of a guest is less than six months: condominium buildings, apartment buildings, hotels and motels, tourist homes, or rooming houses.
2. Other non-residential buildings including, but not limited to the following: houses of worship, schools, agricultural structures, garages, pool houses, clubhouses, and recreational buildings.

For more complete information, refer to the NFIP Flood Insurance Manual.

67. AMOUNT 5. How much insurance is required on a building located in an SFHA in a participating community?

Answer: The amount of insurance required by the Act and Regulation is the lesser of:

- The outstanding principal balance of the loan(s); or
 - The maximum amount of insurance available under the NFIP, which is the lesser of:
 - The maximum limit available for the type of structure; or
 - The "insurable value" of the structure.⁸⁷
- Example: (Calculating insurance required on a non-residential building): Loan security includes one equipment shed

⁸⁶ 12 CFR 22.3(a) (OCC); 12 CFR 208.25(e)(1) (Board); 12 CFR 339.3(a) (FDIC); 12 CFR 614.4930(a) (FCA); and 12 CFR 760.3(a) (NCUA).

⁸⁷ 12 CFR 22.3(a) (OCC); 12 CFR 208.25(e)(1) (Board); 12 CFR 339.3(a) (FDIC); 12 CFR 614.4930(a) (FCA); and 12 CFR 760.3(a) (NCUA).

- located in an SFHA in a participating community under the Regular Program.
- Outstanding loan principal balance is $300,000.
- Maximum amount of insurance available under the NFIP:
 - Maximum limit available for type of structure is $500,000 per building (non-residential building).
 - Insurable value of the equipment shed is $30,000.

The minimum amount of insurance required by the Regulation for the equipment shed is $30,000.

68. AMOUNT 6. Is flood insurance required for each building when the real estate security contains more than one building located in an SFHA in a participating community? If so, how much coverage is required?

Answer: Yes. The lender must determine the amount of insurance required on each building and add these individual amounts together.⁸⁸ The total amount of required flood insurance is the lesser of:

- The outstanding principal balance of the loan(s); or
- The maximum amount of insurance available under the NFIP, which is the lesser of:
 - The maximum limit available for the type of structures; or
 - The “insurable value” of the structures.

The amount of total required flood insurance can be allocated among the secured buildings in varying amounts, but all buildings in an SFHA must be covered in accordance with the statutory requirement.⁸⁹

Example: Lender makes a loan in the principal amount of $150,000 secured by five non-residential buildings, only three of which are located in SFHAs within participating communities.

- Outstanding loan principal is $150,000.
- Maximum amount of insurance available under the NFIP.
 - Maximum limit available for the type of structure is $500,000 per building for non-residential buildings (or $1.5 million total); or
 - Insurable value ($100,000 for each non-residential building for which insurance is required, or $300,000 total).

Amount of insurance required for the three buildings is $150,000. This amount of required flood insurance could be allocated among the three buildings in varying amounts, so long as each is covered in accordance with the statutory requirement.

69. AMOUNT 7. If the insurable value of a building or mobile home securing a designated loan is less than the outstanding principal balance of the loan, must a lender require the borrower to obtain flood insurance up to the balance of the loan?

Answer: No. The Regulation provides that the amount of flood insurance must be at least equal to the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the designated loan or the maximum limit of coverage available for a particular type of property under the Act.⁹⁰ The Regulation also provides that flood insurance coverage under the Act is limited to the building or mobile home and any personal property that secures a loan and not the land itself.⁹¹ Since the NFIP policy does not cover land value, lenders determine the amount of insurance necessary based on the insurable value of the building.

70. AMOUNT 8. Can a lender require more flood insurance than the minimum required by the Regulation?

Answer: Yes. Lenders are permitted to require more than the minimum amount of flood insurance required by the Regulation, taking into consideration applicable State and Federal law and safe and sound banking practices, as appropriate. However, the borrower or lender may have to seek such coverage outside the NFIP. Although a lender has the responsibility to tailor its own flood insurance policies and procedures to suit its business needs and protect its ongoing interest in the collateral, it should consider the extent of recovery allowed under the NFIP or a private policy for the type of property being insured to assist the borrower in avoiding paying for coverage that exceeds the amount the insured would recover in the event of a loss.

71. AMOUNT 9. Can a lender allow the borrower to use the maximum deductible to reduce the cost of flood insurance?

Answer: Yes. However, it may not be a sound business practice for a lender, as a matter of policy, to always allow the borrower to use the maximum deductible. A lender should determine the reasonableness of the deductible on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the risk that such a deductible would pose to the borrower and lender. A lender may not allow the borrower to use a deductible amount equal to the insurable value of the property to avoid the mandatory purchase requirement for flood insurance.⁹²

72. AMOUNT 10. Can a lender accept a blanket flood insurance policy or blanket multi-peril policy covering multiple buildings that includes a per-occurrence deductible, regardless of whether any single building covered by the policy has an insurable value lower than the amount of the deductible?

V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers

Answer: Yes, a lender may accept a blanket flood insurance policy or blanket multi-peril policy covering multiple buildings that includes a per-occurrence deductible, regardless of whether any single building covered by the policy has an insurable value lower than the amount of the deductible. A blanket flood insurance policy or blanket multi-peril policy that includes a per-occurrence deductible provides coverage for each building covered by such a policy, regardless of whether any individual building covered under the policy has an insurable value that may be lower than the amount of the deductible. However, a lender may not allow the borrower to use a deductible amount equal to the aggregate insurable value of the property to avoid the mandatory purchase requirement. A lender should determine the reasonableness of the deductible on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the risk that such deductible would pose to the borrower and lender. See Q&A Amount 9.

Flood insurance requirements for construction loans (CONSTRUCTION)

73. CONSTRUCTION 1. Is a loan secured only by land, which is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act and that will be developed into buildable lot(s), a designated loan that requires flood insurance?

Answer: No. A designated loan is a loan secured by a building or mobile home that is located or to be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.⁹³ Any loan secured only by land that is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available is not a designated loan since it is not secured by a building or mobile home.

74. CONSTRUCTION 2. Is a loan secured or to be secured by a building in the course of construction that is located or to be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act a designated loan?

Answer: Yes. A lender must always make a flood determination prior to loan origination to determine whether a building to be constructed that is security for the loan is located or will be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.⁹⁴ If the building or mobile home is located or will be located in an SFHA, then the loan is a designated loan and the lender must provide the requisite notice to the borrower prior to loan origination.⁹⁵ The lender must then comply with the mandatory purchase requirement under the Act and Regulation.⁹⁶

75. CONSTRUCTION 3. Is a building in the course of construction that is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act eligible for coverage under an NFIP policy?

Answer: Yes. The NFIP will insure a building in the course of construction before it is walled and roofed using the NFIP-issued rates based on the construction designs and the intended use of the building. However, buildings in the course of construction that are not walled and roofed are not eligible for coverage when construction stops for more than 90 days and/or if the lowest floor for rating purposes is below the Base Flood Elevation. The NFIP will not insure materials or supplies intended for use in such construction, alteration, or repair unless they are contained within an enclosed building on the premises or adjacent to the premises. (See NFIP Flood Insurance Manual; the NFIP Dwelling Form for an SFIP).

The NFIP Flood Insurance Manual defines “start of construction” in the case of new construction as “either the first placement of permanent construction of a building on site, such as the pouring of a slab or footing, the installation of piles, the construction of columns, or any work beyond the stage of excavation; or the placement of a manufactured (mobile) home on a foundation.”

Although an NFIP policy may be purchased prior to the start of construction, as a practical matter, coverage under an NFIP policy is not effective until actual construction commences or when materials or supplies intended for use in such construction, alteration, or repair are contained in an enclosed building on the premises or adjacent to the premises.

76. CONSTRUCTION 4. When must a lender require the purchase of flood insurance for a loan secured by a building in the course of construction that is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available?

Answer: Under the Act, as implemented by the Regulation, a lender may not make, increase, extend, or renew any loan secured by a building or a mobile home, located or to be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available, unless the property is covered by adequate flood insurance for the term of the loan.⁹⁷ The NFIP provides that lenders may comply with the mandatory purchase requirement for a loan secured by a building in the course of construction that is located in an SFHA by requiring borrowers to have a flood insurance policy in place at the time of loan origination. Such a policy is issued based up on the construction designs and intended use of the building. A borrower should obtain a provisional rating (available only if certain criteria are met) to enable the placement of coverage prior to receipt of the Elevation Certificate (EC). In accordance with the NFIP requirement, it is expected that an EC will be secured and a full-risk rating completed within 60 days of the policy effective date. Failure to obtain the EC could result in reduced coverage limits at the time of a loss. (See NFIP Flood Insurance Manual).

Alternatively, a lender may allow a borrower to defer the purchase of flood insurance until either after a foundation slab has been poured and/or an Elevation Certificate has been issued or, if the building to be constructed will have its lowest floor below the Base Flood Elevation, when the building is walled and roofed. However, in order to comply with the Regulation,⁹⁸ the lender must require the borrower to have flood insurance for the security property in place before the lender disburses funds to pay for building construction (except for funds to be used to pour the slab or perform preliminary site work, such as laying utilities, clearing brush, or the purchase and/or delivery of building materials). If the lender elects this approach and does not require the borrower to obtain flood insurance at loan origination, then it should have adequate internal controls in place at origination to ensure that the borrower obtains flood insurance no later than 30 days prior to disbursement of funds to the borrower in light of the NFIP 30-day waiting period requirement. (See NFIP Flood Insurance Manual). See also Q&A Construction 5.

77. CONSTRUCTION 5. Does the NFIP 30-day waiting period apply when the purchase of the flood insurance policy is deferred in connection with a construction loan?

Answer: Yes. A 30-day waiting period will apply if a lender allows a borrower to delay the purchase of flood insurance in connection with a construction loan after making, increasing, renewing, or extending the loan. A borrower must apply for flood insurance on or before the closing date of a loan transaction for the NFIP 30-day waiting period to be waived. See NFIP Flood Insurance Manual. See also Q&A Construction 4.

78. CONSTRUCTION 6. If a lender allows a borrower to defer the purchase of flood insurance until either a foundation slab has been poured and/or an Elevation Certificate has been issued, or if the building to be constructed will have its lowest floor below Base Flood Elevation when the building is walled and roofed, when must the lender begin escrowing flood insurance premiums and fees?

Answer: If the lender allows a borrower to defer the purchase of flood insurance until either the foundation slab has been poured and/or an Elevation Certificate has been issued, or if the building to be constructed will have its lowest floor below Base Flood Elevation when the building is walled and roofed, a lender must escrow flood insurance premiums and fees at the time of purchase of the flood insurance, unless one of the escrow exceptions applies.⁹⁹

Flood insurance requirements for residential condominiums and co-ops (CONDO AND CO-OP)

79. CONDO AND CO-OP 1. Are residential condominiums, including multi-story condominium complexes, subject to the statutory and regulatory requirements for flood insurance?

Answer: Yes. The mandatory flood insurance purchase requirements under the Act and Regulation apply to loans secured by individual residential condominium units, including those located in multi-story condominium complexes, located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.¹⁰⁰ The mandatory purchase requirements also apply to loans secured by other residential condominium property, such as loans to a developer for construction of the condominium or loans to a condominium association.

80. CONDO AND CO-OP 2. What is an NFIP Residential Condominium Building Association Policy (RCBAP)?

Answer: The RCBAP is a master policy for residential condominiums issued by FEMA. A residential condominium building is defined as having 75 percent or more of the building's floor area in residential use. It may be purchased only by condominium owners associations. The RCBAP covers both the common and individually owned building elements within the units, improvements within the units, and contents owned in common (if contents coverage is purchased). The maximum amount of building coverage that can be purchased under an RCBAP is either 100 percent of the replacement cost value of the building, including amounts to repair or replace the foundation and its supporting structures, or the total number of units in the condominium building times $250,000, whichever is less. RCBAP coverage is available only for residential condominium buildings in Regular Program communities.

81. CONDO AND CO-OP 3. What is the amount of flood insurance coverage that a lender must require with respect to residential condominium units, including those located in multi-story residential condominium complexes, to comply with the mandatory purchase requirements under the Act and the Regulation?

V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers

Answer: To comply with the Regulation, the lender must ensure that the minimum amount of flood insurance covering the condominium unit is the lesser of:

- The outstanding principal balance of the loan(s); or
- The maximum amount of insurance available under the NFIP, which is the lesser of:
 - The maximum limit available for the residential condominium unit; or
 - The “insurable value” allocated to the residential condominium unit, which is the replacement cost value of the condominium building divided by the number of units.¹⁰¹

FEMA requires agents to provide on the declarations page of the RCBAP the replacement cost value of the condominium building and the number of units. Lenders may rely on the replacement cost value and number of units on the RCBAP declarations page in determining insurable value unless they have reason to believe that such amounts clearly conflict with other available information. If there is a conflict, the lender should notify the borrower of the facts that cause the lender to believe there is a conflict. If the lender determines that the borrower is underinsured, it must require the purchase of supplemental coverage.¹⁰² However, coverage under the supplemental policy may be limited depending on other coverage that may be applicable including the RCBAP insuring the condominium building and the terms and conditions of the policy.

Assuming that the maximum amount of coverage available under the NFIP is less than the outstanding principal balance of the loan, the lender must require a borrower whose loan is secured by a residential condominium unit to either:

- Ensure the condominium owners association has purchased an NFIP RCBAP covering either 100 percent of the insurable value (replacement cost) of the building, including amounts to repair or replace the foundation and its supporting structures, or the total number of units in the condominium building times $250,000, whichever is less; or
- Obtain flood insurance coverage if there is no RCBAP, as explained in Q&A Condo and Co-Op 4, or if the RCBAP coverage is less than 100 percent of the replacement cost value of the building or the total number of units in the condominium building times $250,000, whichever is less, as explained in Q&A Condo and Co-Op 5.

Example: Lender makes a loan in the principal amount of $300,000 secured by a condominium unit in a 50-unit condominium building, which is located in an SFHA within a participating community, with a replacement cost of $15 million and insured by an RCBAP with $12.5 million of coverage.

- Outstanding principal balance of loan is $300,000.
- Maximum amount of coverage available under the NFIP, which is the lesser of:
 - Maximum limit available for the residential condominium unit is $250,000; or
 - Insurable value of the unit based on 100 percent of the building’s replacement cost value ($$15 \text{ million} \div 50 = $300,000$).

The lender does not need to require additional flood insurance since the RCBAP’s $250,000 per unit coverage ($$12.5 \text{ million} \div 50 = $250,000$) satisfies the Regulation’s mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement. (This is the lesser of the outstanding principal balance ($300,000), the maximum coverage available under the NFIP ($250,000), or the insurable value ($300,000)). See NFIP Flood Insurance Manual.

The requirement discussed in this Q&A applies to any loan that is made, increased, extended, or renewed after October 1, 2007. This requirement does not apply to any loans made prior to October 1, 2007, until a triggering event occurs (that is, the loan is refinanced, extended, increased, or renewed) in connection with the loan. Absent a new triggering event, loans made prior to October 1, 2007, will be considered compliant if the lender complied with the Agencies’ previous guidance that an RCBAP with 80 percent RCV coverage was sufficient. FEMA issued guidance effective October 1, 2007, requiring NFIP insurers to add the RCV of the condominium building and the number of units to the RCBAP declarations page of all new and renewed policies.

82. CONDO AND CO-OP 4. For residential condominiums with no RCBAP coverage, what action must a lender take for an individual unit owner?

Answer: If there is no RCBAP on the residential condominium building, then the lender must require the individual unit owner to obtain coverage in an amount sufficient to meet the requirements outlined in Q&A Condo and Co-Op 3.¹⁰³

Under the NFIP, a Dwelling Policy is available for condominium unit owners’ purchase when there is no or inadequate RCBAP coverage.

Example: The lender makes a loan in the principal amount of $175,000 secured by a residential condominium unit in a 50-unit residential condominium building, which is located in an SFHA within a participating community, with a replacement cost value of $10 million; however, there is no RCBAP.

- Outstanding principal balance of loan is $175,000.
- Maximum amount of coverage available under the NFIP, which is the lesser of:

(FDIC); 12 CFR 614.4930(a) (FCA); and 12 CFR 760.3(a) (NCUA).

- Maximum limit available for the residential condominium unit is $250,000; or
- Insurable value of the unit based on 100 percent of the building's replacement cost value ($10 million ÷ 50 = $200,000).

The lender must require the individual unit owner to purchase flood insurance coverage in the amount of at least $175,000, since there is no RCBAP, to satisfy the Regulation's mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement. (This is the lesser of the outstanding principal balance ($175,000), the maximum coverage available under the NFIP ($250,000), or the insurable value ($200,000).)

83. CONDO AND CO-OP 5. What action must a lender take if the RCBAP coverage is insufficient to meet the Regulation's mandatory purchase requirements for a loan secured by an individual residential condominium unit?

Answer: If the lender determines that flood insurance coverage purchased under the RCBAP is insufficient to meet the Regulation's mandatory purchase requirements, then the lender should request that the individual unit owner ask the condominium association to obtain additional coverage that would be sufficient to meet the Regulation's requirements. See Q&A Condo and Co-Op 3.

If the condominium association does not obtain sufficient coverage, then the lender must require the individual unit owner to purchase supplemental coverage in an amount sufficient to meet the Regulation's flood insurance requirements.¹⁰⁴ The amount of supplemental coverage required to be purchased by the individual unit owner would be the difference between the RCBAP's coverage allocated to that unit and the Regulation's mandatory flood insurance purchase requirements. See Q&A Condo and Co-Op 4.

Example: Lender makes a loan in the principal amount of $300,000 secured by a condominium unit in a 50-unit condominium building, which is located in an SFHA within a participating community, with a replacement cost value of $10 million; however, the RCBAP is at 80 percent of replacement cost value ($8 million or $160,000 per unit).

- Outstanding principal balance of loan is $300,000.
- Maximum amount of coverage available under the NFIP, which is the lesser of:
 - Maximum limit available for the residential condominium unit ($250,000); or
 - Insurable value of the unit based on 100 percent of the building's replacement value ($10 million ÷ 50 = $200,000).

The lender must require the individual unit owner to purchase supplemental flood insurance coverage in the amount of $40,000 to satisfy the Regulation's mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement of $200,000. (This is the lesser of the outstanding principal balance ($300,000), the maximum coverage available under the NFIP ($250,000), or the insurable value ($200,000).) The RCBAP fulfills only $160,000 of the Regulation's flood insurance requirement.

While the individual unit owner's purchase of a separate policy that provides for adequate flood insurance coverage under the Regulation will satisfy the Regulation's mandatory flood insurance purchase requirements, the lender and the individual unit owner may still be exposed to additional risk of loss. Lenders are encouraged to apprise borrowers of this risk. For example, the NFIP Dwelling Policy provides individual unit owners with supplemental building coverage that is in excess to the RCBAP. The policies are coordinated such that the Dwelling Policy purchased by the unit owner responds to shortfalls on building coverage pertaining either to improvements owned by the insured unit owner or to assessments. However, the Dwelling Policy does not extend the RCBAP limits, nor does it enable the condominium association to fill in gaps in coverage.

84. CONDO AND CO-OP 6. What must a lender do when a loan secured by a residential condominium unit is in a complex whose condominium association allows its existing RCBAP to lapse?

Answer: If a lender determines at any time during the term of a designated loan that the loan is not covered by flood insurance or is covered by such insurance in an amount less than that required under the Act and the Regulation, the lender must notify the individual unit owner of the requirement to maintain flood insurance coverage sufficient to meet the Regulation's mandatory requirements.¹⁰⁵ The lender should encourage the individual unit owner to work with the condominium association to acquire a new RCBAP in an amount sufficient to meet the Regulation's mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement. See Q&A Condo and Co-Op 3. Failing that, the lender must require the individual unit owner to obtain a flood insurance policy in an amount sufficient to meet the Regulation's mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement. See Q&As Condo and Co-Op 4 & 5. If the borrower/unit owner or the condominium association fails to purchase flood insurance sufficient to meet the Regulation's mandatory requirements within 45 days of the lender's notification to the individual unit owner of inadequate insurance coverage, the lender must force place the necessary flood insurance on the borrower's behalf.¹⁰⁶ condominiums, including those located in multi-story condominium complexes?

Answer: In the event the RCBAP's coverage on a condominium building at the time of loss is less than 80 percent of either the building's replacement cost or the maximum amount of insurance available for that building under the NFIP (whichever is less), then the loss payment, which is subject to a coinsurance penalty, is determined as follows (subject to all other relevant conditions in the policy, including those pertaining to valuation, adjustment, settlement, and payment of loss):

- A. Divide the actual amount of flood insurance carried on the condominium building at the time of loss by 80 percent of either its replacement cost or the maximum amount of insurance available for the building under the NFIP, whichever is less.
- B. Multiply the amount of loss, before application of the deductible, by the figure determined in A above.
- C. Subtract the deductible from the figure determined in B above.

The policy will pay the amount determined in C above, or the amount of insurance carried, whichever is less.

Example 1: (Inadequate insurance amount to avoid penalty).

Replacement value of the building: $250,000.

80% of replacement value of the building: $200,000.

Actual amount of insurance carried: $180,000.

Amount of the loss: $150,000.

Deductible: $ 500.

Step A: $180,000 \div 200,000 = .90$

(90% of what should be carried to avoid coinsurance penalty)

Step B: $150,000 \times .90 = 135,000$

Step C: $135,000 - 500 = 134,500$

The policy will pay no more than $134,500. The remaining $15,500 is not covered due to the co-insurance penalty ($15,000) and application of the deductible ($500).

Example 2: (Adequate insurance amount to avoid penalty).

Replacement value of the building: $250,000.

80% of replacement value of the building: $200,000.

Actual amount of insurance carried: $200,000.

Amount of the loss: $150,000.

Deductible: $ 500.

Step A: $200,000 \div 200,000 = 1.00$ (100% of what should be carried to avoid coinsurance penalty)

Step B: $150,000 \times 1.00 = 150,000$

Step C: $150,000 - 500 = 149,500$

In this example there is no co-insurance penalty, because the actual amount of insurance carried meets the 80 percent requirement to avoid the co-insurance penalty. The policy will pay no more than $149,500 ($150,000 amount of loss minus the $500 deductible). This example also assumes a $150,000 outstanding principal loan balance.

86. CONDO AND CO-OP 8. What are the major factors involved with the individual unit owner's NFIP Dwelling Policy's coverage limitations with respect to the condominium association's RCBAP coverage?

Answer: The following examples demonstrate how the unit owner's NFIP Dwelling Policy may cover in certain loss situations:

Example 1: RCBAP

If the unit owner purchases building coverage under the Dwelling Policy and if there is an RCBAP covering at least 80 percent of the building replacement cost value, the loss assessment coverage under the Dwelling Policy will pay that part of a loss that exceeds 80 percent of the association's building replacement cost allocated to that unit.

The loss assessment coverage under the Dwelling Policy will not cover the association's policy deductible purchased by the condominium association.

If building elements within units have also been damaged, the Dwelling Policy pays to repair building elements after the RCBAP limits that apply to the unit have been exhausted. Coverage combinations cannot exceed the total limit of $250,000 per unit.

Example 2: No RCBAP

If the unit owner purchases building coverage under the Dwelling Policy and there is no RCBAP, the Dwelling Policy covers assessments against unit owners for damages to common areas up to the Dwelling Policy limit.

However, if there is damage to the building elements of the unit (e.g., inside the individual unit) as well, the combined payment of unit building damages, which would apply first, and the loss assessment may not exceed the building coverage limit under the Dwelling Policy.

87. CONDO AND CO-OP 9. What are the flood insurance requirements for a residential condominium unit or a non-residential condominium unit located in a non-residential condominium building? What are the flood insurance requirements for a non-residential condominium unit located in a residential condominium building?

Answer: Coverage is not available under the NFIP for an individual residential condominium unit or a non-residential condominium unit located in a non-residential condominium building. NFIP coverage is also not available for a non-residential condominium unit located in a residential condominium building. Therefore, a loan secured by one of these types of units is not a designated loan under the Regulation, and the mandatory flood insurance requirement does not apply. The Agencies note, however, that contents coverage is available through the

88. CONDO AND CO-OP 10. What flood insurance requirements apply to a loan secured by a share in a cooperative building that is located in an SFHA?

Answer: It is important to recognize the difference between ownership of a condominium and a cooperative. Although an owner of a condominium owns title to real property, a cooperative unit holder holds stock in a corporation with the right to occupy a particular unit, but owns no title to the building. As a result, a loan to a cooperative unit owner, secured by the owner's share in the cooperative, is not a designated loan that is subject to the Act or the Regulation.

Although there is no requirement under the Act or Regulation to purchase flood insurance on the cooperative building if the loan is secured by the unit owner's share in the cooperative, for safety and soundness purposes, residential or non-residential cooperative buildings may be insured by the association or corporation under the General Property Form. The entity that owns the cooperative building, not the individual unit members, is the named insured.

Flood insurance requirements for home equity loans, lines of credit, subordinate liens, and other security interests in collateral (contents) located in an SFHA (OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS)

89. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 1. Is a home equity loan considered a designated loan that requires flood insurance?

Answer: Yes. A home equity loan is a designated loan, regardless of the lien priority, if the loan is secured by a building or a mobile home located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.¹⁰⁷

90. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 2. Does a draw against an approved line of credit secured by a building or mobile home, which is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act, require a flood determination under the Regulation?

Answer: No. While a line of credit secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act is a designated loan and, therefore, requires a flood determination before the loan is made, draws against an approved line do not require further determinations.¹⁰⁸ However, a request made for an increase in an approved line of credit may require a new determination, depending up on whether a previous determination was done. See Q&A SFHDF 4.

91. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 3. What is the amount of flood insurance coverage required on a line of credit secured by a residential improved real estate?

Answer: A lender may take the following alternative approaches:

- For administrative convenience in complying with the flood insurance requirements, upon origination, a lender may require the purchase of flood insurance for the total amount of all loans or the maximum amount of flood insurance coverage available, whichever is less;¹⁰⁹ or
- A lender may actively review its records throughout the year to determine whether the appropriate amount of flood insurance coverage is maintained, considering the draws made against the line or repayments made to the account. In those instances in which there is no policy on the collateral at time of origination, the borrower must, at a minimum, obtain a policy as a requirement for drawing on the line. Lenders that choose to actively review the line should inform the borrower that this option may have more risks, such as inadequate flood insurance coverage during the 30-day waiting period for an NFIP flood policy to become effective. Lenders should be prepared to initiate force placement procedures if at any time the lender determines a lack of adequate flood insurance coverage for a designated line of credit, as required under the Regulation.¹¹⁰

92. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 4. When a lender makes, increases, extends or renews a second mortgage secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA, how much flood insurance must the lender require?

Answer: The lender must ensure that adequate flood insurance is in place or require that additional flood insurance coverage be added to the flood insurance policy in the amount of the lesser of either the combined total outstanding principal balance of the first and second loan, the maximum amount available under the Act (currently $250,000 for most residential buildings and $500,000 for other buildings), or the insurable value of the building or mobile home.¹¹¹ The junior lienholder should also have the borrower add the junior lienholder's name as mortgagee/loss payee to the existing flood insurance policy. Given the provisions of NFIP policies, a lender cannot comply with the Act and Regulation by requiring the purchase of an NFIP flood insurance policy only in the amount of the outstanding principal balance of the second mortgage without regard to the amount of flood insurance coverage on a first mortgage.

V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers

A junior lienholder should work with the senior lienholder, the borrower, or with both of these parties, to determine how much flood insurance is needed to cover improved real estate collateral. A junior lienholder should obtain the borrower's consent in the loan agreement or otherwise for the junior lienholder to obtain information on balance and existing flood insurance coverage on senior lien loans from the senior lienholder.

Junior lienholders also have the option of pulling a borrower's credit report and using the information from that document to establish how much flood insurance is necessary upon increasing, extending, or renewing a junior lien, thus protecting the interests of the junior lienholder, the senior lienholder(s), and the borrower. In the limited situation in which a junior lienholder or its servicer is unable to obtain the necessary information about the amount of flood insurance in place on the outstanding balance of a senior lien (for example, in the context of a loan renewal), the lender may presume that the amount of insurance coverage relating to the senior lien in place at the time the junior lien was first established (provided that the amount of flood insurance relating to the senior lien was adequate at the time) continues to be sufficient.

Example 1: Lender A makes a first mortgage with a principal balance of $100,000, but improperly requires only $75,000 of flood insurance coverage, which the borrower satisfied by obtaining an NFIP policy. Lender B issues a second mortgage with a principal balance of $50,000. The insurable value of the residential building securing the loans is $200,000. Lender B must ensure that flood insurance in the amount of $150,000 is purchased and maintained. If Lender B were to require additional flood insurance only in an amount equal to the principal balance of the second mortgage ($50,000), its interest in the secured property would not be fully protected in the event of a flood loss because Lender A would have prior claim on $100,000 of the loss payment towards its principal balance of $100,000, while Lender B would receive only $25,000 of the loss payment toward its principal balance of $50,000.

Example 2: Lender A, who is not directly covered by the Act or Regulation, makes a first mortgage with a principal balance of $100,000 and does not require flood insurance. Lender B, who is directly covered by the Act and Regulation, issues a second mortgage with a principal balance of $50,000. The insurable value of the residential building securing the loans is $200,000. Lender B must ensure that flood insurance in the amount of $150,000 is purchased and maintained. If Lender B were to require flood insurance only in an amount equal to the principal balance of the second mortgage ($50,000) through an NFIP policy, then its interest in the secured property would not be protected in the event of a flood loss because Lender A would have prior claim on the entire $50,000 loss payment towards its principal balance of $100,000.

Example 3: Lender A made a first mortgage with a principal balance of $100,000 on improved real estate with a fair market value of $150,000. The insurable value of the residential building 224 on the improved real estate is $90,000; however, Lender A improperly required only $70,000 of flood insurance coverage, which the borrower satisfied by purchasing an NFIP policy. Lender B later takes a second mortgage on the property with a principal balance of $10,000. Lender B must ensure that flood insurance in the amount of $90,000 (the insurable value) is purchased and maintained on the secured property to comply with the Act and Regulation. If Lender B were to require flood insurance only in an amount equal to the principal balance of the second mortgage ($10,000), its interest in the secured property would not be protected in the event of a flood loss because Lender A would have prior claim on the entire $80,000 loss payment towards the insurable value of $90,000.

93. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 5. If a borrower requesting a loan secured by a junior lien provides evidence that flood insurance coverage is in place, does the lender have to make a new determination? Does the lender have to adjust the insurance coverage?

Answer: It depends. Assuming the requirements in Section 528 of the Act (42 U.S.C. 4104b) are met and the same lender made the first mortgage, then a new determination may not be necessary when the existing determination is not more than seven years old, there have been no map changes, and the determination was recorded on an SFHDF. If, however, a lender other than the one that made the first mortgage loan is making the junior lien loan, a new determination would be required because this lender would be deemed to be "making" a new loan.¹¹² In either situation, the lender will need to determine whether the amount of insurance in effect is sufficient to cover the lesser of the combined outstanding principal balance of all loans (including the junior lien loan), the insurable value, or the maximum amount of coverage available on the improved real estate. This will hold true whether the subordinate lien loan is a home equity loan or some other type of junior lien loan.

94. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 6. If the loan request is to finance inventory stored in a building located within an SFHA, but the building is not security for the loan, is flood insurance required?

Answer: No. The Act and the Regulation provide that a lender shall not make, increase, extend, or renew a designated loan, that is, a loan secured by a building or mobile home located or to be located in an SFHA, “unless the building or mobile home and any personal property securing the loan is covered by flood insurance for the term of the loan.”¹¹³ In this example, the loan is not a designated loan because it is not secured by a building or mobile home; rather, the collateral is the inventory alone.

95. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 7. Is flood insurance required if a building and its contents both secure a loan, and the building is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available?

Answer: Yes. Flood insurance is required for the building located in the SFHA and any personal property securing the loan.¹¹⁴ The method for allocating flood insurance coverage among multiple buildings, as described in Q&A Amount 6, would be the same method for allocating flood insurance coverage among contents and buildings. That is, both contents and building will be considered to have a sufficient amount of flood insurance coverage for regulatory purposes so long as some reasonable amount of insurance is allocated to each category.

Example: Lender A makes a loan for $200,000 that is secured by a warehouse with an insurable value of $150,000 and inventory in the warehouse worth $100,000. The Act and Regulation require that flood insurance coverage be obtained for the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the loan or the maximum amount of flood insurance that is available under the NFIP. The maximum amount of insurance that is available for both building and contents is $500,000 for each category. In this situation, Federal flood insurance requirements could be satisfied by placing $150,000 worth of flood insurance coverage on the warehouse, thus insuring it to its insurable value, and $50,000 worth of contents flood insurance coverage on the inventory, thus providing total coverage in the amount of the outstanding principal balance of the loan. Note that this holds true even though the inventory is worth $100,000.

96. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 8. If a loan is secured by Building A, which is located in an SFHA, and contents located in Building B where building B does not secure the loan, is flood insurance required on the contents securing the loan?

Answer: No. If collateral securing the loan is stored in Building B, where Building B does not secure the loan, then flood insurance is not required on those contents whether or not Building B is located in an SFHA.

97. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 9. Does the Regulation apply when the lender takes a security interest in improved real estate and contents located in an SFHA only as an “abundance of caution”?

Answer: Yes. The Act and Regulation look to the collateral securing the loan. If the lender takes a security interest in improved real estate and contents located in an SFHA, then flood insurance is required.¹¹⁵

The language in the loan agreement or security instrument determines whether the improved real estate and contents are taken as security for the loan. If a lender intends to take a security interest in the improved real estate and contents, the loan agreement or security instrument should include language indicating that the improved real estate and contents are security for the loan. If the lender does not intend to take a security interest in either the improved real estate and/or contents, the loan agreement or security instrument should not include language to this effect, including language inserted out of an “abundance of caution.”

98. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 10. Is flood insurance required if the lender takes a security interest in contents located in a building in an SFHA securing the loan but does not perfect the security interest?

Answer: Yes, flood insurance is required. The language in the loan agreement or security instrument determines whether the contents are taken as security for the loan. If the lender takes a security interest in contents located in a building in an SFHA securing the loan, flood insurance is required for the contents, regardless of whether that security interest is perfected.¹¹⁶

99. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 11. If a borrower offers a note on a single-family dwelling as collateral for a loan but the lender does not take a security interest in the dwelling itself, is this a designated loan that requires flood insurance?

No. A designated loan is a loan secured by a building or mobile home that is located or to be located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act.¹¹⁷ In this example, the lender did not take a security interest in the building; therefore, the loan is not a designated loan.

100. OTHER SECURITY INTERESTS 12. If a lender makes a loan that is not secured by real estate, but is made on the condition of a personal guarantee by a third party who gives the lender a security interest in improved real estate owned by the third party that is located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available, is it a designated loan that requires flood insurance?

Answer: Yes. In this scenario, a loan is made on condition of a personal guarantee by a third party and further secured by improved real estate, which is located in an

SFHA and owned by that third party. Under these circumstances, the security of improved real estate in an SFHA is so closely tied to the making of the loan that it is considered a designated loan that requires flood insurance.¹¹⁸

Requirements to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees - General (ESCROW)

101. ESCROW 1. When must escrow accounts be established for flood insurance purposes?

Answer: A lender, or a servicer acting on its behalf, must escrow all premiums and fees for any flood insurance required under the mandatory purchase of flood insurance requirement for any designated loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home that is made, increased, extended, or renewed on or after January 1, 2016. The escrow must be payable with the same frequency as payments on the designated loan are required to be made for the duration of the loan, unless the loan or lender is subject to one of the exceptions.¹¹⁹

A lender is not required to escrow for flood insurance if it qualifies for one of the following loan-related exceptions¹²¹ in the Regulation:

- A loan that is an extension of credit primarily for business, commercial, or agricultural purposes;
- A loan that is in a subordinate position to a senior lien secured by the same property for which the borrower has obtained adequate flood insurance coverage;
- A loan that is covered by a condominium association, cooperative, homeowners association or other applicable group's adequate flood insurance policy;
- A loan that is a home equity line of credit;
- A loan that is a nonperforming loan that is 90 or more days past due; or
- A loan that has a term not longer than 12 months.

If a lender no longer qualifies for the small lender exception, it must escrow all premiums and fees for any flood insurance required under the mandatory purchase of flood insurance requirement for any designated loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home that is made, increased, extended, or renewed on or after July 1 of the first calendar year in which a lender has a change in status, unless a loan qualifies for another exception.¹²² If a lender, other than a lender that qualifies for the small lender exception, determines at any time during the term of a designated loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home that an exception from the escrow requirement that previously applied to a particular loan no longer applies to the loan, the lender must escrow flood insurance premiums and fees as soon as reasonably practicable.¹²³

102. ESCROW 2. If a lender does not escrow for taxes or homeowner's insurance, is it required to escrow for flood insurance under the Regulation? If yes, is the lender obligated to escrow for taxes and other insurance because it escrows for flood insurance pursuant to the rule?

Answer: If a lender or its servicer is required to escrow for flood insurance under the Regulation, it must do so even if it does not escrow for taxes or other insurance.¹²⁴ A lender or servicer is not, however, obligated to escrow for taxes and other insurance solely because it must escrow for flood insurance pursuant to the Regulation, though there may be other laws or regulations that require that additional escrow.

103. ESCROW 3. Are lenders required to escrow force-placed insurance?

Answer: Yes, the Regulation requires lenders or their servicers to escrow flood insurance premiums for any residential designated loan made, increased, extended, or renewed on or after January 1, 2016, unless the lender or the loan qualifies for an exception from the escrow requirement.¹²⁵ The Act and Regulation do not include an exception to the escrow requirement for force-placed insurance.

104. ESCROW 4. Does the requirement to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees apply when a loan does not experience a triggering event?

Answer: No, subject to certain exceptions. The Regulation provides that a lender or its servicer is required to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees when a designated loan is made, increased, extended, or renewed (a triggering event), unless either the lender or the loan is excepted from the escrow requirement.¹²⁶ Until the loan experiences a triggering event, the lender is not required to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees, unless: (i) a borrower requests the escrow in connection with the requirement that the lender provide an option to escrow for outstanding loans;¹²⁷ or (ii) the lender determines that a loan exception to the escrow requirement no longer applies.¹²⁸

105. ESCROW 5. Are multi-family buildings or mixed-use properties included in the definition of “residential improved real estate” under the Regulation for which escrows are required (unless an exception applies)?

Answer: Yes. For the purposes of the Act and the Regulation, the definition of residential improved real estate does not make a distinction between whether a building is single- or multi-family, or whether a building is owner- or renter-occupied.¹²⁹ Single-family dwellings (including mobile homes), two-to-four family dwellings, and multi-family properties containing five or more residential units are considered residential improved real estate.

However, with regard to mixed-use properties, the lender should look to the primary use of a building to determine whether it meets the definition of “residential improved real estate.” See Q&As Amount 3 and 4 for guidance on residential and non-residential buildings. A loan secured by residential improved real estate is not subject to the escrow requirement if the loan is an extension of credit primarily for business, commercial or agricultural purposes.¹³⁰

106. ESCROW 6. If a borrower obtains a second mortgage loan for a property located in an SFHA, and it is determined that the first lienholder does not have sufficient flood insurance coverage for both liens and is not currently escrowing for flood insurance, does the junior lienholder have to escrow for the additional amount of flood insurance coverage?

Answer: Under the Regulation, for a closed-end second mortgage loan, junior lienholders are not required to escrow for flood insurance as long as the borrower has obtained flood insurance coverage that meets the mandatory purchase requirement. Thus, the junior lender or its servicer must ensure that adequate flood insurance is in place. See Q&A Other Security Interests 4 for junior lienholder requirements.¹³¹ Q&A Other Security Interests 4 explains the requirements for junior lienholders. If adequate flood insurance has not been obtained by the first lienholder and insurance must be purchased in connection with the second mortgage loan to meet the mandatory purchase requirement, the junior lender or its servicer would need to escrow the insurance obtained in connection with the second mortgage loan.¹³² However, the escrow requirements do not apply to a junior lien that is a home equity line of credit (HELOC) since HELOCs have a separate escrow exception under the Act and Regulation.¹³³

107. ESCROW 7. Does a lender or servicer have to escrow for loans when the security property is not located in an SFHA, but the borrower chooses to buy flood insurance?

Answer: Under the Regulation, lenders and servicers are only required to escrow for loans that are secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home located or to be located in SFHAs where flood insurance is available under the NFIP and that experience a triggering event (made, increased, extended, or renewed) on or after January 1, 2016, unless either the lender or the loan qualifies for an exception.¹³⁴ If the property securing the loan is not located in an SFHA, it is not a designated loan, and the lender or its servicer is not required to escrow, although the lender or servicer may offer escrow service to the borrower.

Requirement to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees – Escrow small lender exception (ESCROW SMALL LENDER EXCEPTION)

108. ESCROW SMALL LENDER EXCEPTION 1. Is the $1B small lender exception for the mandatory escrow of flood insurance premiums at the lending institution level or bank holding company level?

Answer: By its own terms, the small lender exception to the flood insurance escrow requirement applies to lenders rather than holding companies.¹³⁵ Therefore, the $1 billion requirement is calculated based on the assets held at the lending institution level, rather than at the holding company level.

V. Lending — Flood Insurance Questions & Answers

(HPML) rules or (b) U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) or Federal Housing Administration (FHA) 131 234 programs on or before July 6, 2012, is such a lender, who otherwise qualifies for the small lender exception, required to escrow the premiums and fees for flood insurance?

Answer: The Act and Regulation provide that a small lender is eligible for the exception only if, on or before July 6, 2012, the lender: (1) was not required under Federal or State law to deposit taxes, insurance premiums, fees, or any other charges in an escrow account for the entire term of any loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home; and (2) did not have a policy of consistently and uniformly requiring the deposit of taxes, insurance premiums, fees, or other charges in an escrow account for any loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home.¹³⁶

- With respect to an HPML, Federal law in effect on or before July 6, 2012, permitted a borrower to request cancellation of the escrow rather than have it apply for the entire term of the loan. Therefore, HPML escrow requirements would not result in the loss of the escrow exception for a small lender that made an HPML-covered loan prior to July 6, 2012, because the lender was not required under Federal law to escrow for the entire term of the loan. Note that the phrase “entire term” applies only with respect to the Federal or State law requirements criterion of the exception. In addition, if a lender required escrow for an HPML solely to comply with Federal law, a lender complying with that law would not be considered to have its own separate policy of consistently and uniformly requiring escrow.
- With respect to loans under the USDA or FHA programs, under Federal law, such loans require the deposit of taxes, insurance premiums, fees and other charges in an escrow account for the entire term of the loan. Therefore, the first criterion of the exception would not be met and would disqualify the lender from the small lender exception under the Act and the Regulation.

110. ESCROW SMALL LENDER EXCEPTION 3. Is a lender disqualified from the small lender escrow exception if it is required to collect escrowed funds on a mortgage loan on behalf of a third party?

Answer: To qualify for the small lender exception, one requirement is the lender must not have had a policy on or before July 6, 2012, of consistently and uniformly requiring the deposit of taxes, insurance premiums, fees, or any other charges in an escrow account for any loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home.¹³⁷

¹³⁶ 12 CFR 22.5(e)(1) (OCC); 12 CFR 208.25(e)(3)(i) (Board); 12 CFR 339.5(c) (FDIC); 12 CFR 614.4935(c) (FCA); and 12 CFR 760.5(c) (NCUA).

¹³⁷ 12 CFR 22.5(e)(1)(ii)(B) (OCC); 12 CFR 208.25(e)(3)(i)(B)(2) (Board); 12 CFR 339.5(c)(1)(ii)(B) (FDIC); 12 CFR 614.4935(c)(1)(ii)(B) (FCA); and 12 CFR 760.5(c)(1)(ii)(B) (NCUA).

- With regard to mortgage loans for which the lender had a policy on or before July 6, 2012, of collecting escrow funds at closing and the lender maintained servicing of the loan, the lender would not qualify for the exception because the lender established an individual escrow account for the loan it would then service.
- With regard to mortgage loans for which the lender did not have a policy on or before July 6, 2012, of collecting the escrow funds on its own behalf at closing, but escrowed funds on behalf of a third party and then transferred those escrow funds to the third party servicing that loan, the lender would be able to qualify for the small lender exception provided the lender did not establish an individual escrow account and the lender transferred the funds to the third party as soon as reasonably practicable. The small lender must also satisfy the other requirements for the exception, but because no individual escrow account was established for the loan whose servicing rights were transferred pursuant to a third party’s requirements, the lender would not have had a policy of consistently and uniformly requiring the deposit of funds in an escrow account.

111. ESCROW SMALL LENDER EXCEPTION 4. Is a lender eligible for the small lender exception if, on or before July 6, 2012, it offered escrow accounts only upon a borrower’s request?

Answer: Yes. If, on or before July 6, 2012, a lender offered escrow accounts only upon the request of borrowers, this practice did not constitute a consistent or uniform policy of requiring escrow and the lender is eligible for the exception, provided all other conditions for the exception are met. The small lender exception does not apply if, on or before July 6, 2012, the lender had a policy of consistently and uniformly requiring the deposit of taxes, insurance premiums, fees, or any other charges in an escrow account for a loan secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home.¹³⁸

112. ESCROW SMALL LENDER EXCEPTION 5. Is the option to escrow notice required for all outstanding loans secured by residential real estate that are not excepted from the escrow requirement? What about outstanding loans that are not secured by buildings located in SFHAs?

Answer: Under the Regulation, lenders or their servicers are required to offer and make available the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees for all outstanding designated loans secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home located in an SFHA as of January 1, 2016, or July 1 of the first calendar year in which the lender no longer qualifies for the small lender exception to the escrow requirement.¹³⁹ With the expiration of the June 30, 2016, deadline to comply with the option to escrow notice requirement for outstanding loans as of January 1, 2016, that requirement currently applies only to lenders who have a change in status and no longer qualify for the small lender exception.¹⁴⁰ Such lenders will be required to provide the option to escrow notice by September 30 of the first calendar year in which the lender has had a change in status pursuant to the Regulation.¹⁴¹ The requirement to provide the option to escrow notice does not apply to outstanding loans or to lenders that are excepted from the general escrow requirement under the Regulation. The option to escrow notice requirement also does not apply to loans that are not subject to the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement.

113. ESCROW SMALL LENDER EXCEPTION 6. If the borrower has waived escrow of flood insurance premiums and fees, does the lender or its servicer still need to send a notice to offer the ability to escrow for the flood insurance?

Answer: Yes, if the small lender exception no longer applies. See Q&A Escrow Small Lender Exception 5. The Regulation does not exclude loans for which borrowers have previously waived escrow from the requirement to offer and make available the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees. Consequently, lenders or their servicers must send a notice of the option to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees to borrowers who have previously waived escrow or for whom lenders previously offered an option to escrow.¹⁴² Although a borrower may have previously decided to waive escrow or been offered an option to escrow, it is possible that the borrower's circumstances have changed, and if offered another chance to escrow, the borrower may desire to do so.

114. ESCROW SMALL LENDER EXCEPTION 7. Is it correct that lenders that qualify for the small lender exception are not required to provide borrowers the escrow notice or the option to escrow notice?

Answer: Yes. Lenders that qualify for the small lender exception are not required to provide borrowers either the escrow notice or the option to escrow notice unless the lender ceases to qualify for the small lender exception.¹⁴³

Requirement to escrow flood insurance premiums and fees – Escrow loan exceptions (ESCROW LOAN EXCEPTIONS)

115. ESCROW LOAN EXCEPTIONS 1. Are escrow accounts for flood insurance premiums and fees required for commercial loans that are secured by residential property?

Answer: No. Extensions of credit primarily for business, commercial or agricultural purposes are not subject to the escrow requirement for flood insurance premiums and fees, even if such loans are secured by residential improved real estate or a mobile home.¹⁴⁴ See Q&A Exemptions 1 for further information on the definition of residential property.

116. ESCROW LOAN EXCEPTIONS 2. Are escrow accounts for flood insurance premiums and fees required for loans secured by particular units located in multi-family buildings?

Answer: The escrow requirements in the Regulation would not apply to a loan secured by a particular unit in a multi-family residential building if a condominium association, cooperative, homeowners association, or other applicable group provides an adequate policy and pays for the insurance as a common expense.¹⁴⁵ See Q&A Exemptions 1. Otherwise, the escrow requirements generally would apply to loans for particular units in multi-family residential buildings.

117. ESCROW LOAN EXCEPTIONS 3. Which requirements for an escrow account apply to a property covered by an RCBAP?

Answer: An RCBAP (Residential Condominium Building Association Policy) is a policy purchased by the condominium association on behalf of itself and the individual unit owners in the condominium. Typically, a portion of the periodic dues paid to the association by the condominium owners applies to the premiums on the policy. When a lender makes, increases, renews, or extends a loan secured by a condominium unit that is adequately covered by an RCBAP and RCBAP premiums are paid by the condominium association as a common expense, an escrow account is not required.¹⁴⁶ However, if the RCBAP coverage is inadequate and the unit is also covered by a flood insurance policy for supplemental coverage, premiums for the supplemental policy would need to be escrowed, provided the lender or the loan did not qualify for any other exception from the Regulation's escrow requirement.¹⁴⁷ Lenders should exercise due diligence with respect to continuing compliance with the insurance requirements on the part of the condominium association.

118. ESCROW LOAN EXCEPTIONS 4. Do construction-permanent loans qualify for the 12-month exception if one phase of the loan is for 12 months or less?

Answer: Generally, no. Construction-permanent loans (or C-P loans) are loans that have a construction phase of approximately one year before the loan converts into permanent financing. During the construction phase, the loan is typically interest-only, so the borrower does not start paying principal until the permanent phase. After the construction phase, the borrower generally comes in to sign papers to start the permanent phase, but this is not a true closing. Given that C-P loans are generally 20- to 30-year term loans, a C-P loan would not qualify for the 12-month-exception from escrow, even if one phase of the loan is for 12 months or less.

119. ESCROW LOAN EXCEPTIONS 5. Although a lender is not required to monitor whether a subordinate lien moves into first lien position for the purpose of the mandatory escrow requirement, if the lender becomes aware that the subordinate lien exception no longer applies, when must the lender begin to escrow?

Answer: If at any time during the term of the loan a lender determines that a subordinate lien exception no longer applies, the lender must begin escrowing flood insurance premiums and fees as soon as reasonably practicable (unless another exception applies).¹⁴⁸ Lenders should ensure that the loan documents for the subordinate lien permit the lender to require an escrow if the loan takes a first lien position.

Force placement of flood insurance (FORCE PLACEMENT)

120. FORCE PLACEMENT 1. What is the requirement for the force placement of flood insurance under the Act and the Regulation?

Answer: When a lender makes a determination that the collateral securing the loan is uninsured or underinsured, it must begin the force placement process. Specifically, the Act and the Regulation provide that if a lender, or a servicer acting on its behalf, determines at any time during the term of a designated loan that a building or mobile home and any personal property securing the loan is not covered by flood insurance or is covered by flood insurance in an amount less than the amount required under the Regulation, the lender or its servicer must notify the borrower that the borrower must obtain flood insurance, at the borrower's expense, in an amount at least equal to the minimum amount required under the Regulation. If the borrower fails to obtain flood insurance within 45 days of the lender's notification to the borrower, the lender must purchase flood insurance on the borrower's behalf at that time. The lender must force place flood insurance for the full amount required under the Regulation, or if the borrower has purchased flood insurance that otherwise satisfies the flood insurance requirements but in an insufficient amount, the lender would be required to force place only for the "insufficient amount," that is, the difference between the amount the borrower insured and the required amount of flood insurance. The Act and the Regulation also provide that the lender or its servicer may purchase insurance on the borrower's behalf and may charge the borrower for the cost of premiums and fees incurred in purchasing the insurance beginning on the date on which flood insurance coverage lapsed or did not provide a sufficient coverage amount. See also Q&A Force Placement 8.¹⁴⁹

A lender or its servicer may include in the force placement notice the amount of flood insurance needed. By providing this information, the lender or its servicer can help ensure that a borrower obtains the appropriate amount of insurance. In addition, before the lender or servicer must force place flood insurance, if the lender or servicer is aware that a borrower has obtained insurance that otherwise satisfies the flood insurance requirements but in an insufficient amount, the lender or servicer should inform the borrower an additional amount of insurance is needed in order to comply with the Regulation.

121. FORCE PLACEMENT 2. When must a lender provide the force placement notice to the borrower?

Answer: The Regulation requires the lender, or its servicer, to send notice to the borrower upon making a determination that the building or mobile home and any personal property securing the designated loan is not covered by flood insurance or is covered by flood insurance in an amount less than the amount required under the Regulation. The Agencies expect that such notice will be provided to the borrower at the time of determination of no or insufficient coverage. If there is a brief delay in providing the notice, the Agencies will expect the lender or servicer to provide a reasonable explanation for the delay. For example, there may be brief delays due to various lender processes, including but not limited to, batch processing and manual exception processing.

122. FORCE PLACEMENT 3. May a servicer force place on behalf of a lender?

Answer: Yes. Assuming the statutory prerequisites for force placement are met, and subject to the servicing contract between the lender and its servicer, the Act authorizes servicers to force place flood insurance on behalf of the lender, following the procedures set forth in the Regulation.¹⁵⁰

123. FORCE PLACEMENT 4. May a lender satisfy its notice requirement by sending the force placement notice to the borrower prior to the expiration of the flood insurance policy?

Answer: No. The Act specifically provides that the lender or servicer for a loan must send a notice upon its determination that the collateral property securing the loan is either not covered by flood insurance or is covered by flood insurance in an amount less than the amount required.¹⁵¹ Although a lender may send notice prior to the expiration date of the flood insurance policy as a courtesy, the lender or servicer is still required to send notice upon determining that the flood insurance policy actually has lapsed or is insufficient in meeting the statutory requirement. The lender may purchase insurance on the borrower's behalf beginning on the date of the lapse.¹⁵²

124. FORCE PLACEMENT 5. When must the lender have flood insurance in place if the borrower has not obtained adequate insurance within 45 days after notification?

Answer: The Regulation provides that the lender or its servicer shall purchase insurance on the borrower's behalf if the borrower fails to obtain flood insurance within 45 days after notification.¹⁵³ If the borrower fails to obtain flood insurance and the lender does not force place flood insurance by the end of the force placement notification period, the Agencies will expect the lender to provide a reasonable explanation for the brief delay, for example, that a lender uses batch processing to purchase force-placed flood insurance policies.

125. FORCE PLACEMENT 6. Once a lender makes a determination that a designated loan has no or insufficient flood insurance coverage and sends the borrower a force placement notice, may a lender make a subsequent determination in connection with the initial notification period that the designated loan has no or insufficient coverage and send another force placement notice, effectively providing more than 45 days for the borrower to obtain sufficient coverage?

Answer: No. The Act and Regulation state that once a lender makes a determination that a designated loan has no or insufficient flood insurance coverage, the lender must notify the borrower and, if the borrower fails to obtain sufficient flood insurance coverage within 45 days after that notice, the lender must purchase coverage on the borrower's behalf.¹⁵⁴ For example, if in response to a force placement notice, the borrower obtains flood insurance that is insufficient in amount, there is no extension of the time period by which the lender must force place flood insurance.

126. FORCE PLACEMENT 7. May a lender commence a force-placed insurance policy on the day the previous policy expires, or must the new policy begin on the day after?

Answer: The Regulation provides that the lender or its servicer may charge the borrower for the cost of premiums and fees incurred in purchasing the insurance, including premiums or fees incurred for coverage, beginning on the date on which flood insurance lapsed or did not provide a sufficient coverage amount.¹⁵⁵

A lender, however, may not require the borrower to pay for double coverage. The Regulation requires the lender or its servicer to refund to the borrower all premiums paid by the borrower for any force-placed insurance purchased by the lender or its servicer during any period in which the borrower's flood insurance coverage and the force-placed insurance policy were each in effect.¹⁵⁶

For example, if the previous policy expires at 12:01 am, the lender's new force-placed policy should not begin to provide coverage until 12:01 am of the same day. If the lender did force place at a date and time that would result in the force-placed policy providing overlapping coverage, the lender should not charge the borrower for the period of overlapping coverage.

127. FORCE PLACEMENT 8. When force placement occurs, what is the amount of insurance required to be placed?

Answer: The Regulation states that the minimum amount of flood insurance required "must be at least equal to the lesser of the outstanding principal balance of the designated loan or the maximum limit of coverage available for the particular type of property under the Act."¹⁵⁷ Therefore, if the outstanding principal balance is the basis for the minimum amount of required flood insurance, the lender must ensure that the force-placed policy amount covers the outstanding principal balance plus any additional force-placed premium and fees capitalized into the outstanding principal balance.¹⁵⁸

To illustrate this point, assume that there is a loan with an outstanding principal balance of $200,000, secured by a residential property located in an SFHA that has an insurable value of $350,000. The borrower has a $200,000 flood insurance policy for that property, reflecting the minimum amount required under the Regulation. If the $200,000 flood insurance policy lapses, the lender or its servicer must notify the borrower of the need to obtain adequate flood insurance. If the borrower fails to obtain adequate flood insurance within 45 days after notification, then the lender or its servicer must purchase insurance on the borrower's behalf.¹⁵⁹ If the lender intends to capitalize the premium for the force-placed policy into the outstanding principal balance, the lender must ensure that the policy is issued in an amount sufficient to cover the anticipated higher outstanding principal balance, including the force-placed policy premium, even if the capitalization of the force-placed premium is not considered a triggering event. See also Q&A Force Placement 10. In this scenario, if the cost of the force-placed policy is $2,000, the coverage amount of the force-placed policy must be at least $202,000.

128. FORCE PLACEMENT 9. When may a lender or its servicer charge the borrower for the cost of force-placed insurance?

Answer: A lender, or a servicer acting on its behalf, may force place flood insurance and charge the borrower for the cost of premiums and fees incurred by the lender or servicer in purchasing the flood insurance on the borrower's behalf at any time starting from the date on which flood insurance coverage lapsed or did not provide a sufficient coverage amount. The lender or servicer would not have to wait 45 days after providing notification to force place insurance.¹⁶⁰ Lenders that monitor loans secured by property located in an SFHA for continuous flood insurance coverage can minimize any gaps in coverage and any charge to the borrower for coverage for a timeframe prior to the lender's or its servicer's date of discovery and force placement. If a lender or its servicer, despite its monitoring efforts, discovers a loan with no or insufficient coverage, for example, due to a remapping, it may charge the borrower for premiums and fees incurred by the lender or servicer for a force-placed flood insurance policy purchased on the borrower's behalf, including premiums and fees for coverage, beginning on the date of no or insufficient coverage, provided that the policy was effective as of the date of the insufficient coverage. When a lender or its servicer purchases a policy on the borrower's behalf, the lender or its servicer may not charge for premiums and fees for coverage beginning on the date of lapse or insufficient coverage if that policy purchased on the borrower's behalf did not provide coverage for the borrower prior to purchase. A lender's or servicer's frequent need to purchase policies on a borrower's behalf having coverage that precedes the date of purchase may, depending up on the facts and circumstances, indicate that there are weaknesses within the lender's or servicer's compliance management system.

129. FORCE PLACEMENT 10. Does capitalizing the flood insurance premium into the outstanding principal balance constitute a triggering event - an "increase" that would trigger the applicability of flood insurance regulatory requirements?

Answer: The Act and the Regulation require a lender to notify the borrower that the borrower should obtain adequate flood insurance when the lender determines that a building or a mobile home located or to be located in an SFHA is not covered by any or adequate flood insurance.¹⁶¹ If the borrower fails to obtain adequate flood insurance within 45 days, then the lender must purchase insurance on the borrower's behalf. The lender may charge the borrower for the premiums and fees incurred by the lender in purchasing the force-placed flood insurance.¹⁶²

Among the various methods that a lender might use to charge a borrower for force-placed flood insurance are: (1) capitalizing the premium and fees into the outstanding principal balance; (2) adding the premium and fees to a separate account; (3) advancing funds from the escrow account to pay for the premiums and fees of the force-placed flood insurance; or (4) billing the borrower directly for the premiums and fees of the force-placed flood insurance policy. The treatment of force-placed flood insurance premiums and fees depends on the method the lender chooses for charging the borrower.

Premium and fees capitalized into outstanding principal balance

If the lender's loan contract with the borrower includes a provision permitting the lender or servicer to advance funds to pay for flood insurance premiums and fees as additional debt to be secured by the building or mobile home, such an advancement would be considered part of the loan. As such, the capitalization of the flood insurance premiums and fees into the outstanding principal balance is not considered an “increase” in the loan amount, and thus would not be considered a triggering event. If, however, there is no explicit provision permitting this type of advancement of funds in the loan contract, the capitalization of flood insurance premiums and fees into the borrower’s outstanding principal balance would be considered an “increase” in the loan amount, and, therefore is considered a triggering event because no advancement of funds was contemplated as part of the loan. See also Q&A Force Placement 8.

Premium and fees added to an account

If the lender accounts for and tracks the amount owed on the force-placed flood insurance premium and fees in a separate account, this approach does not result in an increase in the loan balance and, therefore, is not considered a triggering event.

Premium and fees advanced from the borrower’s escrow account

If the lender’s loan contract with the borrower permits the lender to advance the premiums and fees for the force-placed flood insurance from the borrower’s escrow account, this approach does not increase the outstanding principal balance and is not considered a triggering event.

Premium and fees billed directly to borrower

If the lender bills the borrower directly for the cost of the force-placed flood insurance, this approach does not increase the outstanding principal balance and is not considered a triggering event.

130. FORCE PLACEMENT 11. What documentation is sufficient to demonstrate evidence of flood insurance in connection with a lender’s refund of premiums paid by a borrower for force-placed insurance during any period of overlap with borrower-purchased insurance?

Answer: With respect to when a lender is required to refund premiums paid by a borrower for force-placed insurance during any period of overlap with borrower-purchased insurance, the Regulation specifically addresses the documentation requirements. The Regulation provides that, for purposes of confirming a borrower’s existing flood insurance coverage, a lender must accept from the borrower an insurance policy declarations page that includes the existing flood insurance policy number and the identity of, and contact information for, the insurance company or its agent.¹⁶³ The Regulation does not require that the declarations page contain any additional information in order to ascertain whether the policy meets the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement to determine whether a refund is required. See Q&A Private Flood Compliance 5 for further guidance regarding evaluation under the private flood insurance requirements of the Regulation.

In situations not involving a lender’s refund of premiums for force-placed insurance, the Regulation does not specify what documentation would be sufficient. Generally, it is appropriate, although not required by the Regulation, for lenders to accept a copy of the flood insurance application and premium payment as evidence of proof of purchase for new policies.

131. FORCE PLACEMENT 12. If a lender receives a confirmation, consistent with the Regulation, of a borrower’s existing flood insurance coverage evidencing an overlap with a force-placed flood insurance policy, but the lender does not receive a refund from the insurance provider of the force-placed flood insurance policy in a timely manner, is the lender still required to refund any premiums for overlapping coverage to the borrower within 30 days?

Answer: Yes. The Regulation specifically requires the refund of force-placed insurance premiums and any related fees charged to the borrower for any overlap period within 30 days of receipt of a confirmation of a borrower’s existing flood insurance coverage without exception.¹⁶⁴

132. FORCE PLACEMENT 13. Is a lender permitted to increase, renew, or extend a designated loan that is currently insured by force-placed insurance? More specifically, if the borrower is undergoing a refinance or a loan modification, can the lender rely on the existing force-placed insurance to meet the mandatory purchase requirement?

Answer: A lender can rely on existing force-placed insurance to satisfy the mandatory flood insurance purchase requirement if the borrower does not purchase his or her own policy. The Regulation states that a lender “shall not make, increase, extend or renew any designated loan unless the building or mobile home and any personal property securing the loan is covered by flood insurance for the term of the loan.”¹⁶⁵ Assuming the force-placed policy is in effect and otherwise satisfies the regulatory coverage standards, then that policy may satisfy the mandatory purchase requirement.

A refinance is the “making” of a loan, and a loan modification that increases, renews, or extends a loan is a triggering event for the flood insurance requirements. See Applicability 6 and Applicability 13. Therefore, when a lender refinances, increases, renews, or extends an existing loan, the lender is required to provide the Notice of Special Flood Hazards, which details the borrower’s obligation to obtain a flood insurance policy for any building in an SFHA securing the loan.¹⁶⁶ At that time, the lender, at its discretion, could encourage the borrower to purchase his or her own policy, which may be available for a lower premium amount.

133. FORCE PLACEMENT 14. If a borrower's force-placed flood insurance expires, is the lender required to send a force placement notification to the borrower prior to renewing the force-placed flood insurance coverage?

Answer: No. The Regulation does not require the lender to send a notice to the borrower prior to renewing a force-placed policy. However, the lender or its servicer, at its discretion, may notify the borrower that the lender is planning to renew or has renewed the force-placed policy. Such a notification may encourage the borrower to purchase his or her own policy, which may be available for a lower premium amount.

134. FORCE PLACEMENT 15. Are lenders required to have in place "Life-of-Loan" monitoring for continuous coverage of designated loans?

Answer: Although there is no explicit duty to monitor flood insurance coverage over the life of the loan in the Act or Regulation, for purposes of safety and soundness, many lenders monitor the continuous coverage of flood insurance for the building or mobile home and any personal property securing the loan. Such a practice helps to ensure that lenders complete the force placement of flood insurance in a timely manner upon lapse of a policy, that there is continuous coverage to protect both the borrower and the lender, and that lenders are promptly made aware of flood map changes.

135. FORCE PLACEMENT 16. If a lender or its servicer receives a notice of remapping that states that a property has been or will be remapped into an SFHA, what do the Act and Regulation require the lender or its servicer to do?

Answer: The Act and Regulation provide that if a lender, or its servicer, determines at any time during the term of a designated loan, that a building or mobile home and any personal property securing a loan is uninsured or underinsured, the lender or its servicer must begin the notice and force placement process, as detailed in Q&A Force Placement 1.¹⁶⁷ A loan that is secured by property that was not located in an SFHA does not become a designated loan until the effective date of the map change that remaps the property into an SFHA. Therefore, when a lender or its servicer receives advance notice that a property will be remapped into an SFHA, the effective date of the remapping becomes the date on which the lender or its servicer must determine whether the property is covered by sufficient flood insurance. If the borrower does not purchase a flood insurance policy that begins on the effective date of the map change, the lender or its servicer must send the force placement notice to the borrower to purchase adequate flood insurance.¹⁶⁸ Similar to the guidance set forth in Q&A Force Placement 4, a lender also may send notice prior to the effective date of the map change as a courtesy.

In addition, as of the effective date of the remapping, if the lender makes a determination that the property securing a designated loan is not covered by sufficient flood insurance, the lender or servicer must begin the force placement process and may charge the borrower for the force-placed insurance.¹⁶⁹ However, if the borrower purchases an adequate flood insurance policy, the lender or servicer would need to reimburse the borrower for premiums and fees charged for the force-placed coverage during any period of overlapping coverage.¹⁷⁰

If the lender or its servicer receives notice after a property has been remapped into an SFHA, then the lender or its servicer must determine whether the property securing the loan is covered by sufficient flood insurance. The lender or its servicer must begin the notice and force placement process, as detailed in Q&A Force Placement 1, if the property is uninsured or underinsured.¹⁷¹ See also Q&A Force Placement 9.

Flood insurance requirements in the event of the sale or transfer of a designated loan and/or its servicing rights (SERVICING)

136. SERVICING 1. How do the flood insurance requirements under the Regulation apply to lenders under the following scenarios involving loan servicing?

Scenario 1: A regulated lender originates a designated loan secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act. The regulated lender makes the initial flood determination, provides the borrower with appropriate notice, and flood insurance is obtained. The regulated lender initially services the loan; however, the regulated lender subsequently sells both the loan and the servicing rights to a nonregulated party. What are the regulated lender's requirements under the Regulation? What are the regulated lender's requirements under the Regulation if it only transfers or sells the servicing rights, but retains ownership of the loan?

The regulated lender must comply with all requirements of the Regulation, including making the initial flood determination, providing appropriate notice to the borrower, and ensuring that the proper amount of insurance is obtained. In the event the regulated lender sells or transfers the loan and servicing rights, the regulated lender must provide notice of the identity of the new servicer to the Administrator of FEMA or its designee if the policy is an NFIP policy.¹⁷² In the case of a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, the lender should provide notice of the identity of the new servicer to the private insurer. Once the regulated lender has sold the loan and the servicing rights, the lender has no further obligation regarding flood insurance on the loan.

If the regulated lender retains ownership of the loan and only transfers or sells the servicing rights to a nonregulated party, and the policy is an NFIP policy, the regulated lender must notify the Administrator of FEMA or its designee of the identity of the new servicer.¹⁷³ In the case of a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, the lender should provide notice of the identity of the new servicer to the private insurer. The servicing contract should require the servicer to comply with all the requirements that are imposed on the regulated lender as owner of the loan, including escrow of insurance premiums and force placement of insurance, if necessary.

Generally, the Regulation does not impose obligations on a loan servicer independent from the obligations it imposes on the owner of a loan. Loan servicers are covered by the escrow, force placement, and flood hazard determination fee provisions of the Act and Regulation primarily so that they may perform the administrative tasks for the regulated lender, without fear of liability to the borrower for the imposition of unauthorized charges. It is the Agencies' longstanding position that the obligation of a loan servicer to fulfill administrative duties with respect to the flood insurance requirements arises from the contractual relationship between the loan servicer and the regulated lender or from other commonly accepted standards for performance of servicing obligations. The regulated lender remains ultimately liable for fulfillment of those responsibilities and must take adequate steps to ensure that the loan servicer maintains compliance with the flood insurance requirements.

Scenario 2: A nonregulated lender originates a designated loan. The nonregulated lender does not make an initial flood determination or notify the borrower of the need to obtain insurance. The nonregulated lender sells the loan and servicing rights to a regulated lender. What are the regulated lender's requirements under the Regulation? What are the regulated lender's requirements if it only purchases the servicing rights? A regulated lender's purchase of a loan and servicing rights, secured by a building or mobile home located in an SFHA in which flood insurance is available under the Act, is not an event that triggers certain requirements under the Regulation, such as making a new flood determination or requiring a borrower to purchase flood insurance.¹⁷⁴ Those requirements only are triggered when a regulated lender makes, increases, extends, or renews a designated loan.¹⁷⁵

A regulated lender's purchase of a loan does not fall within any of those categories. However, if a regulated lender becomes aware at any point during the life of a designated loan that flood insurance is required,¹⁷⁶ then the regulated lender must comply with the Regulation, including force placing insurance, if necessary.¹⁷⁷ Depending upon the circumstances, as a matter of safety and soundness, the lender may undertake due diligence upon the purchase of a loan, which would make the lender aware of the lack of adequate flood insurance and trigger flood insurance compliance requirements. Further, if the purchasing lender subsequently extends, increases, or renews a designated loan, it must also comply with the Act and Regulation.¹⁷⁸

When a regulated lender purchases only the servicing rights to a loan originated by a nonregulated lender, the regulated lender is obligated to follow the terms of its servicing contract with the owner of the loan. In the event the regulated lender subsequently sells or transfers the servicing rights on that loan, the regulated lender must notify the Administrator of FEMA or its designee of the identity of the new servicer, if required to do so by the servicing contract with the owner of the loan.¹⁷⁹ will constitute notice to the Administrator of FEMA when the lender is servicing that loan.

In the event the servicing is subsequently transferred to a new servicer, the lender must provide notice to the insurance company of the identity of the new servicer no later than 60 days after the effective date of such a change.¹⁸¹

In the case of a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, the lender should provide notice to the flood insurance provider. If the lender does not provide this notice to the flood insurance provider, the provider will be unable to properly administer the policy, such as by providing notice to the servicer about the expiration of the flood insurance policy.

138. SERVICING 3. Would a Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) Notice of Transfer sent to the Administrator of FEMA (or the Administrator's designee, i.e., the insurance provider) satisfy the requirements of the Act?

Answer: Yes. The delivery of a copy of the Notice of Transfer or any other form of notice is sufficient if the sender includes, on or with the notice, the following information that FEMA has indicated is needed by its designee:

- Borrower's full name;
- Flood insurance policy number;
- Property address (including city and State);
- Name of lender or servicer making notification;
- Name and address of new servicer; and
- Name and telephone number of contact person at new servicer.

139. SERVICING 4. Can delivery of the notice be made electronically, including batch transmission?

Answer: Yes. The Regulation specifically permits transmission by electronic means.¹⁸² A timely batch transmission of the notice would also be permissible, if it is acceptable to the Administrator's designee, i.e., the insurance provider.

140. SERVICING 5. If the loan and its servicing rights are sold by the lender, is the lender required to provide notice to the Administrator or the Administrator's designee (i.e., the insurance provider)?

Answer: Yes, in the case of an NFIP policy.¹⁸³ Failure to provide such notice would defeat the purpose of the notice requirement because FEMA would have no record of the identity of either the owner or servicer of the loan.

In the case of a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, the lender should provide notice to the flood insurance provider. If the lender does not provide this notice to the flood insurance provider, the provider will be unable to properly administer the policy, such as by providing notice to the servicer about the expiration of the flood insurance policy.

141. SERVICING 6. Is a lender required to provide notice when the servicer, not the lender, sells or transfers the servicing rights to another servicer?

Answer: No. After servicing rights are sold or transferred, the subsequent notification obligations applicable in connection with NFIP policies are the responsibility of the new servicer.¹⁸⁴ The obligation of the lender to notify the Administrator or the Administrator's designee (i.e., the insurance provider) of the identity of the servicer transfers to the new servicer. The duty to notify the insurance provider of any subsequent sale or transfer of the servicing rights and responsibilities belongs to that servicer.¹⁸⁵ For example, if a lender makes and services a loan and then sells the loan in the secondary market and also sells the servicing rights to a mortgage company, then the lender must notify the insurance provider of the identity of the new servicer and the other information requested by FEMA so that flood insurance transactions can be properly administered by the insurance provider. If the mortgage company later sells the servicing rights to another firm, the mortgage company, not the lender, is responsible for notifying the insurance provider of the identity of the new servicer.

Similarly, for a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, if a lender sells or transfers the servicing rights, the Agencies do not expect the lender to provide notice to the insurance provider of any subsequent sale or transfer of the servicing rights.

142. SERVICING 7. In the event of a merger or acquisition of one lender with another, what are the responsibilities of the parties for notifying the Administrator's designee (i.e., the insurance provider)?

Answer: If a lender is acquired by or merges with another lender, the duty in connection with NFIP policies to provide notice for the loans being serviced by the acquired lender will fall to the successor lender in the event that notification is not provided by the acquired lender prior to the effective date of the acquisition or merger.

Similarly, for a flood insurance policy issued by a private insurer, the successor lender should provide notice to the flood insurance provider in the event that notification is not provided by the acquired lender prior to the effective date of the acquisition or merger.

Mandatory civil money penalties (PENALTY)

143. PENALTY 1. Which violations of the Act can result in a mandatory civil money penalty?

Answer: A pattern or practice of violations of any of the following requirements of the Act and its implementing Regulation triggers a mandatory civil money penalty:

- Purchase of flood insurance where available (42 U.S.C. 4012a(b));
- Escrow of flood insurance premiums (42 U.S.C. 4012a(d));
- Failure to provide force placement notice or purchase force-placed flood insurance coverage, as appropriate (42 U.S.C. 4012a(e));
- Notice of special flood hazards and the availability of Federal disaster relief assistance (42 U.S.C. 4104a(a)); and
- Notice of servicer and any change of servicer (42 U.S.C. 4104a(b)).

The Act provides that any regulated lending institution found to have a pattern or practice of the violations “shall be assessed a civil penalty” by its Federal supervisory agency in an amount not to exceed $2,000 per violation (42 U.S.C. 4012a(f)(5)). There is no ceiling on the total penalty amount that a Federal supervisory agency can assess for a pattern or practice of violations. Each Agency adjusts the limit pursuant to the Federal Civil Penalties Inflation Adjustment Act of 1990 (28 U.S.C. 2461 note).¹⁸⁶ As required by the Act, the penalties must be paid into the National Flood Mitigation Fund.¹⁸⁷

144. PENALTY 2. What constitutes a “pattern or practice” of violations for which civil money penalties must be imposed under the Act?

Answer: The Act does not define “pattern or practice.” The Agencies make a determination of whether a pattern or practice exists by weighing the individual facts and circumstances of each case. In making the determination, the Agencies look both to guidance and experience with determinations of pattern or practice under other regulations (such as Regulation B (Equal Credit Opportunity) and Regulation Z (Truth in Lending)), as well as Agencies’ precedents in considering the assessment of civil money penalties for flood insurance violations. The Policy Statement on Discrimination in Lending (Policy Statement) provided the following guidance on what constitutes a pattern or practice: Isolated, unrelated, or accidental occurrences will not constitute a pattern or practice. However, repeated, intentional, regular, usual, deliberate, or institutionalized practices will almost always constitute a pattern or practice. The totality of the circumstances must be considered when assessing whether a pattern or practice is present.

In determining whether a lender has engaged in a pattern or practice of flood insurance violations, the Agencies’ considerations may include, but are not limited to, the presence of one or more of the following factors:

- Whether the conduct resulted from a common cause or source within the lender’s control;
- Whether the conduct appears to be grounded in a written or unwritten policy or established process;
- Whether the noncompliance occurred over an extended period of time;
- The relationship of the instances of noncompliance to one another (for example, whether the instances of noncompliance occurred in the same area of a lender’s operations);
- Whether the number of instances of noncompliance is significant relative to the total number of applicable transactions. (Depending on the circumstances, however, violations that involve only a small percentage of a lender’s total activity could constitute a pattern or practice);
- Whether a lender was cited for violations of the Act and Regulation at prior examinations and the steps taken by the lender to correct the identified deficiencies;
- Whether a lender’s internal and/or external audit process had not identified and addressed deficiencies in its flood insurance compliance; and
- Whether the lender lacks generally effective flood insurance compliance policies and procedures and/or a training program for its employees.

Although these considerations are not dispositive of a final resolution, they do serve as a reference point in assessing whether there may be a pattern or practice of violations of the Act and Regulation in a particular case. As previously stated, the presence or absence of one or more of these considerations may not eliminate a finding that a pattern or practice exists.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA)

Introduction

The examination procedures in this section are primarily for the technical compliance review. Although the fair lending procedures are addressed under a separate section of the Compliance Examination Manual, findings from the technical review may aid the review for fair lending. These procedures should be conducted to ensure compliance with all sections of the subject regulation.

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) prohibits discrimination in any aspect of a credit transaction. It applies to any extension of credit, including extensions of credit to small businesses, corporations, partnerships, and trusts.

The ECOA prohibits discrimination based on

- Race or color,
- Religion,
- National origin,
- Sex,
- Marital status,
- Age (provided the applicant has the capacity to contract),
- The applicant's receipt of income derived from any public assistance program, or
- The applicant's exercise, in good faith, of any right under the Consumer Credit Protection Act.

The CFPB's Regulation B, found at 12 CFR Part 1002, implements ECOA. Regulation B describes lending acts and practices that are specifically prohibited, permitted, or required. Official staff interpretations of the regulation are found in Supplement I to 12 CFR Part 1002.

In January 2013, the CFPB amended Regulation B to reflect the Dodd-Frank Act amendments requiring creditors to provide applicants with free copies of all appraisals and other written valuations developed in connection with all credit applications to be secured by a first lien on a dwelling. This amendment to Regulation B also requires creditors to notify applicants in writing that copies of all appraisals will be provided to them promptly.

As discussed above, each aspect of the regulation discussed in this section pertains to the technical compliance review of the ECOA and Regulation B. The technical compliance review is an important aspect of the consumer compliance examination. Technical compliance reviews have led to the discovery of substantive fair lending violations. Based on the direction provided in the scoping section of the manual, examiners should review sufficient information to ensure compliance with the applicable provisions of Regulation B described below. Note that the language that follows is taken directly from the regulation, which appears in the References portion of this section.

Rules for Taking Applications – 12 CFR § 1002.5

Under Regulation B, a creditor may request any information¹ in connection with a credit transaction, unless the information requested or collected concerns one or more of the specific prohibited bases listed above. Nevertheless, the regulation permits a creditor to collect such information when required for monitoring or enforcing compliance with fair lending or other laws as follows:

- Monitoring Purposes
Required by Court or an Enforcement Agency
Special Purpose Credit

In addition, Regulation B permits the collection of certain prohibited information on a limited basis.

Limitations on Requests for Information Concerning Race, Color, Religion, National Origin, or Sex — 12 CFR § 1002.5(b)

In cases where it is not required to collect information, a creditor shall not inquire about the race, color, religion, national origin, or sex of an applicant or any other person in connection with a credit transaction, except in the following cases:

- Self-test
- Title (such as Ms., Miss, Mr., or Mrs., so long as designation is optional on application form)

Limitations on Requests for Information Concerning a Spouse or Former Spouse — 12 CFR § 1002.5(c)

Regulation B limits the information that a creditor may collect from an applicant's spouse or former spouse to the following circumstances:

- The spouse will be permitted to use the account;
- The spouse will be contractually liable on the account;
- The applicant is relying on the spouse's income as a basis for repayment of the credit requested;
- The applicant resides in a community property state or is relying on property located in such a state as a basis for repayment of the credit requested; or

¹ A request for information under Regulation B does not limit or abrogate any Federal or state law regarding privacy, privileged information, credit reporting limitations, or similar restrictions on obtainable information.

V. Lending — Equal Credit Opportunity Act

- The applicant is relying on alimony, child support, or separate maintenance payments from a spouse or former spouse as a basis for repayment of the credit requested.

A creditor may request that an applicant list any account on which the applicant is contractually liable and to provide the name and address of the person in whose name the account is held. A creditor may also ask an applicant to list the names in which the applicant has previously received credit.

Limitations on Requests for Information Concerning Marital Status — 12 CFR § 1002.5(d)(1)

Regulation B also limits inquiries about an applicant's marital status to the following:

- Individual unsecured credit - If an applicant applies for individual unsecured credit, a creditor may inquire about the applicant's marital status if the applicant resides in a community property state or is relying on property located in such a state as a basis for repayment of the credit requested.
- Other credit - If an application is for other than individual unsecured credit, a creditor may inquire about the applicant's marital status, but shall use only the terms married, unmarried, and separated. A creditor may explain that the category unmarried includes single, divorced, and widowed persons.

Limitation on Disclosure of Income From Alimony, Child Support, or Separate Maintenance — 12 CFR § 1002.5(d)(2)

A creditor shall not inquire whether income stated in an application is derived from alimony, child support, or separate maintenance payments unless the creditor discloses to the applicant that such income need not be revealed if the applicant does not want the creditor to consider it in determining the applicant's creditworthiness.

Limitation on Requests for Information Concerning Childbearing or Childrearing — 12 CFR § 1002.5(d)(3)

A creditor shall not inquire about birth control practices, intentions concerning the bearing or rearing of children, or capability to bear children. A creditor may inquire about the number and ages of an applicant's dependents or about dependent-related financial obligations or expenditures, provided such information is requested without regard to sex, marital status, or any other prohibited basis.

Permanent Residency and Immigration Status — 12 CFR § 1002.5(e)

A creditor may inquire about the permanent residency and immigration status in the United States of an applicant or any other person in connection with a credit transaction.

General Rule — 12 CFR § 1002.6(a)

Except as otherwise provided for in the ECOA and Regulation B, a creditor may consider any information obtained to evaluate an applicant's credit worthiness, so long as the information is not used to discriminate against the applicant on a prohibited basis.

Specific Rules Concerning Use of Information — 12 CFR § 1002.6(b)

In any system of evaluating the creditworthiness of an applicant, a creditor may not:

- Consider any of the prohibited bases, including age (provided that the applicant has the capacity to enter into a binding contract) and the receipt of public assistance. Certain exceptions to the limitations on a creditor's use of information on the applicant's age and income derived from public assistance are described in the following section;
- Use childbearing or childrearing information to make assumptions or use aggregate statistics to determine whether the applicant's income will be diminished or interrupted in the future;
- Take into account whether there is a telephone listing in the name of an applicant for consumer credit but may take into account whether there is a telephone in the applicant's residence;
- Discount or exclude from consideration the income of an applicant or the spouse of an applicant because the income is derived from part-time employment or from other sources, such as an annuity, pension, or other retirement benefit; but may consider the amount and probable continuance of any income in evaluating an applicant's creditworthiness.

Limitations on the Use of an Applicant's Age or whether Income Derives from a Public Assistance Program — 12 CFR § 1002.6(b)(2)

Although generally prohibited, a creditor may take into account an applicant's age or whether an applicant's income derives from any public assistance program in the following limited circumstances, when using such systems for analyzing credit:

Empirically Derived Credit Scoring System. In an empirically derived, demonstrably and statistically sound, credit scoring system, a creditor may use an applicant's age² as a predictive variable, provided that the age of an elderly applicant is not assigned a negative factor or value.

V. Lending — Equal Credit Opportunity Act

Judgmental Systems. In a judgmental system of evaluating creditworthiness, a creditor may consider an applicant's age³ or whether an applicant's income derives from any public assistance program⁴ only for the purpose of determining a pertinent element of creditworthiness.

Any System of Evaluating Creditworthiness. In any system of evaluating creditworthiness, a creditor may consider the age⁵ of an elderly applicant when such age is used to favor the elderly applicant in extending credit.

Use of Credit History Information — 12 CFR § 1002.6(b)(6)

To the extent that a creditor considers credit history in evaluating the creditworthiness of similarly qualified applicants for a similar type and amount of credit, in evaluating an applicant's creditworthiness a creditor shall consider:

- The credit history, when available, of accounts designated as accounts that the applicant and the applicant's spouse are permitted to use or for which both are contractually liable;
- On the applicant's request, any information the applicant may present that tends to indicate the credit history being considered by the creditor does not accurately reflect the applicant's creditworthiness; and
- On the applicant's request, the credit history, when available, of any account reported in the name of the applicant's spouse or former spouse that the applicant can demonstrate accurately reflects the applicant's creditworthiness.

² According to the official staff commentary for Regulation B, age may be taken directly into account in a credit scoring system that is "demonstrably and statistically sound," as defined in § 1002.2(p), with one limitation: Applicants age 62 years or older must be treated at least as favorably as applicants who are under age 62. If age is scored by assigning points to an applicant's age category, elderly applicants must receive the same or a greater number of points as the most favored class of nonelderly applicants.

³ According to the official staff commentary for Regulation B, in a judgmental system, defined in § 1002.2(t), a creditor may not decide whether to extend credit or set the terms and conditions of credit based on age or information related exclusively to age. Age or age-related information may be considered only in evaluating other "pertinent elements of creditworthiness" that are drawn from the particular facts and circumstances concerning the applicant. For example, a creditor may not reject an application or terminate an account because the applicant is 60 years old. But a creditor that uses a judgmental system may relate the applicant's age to other information about the applicant

Use of Information Concerning Immigration Status — 12 CFR § 1002.6(b)(7)

A creditor may consider the applicant's immigration status or status as a permanent resident of the United States, and any additional information that may be necessary to ascertain the creditor's rights and remedies regarding repayment.

Use of Information Concerning Marital Status — 12 CFR § 1002.6(b)(8)

Except as otherwise permitted or required by law, a creditor shall evaluate married and unmarried applicants by the same standards; and in evaluating joint applicants, a creditor shall not treat applicants differently based on the existence, absence, or likelihood of a marital relationship between the parties.

Use of Information Concerning Race, Color, Religion, National Origin, or Sex — 12 CFR § 1002.6(b)(9)

Except as otherwise permitted or required by law, a creditor shall not consider race, color, religion, national origin, or sex (or an applicant's or other person's decision not to provide the information) in any aspect of a credit transaction.

State Property Laws — 12 CFR § 1002.6(c)

A creditor's consideration or application of state property laws directly or indirectly affecting creditworthiness does not constitute unlawful discrimination for the purposes of the ECOA or Regulation B.

Rules for Extensions of Credit — 12 CFR § 1002.7

Regulation B has specific provisions regarding extensions of credit.

Individual accounts. A creditor shall not refuse to grant an individual account to a creditworthy applicant on the basis of sex, marital status, or any other prohibited basis.

that the creditor considers in evaluating creditworthiness.

⁴ According to the official staff commentary for Regulation B, when considering income derived from a public assistance program, a creditor may take into account, for example: the length of time an applicant will likely remain eligible to receive such income; whether the applicant will continue to qualify for benefits based on the status of the applicant's dependents (as in the case of Temporary Aid to Needy Families, or social security payments to a minor); whether the creditor can attach or garnish the income to assure payment of the debt in the event of default.

⁵ According to the official staff commentary for Regulation B, any system of evaluating creditworthiness may favor a credit applicant who is age 62 or older. A credit program that offers more favorable credit terms to applicants age 62 or older is also permissible; a program that offers more favorable credit terms to applicants at an age lower than 62 is permissible only if it meets the special-purpose credit requirements of § 1002.8.

V. Lending — Equal Credit Opportunity Act

Designation of name. A creditor shall not refuse to allow an applicant to open or maintain an account in a birth-given first name and a surname that is the applicant's birth-given surname, the spouse's surname, or a combined surname.

Action Concerning Existing Open-End Accounts — 12 CFR § 1002.7(c)

Limitations. In the absence of evidence of the applicant's inability or unwillingness to repay, a creditor shall not take any of the following actions regarding an applicant who is contractually liable on an existing open-end account on the basis of the applicant's reaching a certain age or retiring or on the basis of a change in the applicant's name or marital status:

- Require a reapplication, except as provided under § 1002.7(c)(2);
- Change the terms of the account; or
- Terminate the account.

Requiring Reapplication — 12 CFR § 1002.7(c)(2)

A creditor may require a reapplication for an open-end account on the basis of a change in the marital status of an applicant who is contractually liable if the credit granted was based in whole or in part on income of the applicant's spouse and if information available to the creditor indicates that the applicant's income may not support the amount of credit currently available.

Signature Requirements — 12 CFR § 1002.7(d)

Rule for qualified applicant. Except as provided in this paragraph, a creditor shall not require the signature of an applicant's spouse or other person, other than a joint applicant, on any credit instrument if the applicant qualifies under the creditor's standards of creditworthiness for the amount and terms of the credit requested. A creditor shall not deem the submission of a joint financial statement or other evidence of jointly held assets as an application for joint credit.

Unsecured credit. If an applicant requests unsecured credit and relies in part upon property that the applicant owns jointly with another person to satisfy the creditor's standards of creditworthiness, the creditor may require the signature of the other person only on the instrument(s) necessary, or reasonably believed by the creditor to be necessary, under the law of the state in which the property is located, to enable the creditor to reach the property being relied upon in the event of the death or default of the applicant.

Unsecured credit—community property states. If a married applicant requests unsecured credit and resides in a community property state, or if the applicant is relying on property located in such a state, a creditor may require the signature of the spouse on any instrument necessary, or reasonably believed by the creditor to be necessary, under applicable state law to make the community property available to satisfy the debt in the event of default if:

- Applicable state law denies the applicant power to manage or control sufficient community property to qualify for the credit requested under the creditor's standards of creditworthiness; and
- The applicant does not have sufficient separate property to qualify for the credit requested without regard to community property.

Secured credit. If an applicant requests secured credit, a creditor may require the signature of the applicant's spouse or other person on any instrument necessary, or reasonably believed by the creditor to be necessary, under applicable state law to make the property being offered as security available to satisfy the debt in the event of default, for example, an instrument to create a valid lien, pass clear title, waive inchoate rights, or assign earnings.

Additional parties. If, under a creditor's standards of creditworthiness, the personal liability of an additional party is necessary to support the credit requested, a creditor may request a cosigner, guarantor, endorser, or similar party. The applicant's spouse may serve as an additional party, but the creditor shall not require that the spouse be the additional party.

Rights of additional parties. A creditor shall not impose requirements upon an additional party that the creditor is prohibited from imposing upon an applicant under this section.

Insurance. A creditor shall not refuse to extend credit and shall not terminate an account because credit life, health, accident, disability, or other credit-related insurance is not available on the basis of the applicant's age.

Notifications — 12 CFR § 1002.9

Regulation B provides specific requirements for creditors regarding notification of action taken, ECOA notices, and statement of specific reasons to applicants.

Notification of Action Taken, ECOA Notice, and Statement of Specific Reasons — 12 CFR § 1002.9(a)

When Notification is Required — 12 CFR § 1002.9(a)(1)

A creditor shall notify an applicant of action taken within:

- 30 days after receiving a completed application concerning the creditor's approval of, counteroffer to, or adverse action on the application;

V. Lending — Equal Credit Opportunity Act

- 30 days after taking adverse action on an incomplete application, unless notice is provided in accordance with the requirements for incomplete applications under § 1002.9(c);
- 30 days after taking adverse action on an existing account; or
- 90 days after notifying the applicant of a counteroffer if the applicant does not expressly accept or use the credit offered.

Content of Notification When Adverse Action is Taken — 12 CFR § 1002.9(a)(2)

A notification given to an applicant when adverse action is taken shall be in writing and shall contain a statement of the action taken; the name and address of the creditor; a statement of the provisions of section 701(a) of the ECOA; the name and address of the Federal agency that administers compliance with respect to the creditor; and either:

- A statement of specific reasons for the action taken; (§ 1002.9(a)(2)(i)) or
- A disclosure of the applicant's right to a statement of specific reasons within 30 days, if the statement is requested within 60 days of the creditor's notification. The disclosure shall include the name, address, and telephone number of the person or office from which the statement of reasons can be obtained. If the creditor chooses to provide the reasons orally, the creditor shall also disclose the applicant's right to have them confirmed in writing within 30 days of receiving the applicant's written request for confirmation. (§ 1002.9(a)(2)(ii))

Notification to business credit applicants. For business credit, a creditor shall comply with the notification requirements of § 1002.9 in the following manner:

Businesses with gross revenues of $1 million or less (§ 1002.9(a)(3)(i)) – Businesses that had gross revenues of $1 million or less in its preceding fiscal year (other than an extension of trade credit, credit incident to a factoring agreement, or other similar types of business credit), a creditor shall comply with the timing and content requirements of action taken, except that:

- The statement of the action taken may be given orally or in writing, when adverse action is taken;
- Disclosure of an applicant's right to a statement of reasons may be given at the time of application, instead of when adverse action is taken, provided the disclosure contains the information required by § 1002.9(a)(2)(ii) and the ECOA notice specified in § 1002.9(b)(1);

- For an application made entirely by telephone, a creditor satisfies the requirements of § 1002.9(a)(3)(i) by an oral statement of the action taken and of the applicant's right to a statement of reasons for adverse action.

Businesses with gross revenues in excess of $1 million - Businesses that had gross revenues in excess of $1 million in its preceding fiscal year or an extension of trade credit, credit incident to a factoring agreement, or other similar types of business credit, a creditor shall:

- Notify the applicant, within a reasonable time, orally or in writing, of the action taken; and
- Provide a written statement of the reasons for adverse action and the ECOA notice specified in § 1002.9(b)(1) if the applicant makes a written request for the reasons within 60 days of the creditor's notification.

Form of ECOA Notice and Statement of Specific Reasons — 12 CFR § 1002.9(b)(1)

ECOA notice. To satisfy the disclosure requirements of the notice of adverse action regarding the prohibited basis for discrimination of section 701(a) of the ECOA, the creditor shall provide a notice that is substantially similar to the following:

The Federal Equal Credit Opportunity Act prohibits creditors from discriminating against credit applicants on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, age (provided the applicant has the capacity to enter into a binding contract); because all or part of the applicant's income derives from any public assistance program; or because the applicant has in good faith exercised any right under the Consumer Credit Protection Act. The Federal agency that administers compliance with this law concerning this creditor is [name and address as specified by the appropriate agency or agencies listed in Appendix A of Regulation B].

V. Lending — Equal Credit Opportunity Act

Statement of Specific Reasons — 12 CFR § 1002.9(b)(2)

The statement of reasons for adverse action required must be specific and indicate the principal reason(s) for the adverse action. Statements that the adverse action was based on the creditor's internal standards or policies or that the applicant, joint applicant, or similar party failed to achieve a qualifying score on the creditor's credit scoring system are insufficient. Note: According to the staff commentary, a creditor must disclose the principal reasons for denying an application or taking other adverse action. The regulation does not mandate that a specific number of reasons be disclosed, but disclosure of more than four reasons is not likely to be helpful to the applicant.

Incomplete Applications — 12 CFR § 1002.9(c)

Notice alternatives. Within 30 days after receiving an application that is incomplete regarding matters that an applicant can complete, the creditor shall notify the applicant either:

- Of action taken, in accordance with § 1002.9(a); or
- Of the incompleteness, in accordance with § 1002.9(c)(2)

Notice of Incompleteness — 12 CFR § 1002.9(c)(2)

If additional information is needed from an applicant, the creditor shall send a written notice to the applicant specifying the information needed, designating a reasonable period of time for the applicant to provide the information, and informing the applicant that failure to provide the information requested will result in no further consideration being given to the application. The creditor shall have no further obligation under this section if the applicant fails to respond within the designated time period. If the applicant supplies the requested information within the designated time period, the creditor shall take action on the application and notify the applicant in accordance the requirements of § 1002.9(a) described above.

Oral Request for Information — 12 CFR § 1002.9(c)(3)

At its option, a creditor may inform the applicant orally of the need for additional information. If the application remains incomplete, the creditor shall send a notice in accordance with the notice alternatives for incomplete applications.

Oral Notifications by Small-Volume Creditors — 12 CFR § 1002.9(d)

In the case of a creditor that did not receive more than 150 applications during the preceding calendar year, the requirements of this section (including statements of specific reasons) are satisfied by oral notifications.

Withdrawal of Approved Application — 12 CFR § 1002.9(e)

When an applicant submits an application and the parties contemplate that the applicant will inquire about its status, if the creditor approves the application and the applicant has not inquired within 30 days after applying, the creditor may treat the application as withdrawn and need not comply with the timing requirements of action taken under § 1002.9(a)(1).

Multiple Applicants — 12 CFR § 1002.9(e)

When an application involves more than one applicant, notification need only be given to one of them but must be given to the primary applicant where one is readily apparent.

Applications Submitted Through a Third Party — 12 CFR § 1002.9(g)

When an application is made on behalf of an applicant to more than one creditor and the applicant expressly accepts or uses credit offered by one of the creditors, notification of action taken by any of the other creditors is not required. If no credit is offered or if the applicant does not expressly accept or use the credit offered, each creditor taking adverse action must comply with this section, directly or through a third party. A notice given by a third party shall disclose the identity of each creditor on whose behalf the notice is given.

Furnishing of Credit Information — 12 CFR § 1002.10

Regulation B provides specific requirements for creditors regarding designation of accounts.

Designation of Accounts — 12 CFR § 1002.10(a)

A creditor that furnishes credit information shall designate:

- Any new account to reflect the participation of both spouses if the applicant's spouse is permitted to use or is contractually liable on the account (other than as a guarantor, surety, endorser, or similar party); and
- Any existing account to reflect such participation, within 90 days after receiving a written request to do so from one of the spouses.

Routine Reports to Consumer Reporting Agency — 12 CFR § 1002.10(b)

If a creditor furnishes credit information to a consumer reporting agency concerning an account designated to reflect the participation of both spouses, the creditor shall furnish the

Reporting in Response to Inquiry — 12 CFR § 1002.10(c)

If a creditor furnishes credit information in response to an inquiry, concerning an account designated to reflect the participation of both spouses, the creditor shall furnish the information in the name of the spouse about whom the information is requested.

Record Retention — 12 CFR § 1002.12

Regulation B provides specific record retention requirements for creditors.

Retention of Prohibited Information — 12 CFR § 1002.12(a)

A creditor may retain in its files information that is prohibited by the ECOA or Regulation B for use in evaluating applications, without violating the ECOA or Regulation B, if the information was obtained:

- (1) From any source prior to March 23, 1977;
- (2) From consumer reporting agencies, an applicant, or others without the specific request of the creditor; or
- (3) As required to monitor compliance with the ECOA and this Regulation B or other Federal or state statutes or regulations.

Preservation of Records — 12 CFR § 1002.12(b)

- Any written or recorded information concerning the adverse action; and
- Any written statement submitted by the applicant alleging a violation of the ECOA or Regulation B.

Other applications. For 25 months (12 months for business credit, except as provided for in the “special rule for certain business credit applications”) after the date that a creditor receives an application for which the creditor is not required to comply with the notification requirements of § 1002.9, the creditor shall retain all written or recorded information in its possession concerning the applicant, including any notation of action taken.

Enforcement proceedings and investigations. A creditor shall retain the information beyond 25 months (12 months for business credit, except as provided for in the “special rule for certain business credit applications”) if the creditor has actual notice that it is under investigation or is subject to an enforcement proceeding for an alleged violation of the ECOA or Regulation B, by the Attorney General of the United States or by an enforcement agency charged with monitoring that creditor's compliance with the ECOA and Regulation B, or if it has been served with notice of an action filed pursuant to section 706 of the ECOA and § 1002.16 of Regulation B. The creditor shall retain the information until final disposition of the matter, unless an earlier time is allowed by order of the agency or court.

Special rule for certain business credit applications. With regard to a business that had gross revenues in excess of $1 million in its preceding fiscal year, or an extension of trade credit, credit incident to a factoring agreement, or other similar types of business credit, the creditor shall retain records for at least 60 days after notifying the applicant of the action taken. If within that time period the applicant requests in writing the reasons for adverse action or that records be retained, the creditor shall retain records for 12 months.

Self-tests. For 25 months after a self-test (as defined in § 1002.15(b)(1) of Regulation B) has been completed, the creditor shall retain all written or recorded information about

A creditor shall retain information beyond 25 months if it has actual notice that it is under investigation or is subject to an enforcement proceeding for an alleged violation, or if it has been served with notice of a civil action. In such cases, the creditor shall retain the information until final disposition of the matter, unless an earlier time is allowed by the appropriate agency or court order.

Prescreened solicitations. For 25 months after the date on which an offer of credit is made to potential customers (12 months for business credit, except as provided for in the “special rule for certain business credit applications”), the creditor shall retain in original form or a copy thereof:

- The text of any prescreened solicitation;
- The list of criteria the creditor used to select potential recipients of the solicitation; and
- Any correspondence related to complaints (formal or informal) about the solicitation.

Information for Monitoring Purposes — 12 CFR § 1002.13

Information to be Requested — 12 CFR § 1002.13(a)

A creditor that receives an application for credit primarily for the purchase or refinancing of a dwelling occupied or to be occupied by the applicant as a principal residence, where the extension of credit will be secured by the dwelling, shall request as part of the application the following information regarding the applicant(s):

- Ethnicity, using the categories Hispanic or Latino, and not Hispanic or Latino; and race, using the categories American Indian or Alaska Native, Asian, Black or African American, Native Hawaiian or Other Pacific Islander, and White;
- Sex;
- Marital status, using the categories married, unmarried, and separated; and
- Age.

Dwelling means a residential structure that contains one to four units, whether or not that structure is attached to real property. The term includes, but is not limited to, an individual condominium or cooperative unit and a mobile or other manufactured home.

⁶ Regulation B defines a valuation as “any estimate of the value of a dwelling developed in connection with an application for credit.” 12 CFR

Obtaining information. — 12 CFR § 1002.13(b)

Questions regarding ethnicity, race, sex, marital status, and age may be listed, at the creditor's option, on the application form or on a separate form that refers to the application. The applicant(s) shall be asked but not required to supply the requested information. If the applicant(s) chooses not to provide the information or any part of it, that fact shall be noted on the form. The creditor shall then also note on the form, to the extent possible, the ethnicity, race, and sex of the applicant(s) on the basis of visual observation or surname.

Disclosure to applicant(s) — 12 CFR § 1002.13(c)

The creditor shall inform the applicant(s) that the information regarding ethnicity, race, sex, marital status, and age is being requested by the Federal Government for the purpose of monitoring compliance with Federal statutes that prohibit creditors from discriminating against applicants on those bases. The creditor shall also inform the applicant(s) that if the applicant(s) chooses not to provide the information, the creditor is required to note the ethnicity, race and sex on the basis of visual observation or surname.

Substitute Monitoring Program — 12 CFR § 1002.13(d)

A monitoring program required by an agency charged with administrative enforcement under section 704 of the ECOA may be substituted for the monitoring requirements of § 1002.13(a)-(c).

Providing Appraisals and Other Valuations – 12 CFR § 1002.14(a)(1)

Regulation B requires that creditors provide applicants with a copy of all appraisals and other written valuations⁶ developed in connection with an application for credit to be secured by a first lien on a dwelling. A creditor shall provide the copy of each such appraisal or other written valuation promptly upon completion, or at least three business days prior to consummation of the transaction (for closed-end credit) or account opening (for open-end credit), whichever is earlier.

An applicant may waive the timing requirement and agree to receive any copy at or before consummation or account opening, except where otherwise prohibited by law. Any such waiver must be obtained at least three business days prior to consummation or account opening, unless the waiver pertains solely to the applicant's receipt of a copy of an appraisal or other written valuation that contains only clerical changes from a previous version provided to the applicant or other written valuation provided to the applicant three or more business days prior to consummation or account opening. If the applicant provides a waiver and the transaction is not consummated or the account is not opened, the creditor must provide these copies no later than 30 days after the creditor determines consummation will not occur or the account will not be opened.

Disclosure – 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(2)

A creditor shall mail or deliver a notice in writing of the applicant's right to receive a copy of all written appraisals or valuations developed in connection with the application, no later than the third business day after the creditor receives an application for credit that is to be secured by a first lien on a dwelling. A special timing rule applies if an application for credit is not to be secured by a first lien on a dwelling at the time of application, but the creditor later determines that it will be secured by such a lien. In that case, the creditor shall mail or deliver the same disclosure in writing no later than the third business day after determining that the loan is to be secured by a first lien on a dwelling. If the disclosure required under 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(2) accompanies an application accessed by the applicant in electronic form, it may be provided in electronic form on or with the application form, without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act. (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.). See 12 CFR 1002.4(d)(2).

Reimbursement – 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(3)

A creditor shall not charge an applicant for providing a copy of appraisals and/or other written valuations, but may require applicants to pay a reasonable fee to reimburse the creditor for the cost of the appraisal or other written valuation unless otherwise provided by law.

Withdrawn, Denied, or Incomplete Applications – 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(4)

The requirements to provide copies of appraisals and other written valuations developed in connection with an application for credit to be secured by a first lien on a dwelling apply whether credit is extended or denied or if the application is incomplete or withdrawn.

Copies in Electronic Form – 12 CFR 1002.14(a)(5)

Required copies of appraisals and other written valuations may be provided to the applicant in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq.).

Examination Procedures

- Examiners must review compliance with these provisions in all compliance examinations that include review of bank loan files, and they may elect to do so as part of a regular, scheduled supervisory activity that includes a review of fair lending risk.
- Examiners should use copies of the technical compliance checklist to review in detail approved and denied consumer, business, and residential real estate files. If there appear to be any technical violations in those files, the violations should be written up and discussed with management. The examiners should maintain one master checklist to note any observed recurrence of the violations which would aid a comparative file review (if there is one).

Technical Compliance Checklist

The worksheet beginning on the following page can be used to review audit workpapers, evaluate bank policies, perform transaction testing, and assess training as appropriate. Complete those aspects of the worksheet that specifically relate to the issue being reviewed, evaluated, or tested, and retain those completed sections in the workpapers.

When reviewing audit or evaluating bank policies, a “No” answer indicates a possible exception/deficiency and should be explained in the workpapers. When performing transaction testing, a “No” answer indicates a possible violation and should be explained in the workpapers. If a line item is not applicable within the area you are reviewing, simply indicate “NA.”

Underline the applicable use:

- Audit
- Bank Policies
- Transaction Testing

Fair Housing Overview

The examination procedures in this section are primarily for the review of technical compliance with the FDIC's 12 CFR part 338, a regulation to implement certain fair housing requirements. Although the fair lending procedures are addressed under a separate section of the Consumer Compliance Examination Manual, findings from the technical review may aid the review for fair lending. These procedures should be conducted to ensure compliance with 12 CFR part 338.

Background and Introduction

The Fair Housing Act (FHA) prohibits discrimination in all aspects of "residential real-estate related transactions," including but not limited to:

- Making loans to buy, build, repair or improve a dwelling;
- Purchasing real estate loans;
- Selling, brokering, or appraising residential real estate; and
- Selling or renting a dwelling.

The FHA prohibits discrimination based on:

- Race or color;
- National origin;
- Religion;
- Sex;
- Familial status (defined as children under the age of 18 living with a parent or legal custodian, pregnant women, and people securing custody of children under 18); or
- Handicap.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) regulations implementing the FHA provisions related to fair housing posters are found at 24 CFR Part 110. The FDIC's Part 338, Fair Housing, implements this provision and nondiscriminatory advertising provisions adopted by HUD.¹ Part 338 applies to insured state nonmember banks and state savings associations (financial institutions).

² Procedures for the review are provided in Section V-7.1, Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA).

Examination Procedures

- Examiners must review compliance with these procedures in all compliance examinations that include review of files, and they may elect to do so as part of a regular, scheduled supervisory activity that includes a review of fair lending risk.
- Examiners must determine whether the financial institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls are adequate for compliance with the FDIC's regulation under the FHA.

Technical Compliance Checklist

Recordkeeping Requirements

In conjunction with review of a financial institution's compliance with the provisions of 12 CFR 1002.13,² determine whether the financial institution receives applications for credit primarily for the purchase or refinancing of an owner-occupied principal residence. If so, determine whether the financial institution retains the monitoring information required by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's (CFPB's) Regulation B, 12 CFR part 1002. (§ 338.7)

The monitoring information relates to:

- Race and ethnicity
- Sex
- Marital status
- Age

Disclosure

In conjunction with review of a financial institution's compliance with the provisions of 12 CFR 1002.13, determine that the institution informs the applicant(s) that the data regarding race and ethnicity, marital status, sex and age is being requested by the Federal government for the purposes of monitoring compliance with the Federal statutes that prohibit discrimination on those bases. Also determine whether the institution informs the applicant(s) that the institution is required to note the race, ethnicity and sex based on visual observation or surname should the applicant(s) choose not to provide the information.

V. Lending —Fair Housing

Compilation of Loan Data

If the institution, or any affiliate, is required to file a Home Mortgage Disclosure Act loan application register (LAR) with the FDIC, determine whether the institution collected, recorded, and reported the LAR in accordance with CFPB's Regulation C, 12 CFR part 1003 (§ 338.8).³

Record Retention

In conjunction with review of a financial institution's compliance with Regulation B, 12 CFR part 1002, determine whether the institution retains the monitoring information requested from applicants as required by 12 CFR 1002.12. (§ 338,7)

Mortgage Lending of a Controlled Entity

If the financial institution is an insured state nonmember bank (not a state savings association), determine through interviews with financial institution's staff and review of the loan files, whether the institution:

- Refers any applicants to a controlled entity, and
- Purchases any covered loan (as defined by Regulation C) originated by the controlled entity as a condition to transacting any business with the controlled entity.

If this arrangement exists, the financial institution is required to enter into a written agreement with that entity. The written agreement shall provide that the entity will:

- Comply with § 338.3, § 338.4, and § 338.7 and, if otherwise subject to Regulation C, § 338.8 (§ 338.9(a));
- Provide its books and records for examination by the FDIC (§ 338.9(b)); and
- Comply with all instructions and orders issued by the FDIC with respect to its home loan practices (§ 338.9(c)).

Advertisements and Public Notices

1. If a written or visual advertisement of a loan for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving, repairing, or maintaining a dwelling or any loan secured by a dwelling is used, determine whether the Equal Housing Lender or Equal Housing Opportunity logotype and legend are appropriately used.

NOTE: The Equal Housing Lender (symbol of house) with legend (the phrase "Equal Housing Lender") or the Equal Housing Opportunity (symbol of house) with the legend (the phrase "Equal Housing Opportunity") must be used together, respectively. (§ 338.3)

NOTE: This section may be satisfied in an oral advertisement by stating "Equal Housing Lender" or "Equal Opportunity Lender."

2. Determine whether any advertisement contains any words, symbols, models, or other forms of communication that express, imply, or suggest a discriminatory preference or policy of exclusion in violation of the provision of the FHAct or ECOA. (§ 338.3(b))
3. Determine whether the required Fair Housing Poster, either the Equal Housing Lender poster or HUD's Equal Housing Opportunity poster:
 - Is at least 11 x 14 inches in size;
 - Is conspicuously displayed in a central location within the institution where deposits are received or residential real estate-related transactions are made; and
 - Contains the correct text in the proper format of § 338.4(b) for the FDIC's Equal Housing Lending poster or 24 CFR Part 110.25(a) for HUD's Equal Housing Opportunity poster. (§ 338.4)

Home Mortgage Disclosure Act¹

Background

The Home Mortgage Disclosure Act requires certain financial institutions to collect, report, and disclose information about their mortgage lending activity. HMDA was originally enacted by the Congress in 1975 and is implemented by Regulation C (12 CFR Part 1003).

HMDA was enacted given public concern over credit shortages in certain neighborhoods. In particular, Congress believed that some financial institutions had contributed to the decline of various geographic areas through their failure to provide adequate home financing to qualified applicants on reasonable terms and conditions. Thus, one statutory purpose of HMDA is to provide the public with information that will help show whether financial institutions are serving the housing credit needs of the communities and neighborhoods in which they are located. A second statutory purpose is to aid public officials in distributing public sector investment so as to attract private investment to areas where it is needed. Finally, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA) amended HMDA to require the collection and disclosure of data about applicant and borrower characteristics to assist in identifying possible discriminatory lending patterns and enforcing antidiscrimination statutes.

As the name implies, HMDA is a disclosure law that relies upon public scrutiny for its effectiveness. It does not prohibit any specific activity of lenders, and it does not establish a quota system of mortgage loans to be made in any geographic area.

Between 1988 and 1992, Congress amended HMDA's coverage. Coverage was expanded in the FIRREA amendments to include many independent nondepository mortgage lenders, in addition to the previously covered banks, savings associations, and credit unions. Coverage of independent mortgage bankers was further expanded by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 HMDA amendments. For a more detailed discussion of the history of HMDA, see the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council's (FFIEC) website at www.ffiec.gov/hmda/history2.htm.

Prior to the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act), HMDA required financial institutions to report data regarding applications, loan originations, and loan purchases, as well as certain requests under a pre-approval program (as defined in Regulation C). HMDA also required financial institutions to report certain applicant and borrower demographic data, such as ethnicity, race, gender, and gross income. In addition, the reporting of certain pricing information and the type of purchaser was required. Data was reported in a "register" reporting format, compiled by supervisory agencies, and disclosed to the public.

The Dodd-Frank Act amended HMDA to, among other things, require reporting of additional data points, transfer HMDA rulemaking authority from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB) to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (Bureau), and provide the Bureau with authority to mandate collection, recording, and reporting of such other information as the Bureau may require.² In August 2014, the Bureau proposed amendments to Regulation C to implement the Dodd-Frank Act changes; to require collection, recording, and reporting of additional information to further HMDA's purposes; and to modernize the manner in which covered financial institutions report HMDA data. The Bureau published a final rule amending Regulation C in October 2015 (2015 HMDA Rule).³ The Bureau published a final rule further amending Regulation C in September 2017 to facilitate implementation of the 2015 HMDA Rule (2017 HMDA Rule).⁴

Beginning in 2018, as discussed further below, the 2015 HMDA Rule requires that financial institutions continue to report data regarding applications, loan originations, and loan purchases. The Bureau's 2015 HMDA Rule changed: (1) the definition of a financial institution that is subject to Regulation C; (2) the types of transactions that are subject to Regulation C; (3) the data that financial institutions are required to collect, record, and report pursuant to Regulation C; and (4) the processes for reporting and disclosing HMDA data. The data are submitted electronically to the Bureau on behalf of the appropriate Federal agency associated with the reporter, and most of the data are made available to the public on both an aggregate and a loan-level basis.⁵

On May 24, 2018, the President signed the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act (2018 Act) into law.⁶ Effective May 24, 2018, Section 104(a) of the 2018 Act created partial exemptions from some of HMDA's requirements for certain covered institutions. On August 31, 2018, the Bureau issued an interpretive and procedural rule (2018 HMDA Rule) to implement and clarify Section 104(a)

² In December 2011, the Bureau restated the FRB's existing Regulation C at 12 CFR 1003. See 76 Fed. Reg. 78465 (Dec. 19, 2011).

V. Lending — HMDA

of the 2018 Act (2018 HMDA Rule). The 2018 HMDA Rule was published in the Federal Register on September 7, 2018.⁷

On April 16, 2020, the Bureau issued a final rule to increase the coverage threshold related to closed-end mortgage loan activity, among other changes (2020 HMDA Rule). The 2020 HMDA Rule was published in the Federal Register on May 12, 2020.⁸ Effective July 1, 2020, the origination threshold for coverage with respect to closed-end mortgage loans increased from at least 25 originations to at least 100 originations in each of the preceding two calendar years.

The Federal supervisory agencies use HMDA data to support a variety of activities.⁹ For example, some Federal supervisory agencies use HMDA data as part of their fair lending examination process, and other agencies use HMDA data in conducting Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) performance evaluations.¹⁰ Moreover, HMDA disclosures provide the public with information on the home mortgage lending activities of particular reporting entities and on activity in their communities. These disclosures are used by local, State, and Federal officials to evaluate housing trends and issues and by community organizations to monitor financial institution lending patterns. Because HMDA data serve numerous important purposes, validating the accuracy of HMDA data is a key element of the Federal supervisory agencies' examination activities.

Coverage

A. Institutional Coverage

Institutional Coverage Generally

An institution is required to comply with Regulation C only if it is a financial institution as that term is defined in Regulation C. The definition of financial institution includes both depository financial institutions and nondepository financial institutions, as those terms are separately defined in Regulation C. 12 CFR 1003.2(g).

An institution uses these two definitions, which are outlined below, as coverage tests to determine whether it is a financial institution that is required to comply with Regulation C. For the purpose of these examination procedures, the term financial institution refers to an institution that is either a depository financial institution or a nondepository financial institution that is subject to Regulation C.

Institutional Coverage Tests

Depository Financial Institutions

A bank, savings association, or credit union is a depository financial institution and subject to Regulation C if it meets ALL of the following:

1. Asset-Size Threshold. On the preceding December 31, the bank, savings association, or credit union had assets in excess of the asset-size threshold published annually in the Federal Register, as included in the Official Interpretations, 12 CFR Part 1003, Comment 2(g)-2, and posted on the Bureau's website. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(i). The phrase "preceding December 31" refers to the December 31 immediately preceding the current calendar year. For example, in 2019, the preceding December 31 is December 31, 2018. Comment 2(g)-1.
2. Location Test. On the preceding December 31, the bank, savings association, or credit union had a home or branch office located in a metropolitan statistical area (MSA). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(ii).
For purposes of this location test, a branch office for a bank, savings association, or credit union is an office: (a) of the bank, savings association, or credit union (b) that is considered a branch by the institution's Federal or State supervisory agency. For purposes of Regulation C, an automated teller machine or other free-standing electronic terminal is not a branch office regardless of whether the supervisory agency would consider it a branch. 12 CFR 1003.2(c)(1). A branch office of a credit union is any office where member accounts are established or loans are made, whether or not a Federal or State agency has approved the office as a branch. Comment 2(c)(1)-1.
3. Loan-Activity Test. During the preceding calendar year, the bank, savings association, or credit union originated at least one home purchase loan or refinancing of a home purchase loan secured by a first lien on a one-to-four-unit dwelling. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(iii). For more information on whether a loan is secured by a dwelling, is a home purchase loan, or is a refinancing, see 12 CFR 1003.2(f), (j), and (p) and associated commentary.
4. Federally Related Test. The bank, savings association, or credit union:
 - a. Is federally insured; or
 - b. Is federally regulated; or
 - c. Originated at least one home purchase loan or refinancing of a home purchase loan that was secured by a first lien on a one-to-four-unit dwelling and also (i) was insured, guaranteed, or supplemented by a Federal agency or (ii) was intended for sale to the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(iv).

5. Loan-Volume Thresholds. The bank, savings association, or credit union meets or exceeds either the closed-end mortgage loan or the open-end line of credit loan-volume threshold in each of the two preceding calendar years.
 - A bank, savings association, or credit union that originated at least 100 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years meets or exceeds the loan-volume threshold.

When the bank, savings association, or credit union determines whether it meets these loan-volume thresholds, it does not count transactions excluded by 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1) through (10) and (13). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(v). Closed-end mortgage loans, open-end lines of credit, and these excluded transactions are discussed below in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE.

When determining if it meets the loan-volume thresholds, a bank, savings association, or credit union only counts closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit that it originated. Only one institution is deemed to have originated a specific closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit under Regulation C, even if two or more institutions are involved in the origination process. Only the institution that is deemed to have originated the transaction under Regulation C counts it for purposes of the loan-volume threshold. Comment 2(g)-5; see also comments 4(a)-2 through -4. These requirements are discussed below in TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES.

Regulation C also includes a separate test to ensure that financial institutions that meet only the closed-end mortgage loan threshold are not required to report their open-end lines of credit, and that financial institutions that meet only the open-end line of credit threshold are not required to report their closed-end mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11) and (12).

Nondepository Financial Institutions

Under Regulation C, a for-profit mortgage-lending institution other than a bank, savings association, or credit union is a nondepository financial institution and subject to Regulation C if it meets BOTH of the following:

1. Location Test. The institution had a home or branch office in a metropolitan statistical area (MSA) on the preceding December 31. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(2)(i). The phrase “preceding December 31” refers to the December 31 immediately preceding the current calendar year. For example, in 2019, the preceding December 31 is December 31, 2018. Comment 2(g)-1.

For purposes of this location test, a branch office of a nondepository financial institution is any one of the institution’s offices at which the institution takes from the public applications for covered loans. A nondepository financial institution is also deemed to have a branch office in an MSA or metropolitan division (MD) if, in the preceding calendar year, it received applications for, originated, or purchased five or more covered loans related to property located in that MSA or MD, even if it does not have an office in that MSA. 12 CFR 1003.2(c)(2). Covered loans and applications for covered loans are discussed below in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE.

2. Loan-Volume Thresholds. The institution meets or exceeds either the closed-end mortgage loan threshold or the open-end line of credit threshold in each of the two preceding calendar years.
 - An institution that originated at least 100 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years meets or exceeds the loan-volume threshold.

When an institution determines whether it meets the loan-volume thresholds, it does not count transactions excluded by 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1) through (10) and (13). 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(2)(ii). Closed-end mortgage loans, open-end lines of credit, and these excluded transactions are discussed below in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE.

When determining if it meets the loan-volume thresholds, an institution only counts closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit that it originated. Only one institution is deemed to have originated a specific closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit under Regulation C, even if two or more institutions are involved in the origination process. Only the institution that is deemed to have originated the transaction under Regulation C counts it for purposes of the loan-volume threshold. Comment 2(g)-5. See also comments 4(a)-2 through -4. These requirements are discussed below in TRANSACTIONS WITH MULTIPLE ENTITIES.

Regulation C also includes a separate test to ensure that financial institutions that meet only the closed-end mortgage loan threshold are not required to report their open-end lines of credit, and that financial institutions that meet only the open-end line of credit threshold are not required to report their closed-end mortgage loans. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11)–(12).

B. Exemptions Based on State Law

Regulation C provides that financial institutions may apply for an exemption from coverage. Specifically, the Bureau may exempt a State-chartered or State-licensed financial institution if the Bureau determines that the financial institution is subject to a State disclosure law that contains requirements substantially similar to those imposed by Regulation C and adequate enforcement provisions. Any State-licensed or State-chartered financial institution or association of such institutions may apply to the Bureau for an exemption. An exempt institution shall submit the data required by State law to its State supervisory agency. 12 CFR 1003.3(a). A financial institution that loses its exemption must comply with Regulation C beginning with the calendar year following the year for which it last reported data under the State disclosure law. 12 CFR 1003.3(b).

V. Lending — HMDA

C. Transaction Coverage

A financial institution is required to collect, record, and report information only for transactions that are subject to Regulation C.

Covered Loans

A covered loan can be either a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit, but an excluded transaction cannot be a covered loan. 12 CFR 1003.2(e).

To determine if a transaction is subject to Regulation C, a financial institution should first determine whether the loan or line of credit involved in the transaction is either a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit. See CLOSED-END MORTGAGE LOANS AND OPEN-END LINES OF CREDIT, below. If the loan or line of credit is neither a closed-end mortgage loan nor an open-end line of credit, the transaction does not involve a covered loan, and the financial institution is not required to report information related to the transaction. If the loan or line of credit is either a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit, the financial institution must determine if the closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit is an excluded transaction. See EXCLUDED TRANSACTIONS, below. If the closed-end mortgage loan or the open-end line of credit is an excluded transaction, it is not a covered loan, and the financial institution is not required to report information related to the transaction. If the loan or line of credit is a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit and is not an excluded transaction, the financial institution may be required to report information related to the transaction. See REPORTABLE ACTIVITY, below.

Closed-End Mortgage Loans and Open-End Lines of Credit

A closed-end mortgage loan is:

1. An extension of credit;
2. Secured by a lien on a dwelling; and

3. Not an open-end line of credit. 12 CFR 1003.2(d).

An open-end line of credit is:

1. An extension of credit;
2. Secured by a lien on a dwelling; and
3. An open-end credit plan for which:
 - a. The lender reasonably contemplates repeated transactions;
 - b. The lender may impose a finance charge from time-to-time on an outstanding unpaid balance; and
 - c. The amount of credit that may be extended to the borrower during the term of the plan (up to any limit set by the lender) is generally made available to the extent that any outstanding balance is repaid. 12 CFR 1003.2(o); 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20).

Financial institutions may rely on Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20), and its official commentary when determining whether a transaction is extended under a plan for which the lender reasonably contemplates repeated transactions, the lender may impose a finance charge from time-to-time on an outstanding unpaid balance, and the amount of credit that may be extended to the borrower during the term of the plan is generally made available to the extent that any outstanding balance is repaid.

A business-purpose transaction that is exempt from Regulation Z but is otherwise open-end credit under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20), would be an open-end line of credit under Regulation C if it is an extension of credit secured by a lien on a dwelling and is not an excluded transaction. Comment 2(o)-1.

Extension of Credit

A closed-end loan or open-end line of credit is not a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit under Regulation C unless it involves an extension of credit. Individual draws on an open-end line of credit are not separate extensions of credit. Comment 2(o)-2.

Under Regulation C,¹¹ an “extension of credit” generally requires a new debt obligation. Comment 2(d)-2. Thus, for example, a loan modification where the existing debt obligation is not satisfied and replaced is not generally a covered loan (i.e., closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit) under Regulation C. Except as described below, if a transaction modifies, renews, extends, or amends the terms of an existing debt obligation, but the existing debt obligation is not satisfied and replaced, the transaction is not a covered loan.

¹¹ It is important to note that Regulation C, comments 2(d)-2 and 2(o)-2, defines the phrase “extension of credit” differently than Regulation B, 12 CFR Part 1002.2(q).

Regulation C provides two narrow exceptions to the requirement that an “extension of credit” involve a new debt obligation. The exceptions are designed to capture transactions that are substantially similar to new debt obligations and should be treated as such.

First, assumptions are extensions of credit under Regulation C. A loan assumption is a transaction in which a financial institution enters into a written agreement accepting a new borrower in place of an existing borrower as the obligor on an existing debt obligation. Regulation C clarifies that assumptions include successor-in-interest transactions in which an individual succeeds the prior owner as the property owner and then assumes the existing debt secured by the property. Assumptions are extensions of credit even if the new borrower merely assumes the existing debt obligation and no new debt obligation is created. Comment 2(d)-2.i.

Second, Regulation C provides that transactions completed pursuant to a New York State consolidation, extension, and modification agreement (New York CEMA) and classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law Section 255, such that the borrower owes reduced or no mortgage recording taxes, is an extension of credit. However, the regulation also provides that certain transactions providing new funds that are consolidated into a New York CEMA are excluded from the HMDA reporting requirements. Comment 2(d)-2.ii; 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(13).

Secured by a Lien on a Dwelling

A loan is not a closed-end mortgage loan and a line of credit is not an open-end line of credit unless it is secured by a lien on a dwelling. A dwelling is a residential structure. There is no requirement that the structure be attached to real property or that it be the applicant’s or borrower’s residence. Examples of dwellings include:

1. Principal residences;
2. Second homes and vacation homes;
3. Investment properties;
4. Residential structures whether or not attached to real property;
5. Detached residential structures;
6. Individual condominium and cooperative units;
7. Manufactured homes or other factory-built homes; and
8. Multifamily residential structures or communities, such as apartment buildings, condominium complexes, cooperative buildings or housing complexes, and manufactured home communities. 12 CFR 1003.2(f); comments 2(f)-1 and -2.

A dwelling is not limited to a structure that has four or fewer units. It also includes a multifamily dwelling, which is a dwelling that includes five or more individual dwelling units.

A multifamily dwelling includes a manufactured home community.

A loan related to a manufactured home community is secured by a dwelling even if it is not secured by any individual manufactured homes, but is secured only by the land that constitutes the manufactured home community. However, a loan related to a multifamily residential structure or community other than a manufactured home community is not secured by a dwelling unless it is secured by one or more individual dwelling units. For example, a loan that is secured only by the common areas of a condominium complex or only by an assignment of rents from an apartment building is not secured by a dwelling. Comment 2(f)-2. Further, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings, which are not multifamily dwellings, in more than one location is not a loan secured by a multifamily dwelling. For example, assume a landlord uses a covered loan to improve five or more dwellings, each with one individual dwelling unit, located in different parts of a town, and the loan is secured by those properties. The covered loan is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by § 1003.2(n). Likewise, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings that are located within a multifamily dwelling, but which is not secured by the entire multifamily dwelling (e.g., an entire apartment building or housing complex), is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by § 1003.2(n). For example, assume that an investor purchases 10 individual unit condominiums in a 100-unit condominium complex using a covered loan. The covered loan would not be secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by § 1003.2(n). Comment 2(n)-3.

The following are not dwellings:

1. Recreational vehicles, such as boats, campers, travel trailers, or park model recreational vehicles;
2. Houseboats, floating homes, or mobile homes constructed before June 15, 1976;
3. Transitory residences, such as hotels, hospitals, college dormitories, or recreational vehicle parks; and
4. Structures originally designed as a dwelling but used exclusively for commercial purposes, such as a home converted to a daycare facility or professional office. Comment 2(f)-3.

A property that is used for both residential and commercial purposes, such as a building that has apartment and retail units, is a dwelling if the property’s primary use is residential. Comment 2(f)-4.

A property used for both long-term housing and to provide assisted living or supportive housing services is a dwelling. However, transitory residences used to provide such services are not dwellings. Properties used to provide medical care, such as skilled nursing, rehabilitation, or long-term medical care, are not dwellings. If a property is used for long-term housing, to provide related services (such as assisted living), and to provide medical care, the property is a dwelling if its primary use is residential. Comment 2(f)-5.

A financial institution may use any reasonable standard to determine a property's primary use, such as square footage, income generated, or number of beds or units allocated for each use. It may select the standard on a case-by-case basis. Comments 2(f)-4 and -5.

D. Excluded Transactions

Regulation C does not apply to transactions that are specifically excluded from coverage. 12 CFR 1003.3(c). Therefore, an excluded transaction is not a covered loan. Regulation C retains and clarifies existing categories of transactions that are excluded from coverage. It also expands the existing exclusion for agricultural loans, and adds new categories of transactions that are excluded from coverage. The following are excluded transactions:

1. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that a financial institution originates or purchases in a fiduciary capacity, such as a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that a financial institution originates or purchases as a trustee. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1); comment 3(c)(1).
2. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit secured by a lien on unimproved land. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(2). Generally, a loan or line of credit must be secured by a dwelling to be a covered loan. Regulation C also lists closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit secured only by vacant or unimproved land as excluded transactions.¹² However, a loan or line of credit secured by a lien on unimproved land is deemed to be secured by a dwelling (and might not be excluded) if the financial institution knows, based on information that it receives from the applicant or borrower at the time the application is received or the credit decision is made, that the proceeds of that loan or credit line will be used within two years after closing or account opening to construct a dwelling on, or to purchase a dwelling to be placed on, the land. Comment 3(c)(2)-1.
3. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that is temporary financing. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(3). A transaction is excluded as temporary financing if it is designed to be replaced by separate permanent financing extended to the same borrower at a later time. The separate permanent financing may be extended by any lender (i.e., by either the lender that extended the temporary financing or another lender). In addition, a construction-only loan or line of credit is considered temporary financing and excluded under Regulation C if the loan or line of credit is extended to a person exclusively to construct a dwelling for sale. Comments 3(c)(3)-1 and -2.
4. The purchase of an interest in a pool of closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit, such as mortgage-participation certificates, mortgage-backed securities, or real estate mortgage investment conduits. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(4); comment 3(c)(4)-1.
5. The purchase solely of the right to service closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(5).
6. The purchase of a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit as part of a merger or acquisition or as part of the acquisition of all of a branch office's assets and liabilities. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(6); comment 3(c)(6)-1. For more information on mergers and acquisitions under Regulation C, see comments 2(g)-3 and -4.
7. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit, or an application for a closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit, for which the total dollar amount is less than $500. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(7).
8. The purchase of a partial interest in a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(8); comment 3(c)(8)-1.
9. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit if the proceeds are used primarily for agricultural purposes or if the closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit is secured by a dwelling that is located on real property that is used primarily for agricultural purposes. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(9); comment 3(c)(9)-1. Regulation C directs financial institutions to Regulation Z's official commentary for guidance on what is an agricultural purpose. Regulation Z's official commentary states that agricultural purposes include planting, propagating, nurturing, harvesting, catching, storing, exhibiting, marketing, transporting, processing, or manufacturing food, beverages, flowers, trees, livestock, poultry, bees, wildlife, fish, or shellfish by a natural person engaged in farming, fishing, or growing crops, flowers, trees, livestock, poultry, bees, or wildlife. See comment 3(a)-8 in the official interpretations of Regulation Z, 12 CFR Part 1026. A financial institution may use any reasonable standard to determine the primary use of the property, and may select the standard to apply on a case-by-case basis. Comment 3(c)(9)-1.
10. A closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that is or will be made primarily for business or not secured by any individual manufactured homes, but only by the land that constitutes the manufactured home community including sites for manufactured homes. Comment 2(f)(2).

commercial purposes, unless it is a home improvement loan, a home purchase loan, or a refinancing. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(10). Not all transactions that are primarily for a business purpose are excluded transactions. Thus, a financial institution must collect, record, and report data for dwelling-secured, business-purpose loans and lines of credit that are home improvement loans, home purchase loans, or refinancings if no other exclusion applies. For more information on determining whether a loan or line of credit is a home purchase loan, home improvement loan, or refinancing, see 12 CFR 1003.2(f), (i), (j), and (p) and the associated commentary.

Regulation C provides that, if a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit is deemed to be primarily for a business, commercial, or organizational purpose under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.3(a) and its official commentary, then the loan or line of credit also is deemed to be primarily for a business or commercial purpose. Comment 3(c)(10)-2. For more information and examples of business-purpose or commercial-purpose transactions that are covered loans, see comments 3(c)(10)-3 and -4.

11. A closed-end mortgage loan if the financial institution originated fewer than 100 closed-end mortgage loans in either of the two preceding calendar years. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11). A financial institution is not required to collect, record, or report closed-end mortgage loans if it originated fewer than 100 of them in either of the two preceding calendar years. However, the financial institution may still be required to collect and report information regarding open-end lines of credit, depending on the number of open-end lines of credit it originates in the preceding two calendar years. Comment 3(c)(11)-1. For more information on how to determine if a financial institution “originated” a particular loan when multiple entities are involved in the transaction, see comments 4(a)-2 through -4.

A financial institution may report applications for, originations of, and purchases of closed-end mortgage loans that are excluded transactions under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11). However, a financial institution that chooses to report such excluded applications, originations, and purchases must report all such applications it received for closed-end mortgage loans, all closed-end mortgage loans it originates, and all closed-end mortgage loans it purchases that would otherwise be covered loans for a given calendar year. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11). Regulation B permits a financial institution to collect information regarding the ethnicity, race, and sex of an applicant for a closed-end mortgage loan that is an excluded transaction under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11), if the financial institution submits HMDA data concerning such closed-end mortgage loans and applications or if it submitted such HMDA data for any of the preceding five calendar years.¹³

12. An open-end line of credit if the number of open-end lines of credit that the financial institution originated in either of the two preceding calendar years does not meet or exceed the applicable threshold. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12); comment 3(c)(12)-1. A financial institution is not required to collect, record, or report open-end lines of credit if it originated fewer than 500 of them in either of the two preceding calendar years. However, the financial institution will still be required to collect and report information regarding closed-end mortgage loans if it originated at least 100 of them in each of the two preceding calendar years. Comment 3(c)(12)-1. For more information on how to determine if a financial institution “originated” a particular line of credit when multiple entities are involved in the transaction, see comments 4(a)-2 through -4.

A financial institution may report applications for, originations of, or purchases of open-end lines of credit that are excluded transactions under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12). However, a financial institution that chooses to report such excluded applications, originations, or purchases must report all applications for otherwise covered open-end lines of credit that it receives, all otherwise covered open-end lines of credit it originates, and all otherwise covered open-end lines of credit it purchases that would otherwise be covered loans for a given calendar year. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12); comment 3(c)(12)-2. Regulation B permits a financial institution to collect information regarding the ethnicity, race, and sex of an applicant for an open-end line of credit that is an excluded transaction under 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12), if it submits HMDA data concerning such open-end lines of credit and applications or if it submitted such HMDA data for any of the preceding five calendar years.¹⁴

13. A transaction that provided (or, in the case of an application, proposed to provide) new funds to the borrower in advance of being consolidated in a New York CEMA classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law Section 255. However, the transaction is excluded only if final action on the consolidation was taken in the same calendar year as the final action on the new funds transaction. 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(13).

Additionally, the transaction is excluded only if, at the time that it originated the transaction providing the new funds, the financial institution intended to consolidate the loan into a New York CEMA. This exclusion does not apply to similar preliminary transactions that are consolidated pursuant to laws other than New York Tax Law Section 255. Such preliminary transactions under other laws must be reported if they are covered loans and are not covered by another exclusion. Comment 3(c)(13)-1.

New funds provided in advance of being consolidated into a New York CEMA classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law Section 255 are reported only insofar as they form part of the total amount of the reported New York CEMA. They are not reported as a separate amount. If a New York CEMA that consolidates an excluded preliminary transaction is carried out in a transaction involving an assumption, the financial institution reports the New York CEMA and does not report the preliminary transaction separately. Comment 3(c)(13)-1.

Reportable Activity

Once a financial institution has determined whether a transaction involves a covered loan, it must determine whether it has engaged in activity that obligates it to report information about the transaction. Generally, a financial institution is required to report information for actions taken on applications (as that term is defined below) for covered loans, originations of covered loans, and purchases of covered loans. If a financial institution receives an application and that application results in the financial institution originating a covered loan, the financial institution reports the origination of the covered loan, and does not separately report the application. For more information on when to report information regarding applications and covered loans, see APPLICATIONS and ORIGINATIONS AND PURCHASES OF COVERED LOANS, below. There are special rules that apply if multiple entities are involved in the transaction. These special rules are discussed in TRANSACTION INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES, below. There are also partial exemptions for which the financial institution would not be required to collect, record, or report certain data points for the transaction that qualifies for the partial exemption. These partial exemptions are discussed below in PARTIAL EXEMPTIONS.

A. Applications

For purposes of Regulation C, an application is: (a) an oral or written request (b) for a covered loan (c) that is made in accordance with procedures the financial institution uses for the type of credit requested. 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(1).

This definition of application is similar to the Regulation B definition, except that prequalification requests are not applications under Regulation C. Interpretations that appear in the official commentary to Regulation B are generally applicable to the definition of application under Regulation C, except for those interpretations that include a prequalification request within the definition of application. Comment 2(b)-1.

Under Regulation C, a request for a preapproval may be treated differently than a request for a prequalification for certain types of loans. The determination of whether a request is a prequalification request (which is not an application) or a preapproval request (which might be an application) is based on Regulation C, not on the labels that a financial institution uses or interpretations of other regulations, such as Regulation B.

A preapproval request is an application under Regulation C if the request is:

1. For a home purchase loan;
2. Not secured by a multifamily dwelling;
3. Not for an open-end line of credit or for a reverse mortgage; and
4. Reviewed under a preapproval program (see definition of preapproval program immediately below). 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(2).

A preapproval program for purposes of Regulation C is a program in which the financial institution:

1. Conducts a comprehensive analysis of the applicant's creditworthiness (including income verification), resources, and other matters typically reviewed as part of the financial institution's normal credit evaluation program; and then
2. Issues a written commitment that: (a) is for a home purchase loan; (b) is valid for a designated period of time and up to a specified amount; and (c) is subject only to specifically permitted conditions. 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(2); comment 2(b)-3.

The written commitment issued as part of the preapproval program can be subject to only the following types of conditions:

1. Conditions that require the identification of a suitable property;
2. Conditions that require that no material change occur regarding the applicant's financial condition or creditworthiness prior to closing; and
3. Limited conditions that (a) are not related to the applicant's financial condition or creditworthiness and (b) the financial institution ordinarily attaches to a traditional home mortgage application. Examples of conditions ordinarily attached to a traditional home mortgage application include requiring an acceptable title insurance binder or a certificate indicating clear termite inspection and, if the applicant plans to use the proceeds from the sale of the applicant's present home to purchase a new home, a settlement statement showing adequate proceeds from the sale of the present home. 12 CFR 1003.2(b)(2); comment 2(b)-3.

A program that a financial institution describes as a "preapproval program" but that does not satisfy the Regulation C definition is not a preapproval program for purposes of the regulation. Comment 2(b)-3.

If a financial institution does not regularly use procedures to consider requests but instead considers requests on an ad hoc basis, the financial institution is not required to treat the ad hoc requests as having been reviewed under a preapproval program. However, a financial institution should be generally consistent in following uniform procedures for considering such ad hoc requests. Comment 2(b)-3.

Under Regulation C, a financial institution must collect, record, and report data regarding an application it receives if: (1) the application did not result in the financial institution originating a covered loan; and (2) the financial institution took action on the application or the applicant withdrew the application while the financial institution was reviewing it. For example, a financial institution reports information regarding an application that it denied, that it approved but the applicant did not accept, or that it closed for incompleteness. 12 CFR 1003.4(a), 1003.5(a) comment 4(a)-1. If the application results in the financial institution originating a covered loan, the financial institution reports the covered loan, not the application itself. For more information on reporting applications when multiple entities are involved, see TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES, below.

Although requests under preapproval programs are applications, a financial institution reports data regarding a request under a preapproval program only if the preapproval request is denied or approved but not accepted. A financial institution will also report a request under a preapproval program that results in the financial institution originating a home purchase loan, but it will be reported as an originated covered loan. Comment 4(a)-1.ii.

A financial institution reports the data for an application, including a reportable preapproval request, on the HMDA Loan/Application Register (LAR) for the calendar year during which it takes action even if the financial institution received the application in a previous calendar year. Comment 4(a)-1.iv.

B. Originations and Purchases of Covered Loans

A financial institution must collect, record, and report information regarding originations and purchases of covered loans. For more information on when a financial institution reports the origination or purchase of a covered loan when multiple entities are involved, see TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING MULTIPLE ENTITIES, below.

A purchase includes a repurchase of a covered loan, regardless of whether the financial institution chose to repurchase the covered loan or was required to repurchase it because of a contractual obligation, and regardless of whether the repurchase occurred within the same calendar year that the covered loan was originated or in a different calendar year. Comment 4(a)-5.

A purchase does not include a temporary transfer of a covered loan to an interim funder or warehouse creditor as part of an interim funding agreement under which the financial institution that originated the covered loan is obligated to repurchase it for sale to a subsequent investor. Such funding agreements are often referred to as repurchase agreements and are sometimes used as the functional equivalents of warehouse lines of credit. Comment 4(a)-5.

C. Transactions Involving Multiple Entities

Only one financial institution reports the origination of a covered loan. If more than one institution is involved in the origination of a covered loan, the institution that makes the credit decision approving the application before loan closing or account opening is responsible for reporting the origination of the covered loan. It is not relevant whether the loan closed in the reporting financial institution's name. If more than one institution approved an application prior to loan closing or account opening and one of those institutions purchased the covered loan after closing or account opening, the institution that purchased the covered loan after closing or account opening is responsible for reporting the origination of the covered loan. Comment 4(a)-2.

If a financial institution reports a covered loan as an origination, it reports all of the information required to be reported for the origination of a covered loan, even if the covered loan was not initially payable to the financial institution that is reporting the covered loan as an origination. Comment 4(a)-2. When reporting a covered loan as an origination, a financial institution cannot rely on exceptions or exclusions that apply to purchased covered loans, but that do not apply to originations of covered loans. See comment 4(a)-2.

In the case of an application that did not result in an origination, a financial institution reports the action it took on that application if it made a credit decision on the application or was reviewing the application when the application was withdrawn or closed for incompleteness. The financial institution is also required to report the application if the financial institution was reviewing the application when it was withdrawn or the file was closed for incompleteness. Comment 4(a)-2.ii.

V. Lending — HMDA

If a financial institution makes a credit decision on a covered loan or application through the actions of an agent, the financial institution reports the covered loan or application. State law determines whether one party is the agent of another party. Comment 4(a)-4.

D. Partial Exemptions

The 2018 Act created partial exemptions from some of the 2015 HMDA Rule's requirements for certain financial institutions. Only certain covered loans and applications are covered under each of the two partial exemptions. If a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, the financial institution is not required to collect, record, and report specific data points. The partial exemptions were effective May 24, 2018, and apply to the collection, recording, and reporting of HMDA data on or after that date. A list of the data points covered by the partial exemptions is provided below. See A Guide to HMDA Reporting: Getting It Right! Appendix G for a list of both the partially exempt data fields and data points.

As discussed below, only a financial institution that is an insured credit union or an insured depository institution is eligible for the partial exemptions. Additionally, as explained below, in order to be eligible for the partial exemptions, an insured depository institution must not have received certain ratings in its most recent performance evaluations under the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA).¹⁵

As discussed below, each of the partial exemptions applies only to certain covered loans and applications and only if an applicable loan-volume threshold is met. An insured depository institution or insured credit union: (1) must meet the applicable loan-volume threshold for closed-end mortgage loans in order for a partial exemption to apply to its closed-end mortgage loan transactions; and (2) must meet the applicable loan-volume threshold for open-end lines of credit in order for a partial exemption to apply to its open-end line of credit transactions.

The 2018 Act created partial exemptions, not complete exclusions. Therefore, if a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, the financial institution is required to collect, record, and report 22 specific data points specified in 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(1)–(38), but is exempt from collecting, recording, and reporting 26 other specific data points for that transaction. Additionally, the financial institution may voluntarily report any or all of these remaining 26 data points for a covered loan or application covered by a partial exemption. COLLECTING, RECORDING, AND REPORTING FOR TRANSACTIONS COVERED BY A PARTIAL EXEMPTION, below, discusses the scope of the partial exemptions and includes tables that list both the 22 data points that are required to be collected, recorded, and reported and the 26 data points that are not required to be collected, recorded, and reported if a partial exemption applies to a covered loan or application.

Eligible Financial Institutions

In order to be eligible for a partial exemption, a financial institution must be an:

1. “Insured credit union,” as defined in Section 101 of the Federal Credit Union Act, 12 U.S.C. 1752; or
2. “Insured depository institution,” as defined in Section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 12 U.S.C. 1813.

Additionally, a financial institution that satisfies the definition of “insured depository institution” must not have received a less than satisfactory rating in its most recent CRA performance evaluations in order to be eligible for a partial exemption. More specifically, an insured depository institution must not have received either of the following:

1. A rating of “needs to improve record of meeting community credit needs” during each of its two most recent examinations under Section 807(b)(2) of the CRA; or
2. A rating of “substantial noncompliance in meeting community credit needs” on its most recent examination under Section 807(b)(2) of the CRA.

The CRA ratings used to determine if an insured depository institution is eligible for a partial exemption are the institution's two most recent ratings as of December 31 of the preceding year.

A financial institution that does not satisfy either the definition of an “insured credit union” or an “insured depository institution” may not rely on either of the partial exemptions, even if it satisfies the loan-volume thresholds discussed in LOAN-VOLUME THRESHOLDS, below. Similarly, an insured depository institution that does not satisfy the criteria regarding CRA examination history cannot rely on either of the partial exemptions.

Loan-Volume Thresholds

In order for a partial exemption to apply to an application or covered loan (including a purchased covered loan), an eligible financial institution must also meet the applicable loan-volume threshold.

¹⁵ Partial Exemptions from the Requirements of the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act Under the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act (Regulation C), 83 Fed. Reg. 45325 (Sept. 7, 2018).

A partial exemption applies to an eligible financial institution’s applications for, originations of, and purchases of closed-end mortgage loans if the institution originated fewer than 500 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years. When a financial institution determines whether it meets the loan-volume thresholds for a partial exemption, it does not count transactions excluded by 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1) through (10) and (13).

A partial exemption applies to an eligible financial institution’s applications for, originations of, and purchases of open-end lines of credit if the institution originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years. However, a financial institution is not required to collect or report any information for open-end lines of credit if the institution originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit during either of the two preceding calendar years. This is because open-end lines of credit are excluded transactions for a financial institution that originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit during either of the two preceding calendar years. See the discussion regarding excluded transactions in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE, above.

The partial exemption for closed-end mortgage loans and the partial exemption for open-end lines of credit operate independently of one another. Thus, in a given calendar year, an eligible financial institution may be able to rely on one or both partial exemptions.

Collecting, Recording, and Reporting for Transactions Covered by a Partial Exemption

If a partial exemption applies to a covered loan or application (as discussed above), the financial institution is not required to collect, record, and report some of the data points that the 2015 HMDA Rule would otherwise require the institution to collect, record, and report for that transaction. More specifically, if a partial exemption applies to a covered loan or application, a financial institution is not required under the HMDA Rule to collect, record, or report the 26 data points listed immediately below.

Data Points Eligible Financial Institutions Need Not Collect or Report under the 2018 HMDA Rule for Transactions Covered by a Partial Exemption

- Universal Loan Identifier (ULI) (1003.4(a)(1)(i))¹⁶
- Application Channel (1003.4(a)(33))
- Loan Term (1003.4(a)(25))
- Reasons for Denial (1003.4(a)(16))¹⁷
- Property Address (1003.4(a)(9)(i))

- Manufactured Home Secured Property Type (1003.4(a)(29))
- Manufactured Home Land Property Interest (1003.4(a)(30))
- Property Value (1003.4(a)(28))
- Multifamily Affordable Units (1003.4(a)(32))
- Debt-to-Income Ratio (1003.4(a)(23))
- Combined Loan-to-Value Ratio (1003.4(a)(24))
- Credit Score (1003.4(a)(15))
- Automated Underwriting System (1003.4(a)(35))
- Interest Rate (1003.4(a)(21))
- Introductory Rate Period (1003.4(a)(26))
- Rate Spread (1003.4(a)(12))
- Non-Amortizing Features (1003.4(a)(27))
- Total Loan Costs or Total Points and Fees (1003.4(a)(17))
- Origination Charges (1003.4(a)(18))
- Discount Points (1003.4(a)(19))
- Lender Credits (1003.4(a)(20))
- Prepayment Penalty Term (1003.4(a)(22))
- Reverse Mortgage Flag (1003.4(a)(36))
- Open-End Line of Credit Flag (1003.4(a)(37))
- Business or Commercial Purpose Flag (1003.4(a)(38))
- Mortgage Loan Originator Identifier (1003.4(a)(34))

A financial institution may opt to collect, record, and report one or more of these 26 data points for a covered loan or application that is covered by a partial exemption.

Seven of these 26 data points (i.e., property address, credit score, reasons for denial, total loan costs or total points and fees, non-amortizing features, application channel, and automated underwriting system) have multiple data fields. If a financial institution opts to report a data point with multiple fields, it must report all of the data fields that make up that data point.

If a financial institution opts not to report one of the 26 data points other than the ULI, the financial institution generally reports that the covered loan or application is exempt from that data point. However, if a data point is not applicable to the particular transaction and the transaction is exempt from that data point, the financial institution may choose to report either that the data point is not applicable or that the transaction is exempt from the data point.

If a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, a financial institution must collect, record, and report 22 data points for the covered loan or application. These 22 data points are set forth below.

¹⁶ If the financial institution chooses not to report a ULI for a covered loan or application covered by a partial exemption, it must report a non-universal loan identifier.

¹⁷ Financial institutions supervised by the OCC are required to report reasons for denial on their HMDA loan/application registers (HMDA LARs), even if a partial exemption applies. 12 CFR 27.3(a)(1)(i), 128.6.

V. Lending — HMDA

Data Points that Must Be Collected and Reported under the 2018 HMDA Rule for Covered Loans and Applications Covered by a Partial Exemption

- Ethnicity (1003.4(a)(10)(i))
- Race (1003.4(a)(10)(i))
- Sex (1003.4(a)(10)(i))
- Age (1003.4(a)(10)(ii))
- Income (1003.4(a)(10)(iii))
- Legal Entity Identifier (LEI) (1003.5(a)(3))
- Application Date (1003.4(a)(1)(ii))
- Preapproval (1003.4(a)(4))
- Loan Type (1003.4(a)(2))
- Loan Purpose (1003.4(a)(3))
- Loan Amount (1003.4(a)(7))
- Action Taken (1003.4(a)(8)(i))
- Action Taken Date (1003.4(a)(8)(ii))
- State (1003.4(a)(9)(ii)(A))
- County (1003.4(a)(9)(ii)(B))
- Census Tract (1003.4(a)(9)(ii)(C))
- Construction Method (1003.4(a)(5))
- Occupancy Type (1003.4(a)(6))
- Lien Status (1003.4(a)(14))
- Number of Units (1003.4(a)(31))
- HOEPA Status (1003.4(a)(13))
- Type of Purchaser (1003.4(a)(11))

Because the partial exemptions do not affect these 22 data points, financial institutions must continue to collect, record, and report these 22 data points for covered loans and applications in the manner specified in the 2015 HMDA Rule, as amended and clarified by the 2017 HMDA Rule. As discussed above, a financial institution is not required to collect or report any information for open-end lines of credit if the institution originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit during either of the two preceding calendar years. See the discussion regarding excluded transactions in TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE, above.

For more information on reporting data points if a covered loan or application is covered by a partial exemption, see the following COMPILATION OF LOAN DATA section of these procedures and the Filing Instructions Guide that incorporates the 2018 HMDA Rule available at <http://www.consumerfinance.gov/data-research/hmda/for-filers>.

Compilation of Loan Data

Attachment A is a summary of the data points required to be collected, recorded, and reported beginning in 2018 and provides information on where to find specific guidance in the regulation and commentary on what should be included for each data point.¹⁸ Additional information on the data fields and codes used in preparing the HMDA LAR is provided in the HMDA Filing Instructions Guide (FIG) available at <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov/>.¹⁹

Reporting

A. Recording

Regulation C requires a financial institution to record the data about a covered loan or application on a HMDA LAR within 30 calendar days after the end of the calendar quarter in which the financial institution takes final action on the covered loan or application. 12 CFR 1003.4(f). A financial institution is not required to record all of its HMDA data for a quarter on a single HMDA LAR. Rather, a financial institution may record data on a single HMDA LAR or may record data on one or more HMDA LARs for different branches or different loan types (such as home purchase loans or home improvement loans or loans on multifamily dwellings). Comment 4(f)-1.

Other State or Federal regulations may require a financial institution to record its data on a HMDA LAR more frequently. Comment 4(f)-2.

Financial institutions may maintain their quarterly records in electronic or any other format, provided they can make the information available to their regulatory agencies in a timely manner upon request. Comment 4(f)-3.

B. Reporting

In addition to the required data discussed in 12 CFR 1003.4(a) and (b), effective January 1, 2019, a financial institution must include the following when it submits its HMDA data:

1. Its name;

¹⁸ Each data point may correspond to more than one field reported on the HMDA LAR. Accordingly there are 48 data points described in Regulation C and 110 fields reported on the HMDA LAR. One example of a data point that corresponds to multiple fields is the ethnicity data point. Each applicant and co-applicant may enter up to five ethnicities on their application. See 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(10)(i); Appendix B to Part 1003.

¹⁹ The FIG, available at <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov/> contains the file specifications, edit specifications, and additional resources for filing HMDA data collected in or after 2018.

2. The calendar year and, effective January 1, 2020, if applicable, the calendar quarter to which the data relate (see 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(ii)²⁰ for information on quarterly reporting);
3. The name and contact information for a person who can be contacted with questions about the submission;
4. The financial institution's appropriate Federal agency;
5. The total number of entries in the submission;
6. The financial institution's Federal Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN); and
7. The financial institution's Legal Entity Identifier (LEI). 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(3).

If the appropriate Federal agency for a financial institution changes, the financial institution must identify its new appropriate Federal agency in its annual submission for the year of the change. Comment 5(a)-2. For example, if a financial institution's appropriate Federal agency changes in February 2018, it must identify its new appropriate Federal agency beginning with its annual submission of 2018 data by March 1, 2019. Comment 5(a)-5. For a financial institution required to comply with quarterly reporting requirements (see 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(ii)), the financial institution also must identify its new appropriate Federal agency in its quarterly submission beginning with its submission for the quarter of the change, unless the change occurs during the fourth quarter (in which case, the financial institution would identify the new appropriate Federal agency in its annual submission). For example, if the appropriate Federal agency for a financial institution changes during February 2020, the financial institution must identify its new appropriate Federal agency beginning with its quarterly submission for the first quarter of 2020. Comment 5(a)-2.

If a financial institution obtains a new TIN, it must provide the new TIN in its subsequent data submissions. For example, if two financial institutions that previously reported HMDA data merge and the surviving financial institution retained its LEI but obtained a new TIN, the surviving financial institution reports the new TIN beginning with its next HMDA data submission. Comment 5(a)-5.

A financial institution that is a subsidiary of a bank or savings association must complete its own HMDA LAR and submit it, directly or through its parent, to the appropriate Federal agency for the subsidiary's parent. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(2). A financial institution is a subsidiary of a bank or savings association (for purposes of reporting HMDA data to the same agency as the parent) if the bank or savings association holds or controls an ownership interest in the financial institution that is greater than 50 percent. Comment 5(a)-3.

C. Annual Reporting

Regulation C maintains the annual reporting requirement, but requires financial institutions to submit data electronically in accordance with the procedures published by the Bureau. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(5). These procedures do not provide detailed information about the HMDA submission process or file, data, and edit specifications. Information about those topics can be found on the FFIEC's web pages available at <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov> and <https://www.ffiec.gov/hmda/>.

Under Regulation C, a financial institution must submit its annual HMDA LAR in electronic format to its appropriate Federal supervisory agency by March 1 of the year following the calendar year for which the data are collected. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i). An individual who is an authorized representative of the financial institution and who has knowledge regarding the submitted data must certify its accuracy and completeness. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i).

A financial institution must retain a copy of its submitted annual HMDA LAR for at least three years. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i). Financial institutions may retain their annual HMDA LARs in either paper or electronic form. Comment 5(a)-4.

For more information on reporting under Regulation C or on the electronic submission of data, please see <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov>.

D. Quarterly Reporting

The HMDA Rule requires some financial institutions to report data on a quarterly basis as well as on an annual basis. The quarterly reporting requirement is effective January 1, 2020. It applies to a financial institution that reported at least 60,000 originated covered loans and applications (combined) for the preceding calendar year. The financial institution does not count purchased covered loans when determining whether the quarterly reporting requirement applies. If quarterly reporting is required, the financial institution must report all data required to be recorded for the calendar quarter within 60 calendar days after the end of the calendar quarter. The quarterly reporting requirement does not apply, however, to the fourth quarter of the year. A financial institution subject to the quarterly reporting requirement reports its fourth quarter data as part of its annual submission. In its annual submission, a quarterly reporter will resubmit the data previously submitted for the first three calendar quarters of the year, including any corrections to the data, as well as its fourth quarter data. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(ii).

²⁰ The quarterly reporting requirement, 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(ii), becomes effective January 1, 2020.

Disclosure of Data

A. Disclosure Statement

Under Regulation C, the FFIEC shall provide a notice to the financial institution that the financial institution's disclosure statement (aggregated data derived from loan-level data submitted for the prior calendar year) is available. 12 CFR 1003.5(b)(1). No later than three business days (any calendar day other than a Saturday, Sunday, or legal public holiday) after receiving notice from the FFIEC, the financial institution must make available to the public, upon request, a written notice that clearly conveys that the financial institution's disclosure statement may be obtained on the Bureau's website at <http://www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda>. 12 CFR 1003.5(b)(2); comment 5(b)-1. A financial institution's disclosure statement may also be obtained from <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov>. A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the sample notice in to satisfy Regulation C's disclosure statement requirement. The notice may be made available in paper or electronic form. Comment 5(b)-2.

A financial institution must make the notice available to the public for a period of five years. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(1).

At its discretion, a financial institution may also provide its disclosure statement and impose a reasonable fee for costs incurred reproducing or providing the statement. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(2). Even if it provides the disclosure statement, a financial institution must comply with the notice requirement.

B. Modified HMDA LAR²¹

Upon request from a member of the public, a financial institution must provide a written notice regarding the availability of its modified HMDA LAR (the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau to protect applicant and borrower privacy). 12 CFR 1003.5(c). The written notice must clearly convey that the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau to protect borrower and applicant privacy, may be obtained on the Bureau's website at <http://www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda>. A financial institution's HMDA LAR is also available at <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov>.

A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the sample notice in comment 5(c)-2 to the regulation to satisfy Regulation C's modified HMDA LAR requirement. Comment 5(c)-2. A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the same notice for purposes of this disclosure requirement and the disclosure statement requirement discussed in the DISCLOSURE STATEMENT section above. The notice may be made available in paper or electronic form. Comment 5(c)-1.

The notice must be made available in the calendar year following the calendar year for which the financial institution collected data. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(1). The notice must be made available for three years. For example, for data that it was required to collect in 2018, a financial institution must make available a notice through calendar year 2021 that its modified HMDA 2018 LAR is available.

At its discretion, a financial institution may also provide its HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau, and impose a reasonable fee for any costs incurred to reproduce or provide the data. 12 CFR 1003.5(d)(2). Even if it decides to provide the modified HMDA LAR, a financial institution must comply with the notice requirement.

C. Posted Notices

A financial institution must post, in the lobby of its home office and each branch office physically located in an MSA or Metropolitan Division (MD), a general notice about the availability of its HMDA data on the Bureau's website. 12 CFR 1003.5(e). A financial institution may, but is not required to, use the sample notice in comment 5(e)-1 to the regulation to satisfy this requirement. In any case, the notice must clearly convey that the financial institution's HMDA data are available on the Bureau's website at <http://www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda>. Comment 5(e)-1.

D. Aggregated Data

The FFIEC will use the annual data submitted pursuant to Regulation C to make available aggregated data for each MSA and MD, showing lending patterns by property location, age of housing stock, and income level, sex, ethnicity, and race. 12 CFR 1003.5(f).

Administrative Enforcement

A violation of Regulation C is subject to administrative sanctions, including civil money penalties. Compliance can be enforced by the Bureau, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, the FDIC, the FRB, the National Credit Union Administration, or the Office of the Comptroller of Currency.

An error in compiling or recording data for a covered loan or application is not a violation of HMDA or Regulation C if the error was unintentional and occurred despite maintenance of procedures reasonably adapted to avoid such errors. 12 CFR 1003.6(b)(1). However, a financial institution that obtains the property-location information for applications and covered loans from third parties is responsible for ensuring that the information reported is correct. Comment 6(b)-1. An incorrect entry for a census tract number is deemed a bona fide error and is not a violation if the financial institution maintains procedures reasonably adapted to avoid such an error. 12 CFR 1003.6(b)(2).

If an institution makes a good-faith effort to record all data concerning covered transactions fully and accurately within thirty calendar days after the end of each calendar quarter, and some data are nevertheless inaccurate or incomplete, the error or omission is not a violation of HMDA or Regulation C, provided that the institution corrects or completes the information prior to submitting the loan/application register to its regulatory agencies. 12 CFR 1003.6(b)(3).

WHO MUST REPORT: HMDA INSTITUTIONAL COVERAGE

Coverage criteria | Effective July 1, 2020, through December 31, 2021¹

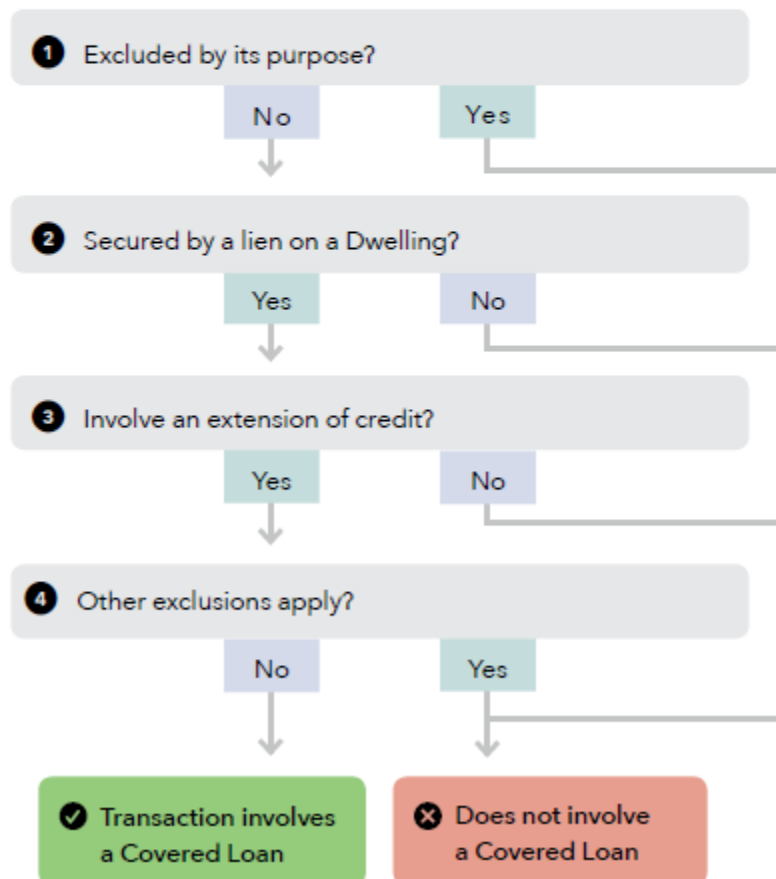

HMDA TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE

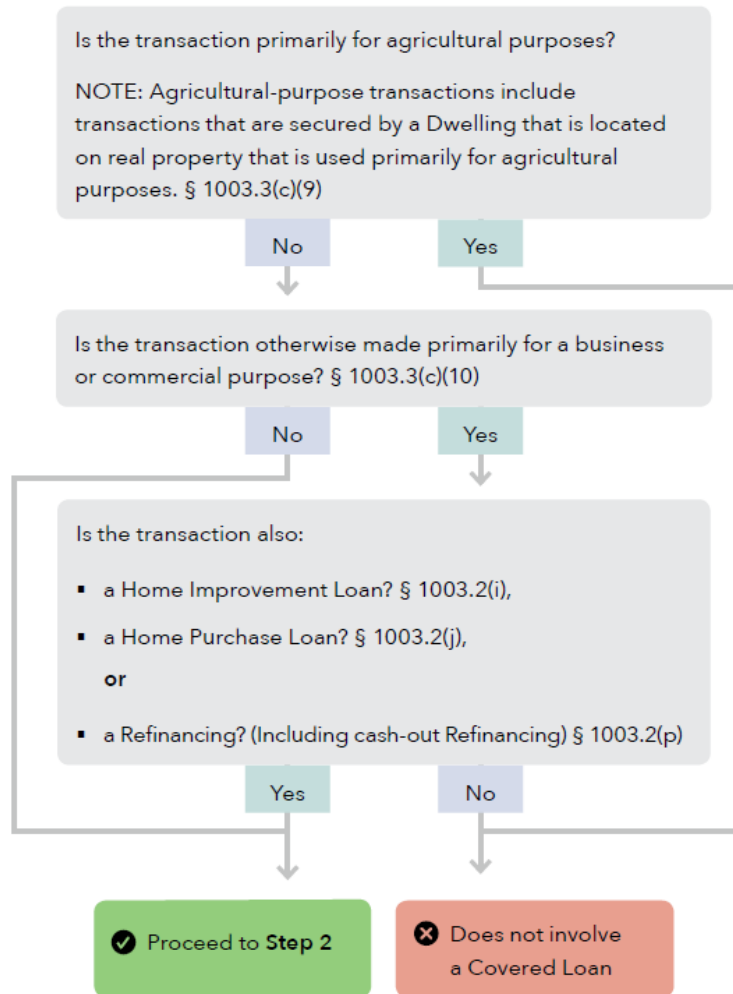

Effective July 1, 2020, through December 31, 2021

Under HMDA and Regulation C, a transaction is reportable only if it is an Application for, an origination of, or a purchase of a Covered Loan. These materials illustrate one approach to help determine whether a transaction involves a Covered Loan. If the transaction involves a Covered Loan, it is reported only if the institution meets the applicable loan-volume thresholds. Terms that are defined in Regulation C are capitalized in this document for ease of reference.

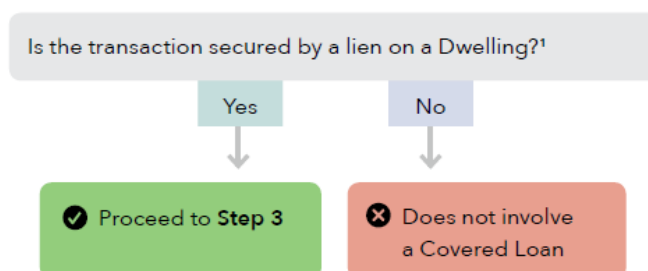

Does the transaction involve a Covered Loan?

1 Is the transaction excluded by its purpose?

2 Is the transaction secured by a lien on a Dwelling?¹

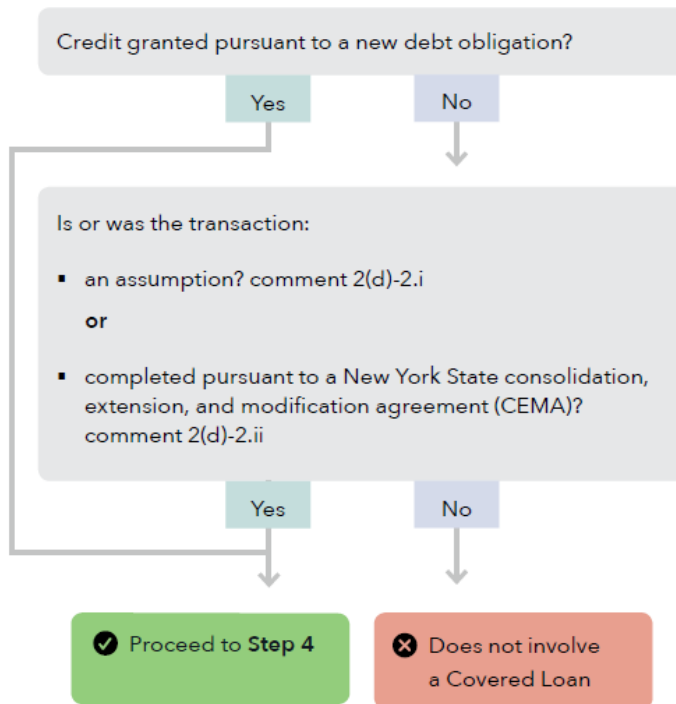

Use the table below to help determine whether the transaction is secured by a lien on a Dwelling.

Single family structures	Multifamily structures	Mixed-use purposes
Dwelling	Dwelling	Dwelling
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Principal residences Second homes Vacation homes Manufactured Homes or other factory built homes Investment properties Individual condominium units Detached homes Individual cooperative units 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Apartment buildings or complexes Manufactured home communities Condominium buildings or complexes Cooperative buildings or complexes 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Mixed-use property if primary use is residential Properties for long-term housing and related services (such as assisted living for senior citizens or supportive housing for people with disabilities) Properties for long-term housing and medical care if primary use is residential
Not a Dwelling	Not a Dwelling	Not a Dwelling
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Transitory residences Recreational vehicles Boats Campers Travel trailers Park model RVs Floating homes Houseboats Mobile homes constructed before June 15, 1976 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Transitory residences Hotels Hospitals and properties used to provide medical care (such as skilled nursing, rehabilitation, or long-term medical care) College dormitories Recreational vehicle parks 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Mixed-use property if primary use is not residential Transitory residences Structures originally designed as Dwellings but used exclusively for commercial purposes Properties for long-term housing and medical care if primary use is not residential ¹Dwelling means a residential structure, whether or not attached to real property. § 1003.2(f) and comments 2(f)-1 through -5.

3 Does the transaction involve an extension of credit?²

² Generally under Regulation C, an extension of credit refers to the granting of credit only pursuant to a new debt obligation. If the transaction modifies, renews, extends, or amends the terms of an existing debt obligation, but the existing debt obligation is not satisfied and replaced, the transaction is not a new extension of credit, unless it falls within the two exceptions noted above. § 1003.2(d) and (o), and comments 2(d)-2 and 2(o)-2

4 Do other exclusions apply? § 1003.3(c)(1) through (8) and (c)(13)

Is or was the transaction:

- originated or purchased by the Financial Institution acting in a fiduciary capacity?
- secured by a lien on unimproved land?
- temporary financing?
- the purchase of an interest in a pool of otherwise Covered Loans, such as mortgage-participation certificates, mortgage-backed securities, or real estate mortgage investment conduits?
- the purchase solely of the right to service an otherwise Covered Loan?
- a purchase as part of a merger or acquisition, or as part of the acquisition of all of the assets and liabilities of a branch office?
- for a total dollar amount that is less than $500?
- a purchase of a partial interest in an otherwise Covered Loan?
- to provide new funds in advance of a consolidation agreement completed pursuant to a New York State CEMA where consolidation occurred in the same year as final action on the transaction?

If YES to any of the questions

✔ Transaction involves

✔ Transaction involves a Covered Loan

Regulation C provides different loan-volume reporting thresholds for transactions that involve a Covered Loan depending on whether they involve a Closed-End Mortgage Loan or an Open-End Line of Credit. § 1003.3(c)(11) and (12). Reporting is required if a threshold is met in each of the two preceding calendar years.³

Closed-End Mortgage Loan § 1003.2(d) Open-End Line of Credit § 1003.2(o)

- Only originated Covered Loans count toward the loan-volume thresholds. If a threshold is met, the institution reports all Applications for Covered Loans that it receives, Covered Loans that it originates, and Covered Loans that it purchases for that type of transaction (either Closed-End Mortgage Loan or Open-End Line of Credit, or both, if both thresholds are met).
- Covered consumer and business or commercial purpose originations should be counted together when assessing the individual thresholds for Closed-End Mortgage Loans and Open-End Lines of Credit.
- A financial institution may voluntarily report Closed-End Mortgage Loans or Open-End Lines of Credit that are excluded because the financial institution does not meet the transactional threshold for that type of transaction. However, if it chooses to voluntarily report Closed-End Mortgage Loans or Open-End Lines of Credit, the financial institution must report all such transactions that would otherwise be covered loans for that calendar year.

³This chart is effective July 1, 2020 through December 31, 2021. On January 1, 2022, the Open End Line of Credit threshold will adjust to 200. Prior to July 1, 2020, the closed-end threshold is 25.

Examination Objectives

1. To determine the accuracy and timeliness of the financial institution's HMDA LAR.
2. To determine the financial institution's compliance with disclosure requirements.

Examination Procedures²²

Initial Procedures

A. Institutional Coverage

Determine whether an institution is subject to Regulation C because it meets the definition of financial institution. 12 CFR 1003.2(g).

Depository Financial Institutions

A depository financial institution is subject to Regulation C if the requirements of 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1) are met. If the institution is a bank, savings association, or credit union, determine whether it meets the Asset-Size Threshold Test, the Location Test, the Loan Activity Test, the Federally Related Test, and the Loan-Volume Threshold Test, which are listed below. If all five tests are satisfied, then the financial institution is required to report mortgage data in accordance with Regulation C.

1. Asset-Size Threshold Test. Determine whether, on the preceding December 31, the institution had assets in excess of the asset-size threshold published annually in the Federal Register, as included in the Official Interpretations, 12 CFR Part 1003, comment 2(g)-2. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(i).
2. Location Test. Determine whether, on the preceding December 31, the institution had a home or branch office located in an MSA. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(ii).
3. Loan Activity Test. Determine whether the institution originated at least one home purchase loan or refinancing of a home purchase loan secured by a first lien on a one-to-four-unit dwelling during the preceding calendar year. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(iii).
4. Federally Related Test. Determine whether the institution meets one of following criteria:
 - a. The institution is federally insured or federally regulated.

(12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(iv)(A)); or

- b. The institution originated at least one home purchase loan or refinancing of a home purchase loan that was secured by a first lien on a one-to-four-unit dwelling and also (i) was insured, guaranteed, or supplemented by a Federal agency or (ii) was intended for sale to Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac (12 CFR 1003.2(g)(1)(iv)(B)).
5. Loan-Volume Threshold Test. Determine whether the institution originated at least 100 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years. Determine whether transactions are appropriately excluded from coverage by Regulation C according to criteria in 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1)–(13). The list of excluded transactions and definitions for closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit are described below in the Transactional Coverage section of these procedures.

Nondepository Financial Institutions

A nondepository financial institution is subject to Regulation C if the requirements of 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(2) are met. If the institution is a nondepository financial institution other than a bank, savings association, or credit union, determine whether it meets the Location Test and the Loan-Volume Threshold Test described below. If both tests are satisfied, then the financial institution is required to report mortgage data in accordance with Regulation C.

1. Location Test. Determine whether the institution had a home or branch office in an MSA on the preceding December 31. 12 CFR 1003.2(g)(2)(i).
2. Loan-Volume Threshold Test. Determine whether the institution originated at least 100 closed-end mortgage loans in each of the two preceding calendar years, or originated at least 500 open-end lines of credit in each of the two preceding calendar years. Determine whether any transactions are appropriately excluded from coverage by Regulation C according to criteria in 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1)–(13).

The list of excluded transactions and definitions for closed-end mortgage loans and open-end lines of credit are described below in the TRANSACTIONAL COVERAGE section.

²² These procedures are substantially similar to those adopted as interagency examination procedures in 2019. See FIL-16-2019, FFIEC A Guide to HMDA Reporting: Getting It Right! for 2019 HMDA Data and Updated HMDA Examination Procedures. Revisions have been made to reflect amendments to Regulation C through a final rule that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau published in 2020. See 85 Fed. Reg. 28364 (May 12, 2020).

Merger or Acquisition Activity

If recent merger or acquisition activity has occurred, determine whether the surviving or newly formed institution meets the definition of financial institution in 12 CFR 1003.2(g). After a merger or acquisition, the surviving or newly formed institution is a financial institution according to 12 CFR 1003.2(g) if it, considering the combined assets, location, and lending activity of the surviving or newly formed institution and the merged or acquired institutions or acquired branches, satisfies the criteria included in 12 CFR 1003.2(g). For examples of institutional coverage by Regulation C after merger or acquisition activity, please see Official Interpretations, Supplement I to 12 CFR Part 1003, comment 2(g)-3.

B. Transactional Coverage

Determine whether a transaction is subject to Regulation C because it:

- (1) meets the definition of a covered loan as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(e), and
- (2) is not an excluded transaction as defined in 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1)–(13).

Covered Loans

Institutions that meet the definition of financial institution according to 12 CFR 1003.2(g) must report data on transactions that meet the definition of a covered loan in 12 CFR 1003.2(e). Types of transactions enumerated in 12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1)–(13) are explicitly excluded from Regulation C reporting requirements.

1. Covered Loan. Determine whether the transaction meets the definition of covered loan according to 12 CFR 1003.2(e) and should be reported under Regulation C. A covered loan is a closed-end mortgage loan or an open-end line of credit that is not a transaction specifically excluded from the reporting requirements of the regulation.

- a. Determine whether the transaction is a closed-end mortgage loan as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(d). A closed-end mortgage loan is:
 - i. An extension of credit;
 - ii. Secured by a lien on a dwelling; and
 - iii. Is not an open-end line of credit, as defined by 12 CFR 1003.2(o).
- b. Determine whether the transaction is an open-end line of credit as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(o). An open-end line of credit is:
 - i. An extension of credit;
 - ii. Secured by a lien on a dwelling; and

- iii. Is an open-end credit plan as defined in Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(20), but without regard to whether the credit is consumer credit, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(12), is extended by a creditor as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(17), or is extended to a consumer as defined in 12 CFR 1026.2(a)(11).

Note: Further, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings, which are not multifamily dwellings, in more than one location is not a loan secured by a multifamily dwelling. For example, assume a landlord uses a covered loan to improve five or more dwellings, each with one individual dwelling unit, located in different parts of a town, and the loan is secured by those properties. The covered loan is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by § 1003.2(n). Likewise, a covered loan secured by five or more separate dwellings that are located within a multifamily dwelling, but which is not secured by the entire multifamily dwelling (e.g., an entire apartment building or housing complex), is not secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by § 1003.2(n). For example, assume that an investor purchases 10 individual unit condominiums in a 100-unit condominium complex using a covered loan. The covered loan would not be secured by a multifamily dwelling as defined by § 1003.2(n). Comment 2(n)-3.

3. Excluded Transactions. Determine whether the type of transaction is listed as an excluded transaction in 12 CFR 1003.3(c). The following transactions are not required to be reported under Regulation C:
 - a. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit originated or purchased by a financial institution acting in a fiduciary capacity (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(1));
 - b. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit secured by a lien on unimproved land (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(2));
 - c. Temporary financing (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(3));
 - d. The purchase of an interest in a pool of closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(4));
 - e. The purchase solely of the right to service closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(5));
 - f. The purchase of closed-end mortgage loans or open-end lines of credit as part of a merger or acquisition, or as part of the acquisition of all of the assets and liabilities of a branch office as defined in 12 CFR 1003.2(c) (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(6));
 - g. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit, or an application for a closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit, for which the total

- dollar amount is less than $500 (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(7));
- h. The purchase of a partial interest in a closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(8));
 - i. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit that is or will be used primarily for agricultural purposes (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(9));
 - j. A closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit that is or will be made primarily for a business or commercial purpose, unless the closed-end mortgage loan or open-end line of credit is a home improvement loan under 12 CFR 1003.2(i), a home purchase loan under 12 CFR 1003.2(j), or a refinancing under 12 CFR 1003.2(p) (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(10));
 - k. Exclusions based on a financial institution's loan volume:
 - i. An institution that originated fewer than 100 closed-end mortgage loans in either of the two preceding calendar years is not required to report closed-end mortgage loans (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(11)).
 - ii. An institution that originated fewer than 500 open-end lines of credit in either of the two preceding calendar years is not required to report open-end lines of credit, (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(12)).
 - l. A transaction that provided or, in the case of an application, proposed to provide new funds to the applicant or borrower in advance of being consolidated in a New York State consolidation, extension, and modification agreement (as before, New York CEMA) classified as a supplemental mortgage under New York Tax Law section 255, where final action was taken on the consolidation and the new funds transaction in the same calendar year. (12 CFR 1003.3(c)(13)).
- c. Disclosure statement. Determine whether no later than three business days after the financial institution receives notice from the FFIEC that the financial institution's disclosure statement is available the financial institution makes available to the public upon request at its home office, and each branch office physically located in each MSA and each MD, a written notice that clearly conveys that the financial institution's disclosure statement may be obtained on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. 12 CFR 1003.5(b)(2). A financial institution's disclosure statement may also be obtained from <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov>.
 - d. Modified HMDA LAR. Determine whether the financial institution makes available to the public upon request at its home office, and each branch office physically located in each MSA and each MD, a written notice that clearly conveys that the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as modified by the Bureau to protect applicant and borrower privacy, may be obtained on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. 12 CFR 1003.5(c). A financial institution's modified HMDA LAR may also be obtained from <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov>.
 - e. Posted notice of availability of data. Determine whether the financial institution posts a general notice about the availability of its HMDA data in the lobby of its home office and of each branch office located in each MSA and each MD. This notice must clearly convey that the financial institution's HMDA data is available on the Bureau's website at www.consumerfinance.gov/hmda. 12 CFR 1003.5(e). A financial institution's HMDA data is also available at <https://ffiec.cfpb.gov>.

If the financial institution is a bank or savings association and has a subsidiary covered by HMDA, determine whether the subsidiary completed a separate HMDA LAR and either submitted it directly or through its parent to the appropriate Federal agency for the parent. For this purpose, a financial institution is a subsidiary of a bank or savings association if the bank or savings association holds or controls an ownership interest of greater than 50 percent in the financial institution. (12 CFR 1003.5(a)(2), comment 5(a)-6).

FFIEC HMDA Examiner Transaction Testing Guidelines

1. To conduct HMDA transaction testing, examiners select a random sample of entries from the financial institution's HMDA LAR (Total Sample) and ask the financial institution to provide the loan or application

Disclosure and Reporting – 12 CFR 1003.5

- Determine whether the financial institution satisfies requirements related to disclosure and reporting:
 - a. Reporting to agency. Determine whether the financial institution submits its HMDA LAR to the appropriate Federal agency no later than March 1 following the calendar year for which the data are compiled. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i).
 - b. HMDA LAR retention. Determine whether the financial institution retained a copy of its submitted annual HMDA LAR for at least three years. 12 CFR 1003.5(a)(1)(i).

V. Lending — HMDA

files (loan files) that correspond to the HMDA LAR sample entries. The size of the Total Sample will depend on the size of the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as shown in column A of the "HMDA Transaction Testing Sample Sizes and Thresholds" table (HMDA table) on page 27.

2. If a financial institution's HMDA data are collected through multiple data collection and reporting systems, examiners may test a single sample from the financial institution's entire HMDA LAR, test separate samples from each system, or test samples from selected systems chosen based on risk. If examiners do not take a single sample from the entire HMDA LAR, they should document in their work papers from which system(s) they chose the sample(s) and why.
3. Once examiners receive the loan files from the financial institution, they should verify the accuracy of the data in the entries in the HMDA LAR sample(s) against the corresponding loan files. Examiners should document in their work papers any differences between the data in the HMDA LAR and information in files, and determine whether the differences may be explained by any additional information that the financial institution may provide. Differences that are not adequately explained should be identified as errors.
4. All data fields within the sample may be reviewed, or the supervisory agency may prioritize designated fields for review.
5. HMDA transaction testing can be divided into two stages. Both stages test for errors only in individual data fields that are selected for review as provided above in paragraph 4. In Stage 1, examiners review only a subset of the sample (Initial Sample). The size of the Initial Sample will depend on the size of the financial institution's HMDA LAR, as shown in column B of the HMDA table. If the number of errors identified in the Initial Sample falls below the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table for each and every data field reviewed, no further sample review is required and the examiners may conclude the transaction testing. If the number of errors in any data field reviewed equals or exceeds the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table, examiners should proceed to Stage 2 and review the remainder of the Total Sample. In Stage 2, examiners must review all data fields that had one or more errors in the Initial Sample and may review any or all Initial Sample data fields reviewed and found to have no errors in Stage 1.
6. If, after reviewing the remainder of the Total Sample in Stage 2, the total number of errors in any data field equals or exceeds the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, examiners should direct the financial institution to correct any such data field in its full HMDA LAR and resubmit its HMDA LAR with the corrected data field(s).

7. A financial institution may also be directed to correct one or more individual data fields and resubmit its HMDA LAR, even if errors in that field or fields do not meet the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, if examiners have a reasonable basis to believe that errors in that field or fields will likely make analysis of the HMDA data unreliable. To illustrate, assume examiners discover that a financial institution has incorrectly coded withdrawn applications as denials to such an extent that it likely prevents reliable analysis of underwriting disparities in a fair lending examination. Examiners may direct a financial institution to correct the Action Taken data field and resubmit the HMDA LAR even if the number of Action Taken errors found in the Total Sample does not equal or exceed the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table.
8. A financial institution may be directed to resubmit its HMDA LAR in order to include reportable applications or loans that examiners determined were previously omitted from the HMDA LAR.

Tolerances

9. For the sole purpose of determining whether the number of errors equals or exceeds the Initial Sample Threshold in column C or the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, examiners should not count the following differences between data in the HMDA LAR and in the loan files as errors:
 - Three calendar days or less in the date the application was received or the date shown on the application form reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(1)(ii);
 - One thousand dollars or less in the amount of the covered loan or the amount applied for, as applicable, reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(7);
 - Three calendar days or less in the date of the action taken by the financial institution reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(8)(ii), provided that such differences do not result in reporting data for the wrong calendar year; and
 - Rounding errors in reporting the dollar amount, rounded to the nearest thousand, of the gross annual income relied on in making the credit decision or, if a credit decision was not made, the gross annual income relied on in processing the application, reported pursuant to 12 CFR 1003.4(a)(10)(iii).

To illustrate, if a loan file indicates June 4 as the application date, a HMDA LAR application date of June 1 or June 7 would not be counted as an error because it is within three calendar days of June 4, but a HMDA

LAR application date of May 31 or June 8 would be counted as an error because it is more than three calendar days from June 4.

Ethnicity or Race Data Errors

10. For purposes of these guidelines, the term “data field” generally refers to individual HMDA Filing Instructions Guide (FIG) fields, each identified by a distinct Data Field Number and Data Field Name. With respect to information on the ethnicity or race of an applicant or borrower, or co-applicant or co-borrower, however, a data field consists of a group of FIG fields as follows:

- The Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower data field group: comprised of six FIG fields with information on an applicant’s or borrower’s ethnicity (FIG Data Field Numbers 19-24);
- The Ethnicity of Co-Applicant or Co-Borrower data field group: comprised of six FIG fields with information on a co-applicant’s or co-borrower’s ethnicity (FIG Data Field Numbers 25-30);
- The Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group: comprised of eight FIG fields with information on an applicant’s or borrower’s race (FIG Data Field Numbers 33-40); and
- The Race of Co-Applicant or Co-Borrower data field group: comprised of eight FIG fields with information on a co-applicant’s or co-borrower’s race (FIG Data Field Numbers 41-48).²³

To illustrate, for an applicant who indicates “Hispanic or Latino” and “Mexican” in response to the question of ethnicity, a financial institution reports the information in two FIG fields, for example, Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower: 1 (1: Hispanic or Latino) and Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower: 2 (11: Mexican). If one or more of the six Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower FIG fields have errors, they would count as one (and only one) error for that data field group. If the Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower data field group has errors in the Total Sample that meet or exceed the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, examiners should direct the financial institution to correct the six Ethnicity of Applicant or Borrower FIG fields and resubmit its HMDA LAR with those FIG fields corrected. See example 4 in the HMDA TRANSACTION TESTING SAMPLE SIZES AND THRESHOLDS section below.²⁴

Prospective Changes

11. Examiners may direct the financial institution to make any appropriate changes in its policies, procedures, audit processes, or other aspects of its compliance management system needed to prevent the reoccurrence of errors identified within the sample that are—absent such changes—capable of repetition, even if the number of errors does not equal or exceed either the Initial Sample Threshold in column C or the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table, or even if the errors fall within the tolerances provided in paragraph 9.

HMDA Transaction Testing Sample Sizes and Thresholds

HMDA LAR count	A Total Sample size	B Initial Sample size	C Initial Sample Threshold	D Resubmission Threshold
25–50	30*	15	2	3	10.0*
51–100	30	20	2	3	10.0
101–130	47	29	2	3	6.4
131–190	56	29	2	3	5.4
191–500	59	30	2	3	5.1
501–100,000	79	35	2	4	5.1
100,001+	159	61	2	4	2.5

*For financial institutions with fewer than 30 HMDA LAR lines, the full sample size is the financial institution’s total number of HMDA LAR lines. The Resubmission Threshold number remains at 3. Accordingly, the Resubmission Threshold percentage will be higher for financial institutions with fewer than 30 HMDA LAR lines.

²³ Data fields indicating whether ethnicity or race information was collected on the basis of visual observation or surname (FIG Data Field Numbers 31, 32, 49, and 50) are not included in any data group enumerated in paragraph 10 and are treated as individual data fields for purposes of these guidelines.

²⁴ Example 4 describes analogous error rates and corrective actions for the race field.

Examples

1. Financial Institution A's HMDA LAR contains 35 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 30 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.
 - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 15 as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find two errors in the Action Taken data field, which equals the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table.
 - Accordingly, the examiners proceed to review the remaining 15 entries in the Total Sample and find one additional error in the Action Taken data field for a total of three errors in that field, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table. In the review of the remaining entries in the Total Sample, examiners also find two errors in the Rate Spread data field, which is below the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table.
 - Therefore, Financial Institution A is directed to correct the Action Taken data field and resubmit its HMDA LAR with that field corrected.
2. Financial Institution B's HMDA LAR contains 125 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 47 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.
 - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 29 loans as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find one error in the Action Taken data field, which is less than the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table; one error in the Loan Type data field, which is less than the Initial Sample Threshold; and no other errors.
 - Therefore, examiners end the HMDA transaction testing for Financial Institution B and do not proceed to Stage 2 testing of the 18 remaining entries in the Total Sample because no Stage 1 errors in any single data field equaled or exceeded the Initial Sample Threshold.
3. Financial Institution C's HMDA LAR contains 500,000 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 159 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.
 - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 61 loans as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find two errors in the Action Taken data field, which equals the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table; and five errors in the Loan Amount data field, which exceeds the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table.
 - Accordingly, examiners proceed to test the remaining 98 entries in the Total Sample and find two additional errors in the Action Taken data field, for a total of four errors in that field, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table; five additional errors in the Loan Amount data field, for a total of ten errors in that field, which exceeds the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table; and four errors in the Census Tract data field, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table.
 - Therefore, Financial Institution C is directed to correct the Action Taken data field, the Loan Amount data field, and the Census Tract data field and resubmit its HMDA LAR with those fields corrected.
4. Financial Institution D's HMDA LAR contains 1,000 entries. Examiners select a Total Sample of 79 loans as shown in column A of the HMDA table.
 - Examiners test the Initial Sample of 35 loans as shown in column B of the HMDA table and find one loan with an error in the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 1 field, and a different loan with an error in the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field, for a total of two errors in the Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group, which equals the Initial Sample Threshold in column C of the HMDA table.
 - Accordingly, the examiners proceed to test the remaining 44 entries in the Total Sample and find one loan with an error in the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field, and one loan with errors in both the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 1 field and the FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field, for a total of four loans with at least one error in one of the eight Race of Applicant or Borrower FIG fields, which equals the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table.
 - Therefore, Financial Institution D is directed to correct all eight FIG fields in the Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group and resubmit its HMDA LAR with those FIG fields corrected.
 - The following table summarizes how the errors in this example are counted toward the Resubmission Threshold in column D of the HMDA table:

Example: Calculating Error Rates for Applicant or Borrower Race

	FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 1 field	FIG Applicant or Borrower Race: 2 field	Race of Applicant or Borrower data field group
Loan #1	Error (Initial Sample)		1
Loan #2		Error (Initial Sample)	1
Loan #3		Error (Remaining Sample)	1
Loan #4	Error (Remaining Sample)	Error (Remaining Sample)	1

FDIC HMDA Validation Instructions

A. Purpose of HMDA Validation

The financial regulatory agencies rely on HMDA data reported by financial institutions to support a variety of activities. For example, the FDIC uses HMDA data in conducting fair lending reviews and Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) performance evaluations for HMDA reporters. Moreover, HMDA disclosures provide the public with information on the home mortgage lending activities of particular reporting entities and on activity in their communities. These disclosures are used by local, state, and federal officials to evaluate housing trends and issues and by community organizations to monitor institution lending patterns.

Because HMDA data serve numerous important purposes, validating the accuracy of HMDA data is a key element of the FDIC's supervisory activities. In addition, review of an institution's HMDA-related compliance management system (CMS) helps determine the extent to which an institution's policies, procedures, and practices ensure compliance with HMDA requirements. These HMDA Validation Instructions (the Instructions) explain FDIC examination instructions for validating the accuracy and completeness of the institution's reported HMDA Loan/Application Register (LAR) and assessing the strength of an institution's HMDA-related CMS.²⁵ The Instructions supplement, and do not replace, the instructions provided in the FFIEC HMDA Examiner Transaction Testing Guidelines (FFIEC Testing Guidelines).

B. Review of the HMDA-Related CMS

For all HMDA reporters, examination staff will assess the strength of the financial institution's HMDA-related CMS, considering whether it is comprehensive and commensurate with an institution's lending activity, size, structure, complexity, and risk profile.

During the Pre-Examination Planning (PEP) process, examination staff will obtain information necessary to determine whether an institution's policies, procedures, and practices ensure the following:

1. appropriate collection, recording, and reporting of data on applications for covered loans that it receives, covered loans that it originates, and covered loans that it purchases pursuant to HMDA and Regulation C requirements; and
2. compliance with HMDA and Regulation C's disclosure requirements.

Examination staff will conduct this assessment through a review of HMDA LARs, written policies and procedures, internal controls, and training materials, as well as discussions with management. When assessing the strength of the HMDA-related CMS, examination staff will consider the factors addressed in the questions below, which focus on a financial institution's Board and management oversight and consumer compliance program.

Board and Management Oversight

During the review of the financial institution's system for ensuring compliance with HMDA and Regulation C, obtain and review copies of policies, procedures, monitoring and/or audit reviews, and any applicable compliance management program materials to determine whether:

1. An institution annually or more frequently if appropriate, conducts analysis to determine whether it must collect, record, and report data regarding dwelling-secured applications and loans (covered transactions) pursuant to HMDA and Regulation C.
2. An institution conducts analysis to ensure that all reportable applications and loans are collected and recorded on the HMDA LAR.
3. An institution has assigned one or more individuals responsibility for the oversight of HMDA compliance, including HMDA data collection, recording, and reporting.
4. An institution has ensured individuals responsible for HMDA compliance receive access to and appropriate training on HMDA, Regulation C and its commentary, all applicable regulatory and statutory changes, the Filing Instructions Guide, the Guide to HMDA Reporting: Getting It Right!, and any other relevant materials.
5. The Board of Directors and management possess sufficient knowledge to ensure oversight of compliance with HMDA and Regulation C.
6. The Board of Directors and management provide appropriate resources and oversight regarding ensuring an institution's compliance with HMDA and Regulation C.
7. An institution takes effective corrective action in response to identified HMDA deficiencies.
8. Management and, if appropriate, the Board of Directors reviews policies and procedures, monitoring and/or audit, and compliance reports regarding the institution's HMDA data reporting, commensurate with its HMDA risk profile.

²⁵ For purposes of these Instructions, the term "examination staff" includes examiners and HMDA Analysts, as applicable given the specific examination steps being discussed.

Consumer Compliance Program

Evaluate whether the financial institution's consumer compliance program—specifically, its policies, procedures, and internal controls—is adequate to ensure compliance with HMDA and Regulation C. Consider whether:

9. The individuals responsible for ensuring HMDA compliance possess an adequate level of knowledge regarding HMDA and Regulation C, including all applicable statutory and regulatory changes.
10. An institution has developed appropriate policies and procedures, and revised those policies and procedures as necessary, to ensure HMDA compliance.
11. HMDA data are collected at all branches (if applicable), and, if so, whether relevant branch personnel are appropriately trained on HMDA data collection, recording, and reporting requirements.
12. An institution's loan officers, including the commercial loan department, who may handle HMDA-reportable applications, are informed of collection, recording, and reporting requirements.
13. An institution has policies and procedures to ensure continuing HMDA compliance during and after major changes in an institution's business or structure.
14. An institution has established internal review procedures, monitoring, and/or audit schedules, depending on the circumstances, that comprehensively cover all pertinent HMDA and Regulation C requirements, including all applicable statutory and regulatory changes since prior compliance reviews and/or audits.
15. An institution conducts compliance reviews and/or audits, as appropriate, that include a sufficient level of transactional analysis as well as written reports that detail findings and recommendations for corrective action. Also, determine whether the Board of Directors and management are informed of these findings and supervisory recommendations.
16. An institution adequately monitors vendors and other third-party service providers that perform functions or deliver services related to HMDA data collection, recording, and reporting.

C. Timing of Transaction Testing

The timing of the HMDA transaction testing is determined based on the number of reported LAR lines in the most recent full calendar year. FDIC HMDA reporters are divided into one of the following two size categories: financial institutions with 500 or more LAR lines, and financial institutions with fewer than 500 total LAR lines.

1. Financial institutions with 500 or more total LAR lines: Examination staff will conduct transaction testing for accuracy and completeness in advance of the on-site portion of the consumer compliance examination. This approach allows an institution to resolve data errors, if any, so the examination can proceed without significant delay.

2. Financial institutions with fewer than 500 total LAR lines: Examination staff will conduct transaction testing for accuracy and completeness during the on-site portion of the consumer compliance examination, unless testing in advance of the on-site portion promotes examination efficiencies and effectiveness. For example, there may be risk indicators from an institution's previous HMDA review(s), such as a history of significant HMDA-related CMS deficiencies or Level 2 (Medium Severity) or Level 3 (High Severity) violations that required corrective actions related to HMDA. The risk indicators could serve as a red flag signaling that an extended period of time or additional resources may be required to conduct HMDA validation at an institution. Consequently, transaction testing in advance of the on-site portion of the examination would promote examination efficiencies and effectiveness.

D. Notifying Reporters of Upcoming HMDA Validation

The PEP process details specific timelines and requirements that provide financial institutions with notice of upcoming HMDA reviews. Examination staff will follow these timelines when scheduling and providing notice to financial institutions about upcoming HMDA reviews. In particular, examination staff will ensure that the HMDA/CRA Validation letter is provided to HMDA reporters at the appropriate time. For validations completed in advance of the on-site portion of the consumer compliance examination, this letter is either sent with or after the Informational Packet to allow an institution sufficient time to prepare for the data validation. For validations completed during the on-site portion of the compliance examination, if applicable, this information is included in the Entry Letter.

E. Systemic Errors Identified Prior to Transaction Testing

Prior to transaction testing, examination staff may determine an institution's HMDA policies, procedures, or practices are likely to produce systemic errors. For example, examination staff may find that an institution's written policies reflect a misunderstanding of Regulation C's requirements regarding which business-purpose transactions are covered by HMDA. In such cases, examination staff will confirm the errors through discussion with bank management. If examination staff determines that systemic errors likely will make analysis of the HMDA data unreliable, examination transaction testing should not be completed until bank management has ensured that the errors are addressed. Once the LAR data is corrected, examination staff will complete transaction testing in accordance with the FFIEC Testing Guidelines and these Instructions.

F. Scope of Transaction Testing

In general, for each HMDA reporter, FDIC examination staff initially will review the LAR reported as final for the prior full calendar year. During or after transaction testing as provided in these Instructions, examination staff will investigate the root cause of any errors found, focusing on data fields for which the number of errors exceeded the applicable resubmission threshold. (As discussed later in these Instructions, examination staff prioritizes review of key data fields but may review additional data fields in specified circumstances.)

Examination staff will determine through discussions with bank management if the root cause of the errors that triggered resubmission in the LAR reviewed would impact LARs previously submitted for earlier years. If the root cause of errors in each such data field is systemic across prior years, examination staff may request that bank management correct and resubmit additional years' LARs, as appropriate, without additional transaction testing. However, if examination staff determines that the root cause of systemic errors in the prior year's LAR did not impact LARs from earlier years for any such data field, examination staff may determine that testing LARs from additional years is unnecessary.

If the root cause of errors in one or more of the data fields for which resubmission is triggered does not appear to be systemic, or if examination staff is unable to determine the root cause of the errors in any such data field, examination staff will determine whether it is necessary to test additional years' LARs. Examination staff will make this determination in consultation with FDIC field territory management.

G. Sampling Multiple Data Collection and Reporting Systems

Paragraph 1 of the FFIEC Testing Guidelines discusses selection of a random sample of entries from a financial institution's LAR. Paragraph 2 of the FFIEC Testing Guidelines discusses alternative methods for sampling HMDA data collected through multiple data collection and reporting systems. FDIC examination staff will conduct transaction testing by selecting a sample of entries from the entire reported LAR, even if an institution aggregates reportable covered loan application data from multiple data collection systems or departments to create the final reported LAR.

H. Validating Designated Key HMDA Data Fields

Paragraph 4 of the FFIEC Testing Guidelines states that all data fields within the sample may be reviewed or a supervisory agency may prioritize designated data fields for review. For the purpose of evaluating financial institutions' compliance with HMDA requirements, FDIC examination staff will focus primary attention on Designated HMDA Key Data Fields (key data fields). Specifically, during the validation process, FDIC examination staff generally will review the key data fields rather than all 110 data fields.

Data Voluntarily Reported When a Partial Exemption Applies

An insured depository institution (IDI) eligible for a partial exemption from HMDA reporting may report an exemption code for data fields associated with exempt data points or may report such data fields voluntarily. If an IDI is eligible for a partial exemption with respect to a particular data point, examination staff will validate data fields associated with that data point as part of the HMDA data validation process but will not require resubmission of, or cite a violation in connection with, those data fields.

Transaction Testing of Non-key Data Fields

In certain limited circumstances specified in these Instructions and consistent with the FFIEC Testing Guidelines, examination staff may determine it is necessary to review additional HMDA data fields, as appropriate.

FDIC examination staff will transaction test non-key data fields only under one of two circumstances. The first circumstance is where data from non-key fields is needed to complete an aspect of the consumer compliance examination that considers HMDA data, such as a fair lending review or CRA performance evaluation. The second circumstance is where data from non-key fields are needed to determine the root cause of an error in a key data field. Examination staff will consult with field territory management when making this determination.

Examples of these two circumstances where examination staff may seek to review data from non-key data fields include the following situations:

1. Fair lending review—The fair lending review established a focal point and non-key data field(s) are needed for the analysis. Transaction testing of non-key data fields under this exception is limited to those fields needed to evaluate an identified fair lending focal point. Examination staff will validate any needed non-key data fields prior to conducting a comparative file review or requesting a regression analysis. Typically this validation will occur after the HMDA validation, once examination staff has selected a focal point and identified non-key data fields that are necessary for the review based on information provided by an institution during the criteria interview.

2. Census tract errors—Examination staff will identify errors in the key data field census tract. Examination staff generally will use property address information from a source document (such as a note) to validate the census tract data field. To determine the root cause of errors in the census tract data field, examination staff may need to review the non-key data fields related to the property address data point (street address city, state, or zip code).²⁶ Even if the non-key data fields related to the property address data point are incorrect, only errors in the census tract key data field are counted as errors when applying the applicable error threshold.

Upon completing a review of non-key data fields, if examination staff determines the data to be unreliable, examination staff will then assess the extent to which the impact of the errors is significant. Examination staff will direct an institution to correct errors in non-key data fields that would affect a consumer compliance examination, including fair lending reviews, or the accuracy of a CRA performance evaluation. Also, in consultation with FDIC field territory management, examination staff may direct an institution to resubmit its HMDA LAR to ensure accurate aggregate data is maintained.

Treatment of Data Fields for Non-Covered Loan Applications

HMDA and Regulation C require a financial institution to submit data about covered loans for which the institution receives an application or that it purchases. If, during the accuracy review of key data fields, examination staff identifies transactions reported on the LAR that do not meet the regulatory definition of a covered transaction and were reported in error, those transactions are considered over-reported transactions. Examination staff will not include data fields from over-reported transactions when counting the number of key data field errors. Rather, examination staff will remove over-reported transactions from the sample universe and replace them with reportable transactions.

Nevertheless, examination staff will attempt to determine the root cause of over-reported transactions identified during transaction testing, such as a misunderstanding of the provisions of Regulation C related to business-purpose transactions. Examination staff will address over-reporting errors identified during transaction testing following the procedures to address systemic errors identified before transaction testing. (See the section entitled Systemic Errors Identified Prior to Transaction Testing).

²⁶ Financial institutions eligible for a partial exemption need not report data fields related to the property address data point.

I. Data Fields Reviewed During the Second Stage of Transaction Testing

Paragraph 5 in the FFIEC Testing Guidelines discusses the data fields to be reviewed during the two stages of HMDA transaction testing. In relevant part, Paragraph 5 provides flexibility for supervisory agencies to allow examiners to review data fields in Stage 2 that were found to have no errors in Stage 1. FDIC examination staff will limit review in Stage 2 to data fields in which one or more errors were found in Stage 1.

J. LAR Completeness and Identifying Omissions

Paragraph 8 of the FFIEC Testing Guidelines states that a financial institution may be directed to resubmit its HMDA LAR to include omitted reportable applications or loans. Ensuring that all reportable covered transactions are included on the LAR helps assess HMDA compliance and supports the use of HMDA data in fair lending reviews and CRA performance evaluations.

Identifying Omissions Universe and Sample Request

Loans and applications that are HMDA-reportable but omitted from a LAR generally fall into two categories: originated or purchased loans and non-originated loan applications (declined, withdrawn, closed for incompleteness, or approved but not accepted) that were not identified as covered transactions. In order to ensure that all reportable covered originated or purchased loans and non-originated loan applications are included on the LAR, examination staff develops an omissions universe of potentially reportable covered transactions (the omissions universe) as follows:

- Identify departments that take applications for covered loans;
- Identify departments, if any, that purchase covered loans;
- Identify software systems and tracking reports used within these departments to capture loan application, origination, and purchase data; and
- Using the reports from these systems, compile the omissions universe.

In compiling the omissions universe, examination staff will use reasonable means adapted to reflect the scale, organization, and complexity of the institution's mortgage business and its consumer compliance practices. For example, examination staff may request reports from among the following, if available:

V. Lending — HMDA

- An electronic loan trial balance that includes all loans from the commercial, consumer, and mortgage departments;
- Reconciliation or “pipeline” reports showing incoming loan applications;
- A list of non-originated applications (if no report or list of non-originated applications is available, examination staff will have to manually compile the universe of non-originated loans from the review period);
- A list of loans sold, by loan type, if the financial institution sells mortgage loans that are not on the trial balance for the review period; and/or
- A list of any dwelling secured loans purchased, by loan type, during the review period.

Examination staff will request an explanation of the codes used by an institution to identify specific loan level information such as Consolidated Reports of Condition and Income (CALL Report) codes, loan purpose code, and collateral code to accompany any report that is being used to compile the omissions universe. Examination staff will use these codes to create the most likely universe of potentially reportable covered loan applications based on regulatory requirements.

The omissions universe may consist of all potentially reportable covered loan originations or purchases and non-originations combined into one data set or consist of multiple data sets, such as all potentially reportable covered loan originations or purchases in one data set and all non-originations in one data set.

After developing the omissions universe, examination staff will select the omissions sample using one of two methods:

1. Targeted Sampling. This is the preferred method because it is most likely to determine whether any applications were omitted. Examination staff will compare the omission universe to all applications reported on the LAR. The two most likely approaches consist of the following: 1) using an omissions universe that consists of one data set, compare all the data in that set against all applications reported on the LAR, or 2) using an omissions universe that consists of multiple data sets, individually compare each of the sets against all applications reported on the LAR.

Once examination staff compares the omissions universe to the covered transactions reported on the LAR, any transactions in the omissions universe that are not on the LAR will constitute the targeted omissions universe. Examination staff will use the number of transactions in the targeted omissions universe to determine the omissions sample size using the HMDA Table.

2. Non-Targeted Sampling. If targeted sampling is not feasible, examination staff will perform non-targeted sampling from among the applications reflected in the reports considered. For example, it may not be feasible to conduct targeted sampling when the available data sets used to create the omissions universe have internal record identifiers that do not correlate to the record identifiers on the LAR. When performing non-targeted sampling, the total number of transactions in the reports considered is the omissions universe and is used to determine the sample size from the HMDA Table. Examination staff then will select a random sample from the omissions universe for review. Some transactions in the omission sample will be reported on the LAR and some will not be reported on the LAR, because the sample was created from a random sample of transactions from the omissions universe.

Assessing HMDA LAR Completeness

Examination staff will determine if an application is deemed to have been correctly reported, correctly not reported, or incorrectly reported on the LAR, depending on whether the transaction is for a covered transaction. During the completeness review, examination staff will use the sample sizes and thresholds stated in the HMDA Table. Examination staff will determine whether a transaction was (or was to be) secured by a dwelling and, if so, whether or not is an excluded transaction.

The LAR is considered complete if the number of omissions is below the thresholds listed in Column C when testing the Initial Sample or Column D when testing the Total Sample listed in the HMDA Table in Paragraph 11 of the FFIEC Testing Guidelines.

K. Revalidation after Correction

Examination staff will consult with FDIC field territory management to establish a timeline for an institution’s management to correct, review, and verify corrected data. The timeline will take into consideration the nature and complexity of the required data correction, an institution’s resources, and the amount of time required to complete the consumer compliance examination, fair lending review, and/or CRA performance evaluation in a timely manner.

When errors of accuracy or completeness are identified that require correction, examination staff will review the corrections made by an institution once they are completed and before the institution resubmits the data. Examination staff will conduct revalidation by sampling in accordance with the HMDA Table, based on the size of the institution’s corrected LAR, adjusted to address any identified omissions or over-reporting. If there were accuracy errors, examination staff will focus re-validation of corrections on the key data fields in which errors were identified during transaction testing or on any non-key data fields reviewed as part of a fair lending review or CRA performance evaluation. If there were errors of omission, examination staff will consider the documentation provided by an institution of its corrective actions to ensure the LAR is complete.

L. Persistent Issues

If, during the revalidation, examination staff determines that any issues have not been corrected sufficiently and errors remain, examination staff will again instruct an institution to correct the remaining errors. Before revalidating the corrected LAR, examination staff will request that an institution provide monitoring and/or audit reports that document the actions taken to correct the data error(s). In these instances, examination staff will discuss with the institution's management expectations for the scope and documentation of the monitoring and/or audit review. Examination staff will review the monitoring and/or audit findings and revalidate LAR data to test the effectiveness of the data correction.

M. Examination Conclusions

Examination staff will summarize the strengths and weaknesses of an institution's HMDA-related CMS and document any systemic errors of LAR completeness or data inaccuracies in the Report of Examination, if warranted. When applicable, examination staff will describe any proactive steps management has taken to maintain compliance with HMDA and Regulation C.

Examination staff will document the conclusions of the HMDA transaction testing review and their assessment of the strength of the CMS in the Regional Automated Document Distribution and Imaging System (RADD) using the standardized HMDA workpapers. Also, examination staff will ensure that all examination workpapers related to the HMDA transaction testing and CMS review conclusions are maintained in RADD.

If examination staff identifies programmatic deficiencies related to an institution's compliance with HMDA and Regulation C and/or Level 3 or Level 2 HMDA violations, examination staff will isolate the root cause of the error(s) and relate them to specific weakness(es) in an institution's CMS. Whether or not an institution maintained procedures reasonably adapted to avoid errors is relevant to establishing a HMDA violation, as provided in the administrative enforcement provisions of Regulation C. See 12 CFR § 1003.6(b).

Examination staff will discuss any LAR completeness or accuracy errors that require LAR corrections or resubmissions with an institution's management during the course of the examination. Examination staff will request that an institution provide FDIC examination staff, field territory management or the Regional Office, whichever is appropriate, an acknowledgement that its management has verified the completeness and accuracy of the data and has resubmitted the corrected LAR. A copy of a summary screen indicating successful submission of HMDA data via the HMDA Platform is acceptable as such an acknowledgement. Examination staff will provide an institution with steps for corrective action to successfully address any problem areas and strengthen an institution's consumer compliance posture for the future. Examination staff will discuss all findings and supervisory recommendations at the exit meeting with management and/or the Board of Directors to obtain a commitment for corrective action.

Designated Key HMDA Data Fields

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board), and Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) have designated key HMDA data fields to support the efficient and effective evaluation of financial institutions' compliance with HMDA's requirements.²⁷ When evaluating financial institutions' compliance with HMDA requirements, the FDIC, Board, and OCC will focus primary attention on the Designated Key HMDA Data Fields during transaction testing for HMDA data collected on or after January 1, 2018.²⁸ However, in certain circumstances, consistent with the FFIEC HMDA Examiner Transaction Testing Guidelines, examination staff may determine that it is necessary to review additional HMDA data fields, as appropriate.

Table 1 lists all 110 HMDA data fields established in the FFIEC Filing Instructions Guide and their corresponding HMDA data points and identifies the Designated Key HMDA Data Fields.

Table 2 lists only the 37 Designated Key HMDA Data Fields and identifies the 21 key data fields applicable to financial institutions that are eligible for a partial exemption under the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act (EGRRCPA).

²⁷ See FIL-51-2017, FDIC Releases Interagency Designated Key HMDA Data Fields List.

²⁸ Each agency shall operate in accordance with its supervisory authority.

Consumer Leasing

Introduction

For consumers, leasing is an alternative to buying either with cash or on credit. A lease is a contract between a lessor (the property owner) and a lessee (the property user) for the use of property subject to stated terms and limitations for a specified period and at a specified payment.

The Consumer Leasing Act (15 USC 1667 et. seq.) (CLA) was passed in 1976 to assure that meaningful and accurate disclosure of lease terms is provided to consumers before entering into a contract. It applies to consumer leases of personal property. With this information, consumers can more easily compare one lease with another, as well as compare the cost of leasing with the cost of buying on credit or the opportunity cost of paying cash. In addition, the CLA puts limits on balloon payments sometimes due at the end of a lease, and regulates advertising.

Originally, the CLA was part of the Truth in Lending Act, and was implemented by Regulation Z. When Regulation Z was revised in 1981, Regulation M was issued, and contained those provisions that govern consumer leases.

The Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (the E-Sign Act), 15 U.S.C. 7001 et seq., was enacted in 2000 and did not require implementing regulations. On November 9, 2007, amendments to Regulation M and the official staff commentary were issued to simplify the regulation and provide guidance on the electronic delivery of disclosures consistent with the E-Sign Act.¹

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank Act) amended the Truth in Lending Act and the Consumer Leasing Act to require annual adjustments of the threshold by the annual percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers. Transactions at or below the thresholds are subject to the protections of the regulations.

Today a relatively small number of banks engage in consumer leasing. The trend seems to be for leasing to be carried out through specialized bank subsidiaries, vehicle finance companies, other finance companies, or directly by retailers.

Key Definitions

The definition of certain terms is necessary to understand the requirements imposed by the CLA. These terms include lease, lessor, lessee, consumer lease, open-end lease, closed-end lease, realized value, residual value, gross capitalized cost, capitalized cost reduction, and adjusted capitalized cost.

“Lessee”—A lessee is a natural person who enters in to or is offered a consumer lease.

“Lessor”—A lessor is a natural person or organization who regularly leases, offers to lease, or arranges for the lease of personal property under a consumer lease. A person who leases or offers to lease more than five times in the preceding or current calendar year meets this definition.

“Consumer Lease”—A consumer lease is a contract between a lessor and a lessee:

- for the use of personal property by an individual (natural person),
- to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes,
- for a period of more than 4 months (week-to-week and month-to-month leases do not meet this criterion, even though they may be extended beyond 4 months), and
- with a total contractual cost of no more than $61,000 effective January 1, 2022 (adjusted annually per CPI).

Specifically excluded from coverage are leases that are:

- for business, agricultural or made to an organization or government,
- for real property,
- for personal property which are incidental to the lease of real property, subject to certain conditions, and
- for credit sales, as defined in Regulation Z. §1026.2(a)(16).

A lease meeting all of these criteria is covered by the CLA and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau’s Regulation M. If any one of these criteria is not met, for example, if the leased property is used primarily for business purposes or if the total contractual cost exceeds the threshold listed above, the CLA and Regulation M do not apply. This figure is adjusted every year to match changes in the consumer price index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers.

Consumer leases fall into one of two categories: closed end and open end. Since the information required to be disclosed to the consumer will vary with the kind of lease, it is important to note the difference between them. However, to properly understand the difference, realized value and residual value must first be defined.

¹ 72 FR 63456, November 9, 2007. These amendments took effect December 10, 2007, with a mandatory compliance date of October 1, 2008.

V. Lending — Consumer Leasing

“Realized Value”—The realized value is the price received by the lessor of the leased property at disposition, the highest offer for disposition of the leased property, or the fair market value of the leased property at the end of the lease term.

“Residual Value”—The residual value is the value of the leased property at the end of the lease, as estimated or assigned at consummation of the lease by the lessor.

“Open-end Lease”—An open-end lease is a lease in which the amount owed at the end of the lease term is based on the difference between the residual value of the leased property and its realized value. The consumer may pay all or part of the difference if the realized value is less than the residual value or he may get a refund if the realized value is greater than the residual value at scheduled termination.

“Closed-end Lease”—A closed-end lease is a lease other than an open-end lease. This type of lease allows the consumer to “walk away” at the end of the contract period, with no further payment obligation—unless the property has been damaged or has sustained abnormal wear and tear.

“Gross Capitalized Cost”—The gross capitalized cost is the amount agreed upon by the lessor and lessee as the value of the leased property, plus any items that are capitalized or amortized during the lease term. These items may include taxes, insurance, service agreements, and any outstanding prior credit or lease balance.

“Capitalized Cost Reduction”—This term means the total amount of any rebate, cash payment, net trade-in allowance, and noncash credit that reduces the gross capitalized cost.

“Adjusted Capitalized Cost”—This is the gross capitalized cost less the capitalized cost reduction and the amount used by the lessor in calculating the base periodic payment.

General Disclosure Requirements

Lessor are required by federal law to provide the consumer with leasing cost information and other disclosures in a format similar to the model disclosure forms found in Appendix A to the regulation. Certain pieces of this information must be kept together and must be segregated from other lease information. All of the information stated must be accurate, clear and conspicuous, and provided in writing in a form that the consumer may keep.

The general disclosures required by Part 1013 may be provided to the lessee in electronic form, subject to compliance with the consumer consent and other applicable provisions of the E-Sign Act. The E-Sign Act does not mandate that institutions or consumers use or accept electronic records or signatures. It permits institutions to satisfy any statutory or regulatory requirements by providing the information electronically after obtaining the consumer’s affirmative consent. But before consent can be given, consumers must be provided with the following information:

- any right or option to have the information provided in paper or non-electronic form;
- the right to withdraw the consent to receive information electronically and the consequences, including fees, of doing so;
- the scope of the consent (for example, whether the consent applies only to a particular transaction or to identified categories of records that may be provided during the course of the parties’ relationship);
- the procedures to withdraw consent and to update information needed to contact the consumer electronically; and
- the methods by which a consumer may obtain, upon request, a paper copy of an electronic record after consent has been given to receive the information electronically and whether any fee will be charged.

The consumer must consent electronically or confirm consent electronically in a manner that “reasonably demonstrates that the consumer can access information in the electronic form that will be used to provide the information that is the subject of the consent.”

After the consent, if an institution changes the hardware or software requirements such that a consumer may be prevented from accessing and retaining information electronically, the institution must notify the consumer of the new requirements and must allow the consumer to withdraw consent without charge.

Disclosures are to be provided in the following circumstances. (Advertisement requirements are discussed in the advertising section.)

Prior to or Due at Lease Signing

A dated disclosure must be given to the consumer before signing the lease and must contain all of the information detailed in Section 4 of the regulation.

Renegotiations and Extensions

New disclosures also must be provided when a consumer renegotiates, or extends a lease, subject to certain exceptions.

Multiple Lessors/Lessees

In the event of multiple lessors, one lessor on behalf of all the lessors may make the required disclosures. If the lease involves more than one lessee, the required disclosures should be given to any lessee who is primarily liable.

Advertising

Advertisements concerning consumer leases must also comply with certain disclosure requirements. All advertisements must be accurate.

If an advertisement includes any reference to certain “trigger terms”—the amount of any payment, statement of a capitalized cost reduction (i.e., down payment), or other payment required prior to or at lease signing or delivery, or that no such payment is required—then the ad must also state the following:

- that the transaction is for a lease;
- the total amount due prior to or at lease signing or delivery;
- the number, amounts and due dates or periods of the scheduled payments;
- a statement of whether or not a security deposit is required; and
- a statement that an extra charge may be imposed at the end of the lease term where the lessee’s liability (if any) is based on the difference between the residual value of the leased property and its realized value at the end of the lease term. (§ 1013.7(d)(2)).

An advertisement for an open-end lease also must include a statement that extra charges may be imposed at the end of the lease based on the difference between the residual value and the realized value at the end of the lease term.

If lessors give a percentage rate in an advertisement, the rate cannot be more prominent than any of the other required disclosures. They must also include a statement that “this percentage may not measure the overall cost of financing this lease.” The lessor cannot use the term “annual percentage rate,” “annual lease rate,” or any equivalent term.

Some fees (license, registration, taxes, and inspection fees) may vary by state or locality. An advertisement may exclude these third-party fees from the disclosure of a periodic payment or total amount due at lease signing or delivery, provided the ad states that these have been excluded. Otherwise, an ad may include these fees in the periodic payment or total amount due, provided it states that the fees are based on a particular state or locality and indicates that the fees may vary.

For an advertisement accessed by the consumer in electronic form, the required disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form in the advertisement, without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act. An electronic advertisement (such as an advertisement on an Internet web site) that provides a table or schedule of the required disclosures is considered a single advertisement if the advertisement clearly refers the consumer to the location where the additional required information begins. For example, in an electronic advertisement, a term triggering additional disclosures may be accompanied by a link that directly connects the consumer to the additional disclosures.

Limits on Balloon Payments

In order to limit balloon payments that may be required of the consumer, certain sections of the regulation call for reasonable calculations and estimates. These provisions protect the consumer at early termination of a lease, at the end of the lease term, or in delinquency, default, or late payment status. The provisions limit the lessee’s liability at the end of the lease term and set reasonableness standards for wear and use charges, early termination charges, and penalties or fees for delinquency.

Penalties and Liability

Criminal and civil liability provisions of the Truth in Lending Act also apply to the CLA. Actions alleging failure to disclose the required information, or otherwise comply with the CLA, must be brought within one year of the termination of the lease agreement.

Record Retention

Lessors are required to maintain evidence of compliance with the requirements imposed by Regulation M, other than the advertising requirements under Section 7 of the regulation, for a period of not less than two years after the date of the disclosures are required to be made or an action is required to be taken.

Examination Objectives

1. To assess the quality of the institution’s compliance management system for the Consumer Leasing Act.
2. To determine that lessees of personal property that meet the threshold amount are given meaningful and accurate disclosures of lease terms.
3. To determine if the limits of liability are clearly indicated to the lessees and correctly enforced by the institution.

4. To ensure that the financial institution provides accurate disclosures of its leasing terms in all advertising.

Examination Procedures²

General Disclosure Requirements

- A. Review the institution's procedures for providing disclosures to ensure that there are adequate controls and procedures to effect compliance.

9. Are disclosures given to lessees when they “renegotiate” or “extend” their leases? (§1013.5)

Lessee Liability

- A. Review the lease estimates and calculations to ensure that there is not any unreasonable balloon payment expected of the lessee in the following circumstances:
 - at early termination,
 1. Does the lessor disclose the conditions under which the lease may be terminated early and the amount and method of determining the amount of any early termination charges? (§1013.4(g)(1))
 2. Are any early termination charges reasonable? (§1013.4(g)(1), 4(q))

 2. Are the penalties or other charges reasonable? (§1013.4(q))

Advertising

- A. Review advertising policies and procedures used by the institution to ensure that there are adequate controls and procedures to effect compliance.

² These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

³ The final amendments to Regulation M on the electronic delivery of disclosures, consistent with the requirements of the E-Sign Act, became effective December 10, 2007 and require mandatory compliance by October 1, 2008.

B. Review a sample of the institution's advertisements.

1. Do the advertisements advertise terms that are usually and customarily available? (§1013.7(a))

6. If television or radio advertisements use triggering terms, if they do not contain the additional terms do not include the additional terms required by §7(d)(2) when triggering terms are used, do they use alternative disclosure methods (direct consumers to a toll free number or written advertisement)? (§1013.7(f))

Miscellaneous

- A. Are records and other evidence of compliance (other than for advertising requirements under §1013.7) retained for a period of no less than two years? (§1013.8)

Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003Introduction

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act of 2003 (SCRA) was signed into law on December 19, 2003, amending and replacing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, and is codified at 50 U.S.C. 3901 et seq.¹ It was further amended December 10, 2004, by the Veterans Benefits Improvement Act of 2004. The law protects members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps and Coast Guard, including members of the National Guard, as they enter military service (active duty²), as well as commissioned officers of the Public Health Service and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration engaged in active service. Some of the benefits accorded servicemembers by the SCRA also extend to servicemembers' spouses, dependents, and other persons subject to the obligations of servicemembers. Periodically, various laws have extended the availability of certain protections. Major relief provisions of the SCRA include:

Maximum Rate of Interest on Loans, Including Mortgages

Upon receiving a written notice and proof of military service³ through (a) written notice and a copy of the servicemember's military orders or any other appropriate indicator of military service, including a certified letter from a commanding officer or (b) independent verification by the creditor, creditors must, for the duration of the servicemember's military service, reduce the interest⁴ rate on debts⁵ incurred by the servicemember, or a servicemember and spouse jointly, before entry into military service to no more than 6 percent per year. (This applies to the individual servicemember's debt or joint debt with a spouse.)

Creditors shall not condition the granting of benefits upon the use of a specific form or require that a written notice explicitly request benefits. Creditors shall accept copies of borrowers' military orders as written notice of eligibility for reduced interest rates pursuant to the SCRA via email facsimile, mail, or overnight delivery. Creditors shall also accept borrowers' requests for any form of military deferment or forbearance as written notice of eligibility for reduced interest rates pursuant to the SCRA.

Upon receipt of notice, creditors must retroactively reduce the interest rate on servicemember's debts as of the date on which the servicemember was called to military service, in the case of a reservist or inductee, the day on which the servicemember received his or her orders.⁶ Creditors must maintain the interest rate reduction for the duration of the servicemember's period of military service.⁷ Additionally, in the case of a mortgage, trust deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage, creditors must extend this interest rate reduction for one year after the end of the servicemember's military service.⁸

Creditors who reduce the interest rate on the obligations of a servicemember must forgive interest in excess of 6 percent, and recalculate the amortization of the remaining monthly payments to reflect the interest rate change.

The reduced interest rate provision applies unless a court finds the ability of the servicemember to pay interest on the debt at a higher interest rate is not materially affected by his or her military service. In such cases, the court may grant a creditor relief from the interest rate limitations of the Act.

Residential and Motor Vehicle Purchases and Leases

Contracts for the purchase of real or personal property, for which the servicemember has paid a deposit or made a

¹ The SCRA was previously codified and cited as 50 U.S.C. App. 501 et seq.

⁴ "Interest" is defined in the SCRA to include service and renewal charges or any other fees or charges, except for charges for bona fide insurance. 50 U.S.C. § 3937(d).

⁵ Section 207 of the SCRA, 50 U.S.C. § 3927, applies to "an obligation or liability . . . incurred by the servicemember, or the servicemember and the servicemember's spouse jointly, before the service member enters military service."

payment before the servicemember enters military service, may not be rescinded or terminated after the servicemember's entry into military service for a breach of the terms of the contract occurring before or during their military service, or the property repossessed because of the breach without a court order.

Termination of certain residential or motor vehicle leases may be made at the option of the lessee servicemember if the servicemember provides to the lessor or the lessor's agent written notice of the request for termination along with a copy of the military orders.

Automobiles leased for personal or business use by the servicemember or his dependent may be terminated by the servicemember, if after the lease is executed, the servicemember enters military service for a period of 180 days or more.

Additionally, an automobile lease entered into while the servicemember is on active duty may be terminated by the servicemember if he or she receives military orders for a permanent change of station (PCS) outside the continental United States (this would include a PCS to Hawaii or Alaska) or deployment for a period of 180 days or more.

Termination of an automobile lease also includes the return of the automobile to the lessor within 15 days after delivery of the written notice of termination.

Termination is permitted of pre-service "residential, professional, agricultural, or similar" leases occupied or intended to be occupied by a servicemember or a dependent as well as those leases executed during military service where the servicemember subsequently receives orders for a PCS or a deployment for a period of 90 days or more.

Foreclosure, Eviction from Bank-Owned Property

Real or personal property owned by a servicemember before the servicemember's military service that secures a mortgage, trust deed, or similar security interest cannot be sold, foreclosed upon, or seized based on a breach of such a secured obligation during the period of military service or one year thereafter without a court order.⁹ Additionally, in an action filed during or within one year after a servicemember's military service, a court may, after a hearing on its own, or shall, upon application by a servicemember, stay a proceeding to enforce an obligation as described above or adjust the debt, when the member's ability to comply with the obligation is materially affected by reason of the member's military service.¹⁰

A landlord may not evict a servicemember or his or her dependents from certain residences¹¹ occupied primarily as a residence during a period of military service except by court order.

A creditor must notify the homeowner by a statement or notice, written in plain English by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Treasury, explaining the mortgage and foreclosure rights of servicemembers, and the dependents of such servicemembers, under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (50 U.S.C. 3901 et seq.), including the toll-free military one source number to call if servicemembers, or the dependents of such servicemembers, require further assistance.

Life Insurance Assigned as Security

If a life insurance policy on the life of a servicemember is assigned before military service to secure the payment of an obligation, the assignee of the policy (except the insurer in connection with a policy loan) may not exercise, during the period of the servicemember's military service or within one year thereafter, any right or option obtained under the assignment, absent compliance with a court order or other specified requirement.

⁹ Any sale or foreclosure made in violation of this provision shall be void. See section 303(c) of the SCRA, 50 U.S.C. 3953(c). Originally, this provision applied only to sales, foreclosures, or seizures of property which occurred during or within 90 days after a servicemember's period of service. In 2008, this protection was temporarily extended from 90 days to 9 months pursuant to section 2203 of HERA. In 2012, this provision was further amended to temporarily extend the protections from 9 months to one year by the Honoring America's Veterans and Caring for Camp Lejeune Families Act of 2012. Pub. L. No. 112-154 (Aug. 12, 2012). In 2014, the temporary extension of these protections for one year was renewed once more, pursuant to the Foreclosure Relief and Extension for Servicemembers Act of 2014. Pub. L. No. 113-286 (Dec. 18, 2014). In 2015, this temporary extension was once again renewed, pursuant to the Foreclosure Relief and Extension for Servicemembers Act of 2015. Pub. L. No. 114-142 (Mar. 31, 2016). In 2017, this temporary extension was renewed by the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2018, Pub. L. No. 115-91 (Dec. 12, 2017). In May of 2018, by passage of the Economic Growth, Regulatory Reduction and Consumer Protection Act, the one-year extension was made permanent and no longer subject to a sunset provision.

Adverse Action

The fact that a servicemember applies for, or receives a stay, postponement, or suspension of his or her obligations or liabilities pursuant to the SCRA may not in itself provide the basis for the following:

A determination by a lender or other person that the servicemember is unable to pay the obligation or liability in accordance with its terms;

A creditor's denial or revocation of credit, change in terms of an existing credit arrangement, or refusal to grant credit to the servicemember in substantially the amount or on substantially the terms requested;

An adverse report relating to the creditworthiness of the servicemember by or to a consumer reporting agency;

A refusal by an insurer to insure the servicemember;

An annotation in a servicemember's record by a creditor or a person engaged in the practice of assembling or evaluating consumer credit information identifying the servicemember as a member of the National Guard or a reserve component; or

A change in the terms offered or conditions required for the issuance of insurance.

Relief for Other Obligor

Whenever a court grants a stay, postponement, or suspension to a servicemember on an obligation, it may similarly grant a person primarily or secondarily liable such a stay, postponement, or suspension.

Examination Objectives

1. Determine the institution's compliance with the provisions of the SCRA, as applicable, to the institution's product offering and operations, including management of other real estate owned where a servicemember or his/her dependents may be tenants.

2. Assess the quality of the institution's compliance risk management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing the provisions.
3. Determine the reliance that can be placed on the institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution's compliance with the provisions.
4. Determine corrective action when violations of law are identified or when the institution's policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures¹²

General

1. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance with the SCRA. Consider:
 - policies and procedures
 - account documentation
 - checklists
 - computer program documentation, including any computer program testing and validation.
2. Determine the extent and adequacy of the training received by individuals whose responsibilities relate to compliance with the regulation. Review any training materials pertaining to the Act and determine if the training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of the provisions that apply to the creditor's offerings and operations.
3. Review compliance reviews or audit materials, including work papers and reports, to determine if:
 - The scope of any audits address all provisions of the SCRA, as applicable;
 - Transaction testing includes samples covering relevant product types and decision centers (for example, mortgage and credit card processing centers);
 - The work performed is accurate;

¹² These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety, with subsequent adjustments to reflect intervening statutory changes and threshold adjustments. Additionally, some additions have been made to provide additional clarity for FDIC examination staff. See, for example, footnotes 9 through 11 and the Examination Checklist.

V. Lending — Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

- Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management or to the Board of Directors;
 - Management has taken corrective actions to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies; and,
 - The frequency of review/audit is appropriate.
4. If any complaints based on the SCRA have been filed against the institution, determine:
 - Why were they filed, and
 - How they were resolved.
 5. If the institution has received any actual requests for relief under the SCRA, determine whether appropriately trained staff reviewed the requests and if appropriate records are maintained.

Interest Rate Reduction for Loans, Including Mortgages

6. Determine how the institution handles requests for interest rate reductions under the SCRA on an obligation incurred by a servicemember or by a servicemember and spouse jointly, before the servicemember entered military service.
7. Determine how the institution calculates the reduced interest rate. Does the institution include all service and renewal charges, as well as other fees and charges, with the exception of charges for bona fide insurance?
8. Determine whether the institution applies the interest rate reduction effective as of the date the servicemember was called to military service.
9. Determine whether the institution applies the interest rate reduction throughout the term of the servicemember's military service for all credit products. In the case of a mortgage, the institution must continue to apply the interest rate reduction for a one-year period following the termination of military service.
10. Determine whether the institution adjusts the monthly payments using the reduced interest rate over the remaining term of the loan.

Residential and Motor Vehicle Leases.

11. Determine, in the case of a residential lease entered into before the servicemember entered into military service or executed by the servicemember while in military service but who subsequently receives orders for a permanent change of station or for a deployment of at least 90 days, that the institution permits the servicemember to terminate the lease.
12. Determine if the institution permits the servicemember to terminate a motor vehicle lease where:
 - The motor vehicle lease is for personal or business use by the servicemember or his/her dependent; and,
 - The lease is executed by the servicemember before he/she enters military service for a period of 180 days or more, or
 - The servicemember, while in military service, executes the lease and subsequently receives military orders for a PCS outside of the continental United States (this include a PCS to Hawaii or Alaska), or deployment with a military unit for a period of 180 days or more.

Foreclosure, Eviction from Bank-Owned Property

13. Determine, in the case of an institution acting as a landlord, that the institution does not evict a servicemember or his/her dependents¹³ from a residence covered by the Act occupied primarily as a residence during a period of military service except by court order.
14. Determine whether, in the case of real or personal property owned by a servicemember before the servicemember's military service and is secured by a mortgage, trust deed, or similar security interest, the institution obtains a court order before initiating the sale, foreclosure, or seizure based on a breach of such a secured obligation during the period of military service or one year thereafter.

Installment Contracts

15. Determine, in the case of an institution that finances or purchases installment contracts for the purchase of real or personal property, that where a servicemember has paid a deposit or made a payment before entering military service, that the contract was not rescinded or terminated by the institution after the servicemember's entry into service, absent a court order for a breach of the terms of the contract occurring before or during the military service, or the property repossessed because of the breach.

Insurance Assigned as Security for a Loan

16. Determine, in the case of an insurance policy on the life of a servicemember that is assigned before the servicemember's military service as security for an obligation that the institution does not exercise, during a period of military service or within one year thereafter, any right or option obtained under the assignment, absent a court order. This prohibition does not apply—
- if the assignee has written consent of the insured servicemember, obtained during his/her military service;
 - when the premiums on the policy are due and unpaid; or
 - upon the death of the insured.

Adverse Action

17. Determine, in the case of an application from or receipt by a servicemember of a stay, postponement, or suspension of an obligation, that the institution does not use such action as a basis of:
- a determination that the lender is unable to pay the obligation or liability in accordance with its terms;
 - denial or revocation of credit; change in terms of an existing credit; or refusal by the creditor to grant credit to the servicemember in substantially the same amount or terms; or
 - an adverse credit report or reference.

Examination Conclusions

18. Conclude the examination after taking the following actions:
- Fully address identified deficiencies and violations, if any
 - Attach appropriate supporting workpaper documentation
 - Discuss findings with management and board of directors
 - Write comments, as applicable, in the Report of Examination
 - Include appropriate violation write-ups
 - Discuss proposed enforcement action, if needed

Section 3919 - Exercise of Rights Under Act Not to Affect Certain Future Financial Transactions
1. Does the creditor refrain from taking adverse action against a servicemember solely because the servicemember exercised rights under the Act? (50 U.S.C. § 3919)
Section 3937 - Maximum Rate of Interest in Debts Incurred Before Military Service
1. Did the creditor reduce the interest rate on obligations of a servicemember or of a servicemember jointly with the servicemember's spouse, incurred before military service, to no more than 6 percent during the period of military service upon receipt of proof of military service? (3937(a)(1)) Note that in the case of a mortgage, the 6 percent cap extends to one year following the end of military service. Interest under the SCRA includes all service, renewal, or other charges and fees with the exception of bona fide insurance charges.
2. Did the creditor forgive interest in excess of 6 percent (including fees)? (3937(a)(2))
3. Did the creditor reduce any periodic payment due by the servicemember by the amount of the interest forgiven? (3937(a)(3)) Note that there are two methods of payment amortization that have been commonly adopted by the industry appropriate to ensure there is no acceleration of principal. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Standard Amortization Method and Payments - This method is based upon a recalculated amortization schedule with interest at the rate of 6% and the actual remaining term of the mortgage loan. • Interest Subsidy Amortization Method and Payments - This method is based on the amortization schedule (or schedules, in the case of an ARM) that would have applied if the servicemember had remained a civilian. This method preserves the original amortized loan's monthly principal reduction. Each new payment is calculated as the sum of the next monthly principal installment called for by the original amortization schedule plus monthly interest at the rate of 6% based on the prior period's scheduled ending unpaid principal balance (UPB) (i.e., the principal balance scheduled to be outstanding immediately prior to the applicable due date or $UPB \times .06 / \text{period} = \text{monthly interest} + \text{original amortization scheduled principal payment for the month}$).

Talent Amendment: Limitations on Terms of Consumer Credit Extended to Service Members and Dependents

Background

Examiners should reference the Military Lending Act examination procedures (Chapter V-13.1 in the Compliance Examination Manual) for consumer credit transactions occurring on or after October 3, 2016, as relevant. For consumer credit transactions occurring prior to these dates, examiners should reference the Talent Amendment examination procedures (Chapter V-12.1 in the Compliance Examination Manual).

Department of Defense (DoD) regulations implementing the consumer protection provisions of the John Warner National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2007¹ contain limitations and requirements for certain types of consumer credit extended to active duty service members and their spouses, children, and other dependents (“covered borrowers”). The regulation covers “payday loans,” “vehicle title loans,” and “tax refund anticipation loans,” as defined by the DoD rule (“covered transactions”), and applies to all persons that meet the definition of creditor in Regulation Z² who are engaged in the business of extending such credit and their assignees.

For covered transactions, the DoD rule limits the amount that a creditor can charge, including interest, fees and charges imposed for credit insurance, debt cancellation and suspension, and other credit-related ancillary products sold in connection with the transaction. The total charges must be expressed as a total dollar amount and as an annualized rate referred to as the “Military Annual Percentage Rate,” or “MAPR,” which may not exceed 36 percent. The MAPR includes charges that are not included in the finance charge or APR disclosed under the Truth in Lending Act (TILA), and must be separately disclosed for covered transactions. Among other provisions, the DoD rule

- provides a safe harbor and model form for creditors to use in connection with identifying covered borrowers;

- requires creditors to provide written and oral disclosures in addition to those required by TILA;
- prohibits certain loan terms, such as prepayment penalties, mandatory arbitration clauses and unreasonable legal notice requirements; and
- restricts loan rollovers and refinancings.

Creditors that knowingly violate the rule may be subject to criminal penalties, and a credit agreement that is prohibited under the rule is void from inception. The final rule took effect on October 1, 2007, and applies to covered transactions that are consummated on or after that date.

Definitions (§232.3)

“Consumer Credit”

Consumer Credit means closed-end credit offered or extended to a covered borrower primarily for personal, family, or household purposes for payday loans, vehicle title loans, and tax refund anticipation loans, as defined below.

- a. Payday loans – Closed-end credit
 - with a term of 91 days or fewer;
 - in which the amount financed does not exceed $2,000; and
 - in which the covered borrower receives funds from and incurs interest and/or is charged a fee by a creditor, and contemporaneously with the receipt of funds
 - provides a check or other payment instrument to the creditor, who agrees not to deposit or present it for more than one day; or
 - authorizes the creditor to initiate a debit to the borrower’s deposit account by electronic fund transfer or remotely created check after one or more days.
- b. Motor vehicle title loans – Closed-end credit
 - with a term of 181 days or fewer; and
 - secured by the title to a motor vehicle that has been registered for use on public roads and is owned by the covered borrower (other than a purchase money transaction).
- c. Tax refund anticipation loans – Closed-end credit in which the covered borrower expressly 1 Public Law 109–364, § 670, 120 Stat. 2266 (2006) (codified at 10 U.S.C. § 987).

2 15 U.S.C. § 1602\(f\). Among other things, Regulation Z, 12 C.F.R. Part 226, which implements the Truth in Lending Act (TILA), states that a creditor is one who “regularly” extends credit to consumers that is subject to a finance charge or is payable by written agreement in more than four installments and to whom the obligation is initially payable. A creditor making loans not secured by dwellings extends credit regularly if it makes more than 25 loans a year. 12 C.F.R. § 226.2(a)(17).

V. Lending — Talent Amendment

- grants the creditor the right to receive all or part of the covered borrower's income tax refund; or
- agrees to repay the loan with the proceeds of the covered borrower's refund.

“Covered Borrower”

A covered borrower is a person with the following status at the time he or she becomes obligated on a covered transaction.

- A regular or reserve member of the
 - Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, or Coast Guard, serving on active duty or under a call or order that does not specify a period of 30 days or fewer, or such a member serving on Active Guard and Reserve Duty as that term is defined in 10 U.S.C. § 101(d)(6); or
 - the member's
 - spouse;
 - child, as defined in 38 U.S.C. § 101(4); or
 - an individual for whom the member provided more than one-half of the individual's support for 180 days immediately preceding an extension of a covered transaction.

“Creditor”

A Creditor means all persons that meet the definition of creditor under Regulation Z who are engaged in the business of extending consumer credit covered by the rule.

NOTE: Instead of including assignees in the definition of “creditor,” the rule specifically refers to assignees in each section of the rule that would apply to an assignee.

“Military Annual Percentage Rate”

Military annual percentage rate, or “MAPR,” is the cost of the consumer credit transaction expressed as an annual rate. The MAPR for covered transactions may not exceed 36 percent, unless a lower limit applies.³

³ DOD rules also prohibit an institution from imposing an MAPR except as authorized by applicable State or Federal law. Depending on the type of institution, different State or Federal laws may govern the maximum rates and fees that the institution may impose for consumer credit transactions covered by the DOD rules. However, in no instance may such rates and fees exceed the 36 percent MAPR cap specified in the DOD rules.

- Calculation of the MAPR. The MAPR shall be calculated based on the costs in this definition but, in all other respects, it shall be calculated and disclosed following the rules used for calculating the APR for closed-end credit under Regulation Z (Truth in Lending, 12 C.F.R. Part 226).

Cost Elements. The MAPR includes the following cost elements associated with the extension of a covered transaction if they are financed, deducted from the proceeds of the covered transaction, or otherwise required to be paid as a condition of the credit:

- interest, fees, credit service charges, and credit renewal charges;
- credit insurance premiums, including charges for single-premium credit insurance, or fees for debt cancellation or debt-suspension agreements; and
- fees for credit-related ancillary products sold in connection with and either at or before consummation of the credit transaction.

The MAPR does not include

- fees or charges imposed for actual unanticipated late payments, default, delinquency, or similar occurrence;
- taxes or fees prescribed by law that actually are or will be paid to public officials for determining the existence of, or for perfecting, releasing, or satisfying a security interest;
- any tax levied on security instruments or documents evidencing indebtedness if the payment of such taxes is a requirement for recording the instrument securing the evidence of indebtedness; and
- tax return preparation fees associated with a tax refund anticipation loan, whether the fees are deducted from the loan proceeds

NOTE: The DoD's intent is to ensure the credit products covered by the regulation cannot evade the 36 percent limit by combining low interest rates with high fees associated with origination, membership, administration, or other costs that may not be captured in the TILA definition of the APR. The MAPR includes charges that are not included in the finance charge or APR disclosed under TILA. As a result, the MAPR is required to be separately disclosed and is in addition to the APR disclosures required under TILA for covered transactions.

Examination Objectives

1. Determine the institution’s compliance with the provisions of 32 C.F.R. Part 232, as applicable.
2. Assess the quality of the institution’s compliance risk management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing the provisions.
3. Determine the reliance that can be placed on the institution’s internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution’s compliance with the provisions.
4. Determine corrective action when violations of law are identified, or when the institution’s policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures⁴

Determine Applicability of DoD Regulations and Evaluate Policies and Procedures

1. Determine if the creditor offers or purchases⁵ any consumer credit products covered by 32 C.F.R. Part 232 (payday loans, motor vehicle title loans, and tax refund anticipation loans as defined in § 232.3(b)(1)).
 - If the creditor does not offer or purchase consumer credit products as described above, the regulation does not apply and no further review is necessary.
 - If the creditor offers or purchases any consumer credit products covered by 32 C.F.R. Part 232, use the procedures below to determine whether the creditor complies with the regulation.
2. Determine the extent and adequacy of the institution’s policies, procedures, and practices for ensuring and monitoring compliance with the regulation.
3. Determine the extent and adequacy of the training received by individuals whose responsibilities relate to compliance with the regulation. Review any training materials pertaining to the regulation and determine whether the training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of the provisions that apply to the creditor’s offerings and operations.

4. Determine if the institution has policies or procedures in place to
 - provide account disclosure information to covered borrowers within the appropriate time frames in accordance with § 232.6; and
 - correctly calculate and limit the MAPR as defined in § 232.3(h).
5. Review compliance reviews or audit materials, including work papers and reports, to determine if
 - the scope of any audits address all provisions of the regulation, as applicable;
 - transaction testing includes samples covering relevant product types and decision centers;
 - the work performed is accurate;
 - significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management or to the Board of Directors;
 - management has taken corrective actions to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies; and
 - the frequency of review/audit is appropriate.
6. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution’s internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance. Consider:
 - organization charts
 - process flowcharts
 - policies and procedures
 - account documentation
 - checklists
 - computer program documentation, including any computer program testing and validation

Transaction-Related Procedures

When transaction testing is applicable, determine the adequacy of the institution’s policies and procedures to its practices. The sample size should be sufficient to cover all aspects of the institution’s activities and policies subject to the regulation.

⁴ These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

⁵ 32 C.F.R. Part 232 applies to creditors and assignees.

Identification of Covered Borrowers (§232.5)

1. For covered transactions, determine if the creditor provides the following “covered borrower identification statement” (or a substantially similar alternate form) to identify covered borrowers.⁶

Covered Borrower Identification Statement:

Federal law provides important protections to active duty members of the Armed Forces and their dependents. To ensure that these protections are provided to eligible applicants, we require you to sign one of the following statements as applicable:

I AM a regular or reserve member of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, or Coast Guard, serving on active duty under a call or order that does not specify a period of 30 days or fewer.

I AM a dependent of a member of the Armed Forces on active duty as described above because I am the member’s spouse, the member’s child under the age of eighteen years old, or I am an individual for whom the member provided more than one-half of my financial support for 180 days immediately preceding today’s date.

OR

I AM NOT a regular or reserve member of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, or Coast Guard, serving on active duty under a call or order that does not specify a period of 30 days or fewer (or a dependent of such a member).

Warning: It is important to fill out this form accurately. Knowingly making a false statement on a credit application is a crime.

Optional Verification – The rule provides suggestions for optional verification of the status of a covered borrower. Since these procedures are optional, examiners do not have to assess compliance with them. However, examiners should be aware that although the additional verification procedures are optional, if a creditor does use these optional procedures and determines that the borrower is a covered borrower, the creditor is subject to the rule (even if the borrower indicated on the covered borrower form that he or she was not a covered borrower).

The creditor may, but is not required to, verify the status of an applicant as a covered borrower by requesting the applicant to provide

- a current military leave and earning statement; or
- a military identification card (available both to service personnel and their dependents).
- Additionally, in the case of National Guard Members or Reservists, a copy of the military orders and any extensions.

Alternatively, the creditor may, but is not required to, verify the status of an applicant as a covered borrower by accessing the information available through the Internet at <http://www.dmdc.osd.mil/mla/owa/home> and entering the service member’s full name, social security number, and date of birth.

2. If the creditor does not use the above Covered Borrower Identification Statement or similar form, describe the method that the creditor uses to determine compliance with the rule so that the creditor does not make covered loans to covered borrowers on prohibited terms.

Notice and Disclosure Requirements (§ 232.6)

1. Determine whether covered transaction disclosures are made clearly and conspicuously in writing and in a form the covered borrower may keep.
2. If the covered transaction disclosures are combined with other account disclosures, determine whether it is clear which disclosures are applicable to the covered borrower’s account, including those disclosures:
 - Related to the MAPR and the total dollar amount of all charges included in the MAPR; and
 - Required by Regulation Z
3. Determine if the disclosures reflect a clear description of the payment obligation of the covered borrower as applicable. A payment schedule provided pursuant to Regula-

⁶ Limitations exist on the use of the identification form prescribed by the regulation as a safe harbor. According to the preamble to 32 C.F.R. Part 232, if the loan applicant signs a declaration of denial about being a covered borrower, but the creditor obtains information as part of the credit transaction reflecting that the applicant is a covered borrower (such as a current military leave and earning statement as proof of employment), the applicant’s declaration would not create a safe harbor for the creditor. In such cases, the creditors should seek to resolve the inconsistency. However, if they are unable to do so, they may only avoid any risk of noncompliance by treating the applicant as a covered borrower based on the documentation or by declining to extend the credit due to the inability to verify the information provided in the borrower’s signed declaration. This caveat prevents creditors from using the declaration to allow covered borrowers to waive their right to the protections provided by the regulation. Refer to 32 C.F.R. Part 232, 72 Fed. Reg. 50580, 50588 (August 31, 2007).

tion Z disclosure requirements will satisfy this requirement.

4. Verify that the following required statement (federal notice) is provided:

“Federal law provides important protections to regular or reserve members of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, or Coast Guard, serving on active duty under a call or order that does not specify a period of 30 days or fewer, and their dependents. Members of the Armed Forces and their dependents may be able to obtain financial assistance from Army Emergency Relief, Navy and Marine Corps Relief Society, the Air Force Aid Society, or Coast Guard Mutual Aid. Members of the Armed Forces and their dependents may request free legal advice regarding an application for credit from a service legal assistance office or financial counseling from a consumer credit counselor.”
5. For oral disclosure, determine whether the creditor provides oral disclosure of the MAPR, the payment obligation, and required federal notice (as discussed above) before consummation.
6. In the case of mail and Internet transactions, determine whether the creditor provides
 - a toll-free telephone number on or with the written disclosures that consumers may use to obtain oral disclosure and
 - oral disclosures when the covered borrower contacts the creditor for this purpose.
7. For renewal and refinancing of covered transactions, determine if new disclosures are provided when the transaction would be considered a new transaction that would require disclosures under Regulation Z. (Refer to 12 C.F.R. § 226.20)

NOTE: Creditors need not provide new disclosures unless the transaction is considered a new transaction under Regulation Z (Refer to 12 C.F.R. § 226.20). However, regardless of whether new disclosures are required in a particular transaction, when a creditor refinances or renews an extension of consumer credit to a covered borrower, the limitations on rates and terms apply in the same manner as they would for the original transaction.

Prohibitions and Restrictions (§ 232.4 and § 232.8)

1. Determine whether the creditor, as part of any covered transaction
 - imposed an MAPR that is not authorized by applicable State or Federal law;
 - imposed an MAPR greater than 36 percent;
 - rolled over, renewed, repaid, refinanced, or consolidated any covered transaction with the proceeds of a covered transaction to the same covered borrower unless the new transaction results in more favorable terms to the covered borrower, such as a lower MAPR;
 - required the covered borrower to waive his or her right to legal recourse under any applicable provision of State or Federal law, including any provision of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (50 U.S.C. App. § 527 et seq.);
 - required the covered borrower to submit to arbitration or imposed any other onerous legal notice provision in the case of a dispute;
 - demanded unreasonable notice from the covered borrower as a condition for legal action;
 - required use of a check or other method of access to a deposit, savings, or other financial account maintained by the covered borrower;
 - EXCEPT THAT, in a transaction with an MAPR consistent with the rule (that is, not greater than 36 percent), the creditor may
 - require an electronic fund transfer to repay the obligation, unless prohibited by Regulation E (Electronic Fund Transfers), 12 C.F.R. Part 205;
 - require direct deposit of the consumer’s salary as a condition of eligibility, unless otherwise prohibited by law; or
 - if not otherwise prohibited by law, take a security interest in funds deposited after the extension of the covered transaction in an account established in connection with the covered transaction;
 - required the covered borrower to establish an allotment to repay the obligation; or
 - prohibited the covered borrower from prepaying the credit or being charged a penalty fee for prepaying all or part of the credit.

V. Lending — Talent Amendment

Military Lending Act

Background

Examiners should reference the Military Lending Act examination procedures (Chapter V-13.1 in the Compliance Examination Manual) for consumer credit transactions occurring on or after October 3, 2016, as relevant. For consumer credit transactions occurring prior to these dates, examiners should reference the Talent Amendment examination procedures (Chapter V-12.1 in the Compliance Examination Manual).

The Military Lending Act¹ (MLA), enacted in 2006 and implemented by the Department of Defense (DoD), protects active duty members of the military, their spouses, and their dependents from certain lending practices. These practices could pose risks for service members and their families, and could pose a threat to military readiness and affect service member retention.

The DoD regulation² implementing the MLA contains limitations on and requirements for certain types of consumer credit extended to active duty service members and their spouses, children, and certain other dependents (“covered borrowers”). Subject to certain exceptions, the regulation generally applies to persons who meet the definition of a creditor in Regulation Z and are engaged in the business of extending such credit, as well as their assignees.³

For covered transactions, the MLA and the implementing regulation limit the amount a creditor may charge, including interest, fees, and charges imposed for credit insurance, debt cancellation and suspension, and other credit-related ancillary products sold in connection with the transaction. The total charge, as expressed through an annualized rate referred to as the Military Annual Percentage Rate (MAPR)⁴ may not exceed 36 percent.⁵ The MAPR includes charges that are not included in the finance charge or the annual percentage rate (APR) disclosed under the Truth in Lending Act (TILA).⁶

³ 32 CFR 232.3(i).

⁵ 32 CFR 232.4(b).

⁶ The MAPR largely parallels the APR, as calculated in accordance with Regulation Z, with some exceptions to ensure that creditors do not have incentives to evade the interest rate cap by shifting fees for the cost of the credit product away from those categories that would be included in the MAPR. Generally, a charge that is excluded as a “finance charge” under Regulation Z also would be excluded from the charges that must be included when calculating the MAPR. Late payment fees and required taxes—i.e., fees that are not directly related to the cost of credit—are examples of items excluded from both the APR and the MAPR. But certain other fees more directly related to the cost of credit are typically included in the MAPR, but not the APR. The most common examples of these fees—application fees

In addition, among other provisions, the MLA, as implemented by DoD:

- Provides an optional safe harbor from liability for certain procedures that creditors may use in connection with identifying covered borrowers;
- Requires creditors to provide written and oral disclosures in addition to those required by TILA;
- Prohibits certain loan terms, such as prepayment penalties, mandatory arbitration clauses, and certain unreasonable notice requirements; and
- Restricts loan rollovers, renewals, and refinancings by some types of creditors.

Statutory amendments to the MLA in 2013 granted enforcement authority for the MLA’s requirements to the agencies specified in section 108 of TILA.⁷ These agencies include the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the National Credit Union Administration, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Trade Commission. State regulators also supervise state-chartered institutions for MLA requirements pursuant to authority granted by state law.

In July 2015, DoD published revisions to the MLA implementing regulation⁸ that:

- Extend the MLA’s protections to a broader range of credit products;
- Modify the MAPR to include certain additional fees and charges;
- Alter the provisions of the optional safe harbor available to creditors for identification of covered borrowers;
- Modify the disclosures creditors are required to provide to covered borrowers;
- Modify the prohibition on rolling over, renewing, or refinancing consumer credit; and
- Implement statutory changes, including provisions related to administrative enforcement and civil liability for MLA violations (for knowingly violating the MLA, there is potential for criminal penalties).

and participation fees—have been specifically noted in the regulation as charges that generally must be included in the MAPR, but would not be included in the APR under Regulation Z.

V. Lending — Military Lending Act

Previously, the MLA regulation only applied to certain types of credit, namely: narrowly defined payday loans, motor vehicle title loans, and tax refund anticipation loans with particular terms. The current rule defines “consumer credit” subject to the MLA much more broadly, generally paralleling the definition in Regulation Z. Some examples of additional credit products now subject to MLA protections when made to covered borrowers include:

- Credit cards;
- Deposit advance products;
- Overdraft lines of credit (but not traditional overdraft services);⁹ and
- Certain installment loans (but not installment loans expressly intended to finance the purchase of a vehicle or personal property when the credit is secured by the vehicle or personal property being purchased).

Credit agreements that violate the MLA are void from inception. For most products, creditors are required to come into compliance with DoD’s July 2015 rule on October 3, 2016. For credit card accounts, creditors are not required to come into compliance with the rule until October 3, 2017.¹⁰

Consumer Credit

Consumer credit is “credit offered or extended to a covered borrower primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, and that is:

- Subject to a finance charge; or
- Payable by a written agreement in more than four installments.”

The MLA regulation’s definition of “consumer credit” has been amended to align more closely with the definition of the same term in Regulation Z. It is DoD’s intent that the term as used in the MLA regulation should wherever possible be interpreted consistently with Regulation Z. Notably,

⁹ An overdraft line of credit with a finance charge is a covered consumer credit product when: it is offered to a covered borrower; the credit extended by the creditor is primarily for personal, family, or household purposes; it is used to pay an item that overdraws an asset account and for which the covered borrower pays any fee or charge; and the extension of credit for the item and the imposition of a fee were previously agreed upon in writing.

¹⁰ For purposes of the extended compliance date, the credit card accounts must be under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan. DoD may, by order, further extend the expiration of the limited exemption for credit card accounts to a date not later than October 3, 2018. For all other credit products, a creditor must comply with the applicable requirements of the July 2015 rule by October 3, 2016 for all consumer credit transactions or accounts for consumer credit consummated or established on or after October 3, 2016.

however, the MLA and the implementing regulation do not apply to certain types of loans extended to covered borrowers that are covered by Regulation Z, including:

- Residential mortgages (any credit transaction secured by an interest in a dwelling), including transactions to finance the purchase or initial construction of a dwelling, any refinance transaction, a home equity loan or line of credit, or a reverse mortgage;
- Credit transactions expressly intended to finance the purchase of a motor vehicle¹¹ when the credit is secured by the motor vehicle being purchased; and
- Credit transactions expressly intended to finance the purchase of personal property when the credit is secured by the property being purchased.

Note: A transaction where a creditor simultaneously extends an additional cash advance beyond the purchase price of the securing personal property does not fall under this last exception.

Covered Borrower

A covered borrower is a consumer who, at the time the consumer becomes obligated on a consumer credit transaction or establishes an account for consumer credit, is a covered member of the armed forces or a dependent of a covered member (as defined in 32 CFR 232.3(g)(2) and (g)(3)).

Covered members of the armed forces include members of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, or Coast Guard currently serving on active duty pursuant to title 10, title 14, or title 32 of the U.S. Code under a call or order that does not specify a period of 30 days or fewer, or such a member serving on Active Guard and Reserve duty as that term is defined in 10 U.S.C. 101(d)(6).

The term dependent refers to a covered member’s:

- Spouse;
- Children under age 21;
- Children under age 23 enrolled full-time at an approved institution of higher learning and dependent on a covered member (or dependent at the time of the member’s or former member’s death) for over one-half of their support; or ¹¹ For purposes of the MLA, the term “vehicle” includes any self-propelled vehicle primarily used for personal, family, or household purposes for on-road transportation. The term does not include motor homes, recreational vehicles (RVs), golf carts, or motor scooters.

- Children of any age incapable of self-support due to mental or physical incapacity that occurred while a dependent of the covered member under the preceding two bullets and dependent on a covered member (or dependent at the time of the member's or former member's death) for over one-half of their support.

Other relationships may also qualify an individual as a dependent of a covered member. Paragraphs (E) and (I) of 10 U.S.C. 1072(2) reference other relationships that qualify individuals as dependents under the MLA.

Per 32 CFR 232.2(a)(1), the regulation does not apply to a credit transaction or account relating to a consumer who is not a covered borrower at the time that he or she becomes obligated on a credit transaction or establishes an account for credit. Additionally, the regulation does not apply to a credit transaction or account (which would otherwise be consumer credit) relating to a consumer once the consumer no longer is a covered borrower.

Creditor

Except as provided in 32 CFR 232.8(a), (f), and (g), a creditor under the MLA is a person who is:

- Engaged in the business of extending consumer credit;¹² or
- An assignee of a person engaged in the business of extending consumer credit with respect to any consumer credit extended.

With respect to 32 CFR 232.8(a) only (relating to limitations on rollovers, renewals, repayments, refinancings, and consolidations), the term creditor means a person engaged in the business of extending consumer credit subject to applicable law to engage in deferred presentment transactions or similar payday loan transactions. However, pursuant to 232.8(a), the term does not include a person that is chartered or licensed under Federal or State law as a bank, savings association, or credit union.

With respect to 32 CFR 232.8(f) only (relating to limitations on the use of a vehicle title as security), the term creditor does not include a person that is chartered or licensed under Federal or State law as a bank, savings association, or credit union.

With respect to 32 CFR 232.8(g) only (relating to limitations on requiring establishment of an allotment as a condition for extending credit), the term creditor does not include a "military welfare society," as defined in 10 U.S.C.

¹² For the purposes of this definition, a creditor is engaged in the business of extending consumer credit if the creditor considered by itself and together with its affiliates meets the transaction standard for a "creditor" under Regulation Z with respect to extensions of consumer credit to covered borrowers.

1033(b)(2), or a "service relief society," as defined in 37 U.S.C. 1007(h)(4).

Military Annual Percentage Rate (MAPR)

The MAPR is the cost of the consumer credit expressed as an annual rate, calculated in accordance with 32 CFR 232.4(c) (see "Terms of Consumer Credit Extended to Covered Borrowers (Calculation of MAPR) (§ 232.4)" for more information about calculating the MAPR). The MAPR for covered transactions must not exceed 36 percent.¹³

Short-Term, Small Amount Loan

Under certain circumstances, an application fee for a short-term, small amount loan may be excluded when calculating the MAPR (see "Terms of Consumer Credit Extended to Covered Borrowers (Calculation of MAPR) (§ 232.4)" for more information about calculating the MAPR). A short-term, small amount loan is a closed-end loan that is:

- Subject to and made in accordance with a Federal law (other than the MLA) that expressly limits the rate of interest that a Federal credit union or an insured depository institution may charge on an extension of credit, provided that the limitation set forth in that law is comparable to a limitation of an annual percentage rate of interest of 36 percent; and
- Made in accordance with the requirements, terms, and conditions of a rule, prescribed by the appropriate Federal regulatory agency (or jointly by such agencies), that implements the Federal law described in the paragraph above, provided further that such law or rule contains:
 - A fixed numerical limit on the maximum maturity term, which term shall not exceed nine months; and
 - A fixed numerical limit on any application fee that may be charged to a consumer who applies for such closed-end loan.

Terms of Consumer Credit Extended to Covered Borrowers (Calculation of MAPR) (§ 232.4)

Types of Fees to Include in MAPR Calculation

Under the MLA, a creditor may not impose an MAPR greater than 36 percent in connection with an extension of consumer credit that is closed-end credit or in any billing cycle for open-end credit. For credit card accounts, creditors ¹³ The regulation also prohibits an institution from imposing an MAPR except as authorized by applicable Federal or State law. Depending on the type of institution, different Federal or State laws may govern the maximum rates and fees an institution may impose for consumer credit transactions covered by the regulation, but in no instance may such rates and fees exceed the 36-percent MAPR cap contained in the regulation.

V. Lending — Military Lending Act

are not required to comply with DoD's July 2015 rule until October 3, 2017.

The following charges included in the MAPR ("charges") must be included in the calculation of the MAPR for both closed- and open-end credit, as applicable:

- Any credit insurance premium or fee, any charge for single premium credit insurance, any fee for a debt cancellation contract, or any fee for a debt suspension agreement;
- Any fee for a credit-related ancillary product sold in connection with the credit transaction for closed-end credit or an account for open-end credit; and
- Except for a bona fide fee (other than a periodic rate) charged to a credit card account, which may be excluded if the bona fide fee is reasonable:
 - Finance charges associated with the consumer credit;
 - Any application fee charged to a covered borrower who applies for consumer credit, other than an application fee charged by a Federal credit union or an insured depository institution when making a short-term, small amount loan provided that the application fee is charged to the covered borrower not more than once in any rolling 12-month period (see note below); and
 - In general, any fee imposed for participation in any plan or arrangement for consumer credit. (See "No Balance During a Billing Cycle" section below for more information on the MAPR calculation rules when there is no balance during a billing cycle for open-end credit).

These charges are to be included in the MAPR calculation even if they would be excluded from the calculation of the finance charge under Regulation Z.

Note: One application fee charged by a creditor making a short-term, small amount loan can be excluded from the computation of the MAPR under the conditions noted in the definition of a short-term, small amount loan. However, if a creditor charges a second application fee to a covered borrower who applies for a second short-term, small amount loan within a rolling 12-month period, then that second fee (and any subsequent application fees charged during that period) is not eligible for the exclusion and must be included when computing the MAPR for that loan.

Computing the MAPR for Closed-End Credit

For closed-end credit, the MAPR shall be calculated following the rules for calculating and disclosing the "Annual Percentage Rate (APR)" for credit transactions under Regulation Z based on the MAPR charges listed above. See Examination Checklist for the types of fees that would be included or excluded from the MAPR calculation.

Computing the MAPR for Open-End Credit

Generally, the MAPR for open-end credit should be calculated following the rules for calculating the effective annual percentage rate for a billing cycle as set forth in 12 CFR 1026.14(c) and (d) of Regulation Z¹⁴ (as if a creditor must comply with that section) based on the charges listed above.

Even if a fee is otherwise eligible to be excluded under 12 CFR 1026.14(c) and (d), the amount of charges related to opening, renewing, or continuing an account must be included in the calculation of the MAPR to the extent those charges are among those in the above "Types of Fees to Include in MAPR Calculation".

No Balance During a Billing Cycle. For open-end credit, if the MAPR cannot be calculated in a billing cycle because there is no balance in the billing cycle, a creditor may not impose any fee or charge during that billing cycle, except that the creditor may impose a fee for participation in any plan or arrangement for that open-end credit so long as the participation fee does not exceed $100.00 annually, regardless of the billing cycle in which the participation fee is imposed.

Note: the $100.00-per-year limitation on the amount of the participation fee does not apply to a bona fide participation fee charged to a credit card account consistent with 32 CFR 232.4(d).

Creditors may impose fees or charges that are excluded from the calculation of the MAPR during a particular billing cycle where there is no balance during the billing cycle. For example, if a creditor charged a late fee for a late payment in accordance with its credit agreement with the covered borrower and in compliance with Regulation Z, the creditor may charge the fee, regardless of whether there is a balance in the billing cycle, because a late fee is not among the charges that are included in the calculation of the MAPR.

Bona Fide Fees Charged to a Credit Card Account, Generally. For consumer credit extended in a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan, a bona fide fee, other than a periodic rate, is not a charge required to be included in the MAPR calculation, provided the fee is both bona fide and reasonable for the type of fee. There is no exclusion for “bona fide fees” on accounts that are not credit card accounts.

¹⁴ Sections 1026.14(c) and (d) of Regulation Z provide for the methods of computing the APR under several scenarios, such as: (1) when the finance charge is determined solely by applying one or more periodic rates; (2) when the finance charge during a billing cycle is or includes a fixed or other charge that is not due to application of a periodic rate, other than a charge with respect to a specific transaction; and (3) when the finance charge during a billing cycle is or includes a charge relating to a specific transaction during the billing cycle.

The exclusion for bona fide fees on credit card accounts does not apply to the following fees:

- Any credit insurance premium or fee, including any charge for single premium credit insurance, any fee for a debt cancellation contract, or any fee for a debt suspension agreement; or
- Any fee for a credit-related ancillary product sold in connection with the credit transaction for closed-end credit or an account for open-end credit.

Note: A minimum interest charge on a credit card account that is generally disclosed in an account-opening table can be a bona fide fee excludable from the MAPR calculation if it meets the conditions for exclusion.

To assess whether a bona fide fee is “reasonable,” the fee must be compared to fees typically imposed by other creditors for the same or a substantially similar product or service. This comparison is designed to be an “elementary like-kind standard,” as illustrated in the examples below:

Example #1: When assessing a bona fide cash advance fee, that fee must be compared to fees charged by other creditors for transactions in which consumers receive extensions of credit in the form of cash or its equivalent.

Example #2: When assessing a foreign transaction fee, that fee may not be compared to a cash advance fee because the foreign transaction fee involves the service of exchanging the consumer’s currency (e.g., a reserve currency) for the local currency demanded by a merchant for a good or service, and does not involve the provision of cash to the consumer.

It is generally permissible to consider benefits provided by credit card rewards programs in determining whether a fee is reasonable overall. For participation fees, the rule gives additional guidance for determining whether a fee is reasonable: if the amount of the fee reasonably corresponds to the credit limit in effect or credit made available when the fee is imposed, to the services offered under the credit card account, or to other factors relating to the credit card account.

Example #3: Even if other creditors typically charge $100.00 annually for participation in credit card accounts, a $400.00 fee nevertheless may be reasonable if (relative to other accounts carrying participation fees) the credit made available to the covered borrower is significantly higher or additional services or other benefits are offered under that account.

Bona Fide Fees Charged to a Credit Card Account, Safe Harbor. The regulation provides a “firm, yet flexibly adaptable” safe harbor standard for a “reasonable” amount of a bona fide fee on a credit card account. A bona fide fee is reasonable if the amount of the fee is less than or equal to an average amount of a fee for the same or a substantially similar product or service charged by five or more creditors each of whose U.S. credit cards in force is at least $3 billion in an outstanding balance (or at least $3 billion in loans on U.S. credit card accounts initially extended by the creditor) at any time during the three-year period preceding the time such average is computed. Creditors may use publicly available information regarding credit cards in force and/or fees charged on those credit cards, such as Securities and Exchange Commission filings, Consolidated Reports of Condition and Income, agreements posted on the CFPB’s website (<http://www.consumerfinance.gov/credit-cards/agreements/>), agreements posted on creditors’ own websites, or commercially compiled sources of information. For purposes of choosing creditors for comparison, note that a creditor may meet the $3 billion threshold even if the creditor has sold the credit card loans to a special-purpose vehicle or entered into another arrangement so that securities backed by the loans may be issued.

A bona fide fee that is higher than an average amount calculated using the safe harbor standard also may be reasonable depending on other factors relating to the credit card account. A bona fide fee charged by a creditor is not unreasonable solely because other creditors do not charge a fee for the same or a substantially similar product or service.

Effect of Charging Fees on Bona Fide Fees. If a creditor imposes a fee or fees that cannot be excluded from the MAPR (see “Types of Fees to Include in MAPR Calculation”) and imposes a finance charge on a covered borrower, the total amount of the fee(s) and finance charge(s) shall be included in the MAPR. This does not affect whether another type of fee may be excluded as a bona fide fee.

However, if a creditor imposes any fee (other than a periodic rate or charges that must be included in the MAPR) that is not a bona fide fee and imposes a finance charge on a covered borrower, the total amount of those fees, including any bona fide fees, and other finance charges shall be included in the MAPR.

Example #1: In a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan during a given billing cycle, Creditor A imposes on a covered borrower a fee for a debt cancellation product, a finance charge, and a reasonable bona fide foreign transaction fee. Only the fee for the debt cancellation product and the finance charge must be included when calculating the MAPR.

Example #2: In a credit card account under an open-end (not home-secured) consumer credit plan during a given billing cycle, Creditor B imposes on a covered borrower a fee for a debt cancellation product, a finance charge, a reasonable bona fide foreign transaction fee, and a bona fide, but unreasonable cash advance fee. All of the fees—including the foreign transaction fee that otherwise would qualify for the exclusion as a bona fide fee—and the finance charge must be included when calculating the MAPR.

V. Lending — Military Lending Act

Timing for Computing the MAPR for Open-End Credit

Computing. In general, creditors can be reasonably expected to estimate at the outset of a billing cycle whether charges to a covered borrower can produce an MAPR in excess of the 36-percent limit. This is particularly true because the creditor already would know the periodic rate and whether the non-periodic fees are covered by the exclusion for a bona fide fee under 32 CFR 232.4(d).

Nevertheless, under certain circumstances, creditors might not know at the outset of a billing cycle whether the borrower's use of an open-end line of credit will lead to a finance charge that—through a combination of rates and fees—exceeds the 36-percent limit. However, at the end of a billing cycle the creditor would be able to calculate the MAPR and, in that same billing cycle, waive fees or periodic charges, either in whole or in part, in order to comply with the 36-percent limit.

MAPR Calculation Examples

The following examples may assist reviewers in calculating the MAPR.

Example #1: Closed-End Credit. The MAPR for single advance, single payment transactions, such as some types of deposit advance loans, must be computed in accordance with the rules in Regulation Z, such as by following the instructions described in paragraph (c)(5) of appendix J. Based on the formula provided in paragraph (c)(5) of appendix J, in the case of a single advance, single payment transaction loan extended to a covered borrower for a period of 45 days, and for which the advance is $500.00 and the single payment required consists of the principal amount plus a finance charge of $28.44, for a total payment of $528.44, the MAPR would be 46.14 percent. In this example, the resultant MAPR would exceed the 36-percent rate limit.

Example #2: Open-End Credit (General). Suppose a creditor offers a line of credit to a covered borrower primarily for personal, family, or household purposes (commonly referred to as a “personal line of credit”), and permits the borrower to repay on a monthly basis. Upon establishing the personal line of credit, the covered borrower borrows $500.00. The creditor charges a periodic rate of 0.006875 (which corresponds to an annual rate of 8.25 percent), plus a fee of $25.00, charged when the account is established and annually thereafter. Under these circumstances, pursuant to 12 CFR 1026.14(c)(2), the creditor would calculate the MAPR as follows: “dividing the total amount of the finance charge for the billing cycle”—which is $3.44 (corresponding to $(0.006875) \times ($500)$), plus $25.00—“by the amount of the balance to which it is applicable”—$500—and multiplying the quotient (expressed as a percentage) by the number of billing cycles in a year”—12 (since the creditor allows the borrower to repay monthly), which is 68.26 percent. In this example, even though the periodic rate (0.006875) would comply with the interest-rate limit under 32 CFR 232.4(b), the resultant MAPR would be in excess of that limit because the amount borrowed is low at the time the annual fee is imposed.

Example #3: Open-End Credit (Credit Card). In the case of a credit card account, a creditor likewise would be required to calculate the MAPR using the methods prescribed in 12 CFR 1026.14(c) and (d) of Regulation Z. For example, if a creditor extends credit to a covered borrower through a credit card account and the borrower incurs a finance charge relating to a specific transaction, such as a cash advance transaction, during the billing cycle, then the creditor would calculate the MAPR under the instructions set forth in 12 CFR 1026.14(c)(3). However, in the case of a credit card account the creditor may exclude, pursuant to 32 CFR 232.4(c)(1)(iii) and 232.4(d), any bona fide fee from the finance charges that otherwise must be accounted for; thus, if a charge for the cash advance transaction fits within the exclusion for a bona fide fee under 32 CFR 232.4(d), then that charge would not be included when computing the MAPR for that billing cycle.

Identification of Covered Borrowers (§ 232.5)

A creditor is permitted to apply its own method to assess whether a consumer is a covered borrower; however, the regulation provides creditors an optional safe harbor from liability in conclusively determining whether credit is offered or extended to a covered borrower through assessing the status of a consumer by use of either of the following methods:

- Verifying the status of a consumer by using information relating to that consumer, if any, obtained directly or indirectly from the DoD's database, located at <https://mla.dmdc.osd.mil/> (or via any URL or direct connection to the database that may be provided by the DoD). Searches require entry of the consumer's last name, date of birth, and Social Security number.

Note: Historic lookbacks are prohibited under the rule. After a consumer has entered into a transaction or established an account, a creditor (including an assignee) may not, directly or indirectly, obtain any information from the DoD database to determine whether a consumer had been a covered borrower as of the date of a transaction or the date an account was established. However, this provision does not prevent creditors from adopting a risk management plan that includes periodically screening credit portfolios for other purposes, such as determining whether there are changes to covered borrower status.

OR

- Verifying the status of a consumer by using a statement, code, or similar indicator describing that status, if any, contained in a consumer report obtained from a consumer reporting agency that compiles and maintains files on consumers on a nationwide basis, or a reseller of such consumer reports, as those terms are defined in the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) and any implementing regulations.

Note: The consumer reporting agency (CRA) must be a nationwide agency or a reseller of reports from such an agency (as both of those terms are defined by the FCRA); many specialty CRAs may not qualify.

A creditor's one-time determination, by using one of the methods provided in 32 CFR 232.5(b)(2), is permitted and deemed to be conclusive with respect to that transaction or account between the creditor and that consumer, so long as the creditor timely creates and maintains a record of the information obtained, solely at the time that:

- The consumer initiates the transaction or 30 days prior to that time;
- The consumer applies to establish the account or 30 days prior to that time; or
- The creditor develops or processes a firm offer of credit that includes the status of the consumer as a covered borrower, so long as the consumer responds to that offer no later than 60 days after the creditor provides the offer to the consumer.

The MLA rule extends the covered borrower check safe harbor to a creditor's assignee provided that the assignee continues to maintain the original record created by the creditor that initially extended the credit. Neither the MLA nor 32 CFR 232 specify how and for how long creditors are to maintain these records, noting only that the records must be created timely and maintained thereafter.

An action by a creditor within an existing account, such as to increase the available credit that a consumer may draw upon, does not alter the status of the creditor's prior determination for that account. However, in order to benefit from the optional safe harbor provisions, a creditor must use one of the safe harbor methods when extending a new consumer credit product or newly establishing an account for consumer credit, including a new line of consumer credit that might be associated with a pre-existing transactional account held by the borrower (for example, when a consumer applies for an overdraft line of credit associated with an existing checking account).

Mandatory Loan Disclosures (§ 232.6)

If a creditor extends consumer credit (including any consumer credit originated or extended through the internet) to a covered borrower, the creditor must provide the covered borrower with certain information before or at the time the borrower becomes obligated on the transaction or establishes an account for the consumer credit:

- A statement of the MAPR applicable to the extension of consumer credit;
- Any disclosure required by Regulation Z, which shall be provided only in accordance with the requirements of Regulation Z that apply to that disclosure; and
- A clear description of the payment obligation of the covered borrower, as applicable. Note that a payment schedule (in the case of closed-end credit) or account-opening disclosure (in the case of open-end credit) provided pursuant to Regulation Z satisfies this requirement.

A creditor may satisfy the requirement to provide a statement of the MAPR by describing the charges the creditor may impose, in accordance with the regulation and subject to the terms and conditions of the agreement, relating to the consumer credit to calculate the MAPR. A creditor is not required to describe the MAPR as a numerical value or to describe the total dollar amount of all charges in the MAPR that apply to the extension of consumer credit. A creditor may include a statement of the MAPR applicable to the consumer credit in the agreement with the covered borrower involving the consumer credit transaction. The regulation does not require a statement of the MAPR to be included in advertisements.

Under 32 CFR 232.6(c)(3), a statement substantially similar to the following model statement may be used to satisfy the requirement to provide a statement of the MAPR:

Federal law provides important protections to members of the Armed Forces and their dependents relating to extensions of consumer credit. In general, the cost of consumer credit to a member of the Armed Forces and his or her dependent may not exceed an annual percentage rate of 36 percent. This rate must include, as applicable to the credit transaction or account: The costs associated with credit insurance premiums; fees for ancillary products sold in connection with the credit transaction; any application fee charged (other than certain application fees for specified credit transactions or accounts); and any participation fee charged (other than certain participation fees for a credit card account).

If a transaction involves more than one creditor, then only one of those creditors must provide the required disclosures. The creditors may agree among themselves which creditor will provide the statement of the MAPR and the clear description of the payment obligation.¹⁵

The statement of the MAPR and the clear description of the payment obligation must be provided in writing in a form the covered borrower can keep. A creditor shall also provide such required information orally.¹⁶ A creditor may satisfy the requirement to provide oral disclosures if the creditor provides:

- The information to the covered borrower in person; or
- A toll-free telephone number in order to deliver the oral disclosures to a covered borrower when the covered borrower contacts the creditor for this purpose.

If a creditor elects to provide a toll-free telephone number in order to deliver the oral disclosures, the toll-free telephone number must be included on:

- A form the creditor directs the consumer to use to apply for the transaction or account involving consumer credit; or
- The written disclosure the creditor provides to the covered borrower.

The oral disclosures provided through the toll-free number need only be available for a duration of time reasonably necessary to allow a covered borrower to contact the creditor for the purpose of listening to the disclosure. A creditor may orally provide a clear description of the payment obligation of the covered borrower by providing a general description of how the payment obligation is calculated or a description of what the borrower's payment obligation would be based on an estimate of the amount the borrower may borrow. For example, a creditor could generally describe how minimum payments are calculated on open-end credit plans issued by the creditor and then refer the covered borrower to the written materials the borrower will receive in connection with opening the plan. Alternatively, a creditor could choose to generally describe borrowers' obligations to make a monthly, bi-monthly, or weekly payment as the case may be under the borrowers' agreements. The requirement of a clear, oral payment obligation disclosure has sufficient breadth that creditors may choose a variety of acceptable oral disclosure compliance strategies. A generic oral description of the payment obligation may be provided, even though the disclosure is the same for borrowers with a variety of consumer credit transactions or accounts.

If Regulation Z would allow a creditor to provide a required disclosure after the borrower has become obligated on a transaction, as in the case of purchase orders or requests for credit made by mail, telephone, or fax under 12 CFR 1026.17(g), the disclosures required by the MLA may be provided at the time prescribed in Regulation Z. A creditor is required to provide new disclosures for the refinancing or renewal of consumer credit only when the transaction for that credit would be considered a new transaction that requires disclosures under Regulation Z.

The statement of the MAPR and the clear description of the payment obligation, as described above, need to be provided to a covered borrower only once for the transaction or the account established for consumer credit with respect to that borrower.

Limitations (§ 232.8)

The MLA imposes a number of limitations upon creditors in connection with consumer credit extended to covered borrowers.

Rollovers and certain other actions. It is unlawful for a creditor to roll over, renew, repay, refinance, or consolidate any consumer credit extended to the covered borrower by the same creditor with the proceeds of other consumer credit extended by that creditor to the same covered borrower.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "creditor" means a person engaged in the business of deferred presentment transactions or similar payday loan transactions (as described in the relevant law), provided however, that the term does not include a person that is chartered or licensed under Federal or State law as a bank, savings association, or credit union.

Note: This prohibition does not apply to a transaction when the same creditor extends consumer credit to a covered borrower to refinance or renew an extension of credit that was not covered by this paragraph because the consumer was not a covered borrower at the time of the original transaction.

Terms Relating to Dispute Resolution. A creditor cannot require a covered borrower to:

- Waive the covered borrower's right to legal recourse under any otherwise applicable provision of Federal or ¹⁵ 32 CFR 232.6(b)(2).

¹⁶ 32 CFR 232.6(d)(2).

State law, including any provision of the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act;¹⁷

- Submit to arbitration or other onerous legal notice provisions in the case of a dispute; or
- Give unreasonable notice as a condition for legal action.

Payment Terms and Conditions – General. A creditor cannot:

- Use the title of a vehicle as security for the obligation involving the consumer credit.

Note that for the purposes of this paragraph, the term “creditor” does not include a person that is chartered or licensed under Federal or State law as a bank, savings association, or credit union;

- Require as a condition for the extension of consumer credit that the covered borrower establish an allotment to repay the obligation (note that for the purposes of this paragraph only, the term “creditor” shall not include a “military welfare society,” as defined in 10 U.S.C. 1033(b)(2), or a “service relief society,” as defined in 37 U.S.C. 1007(h)(4)); or
- Prohibit the borrower from prepaying the consumer credit or charge a penalty fee for prepaying all or part of the consumer credit.

Payment Terms and Conditions – Account Access. A creditor cannot use a check or other method of access to a deposit, savings, or other financial account maintained by the covered borrower, except that, in connection with a consumer credit transaction with an MAPR not exceeding the 36-percent limit, a creditor may:

- Require an electronic fund transfer to repay a consumer credit transaction, unless otherwise prohibited by law;

- Require direct deposit of the consumer’s salary as a condition of eligibility for consumer credit, unless otherwise prohibited by law; or
- If not otherwise prohibited by applicable law, take a security interest in funds deposited after the extension of credit in an account established in connection with the consumer credit transaction.

This section prohibits a creditor from using the borrower’s account information to create a remotely created check or remotely created payment order in order to collect payments on consumer credit from a covered borrower. Similarly, a creditor may not use a post-dated check provided at or around the time credit is extended that deprives the borrower of control over payment decisions, as is common in certain payday lending transactions. However, the prohibition on account access does not in any way prevent covered borrowers from tendering a check or authorizing access to a deposit, savings, or other financial account to repay a creditor. Section 232.8(e) also does not prohibit a covered borrower from authorizing automatically recurring payments, provided that such recurring payments comply with other laws, including the Electronic Fund Transfer Act and its implementing regulations, such as 12 CFR 1005.10, as applicable. The prohibition in 32 CFR 232.8(e) also does not prohibit covered borrowers from granting a security interest to a creditor in the covered borrower’s checking, savings, or other financial account, provided that it is not otherwise prohibited by applicable law and the creditor complies with the MLA regulation including the 36-percent limitation on the MAPR.

Savings Clauses. A creditor may include a proscribed term under section 232.8, such as a mandatory arbitration clause, within a standard written credit agreement with a covered borrower, provided that the agreement includes a contractual “savings” clause limiting the application of the proscribed term to only non-covered borrowers, consistent with any other applicable law.

V. Lending — Military Lending Act

Examination Objectives

1. Determine the institution's compliance with the provisions of 32 CFR 232, as applicable.
2. Assess the quality of the institution's compliance risk management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing the provisions.
3. Determine the reliance that can be placed on the institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution's compliance with the provisions.
4. Determine corrective action when violations of law are identified or when the institution's policies, procedures, or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures¹⁸

Determine Applicability of the Regulation

1. Determine if the creditor offers or purchases consumer credit covered by 32 CFR 232.
 - If the creditor does not offer or purchase the types of credit that would be consumer credit within the meaning of the MLA, the regulation does not apply and no further review is necessary;
 - If the creditor offers or purchases any of the types of credit that would be consumer credit within the meaning of the MLA, use the following procedures to determine whether the creditor complies with the MLA.

The following flowchart may be helpful in determining MLA applicability to a particular extension of credit to a covered borrower:

¹⁸ This reflects the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

V. Lending — Military Lending Act

Evaluate Compliance Management System

2. Determine the extent and adequacy of the institution's policies, procedures, and practices for ensuring and monitoring compliance with the MLA.
3. Determine the extent and adequacy of the training received by individuals whose responsibilities relate to compliance with the MLA. Review any training materials pertaining to the MLA and determine whether the training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of the provisions that apply to the creditor's offerings and operations.
4. Determine if the institution has policies or procedures in place to:
 - Provide account disclosure information to covered borrowers in accordance with 32 CFR 232.6;
 - Correctly determine which fees it charges are required to be included in the calculation of the MAPR;
 - Correctly calculate and limit the MAPR (including waiving amounts necessary in order to comply with the limit at the outset of a transaction and at the end of a billing cycle on open-end credit, as applicable) as defined in 32 CFR 232.3(p) and in accordance with 32 CFR 232.4(c); and
 - Properly create and maintain records of covered borrower checks.
5. Obtain compliance reviews and/or audit materials, including workpapers and reports, to determine if:
 - The scope of any audits address all provisions of the regulation, as applicable;
 - Transaction testing includes samples covering all relevant product types and decision centers;
 - The work performed is accurate;
 - Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management or to the board of directors;
 - Management has taken corrective actions to follow up on previously identified deficiencies; and
 - The frequency of review/audit is appropriate (including review/audit of implemented corrective action related to previously identified deficiencies).
6. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance. Consider the following:

- Organization charts;
- Process flowcharts;
- Policies and procedures;
- Account documentation;
- Checklists; and
- Computer program documentation, including any computer program testing and validation.

Identification of Covered Borrowers

7. Determine whether the creditor's policies, procedures, and training materials accurately reflect the scope of the "covered borrower" definition.

If creditors elect not to enact company-wide policies and procedures to check for covered borrower status, they may be at higher risk for making non-compliant loans. Examiners may wish to focus any file review activities on the ability of creditors to accurately ascertain covered borrower status on an ad hoc basis.

8. Determine whether the creditor has elected to use one of the optional safe harbor methods provided in 32 CFR 232.5(b). If the creditor does not use one of the optional safe harbor methods, describe the method, if any, that the creditor uses to ensure it does not make covered loans to covered borrowers on prohibited terms.
9. If a creditor elects to use one of the two optional safe harbor methods to check a consumer's status, ascertain whether the creditor timely creates and thereafter maintains a record of the information obtained, in accordance with 32 CFR 232.5(b)(3).
10. If a creditor elects to use a method other than one of the two optional safe harbor methods, determine whether the chosen method is performed prior to a consumer becoming obligated on a credit transaction or establishing an account for credit and whether the creditor maintains a record of the information obtained.

Note: Section 232.5 contains no specific timing and recordkeeping requirements if the creditor uses an alternative to one of the safe harbors to verify covered borrower status. However, any alternative method selected by the creditor should be evaluated to determine whether it is reasonable and verifiable, and whether it addresses the risk of extending consumer credit that does not comply with the MLA to a covered borrower.
11. Regarding an action by a creditor relating to a covered borrower with an existing account, if a creditor has elected to use one of the two optional safe harbor methods, determine whether the creditor also uses one of the safe harbor methods when extending a new consumer credit product or newly establishing an account for consumer credit, including a new line of consumer credit that might be associated with a pre-existing transactional account held by the borrower.

Calculation of MAPR

12. Determine whether the creditor includes the following charges in the calculation of the MAPR for both closed-end and open-end credit, as applicable:
 - Any credit insurance premium or fee, any charge for single premium credit insurance, any fee for a debt cancellation contract, or any fee for a debt suspension agreement;
 - Any fee for a credit-related ancillary product sold in connection with the credit transaction for closed-end credit or an account for open-end credit; and
 - Except for a bona fide fee (other than a periodic rate) charged to a credit card account, which may be excluded if the bona fide fee is reasonable for that type of fee:
 - Finance charges associated with the consumer credit;
 - Any application fee charged to a covered borrower who applies for consumer credit, other than an application fee charged by a Federal credit union or an insured depository institution when making a short-term, small amount loan provided that the application fee is charged to the covered borrower not more than once in any rolling 12-month period; and
 - Any fee imposed for participation in any plan or arrangement for consumer credit other than as permitted under 32 CFR 232.4(c)(2)(ii)(B).
13. For closed-end credit, determine whether the creditor appropriately calculates the MAPR following the rules for calculating and disclosing the “Annual Percentage Rate (APR)” for credit transactions under Regulation Z based on the “Types of Fees to Include in MAPR Calculation” above.
14. For open-end credit, determine whether the creditor appropriately calculates the MAPR following the rules for calculating the effective annual percentage rate for a billing cycle as set forth in 12 CFR 1026.14(c) and (d) of Regulation Z (as if a creditor must comply with that section) based on the “Types of Fees to Include in MAPR Calculation” above.

Mandatory Loan Disclosures

15. Determine whether the creditor properly provides the covered borrower with required information before or at the time the borrower becomes obligated on the transaction or establishes an account for the consumer credit, including:
 - A statement of the MAPR applicable to the extension of consumer credit;
 - Any disclosure required by Regulation Z, which shall be provided only in accordance with the requirements of Regulation Z that apply to that disclosure; and
 - A clear description of the payment obligation of the covered borrower, as applicable. Note that a payment schedule (in the case of closed-end credit) or account-opening disclosure (in the case of open-end credit) provided pursuant to Regulation Z satisfies this requirement. Also note that for oral disclosures, a generic, clear description of the payment obligation is permissible.
16. Determine whether the creditor provides the statement of the MAPR and the clear description of the payment obligation both in writing in a form the covered borrower can keep and orally.
17. If the creditor elects to provide a toll-free telephone number in order to deliver the oral disclosures to a covered borrower, determine whether the toll-free telephone number is included on either:
 - A form the creditor directs the consumer to use to apply for the transaction or account involving consumer credit; or
 - The written disclosure the creditor provides to the covered borrower.
18. If the creditor elects to provide a toll-free telephone number in order to deliver the oral disclosures to a covered borrower, determine whether the toll-free telephone number is available for a duration of time reasonably necessary to allow a covered borrower to contact the creditor for the purpose of listening to the disclosure.

Other Limitations

19. Determine whether the creditor abides by the prohibition on rolling over, renewing, repaying, refinancing, or consolidating consumer credit. Note that this prohibition does not apply to a creditor that is chartered or licensed under Federal or State law as a bank, savings association, or credit union, or when the credit is being extended by the same creditor to refinance or renew an extension of credit that was not covered because the consumer was not a covered borrower at the time of the original transaction.

V. Lending — Military Lending Act

20. Determine whether the creditor abides by the prohibitions against requiring covered borrowers to:

- Waive their rights to legal recourse under any otherwise applicable law;
- Submit to arbitration or other onerous legal notice provisions in the case of a dispute; or
- Provide unreasonable notice as a condition for legal action.

21. Confirm that the creditor does not:

- Require that a covered borrower repay the obligation by military allotment (note that for purposes of this provision of the regulation, the term “creditor” does not include “military welfare societies” or “service relief societies”);
- Prohibit a covered borrower from prepaying the consumer credit; or

- Charge a covered borrower a penalty fee for prepaying all or part of the consumer credit.

22. Determine whether the creditor abides by the prohibition on using the title of a vehicle as security for the obligation involving the consumer credit. Note that this prohibition does not apply when the transaction is expressly intended to finance the purchase of a vehicle and the credit is secured by the vehicle or when the creditor is chartered under Federal or State law as a bank, savings association, or credit union.

23. Determine whether the creditor improperly requires access to a deposit, savings, or other financial account maintained by the covered borrower for repayment by:

- Obtaining payment through a remotely created check or remotely created payment order; or
- Obtaining a post-dated check provided at or around the time credit is extended.

Overdraft Payment Programs

Introduction

Prior to the 1990s, overdraft programs were not common among financial institutions. Since that time, however, institutions have added and/or expanded the types of overdraft payment programs provided to customers. Some of these programs impose substantial fees and interest and rely on third-party vendors to develop systems to maximize the amount of fee income generated. Customer complaints have increased, along with reported legal and enforcement actions. In many cases, fees are repeatedly charged and are often disproportionate to the amount originally intended to be funded. Some institutions manipulate their transaction processing order to maximize fee income. Customers have complained that they were not made aware of the existence or potential negative consequences of, or alternatives to, various types of overdraft coverage. Some customers' financial difficulties have been exacerbated by institutions' overdraft payment practices and programs, even though the institutions maintain alternative programs more suitable for those customers. These circumstances can have an adverse impact on bank customers and present a potential risk of consumer harm.

In an effort to assist FDIC-supervised institutions in identifying, managing, and mitigating risks regarding overdraft payment programs, the FDIC issued its November 24, 2010, Overdraft Payment Supervisory Guidance ("2010 Supervisory Guidance") (FIL-81-2010). The 2010 Supervisory Guidance, which particularly focuses on the risks associated with excessive or chronic use of automated overdraft programs, is intended to serve as a comprehensive, up-to-date source of information about concerns and risks, as well as a summary of existing guidance and recent regulatory developments. In addition, the 2010 Supervisory Guidance encourages FDIC-supervised institutions to promote responsible use of overdraft payment programs through a series of specifically recommended actions institutions can take to help minimize the potential for consumer harm and regulatory or other risks. These overdraft payment program examination procedures:

- Incorporate recent changes to applicable laws and regulations;
- Integrate the supervisory expectations stated in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance; and
- Reaffirm principles contained in the 2005 Interagency Joint Guidance on Overdraft Protection Programs ("Joint Guidance") (FIL-11-2005) and the 2008 Guidance for

Managing Third-Party Risk ("Third-Party Guidance")¹ (FIL-44-2008).

The 2010 Supervisory Guidance reaffirms existing laws, regulations, and guidance and addresses concerns regarding the risks posed by automated programs and excessive use. The specific supervisory expectations set out in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance with respect to excessive or chronic users of automated overdraft programs do not apply to ad hoc overdraft practices. In April 2011, the FDIC published a set of Frequently Asked Questions to clarify the 2010 guidance and to respond to questions received from supervised institutions and third-party vendors.²

The Joint Guidance,³ Third-Party Guidance, and range of applicable laws and regulations potentially apply to any method of covering overdrafts, including automated programs, linked accounts and lines of credit.

Examination Approach and Applicable Laws and Regulations

The FDIC's risk-scoping examination approach requires compliance examiners to focus their attention to operational areas that present the greatest potential risk of consumer harm, as appropriate, including consideration of overdraft programs. Examiners should continue to reference appropriate chapters in the Compliance Examination Manual governing laws and regulations applicable to overdraft payment programs. The scope of potentially applicable statutes and regulations that may apply to overdraft payment programs includes:

- The Truth in Lending Act (TILA) and Regulation Z;
- The Truth in Savings Act (TISA) and Regulation DD;
- The Electronic Fund Transfer Act (EFTA) and Regulation E;
- Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTC Act) governing Unfair or Deceptive Acts or Practices (UDAPs);
- The Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) and Regulation B;
- The Expedited Funds Availability Act and Regulation CC; and
- The Community Reinvestment Act (CRA).

¹ See Third-Party Risk Compliance Examination Procedures issued June 1, 2010.

² On April 1, 2011, FDIC staff published a set of Frequently Asked Questions and answers in response to questions received from supervised institutions and third-party vendors about the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, available at <https://www.fdic.gov/news/conferences/overdraft/FAQ.pdf>

³ Compliance examiners should pay particular attention to the "Best Practices" in the Joint Guidance, which cover both Marketing and Communications with Consumers and Program Features and Operation.

V. Lending — Overdraft Payment Programs

Compliance examiners should apply the Overdraft Payment Program Compliance Examination Procedures and relevant laws and regulations, and refer to the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Joint Guidance, and the Third-Party Guidance, as appropriate, to verify that institutions are adhering to applicable laws and regulations, and implementing appropriate policies, procedures, compliance management systems, and risk mitigation strategies.

Regulation E Changes

Changes to laws and regulations place additional requirements on institutions' overdraft payment programs. Under Regulation E rules that took effect July 1, 2010, institutions must provide notice and a reasonable opportunity for customers to opt-in to the payment of automated teller machine (ATM) and one-time, point-of-sale (POS) overdrafts provided in exchange for a fee. Institutions must also inform the customer if alternatives are available.⁴ In complying with these requirements, institutions should not attempt to steer frequent users of fee-based overdraft products to opt-in to these programs while obscuring the availability of alternatives.

Targeting customers who may be least able to afford such products can raise safety-and-soundness concerns about potentially unsustainable customer debt. Overly aggressive marketing, advertising, and other promotional activities require particular vigilance to ensure that they are not unfair or deceptive. Steering activity with respect to credit products raises potential legal issues, including fair lending, equal credit opportunity, and concerns about UDAPs, among others, and will be closely scrutinized. In addition, inconsistent application of waivers of overdraft fees will be evaluated in light of all applicable fair lending statutes and regulations.

Unfair or Deceptive Acts or Practices

Section 5 of the FTC Act prohibits UDAPs in or affecting commerce.⁵ The FDIC enforces compliance with this important consumer protection law regarding FDIC-supervised institutions pursuant to its authority in the FTC Act and Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.⁶ The prohibition against UDAPs applies to all products and services offered by financial institutions, including overdraft services, and regardless of whether such services are offered directly or indirectly through a third party. Moreover, the prohibition applies to every stage and activity: from product development to the creation and rollout of the marketing campaign; from account maintenance and collections all the way through termination of the customer relationship.⁷

Community Reinvestment Act

Institutions will continue to receive favorable CRA consideration under the service or lending tests (consistent with CRA regulations and FIL-50-2007 providing details on small dollar loans⁸), for offering financial education and positive alternatives to overdrafts that are responsive to the needs of customers, particularly low- and moderate-income individuals, in their local communities. Examples include lower-cost transaction accounts and credit alternatives, such as a linked savings account, a small, reasonably priced line of credit consistent with safe and sound banking practices, or a safe and affordable small dollar loan.

Third-Party Arrangements

With the growth of third-party arrangements for overdraft payment programs, Compliance examiners should ensure that financial institutions are managing these relationships in accordance with the principles outlined in the Third-Party Guidance.⁹ In addition to general third-party oversight considerations, these third-party overdraft payment programs may raise concerns that differ from potential issues related to in-house programs. For example, some vendors have tended to promote programs that encourage generation of fee income by linking the amount or volume of overdraft fees charged to the percentage of incentive compensation paid to the vendor.¹⁰ This practice is generally inconsistent with promoting the responsible use of these programs.

Where vendor compensation is tied to a percentage of income or fees generated by the product sold, Compliance examiners should evaluate whether the third-party relationship raises the potential for compliance, operational, financial, and reputational risks to the financial institution. For example, where a third-party arrangement provides that the vendor will take a reduced percentage of compensation if the financial institution implements a transaction processing order of largest-to-smallest, this arrangement may rise to the level of a UDAP violation if the institution, at the vendor's encouragement, is manipulating the transaction processing order solely to generate fees and increase both the institution's fee income and the vendor's compensation. Customers may be harmed if this practice is designed exclusively to increase the amount of overdraft fees assessed without any corresponding and meaningful benefit to the consumer.

4 See Regulation E (Electronic Fund Transfer Act) Examination Procedures. In addition, as of January 1, 2010, Regulation DD (Truth in Savings) requires institutions to disclose on periodic statements the aggregate dollar amounts charged for overdraft fees and for returned item fees, for the statement period and the year-to-date. It also requires institutions that provide account balance information through an automated system to provide a balance that does not include additional funds that may be made available to cover overdrafts. See Regulation DD Examination Procedures.

The 2010 Supervisory Guidance

The FDIC expects that supervised institutions will review their current automated overdraft payment programs, policies and procedures in light of the 2010 Supervisory Guidance. For example, as a threshold matter, Compliance examiners should determine if the institution has reviewed its existing program and determined whether the institution is going to:

- Give customers the opportunity to affirmatively choose the credit product most suitable for their financial needs, including overdraft payment products;
- Ensure that customers understand overdraft payment programs and alternative product choices;
- Appropriately monitor accounts and take meaningful and effective action to reach customers frequently using automated overdraft programs to inform them of lower-cost alternatives;
- Structure transaction clearing practices in a neutral manner not intended to maximize overdraft-related fees charged to customers; and
- Establish appropriate daily limits on fees.

Identification of Types of Overdraft Payment Programs Offered

Compliance examiners should first identify overdraft payment practices, programs and products offered and used by the financial institution at each examination, and consider the applicability of existing laws, regulations and guidance, as appropriate. In particular, examiners will need to determine whether overdraft payment decisions and programs are automated or not.

Automated overdraft payment programs typically rely on computerized decision-making and use pre-established criteria to pay or return specific items. There is little to no case-by-case review and decision-making with respect to an individual customer or item. By contrast, ad hoc programs typically involve the exercise of bank employee judgment in making a specific decision about whether to pay or return an item, as an accommodation and based on the employee's knowledge of a particular customer. See Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures of this section for further explanation of automated and ad hoc programs.

Automated overdraft payment programs are the focus of the 2010 Supervisory Guidance. Ad hoc overdraft payments have been authorized by banks for years as an accommodation based on specific considerations and knowledge of a particular customer, and they have generally not been the subject of the type of product over-use concerns that can be associated with automated overdraft programs. Consequently, the specific supervisory expectations set out in the Guidance regarding customer contact for excessive or chronic users do not apply to ad hoc overdraft practices. Compliance examiners should not focus on ad hoc overdraft payments or practices when evaluating appropriate risk mitigation efforts in connection with the 2010 Supervisory Guidance; however, if significant safety and soundness or compliance risks regarding ad hoc programs and practices are identified, an examiner may consider an expanded review (See Expanded Review for Ad Hoc Programs or Practices).

Examiners should focus on identifying and mitigating the significant risks posed by automated overdraft programs, including taking a risk-based approach in scoping examinations to verify that institutions' automated overdraft payment programs comply with applicable laws and regulations, and that such programs are not operating in a manner that is inconsistent with expectations set out in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Joint Guidance and the Third-Party Guidance. In examining for appropriate application of the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, reviews of management activities, policies and procedures, and transaction testing, including document requests, should focus on automated overdraft programs.

Supervisory Action to Mitigate Risks

Overdraft payment programs that are found to pose unacceptable safety and soundness or compliance risks will be factored into examination ratings, and corrective action will be taken where necessary. Violations should be cited on the appropriate Violation pages of the Report of Examination (ROE). Other concerns regarding practices that are inconsistent with the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Joint Guidance, and/or the Third-Party Guidance should be discussed in the Examiner's Comments and Conclusions page of the ROE. Additionally, Compliance examiners should make appropriate recommendations to bank management on the Matters Requiring Board Attention page in the ROE, when applicable. These violations and concerns should be taken into consideration when assessing the institution's Compliance Management System (CMS) and determining the overall Compliance Rating.

Appropriate corrective action will be pursued where overdraft payment practices or programs pose unacceptable safety and soundness or compliance management system risks, or result in violations of laws or regulations, including UDAPs. Depending on the circumstances, corrective action may include ratings downgrades, informal agreements, enforcement orders, customer restitution, and/or civil money penalties.

V. Lending — Overdraft Payment Programs

Regional Offices should ensure that appropriate post-examination tracking covers instances where the ROE identifies:

- Inconsistencies with the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Joint Guidance and the Third-Party Guidance given an institution's overall CMS and risk mitigation approach, and
- Other overdraft-related violations and concerns, to ensure that timely and appropriate corrective action is taken by bank management.

In addition, at the conclusion of each compliance examination, examiners are required to complete the overdraft payment program related questions in the Credit and Consumer Product/Services Survey. Finally, Compliance examiners should consult with Risk Management examiners, as appropriate, where safety and soundness concerns are identified.

Examination Procedures

Examination Objectives

These Overdraft Payment Program Compliance Examination Procedures incorporate existing and updated laws, regulations, and guidance. These procedures demonstrate a new, heightened, and detailed focus on identifying risks resulting from excessive use of automated overdraft payment programs. Specific examination objectives include the following:

1. Assess the quality of the financial institution's compliance risk management systems and its policies and procedures governing overdraft payment practices and programs.
2. Determine the financial institution's compliance with applicable laws and regulations.
3. Assess how and whether institutions are implementing the recommended actions contained in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance.
4. Determine the effectiveness of the financial institution's management of third-party risks, where applicable, in accordance with the Third-Party Guidance.
5. Determine the effectiveness of the financial institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring overdraft payment practices and programs consistent with the Joint Guidance and the 2010 Supervisory Guidance.
6. Direct corrective action when violations of laws, rules, or unsafe and unsound practices are identified, or when the financial institution's practices, policies or internal controls are found to be deficient.
7. Determine the level of compliance with the 2010 Regulation E opt-in notice requirements and relevant regulatory changes related to overdraft products (e.g., TISA).

Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures

Compliance examiners should follow the Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures identified below, as applicable, in each examination involving overdraft payment programs. If after conducting a review of an institution's Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures, an examiner identifies weaknesses or other areas of concern,¹¹ examiners should conduct appropriate transaction testing consistent with the Transaction-Related Examination Procedures (See Transaction-Related Examination Procedures for Automated Programs) to determine whether the overdraft program poses unacceptable safety and soundness, compliance, or other risks.

1. Determine how the financial institution handles decisions associated with overdraft payment programs and non-sufficient funds items (NSFs), including whether the institution offers overdraft payment programs to customers, and the types and characteristics of these programs.
 - Identify the overdraft practices, payments, and products used by the institution.
 - Identify who in management is responsible for daily oversight of NSFs and overdraft decisions.
 - Determine who in management has the ability to override overdraft policies and limits.
 - Determine to what extent front-line employees who interact with customers on a daily basis have been trained on the institution's overdraft and NSF policies, procedures, and products.
 - Determine the level of discretion and parameters involved in any waivers or refunds.
 - Identify the extent to which the Board of Directors (Board) and management oversee and review the activities associated with overdraft payment programs, decisions, and policies.
2. Determine if the overdraft payment programs qualify as automated programs for purposes of the 2010 Supervisory Guidance.
 - Automated overdraft payment programs typically include the following characteristics:
 - They are partially or fully computerized;
 - They are used by institutions to determine whether NSF transactions qualify for overdraft coverage based on pre-determined criteria; and ¹¹ Consistent with existing examination protocols governing Compliance Management Systems, examiners should follow these procedures (including the Transaction-Related Examination Procedures, if warranted) in the first examination conducted after issuance of the 2010 Supervisory Guidance. The guidance states that the FDIC expects institutions to have approved, responsive compliance and risk management action plans by July 1, 2011.

- The decision to pay or return specific items is pre-established and generally does not rely on bank employee decision-making with respect to any individual customer or item.
 - By contrast, ad hoc programs or practices typically have the following characteristics:
 - A bank employee exercises judgment in making a specific decision about whether to pay or return an item;
 - Decisions are made based on specific considerations and knowledge of a particular customer; and
 - They are provided as an accommodation, not on a pre-determined basis.
 - Some overdraft payment programs have elements that are both automated and ad hoc. In these instances, examiners should exercise judgment in making a determination about whether the program is automated or ad hoc based on the aforementioned criteria, and consider appropriate follow-up action.
 - If, after completion of the Management and Policy-Related review, examiners identify significant risks and concerns covered in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance with respect to automated overdraft payment programs, examiners should consult the Transaction-Related Examination Procedures (See Consistency with Recommendations in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance – Expanded Review for Automated Programs).
 - During Management and Policy-Related reviews, the specific supervisory expectations set out in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance regarding customer contact for excessive or chronic users generally should not be applied to ad hoc overdraft practices. However, institutions that authorize overdrafts on an ad hoc basis should manage potential reputational, compliance, and litigation risks regarding certain overdraft payment practices, such as check clearing practices designed to maximize overdraft fees.
 - On an exception basis, where unacceptable risks are discovered during an examination regarding ad hoc programs and practices that potentially raise legal, regulatory, or other significant compliance concerns, examiners should consider whether follow-up action should be taken (See Expanded Review for Ad Hoc Programs or Practices).
3. Review all written policies and procedures, management’s self-monitoring, customer complaints, compliance audit reports including work papers, training materials, and other reports, as appropriate based on the nature of the overdraft program. Determine whether:
 - Policies and procedures are all encompassing and take into consideration, as appropriate, issues covered by the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Joint Guidance, and the Third-Party Guidance.
 - Customer complaints are captured and handled in a timely manner, with appropriate reimbursements and adjustments.
 - The scope of the audit or self-monitoring addresses, as appropriate, issues covered by the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Joint Guidance, and the Third-Party Guidance.
 - Management has taken corrective action to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies.
 - Testing includes samples covering overdraft payment practices, programs, and decision centers.
 - Testing includes monitoring for risks identified in the Joint Guidance, as appropriate.
 - Testing encompasses monitoring accounts for excessive or chronic customer use; meaningful and effective customer follow-up with respect to automated programs; transaction processing order; establishment of overdraft payment decision parameters that ensure continued applicability and appropriateness; and other expectations, as appropriate, and consistent with the 2010 Supervisory Guidance.¹²
 - Testing includes review of all third-party arrangements related to overdrafts.
 - The scope of the work performed is appropriate.
 - The work performed is accurate.
 - Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and/or the Board.
 - Management and/or the Board follow up to ensure that action is taken to correct any significant deficiencies identified.
 - Review frequency is appropriate.
 - The institution documents instances of accountholder excessive use of automated overdraft payment programs (e.g., more than six occasions where a fee is charged in a rolling twelve-month period).
 4. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution’s internal controls are adequate to ensure appropriate compliance with the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Joint Guidance, and the Third-Party Guidance (including managing third-party arrangements related to the practices and programs under review), and applicable laws and regulations.
 5. Review the following:
 - Organization charts;
 - Process flowcharts;
 - Policies and procedures;

¹² See also Consistency with Recommendations in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance – Expanded Review for Automated Programs of the Transaction-Related Examination Procedures.

V. Lending — Overdraft Payment Programs

- Account documentation;
 - Checklists;
 - Computer program documentation;
 - Marketing materials;
 - Training materials;
 - Third-party agreements;
 - Reports on the frequency of customer overdraft payment program use, overdraft accommodations, and associated fees; and
 - Reports documenting efforts to monitor account holder excessive use of automated overdraft payment programs (e.g., more than six occasions where a fee is charged in a rolling twelve-month period).
6. Through a review of the financial institution's training materials and procedures, determine whether:
- The institution provides appropriate training to individuals responsible for compliance with, and operational responsibilities for, the institution's overdraft payment practices and programs, e.g., customer service representatives, tellers, individuals handling complaints, audit and compliance staff, and marketing personnel.
 - The training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects detailed in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, the Third-Party Guidance, the Joint Guidance, and applicable laws and regulations.
 - In addition to knowledge of the institution's overdraft payment programs, practices and policies (including applicable laws, regulations and guidance), the training should specifically cover:
 - Information on alternative and less costly products and options,
 - How customers opt-in or opt-out (if the institution chooses to allow customers to opt-out) of various programs,
 - How to monitor for excessive use,
 - How and when to conduct meaningful and effective follow-up with customers, and
 - How to respond to customer complaints.
7. Determine the extent and adequacy of the institution's policies, procedures, and practices for ensuring compliance with safe and sound operational, financial and reputational risks and consumer protection laws and regulations. In particular, verify that:
- The institution has developed overdraft payment program policies, procedures and practices that ensure compliance with applicable laws and regulations, including:
 - EFTA and Regulation E;
 - Section 5 of the FTC Act (governing UDAPs) and Regulation AA;
 - ECOA and Regulation B;
 - EFA and Regulation CC; and
 - CRA.
 - The institution's overdraft payment program policies, procedures and practices address, as appropriate, the supervisory expectations noted in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, compliance and risk management principles identified in the Third-Party Guidance, and best practices noted in the Joint Guidance.
- Among other things, Compliance examiners should verify that:
- The institution has adopted appropriate procedures in accordance with Regulation E to eliminate overdraft charges related to ATM and one-time, point-of-sale (POS) transactions unless the customer has opted-in to having such fees charged.¹³
 - The institution treats customers the same regarding the payment of other NSF items and such payment is not conditioned upon whether or not the customer has affirmatively agreed to pay overdraft fees on ATM or one-time, point-of-sale (POS) transactions.
 - The institution's marketing for an overdraft payment program is consistent with the requirements of applicable laws and regulations.
 - The institution has developed practices that treat all customers equally, including ensuring that customers are not steered to more expensive products based on their use of overdraft services.¹⁴
 - The institution has developed procedures and methodologies to monitor the use of overdrafts by its customers and associated fees charged.
 - The institution has enacted policies and procedures that address prompt handling of requests to opt-in (and to opt-out if the institution, within its discretion, chooses to permit consumers to opt-out) of overdraft payment programs and transactions.
 - The institution has developed a process that facilitates meaningful and effective follow-up with customers who have been identified as chronic or excessive users of automated overdraft payment programs. An institution's program should be structured to provide customers with information regarding alternative credit programs or other products that would be more beneficial to their financial needs, and given a meaningful opportunity to affirmatively choose the overdraft payment product that overall best meets their needs.

- According to the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, potential excessive use can occur if a customer overdraws his or her account on more than six occasions where a fee is charged in a rolling twelve-month period.
- For ease of examination, institutions should be encouraged to incorporate excessive use monitoring triggers consistent with the 2010 Supervisory Guidance. If an institution maintains a different standard for excessive use, this standard is expected to be reasonable and designed to implement the supervisory expectation that institutions monitor and take meaningful and effective follow-up action when customers use the overdraft payment program excessively.
- The institution has developed a transaction clearing process method that is fully supported by sound banking business reasons, is neutral in its application, and not designed to maximize the cost to consumers.
- The institution has developed appropriate overdraft payment decision parameters (e.g., daily limits on fees).
- The institution performs adequate due diligence before entering into and during the course of a third-party relationship in connection with an overdraft payment program.¹⁵
- The institution has developed policies and procedures for monitoring and responding to customer complaints.

Transaction-Related Examination Procedures for Automated Programs

Compliance examiners should conduct transaction testing using the Transaction-Related Examination Procedures if, after completing the Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures, they discover weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation. Examiners should use their judgment in deciding the sample size of, e.g., accounts, disclosures and advertisements. Sample sizes should be increased until confidence is achieved in reviewing various aspects of the financial institution's automated overdraft payment programs, practices, policies and procedures.

As noted in Identification of Types of Overdraft Payment Programs Offered and Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures, for the vast majority of examinations, Compliance examiners will not conduct transaction-related testing on ad hoc programs and practices.

¹⁵ See footnote 2.

Further Document Collection and Review

To the extent not already reviewed pursuant to the Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures, examiners should obtain and review copies of the following documents for consistency with applicable laws, regulations and guidance:

- Descriptions of overdraft payment programs;
- Disclosure forms;
- Account agreements;
- Opt-in and opt-out agreements;
- Excessive use and fee reports;
- Procedures for monitoring excessive or chronic customer use and undertaking meaningful and effective follow-up action;
- Overdraft activity reports and compliance documentation (including any to management or the Board related to monitoring and follow-up, workout loans, charge-offs, fee waivers, daily limits, de minimis transactions, etc.);
- Third-party contracts for overdraft payment programs;
- Procedural manuals and written policies;
- Approval guidelines and parameters for all overdraft payment programs, including daily fee limits;
- ATM receipts, periodic statements, and ATM/POS terminal notices;
- Form letters and other correspondence used to notify customers of NSF's or overdraft items;
- Form letters and other correspondence used to notify customers of an overdrawn account status;
- Form letters and other correspondence used in case of errors or questions concerning an account;
- Form letters and other correspondence used to contact customers who are excessive users to inform them of alternative, less expensive products;
- Form letters and other correspondence to opt-in or opt-out of overdraft products, including Regulation E ATM and one-time, POS opt-in related materials;
- All other form letters and correspondence used relating to NSF and overdraft items or programs;
- Any agreements with third-parties allocating compliance responsibilities;
- Marketing materials and scripts, including Regulation E ATM and POS-related materials; and
- Customer complaint files.

Consistency with 2005 Joint Guidance Best Practices – Expanded Review

Further review the financial institution's overdraft payment practices and programs to ensure that they reflect the "Best Practices" outlined in the Joint Guidance, and are consistent with the 2010 Supervisory Guidance. In addition to the safety and soundness considerations and legal risks identified, Compliance examiners should review efforts to mitigate risk and concerns raised consistent with the following 2005 Best Practices, including:

V. Lending — Overdraft Payment Programs

- Marketing and Communications with Consumers

1. The institution does not market the program in a manner that encourages routine or intentional overdrafts.
2. The institution informs customers of other overdraft services and credit products, if any, that are available and the differences in each product (terms and fees), including the consequences of extensively using overdrafts to cover short-term credit needs.
3. The institution trains staff to explain overdraft payment practices, program features, costs, terms, how to opt-in (or if the institution, within its discretion, chooses to permit consumers to opt-out, how to opt-out), and availability of other products to cover overdrafts.
4. The institution makes clear when payment of overdrafts is discretionary and does not indicate that payment is guaranteed if the institution retains discretion to not pay an overdraft item.
5. The institution does not promote “free” accounts and overdraft payment programs in the same advertisement in a manner that would suggest that the program is free of charges (consistent with Regulation DD).
6. The institution clearly discloses the dollar amount of the fee for each overdraft and any interest rate or other fees that may apply, in communications about overdraft payment programs.
7. The institution informs customers that the overdraft fees, as well as the amount of the overdraft, will be subtracted from any overdraft limit disclosed (consistent with Regulation DD).
8. The institution clearly discloses, where applicable, that more than one overdraft fee may be charged against the account per day, depending on the number of checks presented or withdrawals made from the customer’s account.
9. The institution clearly explains to consumers that transactions may not be processed in the order in which they occurred, and that the order in which the transactions are received and processed can affect the total amount of overdraft fees incurred.
10. The institution clearly discloses the types of transactions that can incur an overdraft fee (e.g., ATM withdrawals, debit card transactions, preauthorized automatic debits, telephone-initiated transfers, or other electronic transfers), to avoid implying that check transactions are the only transactions covered.

- Program Features and Operations

1. The institution provides a specific notice, where feasible, to inform the customer that completing the withdrawal or fund transfer may trigger an overdraft fee and presents the notice in a manner that permits the customer to cancel the transaction after receiving the notice. If this is not feasible, the institution prominently displays notices explaining that transactions that overdraw accounts may be approved and fees may be incurred.
2. The institution does not include overdraft payment program funds when providing a single balance for an account by any means (consistent with Regulation DD).
3. The institution promptly notifies customers each time an overdraft payment program has been accessed. The notice identifies the date of the transaction, type of transaction, item amount, overdraft amount, fee imposed, amount necessary to return the account to a positive balance, amount of time the customer has to return the account to a positive balance, and the consequences of not returning the account to a positive balance within that time period. Additionally, the institution notifies customers if the institution terminates or suspends customer access to the service.
4. The institution establishes daily limits on the customer’s costs from overdraft payment programs, e.g., by limiting the dollar amount of fees or number of transactions per day.
5. The institution monitors excessive customer use of overdrafts, which would indicate a need for alternative credit arrangements or services, and informs customers of these options.
6. The institution does not report negative information to consumer reporting agencies when overdrafts are paid under the terms of the institution’s overdraft payment program.

Consistency with Recommendations in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance – Expanded Review for Automated Programs

Where transaction testing is warranted, examiners should perform a detailed review of the financial institution’s automated overdraft payment practices and programs for appropriate consistency with the “Supervisory Expectations” outlined in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance, as well as the “Regulation E Requirements” and “Examinations” discussions. Examiners should discuss with institutions which recommendations, expectations, and items are appropriate given the institution’s overdraft payment programs and practices, customer base and use patterns, and business model, as well as other efforts by the institution to address excessive use.

In particular, for automated overdraft payment programs Compliance examiners should determine whether:

1. The institution gives customers the opportunity to affirmatively choose the overdraft payment product that best meets their needs.
 - This includes, for example, a linked savings account,¹⁶ a more reasonably priced line of credit that is consistent with safe and sound banking practices, or a safe and affordable small-dollar loan.¹⁷
 2. The institution's Board provides appropriate oversight of programs consistent with its ultimate responsibility for overall compliance, and management provides oversight of program features and operations on an ongoing basis, including annual review of an overdraft payment program's key features.
 3. The institution reviews its marketing, disclosures, and implementation of such programs to minimize potential customer confusion and promote responsible use.
 4. The institution trains staff to explain program features and other choices.
 5. The institution prominently distinguishes account balances from any available overdraft coverage amounts (consistent with Regulation DD).
 6. The institution monitors programs for excessive or chronic customer use, and undertakes meaningful and effective follow-up action.
 - Meaningful and effective follow-up means that the institution has made reasonable efforts to provide the customer with information on alternatives to automated overdraft payment programs that may be better-suited to the individual's need for short term credit, and a clear mechanism for the customer to avail him or herself of those alternatives.
 - The key goal is to ensure that customers are able to make informed choices among available options to manage recurring needs for short-term credit.
 - An institution should be able to demonstrate it monitors account usage, undertakes programs designed to address excessive or chronic use, and monitors its success in informing frequent users of overdraft payment programs of the high cumulative costs of the program and the availability of less costly or otherwise more appropriate alternatives.
 - Although institutions are encouraged to provide responsible alternatives, and most institutions offer some form of short-term alternative, including lines of credit, fixed-term small dollar loans, and linked savings accounts, they are not required to develop new products in response to the 2010 Supervisory Guidance.
 - Compliance examiners should weigh the institution's overall approach in addressing excessive or chronic customer use and assess whether a chosen course of action demonstrates meaningful and effective follow-up.
 - Steps should include assessing the institution's level of effort to reach customers, and the ease with which customers are able to select alternative products.
- Key areas of focus regarding meaningful and effective follow-up include:
- Institutions are encouraged to be proactive in contacting customers, clearly communicating available options and giving a meaningful choice among options.
 - Institutions may employ a variety of techniques, based on individual customer profiles and general business practices, to contact excessive or chronic users of overdraft payment programs.
 - While examples of meaningful and effective follow-up could include contacting a customer via telephone, in person, by mail, or through electronic notifications, a single action may or may not necessarily show appropriate follow-up. When evaluating meaningful and effective follow-up, examiners should consider the institution's overall process for providing notice to excessive use customers and the circumstances at that institution. Factors to consider include whether:
 - The institution has a regular program to inform excessive or chronic users of overdraft usage and cumulative costs in a prominent or conspicuous fashion;
 - The institution highlights availability of alternatives to overdraft payment programs that may be lower-cost or more appropriate;
 - The institution provides a clear and simple manner to contact the institution to discuss available alternatives;
 - Contact with the customer was cursory;
 - The customer and the institution engaged in relevant dialogue or exchanged correspondence; or
 - Other information provided by the institution that documents meaningful and effective follow-up.
 - Although institutions should use their judgment in determining what risk mitigation response is appropriate for their particular institution, two specific examples of ways in which an institution could demonstrate meaningful and effective follow-up regarding excessive or chronic use of automated overdraft programs are: 1) providing enhanced periodic statements; or 2) employing a targeted outreach approach.

¹⁶ See The FDIC's Model Safe Account Pilot which provides a template for safe, low-cost transactional and savings accounts (<http://www.fdic.gov>).

¹⁷ See A Template for Success: The FDIC's Small-Dollar Loan Pilot Program which provides a template for safe and affordable small dollar loans (<http://www.fdic.gov>).

V. Lending — Overdraft Payment Programs

1. Enhanced Periodic Statement Approach

- Under the enhanced periodic statement approach, an institution would augment existing, required disclosures for overdraft fees under Regulation DD (requiring disclosure of the total amounts of fees charged for overdrafts during the statement period and calendar year-to-date), by:
 - Prominently highlighting how excessive or chronic users of automated overdraft programs can contact the institution to discuss available alternatives, and
 - Encouraging meaningful and effective contact.
- If a customer incurs more than six overdrafts in a rolling twelve-month period, the institution would prominently display on the periodic statement information describing how the customer can contact the institution to discuss alternative options.
 - An effective method is to include the name or names of specific employee(s) who have knowledge of alternative credit products for which the customer might qualify and are able to assist the customer in determining whether he or she qualifies for them.
 - For example, the following statement could be used: “You have been paying multiple overdraft fees and there may be cheaper alternative products that may be better suited for your needs. Please call [name(s) of employees] at xxx-xxx-xxxx to discuss other options with a customer service representative or visit us at your local branch.”
- Under this approach, institutions should continue to send enhanced periodic statements to customers for as long as the customer continues to exhibit chronic or excessive usage.

2. Targeted Outreach Approach

- A targeted outreach approach would involve contacting excessive users in person or by telephone to discuss less costly alternatives to automated overdraft payment programs.
- An institution would initiate outreach within a reasonable time period (e.g., 30 days) when a customer incurs more than six overdrafts in a rolling twelve-month period to discuss overdraft usage and available alternatives to the overdraft payment program.
- If a customer decides to remain in the automated overdraft payment program, the institution should also engage the customer to determine the customer’s preferences regarding future contact regarding participation in the automated overdraft payment program.

- Absent an indication of customer preference regarding subsequent contact, a targeted outreach approach would involve contacting a customer whenever there is a cycle of repeated, excessive use (e.g., subsequent occurrences of more than six overdraft occasions where a fee is charged in a rolling twelve-month period).

Additional key areas of focus regarding meaningful and effective follow-up include:

- Institutions should establish a reasonable period of time in which to reach the customer to discuss less costly alternatives (e.g., 30 days).
- Institutions are not expected to suspend the availability of or limit access to overdraft coverage during the period in which they are engaging in good faith efforts to reach customers.
- Once successful contact with the customer occurs, institutions should evaluate the appropriate course of action. Before pursuing a course of action, institutions should consider the overall risks and circumstances, including whether the customer has expressed a desire to pursue alternatives or continue participating in the overdraft payment program.
- An occasion occurs when an overdraft fee is charged (e.g., a per-transaction, sustained daily, or other overdraft fee, but not an NSF fee charged where payment for an item is rejected). If three overdraft fees are charged in one day, that constitutes three occasions. If four overdrafts occur in one day but only three fees are charged for three transactions that day (e.g., if the institution waives fees after a daily limit of three is met), that similarly constitutes three occasions.
- If a financial institution posts a single $105 fee to an account for three, per-transaction overdrafts (i.e., a $35 fee is charged for each overdraft), this would still constitute three overdraft fees and, consequently, three occasions.

Is there documentation or empirical evidence that the institution’s follow-up has resulted in customers choosing more affordable alternatives?

- After meaningful and effective contact, and repeated instances of follow-up, a customer may not wish to receive follow-up contact envisioned by the 2010 Supervisory Guidance.
 - Regardless of customer choice, institutions should continue to monitor account usage.
- At the same time, institutions should not attempt to steer frequent users of fee-based overdraft products towards continuing fee-based overdraft coverage while obscuring the availability of less costly alternatives. In addition, institutions should not employ inappropriate efforts, including overly aggressive advertising or other promotional activities to coerce consumers to choose to continue with fee-based overdraft coverage.

- As with all customer communications, simple and clear language is preferred. Regardless of customer choice, institutions should continue to monitor accounts for excessive use that may pose safety and soundness risks.
7. The institution has appropriate daily limits on customer costs. For example, the financial institution has done the following:
- Limited the number of transactions that will be subject to a fee (e.g., no more than three per day), or
 - Provided a dollar limit on total fees that will be imposed per day.

Daily limits should be reviewed as one element of the institution's overall overdraft payment program. Failure to institute daily limits on customer costs with respect to overdraft payment programs does not in and of itself mean that the institution is not acting in a manner that is consistent with the expectations set out in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance.

8. The institution has implemented transaction-clearing procedures that operate in a manner so as to avoid maximizing customer overdrafts and related fees through manipulation of the clearing order, and ensures that any third-party vendor has similar procedures in place.
- Determining clearing order does not in and of itself necessarily indicate whether an institution is or is not acting consistent with the expectations set out in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance. Examiners should review and consider whether the processes, practices, policies, and procedures of the financial institution and their third-party vendor provide an overall compliance management system or framework that is consistent with those expectations.
 - To the extent that institutions make decisions regarding transaction processing order, transactions should be processed in a neutral order that avoids manipulating or structuring processing order to maximize customer overdraft and related fees.
 - Institutions are discouraged from implementing systems that re-order transactions to clear the highest item first, as this approach will tend to increase the number of overdraft fees. In addition, although processing batches of transactions in a random order or order received is a neutral approach, institutions are discouraged from arranging the order of types of transactions (i.e., batches) cleared in order to increase the number of overdrafts and maximize fees.
 - Compliance examiners should consider the overall risk-profile of the institution and the following factors or characteristics:
 - Is the transaction order neutral (e.g., by order received, check number, serial number sequence, or other potentially equitable approaches)?

- Has the institution established that their transaction processing order is necessary for sound business reasons and is not manipulated so as to maximize fees?
9. The institution monitors and, where necessary, mitigates credit, litigation, reputational, safety and soundness, and other risks, as appropriate.¹⁸
10. The institution complies with Regulation E requirements requiring institutions to provide notice and a reasonable opportunity for customers to opt-in to the payment of ATM and one-time POS overdrafts for a fee and does not steer frequent users of fee-based overdraft products to opt-in to these programs while obscuring the availability of alternatives (raising safety and soundness concerns about potentially unsustainable consumer debt, as well as potential fair lending and UDAP concerns).
11. The institution is consistent in its application of overdraft fee waivers, in light of applicable fair lending statutes and regulations.

In addition, an institution in its discretion may choose or elect to implement further risk mitigation efforts. If an institution decides to implement such activities or practices, examiners should weigh these further efforts in evaluating the overall effectiveness of an institution's compliance management system and evaluate whether an institution's overdraft program and practices are consistent with the expectations set out in the 2010 Supervisory Guidance. Examples of additional efforts that mitigate risks include the following:

1. The institution has an appropriate process in place for eliminating overdraft fees for transactions that overdraw an account by a de minimis or very low amount.¹⁹ Examples of possible de minimis limits that could be implemented include: transaction amounts of less than $10, or an institution could decline to charge overdraft fees for transactions that overdraw an account by less than $10.
2. The institution has effectively employed cost effective, existing technology, as appropriate, to alert customers when their account balance is at risk of generating a fee for NSF's.
3. The institution has provided information to customers about how to access free or low-cost financial education workshops or individualized counseling to learn how to more effectively manage personal finances. Small or rural institutions may want to consider using Web-based resources or referrals to reputable, non-profit organizations.

¹⁸ Compliance examiners should consult with Risk Management examiners, as appropriate, where safety and soundness concerns are identified.

¹⁹ If a fee is charged such a fee should be reasonable and proportional to the amount of the original transaction.

V. Lending — Overdraft Payment Programs

4. The institution has appropriate policies and procedures in place for allowing customers to decline overdraft coverage (i.e., opt-out) for non-electronic transactions (meaning transactions that are not subject to the Regulation E opt-in requirements), such as paper checks, automated clearing house transfers and recurring debits, and honor an opt-out request.²⁰
 - It is recommended that institutions consider occasional communications to remind customers of available options to terminate overdraft coverage.
5. The institution has appropriate policies and procedures in place for reminding their customers, especially chronic or excessive users of overdraft programs, that even if they have chosen to opt-in to the payment of ATM and one-time POS overdrafts for a fee, at any time they can still choose to opt-out of ATM and one-time, POS overdraft programs.

Expanded Review for Ad Hoc Programs or Practices

For ad hoc programs or practices, if unacceptable risks are identified on an exception basis during the Management and Policy-Related review, examiners should consider whether the institution's ad hoc payment practices require closer review. For example:

- When weaknesses or other risks are discovered that may indicate that ad hoc programs or practices are not in compliance with existing laws and regulations; and/or
- When red flags are raised indicating potential reputation, compliance, and litigation risks regarding certain practices, such as check clearing practices designed to maximize overdraft fees, examiners should consider inquiring about:
 - The nature of the red flag;
 - Why the issue occurred; and
 - How the institution oversees and manages such issues, including a potential review of policies and procedures.

Overdraft Payment Program Supervisory Guidance Frequently Asked Questions

FDIC staff has developed the following Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs) and answers in response to questions from supervised institutions and third-party vendors about the FDIC's Overdraft Payment Supervisory Guidance issued in November 2010 (FIL-81-2010) (Guidance). The responses represent the views and opinions of FDIC staff regarding incorporation of the Guidance into the examination process.

I. Defining Automated and Ad Hoc Programs

1. How does an “automated” overdraft payment program differ from “ad hoc” overdraft payment practices?

Automated overdraft payment programs typically rely on computerized decision-making and use pre-established criteria to pay or return specific items. There is little to no case-by-case review and decision-making with respect to an individual customer or item.

By contrast, ad hoc practices typically involve the exercise of bank employee judgment in making a specific decision about whether to pay or return an item. This is done as an accommodation and based on the employee's knowledge of a particular customer.

2. Do the specific supervisory expectations about customer contact apply to ad hoc overdraft payments?

No. The FDIC's November 2010 Guidance is focused on assisting institutions in identifying, managing, and mitigating the particular risks posed by automated overdraft payment programs. Ad hoc overdraft payments have been authorized by banks for years as an accommodation based on specific considerations and knowledge of a particular customer, and they have generally not been the subject of the type of product over-use concerns that can be associated with automated overdraft programs. Consequently, the specific supervisory expectations set out in the Guidance regarding customer contact for excessive or chronic users of automated overdraft payment programs do not apply to ad hoc overdraft practices.

3. Should institutions monitor and manage risks associated with ad hoc payments of overdrafts?

Yes. While the Guidance's specific supervisory expectations relate only to automated overdraft payment programs, institutions that authorize overdrafts on an ad hoc basis should manage potential reputational, compliance, and litigation risks regarding certain overdraft payment practices, such as check clearing practices designed to maximize overdraft fees. In addition, the Guidance provides updated information on the laws, regulations, and other guidance that apply to all types of overdraft payment practices and programs.

II. Excessive Use and Meaningful Follow-Up

1. The Guidance states that FDIC-supervised institutions should monitor programs for excessive or chronic customer use, and if a customer overdraws his or her account on more than six occasions where a fee is charged in a rolling twelve-month period, undertake meaningful and effective follow-up action. What is an “occasion” where a fee is charged?

²⁰ Revised Regulation E provides consumers with an ongoing right to rescind their prior opt-in to coverage of ATM and one-time POS overdrafts.

An “occasion” occurs each time an overdraft transaction generates a fee. For example, this would include a per-transaction overdraft fee or a daily fee for an outstanding overdraft status. As a result, potentially more than one “occasion” can occur per day. If three overdraft fees are charged as a result of three transactions (even if the fees are aggregated), that would constitute three occasions. If a fee itself triggers an overdraft, that event would count if a further overdraft fee is charged as a result.

By contrast, overdraft items paid where no fee is charged (for example, if a bank pays an item after a daily limit is met on overdraft items paid and the bank waives additional fees) would not be included. Thus, if four overdrafts occur in a day but the bank only charges three fees as a result of a per-day limit on fees charged, this would constitute three occasions.

2. What is meaningful and effective follow-up for chronic or excessive use and how can an institution demonstrate it has made meaningful efforts to reach chronic or excessive users of automated overdraft payment programs?

Meaningful and effective follow-up means that the institution has made reasonable efforts to provide the customer with information on alternatives to overdraft payment programs that may be better-suited to the individual’s need for short-term credit, as well as a clear mechanism for the customer to avail himself or herself of those alternatives. The key goal is to ensure that customers are able to make informed choices among available options to manage recurring needs for short-term credit. The FDIC will assess the institution’s level of effort to reach customers, the institution’s program for providing notice to customers of available alternatives, and the ease with which customers are able to select alternative products.

Institutions may employ a variety of techniques, based on individual customer profiles and general business practices, to contact excessive or chronic users of overdraft payment programs. For example, the institution’s overall approach could incorporate contacting a customer via telephone, in person, by mail, or through electronic notifications. Relevant factors include whether the institution:

- Has a regular program to inform excessive or chronic users of overdraft usage and cumulative costs in a prominent or conspicuous fashion;
- Highlights availability of alternatives to overdraft payment programs that may be lower-cost or more appropriate; and
- Provides a clear and simple manner to contact the institution to discuss available alternatives.

The institution should be able to demonstrate that it monitors account usage, undertakes programs designed to address excessive or chronic use, and monitors its success in informing frequent users of overdraft payment programs of the high cumulative costs of the program and the availability of less-costly or otherwise more appropriate alternatives.

Two examples of ways in which an institution could demonstrate meaningful and effective follow-up regarding excessive or chronic users of overdraft programs are to provide enhanced periodic statements or employ a targeted outreach approach. Specific information discussing meaningful and effective follow-up when utilizing these approaches is described in the attached Illustrations. Institutions may employ other approaches for engaging in effective and meaningful follow-up with chronic or excessive users.

III. Fee Limits and Maximizing Fees

1. What is an example of an appropriate daily limit on overdraft fees?

Daily limits can help prevent a customer’s individual lapse in financial management from triggering a cascade of overdraft fees, and will be reviewed as one possible element of the institution’s overall approach for addressing chronic or excessive use of automated overdraft payment programs. For example, some institutions have implemented limits on the number of transactions that will be subject to a fee (e.g., no more than three per day) or on total allowable fees (e.g., a specific maximum dollar amount of allowable fees per day).

2. What is an example of an appropriate de minimis overdraft amount?

Institutions should consider the use of a de minimis threshold before an overdraft fee is charged in order to reduce reputational risk related to charging fees that are disproportionate to the item being cleared. For example, some institutions have implemented de minimis limits whereby they do not charge overdraft fees for underlying transaction amounts of less than $10, while some have declined to charge overdraft fees for transactions of any amount that overdraw an account by less than $10.

3. What is a reasonable and proportional overdraft fee?

As noted in FAQ # III.2 (de minimis), institutions may increase reputational risk when overdraft fees are significantly greater than the amount of the item being cleared. Institutions should review the amount charged for the overdraft payment compared to the amount of the underlying transaction that triggered the overdraft, and assess whether the charge is reasonable and proportionate in comparison. Institutions should consider de minimis limits to reduce the reputational risk of overdraft fees that are disproportionate to the cost of the underlying transaction.

V. Lending — Overdraft Payment Programs

4. How can institutions and their third-party vendors work to process transactions in a manner that addresses risks identified in the Guidance?

Transactions should be processed in a neutral order that avoids manipulating or structuring processing order to maximize customer overdraft and related fees. Examples of a neutral order include order received, check number, serial number sequence, or other approaches when necessary based on sound business justification.

Re-ordering transactions to clear the highest item first is not considered neutral because this approach will tend to increase the number of overdraft fees. By contrast, processing batches of transactions in a random order or order received is a neutral approach; however, institutions should not arrange the order of types of transactions (i.e., batches) cleared in order to increase the number of overdrafts and maximize fees.

IV. Other Questions

1. Is an institution required to provide new alternatives to automated overdraft payment programs?

No. Banks are not required to develop new products in response to the Guidance. However, most banks offer some form of short-term alternative, including lines of credit, fixed-term small dollar loans, and linked savings accounts, and the FDIC encourages institutions to provide linked accounts or responsible, short-term credit products (such as those offered under the FDIC's small dollar loan pilot). Banks are expected to inform excessive or chronic users of overdraft payment programs about alternative products that the institution has available for its customers, and to make these programs available to customers that qualify. Such products may qualify for CRA consideration under the service or lending tests.²¹

2. Is an institution required to terminate or suspend a customer's access to the automated overdraft payment program if the customer engages in chronic or excessive use?

No. Institutions are expected to monitor usage and engage in meaningful and effective follow-up to inform excessive users of available alternatives. However, as discussed in the Guidance, a number of risks are associated with chronic or excessive use of automated overdraft programs, including reputational, compliance, safety-and-soundness, and litigation risks. If such risks are identified during the course of an institution's monitoring and oversight of an automated overdraft program, institutions should take appropriate action to mitigate risks, as has been the case in the past.

3. The Guidance states that the FDIC believes institutions should allow customers to decline overdraft coverage (i.e., opt-out) for payment of overdrafts resulting from non-electronic transactions such as paper checks or automated clearing house (ACH) transfers. Can you clarify to which transactions this recommendation applies?

To promote consumer choice and awareness, institutions are encouraged to permit customers to decline overdraft coverage (i.e., opt-out) for transactions that are not subject to the Regulation E opt-in requirements, including checks, ACH transactions and recurring debits. As part of an institution's on-going relationship with its customers, the FDIC recommends that institutions consider occasional communications to remind customers of available options to terminate overdraft coverage.

4. How can small or rural institutions provide information about financial education?

In addition to educational resources identified in the Guidance, institutions may want to consider using Web-based resources or referrals to reputable, non-profit organizations.

5. When are institutions expected to have reviewed and responded to the Guidance?

As stated in the Guidance, the FDIC expects that institutions will have approved, responsive compliance and risk management action plans, policies and procedures by July 1, 2011.

Meaningful and Effective Follow-Up Illustrations

The following information is provided to illustrate two examples of ways in which institutions may demonstrate meaningful and effective follow-up with excessive or chronic users of overdraft payment programs.

An enhanced periodic statement approach would involve augmenting existing, required disclosures for overdraft fees under Regulation DD (Truth in Savings), which requires disclosure of the total amounts of fees charged for overdrafts during the statement period and calendar year-to-date, by prominently highlighting how excessive or chronic users of automated overdraft programs could contact the institution to discuss available alternatives, and encouraging meaningful and effective contact.

A targeted outreach approach would involve contacting excessive users in person or via telephone to discuss less costly alternatives to automated overdraft payment programs.

²¹ See Interagency Lending Principles for Offering Responsible Small-Dollar Loans, FIL-58-2020 (May 20, 2020), available at: <https://www.fdic.gov/news/financial-institution-letters/2020/fil20058.html>, and Interagency Questions and Answers Regarding Community Reinvestment, 75 Fed. Reg. 11642 (Mar. 11, 2010), available at: <http://www.ffiec.gov>.

Approach #1: Enhanced Periodic Statements

If an institution chooses to take an enhanced periodic statement approach that augments the requirements of Regulation DD for overdraft fees charged during the current statement period and calendar year-to-date, and if a customer incurs more than six overdrafts in a rolling twelve-month period, an institution could include a message on the periodic statement that describes how the customer could contact the institution to discuss alternative options. An effective approach could be to include the name or names of specific employee(s) who have knowledge of alternative credit products for which the customer might qualify and are able to assist the customer in determining whether he or she qualifies for them. For example, the following statement could be used: “You have been paying multiple overdraft fees and there may be cheaper alternative products that may be better suited for your needs. Please call [name of employee] at xxx-xxx-xxxx to discuss other options with a customer service representative or visit us at your local branch.”

Under this approach, it would be reasonable for an institution to continue to send enhanced periodic statements to a customer for as long as the customer continues chronic or excessive usage.

Approach #2: Targeted Outreach

If an institution chooses to take a targeted outreach approach, an institution would initiate outreach within a reasonable time period (e.g., 30 days) when a customer incurs more than six overdrafts in a rolling twelve-month period, to discuss overdraft usage and available alternatives to the overdraft payment program. If a customer decides to remain in the automated overdraft payment program, the institution should also engage the customer to determine the customer’s preferences for future contact regarding participation in the automated overdraft payment program. Absent an indication of customer preference regarding subsequent contact, a targeted outreach approach would involve contacting a customer whenever there is a cycle of repeated, excessive use (e.g., subsequent occurrences of more than six overdraft occasions where a fee is charged in a rolling twelve-month period).

Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act Examination Procedures for Covered Financial Institutions

Introduction

The Secure and Fair Enforcement for Mortgage Licensing Act of 2008¹ (SAFE Act) was enacted on July 30, 2008, and mandates a nationwide licensing and registration system for residential mortgage loan originators (MLOs).²

The SAFE Act prohibits individuals from engaging in the business of residential mortgage loan origination without first obtaining and maintaining annually:

- For individuals employed by a covered financial institution, registration as a mortgage loan originator and a unique identifier (federal registration); or
- For all other individuals, a state license and registration as a mortgage loan originator, and a unique identifier (state licensing/registration).³

The SAFE Act requires that federal registration and state licensing/registration be accomplished through the same online registration system, the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry (Registry).

The objectives of the SAFE Act include aggregating and improving the flow of information to and between regulators; providing increased accountability and tracking of MLOs; enhancing consumer protections; supporting anti-fraud measures; and providing consumers with easily accessible information at no charge regarding the employment history of, and publicly adjudicated disciplinary and enforcement actions against MLOs.⁴

On July 28, 2010, the OCC, Board, FDIC, OTS, NCUA, and FCA (collectively the Agencies) published substantively similar regulations implementing the SAFE Act federal registration requirements for covered institutions and their MLO employees (SAFE Act regulation).⁵

On July 21, 2011, Title X of the Dodd-Frank Act transferred rulemaking authority for the SAFE Act to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB).⁶ The CFPB published an interim final rule, which recodified the Agencies' SAFE Act regulations as a single regulation, Regulation G, at 12 CFR Part 1007, effective December 30, 2011.⁷

These examination procedures lay out the background and requirements of the SAFE Act and the SAFE Act regulation concerning federal registration.

Definitions

“Annual renewal period” means November 1st through December 31st of each year.

“Administrative or clerical tasks” means the receipt, collection, and distribution of information common for the processing or underwriting of a loan in the residential mortgage industry and communication with a consumer to obtain information necessary for the processing or underwriting of a residential mortgage loan.

“Covered financial institution” means any national bank, Federal branch and agency of a foreign bank, member bank, insured state nonmember bank (including state-licensed insured branches of foreign banks), savings association, or certain of their subsidiaries; branch or agency of a foreign bank or commercial lending company owned or controlled by a foreign bank; Farm Credit System institution; or federally insured credit union, including certain non-federally insured credit unions.⁸

² More specifically, the SAFE Act required the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board), Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), and National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), with the Farm Credit Administration (FCA), and through the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council (FFIEC), to develop and maintain a federal system for registering MLOs employed by covered financial institutions.

³ The SAFE Act authorized the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to monitor and enforce states' compliance with the statute's requirements for state licensing and registration. On June 30, 2011, HUD published a final rule setting minimum standards for state licensing and registration. 76 Fed. Reg. 38464 (June 30, 2011).

⁶ On July 21, 2011, pursuant to the Dodd-Frank Act the CFPB assumed: (1) responsibility for developing and maintaining the federal registration system (including rulemaking authority); (2) supervisory and enforcement authority for SAFE Act compliance for entities under the CFPB's jurisdiction; and (3) HUD's SAFE Act authority to oversee state compliance with SAFE Act requirements that had previously been under HUD's authority. Refer to Dodd-Frank Act Sections 1025, 1061 and 1100. In addition, the Dodd-Frank Act merged functions of the OTS into the OCC, FDIC, and Board.

In the preamble to the interim final rule, the CFPB stated that “[t]he interim final rule substantially duplicates the Federal registry agencies' largely identical coordinated rules as the Bureau's new Regulation G, 12 CFR part 1007, making only certain nonsubstantive, technical, formatting, and stylistic changes.”

V. Compliance Lending — SAFE Act

“Employee” is not defined in the SAFE Act or SAFE Act regulation. However, the original regulation’s preamble explains that the meaning of “employee” under the SAFE Act regulation is consistent with the common law right-to-control test. For example, the results of this test generally determine whether an institution files an Internal Revenue Service Form W-2 or Form 1099 for an individual.⁹

“Mortgage loan originator or MLO” means an individual who: (1) takes a residential mortgage loan application and (2) offers or negotiates terms of a residential mortgage loan for compensation or gain.¹⁰ The term mortgage loan originator does not include:

- An individual who performs purely administrative or clerical tasks on behalf of an individual who is an MLO;
- An individual who only performs real estate brokerage activities (as defined in 12 USC Section 5102(3)(D)) and is licensed or registered as a real estate broker in accordance with applicable state law, unless the individual is compensated by a lender, a mortgage broker, or other MLO or by any agent of such lender, mortgage broker, or other MLO, and meets the MLO definition; or
- An individual or entity solely involved in extensions of credit related to timeshare plans, as that term is defined in 11 USC Section 101(53D).

Appendix A to the SAFE Act regulation provides examples of activities of taking a loan application, and offering or negotiating loan terms, that fall within or outside of the definition of MLO for federal registration purposes.

“Registry” means the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry, or NMLS, developed and maintained by the Conference of State Bank Supervisors and the American Association of Residential Mortgage Regulators for the state licensing and registration of state-licensed MLOs, and through which federal MLO registrations must be accomplished.¹¹

“Registered mortgage loan originator” or “registrant” means any individual who: (1) meets the MLO definition; (2) is an employee of a covered financial institution; (3) is registered pursuant to the regulation with the Registry; and (4) maintains a unique identifier through the Registry.

“Residential mortgage loan” means any loan primarily for personal, family, or household use that is secured by a mortgage, deed of trust, or other equivalent consensual security interest on a dwelling (as defined in Section 103(v) of the Truth in Lending Act, 15 USC Section 1602(v)) or residential real estate upon which is constructed or intended to be constructed a dwelling (including manufactured homes) and includes refinancings, reverse mortgages, home equity lines of credit, and other first and additional lien loans.

“Unique identifier” means a number or other identifier that: (1) permanently identifies a registered MLO; (2) is assigned by protocols established by the Registry and the Bureau to facilitate electronic tracking of MLOs, as well as uniform identification of, and public access to, the employment history of and the publicly adjudicated disciplinary and enforcement actions against MLOs; and (3) must not be used for purposes other than those set forth under the SAFE Act.

De Minimis Exception

The SAFE Act regulation provides an exception to the MLO registration requirements for any employee of a covered financial institution who has never been registered or licensed through the Registry as an MLO if during the past 12 months the employee acted as an MLO for five or fewer residential mortgage loans.

When an institution relies on the de minimis exception in lieu of registration, the MLO employee must register prior to originating the sixth residential mortgage loan within the past 12 months. Covered financial institutions are prohibited from engaging in any acts or practices to evade the registration requirement.

Mortgage Loan Originator (MLO) Registration Requirements

Each MLO employed by a covered financial institution must register with the Registry;¹² obtain a “unique identifier;” maintain the registration by updating certain information within 30 days of specified changes; and renew the registration each year during the annual renewal period.

Initial Registration

Each employee of a federally regulated institution who is an MLO must submit to the Registry the following:

¹² The SAFE Act rule implementing federal registration took effect on October 1, 2010. It provided a registration period from January 31, 2011, to July 29, 2011, for MLOs who are employees of covered financial institutions to register. After July 29, 2011, those employees must meet the registration requirements before they may originate residential mortgage loans.

⁹ See 75 Fed. Reg. at 44664 for a discussion of the meaning of “employee” as used in the original SAFE Act regulation.

¹¹ See the Nationwide Mortgage and Licensing System and Registry Web site at: <http://mortgage.nationwidelicencingsystem.org/fedreg/Pages/default.aspx>. System information on federal registration can be found under the Federal Registration tab at that site.

- Identifying information, including name, home address, social security number, gender, date of birth, and principal business location;
- Financial-services-related employment history for the prior 10 years;
- Disclosure of specified criminal, civil judicial, or state, federal, or foreign financial authority regulatory actions against the employee; and
- Fingerprints, for purposes of a Federal Bureau of Investigation background check.

The employee must attest to the correctness of the information submitted to the Registry; must authorize the Registry and the institution to obtain information related to any administrative, civil, or criminal action to which the employee is a party; and must authorize the Registry to make certain information available to the public.

Maintaining Registration

Renewal

An MLO must renew his or her registration during the annual renewal period by confirming and updating his or her registration records. This requirement does not apply to an MLO who completed his or her initial registration less than six months prior to the end of the annual renewal period. Any registration that is not renewed during this period will become inactive, and the individual cannot act as an MLO at a covered financial institution until the registration requirements are met. Individuals who fail to update their registrations during this two-month renewal period may renew their registration at any time and need not wait until the start of the next annual renewal period.

Updates to Registration

An MLO must update his or her registration within 30 days for specified significant changes, including name changes, employment termination, and reportable changes to legal or regulatory actions.

Previously Registered Employees – Change of Employment

The regulations provide streamlined registration requirements for an MLO employee previously registered or licensed through the Registry who maintained this registration or license and who changes employment. Such an employee must update certain information, provide the required attestation and authorizations, and submit new fingerprints unless the employee has fingerprints on file with the Registry that are less than three years old. There is no grace period in this situation. An employee must update his or her Registry record before acting as a loan originator for the new employer.

Previously Registered Employees – Mergers, Acquisitions or Reorganizations

A registered or licensed MLO whose employment changes as the result of a merger, acquisition, or reorganization has 60 days from the effective date of a merger, acquisition, or reorganization to update information in the Registry.

Covered Financial Institution Requirements for MLO Registration, Renewal, and Changes to Information

Required Covered Financial Institution Information

In connection with the registration of one or more MLOs, covered financial institutions must submit certain required information to the Registry, including: contact information; Employer Tax Identification Number; Research Statistics Supervision and Discount (RSSD) number issued by the Board; primary Federal regulator; primary point of contact for the Registry; individuals with authority to enter information into the Registry; and, if a subsidiary of a financial institution, indication of that fact and the RSSD number of the parent institution, as applicable. Once registered, the institution will receive an NMLS identification number for the institution to use in attesting to MLO employment and for other Safe Act related purposes.

Attestation

An individual with authority to enter information in the Registry must verify his or her identity and attest that he or she has that authority, that the information is correct, and that the institution will keep the information current.¹³

Registration

A covered financial institution must require an MLO employee to register with the Registry, maintain this registration, and obtain a unique identifier. A covered financial institution must also confirm each MLO's employment status once the MLO submits registration information to the Registry and before the registration is activated.

Within 30 days of the date an MLO ceases to be an employee of the institution, the institution must notify the Registry of that fact along with the date the MLO ceased being an employee, so that consumers searching for an MLO in the publicly available consumer access portal will know that the MLO no longer has a relationship with the institution.

¹³ A covered financial institution may designate one or more individuals to serve as the system administrator(s) who may submit required information to the Registry on behalf of employees, and attest to their authority to submit information, the accuracy of information submitted, and that the institution will keep information current and submit updates on a timely basis. System administrators generally may not be MLOs; however, an institution is exempt from this regulatory requirement if it has 10 or fewer full-time employees and is not a subsidiary.

V. Compliance Lending — SAFE Act

Renewal and Updates

A covered financial institution must update the information it submitted to the Registry during the annual registration renewal period and must confirm the registration information provided by MLO employees during this period.

A covered financial institution must update the required institution information provided to the Registry within 30 days of any change in such information.

Policies and Procedures

Covered financial institutions that employ one or more MLOs must adopt and follow written policies and procedures to carry out their SAFE Act responsibilities.¹⁴ The requirement to adopt and follow policies and procedures applies to all covered financial institutions that employ individual MLOs, where MLOs act within the scope of their employment, and regardless of the application of any de minimis exception to their employees. In addition, covered financial institutions must conduct annual independent compliance tests to ensure compliance with the regulation. The policies and procedures must be appropriate to the nature, size, complexity, and scope of the institution's mortgage lending activities, and apply only to those employees acting within the scope of their employment at the institution. The policies and procedures must:

- Establish a process for identifying which employees of covered financial institutions must be registered;
- Require that all employees who are MLOs be informed of the registration requirements of the SAFE Act and SAFE Act regulation, and instructed on how to comply;
- Establish procedures to comply with the SAFE Act regulation's unique identifier requirements;
- Establish reasonable procedures for confirming the adequacy and accuracy of MLO employee registrations, including updates and renewals, by comparisons with its own records;
- Establish reasonable procedures and tracking systems for monitoring compliance with registration and renewal requirements and procedures;
- Provide for annual independent testing for compliance with the SAFE Act regulation by institution personnel or an outside party;
- Provide for appropriate action if an employee fails to comply with the registration requirements of the SAFE Act regulations or the institution's related policies and procedures, including prohibiting such employees from acting as MLOs or other appropriate disciplinary actions;

¹⁴ Neither the Registry nor the CFPB screen or approve registrations received from employees of covered financial institutions.

- Establish a process for reviewing employee criminal history background reports received pursuant to the regulation, taking appropriate action consistent with applicable federal law¹⁵ and implementing regulations with respect to the reports, and maintaining records of the reports and actions taken with respect to applicable employees;¹⁶ and
- Establish procedures designed to ensure that any third party with which the institution has arrangements related to mortgage loan origination has policies and procedures to comply with the SAFE Act and SAFE Act regulation, including appropriate licensing and/or registration of individuals acting as MLOs.¹⁷

Unique Identifier

When an MLO registers with the Registry, he or she receives a unique identifier – a series of numeric characters assigned for the life of the MLO. The unique identifiers allow MLOs to be tracked if they move between state and federal jurisdictions and/or change employers, and help consumers to find certain information about a particular MLO when they search on the Registry's consumer access portal. The MLO information that is publicly available on the consumer access portal will ultimately include federal and state registrations and licenses held, the MLO's employment history, and publicly adjudicated disciplinary and enforcement actions, if any.

To make sure that consumers have access to an MLO's unique identifier before committing to a mortgage loan transaction, an MLO must provide the unique identifier upon request (orally or in writing), before acting as an MLO (orally or in writing), and in any initial written communication (paper or electronic) from the MLO to the consumer (such as a commitment letter, good faith estimate, or disclosure statement). MLO unique identifiers may be used on written materials or promotional ¹⁵ Including Section 19 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (FDI Act); (12 USC 1829); Section 5.65(d) of the Farm Credit Act of 1971 (12 USC 2277a-14(d)); or Section 206 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 USC 1786(i)).

¹⁶ Section 19 of the FDI Act (12 USC 1829) prohibits, without the prior written consent of the FDIC, insured depository institutions from employing a person who has been convicted of any criminal offense involving dishonesty, breach of trust or money laundering, or has entered into a pretrial diversion or similar program in connection with a prosecution for such offense. See the FDIC Statement of Policy for Section 19 of the FDI Act, 63 Fed. Reg. 66184 (Dec. 1, 1998; amended December 18, 2012), available at: <http://www.fdic.gov/regulations/laws/rules/5000-1300.html>.

items distributed by the institution for general use, for example on loan program descriptions, advertisements, business cards, stationery, notepads, and similar materials; the SAFE Act regulation does not prohibit such use.

The regulation also requires covered financial institutions to make MLO unique identifiers available to consumers in a practicable way. This could be achieved, for example by:

- Directing consumers to a listing of registered MLOs and corresponding unique identifiers on the institution’s Web site;
- Posting the information prominently in a publicly accessible place, such as a branch office lobby or lending office reception area; and/or
- Establishing a process to ensure that institution personnel provide MLO unique identifiers when requested by consumers from employees other than the MLO.

Relation to Other Laws

TILA, GSE and HUD Requirements

Title XIV, Section 1402 of the Dodd-Frank Act amended the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) to require: (1) MLOs to include on all loan documents any unique identifier of the MLO provided by the NMLS, and (2) the CFPB to issue implementing regulations requiring covered financial institutions to establish and maintain procedures reasonably designed to assure and monitor compliance with the SAFE Act’s federal registration requirements.¹⁸

In 2009, the Federal Housing Finance Agency directed government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs) Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac to require mortgage loan applications to include the MLO’s unique identifier.¹⁹ The GSEs announced that for federally regulated institutions, the unique identifier information is required for all applications on or after July 29, 2011.²⁰

On January 5, 2011, HUD issued a mortgagee letter requiring the collection of NMLS unique identifiers for all individuals and entities participating in the origination of Federal Housing Administration (FHA) loans.²¹ The mortgagee letter also requires all FHA-approved mortgagees and their employees to comply with the NMLS registration requirements and “entities with jurisdiction over their activities” must register in accordance with the guidance set forth by NMLS.

Examination Objectives

- To determine whether the covered financial institution has adopted written policies and procedures designed to assure compliance with the SAFE Act regulation.
- To determine whether the annual independent testing of the institution’s policies and procedures for assuring compliance with the SAFE Act regulation has been conducted.
- To determine whether any violations or deficiencies identified during the independent testing have been corrected and that steps have been taken to ensure they do not recur.

Examination Procedures²²

1. Determine whether the financial institution, or any of its subsidiaries, employs one or more MLOs. For those institutions without any MLO employees, these examination procedures do not need to be completed. (12 CFR 1007.103(a)(2))
2. Determine for covered financial institutions with MLO employees whether the institution has adopted written policies and procedures and conducts annual independent compliance tests to assure compliance with the SAFE Act regulation. If the institution has failed to adopt policies and procedures and to perform annual independent compliance tests, the examiners should address the violation in the examination report and require corrective action. (12 CFR 1007.104)
3. Review the covered financial institution’s written policies and procedures and the annual independent compliance tests to determine whether the institution has taken appropriate steps to assure compliance with the SAFE Act that at a minimum:
 - a. Establish a process for identifying which employees of the covered financial institution are required to be registered MLOs; (12 CFR 1007.104(a))
 - b. Require that all employees of the covered financial institution who are MLOs be informed of the registration requirements of the SAFE Act and the SAFE Act regulation and be instructed on how to comply with such requirements and procedures; (12 CFR 1007.104(b))

V. Compliance Lending — SAFE Act

- c. Establish procedures to comply with the unique identifier requirements in Section 105 of the SAFE Act regulation; (12 CFR 1007.104(c))
 - d. Establish reasonable procedures for confirming the adequacy and accuracy of employee registrations, including updates and renewals, by comparisons with its own records; (12 CFR 1007.104(d))
 - e. Establish procedures and tracking systems for monitoring compliance with registration and renewal requirements and procedures; (12 CFR 1007.104(e))
 - f. Provide for independent testing for compliance with the SAFE Act regulation conducted annually by institution personnel or by an outside party; (12 CFR 1007.104(f))
 - g. Provide for appropriate action in the case of an employee who fails to comply with the registration requirements of the SAFE Act, the SAFE Act regulation, or the covered financial institution's policies and procedures, including prohibiting such employees from acting as an MLO or other appropriate disciplinary actions; (12 CFR 1007.104(g))
 - h. Establish a process for reviewing employee criminal history background reports received pursuant to the SAFE Act regulation, taking appropriate action consistent with applicable federal law, including Section 19 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 USC Section 1829) and implementing regulations with respect to these reports, and maintaining records of these reports and actions taken with respect to applicable employees; (12 CFR 1007.104(h)) and
 - i. Establish procedures designed to ensure that any third party with which the institution has arrangements related to mortgage loan origination has policies and procedures to comply with the SAFE Act, including appropriate licensing and/or registration of individuals acting as MLOs. (12 CFR 1007.104(i))
4. Any significant deficiencies in the institution's SAFE Act regulation policies and procedures or independent compliance tests should be documented in the workpapers and discussed in the examination report together with corrective actions taken.

Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act of 2009

Introduction

On May 20, 2009, the Helping Families Save Their Homes Act of 2009, Public Law 111-22 was signed into law. Included in the public law is the Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act (PTFA) (Division A, Title VII), which provides protections for tenants, including tenants in housing subsidized by Section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, who are living in homes subject to foreclosure. The protections are intended to provide tenants a reasonable amount of notification of the need to find alternative housing. Initially, this title, and any amendments made by this title were to be statutorily repealed on December 31, 2012.

Subsequently, Section 1484 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act \(Pub. L. 111-203, signed into law July 21, 2010) amended PTFA and extended the PTFA protections to December 31, 2014. Section 1484 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act also defined when “date of notice of foreclosure” occurs. Section 1484 provides in relevant part as follows: “the date of a notice of foreclosure shall be deemed to be the date on which complete title to a property is transferred to a successor entity or person as a result of an order of a court or pursuant to provisions in a mortgage, deed of trust, or security deed.” On December 31, 2014, the Act terminated according to the amended sunset date.

On May 24, 2018, the Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act of 2009 was reinstated through the signing of the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act of 2018. The effective date for compliance was June 23, 2018. The law is self-executing and no agency can issue a regulation or interpretation of the law.

Major provisions of the PTFA include:

Foreclosure Covered Mortgages

The PTFA covers foreclosure on:

a federally-related mortgage loan¹; or any dwelling or residential real property after the date of enactment of this title. (June 23, 2018)

The protections of this law apply to tenants under a “bona fide” lease or tenancy. A lease or tenancy is “bona fide” only if:

1. the mortgagor or a child, spouse, or parent of the mortgagor under the contract is not the tenant;
2. the lease or tenancy was the product of an arm’s-length transaction; and
3. the lease or tenancy requires the receipt of rent that is not substantially less than fair market rent or the rent is reduced or subsidized due to a federal, state, or local subsidy.

Responsibilities of Successor in Interest

Upon the complete transfer of title to the successor as a result of foreclosure, it is the responsibility of the successor in interest to:

Provide Notice to Vacate – Provide tenant(s) Notice to Vacate 90 days before the effective date of such notice in all instances; and Adhere to Tenant Protections – Tenants with bona fide lease agreements entered into prior to the date of notice of foreclosure must be allowed to occupy the premises until the end of the remaining term of the lease. However, a successor in interest may terminate a lease upon date of foreclosure and provide the 90-day Notice to Vacate if:

1. successor in interest plans to occupy the property as their primary residence; or
2. a bona fide lease or tenancy agreement is not in place or is allowed to be terminated at will according to State or local law.

¹ A “federally-related mortgage loan has the same meaning as Section 3 of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 (12 USC 2602). The definition includes any loan secured by a lien on one-to-four family residential real property, including individual units of condominiums and cooperatives.

V. Lending — Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act

These provisions do not affect any State or local law that provides longer time periods or other additional protections for tenants.

Examination Objectives

1. Determine the institution's compliance with the provisions of the PTFA, as applicable, based on the institution's product offering and operations, including management of other real estate owned where foreclosures result in tenant eviction(s).
 2. Assess the quality of the institution's compliance management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing the provisions.
 3. Determine the reliance that can be placed on the institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution's compliance with the provisions.
 4. Determine corrective action when violations of law are identified or when the institution's policies or internal controls are deficient.
- Transaction testing includes samples covering relevant product types and decision centers (for example, mortgage and debt collections departments);
 - The work performed is accurate;
 - Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management or to the Board of Directors;
 - Management has taken corrective actions to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies; and,
 - The frequency of review/audit is appropriate.
4. If any complaints based on the PTFA have been filed against the institution, determine:
 - why were they filed, and
 - how they were resolved.

Examination Procedures

General

1. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance with the PTFA. Consider:
 - policies and procedures
 - account documentation
 - checklists
 - computer program documentation, including any computer program testing and validation.
2. Determine the extent and adequacy of the training received by individuals whose responsibilities relate to compliance with the regulation. Review any training materials pertaining to the Act and determine if the training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of the provisions that apply to the creditor's offerings and operations.
3. Review compliance reviews or audit materials, including work papers and reports, to determine if:
 - The scope of any audits address all provisions of the PTFA, as applicable;

Disclosure Requirements

5. Determine whether evictions occurred within the requirements of the PTFA.
 - Notice to Vacate provided after the date of the "notice of foreclosure"
 - Notice to Vacate provided 90 days prior to the effective date of the eviction
 - Tenants with bona fide leases were allowed to remain in the property until the original contracted termination of the lease unless an exception (detailed above) was present.

Examination Conclusions

6. Conclude the examination after taking the following actions:
 - Fully address identified deficiencies and violations, if any
 - Attach appropriate supporting workpaper documentation
 - Discuss findings with management and board of directors
 - Write comments, as applicable, in the Report of Examination
 - Include appropriate violation write-ups
 - Discuss proposed enforcement action, if needed

Small-Dollar Lending

Purpose

These procedures provide a framework for examiners when reviewing small-dollar loan programs. As with other products and services, it is not mandatory for examiners to review small-dollar loan programs at every financial institution. Whether or not to review a particular small-dollar loan program is determined as a part of the regular scoping process and based on the residual risk of the product and/or service at each institution.

Background

There is a broad range of small-dollar lending products in the marketplace. While there are various statutory and regulatory definitions related to small-dollar lending for specific purposes, the FDIC has not adopted a specific definition of small-dollar loans. The examination approaches discussed in these examination procedures are broadly applicable to a range of small-dollar lending products¹ and should be utilized on a risk-focused basis, consistent with the FDIC's overall approach to consumer compliance examinations, to address how examiners should review institutions that routinely originate small-dollar loans for their customers or as part of third-party relationships. Because these instructions are intended to be applied on a risk-focused basis, it is not anticipated that these will typically be utilized for situations in which an institution makes small-dollar loans infrequently as accommodations for existing customers on an ad hoc basis (as opposed to broadly offering a small-dollar lending product or program).

Well-designed small-dollar loan products that exhibit the characteristics described in the Interagency Lending Principles for Offering Responsible Small-Dollar Loans \(FIL-58-2020\) can provide significant value to customers. Responsibly offered small-dollar loans can play an important role in helping customers meet their ongoing needs for credit due to temporary cash-flow imbalances, unexpected expenses, or income shortfalls, including during periods of economic stress, national emergencies, or disaster recoveries. Well-designed small-dollar lending programs can result in successful repayment outcomes that facilitate a customer's ability to demonstrate positive credit behavior and transition into additional financial products.

However, consumer compliance examiners should also be aware of the compliance risks associated with small-dollar loan products. Certain small-dollar loan products may have elevated risk of consumer harm, particularly when they do not exhibit the characteristics described in the Interagency Lending Principles for Offering Responsible Small-Dollar Loans \(FIL-58-2020\). For example, as with other types of lending products, performance analysis by the FDIC or by the institution finding high charge-off or default rates, or high rates of refinancing or reborrowing associated with a particular loan program, may suggest an elevated risk of consumer harm. Examiners should assess the inherent risks, including those associated with loan product characteristics, such as repayment terms, pricing, and lack of safeguards, that may lead to cycles of debt due to rollovers or reborrowing. As with other products, examiners should also consider the extent to which compliance management system elements, such as policies and procedures, effectively mitigate the risk of consumer harm and violations of applicable laws and regulations. Loan programs that are offered without adequate compliance management practices and controls may present elevated consumer compliance risk and risk of potential consumer harm.

Applicable Laws and Regulations and Other Supervisory Resources

Examiners should continue to reference appropriate chapters in the FDIC Consumer Compliance Examination Manual governing laws and regulations that may be applicable to small-dollar loan programs. Potentially applicable statutes and regulations that may apply to small-dollar programs include the following:

- Prohibitions Against Unfair, Deceptive, or Abusive Acts or Practices under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTC UDAPs) and Section 1036(a)(1)(B) of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (12 U.S.C. § 5536(a)(1)(B)) (Dodd-Frank UDAAPs);
- The Truth in Lending Act (TILA) and Regulation Z;
- The Military Lending Act (MLA) and its implementing regulations;
- The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA);
- The Electronic Fund Transfer Act (EFTA) and Regulation E;
- The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) and Regulation F;

¹ There are a variety of types of small-dollar loan programs and product structures, which include open-end lines of credit with applicable minimum payments or closed-end loans with shorter-term or longer-term balloon or installment payment structures. For example, both balloon payment loans of several hundred dollars with repayment terms over a number of weeks and longer-term installment loans of thousands of dollars repayable over months, or even years, are often considered to be small-dollar loans. Although aspects of these procedures may be appropriate for various other forms of lending, these examination procedures are not specifically intended to address overdraft programs, credit cards, real estate secured credit, or auto loans.

V. Lending — Small-Dollar Lending

- The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) and Regulation V;
- The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA) and Regulation P;
- The Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) and Regulation B; and
- The Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) and its implementing regulations.

Additional resources that may be relevant to certain small-dollar loan programs, depending on the facts and circumstances, include, for example, Interagency Lending Principles for Offering Responsible Small-Dollar Loans \(FIL-58-2020\), FDIC's Supervisory Policy on Predatory Lending \(FIL-6-2007\), and Interagency Expanded Guidance for Subprime Lending Programs \(FIL-9-2001\). Additional information about these resources, as well as some potentially relevant aspects of these laws and regulations, is included in an Appendix to these examination instructions.

Third-Party Arrangements

Financial institutions may have small-dollar loan programs that they administer directly or may enter into arrangements with third parties. In the latter situation, the institution often enters into an agreement in which the third party primarily interacts with the customer. Third-party arrangements, when not properly managed, can increase institutions' risks, including, for example, transaction, compliance, operational, and legal risks.² The use of third parties does not diminish the responsibility of the board of directors and management to ensure that the activity performed on behalf of the institution is conducted in a safe and sound manner that complies with applicable laws and regulations, including those that protect consumers.

Third parties involved in small-dollar lending may also be subject to federal and state laws, including requirements regarding licensure and/or the pricing and terms of loans offered through the third party, notwithstanding whether the financial institution is designated as the lender in the transaction. If a third party offering loans as part of a business relationship with an FDIC-supervised institution is found by a court of competent jurisdiction or a federal or state regulatory authority to have engaged in practices that are not compliant with applicable federal or state laws, the institution may face risks for facilitating or participating in the third party's unlawful activity.³

Examination Instructions

During the examination process, examiners should perform the following, as appropriate.

- Determine if an institution or its affiliates originate, service, or engage in the collection of small-dollar loans or otherwise offer or participate in a small-dollar lending program and assess the level, complexity, and risk of potential consumer harm associated with the institution's small-dollar lending activities.
 - During the pre-examination planning (PEP) process, an examiner should ask during the PEP interview if an institution or its affiliates have a small-dollar lending program, including a program to offer small-dollar loans in conjunction with third parties. Examiners may also identify such activities when they gather and review various internal and external information to understand an institution's structure, supervisory history, and operations. Such information may include, for example, prior compliance and risk management reports of examination,⁴ prior audit and monitoring reports, prior examination workpapers, financial data, correspondence, and complaint information.
 - In assessing the risk of potential consumer harm, consider data on the total number of loans made in the program, the number of third-party arrangements related to small-dollar loans, complaint data related to the program, including complaint data related to third parties, as applicable, and any investigations or enforcement actions related to the small-dollar lending program. When reviewing complaint data for institutions with loans offered in connection with consumer-facing third parties, searches of databases or for online complaints should also be based on product and/or third party names.
- Assess whether the institution has developed and implemented a Compliance Management System (CMS)

³ Under Section 3(v) of the FDI Act, a bank may be found to have violated a law or regulation if it caused, brought about, participated in, or otherwise aided or abetted a third party in violating such a law or regulation.

⁴ As noted in the RMS Manual of Examination Policies (3.2-84), with respect to payday lending programs administered directly by the bank or as part of a third-party arrangement, concurrent risk management and consumer protection examinations should be conducted absent overriding resource or scheduling problems. In all cases, a review of each discipline's examinations and workpapers should be part of the examination planning process. Relevant state examinations also should be reviewed.

² See Guidance for Managing Third-Party Risk \(FIL-44-2008\) for additional information about potential risks arising from third-party relationships and information about identifying and managing such risks.

that is robust enough to ensure that small-dollar lending programs, whether offered directly or in connection with a third-party arrangement, comply with applicable consumer protection laws and regulations. For example, the institution's CMS should demonstrate that:

- Board and management understand the consumer compliance responsibilities and consumer harm risks associated with the institution's activities and allocate resources commensurate with their level and complexity;
 - Consumer protection laws and regulations are considered and incorporated into policies, procedures, and training, as appropriate;
 - Activities are periodically monitored or audited, commensurate with the level and complexity of the institution's business and the associated risk, to ensure responsibilities are carried out and requirements are met;
 - Corrective action is taken, as necessary, to address violations of law or regulations or consumer harm; and
 - Consumer complaints related to the small-dollar lending program are handled properly and promptly.
- Review the institution's, and, if applicable, the third party's, formal or informal policies, procedures, and guidelines regarding:
 - Criteria used to underwrite each small-dollar loan product, including the assessment of the borrower's ability to repay;
 - Expected rates of default or refinancing;
 - Renewals or extensions, and policy exceptions;
 - Loan pricing and fee assessment (i.e. late payment, returned payments);
 - Working with borrowers who experience distress or unexpected challenges making timely payments; and
 - Borrower repayment options and whether the institution has a default repayment method (e.g. if automatic payments are the default payment method), extended payment plans, and refinancing.
 - Review all marketing materials and disclosures related to small-dollar loans to ensure programs' features, terms, and conditions are accurately disclosed in a clear and conspicuous manner. If the institution is offering a small-dollar loan program involving a third party, evaluate whether the institution effectively monitors the third party's marketing materials and disclosures to ensure they comply with applicable regulations and are not marketed in a way that is deceptive or discriminatory.
 - Review any management or board reports on the small-dollar loan program, including any exceptions, past due, collections, and complaint reports.
 - When reviewing an institution's small-dollar loan program, either offered directly or in connection with a third-party arrangement, examiners should consider the risk of consumer harm and perform transaction testing for compliance with applicable consumer protection laws and regulations, as warranted.
 - To determine if transaction testing is warranted, examiners should assess the CMS as it pertains to the institution's small-dollar loan program. The absence of or insufficient written policies and procedures, training, monitoring and/or audit procedures or the presence of consumer complaints may indicate the need for transaction testing.
 - In addition, the program's overall default rates or charge-off rates, and the average number of accounts or loans per customer (or the average number of "refinances" per customer) may be important indicators of whether transaction testing is warranted and the extent of such transaction testing. Such data may be particularly relevant in assessing certain marketing claims, for example claims regarding "building credit" or "working with customers to help them meet their financial goals."
 - Transaction testing of small-dollar loans programs should generally determine, among other things, whether lending practices exist that may appear to be unfair, deceptive, or abusive.
 - Assess whether the risk of FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP is elevated. Following are examples of considerations when determining if the risk of FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP is elevated with a small-dollar loan program (not an exhaustive list):
 - Consumer complaints suggest practices related to marketing, origination, servicing, or debt collection may be unfair, deceptive, or abusive;
 - Marketing materials or disclosures are not clear, complete, and accurate;
 - Marketing materials appear to overstate or misrepresent purported benefits, features, or discounts;
 - The institution operates the small-dollar loan program with limited and ineffective risk management, reporting or internal controls;

V. Lending — Small-Dollar Lending

- The small-dollar loan program lacks controls or limits on the number and frequency of extensions, deferrals, renewals, and rewrites that a customer may receive;
 - Transaction testing demonstrates that borrowers rollover, renew, or obtain similar loans from the institution in a manner inconsistent with relevant limits established by the institution;
 - Loan amounts and repayment terms do not align with eligibility and underwriting criteria;
 - Loan terms include product structures, loan amounts, or repayment terms that require payments that are likely to be unaffordable for borrowers;
 - The small-dollar loan program does not promote successful repayment of principal, interest, and fees in a reasonable timeframe without the need to re-borrow, as indicated by high rates of charge-off or default, refinancing, or re-borrowing;
 - The institution provides additional advances to finance unpaid interest and fees;
 - The institution originates simultaneous loans to the same customer;
 - Transaction testing reveals material omissions or misrepresentations that conceal or discourage use of lower cost repayment or workout options; or
 - The institution does not effectively oversee the practices of one or more third parties involved in a small-dollar lending program related to marketing, underwriting, servicing, collection, or other aspects of the program.
- Examiners should consider any potential unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices that may be apparent with any loan product, including small-dollar loans made as a part of a small-dollar loan program.
 - Examiners should also consider any factors that may mitigate FTC UDAP and Dodd-Frank UDAAP risks, depending on the facts and circumstances. This may include, for example, loan servicing and safeguards, collection practices, and processes that assist customers in achieving successful repayment while avoiding continuous cycles of debt (e.g. cooling off periods). For customers who experience distress or unexpected circumstances affecting their ability to repay small-dollar loans, mitigating factors for institutions may include timely and reasonable workout strategies. Such processes could also include restructuring single payment loans or open-end lines of credit into installment loan structures in appropriate circumstances.
- If examiners identify potential violations of FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP, they should follow applicable regional and Washington Office consultation procedures.
 - If the institution is offering a small-dollar loan program in connection with a third party, evaluate whether the institution is effectively monitoring the third party's compliance with applicable federal and state laws and regulations related to the institution's program. If the third party has been found to violate federal or state laws by a court of competent jurisdiction or federal or state regulatory authority, or if the third party is involved in active litigation with a federal or state regulatory authority related to potential violations of federal or state laws, including lending or licensure laws, in connection with the offering of the small-dollar loans that involve a relationship with the institution, a Washington Office consultation should be initiated.
 - Small-dollar loan programs may be considered when reviewing consumer loans for compliance with ECOA under the Interagency Fair Lending Examination Procedures. If the institution, on its own or through a third-party relationship, underwrites and/or prices small-dollar loans using automated systems, such reviews should consider the steps the institution takes to monitor, evaluate, and mitigate the fair lending risks associated with these systems.
 - If an institution has a small-dollar loan program that is responsive to the needs of those with low and moderate incomes and requests CRA credit, examiners should evaluate the program according to current CRA guidelines. However, if the institution has violated FTC UDAP, Dodd-Frank UDAAP, or ECOA, or is cited for other illegal credit practices related to its small-dollar loan program, examiners should consider whether a possible downgrade in the CRA rating is warranted, based on the specific facts and circumstances, because such an adverse finding would be inconsistent with helping to meet community credit needs.

Supervisory Approach

Examiners should use examination guidance and instructions, including applicable regional and Washington Office consultation procedures, to review and evaluate small-dollar loan programs in a risk-based manner. Institutions infrequently offering small-dollar loans as accommodations for existing customers on an ad hoc basis will generally not be reviewed. In addition, institutions offering small-dollar loan programs consistent with Interagency Guidelines for Responsible Small-Dollar Loans will generally not be subject to examination criticism, if appropriately managed.

Examiners should discuss with field management any significant deficiencies in an institution's CMS for small-dollar lending activities identified that pose elevated risk for consumer harm. Examiners and their immediate supervisor should also discuss any potential safety and soundness concerns, such as high default rates or failure to adequately consider a borrower's ability to repay, with risk management counterparts.

Appendix: Additional Resources

The following summarizes various existing resources, including FDIC and interagency guidance, as well as laws and regulations, that may be relevant to small-dollar lending programs, depending on the specific facts and circumstances of a program and the scope, coverage, or focus of the particular law, regulation, or other resource.

Laws and Regulations

The FDIC's risk-scoping examination approach requires consumer compliance examiners to focus their attention on operational areas that present the greatest potential risk of consumer harm, as appropriate, including consideration of small-dollar loan programs. As part of this process, examiners should continue to consider those laws and regulations that are generally applicable to small-dollar loan programs, including those described below.

Prohibitions Against Unfair, Deceptive, or Abusive Acts or Practices

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act prohibits unfair or deceptive acts or practices (FTC UDAPs). Section 1036(a)(1)(B) of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (12 U.S.C. § 5536(a)(1)(B)) prohibits any covered person or service provider from engaging in, among other things, abusive acts or practices in connection with a consumer financial product or service (Dodd-Frank UDAAPs). Potential FTC UDAP and Dodd-Frank UDAAP risk factors are discussed under examination instructions. An FTC UDAP and/or Dodd-Frank UDAAP finding is dependent on the relevant facts and circumstances.

Truth in Lending Act

The Truth in Lending Act (TILA) and its implementing regulation, Regulation Z, require lenders to disclose the costs of credit, including loan terms and the annual percentage rate (APR). TILA also requires lenders to provide certain account disclosures at various points during the credit process, and periodic statements after the consumer obtains the loan. Note that the regulatory requirements for open-end and closed-end loans differ.

Military Lending Act

The Military Lending Act (MLA) instituted an annual interest rate limit of 36 percent for certain types of loans to active duty service members and their families. This limit is referred to as the Military Annual Percentage Rate (MAPR) and applies to all forms of payday loans, vehicle title loans, deposit advance loans, refund anticipation loans, installment loans, unsecured open-end lines of credit, and credit cards.

Servicemembers Civil Relief Act

The Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (SCRA) provides additional protections for active-duty service members. For example, under the SCRA, creditors must, upon receiving a written notice and a copy of military orders, reduce the interest rate on any pre-service loans incurred by the servicemember, or a servicemember and spouse jointly, to no more than 6 percent per year for the duration of the servicemember's military active-duty service for most loans and for mortgages, and for an additional year after the end of active duty.

Electronic Fund Transfer Act

The Electronic Fund Transfer Act (EFTA) and its implementing regulation, Regulation E, protect consumers engaging in an electronic fund transfer (EFT). Among other things, EFTA prohibits lenders from requiring, as a condition of loan approval, a customer's authorization for loan repayment through a recurring EFT, except in limited circumstances.

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) provides protection to consumers against abusive, deceptive, or unfair debt collection practices. FDCPA governs collection activities conducted by: (1) third-party collection agencies collecting on behalf of lenders; (2) lenders collecting their own debt using an assumed name, to suggest that a third person is collecting or attempting to collect such debt; and (3) any collection agency that acquires the debt if the collector acquired the debt when it already was in default.

Fair Credit Reporting Act

The Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) and its implementing regulations require that furnishers of information to consumer reporting agencies ensure the accuracy of data placed in the consumer reporting system.

V. Lending — Small-Dollar Lending

Additionally, FCRA prohibits the use of consumer reports for impermissible purposes, and it requires users of consumer reports to provide certain disclosures to consumers. FCRA also limits certain information sharing between affiliated companies.

The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act

The Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA) and its implementing regulations, among other things, prohibits a financial institution from disclosing nonpublic personal information about a consumer to non-affiliated third parties, unless certain conditions are met.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) and its implementing regulation, Regulation B, prohibit discrimination in any aspect of a credit transaction and set forth requirements for accepting applications and providing notice of any adverse action.

Supervisory Guidance

Interagency Lending Principles for Offering Responsible Small-Dollar Loans

The Interagency Lending Principles for Offering Responsible Small-Dollar Loans \(FIL-58-2020\) (Principles) encourage institutions to offer responsible small-dollar loans to customers for both consumer and small business purposes. The Principles note that FDIC supervised institutions are well-suited to meet customers' credit needs with well-designed small-dollar loan programs that can result in successful repayment outcomes, facilitate a customer's ability to demonstrate positive credit behavior, and transition customers into other financial products.

The Principles note that responsible small-dollar loans generally reflect the following characteristics:

- High percentage of customers successfully repaying their small-dollar loans in accordance with original loan terms, which is a key indicator of affordability, eligibility, and appropriate underwriting;
- Repayment terms, pricing, and safeguards that minimize adverse customer outcomes, including cycles of debt due to rollovers or reborrowing; and
- Repayment outcomes and program structures that enhance a borrower's financial capabilities.

Core lending principles for financial institutions that offer small-dollar loan products include:

- Offering loan products that are consistent with safe and sound banking, treating customers fairly, and complying with applicable laws and regulations;

- Effectively managing the risks associated with the products they offer, including credit, operational, and compliance; and
- Ensuring that loan products are underwritten based on prudent policies and practices governing the amounts borrowed, frequency of borrowing, and repayment requirements.

The Principles also note that reasonable loan policies, practices, and controls for responsible small-dollar lending would generally address certain elements related to loan structures, pricing, underwriting, marketing and disclosures, and servicing and safeguards. Effective compliance management may include new product development protocols that address, among other issues, the clear disclosure of terms, the risk profile of customers using the products, the use of new technologies, the use of alternative underwriting information, or the use of third-party arrangements.

FDIC Supervisory Policy on Predatory Lending

The FDIC's Supervisory Policy on Predatory Lending \(FIL-6-2007\) describes certain loan characteristics of predatory lending, reaffirms the FDIC's position that such activities are inconsistent with safe and sound lending, and discusses practices that may violate certain consumer protection laws and regulations. There is no simple checklist for determining whether a particular loan or loan program is predatory. Loan terms that are helpful to one borrower may be harmful to others. Signs of predatory lending include the lack of a fair exchange of value or loan pricing that reaches beyond the risk that a borrower represents.

FIL-6-2007 notes that predatory lending typically involves at least one, and perhaps all, of the following elements:

- Making unaffordable loans based on the assets of the borrower rather than on the borrower's ability to repay the obligation.
- Inducing a borrower to refinance a loan repeatedly in order to charge high points and fees each time the loan is refinanced.
- Engaging in fraud or deception to conceal the true nature of the loan obligation, or ancillary products, from an unsuspecting or unsophisticated borrower.

FIL-6-2007 notes that predatory lending harms individuals and communities and raises risk management and consumer compliance concerns for financial institutions.

Interagency Expanded Guidance for Subprime Lending Programs

The Interagency Expanded Guidance for Subprime Lending Programs, \(FIL-9-2001\) addresses the examination of institutions that systematically target the subprime market through programs that employ tailored marketing, underwriting standards, and risk selection. This expanded guidance applies specifically to those institutions that have subprime lending programs with an aggregate credit exposure greater than or equal to 25 percent of tier 1 capital. The term "subprime," as used in the guidance, refers to the credit characteristics of individual borrowers. Subprime borrowers typically have weakened credit histories that include payment delinquencies and possibly more severe problems such as charge-offs, judgments, and bankruptcies. They may also display reduced repayment capacity as measured by credit scores, debt-to-income ratios, or other criteria that may encompass borrowers with incomplete credit histories. Subprime loans are loans to borrowers displaying one or more of these characteristics at the time of origination or purchase. Among other things, the guidance discusses portfolio-level reviews and transaction-level testing. The guidance also addresses predatory or abusive lending practices.

VI. Consumer Compliance Depository Issues

Expedited Funds Availability Act

Introduction

Regulation CC (12 CFR 229), as amended, implements two laws—the Expedited Funds Availability Act (EFA Act), which was enacted in August 1987 and became effective in September 1988, and the Check Clearing for the 21st Century Act (Check 21), which was enacted in October 2003 and became effective on October 28, 2004. The regulation sets forth the requirements that depository institutions (“banks”) make funds deposited into transaction accounts available according to specified time schedules and that they disclose their funds availability policies to their customers. It also establishes rules designed to speed the collection and return of checks and electronic checks and describes requirements that affect banks that create or receive substitute checks, including requirements related to consumer disclosures and expedited recredit procedures.

Regulation CC contains four subparts. The first three implement the EFA Act, and the fourth implements Check 21. Specifically:

- Subpart A—Defines terms and provides for administrative enforcement
- Subpart B—Specifies availability schedules, or timeframes within which banks must make funds available for withdrawal; also includes rules concerning exceptions to the schedules, disclosure of funds availability policies, payment of interest, and bank liability for noncompliance
- Subpart C—Sets forth rules concerning the expeditious return of checks and electronic checks, the responsibilities of paying and returning banks, notice of nonpayment for large-dollar returns by the paying bank, check and electronic check-indorsement standards, and other related changes to the check-collection system
- Subpart D—Contains provisions concerning the requirements a substitute check must meet to be the legal equivalent of an original check; bank duties, warranties, and indemnities associated with substitute checks; expedited recredit procedures for consumers and banks; and consumer disclosures regarding substitute checks

The appendixes to the regulation provide additional information:

- Appendix A—Routing number guide
- Appendix B - Reserved
- Appendix C—Model forms and clauses that banks may use to meet their disclosure responsibilities under the regulation

- Appendix D – Indorsement, reconversion, and truncation requirements in connection with substitute checks
- Appendix E – Commentary
- Appendix F – Official Federal Reserve Board (“Board”) Interpretations; Preemption Determinations

Subpart A – General Definitions—Section 229.2

Account

For purposes of subparts B and C, an account is a “deposit” (as defined in the Board’s Regulation D, in 12 CFR 204.2(a)(1)(i)) that is a “transaction account” (as defined in 12 CFR 204.2(e)). “Account” encompasses consumer and corporate accounts and includes accounts from which the account holder is permitted to make transfers or withdrawals by any of the following:

- Negotiable instrument
- Payment order of withdrawal
- Telephone transfer
- Electronic payment

For purposes of subpart B, “account” does not include accounts for which the account holder is a bank, an office of a bank or foreign bank that is located outside the United States, or the Treasury of the United States.

For purposes of subpart D, “account” means any deposit at a bank, including a demand deposit or other transaction account and a savings deposit or other time deposit. Many deposits that are not accounts for purposes of the other subparts of Regulation CC, such as savings deposits, are accounts for purposes of subpart D.

Bank

The term bank refers to Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation insured banks, mutual savings banks, savings banks, and savings associations; federally insured credit unions; non-federally insured banks, credit unions, and thrift institutions; agencies and branches of foreign banks; and Federal Home Loan Bank (FHLB) members.

For purposes of subparts C and D, “bank” also includes any person engaged in the business of banking. Federal Reserve Banks, FHLBs, and state and local governments to the extent that the government unit pays checks.

For purposes of subpart D only, “bank” also refers to the U.S. Treasury and the USPS to the extent that they act as payors.

VI. Deposits — EFA

- The term paying bank applies to any bank at which or through which a check is payable and to which it is sent for payment or collection. For purposes of subpart D, “paying bank” also includes the U.S. Treasury and the USPS. The term also includes Federal Reserve Banks, FHLBs, state and local governments, and, if the check is not payable by a bank, the bank through which a check is payable.
- A reconverting bank is the bank that creates a substitute check or is the first bank to transfer or present a substitute check to another party.
- A copy of an original check is any paper reproduction of an original check, including a paper printout of an electronic image, a photocopy, or a substitute check. A sufficient copy is a copy of an original check that accurately represents all of the information on the front and back of the check at the time of truncation or is otherwise sufficient to establish the validity of a claim.
- Truncate means to remove an original check from the forward collection or return process and replace it with a substitute check or, by agreement, information relating to the original check. The truncating bank may or may not choose to provide subsequent delivery of the original check.

Check

The term check includes both original checks and substitute checks.¹

- An original check is the first paper check issued with respect to a particular payment transaction.
- A substitute check is a paper reproduction of an original check that
 - Contains an image of the front and back of the original check,
 - Bears a MICR line containing all of the information encoded on the original check’s MICR line, except as provided in the industry standard for substitute checks,²
 - Conforms in dimension, paper stock, and otherwise with industry standards for substitute checks, and
 - Is suitable for automated processing in the same manner as the original check.

A substitute check for which a bank has provided the warranties described in section 229.52 is the legal equivalent of an original check if the substitute check accurately represents all of the information on the front and back of the original check and bears the legend “This is a legal copy of your check. You can use it the same way you would use the original check.”

- A local check is a check deposited in a depository bank that is located in the same Federal Reserve Bank check-processing region as the paying bank.³

Electronic Check, Electronic Returned Check, and Electronically-Created Item

An electronic check and electronic returned check mean an electronic image of, and electronic information derived from, a paper check or paper returned check, respectively, that—

- (1) Is sent to a receiving bank pursuant to an agreement between the sender and the receiving bank; and
- (2) Conforms with ANS X9.100-187, unless the Board by rule or order determines that a different standard applies or the parties otherwise agree.

Electronic checks and electronic returned checks are subject to subpart C of Regulation CC as if they were checks or returned checks, except where provided in subpart C.

An electronically-created item means an electronic image that has all the attributes of an electronic check or electronic returned check, but was created electronically and not derived from a paper check.

¹ The term “check” does not include checks drawn in a foreign currency or checks drawn on a bank located outside the United States.

² “MICR (magnetic ink character recognition) line” refers to the numbers—including routing number, account number, check number, and check amount, and other information—that are printed across the bottom of a check in magnetic ink in accordance with American National Standard (ANS) Specifications for Placement and Location of MICR Printing, X9.13 or an original check and an Image Replacement Document-IRD, X9.100-140, for a substitute check. ANS X9.100-140 specifies ways in which the content of a substitute check’s MICR line may vary from the content of the original check’s MICR line. ANS X9.100-140 also specifies circumstances in which a substitute check MICR line need not be printed in magnetic ink. For purposes of subpart C and D, MICR line also refers to the numbers contained in a record specified for MICR line data in an electronic check or electronic returned check in accordance with ANS Specifications for Electronic Exchange of Check Image Data – Domestic, X9.100-87.

³ The regulation currently continues to reference non-local checks. See, e.g. 12 CFR 229.2(v). However, in February 2010, the Federal Reserve consolidated all of its check processing operations into a single paper check-processing region. Accordingly, there are no longer nonlocal checks.

Consumers and Customers

- A consumer is a natural person who draws a check on a consumer account or cashes or deposits a returned check against a consumer account.
- A consumer account is an account used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.
- A customer is a person who has an account with a bank.

Business and Banking Days

- A business day is any day except Saturday, Sunday, and a legal holiday (standard Federal Reserve holiday schedule).
- A banking day is a business day on which a bank is open for substantially all its banking activities.

Even though a bank may be open for regular business on a Saturday, that day is not considered a banking day for purposes of Regulation CC because Saturday is never a “business day” under the regulation. The fact that one branch is open to the public for substantially all its banking activities does not necessarily mean that specific day is a banking day for the other branches of the bank.

Indemnifying Bank

Indemnifying bank means –

- For the purposes of §229.34, a bank that provides an indemnity under §229.34 with respect to remote deposit capture or an electronically-created item, or
- For the purposes of §229.53, a bank that provides an indemnity under §229.53 with respect to a substitute check.

Administrative Enforcement – §229.3

Regulation CC is to be enforced for banks through section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 USC 1818 et seq.) and through the Federal Credit Union Act (12 USC 1751 et seq.). In addition, a supervisory agency may enforce compliance through any other authority conferred on it by law. The Board is responsible for enforcing the requirements of Regulation CC for banks that are not specifically the responsibility of another government agency.

Subpart B – Availability of Funds and Disclosure of Funds Availability PoliciesNext-Day Availability – §229.10

Rules governing next-day availability of funds are set forth in section 229.10.

General Rules (§§ 229.10(a)–229.10(c))

Cash, electronic payments, and certain check deposits must generally be made available for withdrawal the business day after the banking day on which they were received. Among the covered check deposits are cashier’s, certified, and teller’s checks; government checks (including U.S. Treasury checks, USPS money orders, state and local government checks, and checks drawn on a Federal Reserve Bank or an FHLB); and certain on-us checks (checks drawn on the same bank, or a branch thereof).

Generally, to qualify for next-day availability, the deposit must be both

- Made at a staffed teller station and
- Deposited into an account held by the payee of the check.

Exceptions are U.S. Treasury checks and on-us checks, which must receive next-day availability even if the deposit is not made at a staffed teller station. Cash and other next-day check deposits (such as Postal Service money orders, cashier’s checks, certified checks, checks drawn on a state or local government, and checks drawn on a Federal Reserve Bank or a FHLB) that are not made at a staffed teller station must be available for withdrawal on the second business day after the day of deposit. (§§ 229.10(a)(2) and 229.10(c)(2))

Additional Rules

A few additional rules also apply:

- State and local government checks—For state and local government checks to receive next-day availability, the depository bank must be located in the same state as the governmental unit issuing the check. (§ 229.10(c)(1)(iv))
- Special deposit slips or envelopes—For deposits of state and local government checks, as well as deposits of cashier’s, certified, and teller’s checks, the depository bank may require the use of special deposit slips or envelopes. If the depository bank requires the use of special deposit slips or envelopes, it must either provide the slips or tell customers how they can be obtained. (§ 229.10(c)(3))
- On-us checks—For an on-us check to receive next-day availability, it must be drawn on the same branch or another branch of the bank where it is deposited. In addition, both branches must be located in the same state or check-processing region. (§ 229.10(c)(1)(vi))
- $225 rule—Under a special rule for check deposits not subject to next-day availability, the depository bank must provide next-day availability for withdrawal of the lesser of $225 or the aggregate amount deposited to all accounts, including individual and joint accounts, held by the same customer on any one banking day. The $225 rule does not apply to deposits received at nonproprietary automated teller machines (ATMs). (§ 229.10(c)(1)(vii) and 12 U.S.C. 4002(a)(2)(D)) payable through banks located in another state may extend the availability schedules for local checks by one day. The exception does not apply to checks drawn on banks in these states or territories and deposited in banks located in the continental United States.

Availability Schedule – §229.12

General Rules (§§ 229.12(a)–229.12(c) and 229.12(f))

Under the permanent availability schedule, which became effective in September 1990, local check deposits must be made available no later than the second business day following the day on which the funds were deposited (See Figure 1). Funds deposited at nonproprietary ATMs, including cash and all checks, must be made available no later than the fifth business day following the banking day on which they were deposited.

Checks that would normally receive next-day availability are treated as local check deposits if they do not meet all the criteria for next-day availability under section 229.10(c). (As noted in the preceding section, certain checks generally deposited at a staffed teller station and into an account held by the payee of the check receive next-day availability. However, state and local government checks and certain on-us checks are subject to additional rules.)

U.S. Treasury checks and USPS money orders that do not meet all the requirements for next-day or second-day availability outlined in section 229.10(c) receive funds availability as if they were local checks. Cashier's, certified, teller's, and state and local government checks and checks drawn on a Federal Reserve Bank or FHLB that do not meet all the requirements in section 229.10(c) also receive funds availability as local checks.

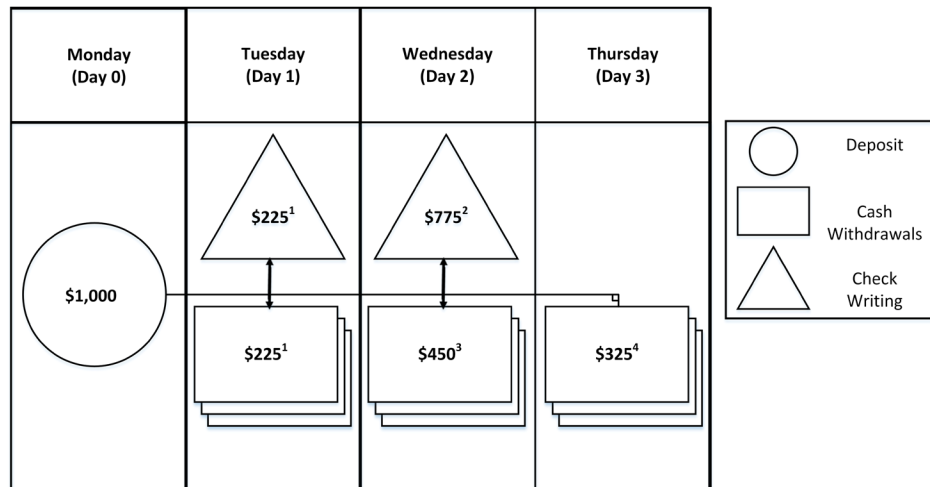

Special Rules for Cash Withdrawals (§ 229.12(d))

Special rules apply to cash withdrawals from local check deposits. The depository bank is allowed to extend the availability schedule for cash or similar withdrawals by one day. If it does, a customer must also be allowed to withdraw $450 of the deposited funds (or the maximum amount that may be withdrawn from an ATM, but not more than $450) no later than 5:00 p.m. on the day the funds would have ordinarily become available for check withdrawals, that is, the second business day after the deposit. This is in addition to the $225 that must be made available on the business day following deposit. The remainder of the deposited funds would be available for cash withdrawal on the following, third business day.

Extension of the Schedule for Certain Deposits (§ 229.12(e))

Banks in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands that receive checks drawn on or

1. The first $225 of a day's deposit must be made available for either cash withdrawal or check-writing purposes at the start of the next business day. (§ 229.10(c)(1)(vii))
2. Local checks must be made available for check-writing purposes by the second business day following deposit. (§ 229.12(b))
3. Figure 1 assumes that the depository bank extends the availability schedule for cash or similar withdrawals by one day, as permitted under § 229.12(d). If the depository bank extends the availability schedule for such withdrawals, $450 of the deposit must be made available for cash withdrawal no later than 5:00 p.m. on the day specified in the schedule. This is in addition to the $225 that must be made available on the business day following deposit. (§ 229.12(d)).
4. The remainder of the deposit must be made available for cash withdrawal by the third business day following deposit. (§ 229.12(d))

VI. Deposits — EFA

Exceptions to the Availability Schedule—Section 229.13

The regulation provides for exceptions that allow banks to exceed the maximum hold periods specified in the availability schedule. The exceptions are considered “safeguards” because they offer banks a means of reducing risk based on the size of the deposit, the depositor’s past performance, the absence of a record on the depositor’s past performance, or a belief that the deposit may not be collectible.

Categories of Exception (§§ 229.13(a)–229.13(f))

The regulation provides for exceptions in six situations:

- New accounts
- Deposits in excess of $5,525 on any one day
- Checks that have been returned unpaid and are being redeposited
- Deposits to accounts that have been repeatedly overdrawn
- Cases in which the bank has reasonable cause to believe the check being deposited is uncollectible
- Emergency conditions

Although banks may exceed the timeframes for availability in these situations, the exceptions generally may not be invoked if the deposit would ordinarily receive next-day availability.

New Accounts (§ 229.13(a))

An account is considered a “new” account, under section 229.13(a), for the first 30 calendar days it is open, beginning on the date the account is established. An account is not considered “new” if “each customer on the account has had, within 30 calendar days before the account is established, another account at the bank for at least thirty calendar days.”

The new-account exception does not cover all deposits made to the account. New accounts are exempted from the availability schedules for deposits of local checks, but next-day availability is required for deposits of cash and for electronic payments. Also, the first $5,525 of a day’s aggregate deposits of government checks (including federal, state, and local governments), cashier’s, certified, teller’s, depository, or traveler’s checks must be given next-day availability. The amount in excess of $5,525 must be made available no later than the ninth business day following the day of deposit.

To qualify for next-day availability, deposits into a new account generally must be made in person to an employee of the depository bank. If the deposits are not made in person to an employee of the depository bank—for instance, if they are made at an ATM—availability may be provided on the second business day after the day of deposit. Treasury check deposits, however, must be given next-day availability regardless of whether they are made at staffed teller stations or ATMs. Banks are not required to make the first $225 of a day’s deposits of local checks, or the funds from on-us checks, available on the next business day.

Large Deposits (Deposits over $5,525) (§ 229.13(b))

A depository bank may extend hold schedules when deposits other than cash or electronic payments exceed $5,525 on any one day. A hold may be applied to the amount in excess of $5,525. To apply the rule, the depository bank may aggregate deposits made to multiple accounts held by the same customer, even if the customer is not the sole owner of the accounts.

Redeposited Checks (§ 229.13(c))

A depository bank may delay making the funds from a check available if the check had previously been deposited and returned unpaid. The exception does not apply to checks that were previously returned unpaid because of a missing indorsement or because the check was postdated when presented.

Repeated Overdrafts (§ 229.13(d))

If a customer’s account, or accounts, have been repeatedly overdrawn during the preceding six months, the bank may delay making the funds from a check available. A customer’s account may be considered repeatedly overdrawn in two ways. First, the exception may be applied if the account was overdrawn, or would have been overdrawn had check or other charges been paid, for six or more banking days during the preceding six months.

Second, the exception may be applied to customers who incurred overdrafts on two banking days within the preceding six-month period if the negative balance in the account(s) at that time was $5,525 or more. The exception may also apply if the account would have been overdrawn by $5,525 or more had the check or other charges been paid.

Reasonable Cause to Doubt Collectibility (§ 229.13(e))

This exception may be applied to all types of checks. To trigger the exception, the depository institution must have reasonable cause to believe that the check is not collectible and must disclose the basis for the extended hold to the customer. The basis for reasonable cause may include, for example, communication with the paying bank indicating that

- A stop-payment order has been placed on the check
- There are insufficient funds in the drawer’s account to cover the check
- The check will be returned unpaid

The reasonable-cause exception may also be invoked in cases in which

- The check was deposited six months after the date of the check (stale date)
- The check was postdated (future date)
- The depository bank believes that the depositor may be engaged in check kiting
- The depository bank has other confidential information, such as the insolvency or pending insolvency of the customer

The reasonable-cause exception may not be invoked based on the fact that the check is of a particular class or is deposited by a particular class of persons. For example, this exception may not be invoked because of:

- The race or national origin of the depositor
- The fact that the paying bank is located in a rural area and the depository bank will not have time to learn of nonpayment of the check before the funds have to be made available under the availability schedules in place
- The fact that the check is a cashier's check (without any additional information about the particular check that would provide reasonable cause to doubt collectability)

If the depository bank intends to use this exception, it must notify the customer, in writing, at the time of deposit. If the deposit is not made in person or the decision to place the hold is based on facts that become known to the bank at a later date, the bank must mail the notice by the business day after the day the deposit is made or the facts become known. The notice must indicate that availability is being delayed and must include the reason the bank believes the funds are uncollectable. If a hold is placed on the basis of confidential information, as when check kiting is suspected, the bank need only disclose to the customer that the hold is based on confidential information indicating that the check may not be paid.

If the depository bank asserts that the hold was based on confidential information, it must note the reason on the notice it retains as a record of compliance. The bank must maintain a record of each exception notice, including documents and a brief description of the facts supporting the reasonable-cause exception, for two years.

Overdraft and returned-check fees (§ 229.13(e)(2))

If a depository bank invokes the reasonable-cause exception and does not inform the customer in writing at the time of the deposit, it may not charge the customer any overdraft or returned-check fees resulting from the hold if

- The deposited check is paid by the paying bank and
- The overdraft would not have occurred or the check would not have been returned had the depository bank not imposed the reasonable-cause hold.

However, the depository bank may assess overdraft or returned-check fees if the exception hold notice states that the customer may be entitled to a refund of any overdraft or returned-check fees imposed and describes how the customer can obtain the refund. The bank must then refund the fees upon request.

Emergency Conditions (§ 229.13(f))

Banks may suspend the availability schedule under the following emergency conditions:

- An interruption of communications or computer or other equipment facilities
- Suspension of payments by another bank
- War
- Any emergency condition beyond the control of the depository bank

Notices of Exception (§ 229.13(g))

Whenever a bank invokes one of the exceptions to the availability schedules (other than the new-account exception), it must notify the customer in writing. The bank may send a notice that complies solely with section 229.13(g)(1) (the “general exception notice”) or one of the two alternative notices described below.

General Exception Notice (§ 229.13(g)(1))

The general notice of exception must include the following:

- The customer's account number
- The date of the deposit
- The amount of the deposit that will be delayed
- The reason the exception was invoked
- The time period the funds will be available for withdrawal (unless unknown, as in an emergency situation)

If the deposit is made at a staffed facility, the notice may be given to the person making the deposit, regardless of whether that person is the customer who holds the account. If the deposit is not made at a staffed facility, the exception notice may be mailed to the customer no later than the business day following the banking day of deposit. If the depository bank discovers a reason to delay the funds subsequent to the time the notice should have been given, the bank must notify the customer about the hold as soon as possible, but no later than the business day after the facts become known. Certain exception holds due to emergency conditions do not require notification of customers. For example, if the deposited funds that were subject to a hold during an emergency become available for withdrawal before the time the notice must be sent, the depository bank need not send a notice.

One-Time Exception Notice for Nonconsumer Accounts (§ 229.13(g)(2))

If most of the check deposits into a particular nonconsumer account qualify for either the large-deposit exception or the redeposited-check exception, the bank may send a one-time notice rather than a notice complying with section 229.13(g)(1) each time the exception is invoked. The one-time notice must be sent either the first time the exception is invoked or before that time. It must state both

- The reason the exception may be invoked and
- The time period when the funds will generally be made available.

Exception Notice for Repeated Overdrafts (§ 229.13(g)(3))

If most of the check deposits into a particular account qualify for the repeated-overdraft exception, the bank may send an exception notice that covers a specified period of time rather than a notice complying with section 229.13(g)(1) each time the exception is invoked. The “specified period” notice must be sent when the overdraft exception is first invoked. It must state all of the following:

- The customer’s account number
- The fact that access to the funds is being delayed because the repeated-overdraft exception is being invoked
- The time period during which the exception will apply
- The time period within which the funds generally will be available for withdrawal

Availability of Deposits Subject to Exceptions (§ 229.13(h))

For deposits subject to exceptions to the availability schedules, other than deposits into new accounts, the depository bank is permitted to delay availability for a reasonable time beyond the schedule. Generally, a reasonable period is considered to be no more than one business day for on-us checks and five business days for local checks. If a depository bank extends its availability beyond these timeframes, it must be able to prove that the extended delay is reasonable.

Payment of Interest – §229.14

General Rule (§ 229.14(a))

A depository bank must begin accruing interest on interest-bearing accounts no later than the business day on which it receives provisional credit for the deposited funds. A depository bank typically receives credit on checks within one or two days following deposit. It receives credit on cash deposits, electronic payments, and checks that are drawn on itself on the day the cash, check, or electronic payment is received. And if a nonproprietary ATM is involved, it usually receives credit on the day the bank that operates the ATM credits the depository bank for the amount of deposit.

A depository bank may rely on the availability schedule of its Federal Reserve Bank, FHLB, or correspondent bank when determining when the depository bank receives credit (section 229.14(a)(1)). If availability is delayed beyond the time specified in that schedule, a bank may charge back to the account any interest erroneously paid or accrued on the basis of that schedule.

A depository bank may accrue interest on checks deposited to all of its interest-bearing accounts based on an average of when the bank receives credit for all checks sent for payment or collection (section 229.14(a)(2)). For example, if a bank receives credit on 20 percent of the funds deposited by check on the business day of deposit (such as via on-us checks), 70 percent on the business day following deposit, and 10 percent on the second business day following deposit, the bank may apply these percentages to determine the day on which interest must begin to accrue for check deposits into all interest-bearing accounts, regardless of when the bank received credit for deposits into any particular account. Consequently, a bank may begin accruing interest uniformly across all interest-bearing accounts rather than having to track the type of check deposited to each account.

Nothing in the general rule limits a depository bank policy that provides that interest may accrue only on balances that exceed a specified amount or on the minimum balance maintained in the account during a given period. However, the balance must be determined according to the date the bank receives credit for the funds. Nor is there a limit on a policy that provides that interest may accrue sooner than required by the regulation.

Money market deposit accounts, savings deposit accounts, and time deposit accounts are not subject to the general rule concerning the timing of interest payment. However, for simplicity of operation, a bank may accrue interest on such deposits in the same manner that it accrues interest on transaction accounts.

Exemption for Certain Credit Unions (§ 229.14(b))

Credit unions that do not begin to accrue interest or dividends on their members' accounts until a date later than the day the credit union receives credit for those deposits, including cash deposits, are exempt from the general rule for payment of interest (section 229.14(a)) as long as they provide notice of their interest-accrual policies in accordance with section 229.16(d).

Exception for Checks Returned Unpaid (§ 229.14(c))

Banks are not required to pay interest on funds deposited in an interest-bearing account by a check that has been returned unpaid, regardless of the reason for return.

General Disclosure Requirements – §229.15Form of Disclosures (§ 229.15(a))

A bank must disclose its funds availability policy to its customers. The disclosures must be clear and conspicuous and must be in writing. Disclosures other than those posted at locations where employees accept consumer deposits, at ATMs, or on preprinted deposit slips must be in a form that customers can keep. They must be grouped together and must not contain information unrelated to the requirements of Regulation CC. If other account terms are included in the same document, disclosures related to the regulation should be highlighted, for example, by having a separate heading.

Uniform Reference to Day of Availability (§ 229.15(b))

In its disclosure, the bank must describe funds as being available for withdrawal on “the ____ business day after” the day of deposit. In this calculation, the first business day is the business day following the banking day the deposit was received, and the last business day is the day on which the funds are made available.

Multiple Accounts and Multiple Account Holders (§ 229.15(c))

A bank is not required to give multiple disclosures to customers who have more than one account if the accounts are subject to the same availability policies. Nor is a bank required to give separate disclosures to joint account holders. A single disclosure to one of the holders of the joint account is sufficient.

Dormant or Inactive Accounts (§ 229.15(d))

A bank is not required to give disclosures to customers who have dormant or inactive accounts.

Specific Availability Policy Disclosure – §229.16

The disclosure describing its funds availability policy that a bank must provide to its customers must reflect the policy followed by the bank in most cases. If the bank wishes to reserve its right to impose longer delays on a case-by-case basis or by invoking one of the exceptions specified in section 229.13, its policy regarding these situations must be reflected in the disclosure.

Content of Specific Availability Policy Disclosure (§ 229.16(b))

A bank's specific availability policy disclosure must include, as applicable, the following:

- A summary of the bank's availability policy
- A description of the categories of deposits or checks used by the bank when it delays availability, such as local checks; how to determine the category to which a particular deposit or check (such as a payable-through draft) belongs; and when each category will be available for withdrawal (including a description of the bank's business days and when a deposit is considered received)
- A description of any of the exceptions specified in section 229.13 that may be invoked by the bank, including the time at which the deposited funds generally will become available for withdrawal and a statement that the bank will notify the customer if the bank invokes one of the exceptions
- A description of any case-by-case policy of delaying availability that may result in deposited funds being available for withdrawal later than the time periods stated in the bank's availability policy (specific requirements are laid out in section 229.16(c)(1))

Longer Delays on a Case-by-Case Basis (§ 229.16(c))

A bank that has a policy of making deposited funds available for withdrawal sooner than required may extend the time when funds are available up to the time periods allowed under the regulation on a case-by-case basis. However, the bank must include the following in its specific policy disclosure:

- A statement that the time when deposited funds are available for withdrawal may be extended in some cases, and a statement of the latest time deposited funds will be available for withdrawal
- A statement that the bank will notify the customer if funds deposited in the customer's account will not be available for withdrawal until after the time periods stated in its availability policy

VI. Deposits — EFA

- A statement that customers should ask if they need to know when a particular deposit will be available for withdrawal

When a depository bank extends the time that funds will be available for withdrawal on a case-by-case basis, it must provide the depositor with a written notice. The notice must include all of the following information:

- The customer's account number
- The date of the deposit
- The amount of the deposit that is being delayed
- The day the funds will be available for withdrawal

The notice must be provided at the time of the deposit, unless the deposit was not made in person to an employee of the depository bank or the decision to delay availability was made after the time of the deposit. If notice is not given at the time of the deposit, the depository bank must mail or deliver the notice to the customer no later than the first business day following the banking day the deposit was made.

A depository bank that extends the time when funds will be available for withdrawal on a case-by-case basis and does not furnish the depositor with written notice at the time of deposit may not assess any fees for any subsequent overdrafts (including use of a line of credit) or return of checks or other debits to the account if

- The overdraft or return of the check or other debit would not have occurred except for the fact that the deposited funds were delayed under section 229.16(c)(1) of the regulation and
- The deposited check was paid by the paying bank.

However, the depository bank may assess an overdraft or returned-check fee if it includes a notice concerning overdraft and returned-check fees with the disclosure required in section 229.16(c)(2) and, when required, refunds any such fees upon the request of the customer. The overdraft and returned-check notice must state that the customer may be entitled to a refund of overdraft or returned-check fees that are assessed if the check subject to the delay is paid, and also must state how to obtain a refund.

Credit Union Notice of Interest-Payment Policy (§ 229.16(d))

If a credit union begins to accrue interest or dividends on all deposits made into an interest-bearing account, including cash deposits, at a later time than the day specified in section 229.14(a), the credit union's specific policy disclosures must explain when interest or dividends on deposited funds will begin to accrue.

Initial Disclosures—§229.17

A bank must provide potential customers with the disclosures described in section 229.16 before an account is opened.

Additional Disclosure Requirements—§229.18

Deposit Slips (§ 229.18(a))

All preprinted deposit slips given to customers must include a notice that deposits may not be available for immediate withdrawal.

Locations Where Employees Accept Consumer Deposits (§ 229.18(b))

A bank must post, at a conspicuous place at each location where its employees receive deposits to consumer accounts, a notice that sets forth the time periods applicable to the availability of funds deposited.

Automated Teller Machines (§ 229.18(c))

At each of its ATM locations, a depository bank must post or provide a notice that funds deposited in the ATM may not be available for immediate withdrawal. A depository bank that operates an off-premises ATM from which deposits are removed not more than two times each week, as described in section 229.19(a)(4), must disclose at or on the ATM the days on which deposits made at the ATM will be considered received.

Upon Request (§ 229.18(d))

A bank must provide a copy of its specific availability policy disclosure (described in section 229.16) to any person who requests it.

Changes in Policy (§ 229.18(e))

Thirty days before implementing a change in its availability policy, a bank must send notification of the change to all account holders adversely affected by the change. Changes that result in faster availability may be disclosed no later than thirty days after implementation.

Miscellaneous Provisions—§229.19

When Funds Are Considered Deposited (§ 229.19(a))

For purposes of subpart B of Regulation CC (sections 229.10–229.21), the time at which funds must be made available for withdrawal is measured from the day the funds are considered deposited (or “received” by the bank). When funds are considered officially deposited differs according to where, how, and when they are deposited:

- Funds deposited at a staffed teller station or an ATM—Considered deposited when received by the teller or placed in the ATM.
- Funds mailed to the depository bank—Considered deposited on the banking day they are received by the depository bank; in this case, funds are considered “received” at the time the mail is delivered to the bank, even if it is initially delivered to a mail room rather than the check-processing area.

- Funds deposited at a night depository— Considered deposited on the banking day the funds are removed from the night depository and are accessible to the depository bank for processing. For example, some businesses deposit their funds in a locked bag at the night depository late in the evening and return to the bank the following day to open the bag; others have an agreement with the bank that the deposit bag must be opened under the dual control of the bank and the depositor. In both cases, the funds are considered deposited when the customer returns to the bank and opens the deposit bag.
- Funds deposited through a lock box arrangement— Considered deposited on the day the funds are removed from the lock box and are accessible to the depository bank for processing. A lock box is a post office box that is typically used by a corporation for the collection of bill payments or other check receipts.
- Funds deposited at off-premises ATMs that are not serviced more than twice a week— Considered deposited on the day they are removed from the ATM. This special provision is geared toward banks whose practice is to service remote ATMs infrequently. A depository bank that uses this provision must post a notice at the ATM informing depositors that funds deposited at the ATM may not be considered received on the date of deposit.
- Funds deposited on a day the depository bank is closed or after the bank’s cutoff hour— May be considered deposited on the next banking day.

Cutoff Hours

Generally, a bank may establish a cutoff hour of 2:00 p.m. or later for receipt of deposits at its main office or branch offices and a cutoff hour of 12:00 noon or later for deposits made at ATMs, lock boxes, night depositories, or other off-premises facilities. (As specified in the commentary to section 229.19(a), the 12:00 noon cutoff time relates to the local time at the branch or other location of the depository bank where the account is maintained or the local time at the ATM or off-premises facility.)

Different cutoff hours may be established for different types of deposits—for example, a 2:00 p.m. cutoff for receipt of check deposits and a later time for receipt of wire transfers is permissible. Location can also play a role in the establishment of cutoff hours; for example, different cutoff hours may be established for ATM deposits and over-the-counter deposits, or for different teller stations at the same branch. With the exception of the 12:00 noon cutoff hour for deposits at ATMs and off-premises facilities, the cutoff hour for receipt of deposits may not be earlier than 2:00 p.m.

Hour of Funds Availability (§ 229.19(b))

Generally, funds must be available for withdrawal by 9:00 a.m. or the time a depository bank’s teller facilities, including ATMs, are available for customer account withdrawals, whichever is later. (Under certain circumstances, there is a special exception for cash withdrawals—see section 229.12(d).) Thus, if a bank has no ATMs and its branch facilities are available for customer transactions beginning at 10:00 a.m., funds must be available for withdrawal by 10:00 a.m. If a bank has 24-hour ATM service, funds must be available for ATM withdrawals by 9:00 a.m.

The start of business is determined by the local time at the branch or depository bank holding the account. For example, if funds in an account at a West Coast bank are first made available at the start of business on a given day and a customer attempts to withdraw the funds at an East Coast ATM, the depository bank is not required to make funds available until 9:00 a.m. West Coast time (12:00 noon East Coast time).

Effects of the Regulation on Depository Bank Policies (§ 229.19(c))

Essentially, a depository bank is permitted to provide availability to its customers in a shorter time than that prescribed in the regulation. The bank may also adopt different funds availability policies for different segments of its customer base, so long as each policy meets the schedules in the regulation. For example, it may differentiate between its corporate and consumer customers, or may adopt different policies for its consumer customers based on whether a customer has an overdraft line of credit associated with his or her account.

The regulation does not affect a depository bank’s right to accept or reject a check for deposit, to “charge back” the customer’s account for the amount of a check based on the return of the check or receipt of a notice of nonpayment of the check, or to claim a refund for any credit provided to the customer.

Nothing in the regulation requires a depository bank to have its facilities open for customers to make withdrawals at specified times or on specific days. For example, even though the special cash withdrawal rule set forth in section 229.12(d) states that a bank must make up to $450 available for cash withdrawals no later than 5:00 p.m. on specific business days, if a bank does not participate in an ATM system and does not have any teller windows open at or after 5:00 p.m., the bank need not join an ATM system or keep offices open. In this case, the bank complies with the rule if the funds that are required to be available for cash withdrawal at 5:00 p.m. on a particular day are available for withdrawal at the start of business on the following day. Similarly, if a depository bank is closed for customer transactions, including ATM transactions, on a day on which funds must be made available for withdrawal, the regulation does not require the bank to open.

If a bank has a policy of limiting cash withdrawals at ATMs to $250 a day, the regulation does not require that the bank dispense $450 of the proceeds of the customer's deposit that must be made available for cash withdrawal on that day.

Some small banks do not keep cash on their premises and do not offer cash withdrawal services to their customers. Others limit the amount of cash on their premises, for reasons related to bonding, and as a result reserve the right to limit the amount of cash a customer may withdraw on a given day or to require advance notice for large cash withdrawals. Nothing in the regulation is intended to prohibit these practices if they are applied uniformly and are based on security, operating, or bonding requirements and if the policy is not dependent on the length of time the funds have been in the customer's account, as long as the permissible hold has expired. However, the regulation does not authorize such policies if they are otherwise prohibited by statutory, regulatory, or common law.

Calculated Availability for Non-consumer Accounts (§ 229.19(d))

Under calculated availability, a specified percentage of funds from check deposits may be made available to the customer on the next business day, with the remaining percentage deferred until subsequent days. The determination of the percentage of deposited funds that will be made available each day is based on the customer's typical deposit mix as determined by a sample of the customer's deposits. Use of calculated availability is permitted only if, on average, the availability terms that result from the sample are equivalent to or more prompt than the requirements of the regulation.

Holds on Other Funds (§ 229.19(e))

If a customer deposits a check, the bank may place a hold on any of the customer's funds to the extent that the funds held do not exceed the amount of the check deposited and if the total amount of funds held are made available for withdrawal within the times required in the regulation. For example, if a customer cashes a check (other than an on-us check) over-the-counter, the depository bank may place a hold on any of the customer's funds to the extent that the funds held do not exceed the amount of the check cashed.

Employee Training and Compliance (§ 229.19(f))

The EFA Act requires banks to inform each employee who performs duties subject to the act about its requirements. The act and Regulation CC also require banks to establish and maintain procedures designed to ensure and monitor employee compliance with the requirements.

Effects of Mergers (§ 229.19(g))

Merged banks may be treated as separate banks for a period of up to one year after consummation of the merger transaction. However, a customer of any bank that is a party to the merger transaction and has an established account with the merging bank may not be treated as a new account holder under the new-account exception of section 229.13(a). A deposit in any branch of the merged bank is considered deposited in the bank for purposes of the availability schedules in accordance with section 220.19(a).

This rule affects the status of the combined entity in a number of areas, for example,

- When the resulting bank is a participant in a check clearinghouse association
- When an ATM is a proprietary ATM
- When a check is drawn on a branch of the depository bank

Relation to State Law – §229.20

General Rule (§ 229.20(a))

If a state has a shorter hold for a certain category of checks than is provided for under federal law, the state requirement supersedes the federal provision.

The EFA Act also indicates that any state law providing availability in a shorter period of time than required by federal law is applicable to all federally insured banks in that state, including federally chartered banks. If a state law provides shorter availability only for deposits in accounts in certain categories of banks, such as commercial banks, the superseding state law continues to apply to only those categories of banks, rather than to all federally insured banks in the state.

12 CFR 229.20(a) is applicable to state laws or regulations in effect on or before September 1, 1989.

Preemption of Inconsistent Law (§ 229.20(b))

Provisions of state laws that are inconsistent with federal law, other than those discussed in the preceding section ("General Rule"), are preempted. State laws requiring disclosure of availability policies for transaction accounts are preempted by Regulation CC. Preemption does not require a determination by the Federal Reserve Board to be effective.

Preemption Standards and Determinations (§§ 229.20(c) and (d))

The Federal Reserve Board may issue a preemption determination upon request by an interested party in a state. The determination will relate only to the provisions of subparts A and B of Regulation CC.

Civil Liability – §229.21Statutory Penalties (§ 229.21(a))

Statutory penalties can be imposed as a result of a successful individual or class action suit brought for violations of subpart B of Regulation CC. Basically, a bank can be held liable for

- Actual damages,
- No less than $100 nor more than $1,100 in the case of an individual action,
- The lesser of $552,500 or 1 percent of the net worth of the bank involved in the case of a class action, and
- The costs of the action, together with reasonable attorney’s fees as determined by the court.

These penalties also apply to provisions of state law that supersede provisions of the regulation, such as requirements that funds deposited in accounts at banks be made available more promptly than required by the regulation, but they do not apply to other provisions of state law. (See commentary in appendix E, section 229.20.)

Bona Fide Errors (§ 229.21(c))

A bank will not be considered liable for violations of Regulation CC if it can demonstrate, by a preponderance of evidence, that violations resulted from bona fide errors and that it maintains procedures designed to avoid such errors.

Reliance on Federal Reserve Board Rulings (§ 229.21(e))

A bank will not be held liable if it acts in good faith in reliance on any rule, regulation, model form (if the disclosure actually corresponds to the bank’s availability policy), or interpretation of the Board, even if that rule, regulation, form, or interpretation is subsequently determined to be invalid. Banks may rely on the commentary as well as on the regulation itself.

Exclusions (§ 229.21(f))

The liability established by section 229.21 does not apply to violations of subpart C (Collection of Checks) of Regulation CC or to actions for wrongful dishonor of a check by a paying bank’s customer. (Separate liability provisions applying to subpart C are found in section 229.38.)

Subpart C – Collection of Checks

Subpart C covers the check-collection system and includes rules to speed the collection and return of checks. Basically, these rules cover the return responsibilities of paying and returning banks, notices of non-payment for large-dollar returns by the paying bank, and mandatory check indorsement standards. Electronic checks and electronic returned checks are subject to subpart C as if they were checks or returned checks, except where “paper check” or “paper returned check” is specified. Many of the provisions of subpart C can be varied by agreement.

Sections 229.30 and 229.31 generally require paying and returning banks to return checks expeditiously using a “two-day” test. Under the two-day test, a return is considered expeditious if a local check is received by the depository bank by 2:00 p.m. (local time of the depository bank) of the second business day after presentment. Pursuant to section 229.33(a), a paying bank and returning bank may be liable to a depository bank for failing to return a check in an expeditious manner only if the depository bank has arrangements in place such that the paying bank or returning bank could return a returned check electronically, directly or indirectly, by commercially reasonable means.

Section 229.31(c) also generally requires a paying bank to provide timely notification of nonpayment if it determines not to pay a check of $5,000 or more, regardless of the channel of collection. The regulation addresses the depository bank’s duty to notify its customers that a check is being returned and the paying bank’s responsibility for giving notice of nonpayment.

Other areas that are covered in subpart C are indorsement standards, warranties and indemnities by paying and returning banks, bona fide errors and liability, variations by agreement, insolvency of banks, and the effect of merger transactions.

The provisions of subpart C, supersede any state law, but only to the extent that state law is inconsistent with Regulation CC. (Section 229.41)

The expeditious return requirements and other specified requirements in subpart C do not apply to checks drawn on the U.S. Treasury, USPS money orders, and checks drawn on states and units of general local government that are presented directly to the state or units of general local government and that are not payable through or at a bank. (Section 229.42)

VI. Deposits — EFA

Subpart D – Substitute Checks

General Provisions Governing Substitute Checks – §229.51

A substitute check for which a bank has provided the warranties described in section 229.52⁴ is the legal equivalent of an original check if the substitute check:

- Accurately represents all of the information on the front and back of the original check and
- Bears the legend “This is a legal copy of your check. You can use it the same way you would use the original check.”⁵

The reconverting bank must adhere to Regulation CC’s standards for preserving bank indorsements and identifications. A reconverting bank that receives consideration for a substitute check that it transfers, presents, or returns is also the first bank to provide the warranties described in section 229.52 and the indemnity described in section 229.53.

Substitute Check Warranties and Indemnity – §§229.52 and 229.53

Starting with the reconverting bank, any bank that transfers, presents, or returns a substitute check (or a paper or electronic representation of a substitute check) and receives consideration for that check warrants that the substitute check meets the legal-equivalence requirements and that a check that has already been paid will not be presented for subsequent payment.

Such a bank also provides an indemnity to cover losses that the recipient and any subsequent recipient of the substitute check (or paper or electronic representation of a substitute check) incurred because of the receipt of a substitute check instead of the original check.

A bank that rejects a check submitted for deposit and returns to its customer a substitute check (or paper or electronic representation of a substitute check) makes these warranties and indemnifications regardless of whether the bank received consideration.

Expedited Recredit for Consumers – §229.54

Section 229.54(a) sets forth the conditions under which a consumer may make an expedited recredit claim for losses associated with the consumer’s receipt of a substitute check. To use the expedited recredit procedure, the consumer must be able to assert in good faith that

- The consumer’s account was charged for a substitute

- check that was provided to the consumer,
- The consumer’s account was improperly charged or the consumer has a warranty claim,
- The consumer suffered a loss, and
- The consumer needs the original check or a sufficient copy to determine the validity of the claim.

To make a claim, the consumer must comply with the timing, content, and form requirements in section 229.54(b). This section generally provides that a consumer’s claim must be received by the bank that holds the consumer’s account no later than the fortieth calendar day after the later of

- The calendar day on which the bank mailed (or delivered by a means agreed to by the consumer) the periodic statement describing the contested transaction or
- The calendar day on which the bank mailed (or delivered by a means agreed to by the consumer) the substitute check itself.

Section 229.54(b)(1)(ii) requires the bank to give the consumer an additional, reasonable period of time if the consumer experiences “extenuating circumstances” that prevent timely submission of the claim.

The commentary to section 229.60 provides that the bank may voluntarily give the consumer more time to submit a claim than the rule allows.

Under section 229.54(b)(2)(ii), a complaint is not considered complete, and thus does not constitute a claim, until it contains all of the required information the rule requires. The rule requires that the claim contain⁶

- A description of why the consumer believes the account was improperly charged or the nature of the consumer’s warranty claim,
- A statement that the consumer has suffered a loss, and an estimate of the amount of the loss,
- A reason why the original check (or a copy of the check that is better than the substitute check the consumer already received) is necessary to determine whether the consumer’s claim is valid, and
- Sufficient information to allow the bank to identify the substitute check and investigate the claim.

⁴ A person other than a bank that creates a substitute check could transfer that check only by agreement unless and until a bank provides the substitute check warranties.

⁵ A bank may not vary the language of the legal-equivalence legend.

⁶ If a consumer submits an incomplete complaint, the bank must so inform the consumer and must tell the consumer what information is missing.

A bank, at its discretion, may require the consumer to submit the claim in writing. If a consumer makes an oral claim to a bank that requires a written claim, the bank must inform the consumer of the written requirement at that time. Under those circumstances, the bank must receive the written claim by the later of 10 business days from the date of an oral claim or the expiration of the consumer's initial 40-day period for submitting a timely claim. As long as the original oral claim fell within the 40-day requirement for notification and a complete written claim was received within the additional 10-day window, the claim meets the timing requirements (sections 229.54(b)(1) and 229.54(b)(3)), even if the written claim was received after the expiration of the initial 40-day period.

Bank's Action on Claims

Section 229.54(c) requires a bank to act on a consumer's claim no later than the tenth business day after the banking day on which it received the consumer's claim:

- If the bank determines that the consumer's claim is valid, it must recredit the consumer's account no later than the end of the business day after the banking day on which it makes that determination. The amount of the recredit should equal the amount of the consumer's loss, up to the amount of the substitute check, plus interest on that amount if the account is an interest-bearing account. The bank must then notify the consumer of the recredit using the notice discussed below ("Notices Relating to Expedited Recredit Claims").
- If the bank determines that the consumer's claim is invalid, it must notify the consumer of that decision using the notice discussed below ("Notices Relating to Expedited Recredit Claims").
- If the bank has not determined the validity of the consumer's claim by the tenth business day after the banking day on which it received the claim, the bank must recredit the consumer's account for the amount of the consumer's loss, up to the amount of the substitute check or $2,500, whichever is less. The bank must also recredit interest on that amount if the consumer's account is an interest-bearing account. The bank must send a notice to that effect to the consumer using the notice discussed below ("Notices Relating to Expedited Recredit Claims"). If the consumer's loss was more than $2,500, the bank has until the end of the forty-fifth calendar day from the date of the claim to recredit any remaining amount of the consumer's loss, up to the amount of the substitute check (plus interest), unless it determines prior to that time that the claim was invalid and notifies the consumer of that decision.

Section 229.54(d) generally requires that recredited funds receive next-day availability. However, a bank that provisionally recredits funds pending further investigation may invoke safeguard exceptions to delay availability of the recredit under the limited circumstances described in section 229.54(d)(2). The safeguard exceptions apply to new accounts and repeatedly overdrawn accounts and also when the bank has reasonable cause to suspect that the claim is fraudulent. A bank may delay availability of a provisionally recredited amount until the start of the earlier of (1) the business day after the banking day on which the bank determines that the consumer's claim is valid or (2) the forty-fifth calendar day after the banking day on which the bank received the claim if the account is new, the account is overdrawn, or the bank has reasonable cause to believe that the claim is fraudulent. When the bank delays availability under this section, it may not impose overdraft fees on checks drawn against the provisionally credited funds until the fifth calendar day after the day on which the bank sent the notice regarding the delayed availability.

If, after providing the recredit, the bank determines that the consumer's claim was invalid, the bank may reverse the recredit. This reversal must be accompanied by a consumer notification using the notice discussed below ("Notices Relating to Expedited Recredit Claims").

Notices Relating to Expedited Recredit Claims

Section 229.54(e) outlines the requirements for providing consumer notices related to expedited recredit:

- The bank must send the notice of recredit no later than the business day after the banking day on which the bank recredits the consumer's account. The notice must include the amount of the recredit and the date the recredited funds will be available for withdrawal.
- The bank must send notice that the consumer's claim is not valid no later than the business day after the banking day on which the bank makes this determination. The notice must include the original check or a sufficient copy of it (except as provided in section 229.58; see below). Also, it must demonstrate to the consumer why the claim is not valid. Further, the notice must include either any information or document that the bank used in making its determination or an indication that the consumer may request copies of this information.
- The bank must send the notice of a reversal of recredit no later than the business day after the banking day on which the bank made the reversal. The notice must include all the information required in a notice of invalid claim plus the amount (including interest) and date of the reversal (section 229.54(e)(3)(i)).

VI. Deposits — EFA

Appendix C to Regulation CC contains model forms that a bank may use to craft the various notices required in section 229.54(e). The Board published these models to assist banks in complying with section 229.54(e). Appropriate use of the models, however, does not offer banks a statutory safe harbor.

Expedited Recredit for Banks – §229.55

Section 229.55 sets forth expedited recredit procedures applicable between banks. A claimant bank must adhere to the timing, content, and form requirements of section 229.55(b) in order for the claim to be valid. A bank against which an interbank recredit claim is made has ten business days within which to act on the claim (section 229.55(c)). The provisions of section 229.55 may be varied by agreement. (No other provisions of subpart D may be varied by agreement.)

Liability – §229.56

Section 229.56 describes the damages for which a bank or person would be liable in the event of breach of warranty or failure to comply with subpart D:

- The amount of the actual loss, up to the amount of the substitute check, resulting from the breach or failure and
- Interest and expenses (including costs, reasonable attorney's fees, and other expenses of representation) related to the substitute check.

These amounts could be reduced in the event of negligence or failure to act in good faith. It is also important to note that section 229.56 contains a specific exception that allows for greater recovery as provided in the indemnity section. Thus, a person who has an indemnity claim that also involves a breach of a substitute check warranty could recover all damages proximately caused by the warranty breach.

Section 229.56(b) excuses failure to meet this subpart's time limits because of circumstances beyond a bank's control. Section 229.56(c) provides that an action to enforce a claim under this subpart may be brought in any U.S. district court. Section 229.56(c) also provides the subpart's statute of limitations: one year from the date on which a person's cause of action accrues.⁷ Section 229.56(d) states that if a person fails to provide notice of a claim for more than thirty days from the date on which a cause of action accrues, the warranting or indemnifying bank is discharged from liability to the extent of any loss caused by the delay in giving notice of the claim.

⁷ For purposes of this paragraph, a cause of action accrues as of the date on which the injured person first learns, or reasonably should have learned, of the facts giving rise to the claim, including the identity of the warranting or indemnifying bank against which the action is brought.

Consumer Awareness – §229.57

Content requirements

A bank must provide its consumer customers with a disclosure that explains that a substitute check is the legal equivalent of the original check and describes the consumer's recredit rights for substitute checks. A bank may use, but is not required to use, the Board's model form (in appendix C to Regulation CC) to meet the content requirements for this notice. A bank that uses the model form appropriately is deemed compliant with the content requirements for which it uses language from the model form. A bank may provide the notice required by section 229.57 along with other information.

Distribution to Consumer Customers Who Receive Canceled Checks with Periodic Account Statements

Under section 229.57(b)(1), a bank must provide this disclosure to existing consumer customers who routinely receive their canceled checks in their periodic statement no later than the first statement after October 28, 2004. For customer relationships established after that date, a bank must provide the disclosure to a new consumer customer who will routinely receive canceled checks in periodic statements at the time the customer relationship is established.

Distribution to Consumer Customers Who Receive a Substitute Check Occasionally

Under section 229.57(b)(2), a bank must also provide the disclosure to a consumer customer who receives a substitute check on an occasional basis, including when a consumer receives a substitute check in response to a request for a check or a copy of a check and when a check deposited by the consumer is returned to the consumer as an unpaid item in the form of a substitute check. A bank must provide the disclosure to a consumer customer in these cases even if the bank previously provided the disclosure to the consumer.

When the consumer contacts the bank to request a check or a copy of a check and the bank responds by providing a substitute check, the bank must provide this disclosure at the time of the request, if feasible. Otherwise, the bank must provide the disclosure no later than when the bank provides a substitute check in response to the consumer's request. It would not be feasible to provide the disclosure at the time of the request if, for example, the consumer made his or her request by telephone or if the bank did not know at the time of the request whether it would provide a substitute check or some other document in response. A bank is not required to provide the disclosure if the bank responds to the consumer's request by providing something other than an actual substitute check (such as a photocopy of an original check or a substitute check).

When a bank returns a deposited item unpaid to a consumer in the form of a substitute check, the bank must provide the disclosure when it provides the substitute check.

Mode of Delivery of Information – §229.58

Section 229.58 provides that banks may deliver any notice or other information required under this subpart by U.S. mail or by any other means to which the recipient has agreed to receive account information, including electronically. A bank that is required to provide an original check or a sufficient copy (each of which is defined as a specific paper document) instead may provide an electronic image of the original check or sufficient copy if the recipient has agreed to receive that information electronically.

Examination Objectives – Part I

Note: The examination objectives and examination procedures for this regulation are broken down by regulation subpart: Section I covers subparts A and B, and section II covers subpart D. Subpart C of the regulation, "Collection of Checks," is not covered here, as it addresses payments system issues exclusively and therefore does not present any consumer-related regulatory compliance issues to be reviewed during a consumer compliance examination. "Bank" is used as defined by Regulation CC.

Subparts A and B

1. To determine that the bank's funds availability policies are in compliance with Regulation CC
2. To determine that the bank has established internal controls for compliance with Regulation CC
3. To determine that the bank has established a training program for applicable employees concerning their duties with respect to Regulation CC
4. To determine that the bank maintains records of compliance with Regulation CC for a period of two years

Examination Procedures⁸

A financial institution may delay funds availability for some A bank may delay funds availability for some deposits on a case-by-case basis and for other deposits on an automatic basis. In addition, the bank may make decisions concerning holds and maintain records at branches as well as at the main office. Therefore, to check on a bank's compliance with its holds policies, the examiner must determine not only the types of holds policies the bank has, but how decisions are made and where records are maintained. If a branch makes its own decision and maintains its own records, such as in a decentralized structure, sampling may be done at the branch. If decisions to delay availability are either centralized or made at a regional processing center and records are maintained there, sampling for compliance may be made at that location.

General

1. Determine the types of transaction accounts, as defined in Regulation D, section 204.2(e) (demand deposits, negotiable order of withdrawal (NOW) accounts, and ATM accounts), offered by the bank.
2. Obtain copies of the forms used by the bank for transaction accounts, as applicable:
 - Specific availability policy disclosures
 - Exception hold notices
 - Case-by-case hold notices
 - Special deposit slips
 - Change-in-terms notices
3. Determine, by account type, the bank's specific funds availability policies with regard to deposits.
4. Determine which individuals actually perform the various activities necessary to comply with the provisions of Regulation CC, subpart B, including, for example, personnel engaged in
 - Distributing disclosure statements
 - Employee training
 - Internal reviews
 - Computer program development for deposit accounts (not necessarily a computer programmer)
 - Deposit operations
 - Overdraft administration
 - ATM deposit processing
 - Determining case-by-case holds or exceptions
5. Review the bank's training manual, internal audit or similar reports for Regulation CC, written procedures given to employees detailing their responsibilities under the regulation, and similar materials.

⁸ These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

6. Determine the extent and adequacy of the instruction and training received by those employees to enable them to carry out their assigned responsibilities in conformance with Regulation CC.
7. Verify that the bank provides each employee with a written statement regarding the bank's procedures that pertain to that employee's function. (§ 229.19(f))

Initial Disclosures and Subsequent Changes

1. Review the bank's specific availability policy disclosures. Determine if the disclosures accurately reflect the bank's funds availability policies and meet the requirements for content under section 229.16.

3. Determine if the bank provides its funds availability policy upon an oral or written request within a reasonable time period. (§ 229.18(d))
4. Determine if the bank has made changes to its availability policies since the last examination. If it has, determine whether depositors were notified in accordance with section 229.18(e).

2. Review records that detail holds placed on accounts. Determine if holds are in accordance with the regulation.
3. Sample deposit accounts with deposits subject to the $225 availability rule and the $450 cash withdrawal rule and verify the bank's compliance with the rules. Verify that actual practices and policies match.

Extended Holds

Case-by-Case Holds

1. Determine if the bank places holds on a case-by-case basis. If it does, review the bank's procedures for placing case-by-case holds.
2. Review the bank's specific availability policy disclosures to determine whether the case-by-case hold policy has been disclosed.
3. Review any physical records or reports generated from holds placed. (Sample should include records from the main office as well as branch offices, depending on the type of branch system operated.)
4. Sample a few of the case-by-case holds and determine whether the bank makes the funds available for withdrawal within the required timeframes.

5. Determine whether the bank provides the customer with a notice of the case-by-case hold as required by section 229.16(c)(2). Determine if the notices meet the timing and content requirements.
6. If the bank does not provide the notice at the time of deposit, determine whether it either discloses the availability of refunds of overdraft and returned-check fees or does not assess these fees when the requirements of section 229.16(c)(3) are met.

2. Review the bank's specific availability policy disclosures to determine whether it has disclosed its exception-holds policy.
3. Review any physical records or reports generated from holds placed. (Sample should include records from the main office as well as branch offices, depending on the type of branch system operated.)
4. Sample a few of the exception holds and determine when the bank makes the funds available for withdrawal. Determine that the bank does not add more than one business day for on-us checks and five business days for local checks to the maximum time periods in the federal availability schedule for the deposit unless it can show that a longer delay is reasonable. (§ 229.13(h))
5. With the exception of new accounts, determine whether the bank provides the customer with an exception-hold notice as required by section 229.13(g).
6. Review hold notices. Determine if the notices meet the timing and content requirements for each type of exception hold. (Note: Banks are required to retain copies of reasonable-cause hold notices.)

New Accounts (§ 229.13(a))

1. Review bank policies for new accounts.
2. Determine how the bank defines a new-account relationship. Determine if the bank's definition is in compliance with Regulation CC.
3. Review the bank's specific availability policy disclosure to determine whether the bank has disclosed its availability policy regarding new accounts.
4. Review a new-account report or listing of new-account holders. Determine if any holds were placed on the accounts.
5. Sample deposit accounts, and ask the bank to provide documentation concerning the composition of the opening deposit or the most recent deposit.
6. Review holds placed and determine if they are within regulatory limits with respect to time and amount (see section 229.13(a)(1)). (Note: No regulatory time limits are set forth for funds availability for local check deposits into new accounts.)

Large Deposits (§ 229.13(b))

1. Determine whether the bank has procedures and a special hold policy for large deposits. If it does, determine whether the bank considers a large deposit, for purposes of the large-deposit exception, to be a day's aggregate deposit of checks exceeding $5,525.
2. Determine that the bank does not invoke the large-deposit exception for cash or electronic payments.
3. Review at least one account deposit on which a large-deposit hold was placed and determine if the hold was placed only on the amount by which a day's deposits of checks exceeded $5,525.
4. Determine if the bank provided the customer with a written exception notice that meets the requirements of section 229.13(g)(1) or 229.13(g)(2).
5. Determine if the notice was provided within the timeframes prescribed in section 229.13(g)(1) or 229.13(g)(2).

Redeposited Checks (§ 229.13(c))

1. Determine if the bank has procedures and a special hold policy for redeposited checks.
2. If it does, determine if the bank refrains from imposing this exception solely because of a missing indorsement or because the check was postdated.
3. Determine if the bank provided the customer with a written exception notice that meets the requirements of section 229.13(g)(1) or 229.13(g)(2).
4. Determine if the notice was provided within the timeframes prescribed in section 229.13(g)(1) or 229.13(g)(2).

Repeated Overdrafts (§ 229.13(d))

1. Determine whether the bank has procedures or a special hold policy for customers with repeated overdrafts.
2. If it does, review the bank's definition of accounts "repeatedly overdrawn" and determine whether it meets the regulatory definition in section 229.13(d).
3. Determine that the bank returns the account to the bank's normal account status when the account has not been repeatedly overdrawn for a six-month period following the time the account was characterized as repeatedly overdrawn.
4. Review the bank's list of customers whose accounts are repeatedly overdrawn. (Note: This list may or may not be the same overdraft list maintained in the ordinary course of business. The bank may maintain a list of recent overdrafts as well as a list of customers whose accounts are repeatedly overdrawn.)

VI. Deposits — EFA

5. Review an account classified as repeatedly overdrawn. Determine if the bank properly classified the account and followed the regulatory procedures outlined in section 229.13(d).
6. Determine the date the account was placed in “repeated overdraft” exception status. Review account statements for the six months before the account was identified as an overdraft exception.
7. Determine whether the bank provided the customer with an exception notice when an exception hold was placed on the account. If it did, review the content of the notice and determine if it meets the requirements of section 229.13(g)(1) or 229.13(g)(3).
8. Determine if notice was given within the required timeframes. (§ 229.12(g)(1) or 229.12(g)(3))

Reasonable Cause to Doubt Collectibility (§ 229.13(e))

1. Determine if the bank has procedures or a special policy for placing reasonable-cause holds.
2. If it does, determine who initiates reasonable-cause holds.
3. Obtain a list of accounts or checks to which this exception was applied. Review the exception notice given to the customer.
4. Determine if the reason for invoking the exception was reasonable.
5. Review the content of the notice and determine if it meets the requirements of section 229.13(g)(1).
6. Determine if notice was given within the required timeframes. (§ 229.13(g)(1))
7. If the bank imposes a reasonable-cause exception hold and does not provide the notice at the time of deposit, determine whether it either discloses the availability of refunds of overdraft and returned-check fees or does not assess these fees when the requirements of section 229.13(e)(2) are met.

Emergency Conditions (§ 229.13(f))

1. Determine if the bank has procedures or a special policy for placing emergency-condition holds. If it does, review the bank’s procedures for placing these holds.
2. Determine whether the institution invokes this exception only under the conditions specified in section 229.13(f).
3. Determine whether the bank makes the funds available for withdrawal within a reasonable time after either the termination of the emergency or the time at which the deposit would normally be available for withdrawal, whichever is later. (Note: A reasonable period for on-us checks is one business day; and for local checks, five business days. (§§ 229.13(h)(3) and 229.13(h)(4))

Miscellaneous Provisions

Special Deposit Slips (§ 229.10(c)(3))

1. Determine if the bank requires a special deposit slip for state or local government, cashier’s, certified, or teller’s checks in order to provide next-business-day availability on the deposits. (§ 229.10(c)(3)(i))
2. If the bank requires a special deposit slip, determine that it does one of the following: (§ 229.10(c)(3)(ii))
 - Provides the deposit slip to its customers
 - Informs its customers of how to obtain and prepare the slips
 - Makes the special deposit slips “reasonably available”

Additional Disclosure Requirements (§ 229.18)

1. Determine if the bank displays a notice of its availability policy in a conspicuous place at locations where employees receive consumer deposits. (§ 229.18(b)) (Note: The notice is not required at drive-up windows and night depositories. See commentary to section 229.18(b).)
2. Determine if the bank displays a notice at each of its proprietary ATMs stating that the funds deposited in the ATM may not be available for immediate withdrawal. (§ 229.18(c)(1))
3. If the bank has off-premises ATMs from which funds are not collected more than twice a week, determine if the bank discloses on or at the ATM the days on which the deposits made at the ATM will be considered “received” (§ 229.18(c)(2))
4. Determine if the bank includes a notice on all preprinted deposit slips that the deposited funds may not be available for immediate withdrawal. (§ 229.18(a))

Payment of Interest [§229.14]

1. Determine whether the bank pays interest as of the date of the deposit or as of the date provisional credit is granted.
2. If the bank pays interest as of the date provisional credit is granted, review the bank’s schedule for provisional credit. (This schedule may be from a Federal Reserve Bank or may be based on the time credit is generally received from a correspondent bank.) Select a NOW account statement and ask the bank to give a detailed explanation of how the interest was calculated.

- Review the bank's method for calculating interest on deposits reviewed. Select another NOW account and, using the bank's procedures for calculating interest, verify that the bank accrues interest as of the date provisional credit is received.

Calculated Availability Non-consumer Transaction Accounts [§229.19(d)]

- Determine if the bank uses a formula for calculating funds availability for non-consumer transaction accounts.
- If it does, review a copy of the bank's formula.
- Select a large corporate account subject to the formula. Ask the bank to demonstrate how funds are made available to the customer. Determine whether it appears that the formula accurately reflects the type of deposit mix reasonably expected for this type of account holder. (For example, a local grocery store may have 90 percent of its deposits made up of local check deposits. Therefore, a formula providing a deposit mix of at least 90 percent availability within two days may be reasonable.)

Record Retention [§229.21(g) and 229.13(g)(4)]

Determine that the bank retains for two years the notices required when a "reasonable cause" exception is invoked.

Examination Objectives – Part II

Subpart D

- Determine the bank's compliance with subpart D notice content and timing requirements (general consumer-awareness disclosures regarding substitute checks and notices that respond to a consumer's expedited recredit claim regarding a substitute-check error)
- Ascertain whether the bank complies with timing requirements for acting on a substitute-check expedited recredit claim.

Examination Procedures⁹

The Check 21 Act provides that a properly prepared substitute check is the "legal equivalent of the original check for all purposes." Accordingly, all banks were required to accept a substitute check in place of the original after the act's effective date of October 28, 2004.

Banks must apprise consumer customers who receive canceled checks with their periodic account statements or who otherwise occasionally receive substitute checks of their rights under the law through a consumer-awareness disclosure. A bank that provides a substitute check to a consumer must also comply with the Check 21 Act's expedited recredit procedure for addressing errors relating to substitute checks. The regulation specifies the appropriate timing for the distribution of the consumer-awareness disclosure and also provides model language.

General

- Obtain copies of the documents associated with the bank's Check 21 compliance, including but not limited to the following:
 - Consumer-awareness disclosure(s)
 - Sample (test) substitute checks, if available
 - Direct mail correspondence, statement stuffers, and the like, describing Check 21/substitute check implementation to consumer customers
 - Notices relating to expedited recredit claims:
 - Notice of valid claim and refund
 - Notice of provisional refund
 - Denial of claim
 - Reversal of refund
 - Any other relevant documents
- Identify the individuals within the bank who may have responsibilities associated with Check 21. The following is a non-exhaustive list of such individuals:
 - New-accounts personnel
 - Employee training department
 - Internal auditors, reviewers
 - Deposit operations, bookkeeping
- Review the bank's training manual, internal audit or similar reports for Regulation CC, written procedures given to employees detailing their responsibilities under the regulation, and similar materials.
- Determine the training methods used by the bank in conveying specific responsibilities to employees. Are written procedures distributed to employees?

Consumer Awareness – §229.57

NOTE: Model disclosure language is provided in Appendix C of the Regulation

Determine whether the bank distributes only a single version of its consumer-awareness disclosure or maintains variations of the disclosure to be used depending on the circumstances giving rise to distribution. Each notice should reflect the following:

⁹ These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

VI. Deposits — EFA

1. General disclosure content—Determine whether the disclosure notice states:
 - That a substitute check is the legal equivalent of an original check (§ 229.57(a)(1)); and
 - The consumer recredit rights that apply when a consumer in good faith believes that a substitute check was not properly charged to his or her account. (§ 229.57(a)(2))
 2. Timing and distribution—A bank is required to provide its consumer customers with a consumer-awareness disclosure prior to the receipt of a substitute check.
 - For those who receive canceled checks with periodic statements:
 - Determine that the bank provided the disclosure at the time the customer relationship was established. (§ 229.57(b)(1)(ii))
 - For those who do not receive canceled checks with periodic statements and who will receive substitute checks only occasionally:
 - Upon customer request for an original check or a copy of a check—Determine that the bank provides the disclosure to a consumer customer who requested an original check or a copy of a check and received a substitute check in response. (§ 229.57(b)(2)(i))
 - Upon customer's receipt of a returned substitute check—Determine that the bank provides the disclosure to a consumer customer of the bank who receives a returned substitute check (at the time the bank provides such substitute check). (§ 229.57(b)(2)(ii))
 3. Mode of delivery of information (§ 229.58)—Determine whether the bank employed one of the following in delivering its consumer-awareness disclosure(s) and expedited recredit notice(s):
 - U.S. mail
 - Any other means to which the recipient agreed to receive account information, including electronically
- Necessary preconditions (consumer must allege all of these)— (§§ 229.54(a)(1)– 229.54(a)(4))
 - Was the consumer's account charged for a substitute check that was provided to the consumer? (The consumer need not be in possession of the substitute check at the time of claim submission.)
 - Was the consumer's account not properly charged? (Alternatively, a consumer's account could be properly charged yet still give rise to a warranty claim, for example, in the case of a substitute check image that is illegible.)
 - Did the consumer suffer a resulting financial loss?
 - Was the production of the original check or a sufficient copy necessary to determine whether or not the consumer's claim was valid?
 - Procedural steps for consumer's claim
 - Did the consumer submit a timely claim? (§ 229.54(b)(1))
 - Did the claim contain a description of the claim, a statement and estimate of loss, the reason why the original check or a sufficient copy is necessary, and sufficient information for the bank to investigate? (§ 229.54(b)(2))
 - If the consumer attempted to make a claim but failed to provide all of the necessary information (as listed above), did the bank inform the consumer that the claim was incomplete and identify the information that was missing? (§ 229.54(b)(2)(D)(ii))
 - Was the claim submitted in a form acceptable to the bank? Did the bank compute the time for action accurately? (§ 229.54(b)(3))
4. Procedural steps for bank response—If the bank concluded that (1) all necessary prerequisites to the filing of a consumer claim existed and (2) the consumer followed the appropriate steps in filing the claim, verify that the bank provided the following appropriate response:

Claim deemed valid:

In the event of a valid consumer claim, did the bank
 - Recredit the account for the amount of the loss, up to the amount of the substitute check (plus interest, if applicable), no later than the end of the business day after the banking day on which the bank made its determination, (§ 229.54(c)(1)(i))
 - Draft a notice of recredit stating (1) the amount of the recredit and (2) the date on which funds will be available for withdrawal, and (§§ 229.54(e)(1)(i) and 229.54(e)(1)(ii))
 - Send the notice no later than the business day

Expedited Recredit for Consumers – §229.54

1. Determine whether any bank customer has raised a Check 21-related claim of loss since the last examination. If yes, review for the following. (At banks at which multiple Check 21-related claims have been raised and resolved, the examiner need only review a sampling sufficient to ensure that the bank's processing is consistent and in compliance with subpart D.)

after the banking day on which the bank recredit occurred? (§ 229.54(e)(1))

Claim deemed invalid:

In the event of an invalid consumer claim, determine whether the bank

- Sent a notice stating that the claim was invalid and included the original check or a sufficient copy, (§ 229.54(e)(2)(i))
- Demonstrated to the consumer that the substitute check was properly charged (or that the consumer's warranty claim was not valid) (§ 229.54(e)(2)(ii)), and
- Included the information or documents (in addition to the original check), if any, relied upon by the bank in making its determination (or a statement that the consumer may request such). (§ 229.54(e)(2)(iii))

Claim not resolved within initial ten days, pending further investigation:

If the bank could not resolve the claim before the end of the tenth business day after the banking day on which the bank received the claim, determine whether the bank

- Recredited the consumer's account for the amount of the loss, up to the lesser of the amount of the substitute check or $2,500 (plus interest, if applicable), (§ 229.54(c)(3)(i)(A))
- Drafted a notice of recredit stating (1) the amount of the recredit and (2) the date on which the funds would be available for withdrawal, (§§ 229.54(e)(1)(i) and 229.54(e)(1)(ii))
- Recredited the consumer's account for the remaining amount of the loss, if any, up to the amount of the substitute check (plus interest, if applicable), no later than the end of the forty-fifth calendar day after the banking day on which the bank received the claim, (§ 229.54(c)(3)(ii)) and
- Sent the notice of recredit no later than the business day after the banking day on which the bank recredit occurred. (§ 229.54(e)(1))

Claim resulting in reversal of recredit:

In some instances it may be necessary for a bank to reverse a recredit made previously to a consumer's account (plus any interest paid, if applicable). If such a circumstance has occurred, determine whether the bank

- Concluded that the consumer's claim was not valid (§ 229.54(c)(4)(i)) and
- Drafted a notice of reversal of recredit (§ 229.54(e)(3)), accompanied by the following:

- The original check or a sufficient copy, (§ 229.54(e)(2)(i))
 - Information or explanation to demonstrate to the consumer that the substitute check was properly charged (or that the consumer's warranty claim was not valid), (§ 229.54(e)(2)(ii))
 - Information or documents (in addition to the original check or a sufficient copy), if any, on which the bank relied in making its determination (or a statement that the consumer can request such), (§ 229.54(e)(2)(iii))
 - A description of the amount of the reversal, including both the amount of the recredit and the amount of interest paid on the recredited amount, if any, being reversed, and (§ 229.54(e)(3)(i))

If so, was the delay invoked because the bank had not yet determined the validity of the claim? Were the funds made available no later than the business day after the banking day on which the final determination was made or the forty-fifth calendar day after the bank received the claim, whichever occurred earlier? (§ 229.54(d)(2))

The FDIC along with the other FFIEC member agencies has developed a computer based training package that may be used to gain familiarity with the Check 21.

This “InfoBase” is accessible through the following link to the FFIEC website: <https://www.ffiec.gov/exam/check21/Check21FoundationDoc.htm>. It features a 30 minute audio slide presentation, frequently asked questions, and links to other resources. The slide presentation includes discussion about the examination procedures that the FDIC and other FFIEC agencies will use to evaluate compliance with Check 21.

Specific Types of Check Schedules

The flow charts on the following pages detail applicable availability schedules for deposits.

Case-By-Case Hold—The time frames listed in the flow charts are the maximum amounts of time that a bank may delay the availability of a deposit. Most banks have a policy of making funds from deposits available sooner than the time periods allowed by the regulation. These banks may, on a case-by-case basis, delay the availability of funds up to the time frames established by the regulation (those shown in the flow charts). When a bank imposes a case-by-case hold, a written notice including the following information must be given to the depositor:

1. The account number
2. The date of the deposit
3. The amount of the deposit that is being delayed; and

4. The day the funds will be available for withdrawal

Exception Hold—Another type of hold that may be placed is an exception hold. Section 229.13 discusses the types of exceptions that are allowed. When a bank places an exception hold, a written notice must be provided to the depositor (the notice is not required for the New Account Exception). The exception hold notice must contain the same information as the case-by-case hold notice as well as the reason the exception was invoked. If a bank invokes the Emergency Conditions Exception and the emergency is not over by the time periods set forth in the flow chart for that exception, then the additional time is added once the emergency has ended.

NOTE: Exception holds do not apply to cash deposits and electronic payments.

Cash Withdrawal Rule—The bank may extend by one business day the time that funds deposited in an account by certain checks are available for withdrawal by cash or similar means (including electronic payment, issuance of a cashier’s or teller’s check, etc.). The bank shall, however, make $450 of these funds available for withdrawal by cash or similar means not later than 5:00 p.m. on the business day on which the funds would have been available. The flow charts show that for many deposits, the first $225 of the deposit must be given next day availability while availability of the remaining portion of the deposit may be delayed. The $450 which must be made available in accordance with the cash withdrawal rule is in addition to the funds which must be made available in accordance with the first $225 rule. The instances where the cash withdrawal rule applies are denoted with an * on the flow charts.

TIP: If a branch makes its decision for holds and maintains its own records, such as in a decentralized structure, sampling may be done at the branch. If the decision to delay availability is either centralized or made at a regional processing center and records are maintained there, sampling for compliance may be made at that location.

Regulation CC

Appendix for Banks Located Outside the Continental United States

For deposits at offices located outside the continental United States, availability may be extended one day under certain strictly defined circumstances and for limited types of deposits. If a check is deposited at a bank office in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, Guam, or the U.S. Virgin Islands and the paying bank is not located in the same jurisdiction, a one-day extension is permitted for deposits other than those that must be available on the next business day. (Note: This extension applies only to check deposits at bank offices located outside the continental United States. Check deposits received at a bank inside the continental United States but drawn on a bank located outside the continental United States, such as one in Alaska or Hawaii, are not granted an extension.)

Electronic Fund Transfer Act

The Electronic Fund Transfer Act (EFTA) (15 U.S.C. 1693 et seq.) of 1978 is intended to protect individual consumers engaging in electronic fund transfers (EFTs) and remittance transfers. These services include:

- transfers through automated teller machines (ATMs);
- point-of-sale (POS) terminals;
- automated clearinghouse (ACH) systems;
- telephone bill-payment plans in which periodic or recurring transfers are contemplated;
- remote banking programs; and
- remittance transfers.

The EFTA is implemented through Regulation E, which includes official interpretations.

In 2009, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (Board) amended Regulation E to prohibit institutions from charging overdraft fees for ATM and one-time debit card transactions, unless the consumer opts in or affirmatively consents to the institution's overdraft services (74 Fed. Reg. 59033 (Nov. 17, 2009) and 75 Fed. Reg. 31665 (June 4, 2010)). The Board also amended Regulation E to implement provisions in the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 that restricted fees and expiration dates on gift cards, and to require that gift card terms be stated clearly (75 Fed. Reg. 16580 (April 1, 2010)).¹

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010 (Dodd-Frank Act) generally transferred rule-making authority under the EFTA from the Board to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB or Bureau).^{2 3} The Dodd-Frank Act also amended the EFTA and created a new system of consumer protections for remittance transfers sent by consumers in the United States to individuals and businesses in foreign countries. In December 2011, the CFPB restated the Board's implementing Regulation E at 12 CFR Part 1005 (76 Fed. Reg. 81020) (Dec. 27, 2011). In February 2012, the CFPB added subpart B (Requirements for Remittance Transfers) to Regulation E to implement the new remittance protections set forth in the Dodd-Frank Act (77 Fed. Reg. 6194) (Feb. 7, 2012).⁴ Regulation E has since been amended several times to address both substantive and technical issues. See 77 Fed. Reg. 40459 (July 10, 2012); 77 Fed. Reg. 50244 (Aug. 20, 2012); 78 Fed. Reg. 6025 (Jan. 29, 2013); (78 Fed. Reg. 30661) (May 22, 2013); 78 Fed. Reg. 49365 (Aug. 14, 2013); 79 Fed. Reg. 55970 (Sept. 18, 2014); 81 Fed. Reg. 70319 (Oct. 12, 2016); 81 Fed. Reg. 83934 (Nov. 22, 2016); 82 Fed. Reg. 18975 (Apr. 25, 2017); 83 Fed. Reg. 6364 (Feb. 13, 2018).

In March 2013, the CFPB issued a final rule implementing Public Law 112-216, which amended EFTA to remove the requirement, where applicable, for a disclosure "on or at" an ATM where an ATM fee is imposed (78 Fed. Reg. 18221) (March 26, 2013).

In November 2016, the CFPB issued a final rule amending Regulation E as well as Regulation Z, the regulation implementing the Truth in Lending Act (TILA), to extend protections to prepaid accounts. In Regulation E, tailored provisions governing disclosures, limited liability and error resolution, and periodic statements were adopted for prepaid accounts, along with new requirements regarding the posting and submission of prepaid account agreements. In addition, this rulemaking addressed regulation of credit features that may be offered under certain circumstances in conjunction with prepaid accounts. (See TILA discussion for Regulation Z provisions regarding the regulation of credit features offered in conjunction with prepaid accounts.) Together these amendments are known as the Prepaid Accounts Rule (81 Fed. Reg. 83934) (Nov. 22, 2016). Regulation E, along with Regulation Z, was subsequently amended to modify several aspects of the Prepaid Accounts Rule, including error resolution and limited liability protections on unverified prepaid accounts and to establish a new overall effective date of April 1, 2019⁵ (83 Fed. Reg. 6364) (Feb. 13, 2018). Information in this narrative is provided for Subpart A and Subpart B in the order listed below. Note that the order, particularly as it relates to subpart A, does not strictly follow the order of the regulatory text. For ease of use by the examiner, however, the examination procedures and checklist follow the order of the regulation.

Subpart A - General

- I. Scope and Key Definitions (12 CFR 1005.2, 1005.3, 1005.17, 1005.20)

¹ The Board also implemented a legislative extension of time for complying with the gift card disclosure requirements until January 31, 2011. 75 Fed. Reg. 50683 (August 17, 2010).

² Dodd-Frank Act §§ 1002(12)(C), 1024(b)-(c), and 1025(b)-(c); 12 U.S.C. 5481(12)(C), 5514(b)-(c), and 5515(b)-(c). Section 1029 of the Dodd-Frank Act generally excludes from this transfer of authority, subject to certain exceptions, any rule making authority over a motor vehicle dealer that is predominantly engaged in the sale and servicing of motor vehicles, the leasing and servicing of motor vehicles, or both. The transfer of authority also did not include Section 920 of EFTA, which concerns debit card interchange fees charged to merchants. Section 920 of EFTA is implemented by Board regulations at 12 CFR Part 235. Section 920 is not addressed here or in the accompanying examination procedures and checklist.

⁴ The amendment designated 12 CFR 1005.1 through 1005.20 as subpart A.

⁵ This was the second effective date delay for the Prepaid Accounts Rule. The first had extended the general effective date of the rule to April 1, 2018. 82 Fed. Reg. 18975 (Apr. 25, 2017).

I. Subpart A

Scope

Key Definitions (12 CFR 1005.2)

Access device is a card, code, or other means of access to a consumer's account or a combination of these used by the consumer to initiate EFTs. Access devices include debit cards, personal identification numbers (PINs), telephone transfer and telephone bill payment codes, and other means to initiate an EFT to or from a consumer account (12 CFR 1005.2(a)(1) and 12 CFR Part 1005, Supp. I, Comment 2(a)-1).

Access devices do not include either of the following:

- Magnetic tape or other devices used internally by a financial institution to initiate electronic transfers.
- A check or draft used to capture the MICR (Magnetic Ink Character Recognition) encoding or routing, account, and serial numbers to initiate a one-time ACH debit (Comments 2(a)-1 and 2(a)-2).

Accepted access device is an access device that a consumer:

- Requests and receives, signs, or uses (or authorizes another to use) to transfer money between accounts or to obtain money, property, or services.
- Requests to be validated even if it was issued on an unsolicited basis.
- Receives as a renewal or substitute for an accepted access device from either the financial institution that initially issued the device or a successor (12 CFR 1005.2(a)(2)).

Account includes the following:

- Checking, savings, or other consumer asset account held by a financial institution (directly or indirectly), including certain club accounts, established primarily for personal, family, or household purposes (12 CFR 1005.2(b)(1));
- A prepaid account (12 CFR 1005.2(b)(2)), including:
 - a payroll card account, which is an account established directly or indirectly through an employer, to which EFTs of the consumer's wages, salary, or other employee compensation (such as commissions), are made on a recurring basis⁶;
 - a government benefit account, which is an account established by a government agency for distributing government benefits to a consumer electronically⁷ (12 CFR 1005.15(a)(2));
 - an account that is marketed or labeled as "prepaid" and that is redeemable upon presentation at multiple, unaffiliated merchants for goods or services or usable at ATMs; or
 - an account (1) that is issued on a prepaid basis in a specified amount or not issued on a prepaid basis but capable of being loaded with funds thereafter, (2) whose primary function is to conduct transactions with multiple, unaffiliated

⁶ The payroll card account can be operated or managed by the employer, a third-party payroll processor, a depository institution, or any other person.

⁷ Electronic delivery can include through ATMs or POS terminals, but does not include an account for distributing needs-tested benefits in a program established under state or local law or administered by a state or local agency.

merchants for goods or services or at ATMs, or to conduct person-to-person transfers, and (3) that is not a checking account, share draft account, or negotiable order of withdrawal account.

An account does not include, for example:

- An account held by a financial institution under a bona fide trust agreement.
- An occasional or incidental credit balance in a credit plan.
- Profit-sharing and pension accounts established under a bona fide trust agreement.
- Escrow accounts such as for payments of real estate taxes, insurance premiums, or completion of repairs or improvements.
- Accounts for purchasing U.S. savings bonds (12 CFR 1005.2(b)(2) and Comment 2(b)-2).

A prepaid account does not include, for purposes of 12 CFR 1005.2(b)(3)(i)(C) and (D):

- An account that is loaded only with funds from a health savings account, flexible spending arrangement, medical savings account, health reimbursement arrangement, dependent care assistance program, or transit or parking reimbursement arrangement;
- An account that is directly or indirectly established through a third party and loaded only with qualified disaster relief payments;
- The person-to-person functionality of an account established by or through the United States government whose primary function is to conduct closed-loop transactions on U.S. military installations or vessels, or similar government facilities;
- A gift certificate as defined in 12 CFR 1005.20(a)(1) and (b); a store gift card as defined in 12 CFR 1005.20(a)(2) and (b); a loyalty, award, or promotional gift card as defined in 12 CFR 1005.20(a)(4), or that satisfies the criteria in 12 CFR 1005.20(a)(4)(i) and (ii) and is excluded from 12 CFR 1005.20 pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.20(b)(4); or a general-use prepaid card as defined in 12 CFR 1005.20(a)(3) and (b) that is both marketed and labeled as a gift card or gift certificate; or
- An account established for distributing needs-tested benefits in a program established under state or local law or administered by a state or local agency (12 CFR 1005.2(b)(3)(ii)).

A payroll account does not include a card used:

- Solely to disburse incentive-based payments (other than commissions when they represent the primary means through which a consumer is paid) that are unlikely to be a consumer's primary source of salary or other compensation;
- Solely to make disbursements unrelated to compensation, such as petty cash reimbursements or travel per diem payments; or
- In isolated instances to which an employer typically does not make recurring payments (Comment 2(b)-2).

Activity means any action that results in an increase or decrease of the funds underlying a certificate or card, other than the imposition of a fee, or an adjustment due to an error or a reversal of a prior transaction (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(7)).

ATM operator is any person that operates an ATM at which a consumer initiates an EFT or a balance inquiry and that does not hold the account to or from which the transfer is made or about which the inquiry is made (12 CFR 1005.16(a)).

Dormancy fee and inactivity fee mean a fee for non-use or inactivity on a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(5)).

Electronic check conversion (ECK) transactions are transactions where a check, draft, or similar paper instrument is used as a source of information to initiate a one-time electronic fund transfer from a consumer's account. The consumer must authorize the transfer (12 CFR 1005.3(b)(2)).

Electronic fund transfer (EFT) is a transfer of funds initiated through an electronic terminal, telephone, computer (including on-line banking) or magnetic tape for the purpose of ordering, instructing, or authorizing a financial institution to debit or credit a consumer's account. EFTs include, but are not limited to, point-of-sale (POS) transfers; automated teller machine (ATM) transfers; direct deposits or withdrawals of funds; transfers initiated by telephone; and transfers resulting from debit card transactions, whether or not initiated through an electronic terminal (12 CFR 1005.3(b)).

Electronic terminal is an electronic device, other than a telephone call by a consumer, through which a consumer may initiate an EFT. The term includes, but is not limited to, point-of-sale terminals, automated teller machines, and cash-dispensing machines (12 CFR 1005.2(h)).

Exclusions from gift card definition. The following cards, codes, or other devices are excluded and not subject to the substantive restrictions on imposing dormancy, inactivity, or service fees, or on expiration dates if they are: (12 CFR 1005.20(b))

- Useable solely for telephone services;

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- Reloadable and not marketed or labeled as a gift card or gift certificate. For purposes of this exception, the term “reloadable” includes a temporary non-reloadable card issued solely in connection with a reloadable card, code, or other device;
- A loyalty, award, or promotional gift card (except that these must disclose on the card or device itself, information such as the date the funds expire, fee information and a toll-free number) (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(4) and (c)(4));
- Not marketed to the general public;
- Issued in paper form only; or
- Redeemable solely for admission to events or venues at a particular location or group of affiliated locations, or to obtain goods or services in conjunction with admission to such events or venues, at the event or venue or at specific locations affiliated with and in geographic proximity to the event or venue.

General-use prepaid card is a card, code, or other device:

- Issued on a prepaid basis primarily for personal, family, or household purposes to a consumer in a specified amount, whether or not that amount may be increased or reloaded, in exchange for payment; and
- That is redeemable upon presentation at multiple, unaffiliated merchants for goods or services, or that may be usable at automated teller machines (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(3)).
See “Exclusions from gift card definition.”

Gift certificate is a card, code, or other device issued on a prepaid basis primarily for personal, family, or household purposes to a consumer in a specified amount that may not be increased or reloaded in exchange for payment and redeemable upon presentation at a single merchant or an affiliated group of merchants for goods or services (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(1)). See “Exclusions from gift card definition.”

Loyalty, award, or promotional gift card is a card, code, or other device (1) issued on a prepaid basis primarily for personal, family, or household purposes to a consumer in connection with a loyalty, award, or promotional program; (2) that is redeemable upon presentation at one or more merchants for goods or services, or usable at automated teller machines; and (3) that sets forth certain disclosures, including a statement indicating that the card, code, or other device is issued for loyalty, award, or promotional purposes (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(4)). See “Exclusions from gift card definition.”

Overdraft Services. A financial institution provides an overdraft service if it assesses a fee or charge for paying a transaction (including a check or other item) when the consumer has insufficient or unavailable funds in the account to pay the transaction. However, an overdraft service does not include payments made from the following (12 CFR 1005.17(a)):

- A line of credit subject to Regulation Z, such as a credit card account, a home equity line of credit, or an overdraft line of credit;
- A service that transfers funds from another account held individually or jointly by the consumer, such as a savings account;
- A line of credit or other transaction in securities or commodities accounts in which credit is extended by a broker-dealer registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) or the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC). (as provided in 12 CFR 1026.3(d)); or
- A covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card as defined in Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.61, or credit extended through a negative balance on the asset feature of the prepaid account that meets the conditions of 12 CFR 1026.61(a)(4).

Preauthorized electronic fund transfer is an EFT authorized in advance to recur at substantially regular intervals (12 CFR 1005.2(k)).

Service fee means a periodic fee for holding or use of a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card. A periodic fee includes any fee that may be imposed on a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card from time to time for holding or using the certificate or card (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(6)). For example, a service fee may include a monthly maintenance fee, a transaction fee, an ATM fee, a reload fee, a foreign currency transaction fee, or a balance inquiry fee, whether or not the fee is waived for a certain period of time or is only imposed after a certain period of time. However, a service fee does not include a one-time fee or a fee that is unlikely to be imposed more than once while the underlying funds are still valid, such as an initial issuance fee, a cash-out fee, a supplemental card fee, or a lost or stolen certificate or card replacement fee (Comment 20(a)(6)-1).

State means any state, territory, or possession of the United States; the District of Columbia; the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; or any of their political subdivisions (12 CFR 1005.2(l)).

Store gift card is a card, code, or other device issued on a prepaid basis primarily for personal, family, or household purposes to a consumer in a specified amount, whether or not that amount may be increased or reloaded, in exchange for payment, and redeemable upon presentation at a single merchant or an affiliated group of merchants for goods or services (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(2)). See “Exclusions from gift card definition.”

Unauthorized electronic fund transfer is an EFT from a consumer’s account initiated by a person other than the consumer without actual authority to initiate the transfer and from which the consumer receives no benefit. This does not include an EFT initiated in any of the following ways:

- By a person who was furnished the access device to the consumer’s account by the consumer, unless the consumer has notified the financial institution that transfers by that person are no longer authorized;
- With fraudulent intent by the consumer or any person acting in concert with the consumer; or
- By the financial institution or its employee (12 CFR 1005.2(m)).

Coverage - 12 CFR 1005.3

Subpart A of Regulation E applies to any electronic fund transfer (EFT) that authorizes a financial institution to debit or credit a consumer’s account. The requirements of subpart A of Regulation E apply only to accounts for which there is an agreement for EFT services to or from the account between (i) the consumer and the financial institution or (ii) the consumer and a third party, when the account-holding financial institution has received notice of the agreement and the fund transfers have begun (Comment 3(a)-1).

Regulation E applies to all persons, including offices of foreign financial institutions in the United States, that offer EFT services to residents of any state and it covers any account located in the United States through which EFTs are offered to a resident of a state, no matter where a particular transfer occurs or where the financial institution is chartered (Comment 3(a)-3). Regulation E does not apply to a foreign branch of a U.S. financial institution unless the EFT services are offered in connection with an account in a state, as defined in 12 CFR 1005.2(l) (Comment 3(a)-3).

Exclusions from Coverage.

12 CFR 1005.3(c) describes transfers that are not EFTs and are therefore not covered by the EFTA and Regulation E:

- Transfers of funds originated by check, draft, or similar paper instrument;
- Check guarantee or authorization services that do not directly result in a debit or credit to a consumer’s account;
- Any transfer of funds for a consumer within a system that is used primarily to transfer funds between financial institutions or businesses, e.g., Fedwire or other similar network;

- Any transfer of funds which has as its primary purpose the purchase or sale of securities or commodities regulated by the SEC or the CFTC, purchased or sold through a broker-dealer regulated by the SEC or through a futures commission merchant regulated by the CFTC, or held in book-entry form by a Federal Reserve Bank or federal agency;
- Intra-institutional automatic transfers under an agreement between a consumer and a financial institution;
- Transfers initiated by telephone between a consumer and a financial institution provided the transfer is not a function of a written plan contemplating periodic or recurring transfers. A written statement available to the public, such as a brochure, that describes a service allowing a consumer to initiate transfers by telephone constitutes a written plan; or
- Preauthorized transfers to or from accounts at financial institutions with assets of less than $100 million on the preceding December 31. Such preauthorized transfers, however, remain subject to the compulsory use prohibition under Section 913 of the EFTA and 12 CFR 1005.10(e), as well as the civil and criminal liability provisions of Sections 915 and 916 of the EFTA. A small financial institution that provides EFT services besides preauthorized transfers must comply with the requirements of subpart A for those other services (Comment 3(c)(7)-1). For example, a small financial institution that offers ATM services must comply with subpart A concerning the issuance of debit cards, terminal receipts, periodic statements, and other requirements.

Electronic Check Conversion (ECK) and Collection of Returned-Item Fees.

Subpart A covers electronic check conversion (ECK) transactions. In an ECK transaction, a consumer provides a check to a payee and information from the check is used to initiate a one-time EFT from the consumer’s account. Although transfers originated by checks are not covered by subpart A, an ECK is treated as an EFT and not a payment originated by check. Payees must obtain the consumer’s authorization for each ECK transaction. A consumer authorizes a one-time EFT for an ECK transaction when the consumer receives notice that the transaction will or may be processed as an EFT and goes forward with the underlying transaction⁸ (12 CFR 1005.3(b)(2)(i) and (ii) and Comment 3(b)(2)-3).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

If a payee re-presents electronically a check that has been returned unpaid, the transaction is not an EFT, and subpart A does not apply because the transaction originated by check (Comment 3(c)(1)-1).

However, subpart A applies to a fee collected electronically from a consumer's account for a check or EFT returned unpaid. A consumer authorizes a one-time EFT from the consumer's account to pay the fee for the returned item or transfer if the person collecting the fee provides notice to the consumer stating the amount of the fee and that the person may electronically collect the fee, and the consumer goes forward with the underlying transaction⁹ (12 CFR 1005.3(b)(3)). These authorization requirements do not apply to fees imposed by the account-holding financial institution for returning the check or EFT or paying the amount of an overdraft (Comment 3(b)(3)-1).

II. Disclosures

Disclosures Generally - 12 CFR 1005.4

Required disclosures must be clear and readily understandable, in writing, and in a form the consumer may keep. The required disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form, if the consumer affirmatively consents after receiving a notice that complies with the E-Sign Act (12 CFR 1005.4(a)(1)).

Disclosures may be made in a language other than English, if the disclosures are made available in English upon the consumer's request (12 CFR 1005.4(a)(2)).

A financial institution has the option of disclosing additional information and combining disclosures required by other laws (for example, Truth in Lending disclosures) with Regulation E disclosures (12 CFR 1005.4(b)).

A financial institution may combine required disclosures into a single statement if a consumer holds two or more accounts at the financial institution. Thus, a single periodic statement or error resolution notice is sufficient for multiple accounts. In addition, it is only necessary for a financial institution to provide one set of disclosures for a joint account (12 CFR 1005.4(c)(1) and (2)).

⁹ For POS transactions, the notice must be posted in a prominent and conspicuous location and a copy of the notice must either be provided to the consumer at the time of the transaction or mailed to the consumer's address as soon as reasonably practicable after the person initiates the EFT to collect the fee (12 CFR 1005.3(b)(3)).

Two or more financial institutions that jointly provide EFT services may contract among themselves to meet the requirements that the regulation imposes on any or all of them. When making initial disclosures (see 12 CFR 1005.7) and disclosures of a change in terms or an error resolution notice (see 12 CFR 1005.8), a financial institution in a shared system only needs to make disclosures that are within its knowledge and apply to its relationship with the consumer for whom it holds an account (12 CFR 1005.4(d)).

Initial Disclosure of Terms and Conditions - 12 CFR 1005.7

Financial institutions must provide initial disclosures of the terms and conditions of EFT services before the first EFT is made or at the time the consumer contracts for an EFT service. The disclosures must include a summary of various consumer rights under the regulation, including the consumer's liability for unauthorized EFTs, the types of EFTs the consumer may make, limits on the frequency or dollar amount, fees charged by the financial institution, and the error-resolution procedures. Appendix A to Part 1005 provides model clauses that financial institutions may use to provide the disclosures (12 CFR 1005.7(a) and (b)).

Timing of Disclosures

Financial institutions must make the required disclosures at the time a consumer contracts for an electronic fund transfer service or before the first electronic fund transfer is made involving the consumer's account (12 CFR 1005.7(a)).

Disclosures given by a financial institution earlier than the regulation requires (for example, when the consumer opens a checking account) need not be repeated when the consumer later authorizes an electronic check conversion or agrees with a third party to initiate preauthorized transfers to or from the consumer's account, unless the terms and conditions differ from the previously disclosed term. This interpretation also applies to any notice provided about one-time EFTs from a consumer's account initiated using information from the consumer's check. On the other hand, if an agreement for EFT services to be provided by an account-holding financial institution is directly between the consumer and the account-holding financial institution, disclosures must be given in close proximity to the event requiring disclosure, for example, when the consumer contracts for a new service (Comment 7(a)-1).

Where a consumer authorizes a third party to debit or credit the consumer's account, an account-holding financial institution that has not received advance notice of the transfer or transfers must provide the required disclosures as soon as reasonably possible after the first debit or credit is made, unless the financial institution has previously given the disclosures (Comment 7(a)-2).

If a consumer opens a new account permitting EFTs at a financial institution, and the consumer has already received subpart A disclosures for another account at that financial institution, the financial institution need only disclose terms and conditions that differ from those previously given (Comment 7(a)-3).

If a financial institution joins an interchange or shared network system (which provides access to terminals operated by other financial institutions), disclosures are required for additional EFT services not previously available to consumers if the terms and conditions differ from those previously disclosed (Comment 7(a)-4).

A financial institution may provide disclosures covering all EFT services that it offers, even if some consumers have not arranged to use all services (Comment 7(a)-5).

Addition of EFT Services

A financial institution must make disclosures for any new EFT service added to a consumer's account if the terms and conditions are different from those described in the initial disclosures. ECK transactions may be a new type of transfer requiring new disclosures (See Appendix A-2 and Comment 7\(c\)-1).

Content of Disclosures

12 CFR 1005.7(b) requires a financial institution to provide the following disclosures as they apply:

- Liability of consumers for unauthorized electronic fund transfers. The financial institution must include a summary of the consumer's liability (under 12 CFR 1005.6, state law, or other applicable law or agreement) for unauthorized transfers (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(1)). A financial institution does not need to provide the liability disclosures if it imposes no liability. If it later decides to impose liability, it must first provide the disclosures (Comment 7(b)(1)-1). The financial institution can choose to include advice on promptly reporting unauthorized transfers or the loss or theft of the access device (Comment 7(b)(1)-3).
- Telephone number and address. A financial institution must provide a specific telephone number and address, on or with the disclosure statement, for reporting a lost or stolen access device or a possible unauthorized transfer (Comment 7(b)(2)-2). Except for the telephone number and address for reporting a lost or stolen access device or a possible unauthorized transfer, the disclosure may insert a reference to a telephone number that is readily available to the consumer, such as "Call your branch office. The number is shown on your periodic statement" (Comment 7(b)(2)-2).

- Business days. The financial institution's business days (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(3)).
NOTE: The term "day" as used in Regulation E refers to calendar days unless specified as a "business day" (12 CFR 1005.2(d)).
- Types of transfers; limitations on frequency or dollar amount. Limitations on the frequency and dollar amount of transfers generally must be disclosed in detail (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(4)). If the confidentiality of certain details is essential to the security of an account or system, these details may be withheld (but the fact that limitations exist must still be disclosed).¹⁰ A limitation on account activity that restricts the consumer's ability to make EFTs must be disclosed even if the restriction also applies to transfers made by non-electronic means.¹¹ Financial institutions are not required to list preauthorized transfers among the types of transfers that a consumer can make (Comment 7(b)(4)-3). Financial institutions must disclose the fact that one-time EFTs initiated using information from a consumer's check are among the types of transfers that a consumer can make (See Appendix A-2 and Comment 7\(b\)\(4\)-4).
- Fees. A financial institution must disclose all fees for EFTs or for the right to make EFTs (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(5)). Other fees, for example, minimum-balance fees, stop-payment fees, account overdrafts, or ATM inquiry fees, may, but need not, be disclosed under Regulation E (see Regulation DD, 12 CFR Part 1030) and (Comment 7(b)(5)-1). A per-item fee for EFTs must be disclosed even if the same fee is imposed on non-electronic transfers. If a per-item fee is imposed only under certain conditions, such as when the transactions in the cycle exceed a certain number, those conditions must be disclosed. Itemization of the various fees may be on the disclosure statement or on an accompanying document referenced in the statement (Comment 7(b)(5)-2).

A financial institution must disclose that networks used to complete the EFT as well as an ATM operator, may charge a fee for an EFT or for balance inquiries (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(11)).

¹⁰ For example, if a financial institution limits cash ATM withdrawals to $100 per day, the financial institution may disclose that daily withdrawal limitations apply and need not disclose that the limitations may not always be in force (such as during periods when its ATMs are offline) (Comment 7(b)(4)-1).

¹¹ For example, Regulation D (12 CFR 1004) restricts the number of payments to third parties that may be made from a money market deposit account; a financial institution that does not execute fund transfers in excess of those limits must disclose the restriction as a limitation on the frequency of EFTs (Comment 7(b)(4)-2).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- Documentation. A summary of the consumer's right to receipts and periodic statements, as provided in 12 CFR 1005.9, and notices regarding preauthorized transfers as provided in 12 CFR 1005.10(a) and 1005.10(d) (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(6)).
- Stop payment. A summary of the consumer's right to stop payment of a preauthorized electronic fund transfer and the procedure for placing a stop-payment order, as provided in 12 CFR 1005.10(c) and 12 CFR 1005.7(b)(7).
- Liability of institution. A summary of the financial institution's liability to the consumer under Section 910 of the EFTA for failure to make or to stop certain transfers (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(8)).
- Confidentiality. The circumstances under which, in the ordinary course of business, the financial institution may provide information concerning the consumer's account to third parties (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(9)). A financial institution must describe the circumstances under which any information relating to an account to or from which EFTs are permitted will be made available to third parties, not just information concerning those EFTs. Third parties include other subsidiaries of the same holding company (Comment 7(b)(9)-1).
- Error Resolution. The error-resolution notice must be substantially similar to Model Form A-3 in Appendix A of Part 1005. A financial institution may use different wording so long as the substance of the notice remains the same, may delete inapplicable provisions (for example, the requirement for written confirmation of an oral notification), and may substitute substantive state law requirements affording greater consumer protection than Regulation E (Comment 7(b)(10)-1). To take advantage of the longer time periods for resolving errors under 12 CFR 1005.11(c)(3) (for new accounts as defined in Regulation CC, transfers initiated outside the United States, or transfers resulting from POS debit card transactions), a financial institution must have disclosed these longer time periods. Similarly, a financial institution relying on the exception from provisional crediting in 12 CFR 1005.11(c)(2) for accounts relating to extensions of credit by securities brokers and dealers (Regulation T, 12 CFR Part 220) must disclose accordingly (Comment 7(b)(10)-2).
- ATM Fees. A notice that a fee may be imposed by an automated teller machine operator as defined in 12 CFR 1005.16(a), when the consumer initiates an electronic fund transfer or makes a balance inquiry, and by any network used to complete the transaction (12 CFR 1005.7(b)(11)).

Change in Terms; Error Resolution Notice - 12 CFR 1005.8

If a financial institution contemplates a change in terms, it must mail or deliver a written or electronic notice to the consumer at least 21 days before the effective date of any change in a term or condition required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1005.7(b) if the change would result in any of the following:

- Increased fees or charges;
- Increased liability for the consumer;
- Fewer types of available EFTs; or
- Stricter limitations on the frequency or dollar amounts of transfers (12 CFR 1005.8(a)(1)).

If an immediate change in terms or conditions is necessary to maintain or restore the security of an EFT system or account, the financial institution does not need to give prior notice. However, if the change is to be permanent, the financial institution must provide notice in writing of the change to the consumer on or with the next regularly scheduled periodic statement or within 30 days, unless disclosures would jeopardize the security of the system or account (12 CFR 1005.8(a)(2)).

For accounts to or from which EFTs can be made, the financial institution must mail, deliver, or provide electronically to the consumer at least once each calendar year, the error resolution notice in 12 CFR 1005 Appendix A—Model Form A-3, or one substantially similar. Alternatively, the financial institution may include an abbreviated error resolution notice substantially similar to the notice set out in Appendix A (Model Form A-3) with each periodic statement (12 CFR 1005.8(b)).

Disclosures at Automated Teller Machines - 12 CFR 1005.16

An ATM operator that charges a fee is required to provide notice that a fee will be imposed and disclose the amount of the fee. The notice must be provided either by showing it on the screen of the automated teller machine or on paper before the consumer is committed to paying a fee (12 CFR 1005.16(b) and (c)).

The "clear and readily understandable standard" under 12 CFR 1005.4(a) applies to the content of the notice. The requirement that the notice be in a retainable format only applies to printed notices (not those on the ATM screen) (12 CFR 1005.16(c)).

The fee may be imposed by the ATM operator only if: (1) the consumer is provided the required notice, and (2) the consumer elects to continue the transaction or inquiry after receiving such notice (12 CFR 1005.16(d)).

These fee disclosures are not required where a network owner is not charging a fee directly to the consumer (i.e., some network owners charge an interchange fee to financial institutions whose customers use the network) (Comment 7(b)(5)-3). If the network practices change such that the network charges the consumer directly, these fee disclosure requirements would apply to the network (12 CFR 1005.7(c)).

Overdraft Service Disclosures - 12 CFR 1005.17

Disclosure requirements for overdraft services are addressed in Section III of this document.

Prepaid Account Disclosures - 12 CFR 1005.15 and 12 CFR 1005.18

Disclosure requirements specific to prepaid accounts are addressed in Section VIII of this document.

Gift Card Disclosures - 12 CFR 1005.20(c)

Disclosures must be clear and conspicuous and generally in a written or electronic form (except for certain pre-purchase disclosures, which may be given orally) that the consumer may retain. The fees and terms and conditions of expiration that are required to be disclosed prior to purchase may not be changed after purchase.

A number of disclosures must be made on the actual card. Making such disclosures in an accompanying terms and conditions document, on packaging surrounding a certificate or card, or on a sticker or other label affixed to the certificate or card does not constitute a disclosure on the certificate or card (12 CFR 1005.20(c)(4)). Those disclosures include the following:

- The existence, amount, and frequency of any dormancy, inactivity, or service fee;
- The expiration date for the underlying funds (or the fact that the funds do not expire);
- A toll-free telephone number and (if any) a website that the consumer may use to obtain a replacement certificate or card if the certificate or card expires while underlying funds are still available;
- A statement that the certificate or card expires, but the underlying funds do not expire or expire later than the certificate or card, as well as a statement that the consumer may contact the issuer for a replacement card;¹² and

- A toll-free telephone number and (if any) a website that the consumer may use to obtain information about fees (12 CFR 1005.20(e)(3)).

Additional Disclosure Requirements Regarding Fees

In addition to the disclosure requirements related to dormancy, inactivity, or service fees, all other fees must be disclosed as well. These disclosures must be provided on or with the certificate or card and disclosed prior to purchase. The certificate or card must also disclose a toll-free telephone number and website, if one is maintained, that a consumer may use to obtain fee information or replacement certificates or cards (12 CFR 1005.20(f)).

Disclosure Requirements for Loyalty, Award, or Promotional Gift Cards (12 CFR 1005.20(a)(4))

To qualify for the exclusion for loyalty, award, or promotional gift cards, the following must be disclosed:

- A statement indicating that the card, code, or other device is issued for loyalty, award, or promotional purposes, which must be included on the front of the card, code, or other device;
- The expiration date for the underlying funds, which must be included on the front of the card, code, or other device;
- The amount of any fees that may be imposed in connection with the card, code, or other device, and the conditions under which they may be imposed, which must be provided on or with the card, code, or other device; and
- A toll-free telephone number and, if one is maintained, a website, that a consumer may use to obtain fee information, which must be included on the card, code, or other device.

Amendments to Regulation E were issued on August 11, 2010. The amendments implemented legislation that modified the effective date of certain disclosure and card expiration requirements in the gift card provisions of the Credit Card Accountability Responsibility and Disclosure Act of 2009 for cards produced prior to April 1, 2010.

The disclosures and card expiration requirements are:

1. Disclosures required to be made prior to purchase (see 12 CFR 1005.20(c)(3));
2. Disclosures that must be stated on the certificate or card regarding the fees and expiration dates (see 12 CFR 1005.20(d)(2), (e)(1) & (e)(3)); and ¹² This requirement does not apply to non-reloadable certificates or cards that expire seven years or more after the date of manufacture.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

3. Disclosures that may be provided on or with the certificate or card (see 12 CFR 1005.20(f)).

Gift cards must comply with all other provisions of the gift card rule.

Issuers must make the following disclosures on in-store signs, messages during customer service calls, websites, and general advertising:

- The funds underlying the gift card do not expire;
- Consumers have the right to receive a free replacement card, along with the packaging and materials that typically accompany the gift card; and
- The issuer will charge dormancy, inactivity, or service fees only if the fee is permitted by the gift card rule.

The issuer was required to make the disclosures via customer service call center and website until January 31, 2013. See 12 CFR 1005.20(h).

III. Electronic Transaction Overdraft Services Opt In - 12 CFR 1005.17

In recent years overdraft protection services have been extended to cover overdrafts resulting from non-check transactions, including ATM withdrawals, debit card transactions at point of sale, on-line transactions, preauthorized transfers, and ACH transactions. Generally, institutions charge a flat fee each time an overdraft is paid, although some institutions have a tiered fee structure and charge higher fees based on the amount of the negative balance at the end of the day or as the number of overdrafts increases. Institutions commonly charge the same amount for paying check and ACH overdrafts as they would if they returned the item unpaid. Some institutions also impose a fee for each day the account remains overdrawn. For debit card overdrafts, the dollar amount of the fee and multiple assessments can exceed the dollar amount of the overdrafts.

In 2005, the agencies¹³ issued guidance concerning the marketing, disclosure, and implementation of overdraft programs. The guidance also covers safety and soundness considerations, and establishes a number of best practices financial institutions should incorporate into their overdraft programs. The 2009 revisions to Regulation E supersede portions of the guidance related to ATM and one-time debit card overdraft transactions. However, in addition to the revised Regulation E requirements, institutions should incorporate their agency's overdraft guidance into their overdraft protection programs.

12 CFR 1005.17 was added in the 2009 revision to Regulation E.¹⁴ It provides consumers with a choice to opt into their institution's overdraft protection program and be charged a fee for overdrafts for ATM and one-time debit card transactions. It also requires disclosure of the fees and terms associated with the institution's overdraft service. Before an institution may assess overdraft fees, the consumer must opt in, or affirmatively consent, to the overdraft service for ATM and one-time debit card transactions, and the consumer has an ongoing right to revoke consent. Institutions may not require an opt in for ATM and one-time debit transactions as a condition to the payment of overdrafts for checks and other transactions. The account terms, conditions and features must be the same for consumers who opt in and for those who do not.

Opt-In Requirement for Overdraft Services

The financial institution may assess a fee for paying an ATM or one-time debit card transaction pursuant to an overdraft service only if it has met the following requirements:

- The financial institution has provided the consumer with a written (or, if the consumer agrees, electronic) notice, segregated from all other information, describing the overdraft service;
- The financial institution has provided a reasonable opportunity for the consumer to affirmatively consent (opt in) to the overdraft service for ATM and one-time debit card transactions;
- The financial institution has obtained the consumer's affirmative consent (opt in) for ATM and one-time debit card transactions; and
- The financial institution has mailed or delivered written (or, if the consumer agrees, electronic) confirmation of the consent, including a statement informing the consumer of the right to revoke consent. An institution complies if it adopts reasonable procedures to ensure that it assesses overdraft fees only for transactions paid after mailing or delivering the confirmation to the consumer (12 CFR 1005.17(b)(1); Comment 17(b)-7).

¹³ The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and National Credit Union Administration, collectively issued joint guidance concerning a service offered by insured depository institutions commonly referred to as "bounced-check protection" or "overdraft protection." This credit service is sometimes offered on both consumer and small business transaction accounts as an alternative to traditional means of covering overdrafts. Joint Guidance on Overdraft Protection Programs (February 18, 2005).

Fee Prohibitions

As a general rule, an institution may not charge overdraft fees for paying an ATM or one-time debit card transaction unless the consumer has opted in. The fee prohibition also applies to an institution that has a policy and practice of not paying an ATM or one-time debit card overdraft when it reasonably believes at the time of the authorization request that the consumer does not have sufficient funds available to pay the transaction, although the institution does not have to comply with the notice and opt-in requirements (Comment 17(b)-1(iv)).

Lack of consent does not prohibit the financial institution from paying ATM or one-time debit card overdrafts. However, the financial institution may charge a fee only if the consumer has consented to the institution's overdraft service for ATM and one-time debit card transactions (Comment 17(b)-2). Conversely, the financial institution is not required to pay an ATM or one-time debit card overdraft even if the consumer has consented to pay a fee (Comment 17(b)-3).

For a consumer who has not opted in, if a fee or charge is based on the amount of the outstanding negative balance, an institution may not charge a fee for a negative balance that is solely attributable to an ATM or one-time debit card transaction. However, an institution may assess a fee if the negative balance is attributable in whole or in part to a check, ACH transaction or other type of transaction not subject to the prohibition on assessing overdraft fees (Comment 17(b)-8).

For a consumer who has not opted in, the institution may not assess daily or sustained negative balance, overdraft, or similar fees for a negative balance, based solely on ATM or one-time debit card transactions. However, if the negative balance is attributable in part to a check, ACH transaction or other type of transaction not subject to the prohibition on assessing overdraft fees, the institution may charge a daily or sustained overdraft or similar fee, even if the consumer has not opted in. The date the fee may be charged is based on the date on which the check, ACH, or other type of transaction is paid into overdraft (Comment 17(b)-9).

Content and Format of Notice.

The notice describing the overdraft service must be substantially similar to Model Form A-9. The notice must include all of the following items, and may not contain any other information not expressly specified or otherwise permitted:

- A brief description of the overdraft service and the types of transactions for which the financial institution may charge a fee;

- The dollar amount of any fee that may be charged for an ATM or one-time debit card transaction, including any daily or other overdraft fees;¹⁵
- The maximum number of fees that may be charged per day, or, if applicable, that there is no limit;
- An explanation of the right to affirmatively consent to the overdraft service, including the methods by which the consumer may consent;¹⁶ and
- The availability of a line of credit or a service that transfers funds from another account to cover overdrafts, if the financial institution offers those alternatives¹⁷ (12 CFR 1005.17(d)(1) through (d)(5)).

The financial institution also may (but is not required to) include the following information, to the extent applicable:

- Disclosure of the right to opt into, or out of, the payment of overdrafts for other types of transactions (e.g., checks, ACH transactions, or automatic bill payments) and a means for the consumer to exercise such choices;
- Disclosure of the financial institution's returned item fee, as well as the fact that merchants may charge additional fees; and
- Disclosure of the right to revoke consent (12 CFR 1005.17(d)(6)).

Reasonable opportunity to consent.

The financial institution must provide a reasonable opportunity to consent. Reasonable methods of consent include mail - if the financial institution provides a form for the consumer to fill out and mail, telephone - if the financial institution provides a readily-available telephone line that the consumer may call, electronic means - if the financial institution provides a form that can be accessed and processed at its website, where the consumer may click on a box to consent and click on a button to affirm consent, or in person - if the ¹⁵ If the amount of the fee may vary based on the number of times the consumer has overdrawn the account, the amount of the overdraft, or other factors, the financial institution must disclose the maximum fee.

¹⁷ If the institution offers both a line of credit subject to Regulation Z (12 CFR Part 1026) and a service that transfers funds from another account of the consumer held at the institution to cover overdrafts, the institution must state in its opt-in notice that both alternative plans are offered. If the institution offers one, but not the other, it must state in its opt-in notice the alternative plan that it offers. If the institution does not offer either plan, it should omit the reference to the alternative plans (Comment 17(d)-5). If the financial institution offers additional alternatives for paying overdrafts, it may (but is not required to) disclose those alternatives (12 CFR 1005.17(d)(5)).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

financial institution provides a form for the consumer to complete and present at a branch or office (Comment 17(b)-4). The financial institution may provide the opportunity to consent and require the consumer to make a choice as a step to opening an account (Comment 17(b)-5).

Affirmative consent is necessary

An important component of the opt-in feature is that the consumer's affirmative consent is necessary before the institution may charge overdraft fees for paying an ATM or one-time debit card transaction (12 CFR 1005.17(b)(1)(iii)). The consent must be separate from other consents or acknowledgments (including a consent to receive disclosures electronically). Check boxes are allowed, but the check box and the consumer's signature may only apply to the consumer's consent to opt in. Preprinted disclosures about the overdraft service provided with a signature card or contract do not constitute affirmative consent (Comment 17(b)-6).

Confirmation and consumer's right to revoke

Not only must the consumer affirmatively consent, but the institution must mail or deliver to the consumer a written confirmation (or electronic, if the consumer agrees) that the consumer has consented, along with a statement informing the consumer of the right to revoke the consent at any time (12 CFR 1005.17(b)(1)(iv) and Comment 17(b)-7). An institution complies with the confirmation requirement if it has adopted reasonable procedures to ensure that overdraft fees are assessed only on transactions paid after the confirmation is mailed or delivered to the consumer (Comment 17(b)-7)).

Assessing fees

For consumers who have not opted in, institutions are prohibited from charging overdraft fees for paying those transactions. This prohibition applies to daily or sustained overdraft, negative balance, or similar fees. However, the rule does not prohibit an institution from assessing these fees if the negative balance is attributable, in whole or part, to a check, ACH or other transaction not subject to the fee prohibition. However, if the negative balance is attributable in part to an ATM transaction, for example, and in part to a check, a fee may be assessed based on the date when the check is paid into overdraft, not the date of the ATM or one-time debit transaction (Comment 17(b)-9).

Conditioning payment of other overdrafts

The financial institution may not condition the payment of other types of overdraft transactions on the consumer's affirmative consent, and the financial institution may not decline to pay other types of overdraft transactions because the consumer has not affirmatively consented to the payment of ATM and one-time debit card overdrafts (12 CFR 1005.17(b)(2)). In other words, the financial institution may not use different criteria for paying other types of overdraft transactions for consumers who have consented and for consumers who have not consented (Comment 17(b)(2)-1).

Same account terms, conditions, and features

In addition, the financial institution must provide to consumers who do not affirmatively consent the same account terms, conditions, and features (except the payment of ATM and one-time debit overdrafts) that are available to consumers who do affirmatively consent (12 CFR 1005.17(b)(3)). That requirement includes, but is not limited to:

- Interest rates paid;
- Fees assessed;
- The type of ATM or debit card provided to the depositor;¹⁸
- Minimum balance requirements; and
- On-line bill payment services (Comment 17(b)(3)-1).

Joint Accounts

Any one account holder may consent, or revoke consent, for payment of ATM or one-time debit card transactions from a joint account (12 CFR 1005.17(e)).

Continuing Right to Consent or Revoke

A consumer may consent to the payment of ATM and one-time debit card overdrafts at any time. A consumer may also revoke consent at any time. The financial institution must implement a revocation as soon as reasonably practicable (12 CFR 1005.17(f)). The financial institution need not waive overdraft fees assessed before it implements the consumer's revocation (Comment 17(f)-1).

Duration of Consent

Consent remains effective until the consumer revokes it, unless the financial institution terminates the overdraft service (12 CFR 1005.17(g)). The financial institution may terminate the overdraft service, for example, if the consumer makes excessive use of the service (Comment 17(g)-1).

Effective Date

The overdraft services rule became effective on January 19, 2010, and compliance became mandatory on July 1, 2010. For accounts opened on or after July 1, 2010, the financial institution must obtain consent before charging a fee for payment of any ATM or one-time debit overdraft. However, for accounts opened before July 1, 2010, the financial institution may not charge a fee for paying any ATM or one-time debit overdraft on or after August 15, 2010, unless it has obtained consent (See 12 CFR 1005.17(c)).

IV. Issuance of Access Devices — 12 CFR 1005.5 and 1005.18

In general, a financial institution may issue an access device to a consumer only in the following cases:

- The consumer requested it in writing or orally.¹⁹
- It is a renewal of, or a substitute for, an accepted access device (as defined in 12 CFR 1005.2(a)). See 12 CFR 1005.5(a).

Only one renewal or substitute device may replace a previously issued device. A financial institution may provide additional devices at the time it issues the renewal or substitute access device provided the institution complies with the requirements for issuing unsolicited access devices for the additional devices (Comments 5(a)(2)-1 and 5(b)-5).

A financial institution may issue an unsolicited access device only if the access device meets all of the following criteria. The access device is:

- Not validated - that is, it cannot be used to initiate an EFT.
- Accompanied by the explanation that it is not validated and instructions on how the consumer may dispose of it if the consumer does not wish to validate it.
- Accompanied by a complete disclosure, in accordance with 12 CFR 1005.7, of the consumer's rights and liabilities that will apply if the access device is validated.
- Validated only upon oral or written request from the consumer and after a verification of the consumer's identity by some reasonable means (12 CFR 1005.5(b)).

The financial institution may use any reasonable means of verifying the consumer's identity, but the consumer is not liable for any unauthorized transfers if an imposter succeeds in validating the access device (Comment 5(b)-4).

¹⁹ For a joint account, a financial institution may issue an access device to each account holder for whom the requesting holder specifically requests an access device (Comment 5(a)(1)-1).

Prepaid Account Access Devices

Consistent with 12 CFR 1005.5(a), and except as provided, as applicable, in 12 CFR 1005.5(b), a financial institution may issue an access device only in response to an oral or written request for the device or as a renewal or substitute for an accepted access device. A consumer is deemed to request an access device for a payroll card account when the consumer chooses to receive salary or other compensation through a payroll card account, or for a government benefit account when the consumer applies for government benefits that an agency disburses or will disburse by means of an EFT. A consumer is deemed to request an access device for a prepaid account when, for example, the consumer acquires a prepaid account offered for sale at a retail location or applies for a prepaid account by telephone or online. If an access device for a prepaid account is provided on an unsolicited basis where the prepaid account is used for disbursing funds to a consumer, and the financial institution or third party making the disbursement does not offer any alternative means for the consumer to receive those funds in lieu of accepting the prepaid account, in order to satisfy 12 CFR 1005.5(b)(2), the financial institution must inform the consumer that the consumer has no other means by which to initially receive the funds in the prepaid account other than by accepting the access device, as well as the consequences of disposing of the access device (12 CFR 1005.15(b) and Comment 18(a)-1).

EFT added to credit card

The EFTA and Regulation E apply when the capability to initiate EFTs is added to an accepted credit card (as defined under Regulation Z). The EFTA and Regulation E also apply to the issuance of an access device (other than an access device for a prepaid account) that permits credit extensions under a preexisting agreement between the consumer and a financial institution to extend credit only to cover overdrafts (or to maintain a specified minimum balance). The Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z govern the addition of a credit feature to an accepted access device, and except as discussed above, the issuance of a credit card that is also an access device. For information on the relationship of Regulation E to other laws, including Truth in Lending, see Section XI of this document, and 12 CFR 1005.12.

V. Consumer Liability and Error Resolution

Liability of Consumers for Unauthorized Transfers - 12 CFR 1005.6

A consumer may be liable for an unauthorized EFT (defined in 12 CFR 1005.2(m)) depending on when the consumer notifies the financial institution and whether an access device was used to conduct the transaction. Under the EFTA, there is no bright-line time limit within which consumers must report unauthorized EFTs (71 Fed. Reg. 1638, 1653 (Jan. 10, 2006)).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

The extent of the consumer's liability is determined solely by the consumer's promptness in notifying the financial institution (Comment 6(b)-3). Other factors may not be used as a basis to hold consumers liable. 12 CFR 1005.6 expressly prohibits the following factors as the basis for imposing greater liability than is permissible: the consumer was negligent (e.g., wrote a PIN on an ATM card); an agreement between the consumer and the financial institution provides for greater liability; or the consumer is liable for a greater amount under state law (Comments 6(b)-2 and 6(b)-3).

A consumer may only be held liable for an unauthorized transaction, within the limitations set forth in 12 CFR 1005.6(b), if:

- The financial institution has provided all of the following written disclosures to the consumer:
 - A summary of the consumer's liability for unauthorized EFTs.
 - The telephone number and address for reporting that an unauthorized EFT has been or may be made.
 - The financial institution's business days.

- Any access device used to initiate the EFT was an accepted access device (as defined in 12 CFR 1005.2(a)).
- The financial institution has provided a means to identify the consumer to whom the access device was issued (12 CFR 1005.6(a)).

For prepaid accounts that are not payroll card accounts or government benefit accounts, a financial institution is not required to comply with the liability limits and error resolution requirements in 12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11 for any prepaid account for which it has not successfully completed its consumer identification and verification process, provided certain disclosures are given (12 CFR 1005.18(e)(3)).

12 CFR 1005.6 allows, but does not require, the financial institution to provide a separate means to identify each consumer of a multiple-user account (Comment 6(a)-2).

The limitations on the amount of consumer liability for unauthorized EFTs, the time limits within which consumers must report unauthorized EFTs, and the liability for failing to adhere to those time limits, are listed in the chart below (12 CFR 1005.6(b)). The financial institution may impose less consumer liability than is provided by 12 CFR 1005.6 based on state law or the deposit agreement (12 CFR 1005.6(b)(6)).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

Knowledge of Loss or Theft

The fact that a consumer has received a periodic statement reflecting an unauthorized transaction is a factor, but not conclusive evidence, in determining whether the consumer had knowledge of a loss or theft of the access device (Comment 6(b)(1)-2).

Timing of Notice

If a consumer's delay in notifying a financial institution was due to extenuating circumstances, such as extended travel or hospitalization, the time periods for notification specified above must be extended to a reasonable time (12 CFR 1005.6(b)(4); Comment 6(b)(4)-1).

Notice to the Financial Institution

A consumer gives notice to a financial institution about unauthorized use when the consumer takes reasonable steps to provide the financial institution with the pertinent information, whether or not a particular employee actually receives the information (12 CFR 1005.6(b)(5)(i)). Even if the consumer is unable to provide the account number or the card number, the notice effectively limits the consumer's liability if the consumer sufficiently identifies the account in question, for example, by giving the name on the account and the type of account (Comment 6(b)(5)-3). At the consumer's option, notice may be given in person, by telephone, or in writing (12 CFR 1005.6(b)(5)(ii)). Notice in writing is considered given at the time the consumer mails the notice or delivers the notice for transmission by any other usual means to the financial institution. Notice may also be considered given when the financial institution becomes aware of circumstances leading to the reasonable belief that an unauthorized transfer has been or may be made (12 CFR 1005.6(b)(5)(iii)).

Procedures for Resolving Errors — 12 CFR 1005.11

This section defines the term error and describes the steps the consumer must take when asserting an error in order to receive the protection of the EFTA and 12 CFR 1005.11, and the procedures that a financial institution must follow to resolve an alleged error under this section.

An error includes any of the following:

- An unauthorized EFT.
- An incorrect EFT to or from the consumer's account.
- The omission from a periodic statement of an EFT to or from the consumer's account that should have been included.

- A computational or bookkeeping error made by the financial institution relating to an EFT.
- The consumer's receipt of an incorrect amount of money from an electronic terminal.
- An EFT not identified in accordance with the requirements of 12 CFR 1005.9 or 1005.10(a).
- A consumer's request for any documentation required by 12 CFR 1005.9 or 1005.10(a) or for additional information or clarification concerning an EFT (12 CFR 1005.11(a)(1)).

The term error does not include:

- A routine inquiry about the balance in the consumer's account or a request for duplicate copies of documentation or other information that is made only for tax or other record-keeping purposes (12 CFR 1005.11(a)(2)(i), (ii), and (iii)).
- The fact that a financial institution does not make a terminal receipt available for a transfer of $15 or less in accordance with 12 CFR 1005.9(e) (Comment 11(a)-6).
- A financial institution must comply with the error resolution procedures in 12 CFR 1005.11 with respect to any oral or written notice of error from the consumer that:
- The financial institution receives not later than 60 days after sending a periodic statement or other documentation first reflecting the alleged error (see 12 CFR 1005.14 and 1005.18).
- Enables the financial institution to identify the consumer's name and account number.
- Indicates why the consumer believes the error exists and, to the extent possible, the type, date, and amount of the error (12 CFR 1005.11(b)(1)).

A financial institution may require a consumer to give written confirmation of an error within 10 business days of giving oral notice. The financial institution must provide the address where confirmation must be sent (12 CFR 1005.11(b)(2)).

Error Resolution Procedures

After receiving a notice of error, the financial institution must do all of the following:

- Promptly investigate the oral or written allegation of error.
- Complete its investigation within 10 business days.

- Report the results of its investigation within three business days after completing its investigation.
- Correct the error within one business day after determining that an error has occurred (12 CFR 1005.11(c)(1)).

The financial institution may take up to 45 days (12 CFR 1005.11(c)(2)) to complete its investigation provided it:

- Provisionally credits the funds (including interest, where applicable) to the consumer's account within the 10 business-day period.
- Advises the consumer within two business days of the provisional crediting.
- Gives the consumer full use of the funds during the investigation.

A financial institution need not provisionally credit the account to take up to 45 days to complete its investigation if the consumer fails to provide the required written confirmation of an oral notice of error within 10 business days, or if the notice of error involves an account subject to the margin requirements or other aspects of Regulation T (Securities Credit by Brokers and Dealers, 12 CFR Part 220) (12 CFR 1005.11(c)(2)(i)).

However, where an error involves an unauthorized EFT, the financial institution must comply with the requirements of the provisions relating to unauthorized EFTs before holding the consumer liable, even if the consumer does not provide a notice of error within the time limits in 12 CFR 1005.11(b) (Comment 11(b)(1)-7).

When investigating a claim of error, the financial institution need only review its own records if the alleged error concerns a transfer to or from a third party, and there is no agreement between the financial institution and the third party for the type of EFT involved (12 CFR 1005.11(c)(4)). However, the financial institution may not limit its investigation solely to the payment instructions where other information within the financial institution's records pertaining to a particular account may help to resolve a consumer's claim (Comment 11(c)(4)-5).

If, after investigating the alleged error, the financial institution determines that an error has occurred, it must promptly (within one business day after such determination) correct the error, including the crediting of interest if applicable. The financial institution must provide within three business days of the completed investigation an oral or written report of the correction to the consumer and, as applicable, notify the consumer that the provisional credit has been made final (12 CFR 1005.11(c)(1) and (2)(iii) and (iv)).

If the financial institution determines that no error occurred or that an error occurred in a different manner or amount from that described by the consumer, the financial institution must mail or deliver a written explanation of its findings within three business days after concluding its investigation. The explanation must include a notice of the consumer's rights to request the documents upon which the financial institution relied in making its determination (12 CFR 1005.11(d)).

Upon debiting a provisionally credited amount, the financial institution must notify the consumer of the date and amount of the debit and of the fact that the financial institution will honor (without charge) checks, drafts, or similar paper instruments payable to third parties and preauthorized debits for five business days after transmittal of the notice. The financial institution need honor only items that it would have paid if the provisionally credited funds had not been debited (12 CFR 1005.11(d)(2)). Upon request from the consumer, the financial institution must promptly mail or deliver to the consumer copies of documents upon which it relied in making its determination (12 CFR 1005.11(d)(1)).

If a notice involves an error that occurred within 30 days after the first deposit to the account was made, the time periods are extended from 10 and 45 days, to 20 and 90 days, respectively. If the notice of error involves a transaction that was not initiated in a state or resulted from a point-of-sale debit card transaction, the 45-day period is extended to 90 days (12 CFR 1005.11(c)(3)).

If a financial institution has fully complied with the investigation requirements, it generally does not need to reinvestigate if a consumer later reasserts the same error. However, it must investigate a claim of error asserted by a consumer following receipt of information provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.11(a)(1)(vii) and 12 CFR 1005.11(e).

VI. Receipts and Periodic Statements

Documentation of Transfers - 12 CFR 1005.9

Electronic terminal receipts

Receipts must be made available at the time a consumer initiates an EFT at an electronic terminal (12 CFR 1005.9(a)). Financial institutions may provide receipts only to consumers who request one (Comment 9(a)-1). The receipt must include, as applicable:

- Amount of the transfer — a charge for making the transfer may be included in the amount, provided the charge is disclosed on the receipt and on a sign posted on or at the terminal.
- Date — the date the consumer initiates the transfer.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- Type of transfer and type of account— descriptions such as “withdrawal from checking” or “transfer from savings to checking” are appropriate. This is true even if the accounts are only similar in function to a checking account (such as a share draft or NOW account) or a savings account (such as a share account). If the access device used can only access one account, the type of account may be omitted (Comments 9(a)(3)-1; 9(3)-2; 9(3)-4; and 9(3)-5).
 - Number or code identifying the consumer’s account(s) or the access device used to initiate the transfer — the number and code need not exceed four digits or letters.
 - Location of the terminal — the location of the terminal where the transfer is initiated or an identification, such as a code or terminal number. If the location is disclosed, except in limited circumstances where all terminals are located in the same city or state, the receipt must include the city and state or foreign country and one of the following:
 - Street address of the terminal;
 - Generally accepted name for the location of the terminal (such as an airport, shopping center, or branch of a financial institution); or
 - Name of the entity (if other than the financial institution providing the statement) at whose place of business the terminal is located, such as a store, and the city, state, or foreign country (12 CFR 1005.9(a)(5)).
 - Third party — name of any third party to or from whom funds are transferred — a code may be used to identify the party if the code is explained on the receipt. This requirement does not apply if the name of the party is provided by the consumer in a manner the terminal cannot duplicate on the receipt, such as on a payment stub (12 CFR 1005.9(a)(6) and Comment 9(a)(6)-1).
- Receipts are not required for EFTs of $15 or less (12 CFR 1005.9(e)).
- Periodic statements
- Periodic statements must be sent for each monthly cycle in which an EFT has occurred, and at least quarterly if no EFT has occurred (12 CFR 1005.9(b)). For each EFT made during the cycle, the statement must include, as applicable:
- Amount of the transfer — if a charge was imposed at an electronic terminal by the owner or operator of the terminal, that charge may be included in the amount.
 - Date the transfer was posted to the account.
 - Type of transfer(s) and type of account(s) to or from which funds were transferred.
 - For each transfer (except deposits of cash, or a check, draft or similar paper instrument to the consumer’s account) initiated at an electronic terminal, the terminal location as required for the receipt under 12 CFR 1005.9(a)(5).
 - Name of any third party payee or payor.
 - Account number(s).
 - Total amount of any fees and charges, other than a finance charge as defined by Regulation Z, assessed during the period for making EFTs, the right to make EFTs, or for account maintenance (Comment 9(b)(3)).
 - Balance in the account at the beginning and close of the statement period.
 - Address and telephone number to be used by the consumer for inquiries or notice of errors. If the financial institution has elected to send the abbreviated error notice with every periodic statement, the address and telephone number may appear on that document.
 - If the financial institution has provided a telephone number which the consumer can use to find out whether or not a preauthorized transfer has taken place, that telephone number.
- Exceptions to the Periodic Statement Requirement for Certain Accounts
- Passbook accounts. Where a consumer’s passbook may not be accessed by an EFT other than preauthorized transfers to the account, a periodic statement need not be sent, provided that the financial institution updates the consumer’s passbook or provides the required information on a separate document at the consumer’s request. To update the passbook, the amount and date of each EFT made since the passbook was last presented must be listed (12 CFR 1005.9(c)(1)(i)). For other accounts that may be accessed only by preauthorized transfers to the account, the financial institution must send a periodic statement at least quarterly (12 CFR 1005.9(c)(1)(ii)).
 - Transfers between accounts. If a transfer occurs between two accounts of the consumer at the same financial institution, the transfer need only be documented for one of the two accounts (12 CFR 1005.9(c)(2)). A preauthorized transfer between two accounts of the consumer at the same financial institution is subject to the 12 CFR 1005.9(c)(1) rule on preauthorized transfers and not the 12 CFR 1005.9(c)(2) rule on intra-institutional transfers (12 CFR 1005.9(c)(3)).

- Documentation for Foreign-initiated transfers. If an EFT is initiated outside the United States, the financial institution need not provide a receipt or a periodic statement reflecting the transfer if it treats an inquiry for clarification or documentation as a notice of error (12 CFR 1005.9(d)).

Alternatives to Periodic Statements for Financial Institutions Offering Prepaid Accounts - 12 CFR 1005.15 and 1005.18

12 CFR 1005.18 provides an alternative to providing periodic statements for prepaid accounts if financial institutions make account information available to consumers by specific means. In addition, 12 CFR 1005.18 clarifies how financial institutions that do not provide periodic statements for prepaid accounts can comply with the subpart A requirements relating to initial disclosures, the annual error resolution notice, liability limits, and error resolution procedures.

Typically, employers and third-party service providers do not meet the definition of a “financial institution” subject to the regulation because they neither (i) hold prepaid accounts (including payroll card accounts) nor (ii) issue prepaid cards and agree with consumers to provide EFT services in connection with prepaid accounts. However, to the extent an employer or a service provider undertakes either of these functions, it would be deemed a “financial institution” under the regulation (Comment 18(a)-2).

12 CFR 1005.15 contains similar provisions for government benefit accounts, as defined in 12 CFR 1005.15(a)(2). A government agency is deemed to be a “financial institution” subject to the regulation if it directly or indirectly issues an access device to a consumer for use in initiating an EFT of government benefits from an account, other than needs-tested benefits in a program established under state or local law or administered by a state or local agency (12 CFR 1005.15(a)(1)).

Alternative to Periodic Statements

A financial institution (which may include government agencies as defined by 12 CFR 1005.15(a)(1)) need not furnish periodic statements required by 12 CFR 1005.9(b) if the financial institution makes available to the consumer the following²³:

The account balance, through a readily available telephone line, and for government benefit accounts only, also at a terminal.

An electronic history of account transactions, such as through a website, covering at least 12 months preceding the date the consumer electronically accesses the account; and

A written history of account transactions provided promptly in response to an oral or written request and covering at least 24 months preceding the date the financial institution receives the consumer’s request (12 CFR 1005.15(d)(1) and 1005.18(c)(1)).

The For prepaid accounts that are not payroll card accounts or government benefit accounts, a financial institution is not required to provide a written history of the consumer’s account transactions pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1)(iii) for any such account for which the financial institution has not completed its consumer identification and verification process (12 CFR 1005.18(c)(2)).

The electronic and written histories of account transactions must include the same information required on periodic statements under 12 CFR 1005.9(b) (12 CFR 1005.15(d)(2) and 1005.18(c)(3)).

Modifications to Other Regulation E Requirements

If a financial institution provides an alternative to periodic statements under 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1) (or government agency provides an alternative to periodic statements under 12 CFR 1005.15(d)(1)), it must comply with the following pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.18(d) and 1005.15(e):

- Modify the initial disclosures under 12 CFR 1005.7(b) by disclosing:
 - A telephone number that the consumer may call to obtain the account balance; the means by which the consumer can obtain an electronic account history, such as the address of a website; and a summary of the consumer’s right to receive a written account transaction history upon request (in place of the summary of the right to receive a periodic statement required by 12 CFR 1005.7(b)(6)), including a telephone number to call to request a history. This disclosure may be made by providing a notice substantially similar to the notice contained in paragraph A-7(a) in Appendix A. For government

²³ If, on April 1, 2019, a financial institution does not have readily accessible the data necessary to make available 12 months of electronic account transaction history or to provide 24 months of written account transaction history upon request, the financial institution may make available or provide such histories using the data for the time period it has until the financial institution has accumulated the data necessary to comply in full with those requirements (12 CFR 1005.18(h)(3)(i)).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

benefit accounts, the disclosure required by 12 CFR 1005.15(e)(1)(i) may be made by providing a notice substantially similar to the notice contained in paragraph A-5(a) in Appendix A.

- A notice concerning error resolution that is substantially similar to the notice contained in paragraph A-7(b) in Appendix A, or paragraph A-5(b) in Appendix A for government benefit accounts, in place of the notice required by 12 CFR 1005.7(b)(10). Alternatively, for prepaid account programs for which the financial institution does not have a consumer identification and verification process, a description of the financial institution's error resolution process and limitations on consumers' liability for unauthorized transfers or, if none, a statement that there are no such protections (12 CFR 1005.18(d)(1)(ii)).
- Provide an annual error resolution notice that is substantially similar to the notice contained in paragraph A-7(b) in Appendix A, in place of the notice required by 12 CFR 1005.8(b). Alternatively, a financial institution (which may include government agencies as defined by 12 CFR 1005.15(a)(1)) may include on or with each electronic and written account transaction history provided in accordance with 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1), or 12 CFR 1005.15(d)(1) for government benefit accounts, a notice substantially similar to the abbreviated notice for periodic statements contained in paragraph A-3(b) in Appendix A, modified as necessary to reflect the error resolution provisions set forth in 12 CFR 1005.18(e) or 1005.15(e)(3).
 - Comply with modified timing provisions for limited liability requirements as follows:
 - For purposes of 12 CFR 1005.6(b)(3), the 60-day period for reporting any unauthorized transfer begins on the earlier of (12 CFR 1005.18(e)(1)(i) and 1005.15(e)(3)(i)):
 - The date the consumer electronically accesses the consumer's account under 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1)(ii), or under 12 CFR 1005.15(d)(1)(ii) for a government benefit account, provided that the electronic account transaction history made available to the consumer reflects the unauthorized transfer; or
 - The date the financial institution (including an agency) sends a written history of the consumer's account transactions requested by the consumer under 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1)(iii), or under 12 CFR 1005.15(d)(1)(iii) for a government benefit account, in which the unauthorized transfer is first reflected.

- Alternatively, a financial institution (including an agency) may limit the consumer's liability for an unauthorized transfer as provided under 12 CFR 1005.6(b)(3) for transfers reported by the consumer within 120 days after the transfer was credited or debited to the consumer's account (12 CFR 1005.15(e)(3)(ii) and 1005.18(e)(1)(ii)).
 - Comply with modified timing provisions for error resolution requirements as follows:
 - A written or oral error notice is considered timely, and the financial institution (including an agency) must comply with the requirements of 12 CFR 1005.11, if the financial institution receives notice from the consumer by the earlier of (12 CFR 1005.18(e)(2)(i) and 1005.15(e)(4)(i)):
 - 60 days after the date the consumer electronically accesses the consumer's account under 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1)(ii), or 12 CFR 1005.15(d)(1)(ii) for a government benefit account, provided that the electronic history made available to the consumer reflects the alleged error; or
 - 60 days after the date the financial institution (including an agency) sends a written history of the consumer's account transactions requested by the consumer under 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1)(iii), or under 12 CFR 1005.15(d)(1)(iii) for a government benefit account, in which the alleged error is first reflected.
- Alternatively, a financial institution (including an agency) complies with the error resolution requirements in 12 CFR 1005.11 if it investigates any oral or written notice of an error from the consumer that is received by the financial institution within 120 days after the transfer allegedly in error was credited or debited to the consumer's account (12 CFR 1005.15(e)(4)(ii) and 1005.18(e)(2)(ii)).
- Regardless of whether periodic statements are provided or the alternative followed: once a financial institution successfully completes its consumer identification and verification process with respect to a prepaid account (other than payroll card accounts or government benefit accounts), the financial institution must limit the consumer's liability for unauthorized transfers and resolve errors that occur following verification in accordance with 12 CFR 1005.6 or 1005.11, or the modified timing requirements in 12 CFR 1005.18(e), as applicable (12 CFR 1005.18(e)(3)(iii)).

Summary Totals of Fees - 12 CFR 1005.15 and 1005.18

A financial institution (including an agency) must disclose the amount of any fees assessed against the account, whether for EFTs or otherwise, on any periodic statement provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.9(b) and on any history of account transactions provided or made available by the financial institution (12 CFR 1005.15(d)(2) and 1005.18(c)(4)).

A financial institution (including an agency) must display a summary total of the amount of all fees assessed by the financial institution against the consumer's prepaid account for the prior calendar month and for the calendar year to date on any periodic statement provided pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.9(b) and on any history of account transactions provided or made available by the financial institution (12 CFR 1005.15(d)(2) and 1005.18(c)(5)).²⁴

VII. Gift Cards — 12 CFR 1005.20

A gift card is a type of prepaid card that is designed to be purchased by one consumer and given to another consumer as a present or expression of appreciation or recognition. When provided in the form of a plastic card, a user of a gift card is able to access and spend the value associated with the device by swiping the card at a POS terminal, much as a person would use a debit card.

Scope of the gift card rule

The rule is generally limited to gift certificates, store gift cards, or general-use prepaid cards sold or issued to consumers primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. It generally does not apply to cards, codes, or other devices that are reloadable and not marketed or labeled as a gift card or gift certificate and loyalty, award, and promotional gift cards. See also the exclusions from the gift card definitions, described above.

Restrictions on Dormancy, Inactivity, or Service Fees - 12 CFR 1005.20(d)

No person may impose a dormancy, inactivity, or service fee with respect to a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card, unless three conditions are satisfied:

- There has been no activity with respect to the certificate or card within the one-year period prior to the imposition of the fee;

- Only one such fee is assessed in a given calendar month; and
- Disclosures regarding dormancy, inactivity, or service fees are clearly and conspicuously stated on the certificate or card, and the person issuing or selling the certificate or card has provided these disclosures to the purchaser before the certificate or card is purchased. See the disclosure section, above, for additional information.

Expiration Date Restrictions - 12 CFR 1005.20(e)

A gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card may not be sold or issued unless the expiration date of the funds underlying the certificate or card is no less than five years after the date of issuance (in the case of a gift certificate) or five years after the date of last load of funds (in the case of a store gift card or general-use prepaid card). In addition, information regarding whether funds underlying a certificate or card may expire must be clearly and conspicuously stated on the certificate or card and disclosed prior to purchase.

No person may sell or issue a certificate or card with an expiration date unless the person has established policies and procedures to provide consumers with a reasonable opportunity to purchase a certificate or card that has an expiration date that is at least five years from the date of purchase. A person who has established policies and procedures to prevent the sale of a certificate or card with less than five years from the date of purchase satisfies this requirement (Comment 20(e)-1).

A certificate or card generally must include a disclosure alerting consumers to the difference between the certificate or card expiration date and the funds expiration date, if any, and that the consumer may contact the issuer for a replacement card. This disclosure must be stated with equal prominence and in close proximity to the certificate or card expiration date. Non-reloadable certificates or cards that bear an expiration date on the certificate or card that is at least seven years from the date of manufacture need not include this disclosure. See the disclosure section, above, for additional information.

To ensure that consumers are able to access the underlying funds for the full five-year period, fees may not be imposed for replacing an expired certificate or card if the underlying funds remain valid (unless the card has been lost or stolen). In lieu of sending a replacement certificate or card, issuers may remit, without charge, the remaining balance of funds to the consumer.

VIII. Requirements for Financial Institutions Offering Prepaid Accounts - 12 CFR 1005.18

²⁴ If the financial institution on April 1, 2019, does not have readily accessible the data necessary to calculate the summary totals of the amount of all fees assessed by the financial institution on the consumer's prepaid account for the prior calendar month and for the calendar year pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(5), the financial institution may display the summary totals using the data it has until the financial institution has accumulated the data necessary to display the summary totals as required by 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(5). See 12 CFR 1005.18(h)(3)(ii).

Prepaid accounts (as defined in 12 CFR 1005.2(b)(3)(i)) include several types of products: payroll card accounts and government benefit accounts that were subject to Regulation E prior to the Prepaid Accounts Rule; accounts that are marketed or labeled as “prepaid” that are redeemable upon presentation at multiple, unaffiliated merchants for goods or services, or that are usable at ATMs; and other accounts (other than checking accounts, share draft accounts, and negotiable order of withdrawal accounts) that are issued on a prepaid basis in a specified amount or not issued on a prepaid basis but capable of being loaded with funds thereafter, and whose primary function is to conduct transactions with multiple, unaffiliated merchants for goods or services, or at ATMs, or to conduct person-to-person transfers. For exclusions from the term “prepaid account,” see 12 CFR 1005.2(b)(3)(ii).

Financial institutions must comply with all applicable requirements of the EFTA and Regulation E with respect to prepaid accounts, except as modified by 12 CFR 1005.18 (12 CFR 1005.18(a)). This section of the manual discusses certain provisions specifically applicable to prepaid accounts; other provisions are addressed elsewhere in this manual.

Scope

12 CFR 1005.18 applies to prepaid accounts other than government benefit accounts. Although government benefit cards are defined as prepaid accounts, slightly different rules apply in certain circumstances, which can be found in 12 CFR 1005.15.

Pre-Acquisition Disclosure Requirements - 12 CFR 1005.18(b)

Timing of Disclosures

Generally, a financial institution must provide the required short and long form disclosures before a consumer acquires a prepaid account.

However, a financial institution need not provide the long form disclosures prior to acquisition at a retail location or orally by telephone, if certain conditions are met. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(1)(ii) and (b)(1)(iii). Further, when a prepaid account is used for disbursing funds to a consumer and the financial institution or third party making the disbursement does not offer any alternative means for the consumer to receive those funds in lieu of accepting the prepaid account, those disclosures may be provided at the time the consumer receives the prepaid account (12 CFR 1005.18(b)(1)(i)).

Content of Short Form Disclosures

12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2) requires a financial institution to disclose the following fees and information on its short form disclosure:

- Periodic fee. The periodic fee charged for holding the prepaid account, assessed on a monthly or other periodic basis, using the term “Monthly fee,” “Annual fee,” or a substantially similar term.
- Per purchase fee. The fee for making a purchase using the prepaid account, using the term “Per purchase” or a substantially similar term.
- ATM withdrawal fees. Two fees for using an ATM to initiate a withdrawal of cash in the United States from the prepaid account, both within and outside of the financial institution’s network or a network affiliated with the financial institution, using the term “ATM withdrawal” or a substantially similar term, and “in-network” or “out-of-network,” respectively, or substantially similar terms.
- Cash reload fee. The fee for reloading cash into the prepaid account using the term “Cash reload” or a substantially similar term. The fee disclosed must be the total of all charges from the financial institution and any third parties for a cash reload.
- ATM balance inquiry fees. Two fees for using an ATM to check the balance of the prepaid account in the United States, both within and outside of the financial institution’s network or a network affiliated with the financial institution, using the term “ATM balance inquiry” or a substantially similar term, and “in-network” or “out-of-network,” respectively, or substantially similar terms.
- Customer service fees. Two fees for calling the financial institution about the prepaid account, both for calling an interactive voice response system and a live customer service agent, using the term “Customer service” or a substantially similar term, and “automated” or “live agent,” or substantially similar terms, respectively, and “per call” or a substantially similar term. When providing a short form disclosure for multiple service plans pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(6)(iii)(B)(2), the financial institution must disclose only the fee for calling the live agent customer service about the prepaid account, using the term “Live customer service” or a substantially similar term and “per call” or a substantially similar term.
- Inactivity fee. The fee for non-use, dormancy, or inactivity of the prepaid account, using the term “Inactivity” or a substantially similar term, as well as the conditions that trigger the financial institution to impose that fee.

- Additional fee types. A statement disclosing the number of additional fee types (AFTs) the financial institution may charge consumers with respect to the prepaid account, a statement directing consumers to the disclosure of the AFTs, and, if applicable, disclosure of up to two AFTs. A financial institution must use the language provided in the rule or substantially similar language in making these statements, and must follow specific guidelines in determining which AFTs to disclose, including (with certain exceptions) the disclosure of the two fee types that generate the highest revenue from consumers, over a specified time period, for the prepaid account program or across prepaid account programs that share the same fee schedule. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(viii) and (ix).

NOTE: A financial institution must reassess its AFTs disclosure periodically, and, under certain circumstances, when the institution changes its fee schedule. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(ix)(E)(2) and (3) for specific requirements.

- Overdraft credit features. A statement that no overdraft credit feature is offered, or, if such a feature may be offered at any point, language about the feature and applicable fees. A financial institution must use the language provided in the rule or substantially similar language in making this statement. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(x).
- Registration and insurance. A statement regarding the prepaid account program's eligibility for FDIC deposit insurance or NCUA share insurance, as appropriate, and directing the consumer to register the prepaid account for insurance and other account protections, where applicable. A financial institution must use the language provided in the rule or substantially similar language in making this statement. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(xi).
- Bureau website. A statement directing the consumer to the Bureau's website for general information about prepaid accounts. A financial institution must use the language provided in the rule or substantially similar language in making this statement. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(xii).
- Information on all fees and services. A statement directing the consumer to the location of the long form disclosure to find details and conditions for all fees and services. In certain circumstances, this statement must include a telephone number and a website URL that the consumer may use to directly access the long form disclosure. A financial institution must use the language provided in the rule or substantially similar language in making this statement. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(xiii).

Additional content for payroll card accounts

The short form disclosure must contain a statement that the consumer does not have to accept the payroll card account, and directing the consumer to ask about other ways to receive wages or salary. Alternatively, a financial institution or agency may provide a statement that the consumer has several options to receive wages or salary, followed by a list of the options available to the consumer, and directing the consumer to tell the employer which option the consumer chooses. A financial institution or agency must use the language provided in the rule or substantially similar language in making this statement. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(xiv).

A financial institution or agency may, but is not required to, include a statement in one additional line of text in the short form disclosure for information on ways the consumer may access government benefit account funds and balance information for free or for a reduced fee. 12 CFR 1005.15(c)(2)(ii).

Variable fees, including periodic fees

Additional disclosure requirements apply when a disclosed fee can vary; there are two alternatives if the periodic fee can vary. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(3)(i) and (b)(3)(ii).

Single disclosure for like fees

Where the rule requires disclosure of two fees (12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(iii), (v), (vi), and (ix)), a financial institution may disclose a single fee amount when the amount is the same for both fees. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(3)(iii).

Third-party fees

A financial institution may not include any third-party fees in the required short form disclosure, except for the cash reload fee, which must be the total of all charges from the financial institution and any third parties. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(3)(iv) and (v) and (b)(2)(iv).

Prohibition on disclosure of finance charges

A financial institution may not include any finance charges imposed in connection with a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card (i.e., an overdraft credit feature) in its disclosures pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(i) through (xi). See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(3)(vi).

Additional information outside the short form

At the time a financial institution provides the short form disclosure, it must also disclose the following information outside of the short form disclosure: the name of the financial institution; the name of the prepaid account program; the purchase price for the prepaid account, if any; and the fee for activating the prepaid account, if any. In a setting other than a retail location, this information must be disclosed in close proximity to the short form. In a retail location, this information, other than the purchase price, must be disclosed on the exterior of the access device's packaging material. In a retail location, the purchase price must be disclosed either on the exterior of or in close proximity to the prepaid account access device's packaging material. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(5).

Content of Long Form Disclosures

12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4) requires that a financial institution disclose the following fees and information on its long form disclosure:

- Title. A heading stating the name of the prepaid account program and that the long form disclosure contains a list of all fees for that particular prepaid account program.
- Fees. All fees that may be imposed in connection with a prepaid account. For each fee, the financial institution must disclose the amount of the fee and the conditions, if any, under which the fee may be imposed, waived, or reduced. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4)(ii) for specific requirements.
- Statement regarding registration and FDIC or NCUA insurance. The statement regarding the prepaid account program's eligibility for deposit or share insurance and directing the consumer to register the prepaid account for insurance and other protections that is required on the short-form disclosure, together with an explanation of FDIC or NCUA insurance coverage and the benefit of such coverage or the consequence of the lack of such coverage, as applicable. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(xi) and 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4)(iii).
- Statement regarding overdraft credit features. The statement required on the short-form disclosures by 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)(x).
- Statement regarding financial institution contact information. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4)(v).
- Statement regarding Bureau website and telephone number. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4)(vi).
- Regulation Z disclosures for overdraft credit features. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4)(vii).

Disclosures for Prepaid Accounts Acquired in Retail Location

A financial institution is not required to provide the long form disclosure required by 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4) before a consumer acquires a prepaid account in person at a retail location or orally by telephone, if certain conditions are met.

See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(1)(ii) and (iii) for the specific conditions.

Form of Pre-Acquisition Disclosures

Disclosures generally must be in writing (12 CFR 1005.18(b)(6)(i)(A)). For exceptions regarding where disclosures may be made electronically or orally, see 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(6)(i)(B) and (C).

- Retainable form. Disclosures must generally be made in a form that a consumer may keep, except as provided in 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(6)(ii).
- Tabular format. When provided in writing or electronically, fee and certain other information required in the short form disclosures and fee information required in long form disclosures must be provided in the form of a table. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(6)(iii) and Model Forms A-10(A) through (F).

Other requirements for pre-acquisition disclosures

- Specific formatting requirements. Requirements regarding the grouping and ordering of information, prominence and size of the text, and segregation of the disclosures from other information. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(7).
- Terminology. Fee names and other terms must be used consistently within and across disclosures. See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(8).
- Prepaid accounts acquired in foreign languages. Generally, a financial institution must provide the required pre-acquisition disclosures in a foreign language if the financial institution uses that same foreign language in connection with the acquisition of a prepaid account in certain circumstances. For exceptions, See 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(9).

Other Disclosure Requirements - 12 CFR 1005.18(f)

Initial disclosure of fees and other information

A financial institution must include, as part of the initial disclosures given pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.7, all of the information required to be disclosed in its pre-acquisition long form disclosure. See 12 CFR 1005.18(f)(1).

Change-in-terms notice

The change-in-terms notice provisions in 12 CFR 1005.8(a) apply to changes in terms and conditions that are required to be disclosed pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.7 or 12 CFR 1005.18(f)(1) in most circumstances, with some exceptions. See 12 CFR 1005.18(f)(2).

Disclosures on prepaid account access devices

The name of the financial institution and the website URL and a telephone number a consumer can use to contact the financial institution about the prepaid account must be disclosed on the prepaid account access device (with specific rules when physical access devices are not provided in connection with prepaid accounts). See 12 CFR 1005.18(f)(3).

Prepaid Accounts Accessible by Hybrid Prepaid-Credit Cards - 12 CFR 1005.18(g)

The following rules apply to a prepaid account program where consumers may be offered a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card as defined by Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.61:

- A financial institution must provide to any prepaid account without a covered separate credit feature the same account terms, conditions, and features that it provides on prepaid accounts in the same prepaid account program that have such a credit feature (12 CFR 1005.18(g)(1)).
- A financial institution is not prohibited from imposing a higher fee or charge on the asset feature of a prepaid account with a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card than the amount of a comparable fee or charge that it imposes on any prepaid account in the same prepaid account program that does not have such a credit feature (12 CFR 1005.18(g)(2)).

IX. Internet Posting of Prepaid Account Agreements - 12 CFR 1005.19Definitions

12 CFR 1005.19(a) provides the following supplemental definitions for purposes of 12 CFR 1005.19:

- Agreement. means the written document or documents evidencing the terms of the legal obligation, or the prospective legal obligation, between a prepaid account issuer and a consumer for a prepaid account. It also includes “fee information” as defined below.
- Amends. An issuer “amends” an agreement if it makes a substantive change (“amendment”) to the agreement. A change is substantive if it alters the rights or obligations of the issuer or the consumer under the agreement. Any change in the fee information, as defined below, is substantive.
- Fee information. The short form disclosure for the prepaid account (see 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(2)) and the fee information and statements required to be disclosed in the pre-acquisition long form disclosure for the prepaid account pursuant to 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4).

- Issuer. The entity to which a consumer is legally obligated, or would be legally obligated, under the terms of a prepaid account agreement.
- Offers. An issuer “offers” an agreement if the issuer markets, solicits applications for, or otherwise makes available a prepaid account that would be subject to that agreement, regardless of whether the issuer offers the prepaid account to the general public.
- Offers to the general public. An agreement if the issuer markets, solicits applications for, or otherwise makes available to the general public a prepaid account that would be subject to that agreement.
- Open account. A prepaid account is an “open account” or “open prepaid account” if: (i) there is an outstanding balance in the account; (ii) the consumer can load funds to the account even if the account does not currently hold a balance; or (iii) the consumer can access credit from a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card as defined in Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.61, in connection with the account. A prepaid account that has been suspended temporarily (for example, due to a report by the consumer of unauthorized use of the card) is considered an “open account” or “open prepaid account.”
- Prepaid account. A prepaid account as defined in 12 CFR 1005.2(b)(3).

Submission of Agreements to the Bureau

An issuer must make submissions of prepaid account agreements to the CFPB on a rolling basis, in the form and manner specified by the CFPB, no later than 30 days after the issuer offers, amends, or ceases to offer any prepaid account agreement. See 12 CFR 1005.19(b)(1) regarding the content of each submission.

Amended agreements

If a prepaid account agreement previously submitted to the CFPB is amended, the issuer must submit the entire amended agreement to the CFPB, in the form and manner specified by the CFPB, no later than 30 days after the change becomes effective. Additionally, if other previously submitted identifying information about the issuer and its agreements changes, the issuer must submit an update no later than 30 days after the change becomes effective. However, the issuer can delay submitting changes to the list of names of other relevant parties to a particular agreement until the earlier of (i) when it submits an amended agreement or changes to other identifying information about the issuer and its submitted agreements, or (ii) May 1 of each year. See 12 CFR 1005.19(b)(2)(ii) for more specific requirements.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

Withdrawal of agreements no longer offered

If an issuer no longer offers a prepaid account agreement that was previously submitted to the CFPB, the issuer must notify the Bureau, in the form and manner specified by the CFPB, no later than 30 days after the issuer ceases to offer the agreement, that it is withdrawing the agreement (12 CFR 1005.19(b)(3)).

De minimis exception

An issuer need not make submissions of prepaid account agreements to the CFPB if the issuer has fewer than 3,000 open prepaid accounts as of the last day of the calendar quarter (12 CFR 1005.19(b)(4)).

Product testing exception

An issuer need not submit a particular prepaid account agreement if the issuer offers the agreement as part of a product test to a limited group of consumers for a limited period of time, the agreement is used for fewer than 3,000 open prepaid accounts, and the agreement is not offered other than in connection with the product test (12 CFR 1005.19(b)(5)).

Form and content of agreements submitted to the Bureau

Agreements must contain the provisions of the agreement and the fee information currently in effect. Agreements must not contain any personally identifiable information relating to any consumer and must be presented in a clear and legible font. See 12 CFR 1005.19(b)(6)(i), (ii), and (iii) for more specific requirements.

Posting of Agreements Offered to the General Public

An issuer must post and maintain on its publicly available website any prepaid account agreements offered to the general public that the issuer is required to submit to the CFPB. Posted agreements must conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB. Agreements must be updated as frequently as the issuer is required to submit new or amended agreements to the Bureau. Agreements must be placed in a location that is prominent and readily accessible to the public, and must also be accessible without submission of personally identifiable information. See 12 CFR 1005.19(c) for more specific requirements.

Agreements for all open accounts

With respect to any open prepaid account, an issuer must either:

- Post and maintain the consumer's agreement on its website; or
- Promptly provide a copy of the consumer's agreement to the consumer upon the consumer's request. If the issuer makes an agreement available upon request, the issuer must provide the consumer with the ability to request a copy of the agreement by telephone. The issuer must send to the consumer a copy of the consumer's prepaid account agreement no later than five business days after the issuer receives the consumer's request (12 CFR 1005.19(d)(1)).

Except as otherwise provided, agreements for open accounts that are posted on the issuer's website or sent to the consumer upon the consumer's request must conform to the form and content requirements for agreements submitted to the CFPB (12 CFR 1005.19(d)(2)).

Except as otherwise provided, issuers may provide prepaid account agreements for this purpose electronically without regard to the consumer notice and consent requirements of section 101(c) of the E-Sign Act. See 12 CFR 1005.19(e).

X. Other Requirements

Preauthorized Transfers - 12 CFR 1005.10

A preauthorized transfer may be either a credit to, or a debit from, an account.

Preauthorized transfers to a consumer's account

When an account is scheduled to be credited by a preauthorized EFT from the same payor at least once every 60 days, the financial institution must provide some form of notice to the consumer so that the consumer can find out whether or not the transfer occurred (12 CFR 1005.10(a)). The notice requirement will be satisfied if the payor provides notice to the consumer that the transfer has been initiated. If the payor does not provide notice, the financial institution must adopt one of three alternative procedures for giving notice.

- The financial institution may give the consumer oral or written notice within two business days after a preauthorized transfer occurs.
- The financial institution may give the consumer oral or written notice, within two business days after the preauthorized transfer was scheduled to occur, that the transfer did not occur.

- The financial institution may establish a readily available telephone line²⁵ that the consumer may call to find out whether a preauthorized transfer has occurred. If the financial institution selects this option, the telephone number must be disclosed on the initial disclosures and on each periodic statement (12 CFR 1005.10(a)(1)).

The financial institution need not use any specific language to give notice but may not simply provide the current account balance (Comment 10(a)(1)-1). The financial institution may use different methods of notice for different types of preauthorized transfers and need not offer consumers a choice of notice methods (Comment 10(a)(1)-2).

The financial institution that receives a preauthorized transfer must credit the consumer's account as of the day the funds are received (12 CFR 1005.10(a)(3)).

Preauthorized transfers from a customer's account

Preauthorized transfers from a consumer's account may only be authorized by the consumer in writing and signed or similarly authenticated by the consumer (12 CFR 1005.10(b)). Signed, written authorizations may be provided electronically, subject to the E-Sign Act (Comment 10(b)-5). In all cases, the party that obtains the authorization from the consumer must provide a copy to the consumer. If a third party payee fails to obtain an authorization in writing or fails to provide a copy to the consumer, the third party payee and not the financial institution has violated subpart A (Comment 10(b)-2).

Stop payments

Consumers have the right to stop payment of preauthorized transfers from accounts. The consumer must notify the financial institution orally or in writing at any time up to three business days before the scheduled date of the transfer (12 CFR 1005.10(c)(1)). If the debit item is resubmitted, the institution must continue to honor the stop-payment order. (Comment 10(c)-1) The financial institution may require written confirmation of an oral stop payment order to be made within 14 days of the consumer's oral notification. If the financial institution requires a written confirmation, it must inform the consumer at the time of the oral stop payment order that written confirmation is required and provide the address to which the confirmation should be sent. If the consumer fails to provide written confirmation, the oral stop payment order ceases to be binding after 14 days (12 CFR 1005.10(c)(2)).

²⁵ The telephone line must be "readily available" so that consumers calling to inquire about transfers are able to have their calls answered reasonably promptly during normal business hours. During the initial call in most cases and within two business days after the initial call in all cases, the financial institution should be able to verify whether the transfer was received (Comment 10(a)(1)-5). Within its primary service area, a financial institution must provide a local or toll-free telephone number (Comment 10(a)(1)-7).

Notice of transfers varying in amount

If a preauthorized transfer from a consumer's account varies in amount from the previous transfer under the same authorization or the preauthorized amount, either the financial institution or the designated payee must send to the consumer a written notice, at least 10 days before the scheduled transfer date, of the amount and scheduled date of the transfer (12 CFR 1005.10(d)(1)). The consumer may elect to receive notice only when the amount varies by more than an agreed amount or falls outside a specified range (12 CFR 1005.10(d)(2)). The range must be an acceptable range that the consumer could reasonably anticipate (Comment 10(d)(2)-1). The financial institution does not violate Regulation E if the payee fails to provide sufficient notice (Comment 10(d)-1).

Compulsory use

The financial institution may not make it a condition for an extension of credit that repayment will be by means of preauthorized EFT, except for credit extended under an overdraft credit plan or extended to maintain a specified minimum balance in the consumer's account (however, this exception does not apply to a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, as defined in Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.61) (12 CFR 1005.10(e)(1)). The financial institution may offer a reduced APR or other cost-related incentive for an automatic payment feature as long as the creditor offers other loan programs for the type of credit involved (Comment 10(e)(1)-1).²⁶

Services Offered by Provider Not Holding Consumer's Account — 12 CFR 1005.14

A person who provides EFT services to a consumer but does not hold the consumer's account is a service provider subject to 12 CFR 1005.14 if the person issues an access device that the consumer can use to access the account and no agreement exists between the person and the account-holding financial institution. Transfers initiated by a service provider are often cleared through an automated clearinghouse (ACH).

The responsibilities of the service provider are set forth in 12 CFR 1005.14(b)(1) and (2). The duties of the account-holding financial institution with respect to the service provider are found in 12 CFR 1005.14(c)(1) and (2).

²⁶ This section also prohibits anyone from requiring the establishment of an account for receipt of EFTs with a particular financial institution either as a condition of employment or the receipt of a government benefit (12 CFR 1005.10(e)(2)). However, the employer may require direct deposit of salary, as long as the employee may choose the financial institution that will accept the direct deposit, or limit direct deposits to one financial institution as long as the employee may choose to receive salary by other means (e.g., check or cash) (Comment 10(e)(2)-1).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

Electronic Fund Transfer of Government Benefits — 12 CFR 1005.15

12 CFR 1005.15 contains the rules that apply to accounts established by government agencies for distributing government benefits to consumers electronically. It provides that government agencies must comply with modified rules on the issuance of access devices, periodic statements, initial disclosures, liability for unauthorized use, and error resolution notices. Government agencies must comply with pre-acquisition disclosure requirements as applicable to other prepaid accounts. They must also provide one of two statements: either a statement that the consumer does not have to accept the government benefit account and directing the consumer to ask about other ways to receive their payment, or a statement that the consumer has several options to receive benefit payments, followed by a list of the available options, and directing the consumer to indicate which option the consumer chooses. Government agencies must also comply with other disclosure and change-in-terms requirements applicable to prepaid accounts as set forth in 12 CFR 1005.18(f). For government benefit accounts accessible by hybrid prepaid-credit cards (defined by Section 1026.61 of Regulation Z), a government agency must comply with prohibitions and requirements related to hybrid-prepaid credit cards.

A government agency is deemed to be a “financial institution” subject to the regulation if directly or indirectly it issues an access device to a consumer for use in initiating an EFT of government benefits from an account, other than needs-tested benefits in a program established under state or local law or administered by a state or local agency (12 CFR 1005.15(a)(1)).

XI. Relation to Other Laws — 12 CFR 1005.12

This section describes the relationship between the EFTA and the Truth in Lending Act (TILA) for purposes of subpart A of Regulation E.

Issuance of access devices, and addition of certain EFT services

The EFTA and Regulation E governs the following (12 CFR 1005.12(a)(1)):

- The addition of the capability to initiate EFTs to accepted credit cards, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.12, comment 12-2.
- The issuance of access devices (other than an access device for a prepaid account) that permits credit extensions (under a preexisting agreement between a consumer and financial institution) only when the consumer’s account is overdrawn or to maintain a specified minimum balance in the consumer’s account, or under an overdraft service, as defined in 12 CFR 1005.17(a).

- The addition of an overdraft service, as defined in 12 CFR 1005.17(a), to an accepted access device.
- Generally, a consumer’s liability for an unauthorized EFT and investigation of errors. For specifics see 12 CFR 1005.12(a)(1)(iv). The addition of EFT features to credit cards.

The TILA and Regulation Z govern all of the following (12 CFR 1005.12(a)(2)):

- The issuance of credit cards as defined in Regulation Z.
- The addition of a credit feature to a debit card or other access device, including an access device for a prepaid account that would make the access device a credit card.
- The issuance of dual debit/credit cards, except for access devices (other than a prepaid account access device) whose only credit feature is a pre-existing agreement to cover account overdrafts or to maintain a minimum account balance, or that are an overdraft service.

Liability and Error Resolution Provisions

The liability and error resolution provisions in Regulation E (12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11) apply to:

- an extension of credit that occurs under an agreement between the consumer and a financial institution to extend credit when the consumer’s account is overdrawn, to maintain a specified minimum balance in the consumer’s account, or under an overdraft service, except with respect to a prepaid account (12 CFR 1005.12(a)(1)(iv)(A));
- with respect to a transaction that involves a covered separate credit feature and an asset feature on a prepaid account that are both accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61, an extension of credit that is incident to an EFT that occurs when the hybrid prepaid-credit card accesses both funds in the asset feature and a credit extension from the credit feature with respect to a particular transaction (12 CFR 1005.12(a)(1)(iv)(B));
- transactions that involve credit extended through a negative balance to the asset feature of a prepaid account that meets the conditions set forth in 12 CFR 1026.61(a)(4) (12 CFR 1005.12(a)(1)(iv)(C)); and
- with respect to transactions involving a prepaid account and a non-covered separate credit feature, as defined in 12 CFR 1026.61, Regulation E applies to transactions that access the prepaid account, as applicable (12 CFR 1005.12(a)(1)(iv)(D)).

As provided in 12 CFR 1005.12 and related commentary, for transactions involving access devices that also function as credit cards, the liability and error resolution provisions in Regulation E (12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11) or Regulation Z will apply depending on the nature of the transaction. See Comment 12(a)-5:

- Assume a combined access device-credit card can access a credit feature that is not an overdraft credit feature (i.e., when the card is used as a credit card, the card does not first access any funds in the asset account but draws only on a separate credit feature subject to Regulation Z). If the card is stolen and used as a credit card, for example, when the card is used to draw cash advances directly from the credit line, only the liability limits and error resolution provisions of Regulation Z will apply. If, however, the card is stolen and is used as an access device for example, for debit card purchases or cash withdrawals at an ATM from a checking account, only the liability limits and error resolution provisions of 12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11 will apply.
- Assume a combined access device-credit card that can access an overdraft credit feature (i.e., the credit feature is accessed only when the consumer uses the card to make purchases or other transactions for which there are insufficient or unavailable funds in the asset account). If the card is stolen and unauthorized transactions are made, 12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11 will apply to the unauthorized transactions funded entirely from the asset account. If the use of the card results in an extension of credit that is incident to an EFT that is partially funded by funds in the consumer's asset account and partially by credit extended under the overdraft credit feature, the error resolution provisions of Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.13(d) and (g) apply in addition to the Regulation E provisions, but the other liability limitations and error resolution provisions of Regulation Z do not. If an unauthorized transaction using the card is funded entirely by credit extended under the overdraft credit feature, the transaction is governed solely by the liability limitations and error resolution requirements of Regulation Z.

Subpart B—Requirements for Remittance Transfers

Generally, consumers in the United States who send money electronically to consumers or business recipients in foreign countries are sending remittance transfers. Under Regulation E Subpart B, remittance transfer providers generally must give consumers disclosures at certain stages of the remittance transfer process, and consumers have certain error resolution, cancellation, and refund rights. The requirements of subpart B apply to remittance transfer providers (12 CFR 1005.3(a)).

XII. Remittance transfer definitions 12 CFR 1005.30

The definitions in subpart A (12 CFR 1005.2) also apply to subpart B unless specifically modified or limited by subpart B. The definitions in subpart B (12 CFR 1005.30) are applicable only to subpart B.

Agent is an agent, authorized delegate, or person affiliated with a remittance transfer provider, as defined under state or other applicable law, when that person acts for a remittance transfer provider. A person is not deemed a remittance transfer provider when it performs activities as an agent on behalf of a remittance transfer provider (Comment 30(f)-1).

A business day is any day that the offices of a remittance transfer provider are open to the public for carrying on “substantially all business functions.”

Pre-Authorized remittance transfer is a remittance transfer authorized in advance to recur at substantially regular intervals.

Remittance transfer is an electronic transfer of funds requested by a consumer in a state to a designated recipient that is sent by a remittance transfer provider. The term applies whether or not the consumer holds an account and whether or not the transfer is an electronic fund transfer.

An electronic transfer of funds occurs when:

- A provider makes an electronic book entry between different settlement accounts to make the remittance transfer.
- A payment is made under a bill-payment service available to a consumer via computer or other electronic means, except in certain circumstances where a check, draft or similar paper instrument drawn on a consumer's account under the bill-payment service is mailed abroad.

An electronic transfer of funds does not occur where a sender mails funds directly to a recipient, or funds are provided to a courier for delivery to a foreign country (Comment 30(e)-1).

Transactions of $15 or less and certain transactions in connection with securities and commodities transfers that are excluded from the definition of an EFT are not remittance transfers (12 CFR 1005.30(e)(2) and 12 CFR 1005.3(c)(4)).

Remittance transfers include:

- Transfers in cash or by another method conducted through a money transmitter or a financial institution.
- Consumer wire transfers conducted by a financial institution upon a sender's request to wire money from the sender's account to a designated recipient.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- C. An addition of funds to a prepaid card by a participant in a prepaid card program, such as a prepaid card issuer or its agent, that is directly engaged with the sender to add these funds, where the prepaid card is sent or was previously sent by a participant in the prepaid card program to a person in a foreign country, even if a sender retains the ability to withdraw such funds.
- D. International ACH transactions sent by the sender's financial institution at the sender's request.
- E. Online bill payments and other electronic transfers that a sender schedules in advance, including preauthorized remittance transfers, made by the sender's financial institution at the sender's request to a designated recipient (Comment 30(e)-3).

Sender is a consumer in a state, who requests a remittance transfer primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. For account-based transfers, the location of the consumer's account will determine whether the consumer is located in a state. For transfers not made from an account that are requested by telephone or electronically, the remittance transfer provider may make the determination of whether a consumer is located in a state based on information provided by the consumer and any records associated with the consumer (Comment 30(g)-1). The commentary provides further guidance on the location of senders with respect to transfers from prepaid accounts; transfers from U.S. military installations abroad; when a transfer is for personal, family, or household purposes; and regarding transfers requested from non-consumer accounts (Comments 30(g)-1 through -3).

A designated recipient is any person identified by the name provided by a sender to receive a remittance transfer at a location in a foreign country. A designated recipient can be either a natural person or an organization such as a corporation (Comment 30(c)-1). Similar to the definition of "sender," for transfers to a designated recipient's account, where funds are to be received depends on where the recipient's account is located. The commentary provides further guidance on transfers to prepaid accounts (other than a prepaid account that is a payroll card account or government benefit account) and transfers to U.S. military installations abroad (Comment 30(c)-2).

"Remittance transfer provider" or "provider" is any person that provides remittance transfers for a consumer in the normal course of business, regardless of whether the consumer holds an account with such person (12 CFR 1005.30(f)(1)).

Whether a person provides remittance transfers in the "normal course of business" depends on the facts and circumstances, including the total number and frequency of remittance transfers sent by the provider. The rule also provides a safe harbor for a person that provided 500 or fewer remittance transfers in the previous calendar year and provides 500 or fewer remittance transfers in the current calendar year (a total via all channels). Such a person is deemed not to be providing remittance transfers in the normal course of business and is therefore not subject to the rule's requirements. In determining whether a person qualifies for the safe harbor, any transfers that are excluded from the definition of "remittance transfer," such as small value transactions or certain securities and commodities transfers are excluded. If a person exceeds the safe harbor criteria and is providing remittance transfers for consumers in the normal course of business, that person has a reasonable period of time, not to exceed six months, to begin complying with subpart B (12 CFR 1005.30(f)(2) and Comment 30(f)-2).

"Covered third-party fees" means any fees that are imposed on the remittance transfer by a person other than the remittance transfer provider that are not non-covered third-party fees. Fees imposed on the remittance transfer include only those fees that are charged to the designated recipient and are specifically related to the remittance transfer (Comment 30(h)-1). Examples include fees imposed on a remittance transfer by intermediary institutions in connection with a wire transfer (sometimes referred to as "lifting fees") and fees imposed on a remittance transfer by an agent of the provider at pick-up for receiving the transfer (Comment 30(h)-2).

"Non-covered third-party fees" means any fees imposed by the designated recipient's institution for receiving a remittance transfer into an account except if the institution acts as an agent of the remittance transfer provider. For example, a fee imposed by the designated recipient's institution for receiving an incoming transfer into an account is a non-covered third-party fee, if the institution is not acting as the agent of the remittance transfer provider. A designated recipient's account does not include a credit card, prepaid card, or a virtual account held by an Internet-based or mobile telephone company that is not a bank, savings association, credit union or equivalent institution (Comment 30(h)-3).

XIII. Disclosures--12 CFR 1005.31

Providers must give senders disclosures at certain stages of the remittance transfer process. The rule requires providers to give senders a pre-payment disclosure when a transfer request is made, but prior to payment for the transfer. Providers must also provide a receipt when payment is made for the transfer. Model disclosure forms are provided in Appendix A.

General form of disclosures --12 CFR 1005.31(a)

Required disclosures or optional disclosures permitted by 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1)(viii) or 12 CFR 1005.33(h)(3) must be clear and conspicuous and generally be provided to the sender in writing. Disclosures may contain commonly accepted or readily understandable abbreviations or symbols. Disclosures are clear and conspicuous if they are readily understandable and, in the case of written and electronic disclosures, the location and type size are readily noticeable to senders. Oral disclosures are clear and conspicuous when they are given at a volume and speed sufficient for a sender to hear and comprehend them. The commentary provides additional guidance on disclosures to a mobile telephone, by fax, and for transactions conducted partially by telephone (12 CFR 1005.31(a); Comments 31(a)(1)-1 and -2 and 31(a)(2)-1 through -5, and Comment 31(e)-1). The commentary provides additional guidance on disclosures to a mobile telephone, by fax, and for transactions conducted partially by telephone (12 CFR 1005.31(a); Comments 31(a)(1)-1 and -2 and 31(a)(2)-1 through -5, and Comment 31(e)-1). In addition, different foreign language requirements apply to transactions conducted by telephone, which are described in 12 CFR 1005.31(g)(2)-and -2 and 31(a)(2)-1 through -5, and Comment 31(e)-1). In addition, different foreign language requirements apply to transactions conducted by telephone, which are described in 12 CFR 1005.31(g)(2).

Pre-payment disclosures may be provided electronically without E-SIGN consent, if the sender electronically requests the provider to send the transfer. However, the receipt for the transaction may be provided electronically only with E-SIGN consent (12 CFR 1005.31(a)(2); Comment 31(a)(2)-1).

Disclosures also generally must be made in writing and in retainable form. For purposes of the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1005.31 and 1005.36 (e.g., pre-payment and receipt disclosures) the rule allows the remittance transfer provided to satisfy the requirement to provide disclosures in writing by providing those disclosures via fax, although it is not permissible to fax disclosures to a sender when that sender is present in the providers' branch or office. The rule permits disclosures to be provided on any size of paper, as long as the disclosures are clear and conspicuous. For example, a disclosure may be provided on a register receipt or on an 8.5" x 11" piece of paper. The rule sets out specific form and retainability requirements with respect to remittance transfer requests received electronically, as well as remittance transfers conducted over the phone, by mobile application, or by text. See 12 CFR 1005.31(a) and Comment 31(a)(2) for more details. For example, prepayment disclosures provided via mobile application or text message (when permitted by the rule) need not be retainable (12 CFR 1005.31(a)(2) and (a)(5)).

Additional requirements apply for certain transfers scheduled at least three days before the date of transfer that are conducted orally over the telephone or by mobile application or text messaging (12 CFR 1005.31(a)(3)(iv) and (a)(5)(iv)).

Disclosure requirements --12 CFR 1005.31(b)

Disclosures provided as applicable

The required disclosures need to be provided only to the extent applicable. A remittance transfer provider may choose to omit an item of information if it is inapplicable to a particular transaction. Alternatively, a provider may disclose a term and state that an amount or item is "not applicable," "N/A," or "None" (Comment 31(b)-1).

Substantially similar terms, language, and notices

Certain disclosures must be described using the terms set forth in 12 CFR 1005.31(b) or substantially similar terms. Terms may be more specific than those provided. For example, a remittance transfer provider sending funds may describe fees imposed by an agent at pick-up as "Pick-up Fees" in lieu of describing them as "Other Fees." Foreign language disclosures must contain accurate translations of the required terms, language, and notices as well as the disclosures permitted by 1005.31(b)(1)(viii) and 1005.33(h)(3) (Comment 31(b)-2).

Prepayment Disclosures --12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1)

A remittance transfer provider must provide the prepayment disclosure when the sender requests the remittance transfer, but prior to payment for the transfer. Unless an exception applies, the provider must disclose:

1. the amount to be transferred (transfer amount),
2. front-end fees imposed by the provider and any taxes collected on the remittance transfer by the provider (transfer fees and transfer taxes),
3. total amount of the transaction (the sum of the transfer amount and front-end fees and taxes),
4. the exchange rate,
5. any covered- third-party fees (other fees),
6. the total amount to be received by the designated recipient (total amount of the transaction minus covered third-party fees), and
7. a statement that non-covered third-party fees or taxes collected on the remittance transfer by a third person may apply to the remittance transfer and result in the designated recipient receiving less than the amount disclosed. In this statement, a provider also may, but is not required, to disclose in the currency in which the funds will be received, any applicable non-covered third-party fees or taxes collected by a person other than the provider.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

Transfer amount

Two transfer amount disclosures are required in the prepayment disclosures.

1. The transfer amount in the currency in which the sender funds the remittance transfer to show the calculation of the total amount of the transaction.
2. The transfer amount in the currency in which the funds will be made available to the designated recipient. This second transfer amount need not be disclosed if covered third-party fees are not imposed on the remittance transfer. The terms used to describe each transfer amount should be the same (Comment 31(b)(1)-2).

Fees and taxes

Fees imposed and taxes collected on the remittance transfer by a provider must be disclosed in the currency in which the transaction is funded, as applicable. Taxes collected on the remittance transfer by the provider include taxes imposed on the remittance transfer by a state or other governmental body (Comment 31(b)(1)-1(i)).

The fees and taxes required to be disclosed by 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1)(ii) include all fees imposed and all taxes collected on the remittance transfer by the provider, and include only those that are specifically related to the remittance transfer. For example, a provider must disclose any service fees imposed by an agent at the time of the transfer, and any state taxes collected on the remittance transfer (Comment 31(b)(1)-1(ii)).

Applicable exchange rate

If the designated recipient will receive funds in a currency other than the currency in which the remittance transfer is funded, a remittance transfer provider must disclose the exchange rate to be used by the provider for the remittance transfer (Comment 31(b)(1)(iv)-1).

Rounding

The exchange rate disclosed for the remittance transfer is required to be rounded on the disclosure. The provider may round to two, three, or four decimal places, at its option, but this must be done consistently for each currency. (Comment 31(b)(1)(iv)-2). However, the exchange rate used to calculate: (a) the transfer amount, (b) the fees and taxes imposed on the remittance transfer by a person other than the provider, and (c) the amount received by the designated recipient, is prior to any rounding. If an exchange rate need not be rounded, a provider must use that exchange rate to calculate these disclosures (Comment 31(b)(1)-3).

Exchange rate used

The exchange rate used by the provider for the remittance transfer need not have been set by the provider. For example, an exchange rate set by an intermediary institution and applied to the remittance transfer would be the exchange rate used for the remittance transfer and must be disclosed by the provider (Comment 31(b)(1)(iv)-3).

Disclosure of Covered Third-Party Fees

Covered third-party fees must be disclosed in the currency in which the funds will be received by the designated recipient, using the applicable exchange rate, or an estimated exchange rate to the extent permitted, prior to any rounding of the exchange rate. If a provider does not have specific knowledge regarding the currency in which the funds will be received, the provider may rely on a sender's representation as to the currency in which funds will be received. If a sender does not know the currency in which funds will be received, the provider may assume that the currency in which funds will be received is the currency in which the remittance transfer is funded (Comment 31(b)(1)(vi)-1).

Amount Received

The remittance transfer provider is required to disclose the amount that will be received by the designated recipient in the currency in which the funds will be received. The amount received must reflect the exchange rate, all fees imposed and all taxes collected on the remittance transfer by the remittance transfer provider, as well as any covered third-party fees required to be disclosed. The disclosed amount received must be reduced by the amount of any fees or taxes (except non-covered third-party fees or taxes collected on the remittance transfer by a person other than the provider) imposed on the remittance transfer that affect the amount received even if that amount is imposed or itemized separately from the transaction amount. (Comment 31(b)(1)(vii)-1).

Required disclaimer when non-covered third-party fees and taxes collected by a person other than the provider may apply

The provider is required to include a disclaimer that non-covered third-party fees or taxes may apply to the remittance transfer if such taxes and fees apply to a particular transfer or the provider does not know whether they apply. This disclosure may only be provided to the extent applicable. For example, if the designated recipient's institution is an agent of the provider and thus, non-covered third-party fees cannot apply to the transfer, the provider must disclose all fees imposed on the remittance transfer and may not provide the disclaimer regarding non-covered third-party fees (Comment 31(b)(1)(viii)-1).

Optional disclosure of non-covered third-party fees and taxes collected by a person other than the provider

The provider is permitted to disclose any non-covered third-party fees or taxes collected on the remittance transfer by a person other than the provider that will apply to a particular transaction if it knows the amount of such fees and taxes. Additionally, the provider is permitted to disclose an estimate of such fees and taxes, provided any estimates are based on reasonable source of information (Comment 31(b)(1)(viii)-2; 12 CFR 1005.32(b)(3); and Comment 32(b)(3)-1).

Receipt --12 CFR 1005.31(b)(2)

When payment is made, a remittance transfer provider must provide a receipt to a sender disclosing all applicable information required in the pre-payment disclosure. The receipt must also disclose, as applicable:

- A. the date of availability of the funds (date available);
- B. the name and, if provided by the sender, the telephone number and/or address of the designated recipient (recipient);
- C. a statement about the sender's error resolution and cancellation;
- D. specified contact information for the remittance transfer provider; and
- E. the transfer date for remittance transfers scheduled at least three business days in advance, or the first transfer in a series of preauthorized transfers.

The provider must also provide a statement that the sender can contact the state agency that licenses or charters the remittance transfer provider with respect to the particular transfer (if there is such a state agency), and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) for questions or complaints about the remittance transfer provider. The statement must include the name of the agency(ies), telephone number(s), and website address(es).

Date funds will be available

The provider must disclose the date in the foreign country on which the funds will be available to the designated recipient, using the term “Date Available” or a substantially similar term. If a provider does not know the exact date on which funds will be available, the provider may disclose the latest date on which the funds will be available. The provider may also disclose that funds “may be available sooner” or use a substantially similar term to inform senders that funds may be available to the designated recipient on a date earlier than the date disclosed (Comment 31(b)(2)-1).

Agencies required to be disclosed

The provider must disclose information about a state agency that licenses or charters the provider with respect to the particular remittance transfer. If a financial institution is solely regulated by a Federal agency, the institution does not need to disclose information about a state agency. However, information about the CFPB must be provided whether or not the CFPB is the provider’s primary Federal regulator. (Comment 31(b)(2)-2). If a provider is licensed in multiple states, and the state agency that licenses the provider with respect to the remittance transfer is determined by the sender’s location, a provider may make the determination of the sender’s state based on information provided by the sender and on any records associated with the sender. A state-chartered bank must disclose information about the state agency that granted its charter, regardless of the location of the sender (Comment 31(b)(2)-3).

Date of transfer on receipt

For remittance transfers scheduled at least three business days in advance, or the first transfer in a series of preauthorized transfers, the date of transfer for the remittance transfer must be disclosed on the receipt. Additional disclosures apply to subsequent preauthorized remittance transfers, as described below regarding 12 CFR 1005.36(d) (Comments 31(b)(2)-5).

Cancellation Disclosure

The provider may provide the three-business-day right to cancel notice (for transfers scheduled three or more business days before the transfer date) and the 30-minute right to cancel notice (for transfers scheduled fewer than three business days in advance), on the same disclosure, with a checkbox or other method to clearly designate the applicable cancellation period. For transfers scheduled three or more business days before the transfer date, the cancellation disclosure should be phrased and formatted in such a way that it is clear to the sender which cancellation period is applicable to the date of transfer disclosed on the receipt (Comment 31(b)(2)-6).

Combined disclosure --12 CFR 1005.31(b)(3)

As an alternative to providing separate pre-payment and receipt disclosures, a remittance transfer provider may provide the information in the receipt in a single disclosure when the sender requests the remittance transfer, but prior to payment for the transfer. If this combined disclosure is provided and the sender completes the transfer, the remittance transfer provider must provide the sender with proof of payment when payment is made for the remittance transfer. For one-time transfers scheduled at least five business days in advance, or for the first in a series of preauthorized transfers, the provider may provide confirmation that the transaction has been scheduled in lieu of the proof of payment if payment is not processed at the time the remittance transfer is scheduled. No further proof of payment is required when payment is later processed.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

Proof of payment/confirmation of scheduling

The proof of payment or confirmation of scheduling must be clear and conspicuous, provided in writing or electronically, and provided in a retainable form. The proof of payment for the transaction may be provided on the same piece of paper as the combined disclosure or on a separate piece of paper. A provider may also provide this additional information to a sender on a separate piece of paper when payment is made (12 CFR 1005.31(b)(3)(ii) and Comment 31(b)(3)-1).

Long form error resolution and cancellation notice—12 CFR 1005.31(b)(4)

At the sender's request, a remittance transfer provider is required promptly to provide a notice describing the sender's error resolution and cancellation rights, using language set forth in Model Form A-36 of Appendix A or substantially similar language. For any remittance transfer scheduled by the sender at least three business days before the date of the transfer, the description of the rights of the sender regarding cancellation must instead reflect the requirements of 12 CFR 1005.36(c).

Specific format of disclosures --12 CFR 1005.31(c)

Grouping of disclosed information

Disclosures related to transfer amount, transfer fees and taxes imposed by the provider, and the total amount of the transaction generally must be grouped together. Similarly, disclosures related to the transfer amount in the currency to be made available to the designated recipient, covered third-party fees, taxes collected on the remittance by the provider, the total amount to be received by the designated recipient, and the disclaimer statement generally must be grouped together. Information is grouped together if multiple disclosures are in close proximity to one another and a sender can reasonably calculate the total amount of the transaction and the amount that will be received by the designated recipient (12 CFR 1005.31(c)(1) and Comment 31(c)(1)-1).

Proximity of disclosed information

The exchange rate used for the remittance transfer generally must be disclosed in close proximity to the other information required in the pre-payment disclosure. Disclosures on error resolution and cancellation rights must generally be disclosed in close proximity to the other disclosures required on the receipt (12 CFR 1005.31(c)(2)).

Prominence and size of disclosures

Disclosures required by subpart B or permitted by 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1)(viii) that are provided in writing or electronically, other than disclosures permitted to be provided via mobile application or text message, must be in a minimum of eight-point font and in equal prominence to each other. They must be provided on the front of the page on which the disclosures are printed (12 CFR 1005.31(c)(3)).

Segregation of disclosures from other information

Disclosures that are provided in writing or electronically, other than disclosures permitted to be provided via mobile application or text message, must be segregated from everything else and must contain only information that is "directly related" to the disclosures (12 CFR 1005.31(c)(4)).

The following is "directly related" information:

- A. The date and time of the transaction;
- B. The sender's name and contact information;
- C. The location at which the designated recipient may pick up the funds;
- D. The confirmation or other identification code;
- E. A company name and logo;
- F. An indication that a disclosure is or is not a receipt or other indicia of proof of payment;
- G. A designated area for signatures or initials;
- H. A statement that funds may be available sooner;
- I. Instructions regarding the retrieval of funds, such as the number of days the funds will be available to the recipient before they are returned to the sender;
- J. A statement that the provider makes money from foreign currency exchange; and
- K. Disclosure of any non-covered third-party fees and any taxes collected by a person other than the provider (Comment 31(c)(4)-2).

Terms used in the case of estimated disclosures

A remittance transfer provider may provide estimates of the amounts required to be disclosed in the pre-payment disclosure, receipt, and combined disclosure to the extent permitted by 12 CFR 1005.32. An estimate must be described using the term "Estimated" or a substantially similar term in close proximity to the estimated term or terms. For example, a remittance transfer provider could describe an estimated disclosure as “Estimated Transfer Amount,” “Other Estimated Fees and Taxes,” or “Total to Recipient (Est.)” (12 CFR 1005.31(d) and Comment 31(d)-1).

Request to send a remittance transfer

Determining whether a consumer has requested a remittance transfer depends on the facts and circumstances. A sender that asks a provider to send a remittance transfer, and provides transaction-specific information to the provider in order to send funds to a designated recipient, has requested a remittance transfer. On the other hand, a consumer who solely inquires about that day’s rates and fees to send to a particular country has not requested the provider to send a remittance transfer (Comment 31(e)-1).

When payment is made

Payment is made when a sender provides cash to the remittance transfer provider or when payment is authorized (Comment 31(e)-2).

Disclosures related to mobile application and text message transactions. If a transaction is conducted entirely by telephone via mobile application or text message, a receipt may be mailed or delivered to the sender pursuant to the timing requirements for transfers conducted entirely by telephone (Comment 31(e)-4).

Accuracy of disclosures -- when payment is made

Disclosures required by Subpart B or permitted by 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1)(viii) must be accurate when a sender makes payment for the remittance transfer, except to the extent estimates are permitted. A remittance transfer provider is not required to guarantee the terms of the remittance transfer in the pre-payment disclosures for any specific period of time. However, if any of these disclosures are not accurate when a sender makes payment for the remittance transfer, the provider must give new disclosures before accepting payment (12 CFR 1005.31(f) and Comment 31(f)-1).

Foreign Language Disclosures – 12 CFR 1005.31(g)

Written and electronic disclosures required by subpart B or permitted by 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1)(viii) generally must be provided in English and in each foreign language principally used to advertise, solicit, or market remittance transfer services at the office in which a sender conducts a transaction or asserts an error. Alternatively, written and electronic disclosures can be provided in English and in the foreign language primarily used by the sender with the remittance transfer provider, provided such foreign language is principally used to advertise, solicit, or market remittance transfers at the office in which a sender conducts a transaction or asserts an error. For transfers requested orally, by text message, or mobile application, the disclosures must be in the language primarily used by the sender to communicate with the transfer provider (12 CFR 1005.31(g)).

Number of foreign languages used in written disclosure

There is no limit to the number of languages that may be used on a single document, but such disclosures must be clear and conspicuous. If the remittance transfer provider chooses to provide written and electronic disclosures in English and in the foreign language primarily used by the sender with the remittance transfer provider, it may provide disclosures in a single document with both languages or in two separate documents with one document in English and the other document in the applicable foreign language (Comment 31(g)-1).

Language “primarily used”

The language primarily used by the sender with the remittance transfer provider to conduct the transaction is the primary language used by the sender with the remittance transfer provider to convey the information necessary to complete the transaction. Similarly, the language primarily used by the sender with the remittance transfer provider to assert the error is the primary language used by the sender with the remittance transfer provider to provide the information required to assert an error (Comment 31(g)-2).

Language “principally” used

Whether a foreign language is principally used by the remittance transfer provider to advertise, solicit, or market is determined from all relevant facts and circumstances, including:

- A. The frequency with which the foreign language is used in advertising, soliciting, or marketing of remittance transfer services at that office;
- B. The prominence of the advertising, soliciting, or marketing of remittance transfer services in that foreign language at that office; and
- C. The specific foreign language terms used in the advertising, soliciting, or marketing of remittance transfer services at that office (Comment 31(g)(1)-1(i)).

Language used to advertise, solicit, or market

Any commercial message in a foreign language, appearing in any medium, that promotes directly or indirectly the availability of remittance transfer services constitutes advertising, soliciting, or marketing in such foreign language (Comment 31(g)(1)-2).

VI. Deposits — EFTA

Office

An office includes any physical location, telephone number, or website of a remittance transfer provider where a sender may conduct a remittance transfer or assert an error for a remittance transfer (Comment 31(g)(1)-3).

At the office

Any advertisement, solicitation, or marketing is considered to be made at the office in which a sender conducts a transaction or asserts an error if it is posted, provided, or made: at a physical office; on a website of a remittance transfer provider that may be used by senders to conduct remittance transfers or assert errors; during a telephone call with a remittance transfer provider that may be used by senders to conduct remittance transfers or assert errors; or via mobile application or text message if the mobile application or text message may be used by senders to conduct remittance transfers or assert errors (Comment 31(g)(1)-4).

XIV. Estimates —12 CFR 1005.32

Disclosures for which estimates may be used

Estimates may be used in certain circumstances for certain information required in pre-payment disclosures, receipts and combined disclosures.

Temporary exception for insured institutions-- 12 CFR 1005.32(a)

NOTE: The temporary exception is available for insured institutions until July 21, 2020.

Estimates may be provided for certain amounts required to be disclosed in the pre-payment disclosures, receipts and combined disclosures if:

- A. the remittance transfer provider cannot determine the exact amounts for reasons beyond its control;
- B. the remittance transfer provider is an insured institution; and
- C. the remittance transfer is sent from the sender's account with the institution (not including a prepaid account, unless the prepaid account is a payroll card account or government benefit account).

An insured institution means an insured depository institution (including an uninsured U.S branch and agency of a foreign depository institution) and an insured credit union (12 CFR 1005.32(a)(3)).

Control

An insured institution cannot determine exact amounts “for reasons beyond its control” when a person other than the insured institution or with which the insured institution has no correspondent relationship sets the exchange rate or imposes a covered third-party fee required to be disclosed. For example, if an insured institution has a correspondent relationship with an intermediary financial institution in another country and that intermediary institution sets the exchange rate or imposes a fee for remittance transfers sent from the insured institution to the intermediary institution, then this exception is not applicable and the insured institution must determine exact amounts for the disclosures because the determination of those amounts are not beyond the insured institution's control (Comment 32(a)(1)-1).

Covered third-party fees

An insured institution cannot determine the exact covered third-party fees to disclose if, for example, an intermediary institution with which the insured institution does not have a correspondent relationship, imposes a transfer or conversion fee. On the other hand, an insured institution can determine the exact covered third-party fees required to be disclosed if it has agreed upon the specific fees with an intermediary correspondent institution, and this correspondent institution is the only institution in the transmittal route to the designated recipient's institution (Comments 32(a)(1)-2(ii) and -3(ii)).

The temporary exception is available for insured institutions until July 21, 2015.

Permanent exception for transfers to certain countries--12 CFR 1005.32(b)(1)

Estimates may be provided in pre-payment disclosures, receipts or combined disclosures for transfers to certain countries if a remittance transfer provider cannot determine the exact amounts at the time the disclosure is required either because:

- A. The laws of the recipient country do not permit such a determination, or
- B. The method by which transactions are made in the recipient country does not permit such determination.

Laws of the recipient country

The laws of the recipient country do not permit a remittance transfer provider to determine exact amounts required to be disclosed when a law or regulation of the recipient country (e.g., currency exchange or certain privacy laws) do not allow the person making funds directly available to the designated recipient to determine the exact amounts at the time the disclosure is required. A typical example is where the law requires an exchange rate to be either:

- A. Set by the government of the recipient country after the remittance transfer provider sends the remittance transfer; or
- B. Set when the designated recipient receives the funds (Comment 32(b)(1)-1).

Method by which transactions are made in the recipient country

The method by which transactions are made in the recipient country does not permit a remittance transfer provider to determine exact amounts required to be disclosed when transactions are sent via international ACH on terms negotiated between the United States government and the recipient country's government, under which the exchange rate is a rate set by the recipient country's central bank or other governmental authority after the provider sends the remittance transfer (Comment 32(b)(1)-3).

Safe harbor list

The CFPB published a list of countries whereby a remittance transfer provider may provide estimates for the exchange rate, the transfer amount, covered third-party fees and total amount to the recipient, unless the provider has information that a country on the list legally permits the provider to determine exact disclosure amounts. If a country does not appear on the CFPB's list, the provider may provide estimates if it determines that the recipient country does not legally permit or the method by which transactions are conducted in that country does not permit the provider to determine exact disclosure amounts (Comments 32(b)(1)-5 and 32(b)(1)-6). The list of countries that became effective February 7, 2013 and remains current as of June 2018 is Aruba, Brazil, China, Ethiopia, and Libya.

Change in laws of recipient country

If the laws of a recipient country change such that a remittance transfer provider can determine exact amounts, the remittance transfer provider must begin providing exact amounts for the required disclosures as soon as reasonably practicable. If the laws of a recipient country change such that the provider cannot determine exact disclosure amounts, the provider may provide estimates even if that country does not appear on the list published by the CFPB (Comment 32(b)(1)-7).

Permanent exception for transfers scheduled before the date of transfer—12 CFR 1005.32(b)(2)

For remittance transfers scheduled five or more business days before the date of the transfer, estimates may be provided for the exchange rate, transfer amount, covered third-party fees

(where the exchange rate is also estimated and affects such fees) and the total amount to recipient, if at the time the sender schedules such a transfer, the provider agrees to a sender's request to fix the amount to be transferred in the currency in which the remittance transfer will be received and not the currency in which it is funded. For example, if a sender schedules a wire transfer to be sent from the sender's bank account denominated in U.S. dollars but to be paid to the recipient in Euro, the provider is allowed to estimate the transfer amount, front-end fees or taxes collected by the provider (if based on the amount transferred), and the total amount of the transaction. The provider is also allowed to estimate any covered third-party fees if the exchange rate is also estimated and the estimated exchange rate affects the amount of fees. (12 CFR 1005.32(b)(2) and Comment 32(b)(2)-1).

Permanent Exception for Optional Disclosure of Non-Covered Third-Party Fees and Taxes Collected on the Remittance Transfer by a Person Other Than the Provider--12 CFR 1005.32(b)(3)

The remittance transfer provider may provide estimates (as part of the required disclaimer statement) for applicable non-covered third-party fees and taxes collected on the remittance transfer by a person other than the provider, if such estimates are based on reasonable sources of information. Reasonable sources of information may include, for example: information obtained from recent transfers to the same institution or the same country or region; fee schedules from the recipient institution; fee schedules from the recipient institution's competitors; surveys of recipient institution fees in the same country or region as the recipient institution; information provided or surveys of recipient institutions' regulators or taxing authorities; commercially or publicly available databases, services or sources; and information or resources developed by international nongovernmental organizations or intergovernmental organizations (Comment 32(b)(3)-1).

Bases for estimates --12 CFR 1005.32(c) and (d)

If a remittance transfer provider qualifies for either the temporary or permanent exception, the rule allows two bases for estimating information in the disclosures:

1. The estimates must generally be based on any of the approaches listed in the rule (12 CFR 1005.32 (c)(1)).
2. Alternatively, the estimates may be based on an approach that is not listed, provided that the designated recipient receives the same, or greater, amount of funds than the remittance transfer provider disclosed.

For remittance transfers scheduled five or more business days before the date of the transfer, estimates must be based on the exchange rate or, where applicable, the estimated exchange rate that the provider would have used or did use that day to provide disclosures to a sender requesting such a remittance transfer to be made on the same day.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

Approaches listed in the rule

Estimates of the exchange rate

For remittance transfers sent via international ACH, the estimate must be based on the most recent exchange rate set by the recipient country's central bank or other governmental authority and reported by a Federal Reserve Bank. For any remittance transfers for which estimates are permitted, the exchange rate may be estimated based on the most recent publicly available wholesale exchange rate and any applicable spread that the remittance transfer provider or its correspondent typically applies for remittance transfers for that currency or the most recent exchange rate offered or used by the person making funds available directly to the designated recipient or by the person setting the exchange rate (12 CFR 1005.32(c)(1)).

Where the exchange rate for a remittance transfer sent via international ACH that qualifies for the permanent exception is set the following business day, the most recent exchange rate available for a transfer is the exchange rate set for the day that the disclosure is provided, i.e. the current business day's exchange rate (Comment 32(c)(1)-1).

Publicly available

Examples of publicly available sources of information containing the most recent wholesale exchange rate for a currency include U.S. news services, such as Bloomberg, the Wall Street Journal, and the New York Times; a recipient country's national news services, and a recipient country's central bank or other government agency (Comment 32(c)(1)-2).

Spread applied to the wholesale exchange rate

An estimate for disclosing the exchange rate based on the most recent publicly available wholesale exchange rate must also reflect any spread the remittance transfer provider typically applies to the wholesale exchange rate for remittance transfers for a particular currency (Comment 32(c)(1)-3).

Most recent exchange rate

If the exchange rate with respect to a particular currency is published or provided multiple times throughout the day because the exchange rate fluctuates throughout the day, a remittance transfer provider may use any exchange rate available on that day to determine the most recent exchange rate (Comment 32(c)(1)-4).

Estimates of the transfer amount and covered third-party fees in the currency in which funds will be received by the designated recipient

Estimates of the transfer amount in the currency in which the funds will be received by the designated recipient as well as covered third-party fees imposed as a percentage of the amount transferred must be based on the estimated exchange rate, prior to any rounding (12 CFR 1005.32(c)(2) and (3)(i)).

Estimates of the fees imposed by intermediary or final institution

Estimates for covered third-party fees imposed by intermediary or final institutions that act as intermediaries or by the designated recipient's institution must be based on the remittance transfer provider's most recent remittance transfer to the designated recipient's institution, or a representative transmittal route identified by the remittance transfer provider (12 CFR 1005.32(c)(3)(ii)).

Estimates of the amount of currency that will be received by the designated recipient

Estimates for the amount of currency that will be received by the designated recipient must be based on the estimates provided in accordance with 12 CFR 1005.31(c)(1) through (3) as applicable for the transaction (12 CFR 1005.32(c)(4)).

XV. Procedures for resolving errors (12 CFR 1005.33)

Definition of error (12 CFR 1005.33(a))

In connection with an error asserted under 12 CFR 1005.33, the term error means:

- A. Generally, an incorrect amount paid by a sender in connection with a remittance transfer;
- B. A computational or bookkeeping error made by the remittance transfer provider relating to the remittance transfer;
- C. The failure, generally, to make available to a designated recipient the amount of currency required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(vii) and stated in the disclosure provided to the sender unless the disclosure stated an estimate of the amount paid and the difference results from application of the actual exchange rate, fees, and taxes, rather than any estimated amount;
- D. The failure, generally, to make funds available to a designated recipient by the date of availability stated in the disclosure provided to the sender; or

- E. The sender's request for documentation required by 12 CFR 1005.31 or for additional information or clarification concerning a remittance transfer, including a request a sender makes to determine whether an error exists. (see more detailed discussion of errors and exceptions below).

Error due to incorrect amount of currency paid by sender

This type of error covers circumstances in which a sender pays an amount that differs from the total amount of the transaction, including fees imposed in connection with the transfer, stated in the receipt or combined disclosure provided. However, there is no error if the disclosure appropriately stated an estimate of the amount paid by the sender and the difference results from application of the actual exchange rate, fees, and taxes, rather than any estimated amounts (12 CFR 1005.33(a)(1)(i) and Comment 33(a)-1).

Error due to incorrect amount of currency received

This type of error covers circumstances in which the designated recipient receives an amount of currency that differs from the amount of currency identified on the disclosures provided to the sender. It also covers circumstances in which the remittance transfer provider transmits an amount that differs from the amount requested by the sender. There are three general exceptions to this. There is no error if:

- A. the disclosure appropriately, under one of the two exceptions under 12 CFR 1005.32, stated an estimate of the amount of currency to be received and the difference results from application of the actual exchange rate, fees, and taxes, rather than any estimated amounts, or
- B. the failure was caused by extraordinary circumstances outside the remittance transfer provider's control; or
- C. the difference results from the application of non-covered third-party fees or taxes collected on the remittance transfer by a person other than the provider and the provider provided the required disclaimer (12 CFR 1005.33(a)(1)(iii)).

A designated recipient may receive an amount of currency that differs from the amount of currency disclosed and an error has occurred if for example:

1. an exchange rate other than the disclosed rate is applied to the remittance transfer (Comment 33(a)-2), or
2. the provider provides the sender a receipt stating an amount of currency that will be received by the designated recipient, which does not reflect additional covered third-party fees that are imposed by the receiving agent in the destination country (Comment 33(a)-3(iii)).
However, if the designated recipient will receive less than the amount of currency disclosed on the receipt due solely to the additional foreign taxes that the provider was not required to disclose, no error has occurred (Comment 33(a)-3(ii)).

Exception for extraordinary circumstances outside the remittance transfer provider's control

If the provider fails to make the amount of currency disclosed available to the designated recipient, such an occurrence is not an error if such failure was caused by extraordinary circumstances outside the remittance transfer provider's control that could not have been reasonably anticipated (12 CFR 1005.33(a)(1)(iii)(B)). Examples include war or civil unrest, natural disaster, garnishment or attachment of some of the funds after the transfer is sent, and government actions or restrictions that could not have been reasonably anticipated by the remittance transfer provider, such as the imposition of foreign currency controls or foreign taxes unknown at the time the receipt or combined disclosure is provided (Comment 33(a)-4). Note that foreign taxes are not required to be disclosed. However, if a provider, believing that there is no applicable foreign tax, elects not to provide a disclaimer pursuant to 1005.31(b)(1)(viii), no error has occurred if a new tax is imposed that could not have been reasonably anticipated at the time the receipt or combined disclosure was required to be given.

Error due to failure to make funds available by disclosed date of availability

This error generally covers disputes about the failure to make remittance transfer funds available to a designated recipient by the disclosed date of availability. Examples include late or non-delivery of a remittance transfer, delivery of funds to the wrong account, the fraudulent pick-up of a remittance transfer in a foreign country by a person other than the designated recipient, and the recipient agent or institution's retention of the remittance transfer, instead of making the funds available to the designated recipient (Comment 33(a)-5).

There is no error if funds were not made available by the disclosed date due to:

- A. extraordinary circumstances outside the remittance transfer provider's control that could not have been reasonably anticipated;
- B. delays related to a necessary investigation or other special action by the remittance transfer provider or a third party as required by the provider's fraud screening procedures or in accordance with the Bank Secrecy Act, Office of Foreign Assets Control requirements, or similar laws or requirements; or

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- C. the remittance transfer was made with fraudulent intent by the sender or any person acting in concert with the sender (i.e., friendly fraud); or
- D. the sender provided the remittance transfer provider an incorrect account number or recipient institution identifier for the designated recipient's account or institution (12 CFR 1005.33(a)(1)(iv)), and:
 - 1. the remittance provider can demonstrate that the sender provided an incorrect account number or recipient institution identifier to the provider in connection with the remittance transfer;
 - 2. the provider used reasonable available means prior to or when sending the transfer to verify (for recipient institution identifier errors only) that the recipient institution identifier provided by the sender corresponded to the recipient institution name provided by the sender;
 - 3. the provider provided notice to the sender (prior to payment for the remittance transfer) that, in the event the sender provided an incorrect account number or recipient institution identifier, the sender could lose the transfer amount.
 - 4. the incorrect account number or recipient institution identifier resulted in the deposit of the remittance transfer into a customer's account that is not the designated recipient's account; and
 - 5. the provider promptly used reasonable efforts to recover the amount that was to be received by the designated recipient (12 CFR 1005.33(h)).

Account number or recipient institution identifier

Account number and recipient institution identifier refer to alphanumeric account or institution identifiers other than names or addresses, such as account numbers, routing numbers, Canadian transit numbers, International Bank Account Numbers, Business Identifier Codes and other similar account or institution identifiers used to route a transaction. Designated recipient's account refers to an asset account but does not include a credit card, prepaid card, or a virtual account held by an Internet-based or mobile telephone company that is not a bank, savings association, credit union or equivalent institution (Comment 33(a)-8).

Reasonable methods of verification

Reasonably available means may include accessing a directory of Business Identifier Codes and verifying that the code provided by the sender matches the provided institution name, and, if possible, the specific branch or location provided by the sender. A provider may also rely on other commercially available databases or directories to check other recipient institution identifiers. The requirement to verify would be met if no reasonably available means exist to verify the accuracy of the recipient institution identifier if the other conditions are satisfied (Comment 33(h)-1).

Reasonable efforts

Whether a provider has used reasonable efforts does not depend on whether the provider is ultimately successful in recovering the amount that was to be received by the designated recipient. If the remittance transfer provider is requested to provide documentation or other supporting information in order for the pertinent institution or authority to obtain the proper authorization for the return of the incorrectly credited amount, reasonable efforts to recover the amount include timely provision of any such documentation to the extent that it is available and permissible under law (Comment 33(h)-2).

Promptness of Reasonable Efforts

Whether a provider acts promptly to use reasonable efforts depends on the facts and circumstances. For example, if, before the disclosed date of availability the sender informs the provider that the sender provided a wrong account number, the provider will have acted promptly if it attempts to contact the recipient's institution before the date of availability (Comment 33(h)-3).

Failure to make funds available by disclosed date of availability due to circumstances outside the remittance transfer provider's control

A remittance transfer provider's failure to deliver or transmit a remittance transfer by the disclosed date of availability is not an error if such failure was caused by extraordinary circumstances outside the remittance transfer provider's control that could not have been reasonably anticipated. Examples of such circumstances include war or civil unrest, natural disaster, garnishment or attachment of funds after the transfer is sent, and government actions or restrictions that could not have been reasonably anticipated by the remittance transfer provider, such as the imposition of foreign currency controls (Comment 33(a)-6).

Issues that are not considered errors under subpart B

The following are not errors:

- A. An inquiry about the status of a remittance transfer except where the funds from the transfer were not made available to a designated recipient by the disclosed date of availability;
- B. A request for information for tax or other recordkeeping purposes;

- C. A change requested by the designated recipient that the remittance transfer provider or others involved in the remittance transfer decide to accommodate; or
- D. A change in the amount or type of currency received by the designated recipient from the amount or type of currency stated in the disclosure provided to the sender if the remittance transfer provider relied on information provided by the sender (12 CFR 1005.33(a)(2) and Comment 33(a)-10)).

Notice of error from sender - 12 CFR 1005.33(b)

Person asserting or discovering error

The error resolution procedures apply only when a notice of error is received from the sender (Comment 33(b)-1).

Timing of error notice

The notice of error must be received by the remittance transfer provider within 180 days of the disclosed date of availability of the remittance transfer. (12 CFR 1005.33(b)(1)). However, if the notice of error is based on documentation, additional information, or clarification provided by the remittance transfer provider, then notice is timely if it is received by the remittance transfer provider the later of:

- A. 180 days after the disclosed date of availability of the remittance transfer, or
- B. 60 days after the provider sent the documentation, information, or clarification that had been requested (12 CFR 1005.33(b)(2)).

Content of error notice

Errors may be reported orally or in writing. The notice of error is effective so long as the remittance transfer provider is able to identify:

- A. The sender's name and telephone number or address (or email address)
- B. The recipient's name and if known, telephone number and address;
- C. The remittance transfer to which the notice of error applies; and
- D. Why the sender believes an error exists and if possible, the type, date, and amount of the error, except for errors involving requests for documentation, additional information or clarification.

For example, the sender could provide the confirmation number or code that would be used by the designated recipient to pick up the transfer, or other identification number or code supplied by the remittance transfer provider in connection with the transfer, if the number or code is sufficient for the remittance transfer provider to identify the sender (and contact information), designated recipient, and the transfer in question (Comment 33(b)-2 and 3).

Effect of late notice

A remittance transfer provider is not required to comply with the error resolution requirements for any notice of error from a sender that is received more than 180 days from the disclosed date of availability of the remittance transfer or, if applicable, more than 60 days after a provider sent documentation, additional information, or clarification requested by the sender (Comment 33(b)-4).

Notice of error provided to agent

A notice of error provided by a sender to an agent of the remittance transfer provider is deemed to be received by the provider when the agent receives it (Comment 33(b)-5).

Consumer notice of error resolution rights

In addition to the requirement to provide an abbreviated notice of the consumer's error resolution rights on the receipt or combined notice, the remittance transfer provider must make available to a sender, upon request, a notice providing a full description of the sender's error resolution rights, using language set forth in Appendix A (Model Form A-36) or substantially similar language (Comment 33(b)-6).

Time Limits and Extent of Investigation - 12 CFR 1005.33(c)

A remittance transfer provider must investigate promptly and determine whether an error occurred within 90 days of receiving a notice of error. The remittance transfer provider must report the results to the sender within three business days after completing its investigation and include notice of any remedies available for correcting any error that the provider determines has occurred. If the remittance transfer provider determines during its investigation that an error occurred as described by the sender, the remittance provider may inform the sender of its findings either orally or in writing. However, if the provider determines that no error or a different error occurred, the provider must provide a written explanation of the findings, and note the sender's right to request the documents on which the provider relied in making its determination (12 CFR 1005.33(d)(1) Comment 33(c)-1).

Remedies

If the remittance transfer provider determines an error (as defined in subpart B) occurred and the error relates to:

- A. an incorrect amount paid by the sender,

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- B. a computational or bookkeeping error made by the remittance transfer provider, or
- C. failure to make the amount of currency stated in the disclosures available to the designated recipient, the provider must either:

- A. refund the amount of funds provided by the sender in connection with a remittance transfer which was not properly transmitted, or the amount appropriate to resolve the error; or
- B. make available to the designated recipient, the amount appropriate to resolve the error without additional cost to the sender or the designated recipient (12 CFR 1005.33(c)(2)(i)).

If the error relates to a sender's request for documentation or additional information or clarification to determine whether an error exists, the remittance transfer provider must provide the requested information (12 CFR 1005.33(c)(2)(iv)).

Remedy in the case of failure to make funds available by the disclosed date of availability

- A. Where failure to make funds available by the disclosed date of availability occurred due to incorrect or insufficient information provided by the sender:

The remittance transfer provider is required to refund to the sender the amount of funds that was not properly transmitted, or the amount appropriate to resolve the error, and any fees and taxes paid by the sender in connection with the remittance transfer, within three business days of providing the written explanation of findings. However, the provider may agree to the sender's request, upon receiving the results of the error investigation, to apply the funds towards a new remittance transfer, rather than be refunded, if the provider has not yet processed a refund.

The provider may deduct from the amount refunded or applied towards a new transfer any fees actually deducted by a person other than the provider (except those that will ultimately be refunded to the provider) on or, to the extent not prohibited by law, taxes actually collected on the remittance transfer as part of the first unsuccessful remittance transfer attempt and inform the sender of the deduction and reason. The provider may not deduct its own fees. The agreement to apply the funds towards a new transfer is treated as a new remittance transfer and the provider must provide new disclosures in accordance with 12 CFR 1005.31 and all other applicable provisions of subpart B (12 CFR 1005.33(c)(2)(iii) and Comments 33(c)-11 and -12).

- B. All other instances of failure to make funds available by the disclosed date of availability:

As applicable, the remittance transfer provider must either:

1. Refund to the sender, the amount of funds which was not properly transmitted or the amount appropriate to resolve the error; or
2. Make available to the designated recipient the amount appropriate to resolve the error without additional cost to the sender or to the designated recipient; and

Refund to the sender any fees imposed and, to the extent not prohibited by law, taxes collected on the remittance transfer (12 CFR 1005.33(c)(2)(ii)).

Designation of requested remedy

The provider may request that the sender indicate the preferred remedy when providing the notice of the error. If the provider does so, it should indicate that a resend remedy may be unavailable if the error occurred because the sender provided incorrect or insufficient information. If the sender does not indicate the desired remedy at the time of providing notice of error, the remittance transfer provider must notify the sender of any available remedies in the written explanation of findings (Comment 33(c)-3).

Default remedy (except where the sender provided incorrect or insufficient information)

The provider may set a default remedy that the remittance transfer provider will use if the sender does not designate a remedy within a reasonable time after receiving the written explanation of findings. If a default remedy is provided, the remittance transfer provider must correct the error within one business day or as soon as reasonably practicable, after the reasonable time for the sender to designate the remedy has passed. For purposes of designating a remedy, ten days is deemed a reasonable time (Comment 33(c)-4).

Amount appropriate to resolve the error

The amount appropriate to resolve the error is the specific amount of transferred funds that should have been received if the remittance transfer had taken place without error. It does not include consequential damages. (Comment 33(c)-5).

Form of refund

Where a refund may be issued, a remittance transfer provider may generally, at its discretion, issue a refund either in cash or in the same form of payment that was initially provided by the sender for the remittance transfer (Comment 33(c)-6).

Remedies for incorrect amount paid

If an error relates to the payment of an incorrect amount, the sender may request a refund of the amount necessary to resolve the error or request that the remittance transfer provider make the amount necessary to resolve the error available to the designated recipient at no additional cost (Comment 33(c)-7).

Correction of an error if funds were not available by disclosed date

If the remittance transfer provider determines an error related to failure to make funds available by the disclosed date occurred, it must correct the error and refund any fees imposed by the provider or a third party involved in sending the transfer, such as an intermediary bank involved in sending a wire transfer or the institution from which the funds are picked up (unless the sender provided incorrect or insufficient information to the remittance transfer provider in connection with the remittance transfer) (Comment 33(c)-8).

Charges for error resolution

If an error occurred, whether as alleged or in a different amount or manner, the remittance transfer provider may not impose a charge related to any aspect of the error resolution process (including charges for documentation or investigation) (Comment 33(c)-9).

Correction without investigation

A remittance transfer provider may correct an error, without investigation, in the amount or manner alleged by the sender, or otherwise determined, to be in error, but must comply with all other applicable requirements (Comment 33(c)-10).

Procedures if Remittance Transfer Provider Determines No Error or Different Error Occurred - 12 CFR 1005.33(d)

If the remittance transfer provider determines that no error occurred or that an error occurred in a manner or amount different from that described by the sender, its report of the results of the investigation must include a written explanation of the provider's findings and shall note the sender's right to request the documents on which it relied in making its determination. The explanation should also address the specific complaint of the sender. Upon the sender's request, the remittance transfer provider must also promptly provide copies of the documents on which it relied to make its error determination (12 CFR 1005.33(d)).

Error different from that alleged

If a remittance transfer provider determines that an error occurred in a manner or amount different from that described by the sender, it must comply with the requirements of both 12 CFR 1005.33(c) (concerning the investigation) and (d) (procedures if remittance transfer provider determines no error or different error occurred), as applicable. The provider may give the notice of correction and the explanation separately or in a combined form (Comment 33(d)-1).

Reassertion of Error - 12 CFR 1005.33(e)

A remittance transfer provider that has fully complied with the error resolution requirements of this section generally has no further responsibilities should the sender later reassert the same error, except in the case of an error asserted by the sender following receipt of additional information requested from the provider (12 CFR 1005.33(e)).

Withdrawal of error; right to reassert

The remittance transfer provider has no further error resolution responsibilities if the sender voluntarily withdraws the notice alleging an error. A sender who has withdrawn an allegation of error has the right to reassert the allegation unless the remittance transfer provider had already complied with all of the error resolution requirements before the allegation was withdrawn. The sender must do so, however, within the original 180-day period from the disclosed date of availability or, if applicable, the 60-day period for a notice of error based on documentation or clarification that the sender previously requested (Comment 33(e)-1).

Relation to Other Laws - 12 CFR 1005.33(f)Relation to Regulation E for incorrect EFTs from a sender's account - 12 CFR 1005.11

If an alleged error involves an incorrect electronic fund transfer from a sender's account in connection with a remittance transfer, and the sender provides a notice of error to the account-holding institution, the requirements of 12 CFR 1005.11 governing error resolution apply if the account-holding institution is not also the remittance transfer provider. However, if the remittance transfer provider is also the account holding institution, then the error-resolution provisions of 12 CFR 1005.33 apply when the sender provides such notice of error (12 CFR 1005.33(f)(1)).

Concurrent error obligations

A remittance transfer provider that holds the sender's account may have error obligations under both 12 CFR 1005.11 and 1005.33, depending on the relationship with the sender and the nature of the error. For example, if a sender asserts an error under 12 CFR 1005.11 with a remittance transfer provider that holds the sender's account, and the error is not also an error under 12 CFR 1005.33 (such as the omission of an EFT on a periodic statement), then the error-resolution provisions of 12

VI. Deposits — EFTA

CFR 1005.11 exclusively apply to the error. However, if a sender asserts an error under 12 CFR 1005.33 with a remittance transfer provider that holds the sender's account, and the error is also an error under 12 CFR 1005.11 (such as when the amount the sender requested to be deducted from the sender's account and sent for the remittance transfer differs from the amount that was actually deducted from the account and sent), then the error-resolution provisions of 12 CFR 1005.33 exclusively apply to the error. Comment 33(f)-1).

Relation to Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z

If an alleged error involves an incorrect extension of credit in connection with a remittance transfer, an incorrect amount received by the designated recipient that is an extension of credit for property or services not delivered as agreed, or the failure to make funds available by the disclosed date of availability that is an extension of credit for property or services not delivered as agreed, and the sender provides a notice of error to the creditor extending the credit, the error resolution provisions of Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.13 apply to the creditor, rather than the requirements of 12 CFR 1005.33, even if the creditor is the remittance transfer provider. However, if the creditor is the remittance transfer provider, the error resolution requirements of 12 CFR 1005.33(b) will apply instead of 12 CFR 1026.13(b). If the sender instead provides a notice of error to the remittance transfer provider that is not also the creditor, then the error-resolution provisions of 12 CFR 1005.33 apply to the remittance transfer provider (12 CFR 1005.33(f)(2)).

Unauthorized remittance transfers

If an alleged error involves an unauthorized electronic fund transfer for payment in connection with a remittance transfer, 12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11 apply with respect to the account-holding institution. If an alleged error involves an unauthorized use of a credit account for payment in connection with a remittance transfer, the provisions of Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.12(b), if applicable, and 12 CFR 1026.13, apply with respect to the creditor (12 CFR 1005.33(f)(3)).

Holder in due course

The error resolution provisions in subpart B do not affect a sender's rights to assert claims and defenses against a card issuer concerning property or services purchased with a credit card under Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.12(c)(1), as applicable (Comment 33(f)-2).

Assertion of the same error with multiple parties

If a sender receives credit to correct an error of an incorrect amount paid in connection with a remittance transfer from either the remittance transfer provider or account-holding institution (or creditor), and subsequently asserts the same error with another party, that party has no further responsibilities to investigate the error if the error has been corrected. In addition, nothing prevents an account-holding institution or creditor from reversing amounts it has previously credited to correct an error if a sender receives more than one credit to correct the same error (Comment 33(f)-3).

Error Resolution Standards and Recordkeeping Requirements - 12 CFR 1005.33(g)

Compliance program. A remittance transfer provider must develop and maintain written policies and procedures that are designed to ensure compliance with the error resolution requirements applicable to remittance transfers.

Policies and procedures must address the retention of records related to error investigations (12 CFR 1005.33(g)(1) and (2)).

Record retention requirements

Remittance transfer providers are subject to the record retention requirements under subpart A (12 CFR 1005.13 and Comment 33(g)-1). See also, section XVIII below.

XVI. Procedures for Cancellation and Refund of Remittance Transfers - 12 CFR 1005.34

Sender's Right of Cancellation and Refund

Except for certain remittance transfers scheduled in advance subject to 12 CFR 1005.36(c), a remittance transfer provider generally must comply with any oral or written request to cancel a remittance transfer from the sender that is received by the provider no later than 30 minutes after the sender makes payment in connection with the remittance transfer if:

- A. The request to cancel enables the provider to identify the sender's name and address or telephone number and the particular transfer to be cancelled; and
- B. The transferred funds have not been picked up by the designated recipient or deposited into an account of the designated recipient (12 CFR 1005.34(a)).

Content of cancellation request

A request to cancel a remittance transfer is valid so long as the remittance transfer provider is able to identify the remittance transfer in question (Comment 34(a)-1).

Notice of cancellation right

A remittance transfer provider is required to include an abbreviated notice of the sender's right to cancel a remittance transfer on the receipt or combined disclosure provided to the sender. In addition, the remittance transfer provider must make available to a sender upon request, a notice providing a full description of the right to cancel a remittance transfer (Comment 34(a)-2). See also Model Form 36 in Appendix A.

Thirty-minute cancellation right

Except for certain remittance transfers scheduled in advance subject to 12 CFR 1005.36(c), a remittance transfer provider must comply with the cancellation and refund requirements if the cancellation request is received no later than 30 minutes after the sender makes payment (Comment 34(a)-3).

Cancellation request provided to agent

A cancellation request provided by a sender to an agent of the remittance transfer provider is deemed to be received by the provider when received by the agent (Comment 34(a)-4).

Time limits and refund requirements

If a sender provides a timely request to cancel a remittance transfer, a remittance transfer provider must, within three business days of receiving the request, refund all funds provided by the sender in connection with the remittance transfer, including any fees and, to the extent not prohibited by law, taxes that have been imposed for the transfer, whether the fee or tax was assessed by the provider or a third party, such as an intermediary institution, the agent or bank in the recipient country, or a state or other governmental body (12 CFR 1005.34(b) and Comment 34(b)-2).

Form of refund

A remittance transfer provider generally may issue a refund either in cash or in the same form of payment that was initially provided by the sender for the remittance transfer (Comment 34(b)-1).

XVII. Acts of Agents - 12 CFR 1005.35

A remittance transfer provider is strictly liable for a violation by an agent, when such agent acts on its behalf. Remittance transfer providers must comply with the requirements of subpart B, even if an agent or other person performs functions for the remittance transfer provider, and regardless of whether the provider has an agreement with a third party that transfers or otherwise makes funds available to a designated recipient (12 CFR 1005.35 and Comment 35-1).

Agencies responsible for enforcing the requirements of EFTA section 919 and subpart B of Regulation E may consider, in any action or other proceeding against a remittance transfer provider, the extent to which the provider had established and maintained policies or procedures for compliance, including policies, procedures, or other appropriate oversight measures designed to assure compliance by an agent or authorized delegate acting for such provider (EFTA section 919(f)(2)).

XVIII. Transfers Scheduled before the Date of Transfer - 12 CFR 1005.36

Applicability of subpart B. The requirements set forth in subpart B apply to remittance transfers scheduled before the transfer date, unless modified by 12 CFR 1005.36. For example, the foreign language disclosure requirements apply to disclosures provided in connection with transfers scheduled in advance (Comment 36-1).

Timing - 12 CFR 1005.36(a)

For one-time transfers scheduled five or more business days in advance or for the first in a series of transfers authorized in advance to recur at substantially regular intervals (preauthorized remittance transfers), the remittance transfer provider must provide either a pre-payment disclosure and a receipt or a combined disclosure at the time the sender requests the transfer but prior to payment. If any of the disclosures provided contain estimates, the provider must mail or deliver an additional receipt no later than one business day after the date of the transfer. If the transfer involves the transfer of funds from the sender's account held by the provider, this additional receipt may be provided on or with the next periodic statement for that account, or within 30 days after the date of the transfer if a periodic statement is not provided (12 CFR 1005.36(a)(1)).

Subsequent Preauthorized Remittance Transfers

For each subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer, the provider must provide an updated receipt if any of the information (other than temporal disclosures) on the most recent receipt is no longer accurate for reasons other than as permitted in the estimates provisions of 12 CFR 1005.32. The receipt must clearly and conspicuously indicate that it contains updated disclosures and must be mailed or delivered to the sender within a reasonable time prior to the scheduled date of the next subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer. If the disclosure is mailed no later than ten business days or delivered by hand or electronically no later than five business days before the scheduled date of the transfer, the provider is deemed to have provided the disclosure within a reasonable time (12 CFR 1005.36(a)(2)(i) and Comments 36(a)(2)-1, -2, and -3).

For each subsequent preauthorized transfer, the remittance transfer provider must mail or deliver to the sender a receipt no later than one business day after the date of the transfer. This is not required in situations where an updated receipt that contained no estimates was provided prior to the scheduled date of the next subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer. If the remittance transfer involves the transfer of funds from the sender's account held by the provider, the receipt may be provided on or with the next periodic statement for that account, or within 30 days after the date of the transfer if a periodic statement is not provided (12 CFR 1005.36(a)(2)(ii)).

Accuracy - 12 CFR 1005.36(b)

For a one-time transfer scheduled five or more business days in advance or for the first in a series of preauthorized remittance transfers, disclosures provided must be accurate when a sender makes payment except to the extent estimates are permitted. Unless estimates are permitted, for each subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer, the most recent receipt provided must generally be accurate as of when such transfer is made except to the extent estimates are permitted. Temporal elements in the disclosures like the date of availability and the transfer date must only be accurate if the transfer is the first transfer after the disclosure was provided (12 CFR 1005.36(b)).

Cancellation--12 CFR 1005.36(c)

Cancellation of transfers scheduled at least three days in advance

A remittance transfer provider must comply with any oral or written request to cancel any remittance transfer scheduled by the sender at least three business days before the date of the remittance transfer if the request to cancel:

- A. Enables the provider to identify the sender's name and address or telephone number and the particular transfer to be cancelled; and
- B. Is received by the provider at least three business days before the scheduled date of the remittance transfer (12 CFR 1005.36(c)).

The right of cancellation applies when a remittance transfer is scheduled by the sender at least three business days before the date of the transfer, regardless of whether the sender schedules a preauthorized remittance transfer or a one-time transfer. For transfers scheduled less than three business days before the date of transfer the 30-minute cancellation deadline in 12 CFR 1005.34 applies (Comment 36(c)-1).

Cancelled preauthorized remittance transfers

For preauthorized remittance transfers, the provider must assume the request to cancel applies to all future preauthorized remittance transfers, unless the sender specifically indicates that it should apply only to the next scheduled transfer (Comment 36(c)-2).

Concurrent cancellation obligations

A financial institution that is also a remittance transfer provider may have both stop payment obligations under 12 CFR 1005.10 and cancellation obligations under 12

CFR 1005.36. If a sender cancels a remittance transfer under 12 CFR 1005.36 with a remittance transfer provider that holds the sender's account, and the transfer is a preauthorized transfer, 12 CFR 1005.36 applies exclusively (Comment 36(c)-3).

Additional Requirements for Subsequent Preauthorized Remittance Transfers - 12 CFR 1005.36(d)

Disclosure requirement

For any subsequent transfer in a series of preauthorized remittance transfers, the remittance transfer provider must disclose:

- A. the date of the subsequent transfer using the term "Future Transfer Date" or a substantially similar term;
- B. a statement of the sender's cancellation rights; and
- C. the name, telephone number(s), and website of the remittance transfer provider (12 CFR 1005.36(d)(1)).

The disclosures must be provided no more than 12 months and no less than five business days prior to the date of the subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer. For any subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer for which the date of transfer is four or fewer business days after the date payment is made, the disclosure must generally be provided on or with the receipt for the initial transfer in that series (12 CFR 1005.36(d)(2)).

A remittance transfer provider has some flexibility in determining how and when the disclosures required by 12 CFR 1005.36(d)(1) may be provided to senders. They may be provided as a separate disclosure, or on or with any other disclosure required by subpart B related to the same series of preauthorized remittance transfers, provided that the disclosure and timing requirements in 12 CFR 1005.36(d)(2) and other applicable provisions in subpart B are satisfied (Comment 36(d)-1).

If any of the information provided in these disclosures change, the provider must provide an updated disclosure with the revised information that is accurate as of when the transfer is made (12 CFR 1005.36(d)(1) and (4) and Comments 36(d)-2, 3 and 4).

For any subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer, the future date of transfer must be provided on any receipt provided for the initial transfer in that series of preauthorized remittance transfers. If the provider discloses the dates of subsequent preauthorized remittance transfers and the applicable cancellation period on either the receipt provided when payment is made or on a second receipt, the disclosure must be phrased and formatted in such a way that it is clear to the sender which cancellation period is applicable to any date of transfer on the receipt (Comment 31(b)(2)-5).

The following sections are applicable to both subpart A and subpart B

XIX. Preemption

The EFTA and Regulation E preempt inconsistent state laws, but only to the extent of the inconsistency. The CFPB is given the authority to determine whether or not a state law is inconsistent. An entity, state, or other interested party may request the CFPB to make such a determination. A state law will not be deemed inconsistent if it is more protective of the consumer than the EFTA or Regulation E. Upon application, the CFPB has the authority to exempt any state from the requirements of the EFTA or the regulation for any class of EFTs within a state, with the exception of the civil liability provision. (EFTA section 922 and 12 CFR 1005.12(b) and (c)).

XX. Administrative Enforcement and Record Retention - 12 CFR 1005.13

Section 918 of the EFTA sets forth the federal agencies responsible for enforcing compliance with the provisions of the law and its implementing regulation.

Record retention

Any person subject to the EFTA and Regulation E must maintain evidence of compliance with the EFTA and Regulation E for at least two years from the date the disclosures are required to be made or action is required to be taken. The agency supervising the person may extend this period. The period may also be extended if the person is subject to an action filed under Sections 910, 915 or 916(a) of the EFTA, which generally apply to the person's liability under the EFTA and Regulation E. Persons subject to the EFTA who have actual notice that they are being investigated or subject to an enforcement proceeding must retain records until disposition of the proceeding (12 CFR 1005.13 and 1005.33(g)).

Records may be stored on microfiche, microfilm, magnetic tape, or in any other manner capable of accurately retaining and reproducing the information.

XXI. Miscellaneous

The EFTA contains several additional provisions that are not directly reflected in the language of Regulation E. Most significantly, 15 U.S.C. 1693l provides that the consumer may not waive by agreement any right conferred, or cause of action created, by the EFTA. However, the consumer and another person may provide by agreement greater consumer protections or additional rights or remedies than those provided by the EFTA. In addition, the consumer may sign a waiver in settlement of a dispute.

If a third party payee has agreed to accept payment by EFT, the consumer's obligation to pay is suspended during any period in which a system malfunction prevents an EFT from occurring (15 U.S.C. 1693j). However, the payee may avoid that suspension by making a written request for payment by means other than EFT.

Failure to comply with the requirements of the EFTA can result in civil and criminal liability, as outlined in 15 U.S.C. 1693m and 15 U.S.C. 1693n. Financial institutions may also be liable for damages under 15 U.S.C. 1693h due to failure to complete an EFT or failure to stop a preauthorized transfer when instructed to do so.

Model disclosure clauses and forms — 12 CFR 1005, Appendix A

Appendix A of Regulation E contains model clauses and forms that entities may use to comply with the requirement disclosure requirements of Regulation E. Use of the model forms is optional and an entity may make certain changes to the language or format of the model forms without losing the protection from civil and criminal liability under Sections 915 and 916 of the EFTA. The model forms are:

Examination Procedures²⁷

These examination procedures are divided into three sections:

- Section I covers management and policy related procedures for both financial institutions and other entities that may be remittance transfer providers (referred to herein as “entity”).
- Section II covers electronic fund transfers conducted by financial institutions.
- Section III applies to remittance transfer providers (including financial institutions).

Each examination should be risk based and may not require an examiner to complete all three sections. In addition, each agency may have its own supervisory strategy that will dictate which sections of these examination procedures are required to be completed.

Examination Objectives

In general, a Regulation E examination is conducted to:

- Determine the entity's compliance with Regulation E.
- Assess the quality of the entity's compliance risk management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing Regulation E.
- Determine the level of reliance that can be placed on the entity's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the entity's compliance with Regulation E.
- As appropriate, direct corrective action when violations of law are identified or when the entity's policies or internal controls are deficient.

Section I - Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures

1. Through a review of all available information (e.g. board minutes, management reports, monitoring reports, etc.) and discussions with management, determine that the board and management have set clear expectations about compliance with Regulation E, not only within the entity but also concerning key business partners, including agents, correspondent banks, and software providers, to the extent relevant.
2. Through a review of all available information (e.g. written policies and procedures, management's self-assessments, customer complaints, prior examination reports) and any compliance audit material, including work papers and reports, determine whether:
 - a. There are any weaknesses or other risks in the business model.
 - b. The scope of the audit addresses all provisions of Regulation E as applicable.
 - c. The scope of the audit addresses all key business processes and functions, including those carried out by third-party service providers or key business partners, as appropriate.
 - d. Management has taken corrective actions to follow up on previously identified deficiencies.
 - e. As applicable, testing includes risk-based samples covering product types and decision centers.

- f. There is an audit trail that supports the findings and conclusions of the work performed.
 - g. Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and/or to the Board of Directors or principal(s).
 - h. The frequency of review is appropriate.
3. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the entity's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance with respect to the Regulation E area under review. Consider among other things:
 - a. Organizational charts;
 - b. Process flowcharts;
 - c. Policies and procedures;
 - d. Account (if applicable) and transaction documentation;
 - e. Checklists; and
 - f. Computer program documentation.
 4. Through a review of the entity's training materials and discussions with management, determine whether:
 - a. The entity provides appropriate training to employees and other persons responsible for Regulation E compliance and operational procedures.
 - b. The training is comprehensive and covers the sections of Regulation E that apply to the individual entity's product offerings and operations including, to the extent appropriate, those functions carried out by third-party service providers or other business partners, such as agents and correspondent banks.

Section II— Subpart A

Based on the materials reviewed within Section I, complete Section II, as applicable, to determine the financial institution's compliance with Regulation E.

Transaction-Related Examination Procedures

Conduct transaction testing, using the following examination procedures:

1. Obtain and review copies of the following:
 - a. Disclosure forms;
 - b. Advertising and scripts for overdraft opt-ins;

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- c. Account agreements;
 - d. Procedural manuals and written policies;
 - e. Merchant agreements;
 - f. Automated teller machine receipts and periodic statements;
 - g. Error resolution statements/files;
 - h. Form letters used in case of errors or questions concerning an account;
 - i. Any agreements with third parties allocating compliance responsibilities; and
 - j. Consumer complaint files.
- 4. Review a sample of periodic statements for each type of account in which electronic fund transfers occur to determine that they contain sufficient information for the consumer to identify transactions adequately and that they otherwise comply with regulatory requirements (12 CFR 1005.9).
 - 5. Verify that the financial institution does not require compulsory use of EFTs, except as authorized (12 CFR 1005.10(e)).
 - 6. For unauthorized transfers, lost or stolen ATM cards, and EFT consumer complaints, and their respective periodic statements, determine whether:
 - a. The financial institution is in compliance with its error resolution procedures to isolate any apparent deficiencies in the financial institution's operations to ensure that the institution follows its policies for unauthorized transfers (12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11).
 - b. The financial institution investigates alleged errors and notifies consumers of the results within allotted time frames and, when appropriate, provisionally re-credits the account (12 CFR 1005.11(c)).
 - c. The financial institution follows regulatory procedures after it completes its investigation and determines either that an error occurred (12 CFR 1005.11(c)(1)) or that no error occurred (12 CFR 1005.11(d)).
 - 7. Review ATM and point-of-sale transfer receipts to determine whether they provide a clear description of the transaction (12 CFR 1005.9(a)).
 - 8. Determine that the financial institution is maintaining records of compliance for a period of not less than two years from the date disclosures are required to be made or action is required to be taken (12 CFR 1005.13(b)).
 - 9. If the financial institution operates one or more ATMs for which it charges a fee for use, determine that the financial institution provides notice of the fee and the amount of the fee on the screen of the ATM or on paper before the consumer is committed to paying the fee (12 CFR 1005.16).

Policies and Procedures

- 2. Determine the extent and adequacy of the financial institution's policies, procedures, and practices for ensuring compliance with the regulation. In particular, verify that:
 - a. Access devices are issued in compliance with the regulation (12 CFR 1005.5(b)).
 - b. Required disclosures are given at the time the account is opened or prior to the first electronic funds transfer ("EFT") (12 CFR 1005.4 and 1005.7(c)).
 - c. Unauthorized transfer claims are processed in compliance with the regulation (12 CFR 1005.6 and 1005.11).
 - d. Liability for unauthorized transfer claims is assessed in compliance with the regulation (12 CFR 1005.6).
 - e. Negligence is not a factor in determining customer liability. The deposit agreement may not impose greater liability than Regulation E provides but may provide for less consumer liability (12 CFR 1005.6).
 - f. Preauthorized debits and credits comply with the regulation (12 CFR 1005.10).

Disclosures, Notices, Receipts, Periodic Statements, and Preauthorized Transfers

- 3. If the financial institution has changed the terms or conditions of initial disclosures for EFT services since the last examination that required a written notice to the customer, determine that the institution provided the proper notice in a timely manner (12 CFR 1005.8(a)).

Overdrafts – 12 CFR 1005.17

- 10. Determine that the financial institution holding a consumer's account does not assess a fee or charge on a consumer's account for paying an ATM or one-time debit card transaction pursuant to the institution's overdraft service,²⁸ unless the institution:

- a. Provides the consumer with a notice in writing (or if the consumer agrees, electronically), that is segregated from all other information and describes the institution's overdraft service;
- b. Provides a reasonable opportunity for the consumer to affirmatively consent, or opt in, to the service for ATM and one-time debit card transactions;
- c. Obtains the consumer's affirmative consent, or opt-in, to the institution's payment of ATM or one-time debit card transactions; and
- d. Provides the consumer with confirmation of the consumer's consent in writing (or if the consumer agrees, electronically), which includes a statement informing the consumer of the right to revoke such consent.

(12 CFR 1005.17(b)(1))

NOTE: An institution does not have to meet the notice requirements described above if it does not impose a fee or charge for paying an overdraft transaction for ATM and one-time debit card transactions. For example, an institution that has a policy and practice of declining to authorize and pay any ATM or one-time debit card transactions when it has a reasonable belief at the time of the authorization request that the consumer does not have sufficient funds available to cover the transaction may pay such an overdraft regardless of notice. However, it is still prohibited from charging fees for paying an ATM or one-time debit transaction overdraft (12 CFR 1005, and Comments 1005.17(b)-1(iv) and 17(b)-2).

11. Determine that in assessing overdraft fees for consumers who have not opted in, the institution charges fees only for negative balances, daily, or sustained overdraft, or similar fees, when the negative balance is attributable in whole or in part to checks, automated clearing house (ACH) or other transactions not subject to the fee prohibition, and that the fee is assessed based on the date when the check is paid into overdraft, not the date of the ATM or one-time debit transaction (Comment 1005.17(b)-9).
12. Determine that the financial institution does not:

- a. Condition the payment of any overdrafts for checks, ACH transactions, and other types of transactions on the consumer affirmatively consenting to the institution's payment of ATM and one-time debit card transactions pursuant to the institution's overdraft service; or
- b. Decline to pay checks, ACH transactions, and other types of transactions that overdraw the consumer's account because the consumer has not affirmatively consented to the institution's overdraft service for ATM and one-time debit card transactions.

(12 CFR 1005.17(b)(2))

13. Determine that the financial institution provides to consumers who do not affirmatively consent to the institution's overdraft service for ATM and one-time debit card transactions the same account terms, conditions, and features that it provides to consumers who affirmatively consent, except for the overdraft service for ATM and one-time debit card transactions (12 CFR 1005.17(b)(3)).

14. Ensure that the notice required by 12 CFR 1005.17(b)(1)(i) is substantially similar to Model Form A-9 (Model Consent Form for Overdraft Services), includes all applicable items in the following list, and does not contain any additional information:

- a. Overdraft service. A brief description of the financial institution's overdraft service and the types of transactions for which a fee or charge for paying an overdraft may be imposed, including ATM and one-time debit card transactions.
- b. Fees imposed. The dollar amount of any fees or charges assessed by the financial institution for paying an ATM or one-time debit card transaction pursuant to the institution's overdraft service, including any daily or other overdraft fees. If the amount of the fee is determined on the basis of the number of times the consumer has overdrawn the account, the amount of the overdraft, or other factors, the institution must disclose the maximum fee that may be imposed.
- c. Limits on fees charged. The maximum number of overdraft fees or charges that may be assessed per day, or, if applicable, that there is no limit.
- d. Disclosure of opt-in right. An explanation of the consumer's right to affirmatively consent to the financial institution's payment of overdrafts for ATM and one-time debit card transactions pursuant to the financial institution's overdraft service, including the ²⁸ The term "overdraft service" means a service under which a financial institution assesses a fee or charge on a consumer's account held by the financial institution for paying a transaction (including a check or other item) when the consumer has insufficient or unavailable funds in the account (12 CFR 1005.17(a)). "Overdraft service" does not include a service that transfers funds from another account held by a consumer or a line of credit.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

methods by which the consumer may consent to the service; and

- e. Alternative plans for covering overdrafts. If the institution offers both a line of credit subject to Regulation Z (12 CFR Part 1026) and a service that transfers funds from another account of the consumer held at the institution to cover overdrafts, the institution must state in its opt-in notice that both alternative plans are offered. If the institution offers one, but not the other, it must state in its opt-in notice the alternative plan that it offers. If the institution does not offer either plan, it should omit the reference to the alternative plans. If the financial institution offers additional alternatives for paying overdrafts, it may (but is not required to) disclose those alternatives.

(12 CFR 1005.17(d) and Comments 1005.17(d)-1 through 1005.17(d)-5)

NOTE: Permitted modifications and additional content. If applicable, the institution may modify the content required by 12 CFR 1005.17(d) to indicate that the consumer has the right to opt in to, or opt out of, the payment of overdrafts under the institution's overdraft service for other types of transactions, such as checks, ACH transactions, or automatic bill payments; to provide a means for the consumer to exercise this choice; and to disclose the associated returned item fee and that additional merchant fees may apply. The institution may also disclose the consumer's right to revoke consent. The response portion of Model Form A-9 may be tailored to the methods offered for opting in, and may include reasonable methods to identify the account, such as a bar code.

15. Determine that, when two or more consumers jointly hold an account, the financial institution treats the affirmative consent of any of the joint consumers as affirmative consent for that account, and treats a revocation of affirmative consent by any of the joint consumers as revocation of consent for that account (12 CFR 1005.17(e)).
16. Ensure that a consumer may affirmatively consent to the financial institution's overdraft service at any time in the manner described in the institution's (12 CFR 1005.17(b)(1)(i)) notice, and that a consumer may also revoke consent at any time in the manner made available to the consumer for providing consent (12 CFR 1005.17(f)).
17. Determine that the financial institution implements a consumer's revocation of consent as soon as reasonably practicable (12 CFR 1005(17)(f)).
18. Determine that a consumer's affirmative consent to the institution's overdraft service is effective until revoked by the consumer, or until the financial institution terminates the service (12 CFR 1005.17(g)).
19. Determine that the financial institution's overdraft protection program incorporates FDIC guidance as applicable.

Prepaid Accounts – 12 CFR 1005.18 and 1005.15

NOTE: Additional Regulation E procedures outside of the "Prepaid Accounts" section may also apply to prepaid accounts.

20. Verify that the institution meets all pre-acquisition prepaid account disclosure requirements, including the required timing, content, and formatting for short- and long-form disclosures (12 CFR 1005.18(b) and 1005.15(c)).
21. If the financial institution does not provide periodic statements under 12 CFR 1005.9(b) for prepaid accounts, verify that the institution makes available the account balance by telephone, an electronic history of account transactions, and a written history of account transactions upon request (except as not required per 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(2)) (12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1) and (2) and 1005.15(d)(1)).

If the financial institution provides an electronic history of account transactions and a written history of account transactions upon request, verify it includes the information set forth in 12 CFR 1005.9(b) (12 CFR 1005.18(c)(3); 12 CFR 1005.15(d)(2)).

22. Verify that any periodic statements provided by the institution under 12 CFR 1005.9(b) and any history of account transactions provided or made available by the institution disclose the required fee information (12 CFR 1005.18(c)(4)-(5) and 1005.15(d)(2)).
23. If the financial institution provides information under 12 CFR 1005.18(c)(1) rather than periodic statements under 12 CFR 1005.9(b), verify that the institution complies with the modified requirements with respect to the required initial disclosures, error resolution notices, limitations on liability, and error resolution procedures (12 CFR 1005.18(d) and 1005.18(e)(1) and (2) and 1005.15(e)).
24. Verify that the initial disclosures provided by the institution under 12 CFR 1005.7 include all fees and other information required to be disclosed in its pre-acquisition long form disclosure as set forth in 12 CFR 1005.18(b)(4) (12 CFR 1005.18(f)(1) and 1005.15(f)).
25. If the financial institution maintains prepaid accounts, verify that the institution provides notice for changes in terms and conditions when required (12 CFR 1005.18(f)(2) and 1005.15(f)).

26. Verify that the institution discloses required information on its prepaid account access devices, or if the institution does not provide an access device, on the website, mobile application, or other entry point a consumer must visit to access the prepaid account electronically (12 CFR 1005.18(f)(3) and 1005.15(f)).
27. Except in the case of higher fees and charges imposed on the asset feature of a prepaid account with a covered separate credit feature, as provided in 12 CFR 1005.18(g), if the financial institution maintains a prepaid account program where consumers may be offered a covered separate credit feature accessible by a hybrid prepaid-credit card as defined by Regulation Z, 12 CFR 1026.61, verify that the institution provides to any prepaid account without a covered separate credit feature the same account terms, conditions, and features it provides on prepaid accounts in the same prepaid account program that have such a credit feature (12 CFR 1005.18(g) and 1005.15(g)).

Internet Posting of Prepaid Account Agreements – 12 CFR 1005.19

28. For prepaid account issuers that are subject to the requirement, verify that the issuer makes submissions of prepaid account agreements to the CFPB on a rolling basis, as applicable, in the form and manner specified by the Bureau (12 CFR 1005.19(b)).
29. Verify that the issuer posts and maintains on its publicly available website any prepaid account agreements offered to the general public that the issuer is required to submit to the CFPB as frequently as the issuer is required to submit new or amended agreements to the Bureau and in conformance to the form and content requirements of 12 CFR 1005.19(b)(6). Also verify that agreements are placed in a location that is prominent and readily accessible to the public, and are accessible without the submission of personally identifiable information (12 CFR 1005.19(c)).
30. Verify that for any open prepaid account, the issuer posts and maintains on its website the consumer's agreement or promptly provides a copy of the consumer's agreement to the consumer upon the consumer's request, in conformance with the form and content requirements of 12 CFR 1005.19(b)(6). If the agreement is posted on its website, verify that it is posted in any electronic format that is readily usable by the general public and placed in a location that is prominently and readily accessible to the consumer. If the agreement is provided upon request from a consumer, ensure the agreement is sent no later than five business days after the issuer receives the request (12 CFR 1005.19(d)).

Gift Card Disclosures – 12 CFR 1005.20

31. Determine that the disclosures required by the sections listed below are made on the certificate or card, or in the case of a loyalty, award, or promotional gift card, on the card, code, or other device:

NOTE: A disclosure made in an accompanying terms-and-conditions document, on packaging surrounding a certificate or card, or on a sticker or other label affixed to the certificate or card does not constitute a disclosure on the certificate or card.

If the certificate or card is electronic, determine that disclosures are provided electronically on the certificate or card provided to the consumer.

If an issuer provides a code or confirmation to a consumer orally, determine that the issuer provides to the consumer a written or electronic copy of the code or confirmation promptly, and the applicable disclosures are provided on the written copy of the code or confirmation (12 CFR 1005.20(c)(4)).

32. Determine that the following are stated, as applicable, clearly and conspicuously on the gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card:
 - a. The amount of any dormancy, inactivity, or service fee that may be charged;
 - b. How often such fee may be assessed; and
 - c. That such fee may be assessed for inactivity.

(12 CFR 1005.20(d)(2))
33. Determine that the following disclosures and information are provided in connection with a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card as applicable: For each type of fee that may be imposed in connection with the certificate or card (other than a dormancy, inactivity, or service fee, which are discussed above) the following information must be provided on or with the certificate or card:

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- b. The amount of the fee (or an explanation of how the fee will be determined); and
- c. The conditions under which the fee may be imposed.
- d. A toll-free number, and if one is maintained, a website that a consumer may use to obtain information about the fees described in paragraphs 12 CFR 1005.20(d)(2) and 12 CFR 1005.20(f)(1) (described immediately above) of this section must be disclosed on the certificate or card.

(12 CFR 1005.20 (f))

34. If an expiration date applies to a certificate or card, determine that the following disclosures are provided on the certificate or card, as applicable:
 - a. The expiration date for the underlying funds or, if the underlying funds do not expire, that fact;
 - b. A toll-free telephone number and, if one is maintained, a website that a consumer may use to obtain a replacement certificate or card after the certificate or card expires if the underlying funds may be available; and
 - c. Except where a non-reloadable certificate or card bears an expiration date that is at least seven years from the date of manufacture, a statement, disclosed with equal prominence and in close proximity to the certificate or card expiration date, that
 - i. The certificate or card expires, but the underlying funds either do not expire or expire later than the certificate or card, and
 - ii. The consumer may contact the issuer for a replacement card.

(12 CFR 1005.20(e)(3))

35. Determine that a loyalty, award, or promotional gift card sold or issued by the examined institution sets forth the following disclosures, as applicable:
 - a. A statement on the front of the card, code, or other device, indicating that the card, code, or other device is issued for loyalty, award, or promotional purposes;
 - b. The expiration date for the underlying funds on the front of the card, code, or other device;

- c. The amount of any fees that may be imposed in connection with the card, code, or other device, and the conditions under which they may be imposed. This disclosure must be provided on or with the card, code, or other device; and
- d. A toll-free telephone number and, if one is maintained, a website that a consumer may use to obtain fee information on the card, code, or other device.

(12 CFR 1005.20(a)(4)(iii))

36. Determine that a person (examined institution) that issues or sells a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card discloses to the consumer, prior to purchase, the information required by 12 CFR 1005.20(d)(2) (dormancy, inactivity, or service fees), 12 CFR 1005.20(e)(3) (expiration date or phone and web regarding replacement), and 12 CFR 1005.20(f)(1) (other fees) (12 CFR 1005.20(c)(3)).
37. Determine that the fees, terms, and conditions of expiration that are required to be disclosed prior to purchase are not changed after purchase (12 CFR 1005.20(c)(3)).
38. Determine that no person (examined institution) imposes a dormancy, inactivity, or service fee with respect to a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card, unless:
 - a. There has been no activity with respect to the certificate or card, in the one-year period ending on the date on which the fee is imposed;
 - b. Required disclosures are provided; and
 - c. Not more than one dormancy, inactivity, or service fee is imposed in any given calendar month.

(12 CFR 1005.20(d))

39. Determine that the person (examined institution) does not sell or issue a gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card with an expiration date unless:
 - a. Required expiration date disclosures are provided on the certificate or card, as applicable;
 - b. It has established policies and procedures to provide consumers with a reasonable opportunity to purchase a certificate or card with at least five years remaining until the certificate or card expiration date;
 - c. The expiration date for the underlying funds is at least the later of:

- i. Five years after the date the gift certificate was initially issued, or the date on which funds were last loaded to a store gift card or general-use prepaid card; or
- ii. The certificate or card expiration date, if any; and
- d. No fee or charge is imposed on the cardholder for replacing the gift certificate, store gift card, or general-use prepaid card or for providing the certificate or card holder with the remaining balance in some other manner prior to the funds expiration date, unless such certificate or card has been lost or stolen.

(12 CFR 1005.20(e))

Section III—Subpart B - Requirements for remittance transfers

If an entity provides remittance transfers in its “normal course of business,” it is a remittance transfer provider subject to the rule and should be examined based on the following procedures²⁹.

Transaction-Related Examination Procedures

As applicable, conduct transaction testing using the following examination procedures:

Obtain and review all available information as it relates to the provider’s remittance program. Examples of this include but are not limited to:

- A. List of divisions or departments involved in offering or providing remittance transfers (e.g., retail, high net worth, prepaid cards, bill payment, online or mobile banking, foreign exchange and/or treasury departments);
- B. Remittance transfer products offered;
- C. Disclosure forms in all languages (as applicable);
- D. List of foreign countries to which the provider sends remittance transfers, if available;
- E. List of all foreign currencies in which remittance transfers sent by the provider may be received where there are limitations on such currencies, and identification of the currencies in which the provider controls the exchange rate;

- F. List of all third-party service providers or business partners involved in remittance transfers, including direct correspondent banks, payment networks, payment processors, software providers, foreign currency providers, agents in the United States or abroad, or similar entities;
- G. Locations of U.S. and foreign agents;
- H. Applicable documentation related to remittance transfer operations (e.g., transaction logs, agent/correspondent agreements, advertising and marketing material including any done in foreign languages, and documentation regarding calculation or estimates of fees, taxes, exchange rates, and dates included on disclosures);
- I. Procedural manuals and written policies;
- J. Error resolution files;
- K. Form letters used in case of errors or questions concerning a remittance transfer (including any provided in foreign languages);
- L. Any agreements with third parties allocating compliance responsibilities; and
- M. Consumer complaint files.

General form of Disclosures – 12 CFR 1005.31

- 1. Obtain and review a sample of the provider’s disclosure forms for the provider’s various remittance transfer products. Include disclosures as provided for various products and through various channels (e.g., in person, through a website, by telephone, through a mobile phone application, text message, online bill pay). Verify that:
 - a. Disclosures are in the appropriate form, and are clear and conspicuous;
 - b. Written and electronic disclosures are in a retainable form (except where expressly permitted not to be retainable);
 - c. Pre-payment disclosures match figures disclosed on receipts and match those actually applied to the transfer;
 - d. The provider’s policy for providing oral disclosures is appropriate for the related transactions;

²⁹ Subpart B does provide for a 500-transfer “safe harbor.” For an entity to qualify for this “safe harbor” it must have provided 500 or fewer remittance transfers in the current calendar year and the previous calendar year. If an entity crosses the 500-transfer threshold either in the previous calendar year or the current calendar year, it is deemed to be providing remittance transfers in its “normal course of business” and it must begin complying with the rule within a reasonable period of time (not to exceed six months) unless, under the facts and circumstances, it would not be deemed a provider.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- e. Copies of scripts used for oral disclosures comply with the regulation;
 - f. Disclosures comply with the format requirements regarding grouping of like items, proximity, prominence and size, and segregation from other information; and
 - g. Disclosure of amounts required to be disclosed under 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1), (2), and (3), use the appropriate terms (e.g., transfer amount, transfer taxes, currency) or substantially similar terms.
2. If applicable, determine whether the provider complies with the foreign language disclosure requirements as outlined under 12 CFR 1005.31(g).

Pre-payment disclosures – 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(1)

3. Based on a review of the provider's policies and if appropriate, sampled transactions, determine whether it appropriately categorizes third-party fees as covered or non-covered.
4. Based on a review of the provider's policies on pre-payment disclosures and if appropriate, sampled pre-payment disclosures and related documentation, determine whether the provider appropriately calculates and discloses:
- a. In the currency in which the remittance transfer is funded:
 - i. The amount that will be transferred to the designated recipient, using the term "Transfer Amount" or a substantially similar term;
 - ii. Fees imposed and taxes collected on the remittance transfer by the provider, using the terms "Transfer Fees" and "Transfer Taxes," or substantially similar terms; and
 - iii. The total amount of the transaction using the term "Total," or a substantially similar term;
 - b. The exchange rate used by the provider for the remittance transfer using the term "Exchange Rate" or a substantially similar term;
 - c. In the currency in which the funds will be received by the designated recipient:
 - i. The transfer amount in the currency, but only if covered third-party fees are imposed using the term, "Transfer Amount" or a substantially similar term;

- ii. Any covered third-party fees imposed on the remittance transfer using the term, "Other Fees" or a substantially similar term;
 - iii. The amount that will be received by the designated recipient (total amount of the transaction minus covered third-party fees) using the term, "Total to Recipient," or a substantially similar term; and
 - iv. If applicable, a statement that non-covered third-party fees or taxes collected on the remittance transfer by a third person may apply to the remittance transfer and result in the designated recipient receiving less than the amount disclosed.
- d. If the provider includes in the statement under (c)(iii) above, the optional estimated disclosure of applicable non-covered third-party fees or taxes, determine if the estimates are based on reasonable sources, and are disclosed in the currency in which the transfer is to be received.

NOTE: The exchange rate used to calculate the amounts under (c) is prior to any rounding.

Receipt Disclosures – 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(2)

5. Review policies on receipt disclosures, sample receipts, and related documentation to determine whether the provider appropriately calculates and discloses:
- a. Information disclosed in the pre-payment disclosure:
 - b. The date in the foreign country on which funds will be available to the designated recipient, using the term "Date Available" or a substantially similar term;
 - c. The name and, if provided by the sender, the telephone number and/or address of the designated recipient, using the term "Recipient" or a substantially similar term;
 - d. A statement about the rights of the sender regarding the resolution of errors and cancellation;
 - e. The name, telephone number(s), and website of the remittance transfer provider; and
 - f. A statement that the sender can contact the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau ("CFPB") and if applicable, the State agency that licenses or charters the remittance transfer provider with respect to the remittance transfer and for questions or complaints about the remittance transfer provider, as well as their telephone number(s), and website addresses.

NOTE: For any remittance transfer scheduled by the sender at least three business days before the date of the transfer, the statement about the rights of the sender regarding cancellation must state that the sender must request the cancellation, at least three business days before the next scheduled transfer. The statement must also note that the request must enable the provider to identify the sender's contact information and the particular transfer to be cancelled.

Combined disclosures – 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(3)

NOTE: Complete this section only if the provider provides combined disclosures as an alternative to the pre-payment and receipt disclosures.

6. Review policies on combined disclosures, sample disclosures and related documentation to:
 - a. Determine that they contain all the information required for the pre-payment disclosure and receipt disclosure as described above;
 - b. Determine that the provider provides a proof of payment after payment is made for each transaction; and
 - c. Determine that the proof of payment is clear and conspicuous, provided in writing or electronically, and provided in a retainable form.

Accuracy and timing – 12 CFR 1005.31(e) and (f)

7. Review, as appropriate, all available information including transactions or investigation/trace logs/records or similar documents to verify (subject to the disclaimer statement with respect to non-covered third-party fees and third-party taxes) the accuracy of disclosures provided to consumers.
 - a. In instances in which pre-payment disclosures and receipts are provided that do not contain estimates, confirm with respect to any transaction for which payment was made, that the information on the most recent pre-payment disclosure for that transaction and the information on the receipt for that transaction are the same.
 - b. For amounts that are not estimates, confirm that the disclosed amounts were accurate at the time that payment was made.

- c. For amounts that are estimates, determine whether the estimates were calculated correctly, in accordance with the applicable bases outlined in 12 CFR 1005.32
 - d. In the case of estimates pursuant to 1005.32(a), (b)(1) and (b)(2) that are based on an approach that is not one of the listed bases in 1005.32(c), determine that the recipient received the same, or greater, amount of funds than what was disclosed.
8. Review processes and procedures or records, as appropriate, to determine whether the required disclosures are provided in accordance with the timing requirements in 12 CFR 1005.31(e).
 - a. Determine whether pre-payment disclosures are provided when the sender requests the remittance transfer, but prior to payment.
 - b. Determine whether receipts are provided when payment is made, or in accordance with 1005.31(e)(2) for transactions conducted by telephone.

Long form error resolution and cancellation notice – 12 CFR 1005.31(b)(4)

9. Determine the provider's policy for providing long form error resolution and cancellation notices to senders upon request.
10. Review the provider's records of senders' requests and determine that a long form error resolution and cancellation notice is promptly provided in response to each request.
11. Review sample notices to determine that they use language set forth in Model Form A-36 (Model Form for Error Resolution and Cancellation Disclosures (Long) of Appendix A to subpart B) or substantially similar language.

Estimates – 12 CFR 1005.32

Temporary exception for insured institutions - 12 CFR 1005.32(a)

12. Determine that the remittance transfer provider is an insured institution within the definition of the rule. If it is, review the appropriate information including transaction log/records, etc., to identify remittance transfer transactions that were sent from the sender's account with the institution. From the list, identify transactions for which estimates were used.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

NOTE: An insured institution acting as an agent on behalf of another in connection with a remittance transfer is not a remittance transfer provider.

13. Review transactions for which estimates were used, as well as related disclosures, and any other relevant procedures, processes and documentation of information included in disclosures, as appropriate, to:
 - a. Assess the adequacy of the provider's policy and procedures for determining that a provider could not determine exact amounts for reasons beyond its control;
 - b. Determine that estimates were used only in cases when the provider could not determine the exact amounts for reasons beyond its control;
 - c. Determine the bases used for the estimates under 12 CFR 1005.32(c) and consider their appropriateness; and
 - i. If estimates were provided in accordance with one of the bases listed in Regulation E (12 CFR 1005.32(c)), review documentation to confirm that inputs to estimates are appropriate.
 - ii. If estimates are based on an approach that is not one of the listed bases, determine as appropriate, that the designated recipient received the same, or greater, amount of funds than the remittance transfer provider disclosed.
 - d. Determine that the estimated amounts are appropriately labeled with the term "Estimated" or a substantially similar term, placed in close proximity to the term described.
 - e. Determine that related calculations were performed appropriately.

NOTE: Unless extended, this exception will not apply after July 21, 2020.

Permanent exception for transfers to certain countries 12 CFR 1005.32(b)(1)

14. Review and assess the adequacy of the provider's policy for determining that:
 - a. The laws of the recipient country do not permit a determination of the exact amount; or
 - b. The methods by which transactions are made in the recipient country do not permit such determination.

15. Review the provider's transaction log/records to identify remittance transactions that were sent to countries on the list provided by the CFPB for which estimates may be provided on remittance transfer-related disclosures to determine if the provider properly relied on the list in making estimates.
16. Determine whether the provider gave estimates for transactions to a country that is not on the list provided by the CFPB. Review related documentation to confirm that the recipient country does not legally permit, or the method by which transactions are conducted in that country does not permit determination of exact amounts.
17. Review records to determine:
 - a. The bases used for the estimates under 12 CFR 1005.32 (c) and their appropriateness:
 - i. If estimates were provided in accordance with one of the bases listed in 12 CFR 1005.32(c), review documentation to confirm that inputs to estimates are appropriate; or
 - ii. If estimates are based on an approach that is not one of the listed bases, determine as appropriate, that the designated recipient received the same, or greater, amount of funds than the remittance transfer provider disclosed.
 - b. That the estimated amounts are appropriately labeled with the term "Estimated" or a substantially similar term, placed in close proximity to the term described.

Permanent exception for transfers scheduled before the date of transfer - 12 CFR 1005.32(b)(2)

18. Review and assess the adequacy of the provider's policy and procedures for using estimates in the case of transfers scheduled five or more business days before the date of transfer.
19. Review and assess transactions for which estimates were used as well as related disclosures (required by 12 CFR 1005.36(a)), and any other relevant documentation, as appropriate, to determine compliance with 12 CFR 1005.32(b)(2).

Procedures for resolving errors - 12 CFR 1005.33

20. Review the provider's policies and procedures on error resolution.
21. Review relevant error resolution statements/files, consumer complaints, form letters, etc., used in

- addressing errors or questions concerning remittance transfer transactions.
- one business day or as soon as reasonably practicable thereafter;
22. Assess the provider's compliance program to determine whether it has developed and maintains adequate written policies and procedures designed to ensure compliance with the error resolution requirements applicable to remittance transfers. Consider:
 - a. The procedures for receiving complaints of error from branches, agents or other locations where a consumer may lodge a complaint;
 - b. The procedures for identifying complaints alleging "errors" as identified in 12 CFR 1005.33(a); and
 - c. The procedures for investigating, responding to, and resolving complaints.
 23. Determine the extent of the provider's compliance with its policies and procedures on error resolution.
 24. Determine the provider's compliance with the regulatory requirements regarding investigation of alleged errors, and notification of consumers within the allotted time frames.
 25. Determine the timeliness and adequacy of remedies the provider provides to address identified errors.
 - a. For errors under 12 CFR 1005.33(a)(1)(iv) other than those that occurred because the sender provided incorrect or insufficient information, consider:
 - i. If the provider provided the sender notice regarding the error investigation.
 - ii. If the sender requested a remedy, determine whether the provider provides the remedy selected by the sender. If a default remedy is provided, determine whether the sender had a reasonable time to designate a remedy after receiving a report of the error.
 - iii. If the remedy is delivery of the amount appropriate to correct the error, determine whether the provider corrects the error within one business day, or as soon as reasonably practicable, applying the same exchange rate, fees, and taxes stated in the disclosure provided in connection with the remittance transfer with respect to which the error was made;
 - iv. If the remedy is a refund, determine whether the provider refunds the appropriate amount within
 - b. If the provider determines that an error occurred that relates to:
 - i. An incorrect amount paid by the sender;
 - ii. A computational or bookkeeping error made by the remittance transfer provider; or
 - iii. Failure to make the amount of currency stated in the disclosures available to the designated recipient.
 26. Determine whether the provider either:
 - a. Refunds the amount of funds provided by the sender (in case of a transaction that was not properly transmitted), or the amount appropriate to resolve the error; or
 - b. Makes available to the designated recipient, the amount appropriate to resolve the error without additional cost to the sender or the designated recipient.
 - c. If the error relates to the failure to make funds available to the designated recipient by the disclosed date of availability (other than an error resulting from incorrect or insufficient information provided by the sender), determine whether the provider:
 - i. Either:
 1. Refunds the amount of funds that was not properly transmitted, or the amount appropriate to resolve the error to the sender; or
 2. Makes available to the designated recipient the amount appropriate to resolve the error; and
 - ii. Refunds to the sender any fees and, to the extent not prohibited by law, taxes collected on the remittance transfer.
 - d. In the case of errors involving incorrect or insufficient information provided by the sender for the transfer:
 - i. Determine whether the provider refunds to the sender the amount of funds that was not properly transmitted, or the amount appropriate to resolve the error, the fees and taxes paid by the sender in connection with the remittance transfer, and only deducts those fees actually deducted by a person other than the provider and (where not prohibited by law) taxes actually collected for the original unsuccessful transaction, within three business days of providing the written explanation of findings.

VI. Deposits — EFTA

- ii. Alternatively, if the provider has not yet processed a refund and agrees to the sender's request to apply the funds towards a new remittance transfer, instead of a refund, determine whether the provider treats the request as a new remittance transfer, provides the appropriate disclosures, and only deducts those fees actually deducted by a person other than the provider and (where not prohibited by law) taxes actually collected for the original unsuccessful transaction.

27. Determine that the provider is maintaining records of compliance for a period of not less than two years from the date a notice of error was submitted to the provider or action was required to be taken by the provider.

Procedures for cancellation and refund of remittance transfers - 12 CFR 1005.34 and 12 CFR 1005.36(c)

28. Review and assess the provider's policies and procedures regarding cancellation and refund of remittance transfer transactions, including:

- a. The procedures for receiving requests of cancellation from branches, agents or other locations where a consumer may request cancellation.
- b. The procedures for identifying which transactions are eligible for cancellation.
- c. The procedures for issuing refunds.

29. Determine the extent of the provider's compliance with its own policies and procedures on cancellation and refund.
30. Determine the provider's compliance with the regulatory requirements regarding senders' request for cancellation and refund.
31. Determine whether the provider complies with any oral or written request to cancel any remittance transfer scheduled by the sender at least three business days before the date of the remittance transfer.

Acts of agents - 12 CFR 1005.35

NOTE: Complete this section if the provider uses agent(s) to conduct any element of remittance transfer transactions.

32. Review the provider's agreements with agents used for remittance transfers to determine whether they are appropriate for the activities delegated.
33. Determine whether the provider has established appropriate internal controls and review procedures in relation to the work done by agents on its behalf to ensure compliance with the regulatory requirements. Consider:
 - a. The extent to which the provider has established and maintained policies or procedures for compliance, including policies, procedures, or other appropriate oversight measures designed to assure compliance by an agent or authorized delegate acting for such provider including:
 - i. The degree of control the agent exercises over the remittance transfer activities performed on the provider's behalf;
 - ii. The quality and frequency of training provided to ensure that agents are aware of the regulatory requirements and the provider's internal policy guidelines; and
 - iii. The adequacy of the provider's oversight of agents' activities.

Transfers scheduled before the date of transfer - 12 CFR 1005.36

35. Review and assess the adequacy of the provider's policies and procedures regarding transfers scheduled before the date of transfer.
36. As appropriate, select a sample of records of transfers scheduled before the date of transfer to determine whether the provider complies with the timing of disclosures, accuracy of disclosures (and estimates pursuant to 1005.32(b)(2)) and the sender's request for cancellation. Use the same methods identified in the sections above, regarding other disclosures. Consider the following:
 - a. For one-time transfers scheduled five or more business days before the date of transfer or for the first in a series of preauthorized remittance transfers, determine whether the provider provides either a pre-payment disclosure and a receipt or a combined disclosure at the time the sender requests the transfer but prior to payment.

NOTE: If any of the disclosures provided contain estimates as permitted by 12 CFR 1005.32(b)(2), the provider must mail or deliver an additional receipt no later than one business day after the date of the transfer. If the transfer involves the transfer of funds from the sender's account held by the provider, this additional receipt may be provided on or with the next periodic statement for that account, or within 30 days after the date of the transfer if a periodic statement is not provided.

- b. For each subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer, determine whether the provider provides an updated receipt if any of the information (other than temporal disclosures or disclosures that are permitted to be estimated) on the most recent receipt is no longer accurate.

NOTE: The receipt must clearly and conspicuously indicate that it contains updated disclosures and must be mailed or delivered to the sender within a reasonable time prior to the scheduled date of the next subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer. A disclosure that is mailed no later than ten business days or hand or electronically delivered no later than five business days is deemed to have been provided within a reasonable time.

- c. If there is no updated information and the remittance transfer does not involve the transfer of funds from the sender's account held by the provider, determine whether the provider mails or delivers a receipt to the sender no later than one business day after the date of the transfer for each subsequent preauthorized transfer;
- d. If there is no updated information and the remittance transfer involves the transfer of funds from the sender's account held by the provider, determine whether the receipt is provided on or with the next periodic statement for that account, or within 30 days after the date of the transfer if a periodic statement is not provided;
- e. For any subsequent transfer in a series of preauthorized remittance transfers, determine whether the provider discloses the information required by 12 CFR 1005.36(d)(1) no more than 12 months, and no less than five business days prior to, the date of the subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer.

NOTE: While the rule generally provides flexibility as to when and where future transfer dates may be disclosed, for any subsequent preauthorized remittance transfer for which the date of transfer is four or fewer business days after the date payment is made, the disclosure must generally be provided on or with the receipt for the initial transfer in that series.

This questionnaire can be used to review audit workpapers, to evaluate financial institution policies, to perform transaction testing, and to train as appropriate. Complete only those aspects of the checklist that specifically relate to the issue being reviewed, evaluated, or tested, and retain those completed sections in the workpapers.

When reviewing audits, evaluating financial institution policies, or performing transaction testing, a “No” answer indicates a possible exception/deficiency, and you should explain it in the workpapers. If a line item is not applicable within the area you are reviewing, indicate by using “NA.”

Truth in Savings

Introduction

Regulation DD (12 C.F.R. § 1030), which implements the Truth in Savings Act (TISA), became effective in June 1993. An official staff commentary interprets the requirements of Regulation DD (12 C.F.R. § 1030 (Supplement I)). Since then, several amendments have been made to Regulation DD and the Staff Commentary, including changes, effective January 1, 2010, concerning disclosures of aggregate overdraft and returned item fees on periodic statements and balance disclosures provided to consumers through automated systems. In addition, effective July 6, 2010, clarifications were made to the provisions related to overdraft services (NOTE: The effective date for the clarification to section 1030.11(a)(1)(i), requiring the term “Total Overdraft Fees” to be used, is October 1, 2010) (75 FR 31673). Regulation DD, is issued by the CFPB to implement the Truth in Savings Act of 1991, contained in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 (12 U.S.C.3201 et seq., Public Law 102-242, 105 Stat.2236), as amended by title X, section 1100B of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Pub.L. 111-203, 124 Stat 1376).

The purpose of Regulation DD is to enable consumers to make informed decisions about their accounts at depository institutions through the use of uniform disclosures. The disclosures aid comparison shopping by informing consumers about the fees, annual percentage yield, interest rate, and other terms for deposit accounts. A consumer is entitled to receive disclosures:

- When an account is opened;
- Upon request;
- When the terms of the account are changed;
- When a periodic statement is sent; and
- For most time accounts, before the account matures.

The regulation also includes requirements on the payment of interest, the methods of calculating the balance on which interest is paid, the calculation of the annual-percentage yield, and advertising.

Coverage \(§ 1030.1\)

Regulation DD applies to all depository institutions, except credit unions, that offer deposit accounts to residents of any state. Branches of foreign institutions located in the United States are subject to Regulation DD if they offer deposit accounts to consumers. Edge Act and agreement corporations, and agencies of foreign institutions, are not depository institutions for purposes of Regulation DD.

In addition, persons who advertise accounts are subject to the advertising rules. For example, if a deposit broker places an advertisement offering consumers an interest in an account at a depository institution, the advertising rules apply to the advertisement, whether the account is to be held by the broker or directly by the consumer.

Definitions \(§ 1030.2\)

Section 1030.2 defines key terms used in Regulation DD. Among those definitions are the following:

Account (§ 1030.2(a))

An account is a deposit account at a depository institution that is held by or offered to a consumer. It includes time, demand, savings, and negotiable order of withdrawal accounts. Regulation DD covers interest-bearing as well as noninterest-bearing accounts.

Advertisement (§ 1030.2(b))

An advertisement is a commercial message, appearing in any medium, that promotes directly or indirectly (a) the availability or terms of, or a deposit in, a new account, and (b) for purposes of sections 1030.8(a) (misleading or inaccurate advertisements) and 1030.11 (additional disclosure requirements for institutions advertising the payment of overdrafts), the terms of, or a deposit in, a new or existing account. An advertisement includes a commercial message in visual, oral, or print media that invites, offers, or otherwise announces generally to prospective customers the availability or terms of, or a deposit in, a consumer account. Examples of advertisements include telephone solicitations and messages on automated teller machine screens.

Annual percentage yield (§ 1030.2(c))

An annual percentage yield is a percentage rate reflecting the total amount of interest paid on an account, based on the interest rate and the frequency of compounding for a 365-day period or 366-day period during leap years and calculated according to the rules in Appendix A of Regulation DD. Interest or other earnings are not to be included in the annual percentage yield if the circumstances for determining the interest and other earnings may or may not occur in the future (see Appendix A, footnote 1).

Average daily balance method (§ 1030.2(d))

The average daily balance method is the application of a periodic rate to the average daily balance in the account for the period. The average daily balance is determined by adding the full amount of principal in the account for each day of the period and dividing that figure by the number of days in the period.

Bureau (§ 1030.2(e))

The Bureau means the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau.

VI. Deposits — TISA

Bonus (§ 1030.2(f))

A bonus is a premium, gift, award, or other consideration worth more than $10 (whether in the form of cash, credit, merchandise, or any equivalent) given or offered to a consumer during a year in exchange for opening, maintaining, renewing, or increasing an account balance. The term does not include interest, other consideration worth $10 or less given during a year, the waiver or reduction of a fee, or the absorption of expenses.

Business day (§ 1030.2(g))

A business day is a calendar day other than a Saturday, a Sunday, or any of the legal public holidays specified in 5 U.S.C. § 6103(a).

Consumer (§ 1030.2(h))

A consumer is a natural person who holds an account primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, or to whom such an account is offered. The term does not include accounts held by a natural person on behalf of another in a professional capacity or accounts held by individuals as sole proprietors.

Daily balance method (§ 1030.2(i))

The daily balance method is the application of a daily periodic rate to the full amount of principal in the account each day.

Depository institution (§ 1030.2(j))

A depository institution and an institution are institutions defined in section 19(b)(1)(A)(i)-(vi) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. § 461), except credit unions defined in section 19(b)(1)(A)(iv). Branches of foreign institutions located in the United States are subject to the regulation if they offer deposit accounts to consumers. Edge Act and agreement corporations, and agencies of foreign institutions, are not depository institutions for purposes of this regulation.

Deposit broker (§ 1030.2(k))

A deposit broker is a person who is in the business of placing or facilitating the placement of deposits in an institution, as defined by section 29(g) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. § 1831f(g)).

Fixed-rate account (§ 1030.2(l))

A fixed-rate account is an account for which the institution contracts to give at least 30 calendar days' advance written notice of decreases in the interest rate.

Grace period (§ 1030.2(m))

A grace period is a period following the maturity of an automatically renewing time account during which the consumer may withdraw funds without being assessed a penalty.

Interest (§ 1030.2(n))

Interest is any payment to a consumer or to an account for the use of funds in an account, calculated by applying a periodic rate to the balance. Interest does not include the payment of a bonus or other consideration worth $10 or less during a year, the waiver or reduction of a fee, or the absorption of expenses.

Interest rate (§ 1030.2(o))

An interest rate is the annual rate of interest paid on an account and does not reflect compounding. For purposes of the account disclosures in section 1030.4(b)(1)(i), the interest rate may, but need not, be referred to as the "annual percentage rate" in addition to being referred to as the "interest rate."

Passbook savings account (§ 1030.2(p))

A passbook savings account is a savings account in which the consumer retains a book or other document in which the institution records transactions on the account. Passbook savings accounts include accounts accessed by preauthorized electronic fund transfers to the account. As defined in Regulation E, a preauthorized electronic fund transfer is an electronic fund transfer authorized in advance to recur at substantially regular intervals. Examples include an account that receives direct deposit of Social Security payments. Accounts permitting access by other electronic means are not passbook savings accounts and must comply with the requirements of section 1030.6 if statements are sent four or more times a year.

Periodic statement (§ 1030.2(q))

A periodic statement is a statement setting forth information about an account (other than a time account or passbook savings account) that is provided to a consumer on a regular basis four or more times a year.

State (§ 1030.2(r))

A state is a state, the District of Columbia, the commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

Stepped-rate account (§ 1030.2(s))

A stepped-rate account is an account that has two or more interest rates that take effect in succeeding periods and are known when the account is opened.

Tiered-rate account (§ 1030.2(t))

A tiered-rate account is an account that has two or more interest rates that are applicable to specified balance levels. A requirement to maintain a minimum balance to earn interest does not make an account a tiered-rate account.

Time account (§ 1030.2(u))

A time account is an account with a maturity of at least seven days in which the consumer generally does not have a right to make withdrawals for six days after the account is opened, unless the deposit is subject to an early withdrawal penalty of at least seven days' interest on the amount withdrawn.

Variable-rate account (§ 1030.2(v))

A variable-rate account is an account in which the interest rate may change after the account is opened, unless the institution contracts to give at least 30 calendar days' advance written notice of rate decreases.

General disclosure requirements (§ 1030.3)

General requirements (§ 1030.3(a) and (b))

Section 1030.3 outlines the general requirements for account disclosures and periodic-statement disclosures. Such disclosures are required to be:

- Clear and conspicuous;
- In writing;
- In a form the consumer may keep;
- Clearly identifiable for different accounts, if disclosures for different accounts are combined;
- Reflective of the terms of the legal obligation of the account agreement between the consumer and the depository institution;
- Available in English upon request if the disclosures are made in languages other than English; and
- Consistent in terminology when describing terms or features that are required to be disclosed.

Electronic disclosures

The E-Sign Act does not mandate that institutions or consumers use or accept electronic records or signatures. It does, however, permit institutions to satisfy any statutory or regulatory requirements that information, such as Regulation DD disclosures, be provided in writing to a consumer by providing the information electronically after obtaining the consumer's affirmative consent. But before consent can be given, consumers must be provided with a clear and conspicuous statement, informing the consumer of:

- Any right or option to have the information provided in paper or non-electronic form;
- The right to withdraw the consent to receive information electronically and the consequences, including fees, of doing so;
- The scope of the consent (whether the consent applies only to a particular transaction or to identified categories of records that may be provided during the course of the parties' relationship);
- The procedures to withdraw consent and to update information needed to contact the consumer electronically; and

- The methods by which a consumer may obtain, upon request, a paper copy of an electronic record after consent has been given to receive the information electronically and whether any fee will be charged.

After the consent, if an institution changes the hardware or software requirements such that a consumer may be prevented from accessing and retaining information electronically, the institution must notify the consumer of the new requirements and must allow the consumer to withdraw consent without charge.

Prior to consenting, the consumer must be provided with a statement of the hardware and software requirements for access to and retention of the electronic information. The consumer must consent electronically or confirm consent electronically in a manner that "reasonably demonstrates that the consumer can access information in the electronic form that will be used to provide the information that is the subject of the consent."

Under section 1030.3(a), the disclosures required by sections 1030.4(a)(2) (Disclosures Upon Request) and 1030.8 (Advertising) may be provided to the consumer in electronic form without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act, as set forth in those sections of Regulation DD. For example, under section 1030.4(a)(2) (Disclosures Upon Request), if a consumer who is not present at the institution makes a request for disclosures, the institution may provide the disclosures electronically if the consumer agrees without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act.

Relation to Regulation E (§ 1030.3(c))

- An institution changes a term that triggers a notice under Regulation E, and uses the timing and disclosure rules of Regulation E for sending change-in-term notices.
- Consumers add an ATM access feature to an account, and the institution provides disclosures pursuant to Regulation E, including disclosure of fees (See 12 C.F.R. § 1005.7).
- An institution, complying with the timing rules of Regulation E, discloses at the same time fees for electronic services (such as for balance inquiry fees at ATMs) required to be disclosed by this regulation but not by Regulation E.
- An institution relies on Regulation E's rules regarding disclosure of limitations on the frequency and amount of electronic fund transfers, including security-related exceptions. But any limitations on intra-institutional transfers to or from the consumer's other accounts during a given time period must be disclosed, even though intra-institutional transfers are exempt from Regulation E.

VI. Deposits — TISA

Other requirements (§ 1030.3(d)–(f))

Other general disclosure requirements include the following:

Multiple consumers (§ 1030.3(d))

If an account is held by more than one consumer, disclosures may be made to any one of the consumers.

Oral response to inquiries (§ 1030.3(e))

If an institution chooses to provide rate information orally, it must state the annual percentage yield and may state the interest rate. However, the institution may not state any other rate. The advertising rules do not cover an oral response to a rate inquiry.

Rounding and accuracy rules for rates and yields (§ 1030.3(f))

The rounding and accuracy requirements are as follows:

- Rounding — The annual percentage yield, the annual percentage yield earned, and the interest rate must be rounded to the nearest one-hundredth of one percentage point (.01%) and expressed to two decimal places. (For account disclosures, the interest rate may be expressed to more than two decimal places.) For example, if an annual percentage yield is calculated at 5.644 percent, it must be rounded down and disclosed as 5.64 percent, or if annual percentage yield is calculated at 5.645 percent, it must be rounded up and disclosed as 5.65 percent.
- Accuracy — The annual percentage yield (and the annual percentage yield earned) will be considered accurate if it is not more than one-twentieth of one percentage point (.05 percent) above or below the annual percentage yield (and the annual percentage yield earned) that are calculated in accordance with Appendix A of Regulation DD.

Account disclosures (§ 1030.4)

Section 1030.4 covers the delivery and content of account disclosures both at the time an account is open and when requested by a consumer.

Delivery of account disclosures (§ 1030.4(a))

Disclosures at account opening (§ 1030.4(a)(1))

A depository institution must provide account disclosures to a consumer before an account is opened or a service is provided, whichever is earlier. (An institution is deemed to have provided a service when a fee, required to be disclosed, is assessed.) An institution must mail or deliver the account opening disclosures no later than ten business days after the account is opened or the service is provided, whichever is earlier, if the consumer:

- Is not present when the account is opened or the service is provided; and
- Has not received the disclosures.

If a consumer who is not present at the institution uses electronic means (for example, an Internet Web site) to apply to open an account or to request a service, the disclosures must be provided before the account is opened or the service is provided.

Disclosures upon request (§ 1030.4(a)(2))

A depository institution must provide full account disclosures, including complete fee schedules, to a consumer upon request. Institutions must comply with all requests for this information, whether or not the requestor is an existing customer or a prospective customer. A response to an oral inquiry (by telephone or in person) about rates and yields or fees does not trigger the duty to provide account disclosures. However, when consumers ask for written information about an account (whether by telephone, in person, or by other means), the institution must provide disclosures, unless the account is no longer offered to the public.

If the consumer makes the request in person, disclosures must be provided at that time. If a consumer is not present when the request is made, the institution must mail or deliver the disclosures within a reasonable time after it receives the request. Ten business days is considered a reasonable time for responding to requests for account information that a consumer does not make in person, including requests made by electronic means (such as by electronic mail).

If a consumer who is not present at the institution makes a request for account disclosures, including a request made by telephone, e-mail, or via the institution's Web site, the institution may send the disclosures in paper form, or if the consumer agrees, may provide the disclosures electronically, such as to an e-mail address that the consumer provides for that purpose, or on the institution's Web site, without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act. The institution is not required to provide, nor is the consumer required to agree to receive, the disclosures required by section 1030.4(a)(2) in electronic form.

When providing disclosures upon the request of a consumer, the institution has several choices of how to specify the interest rate and annual percentage yield. The institution may disclose the rate and yield offered:

- Within the most recent seven calendar days;
- As of an identified date; or
- Currently by providing a telephone number for consumers to call.

Further, when providing disclosures upon the request of a consumer, the institution may state the maturity of a time account as a term rather than a date. Describing the maturity of a time account as "1 year" or "6 months," for example, illustrates a statement of the maturity as a term rather than a date (“January 10, 1995”).

Content of account disclosures (§ 1030.4(b))

Account disclosures must include, as applicable, information on the following (see Appendix A and B of Regulation DD for information on the annual percentage yield calculation and for model clauses for account disclosures and sample forms):

Rate information (§ 1030.4(b)(1))

An institution must disclose both the “annual percentage yield” and the “interest rate,” using those terms.

For fixed-rate accounts, an institution must disclose the period of time that the interest rate will be in effect.

For variable-rate accounts, an institution must disclose the following:

- The fact that the interest rate and annual percentage yield may change;
- How the interest rate is determined;
- The frequency with which the interest rate may change; and
- Any limitation on the amount the interest rate may change.

Compounding and crediting (§ 1030.4(b)(2))

An institution must disclose the frequency with which interest is compounded and credited. In cases where consumers will forfeit interest if they close an account before accrued interest is credited, an institution must state that interest will not be paid.

Balance information (§ 1030.4(b)(3))

An institution must disclose the following information about account balances:

- Minimum balance requirements – An institution must disclose any minimum balance requirement to:
 - a. Open the account;
 - b. Avoid the imposition of a fee; or
 - c. Obtain the annual percentage yield disclosed.

In addition, the institution must disclose how the balance is determined to avoid the imposition of a fee or to obtain the annual percentage yield.

- Balance computation method – An explanation of the balance-computation method, specified in section 1030.7 of Regulation DD, that is used to calculate interest on the account. An institution may use different methods or periods to calculate minimum balances for purposes of imposing a fee and accruing interest. Each method and corresponding period must be disclosed.

- When interest begins to accrue – An institution must state when interest begins to accrue on noncash deposits.

Fees (§ 1030.4(b)(4))

An institution must disclose the amount of any fee that may be imposed in connection with the account (or an explanation of how the fee will be determined) and the conditions under which the fee may be imposed. Examples of fees that must be disclosed are:

- Maintenance fees, such as monthly service fees;
- Fees to open or to close an account;
- Fees related to deposits or withdrawals, such as fees for use of the institution’s ATMs; and
- Fees for special services, such as stop-payment fees.

Institutions must state if fees that may be assessed against an account are tied to other accounts at the institution. For example, if an institution ties the fees payable on a NOW account to balances held in the NOW account and a savings account, the NOW account disclosures must state that fact and explain how the fee is determined.

An institution must specify the categories of transactions for which an overdraft fee may be imposed. For example, it is sufficient to state that the fee applies to overdrafts “created by check, in-person withdrawal, ATM withdrawal, or other electronic means.” However, it is insufficient to state that a fee applies “for overdraft items.”

Transaction limitations (§ 1030.4(b)(5))

An institution must disclose any limitations on the number or dollar amount of withdrawals or deposits. Examples of such limitations include:

- Limits on the number of checks that may be written on an account within a given time period;
- Limits on withdrawals or deposits during the term of a time account; and
- Limits under Regulation D (Reserve Requirements on Depository Institutions) on the number of withdrawals permitted from money market deposit accounts by check to third parties each month.

Features of time accounts (§ 1030.4(b)(6))

For time accounts, an institution must disclose information about the following features:

- Time requirements — An institution must state the maturity date and, for “callable” time accounts, the date or circumstances under which an institution may redeem a time account at the institution’s option.

VI. Deposits — TISA

- Early withdrawal penalties — An institution must state:
 - a. If a penalty will or may be imposed for early withdrawal;
 - b. How it is calculated; and
 - c. The conditions for its assessment.

An institution may, but does not need to, use the term “penalty” to describe the loss of interest that consumers may incur for early withdrawal of funds from an account.

Examples of early withdrawal penalties include:

- a. Monetary penalties, such as “$10.00” or “seven days’ interest plus accrued but uncredited interest;”
 - b. Adverse changes to terms such as a lowering of the interest rate, annual percentage yield, or compounding frequency for funds remaining on deposit; and
 - c. Reclamation of bonuses.
- Withdrawal of interest prior to maturity — An institution must disclose the following, as applicable:
 - a. A statement that the annual percentage yield assumes interest remains on deposit until maturity and that a withdrawal will reduce earnings for accounts where:
 - i. Compounding occurs during the term; and
 - ii. Interest may be withdrawn prior to maturity.

OR

- b. A statement that interest cannot remain on deposit and that payout of interest is mandatory for accounts where:
 - i. The stated maturity is greater than one year;
 - ii. Interest is not compounded on an annual or more frequent basis;
 - iii. Interest is required to be paid out at least annually; and
 - iv. The annual percentage yield is determined in accordance with section E of Appendix A of Regulation DD.
- Renewal policies — An institution must state whether an account will, or will not, renew automatically at maturity. If it will, the statement must indicate whether a grace period will be provided and, if so, must indicate the length of that period. For accounts that do not renew automatically, the statement must indicate whether interest will be paid after maturity if the consumer does not renew the account.

Bonuses (§ 1030.4(b)(7))

For bonuses, an institution must disclose:

- The amount or type of any bonus;
- When the bonus will be provided; and

- Any minimum balance and time requirements to obtain the bonus.

Subsequent disclosures (§ 1030.5)

Section 1030.5 covers the required disclosures when the terms of an account change, resulting in a negative effect on the consumer. In addition, this section covers the required disclosures for both time accounts that automatically renew and have a maturity longer than one month and time accounts that do not renew automatically and have a maturity of longer than one year.

Change in terms (§ 1030.5(a))

Advance notice required (§ 1030.5(a)(1))

An institution must give advance notice to affected consumers of any change in a term that is required to be disclosed if the change may reduce the annual percentage yield or adversely affect the consumer. The notice must include the effective date of the change and must be mailed or delivered at least 30 calendar days before the effective date of the change.

No notice required (§ 1030.5(a)(2))

An institution is not required to provide a notice for the following changes:

- For variable-rate accounts, any change in the interest rate and corresponding changes in the annual percentage yield;
- Any changes in fees assessed for check printing;
- For short-term time accounts, any changes in any term for accounts with maturities of one month or less;
- The imposition of account maintenance or activity fees that previously had been waived for a consumer when the consumer was employed by the depository institution, but who is no longer employed there; and
- The expiration of a one-year period that was part of a promotion, described in the account opening disclosures, for example, to “waive $4.00 monthly service charges for one year.”

Notice for time accounts longer than one month that renew automatically (§ 1030.5(b))

For automatically renewing time accounts with maturity longer than one month, an institution must provide different disclosures depending on whether the maturity is longer than one year or whether the maturity is one year or less. All disclosures must be provided before maturity. The requirements are summarized below and in a chart in Attachment A of these procedures.

Maturities longer than one year (§ 1030.5(b)(1))

If the maturity is longer than one year, the institution must provide the date the existing account matures and the required account disclosures for a new account, as described in section

1030.4(b). If the interest rate and annual percentage yield that will be paid for the new account are unknown when disclosures are provided, the institution must state:

- That those rates have not yet been determined;
- The date when they will be determined; and
- A telephone number for consumers to call to obtain the interest rate and the annual percentage yield for the new account.

Maturities longer than one month but no more than one year (§ 1030.5(b)(2))

If the maturity is longer than one month but less than or equal to one year, the institution must either:

- Provide the disclosures required in section 1030.5(b)(1) for accounts longer than one year; or
- Disclose to the consumer:
 - a. The date the existing account matures and the new maturity date if the account is renewed;
 - b. The interest rate and the annual percentage yield for the new account if they are known. If the rates have not yet been determined, the institution must disclose:
 - i. The date when they will be determined; and
 - ii. A telephone number the consumer may call to obtain the interest rate and the annual percentage yield for the new account; and
 - c. Any difference in the terms of the new account as compared to the terms required to be disclosed for the existing account.

Delivery (§ 1030.5(b))

All disclosures must be mailed or delivered at least 30 calendar days before maturity of the existing account. Alternatively, the disclosures may be mailed or delivered at least 20 calendar days before the end of the grace period on the existing account, provided a grace period of at least five calendar days is allowed.

Notice for time accounts longer than one year that do not renew automatically (§ 1030.5(c))

For time accounts with maturity longer than one year that do not renew automatically at maturity, an institution must disclose to consumers the maturity date and whether interest will be paid after maturity. The disclosures must be mailed or delivered at least 10 calendar days before maturity of the existing account. The requirements are summarized in a chart in Attachment A of these procedures.

Periodic statement disclosures (§ 1030.6)

Regulation DD does not require institutions to provide periodic statements. However, for institutions that mail or deliver periodic statements, section 1030.6 sets forth specific information that must be included in a periodic statement.

General Requirements (§ 1030.6(a))

The statement must include the following disclosures:

Annual percentage yield earned (§ 1030.6(a)(1))

An institution must state the annual percentage yield earned during the statement period, using that term, and calculated according to Appendix A of Regulation DD.

Amount of interest (§ 1030.6(a)(2))

An institution must state the dollar amount of interest earned during the statement period, whether or not it was credited. In disclosing interest earned for the period, an institution must use the term “interest” or terminology such as:

- “Interest paid,” to describe interest that has been credited; or
- “Interest accrued” or “interest earned,” to indicate that interest is not yet credited.

Fees imposed (§ 1030.6(a)(3))

An institution must report any fees that are required to be disclosed and that were debited to the account during the statement period, even if assessed for an earlier period. The fees must be itemized by type and dollar amounts.

When fees of the same type are imposed more than once in a statement period, an institution may itemize each fee separately or group the fees together and disclose a total dollar amount for all fees of that type. When fees of the same type are grouped together, the description must make clear that the dollar figure represents more than a single fee, for example, “total fees for checks written this period.” The Staff Commentary provides examples of fees that may not be grouped together. For example, an institution must separately identify whether a fee was for the payment of an overdraft or for returning the item unpaid.

Total overdraft and returned item fees, if any, must also be disclosed on the periodic statement. An institution must provide totals for fees for the payment of overdrafts and totals for items returned unpaid, both for the statement period and for the calendar year to date. See section 1030.11(a)(1) and (2). (The institution may, however, continue to itemize overdraft and returned item fees.)

Length of period (§ 1030.6(a)(4))

An institution must indicate the total number of days in the statement period, or the beginning and ending dates of the period. Institutions providing the beginning and ending dates of the period must make clear whether both dates are included in the period.

VI. Deposits — TISA

Combined statements (Staff Commentary § 1030.6\(a\)-3)

Institutions may provide information about an account (for example, a Money Market Deposit Account) on the periodic statement for another account (such as a Negotiable Order of Withdrawal account) without triggering the disclosures required by this section, as long as:

- The information is limited to the account number, the type of account, or balance information; and
- The institution also provides a periodic statement complying with this section for each account.

Aggregate fee disclosure (§ 1030.6(a)(5))

If an institution charges a consumer overdraft and returned item fees, it must disclose them on the consumer's periodic statement as required by section 1030.11(a).

Special rule for average daily balance method (§ 1030.6(b))

Section 1030.6 has special periodic statement requirements for an institution using the average daily balance method and calculating interest for a period other than the statement period. In these situations, an institution must calculate and disclose the annual percentage yield earned and amount of interest earned based on the time period used rather than the statement period. In addition, when disclosing the length of period requirement on the periodic statement, an institution must state this information for the statement period as well as the interest-calculation period. See Staff Commentary for examples.

Payment of interest (§ 1030.7)

Section 1030.7 covers the payment of interest, including how to determine the balance on which to pay interest, the daily periodic rate to use, and the date interest begins to accrue.

Permissible methods to determine balance to calculate interest (§ 1030.7(a)(1))

An institution must calculate interest on the full amount of principal in an account for each day by using one of the two following methods:

- Daily balance method, where the daily periodic rate is applied to the full amount of principal in the account each day; or
- Average daily balance method, where a periodic rate is applied to the average daily balance in the account for the period. The average daily balance is determined by adding the full amount of principal in the account for each day of the period and dividing that figure by the number of days in the period.

The following are prohibited calculation methods:

- Ending-balance method, where interest is paid on the balance in the account at the end of the period;

- Low-balance method, where interest is paid based on the lowest balance in the account for any day in that period; and
- Investable-balance method, where interest is paid on a percentage of the balance, excluding the amount set aside for reserve requirements.

Use of 365-day basis (Staff Commentary § 1030.7\(a\)\(1\)-2)

Institutions may apply a daily periodic rate greater than 1/365 of the interest rate—such as 1/360 of the interest rate—as long as it is applied 365 days a year.

Leap year (Staff Commentary § 1030.7\(a\)\(1\)-4)

Institutions may apply a daily rate of 1/366 or 1/365 of the interest rate for 366 days in a leap year, if the account will earn interest for February 29.

Maturity of time accounts (Staff Commentary § 1030.7\(a\)\(1\)-5)

Institutions are not required to pay interest after time accounts mature.

Dormant accounts (Staff Commentary § 1030.7\(a\)\(1\)-6)

Institutions must pay interest on funds in an account, even if inactivity or the infrequency of transactions would permit the institution to consider the account to be “inactive” or “dormant” (or similar status) as defined by state, other laws, or the account contract.

Permissible methods to determine minimum balance to earn interest (§ 1030.7(a)(2))

If an institution requires a minimum balance to earn interest, it must use the same method to determine the required minimum balance as it uses to determine the balance on which interest is calculated. For example, if an institution requires a $300 minimum balance that would be determined by using the average daily balance method, then it must calculate interest based on the average daily balance method. Further, an institution may use an additional method that is unequivocally beneficial to the consumer.

Balances below the minimum (Staff Commentary § 1030.7\(a\)\(2\)-1 and 2)

An institution that requires a minimum balance may choose not to pay interest for days or periods when the balance drops below the required minimum, whether they use the daily-balance method or the average-daily-balance method to calculate interest.

Paying on full balance (Staff Commentary § 1030.7\(a\)\(2\)-4)

Institutions must pay interest on the full balance in the account that meets the required minimum balance. For example, if $300 is the minimum daily balance required to earn interest, and a consumer deposits $500, the institution must pay the stated interest rate on the full $500 and not just on $200.

Minimum balance not affecting interest (Staff Commentary § 1030.7\(a\)\(2\)-7)

Institutions may use the daily-balance, average-daily-balance, or any other computation method to calculate minimum-balance requirements that do not involve the payment of interest. For example, an institution may use any computation method to compute minimum balances for assessing fees.

Compounding and crediting policies (§ 1030.7(b))

This section does not require institutions to compound or credit interest at any particular frequency. Institutions choosing to compound interest may compound or credit interest annually, semi-annually, quarterly, monthly, daily, continuously, or on any other basis.

An institution may choose not to pay accrued interest if consumers close an account prior to the date accrued interest is credited, as long as the institution has disclosed this practice in the initial account disclosures.

Date interest begins to accrue (§ 1030.7(c))

Interest shall begin to accrue not later than the business day specified for interest-bearing accounts in section 606 of the Expedited Funds Availability Act, which states:

... interest shall accrue on funds deposited in an interest-bearing account at a depository institution beginning not later than the business day on which the depository institution receives provisional credit for such funds.

Interest shall accrue until the day funds are withdrawn.

Advertising (§ 1030.8)

Section 1030.8 contains account advertising requirements, including overall general rules and rules for special account features. In addition, the section describes advertising involving certain types of media and in-house posters that are exempt from Regulation DD's advertising requirements.

General advertising rules (§ 1030.8(a) and (b))

Misleading or inaccurate advertising (§ 1030.8(a))

An institution may not advertise in a way that is misleading or inaccurate or misrepresents its deposit contract. In addition, an advertisement may not use the word "profit" in referring to interest paid on an account.

An institution's advertisement may not refer to or describe an account as "free" or "no cost" (or contain a similar term such as "fees waived") if a maintenance or activity fee may be imposed on the account. Examples of such maintenance or activity fees include:

- Any fee imposed when a minimum-balance requirement is not met, or when consumers exceed a specified number of transactions;
- Transaction and service fees that consumers reasonably expect to be imposed on a regular basis;
- A flat fee, such as a monthly service fee; and
- Fees imposed to deposit, withdraw, or transfer funds, including per-check or per-transaction charges (for example, 25 cents for each withdrawal, whether by check or in person).

Examples of fees that are not maintenance or activity fees include:

- Fees not required to be disclosed under section 1030.4(b)(4),
- Check-printing fees;
- Balance-inquiry fees;
- Stop-payment fees and fees associated with checks returned unpaid;
- Fees assessed against a dormant account; and
- Fees for ATM or electronic transfer services (such as preauthorized transfers or home banking services) not required to obtain an account.

If an account (or a specific account service) is free only for a limited period of time (for example, for one year following the account opening) the account (or service) may be advertised as free if the time period is also stated.

If an electronic advertisement (such as an advertisement appearing on an Internet Web site) displays a triggering term (such as a bonus or annual percentage yield), described elsewhere in section 1030.8, the advertisement must clearly refer the consumer to the location where the additional required information begins. For example, an advertisement that includes a bonus or annual percentage yield may be accompanied by a link that directly takes the consumer to the additional information. As discussed in section 1030.3(a), electronic advertising disclosures may be provided to the consumer in electronic form without regard to the consumer consent or other provisions of the E-Sign Act.

The Staff Commentary provides the following examples of advertisements that would ordinarily be misleading, inaccurate, or misrepresent the deposit contract:

- Representing an overdraft service as a "line of credit," unless the service is subject to the Bureau's Regulation Z (12 C.F.R. § 1026).
- Representing that the institution will honor all checks or authorize payment of all transactions that overdraw an account, with or without a specified dollar limit, when the institution retains discretion at any time not to honor checks or authorize transactions.

VI. Deposits — TISA

- Representing that consumers with an overdrawn account are allowed to maintain a negative balance when the terms of the account's overdraft service require consumers promptly to return the deposit account to a positive balance.
- Describing an institution's overdraft service solely as protection against bounced checks when the institution also permits overdrafts for a fee for overdrawing accounts by other means, such as ATM withdrawals, debit card transactions, or other electronic fund transfers.
- Advertising an account-related service for which the institution charges a fee in an advertisement that also uses the word "free" or "no cost" (or a similar term) to describe the account, unless the advertisement clearly and conspicuously indicates that there is a cost associated with the service. If the fee is a maintenance or activity fee under section 1030.8(a)(2), however, an advertisement may not describe the account as "free" or "no cost" (or contain a similar term) even if the fee is disclosed in the advertisement.

Advertising rate information (§ 1030.8(b))

When an institution states a rate of return in an advertisement:

- It must state the rate as an "annual percentage yield," using that term.
- If the advertisement uses the abbreviation "APY," the term "annual percentage yield" must be stated at least once in the advertisement.
- If the advertisement uses the term "interest rate," it must use the term in conjunction with, but not more conspicuously than, the related annual percentage yield.
- It may not state any other rate except "annual percentage yield" or "interest rate."
- It must round the annual percentage yield, the annual percentage yield earned, and the interest rate to the nearest one-hundredth of one percentage point (.01%) and express them to two decimal places.

An advertisement for a tiered-rate account that states an annual percentage yield must also state the annual percentage yield for each tier, along with corresponding minimum-balance requirements.

An advertisement for a stepped-rate account that states an interest rate must state all the interest rates and the time period that each rate is in effect.

Required advertising for special account features (§ 1030.8(c))

If an institution advertises an annual percentage yield for a product and the product includes one of the features listed in sections 1030.8(c)(1)-(6), then the institution must clearly and conspicuously disclose the information outlined in sections 1030.8(c)(1)-(6) as noted below. However, these requirements do not necessarily apply if the situation falls under the exemptions of section 1030.8(e).

Variable rates (§ 1030.8(c)(1))

For variable-rate accounts, the advertisement must state that the rate may change after the account is opened.

Time annual percentage yield (APY) is offered (§ 1030.8(c)(2))

The advertisement must include the period of time during which the annual percentage yield will be offered. Alternatively, the advertisement may state that the annual percentage yield is accurate as of a specified date. The date must be recent in relation to the publication or media broadcast used for the advertisement, taking into account the particular circumstances or production deadlines involved. An advertisement may refer to the annual percentage yield as being accurate as of the date of publication, if the date is on the publication itself.

Minimum balance (§ 1030.8(c)(3))

For accounts that have a required minimum balance, the advertisement must state the minimum balance required to obtain the advertised annual percentage yield. For tiered-rate accounts, the advertisement must state the minimum balance required for each tier in close proximity and with equal prominence to the applicable annual percentage yield.

Minimum opening deposit (§ 1030.8(c)(4))

For an account that requires a minimum deposit to open the account, the advertisement must state the minimum deposit required to open the account, if it is greater than the minimum balance necessary to obtain the advertised annual percentage yield.

Effect of fees (§ 1030.8(c)(5))

An advertisement must state that fees could reduce the earnings on the account. This requirement only applies to maintenance or activity fees.

Features of time accounts (§ 1030.8(c)(6))

For time accounts, the advertisement must include:

- Term of the account;
- Early withdrawal penalties — a statement that a penalty will or may be imposed for early withdrawal; and

- Required interest payouts — a statement that interest cannot remain on deposit and that payout of interest is mandatory for noncompounding time accounts with the following features:
 - a. The stated maturity is greater than one year;
 - b. Interest is not compounded on an annual or more frequent basis;
 - c. Interest is required to be paid out at least annually; and
 - d. The annual percentage yield is determined in accordance with section E of Appendix A of Regulation DD.
- Exempted advertising requirements:
 - a. Information required for special account features involving variable rates, time an annual percentage yield is offered, minimum opening deposit, effect of fees, and early withdrawal penalties for time accounts.
 - b. When bonuses are advertised, information required related to a minimum balance to open an account (if it is greater than the minimum balance necessary to obtain the bonus) and related to when a time the bonus will be provided.

Indoor signs (§ 1030.8(e)(2))

If an institution posts account information on signs inside its premises (or the premises of a deposit broker), the posting are exempt from the advertising requirements for:

- Permissible rates;
- When additional disclosures are required;
- Bonuses; and
- Certain media exemption.

If a sign, falling under this exemption, states a rate of return, it must:

- State the rate as an “annual percentage yield,” using that term or the term “APY.” The sign must not state any other rate, although the related interest rate may be stated.
- Contain a statement advising consumers to contact an employee for further information about applicable fees and terms.

Indoor signs include advertisements displayed on computer screens, banners, preprinted posters, and chalk or peg boards. Any advertisement inside the premises that can be retained by a consumer (such as a brochure or a printout from a computer) is not an indoor sign.

Additional disclosures in connection with the payment of overdrafts (§ 1030.8(f))

In addition to the general requirement that advertisements not be misleading, an institution that promotes the payment of overdrafts in an advertisement must also include in the advertisement the disclosures required under section 1030.11(b).

Record retention (§ 1030.9(c))

Section 1030.9(c) covers the record retention requirements in order for an institution to demonstrate compliance with Regulation DD, including rate information, advertising, and providing disclosures to consumers at the appropriate time (including upon a consumer’s request).

Bonuses (§ 1030.8(d))

If an institution states a bonus in an advertisement, the advertisement must state clearly and conspicuously the following information, if applicable to the advertised product:

- “Annual percentage yield,” using that term;
- Time requirement to obtain the bonus;
- Minimum balance required to obtain the bonus;
- Minimum balance required to open the account, if it is greater than the minimum balance necessary to obtain the bonus; and
- Time when the bonus will be provided.

However, these requirements do not necessarily apply if the situation falls under the exemptions of section 1030.8(e). In addition, general statements such as “bonus checking” or “get a bonus when you open a checking account” do not trigger the bonus disclosures.

Exemption for certain advertisements (§ 1030.8(e))

Section 1030.8(e) exempts certain types of media and certain indoor signs from some of the section’s advertising rules.

Media exemptions (§ 1030.8(e)(1))

If an institution advertises through one of the following media, the advertisement does not need to include information required under certain section 1030.8 rules, as outlined below:

- Exempted media:
 - a. Broadcast or electronic media, such as television or radio. However, the exemption does not extend to Internet and email advertisements.
 - b. Outdoor media, such as billboards.
 - c. Telephone response machines. However, solicitations for a tiered-rate account made through telephone-response machines must provide the annual percentage yields and the balance requirements applicable to each tier.

VI. Deposits — TISA

Timing

An institution must retain records that evidence compliance for a minimum of two years after the date that disclosures are required to be made or an action is required to be taken. If required by its supervising agency, an institution may need to retain records for a longer time period.

Evidence of required actions

An institution may demonstrate its compliance by

- Establishing and maintaining procedures for paying interest and providing timely disclosures, and
- Retaining sample disclosures for each type of account offered to consumers such as account-opening disclosures, copies of advertisements, and change-in-term notices; and information regarding the interest rates and annual percentage yields offered.

Methods of retaining evidence

An institution must be able to reconstruct the required disclosures and other required actions, but does not need to maintain hard copies of disclosures and other records. It may keep records evidencing compliance in microfilm, microfiche, or other methods that reproduce records accurately (including computer files).

Payment of interest

An institution must retain sufficient rate and balance information to permit the verification of interest paid on an account, including the payment of interest on the full principal balance.

Section 1030.10 – [Reserved]

Additional disclosure requirements for overdraft services (§ 1030.11)

Section 1030.11 contains periodic statement and advertising requirements for certain discretionary overdraft services. The requirements address concerns about the uniformity and adequacy of information provided to consumers when they overdraw their deposit accounts. Specifically, they address certain types of services – sometimes referred to as “bounced-check protection” or “courtesy overdraft protection” – which institutions offer to pay consumers’ checks and other items when there are insufficient funds in the account. The requirements apply to all depository institutions, regardless of whether they promote their overdraft services.

Periodic statement disclosures (§ 1030.11(a))

Disclosure of total fees (§ 1030.11(a)(1))

The institution must disclose on its periodic statements (if it provides periodic statements) separate totals for the statement period and for the calendar year to date for:

- The total dollar amount for all fees or charges imposed on the account for paying checks or other items when there are insufficient or unavailable funds and the account becomes overdrawn, using the term “Total Overdraft Fees” (the requirement to use the term “Total Overdraft Fees” is effective October 1, 2010), and
- The total dollar amount for all fees or charges imposed on the account for returning items unpaid.

The aggregate fee disclosures must be placed in close proximity to the disclosure of any fee(s) that may be imposed in connection with the account and must use a substantially similar format as shown below. (See Appendix B of the regulation). The table must contain lines (or similar markings such as asterisks) inside the table to divide the columns and rows.

The total dollar amount for paying overdrafts includes per-item fees as well as interest charges, daily or other periodic fees, or fees charged for maintaining an account in overdraft status, whether the overdraft is by check, debit card transaction, or by other transaction type. It also includes fees charged when there are insufficient funds because previously deposited funds are subject to a hold or are uncollected. It does not include fees for transferring funds from another account of the consumer to avoid an overdraft, or fees charged under a service subject to Regulation Z (12 C.F.R. § 1026).

	Total for this period	Total year-to-date
Total Overdraft Fees	$60.00	$150.00
Total Returned Item Fees	0.00	30.00

The total dollar amount for all fees for returning items unpaid must include all fees charged to the account for dishonoring or returning checks or other items drawn on the account. The institution must disclose separate totals for the statement period and for the calendar year-to-date. Fees imposed when deposited items are returned are not included. Institutions may use terminology such as “returned item fee” or “NSF fee” to describe fees for returning items unpaid.

In the case of waived fees, an institution may provide a statement for the current period reflecting that fees imposed during a previous period were waived and credited to the account. Institutions may, but are not required to, reflect the adjustment in the total for the calendar year-to-date and in the applicable statement period. For example, if an institution assesses a fee in January and refunds the fee in February, the institution could disclose a year-to-date total reflecting the amount credited, but it should not affect the total disclosed for the February statement period, because the fee was not assessed in the February statement period. If an institution assesses and then waives and credits a fee within the same cycle, the institution may, at its option, reflect the adjustment in the total disclosed for fees imposed during the current statement period and for the total for the calendar year-to-date. Thus, if the institution assesses and waives the fee in the February statement period, the February fee total could reflect a total net of the waived fee.

The disclosures under this section must be included on periodic statements provided by an institution starting the first statement period that began after January 1, 2010. For example, if a consumer's statement period typically closes on the 15th of each month, an institution must provide the disclosures required by this section on subsequent periodic statements for that consumer beginning with the statement reflecting the period from January 16, 2010 to February 15, 2010.

Advertising disclosures for overdraft services (§ 1030.11(b))

Disclosures (§ 1030.11(b)(1))

Unless an exception in section 1030.11(b)(2)-(4) applies, any advertisement promoting the payment of overdrafts must disclose in a clear and conspicuous manner all of the following:

- The fee(s) for the payment of each overdraft;
- The categories of transactions for which a fee may be imposed for paying an overdraft;
- The time period by which the consumer must repay or cover any overdraft; and
- The circumstances under which the institution will not pay an overdraft. It is sufficient to state, as applicable, "Whether your overdrafts will be paid is discretionary and we reserve the right not to pay. For example, we typically do not pay overdrafts if your account is not in good standing, or you are not making regular deposits, or you have too many overdrafts."

Communications not subject to additional advertising disclosures (§ 1030.11(b)(2))

The advertising disclosure rules for overdraft services do not apply in the following circumstances:

- An advertisement promoting a service where the institution's payment of overdrafts would be agreed upon in writing and subject to Regulation Z (12 C.F.R. § 1026);
- A communication by an institution about the payment of overdrafts in response to a consumer-initiated inquiry about deposit accounts or overdrafts. However, providing information about the payment of overdrafts in response to a balance inquiry made through an automated system, such as a telephone response machine, ATM, or an institution's Internet site, is not a response to a consumer-initiated inquiry that is exempt from the advertising disclosures;

- An advertisement made through broadcast or electronic media, such as television or radio. However, this exception does not apply to advertisements posted on an institution's Internet site, on an ATM screen, provided on telephone-response machines, or sent by electronic mail;
- An advertisement made on outdoor media, such as billboards;
- An ATM receipt;
- An in-person discussion with a consumer;
- Disclosures required by federal or other applicable law;
- Information included on a periodic statement or on a notice informing a consumer about a specific overdrawn item or the amount the account is overdrawn;
- A term in a deposit account agreement discussing the institution's right to pay overdrafts;
- A notice provided to a consumer, such as at an ATM, that completing a requested transaction may trigger a fee for overdrawing an account, or a general notice that items overdrawing an account may trigger a fee;
- Informational or educational materials concerning the payment of overdrafts if the materials do not specifically describe the institution's overdraft service; or
- An opt-out or opt-in notice regarding the institution's payment of overdrafts or provision of discretionary overdraft services.

Exception for ATM screens and telephone response machines (§ 1030.11(b)(3))

Any advertisement made on an ATM screen or using a telephone response machine is not required to include the following:

- The categories of transactions for which a fee may be imposed for paying an overdraft; or
- The circumstances under which the institution will not pay an overdraft.

Exception for indoor signs (§ 1030.11(b)(4))

The advertising requirement to disclose fees for the payment of each overdraft does not apply to advertisements for the payment of overdrafts on indoor signs, if the indoor sign contains a clear and conspicuous statement that:

- Fees may apply; and
- Consumers should contact an employee for further information about applicable fees and terms.

An indoor sign covered under this exception is one described in section 1030.8(e)(2) and the accompanying Staff Commentary. In addition to the Staff Commentary's examples of advertisements that are not considered indoor signs, an ATM screen is not considered an indoor sign for purposes of the overdraft disclosure requirements.

VI. Deposits — TISA

Account balance disclosures (§ 1030.11(c))

In general, section 1030.11(c) covers how an institution displays a consumer's account balance information on automated systems, such as an ATM, when the institution will advance additional funds to cover insufficient or unavailable funds in a consumer's account. Specifically, if an institution discloses balance information to a consumer through an automated system, the disclosed balance may not include additional amounts that the institution may provide to cover an item when there are insufficient or unavailable funds in the consumer's account. This requirement covers additional funds that an institution may provide under a service provided at the institution's own discretion, a service subject to Regulation Z (12 C.F.R. § 1026), or a service to transfer funds from another account of the consumer. However, the institution may, at its option, disclose an additional, second account balance that would include funds provided by the institution, if the institution prominently states that any such second balance includes funds that the institution may provide to cover insufficient or unavailable funds in the consumer's account and, if applicable, that additional funds are not available for all transactions.

Additional amounts that may be included in balance

The balance may, but need not, include funds that are deposited in the consumer's account, such as from a check, that are not yet made available for withdrawal in accordance with the funds availability rules under Regulation CC (12 C.F.R. § 229). In addition, the balance may, but need not, include funds that are held by the institution to satisfy a prior obligation of the consumer (for example, to cover a hold for an ATM or debit card transaction that has been authorized but for which the bank has not settled).

Retail sweep programs

When disclosing a transaction account balance, an institution is not required to exclude funds from the consumer's balance that may be transferred from another account pursuant to a retail sweep account. In a retail sweep program, an institution establishes two legally distinct subaccounts, a transaction subaccount and a savings subaccount. These two accounts together make up the consumer's account. Retail sweep account programs typically:

- Comply with Regulation D;
- Prevent direct access by the consumer to the non-transaction subaccount that is part of the retail sweep program; and

- Document on the consumer's periodic statements the account balance as the combined balance in the subaccounts.

Disclosure of second balance

If an institution discloses additional balances that include funds that may be provided to cover an overdraft, the institution must prominently state that the additional balance(s) includes additional overdraft funds. The institution may not simply state, for instance, that the second balance is the consumer's "available balance," or contains "available funds." Rather, the institution should provide enough information to convey that the second balance includes funds that the institution may provide to cover insufficient or unavailable funds. For example, the institution may state that the balance includes "overdraft funds." Where a consumer has not opted into (or as applicable, has opted out of) the institution's discretionary overdraft service, any additional balance disclosed should not include funds that otherwise might be available under that service. Where a consumer has not opted into (or as applicable, has opted out of) the institution's discretionary overdraft service for some, but not all transactions (e.g., the consumer has not opted into overdraft services for ATM and one-time debit card transactions), an institution that includes funds from its discretionary overdraft service in the balance should convey that the overdraft funds are not available for all transactions. For example, the institution could state that overdraft funds are not available for ATM and one-time debit card transactions. Similarly, if funds are not available for all transactions pursuant to a service subject to the Bureau's Regulation Z (12 C.F.R. § 1026) or a service that transfers funds from another account, a second balance that includes such funds should also indicate this fact.

Automated systems

The balance disclosure requirement applies to any automated system through which the consumer requests a balance, including, but not limited to, a telephone response system, the institution's Internet site, or an ATM. The requirement applies whether the institution discloses a balance through an ATM owned or operated by the institution or through an ATM not owned or operated by the institution (including an ATM operated by a non-depository institution). If the balance is obtained at an ATM, the requirement also applies whether the balance is disclosed on the ATM screen or on a paper receipt.

Effect on state laws (Regulation DD - Appendix C)

Regulation DD preempts state law requirements that are inconsistent with the requirements of the Truth in Savings Act (TISA) or Regulation DD. A state law is inconsistent if it contradicts the definitions, disclosure requirements, or interest-calculation methods outlined in the act or the regulation. The regulation also provides that interested parties may request the Bureau to determine whether a state law is inconsistent with the TISA.

Examination Objectives

To determine the institution's compliance with Regulation DD, including the requirements to provide full account disclosures (for example, fee schedules) to consumers to open an account and upon request and including the requirements covering overdraft payment disclosures and advertising.

To assess the quality of the institution's compliance risk management systems and its policies and procedures for implementing Regulation DD.

To determine the reliance that can be placed on the institution's internal controls and procedures for monitoring the institution's compliance with Regulation DD.

To direct corrective action when violations of law are identified, or when the institution's policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures¹Management and Policy-Related Examination Procedures

1. Determine the types of deposit accounts offered by the institution to consumers (including accounts usually offered to commercial customers that may occasionally be offered to consumers) as well as the characteristics of each type of deposit account (for example, bonuses offered, minimum balances, balance-computation method, frequency of interest crediting, fixed or variable rates, fees imposed, and frequency of periodic statements).
2. Review relevant written policies and procedures, management's self-assessments, complaints, and any compliance audit material including work papers and reports to determine whether:
 - a. The scope of the audit addresses all provisions as applicable.
 - b. Management has taken corrective actions to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies.
 - c. The testing includes samples covering all product types and decision centers.
 - d. The work performed is accurate.
 - e. Significant deficiencies and their causes are included in reports to management and to the Board of Directors, as appropriate.
 - f. The frequency of review is appropriate.
3. Through discussions with management and review of available information, determine whether the institution's internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance in Regulation DD area under review. Consider the following:
 - a. Organization charts
 - b. Process flowcharts
 - c. Policies and procedures
 - d. Account documentation
 - e. Checklists
 - f. Computer program documentation
4. Through a review of the institution's training materials, determine whether:
 - a. The institution provides appropriate training to individuals responsible for Regulation DD compliance and operational procedures.
 - b. The training is comprehensive and covers the various aspects of Regulation DD that apply to the individual institution's product offerings and operations.
 - c. The training includes the timing requirements of section 1030.4(a)(2) to provide disclosure information (e.g., terms, conditions, and fees) to a consumer upon a request, whether or not the consumer is an existing or a prospective customer. Review whether the training instructs all employees to provide such disclosures at the time of the request if the consumer makes the request in person or within 10 days if the consumer is not present when making the request.
5. Determine the extent and adequacy of the institution's policies, procedures, and practices for ensuring compliance with the regulation. In particular, verify that:
 - a. Account disclosure information is provided to all consumers within the appropriate time frames. This requirement pertains to all consumer requesters whether or not the consumer is an existing customer or a prospective customer.
 - b. Advance notice is given for any changes in terms required to be disclosed under section 1030.4 and that exceptions to the advance notice requirements are limited to those set forth in section 1030.5(a)(2).
 - c. If periodic statements are given, the statements disclose the required information, including the annual percentage yield earned, the amount of interest, fees imposed, and the statement's covered time period.
 - d. The institution's methods of paying interest are permissible. Review the dates on which interest begins to accrue on deposits to accounts, and determine whether hold times comply with the Expedited Funds Availability Act.
 - e. The institution's advertising policies are consistent with the requirements of the regulation, including advertising requirements for overdraft services.
 - f. Evidence of compliance is retained for a minimum of two years after the date disclosures are required to be made or action is required to be taken.

VI. Deposits — TISA

- g. The periodic statements separately disclose the total fees and charges for payment of items that overdraw the account and for returning items unpaid. These disclosures must be provided for the statement period and the calendar year-to-date.

Transaction-Related Examination Procedures

If upon conclusion of the management and policy-related examination procedures, procedural weaknesses or other risks requiring further investigation are noted, conduct the transaction testing, as necessary, using the following examination procedures. Use examiner judgment in deciding how large each sample of deposit account disclosures, notices, and advertisements should be. The sample size should be increased until confidence is achieved that all aspects of the institution's activities and policies that are subject to the regulation are reviewed.

General Disclosure Requirements (12 C.F.R. § 1030.3)

1. Determine whether disclosures are made clearly and conspicuously in writing and in a form the consumer may keep. (§ 1030.3(a))
2. If the disclosures are combined with other account disclosures, determine whether it is clear which disclosures are applicable to the consumer's account. (§ 1030.3(a))
3. If the institution provides a consumer disclosures in electronic form, determine whether the institution has obtained the consumer's consent, where required, and complies with the other applicable provisions of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (E-Sign Act) (15 U.S.C. § 7001 et seq.) (§ 1030.3(a))
4. Determine whether the disclosures reflect the legal obligation of the account agreement between the consumer and the institution. (§ 1030.3(b))

6. Determine whether disclosures use consistent terminology when describing terms or features that are required to be disclosed. (Staff Commentary 1030.3(a)-2)
7. Determine whether the institution substitutes disclosures required by Regulation E for disclosures required by Regulation DD. (§ 1030.3(c))
8. Determine whether the institution provides required disclosures to at least one account holder if there are multiple holders. (§ 1030.3(d))
9. Determine whether the institution's oral response to a consumer's inquiry about interest rates payable on accounts state the annual percentage yield (APY). If the institution chooses, it may also state the interest rate, but no other rate. (§ 1030.3(e))
10. Determine whether the APY, the annual percentage earned (APYE) and the interest rate are rounded to the nearest one-hundredth of one percentage point (.01%).

NOTE: For account disclosures, the interest rate may be expressed to more than two decimal places. (§ 1030.3(f)(1))

11. Determine whether the APYs and APYEs are not more than one-twentieth of one percentage point (.05%) above or below the APY (and APYE) as determined in accordance with Appendix A of Regulation DD. (§ 1030.3(f)(2))

Account Disclosures (12 C.F.R. § 1030.4)

 - A statement of whether or not the account will renew automatically at maturity. (§ 1030.4(b)(6)(iv))
 - If it will renew automatically at maturity, a statement whether or not a grace period will be provided and, if so, the length of the grace period.
 - If it will not renew automatically, a statement of whether interest will be paid after maturity if the consumer does not renew the account.

Bonuses

Determine whether the account disclosures state the amount or type of any bonus, when the bonus will be provided, and any minimum balance and time requirements to obtain the bonus. (§ 1030.4(b)(7))

Subsequent Disclosures (12 C.F.R. § 1030.5)

 - A telephone number to call to obtain the rates that will be paid on the new account;

AND

by use of either the daily balance method or the average daily balance method. (§ 1030.7(a)(1))

2. For deposit accounts that require a minimum balance to earn interest, determine whether the institution is using the same method to determine the minimum balance as it uses to determine the balance on which interest is calculated. (§ 1030.7(a)(2))

NOTE: An institution may use an additional method that is unequivocally beneficial to the consumer.
(§ 1030.7(a)(2))

3. If an institution chooses not to pay accrued interest if the consumer closes an account prior to the date accrued interest is credited, determine whether the institution has disclosed this practice in the initial account disclosures. (Staff Commentary § 1030.7(b)-3) consumer to the location where the additional required information begins. (Staff Commentary § 1030.8(a)-9)

5. For institutions that promote the payment of overdrafts in an advertisement, determine whether the advertisement includes the disclosures required by section 1030.11(b). (§ 1030.8(f))

Permissible Advertisement Rates

6. For advertisements that state a rate of return, determine whether (§ 1030.8(b)):
 - a. The rate is stated as an “annual percentage yield” using that term and that no other rate is stated except “interest rate.”
 - b. If the advertisement uses the abbreviation “APY,” the term “annual percentage yield” is stated at least once in the advertisement.
 - c. If the advertisement states the interest rate, it uses the term “interest rate” in conjunction with, but not be more conspicuous than, the annual percentage yield to which it relates.
 - d. Rates are rounded to the nearest one-hundredth of one percentage point (.01%) and expressed to two decimal places.
7. For tiered-rate accounts, determine whether an annual percentage yield is stated for each tier, along with corresponding minimum-balance requirements. (Staff Commentary § 1030.8(b)-1)
8. For stepped-rate accounts, determine whether all interest rates and the time period that each rate is in effect are stated. (Staff Commentary § 1030.8(b)-2)

Required Additional Disclosures

9. With the exception of broadcast, electronic, or outdoor media, telephone-response machines, and indoor signs, if the annual percentage yield is stated in the advertisement, determine whether it includes the following information, as applicable, clearly and conspicuously:

 - e. The minimum deposit to open the account, if it is greater than the minimum balance necessary to obtain the advertised annual percentage yield. (§ 1030.8(c)(4))

VI. Deposits — TISA

Exemptions for certain advertisements

11. Advertisements made through broadcast, electronic, or outdoor media, and telephone-response machines are exempted from some of the Regulation DD advertising requirements and are only required to contain certain information. (This exemption does not apply to Internet or e-mail advertisements.) NOTE: The table must contain lines (or similar markings such as asterisks) inside the table to divide the columns and rows.

Advertisement Requirements

3. Unless an exception under section 1030.11(b)(2)-(4) applies, when an institution advertises the payment of overdrafts, determine whether the institution clearly and conspicuously discloses in advertisements:

Garnishment of Accounts Containing Federal Benefit Payments

Introduction

Many consumers receive Federal benefit payments that are protected under Federal law from being accessed or “garnished” by creditors, other than the United States government and certain State agencies, through a garnishment order or similar written instruction issued by a court. Despite these protections, developments in debt collection practices and technology, including the direct deposit of benefits, have led to an increase in the freezing of accounts containing Federal benefit payments by financial institutions that receive a garnishment order. As a result, the Department of the Treasury (Fiscal Service), the Social Security Administration, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Railroad Retirement Board, and the Office of Personnel Management have jointly issued a rule¹ (interagency regulation or regulation) that a financial institution must follow when it receives a garnishment order against an account holder who receives certain Federal benefit payments by direct deposit. The types of Federal benefit payments covered by the interagency regulation are:

- Social Security benefits;
- Supplemental Security Income benefits;
- Veterans benefits;
- Federal Railroad retirement, unemployment and sickness benefits;
- Civil Service Retirement System benefits; and
- Federal Employee Retirement System benefits.

The Federal banking agencies are responsible for enforcing compliance with this regulation.² Under the regulation, generally, financial institutions that receive a garnishment order are required to follow certain procedures, including the following: (1) determine whether any account held by the named account holder received exempt Federal payments by direct deposit; (2) determine the sum of protected Federal benefits deposited to each individual account during a two-month period; and (3) ensure that the account holder has access to an amount equal to that sum or to the current balance of such account(s), whichever is lower.

When a financial institution receives a garnishment order, it must first determine whether the order was obtained by the United States or issued by a State child support enforcement agency.³ If so, the financial institution follows its customary procedures for handling the order since Federal benefit payments can generally be accessed or garnished by such agencies.

If the garnishment order was not obtained by the United States or issued by a State child support enforcement agency, the financial institution must follow the interagency regulation to protect Federal benefit payments directly deposited into a consumer’s account during a two-month “lookback” period. The interagency regulation contains provisions on the timing of an account review, the determination of the protected amount, notice to the account holder (including a model form) regarding the garnishment order, and record retention. In addition, the interagency regulation allows a financial institution to rely on the presence of certain ACH identifiers (i.e., character “XX” encoded in the appropriate positions of the “Company Entry Description” field and the number “2” in the “Originator Status Code” field of the Batch Header Record) to determine whether a direct deposit payment is a Federal benefit payment for purposes of the regulation.

The financial institution must notify the account holder that the financial institution has received a garnishment order, if all of the following conditions are met: (1) a covered benefit agency deposited a benefit payment into an account during the lookback period; (2) the balance in the account on the date of account review was above zero dollars and the financial institution established a protected amount; and (3) there are funds in the account in excess of the protected amount. For an account containing a protected amount, the financial institution may not charge or collect a garnishment fee against the protected amount. The financial institution may charge or collect a garnishment fee against additional funds deposited to the account up to five business days after the account review date.

Scope (31 CFR 212.2)

The interagency regulation applies to financial institutions that hold accounts into which the following benefits have been directly deposited:

1. Social Security Administration
 - Social Security benefits
 - Supplemental Security Income benefits
2. Department of Veterans Affairs
 - Veterans benefits
3. Railroad Retirement Board
 - Federal Railroad retirement, unemployment and sickness benefits

² The regulation specifically defines “Federal banking agency” to include: the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the National Credit Union Administration. See 31 CFR 212.3.

³ A State child support enforcement agency is the single and separate organizational unit in a State that has the responsibility for administering or supervising the State’s plan for child and spousal support pursuant to Title IV, Part D, of the Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. 654. See 31 CFR 212.3.

VI. Deposits — Garnishment of Accounts Containing Federal Benefit Payments

4. Office of Personnel Management
 - Civil Service Retirement System benefits
 - Federal Employee Retirement System benefits

Definitions (31 CFR 212.3)

“Account” means an account, including a master account or subaccount, at a financial institution to which an electronic payment may be directly routed.⁴

“Account holder” means a natural person against whom a garnishment order is issued and whose name appears in a financial institution's records as the direct or beneficial owner of an account.

“Account review” means the process of examining deposits in an account to determine if a benefit agency has deposited a benefit payment into the account during the lookback period.

“Benefit agency” means the Social Security Administration, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Railroad Retirement Board, or the Office of Personnel Management.

“Benefit payment” means a Federal benefit payment referred to in 31 CFR 212.2(b) paid by direct deposit to an account with the character “XX” encoded in positions 54 and 55 of the Company Entry Description field and the number “2” encoded in the Originator Status Code field of the Batch Header Record of the direct deposit entry.⁵

“Freeze” or “account freeze” means an action by a financial institution to seize, withhold, or preserve funds, or to otherwise prevent an account holder from drawing on or transacting against funds in an account, in response to a garnishment order.

“Garnish” or “garnishment” means execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

“Garnishment fee” means any service or legal processing fee, charged by a financial institution to an account holder, for processing a garnishment order or any associated withholding or release of funds.

“Garnishment order” or “order” means a writ, order, notice, summons, judgment, levy, or similar written instruction issued by a court, a State or State agency, a municipality or municipal corporation, or a State child support enforcement agency, including a lien arising by operation of law for overdue child support or an order to freeze the assets in an account, to effect a garnishment against a debtor.

Lookback period means the two-month period that (a) begins on the date preceding the date of account review and (b) ends on the corresponding date of the month two months earlier, or on the last date of the month two months earlier if the corresponding date does not exist.

For example, under this definition, the lookback period that begins on November 15 would end on September 15. On the other hand, the lookback period that begins on April 30 would end on February 28 (or 29 in a leap year), to reflect the fact that there are not 30 days in February.

Other examples illustrating the application of this definition are included in Appendix C of the interagency regulation.

“Protected amount” means the lesser of:

1. The sum of all benefit payments posted to an account between the close of business on the beginning date of the lookback period and the open of business on the ending date of the lookback period; or
2. The balance in an account when the account review is performed.⁶

Examples illustrating the application of this definition are included in Appendix C of the interagency regulation.

Initial Action upon Receipt of a Garnishment Order (31 CFR 212.4)

Within two business days after receiving a garnishment order, and prior to taking any other action related to the order, a financial institution must determine whether the order was obtained by the United States or issued by a State child support enforcement agency.⁷ To make this determination, the financial institution may rely on a “Notice of Right to Garnish Federal Benefits” (see Appendix B of the interagency regulation). For such orders obtained by the United States or issued by a State child support enforcement agency, the financial institution should not follow the interagency regulation but instead should follow its customary procedures for handling a garnishment order.

For all other garnishment orders, the financial institution is required to follow the procedures in 31 CFR 212.5 and 212.6.

⁴ An account does not include an account to which a benefit payment is subsequently transferred following its initial delivery by direct deposit to another account. See 76 FR at 9950. If a payment recipient is assigned a customer number that serves as a “prefix” for individual sub-accounts, the individual sub-account (and not the “master account”) is subject to the account review and lookback. See 78 FR at 32100.

⁵ For more information, see the Treasury Department’s “Guidelines for Garnishment of Accounts Containing Federal Benefit Payments” (<https://www.fms.treas.gov/greenbook/Garnishment-Guideline-06-13.pdf>).

⁶ The account balance includes intraday items such as ATM or cash withdrawals. The balance does not include any line of credit associated with the account. See 78 FR at 32101-32102.

⁷ Financial institutions will not violate State law by utilizing the two-day period, because the rule preempts any State requirement that an order be processed on the day of receipt. See 78 FR at 32104.

VI. Deposits — Garnishment of Accounts Containing Federal Benefit Payments

If a State law establishes a minimum protected amount before a garnishment order can be applied, the financial institution need not examine the order to determine if a Notice of Right to Garnish Federal Benefits is attached or included, or take any of the additional steps required under the rule.⁸

Account Review (31 CFR 212.5)

Timing of account review

After having been served a garnishment order issued against a debtor, a financial institution must perform an account review:

1. No later than two business days following receipt of both the garnishment order and sufficient information from the creditor to determine whether the debtor is an account holder; or
2. By a later date permitted by the creditor in situations where the financial institution is served a batch of a large number of orders. The date must be consistent with the terms of the orders and the financial institution must maintain records on such batches and creditor permissions, consistent with 31 CFR 212.11(b).

No benefit payment deposited during lookback period

If the account review shows that a benefit agency did not deposit a benefit payment into the account during the lookback period, then the financial institution should follow its customary procedures for handling the garnishment order and not the procedures in 31 CFR 212.6.

Benefit payment deposited during lookback period

If the account review shows that a benefit agency deposited a benefit payment into the account during the lookback period, then the financial institution must follow the procedures in 31 CFR 212.6.

Uniform application of account review

The financial institution must perform an account review without consideration for any other attributes of the account or the garnishment order, such as:

1. The presence of other funds, from whatever source, that may be commingled in the account with funds from a benefit payment;
2. The existence of a co-owner on the account;

3. The existence of benefit payments to multiple beneficiaries, and/or under multiple programs, deposited in the account;
4. The balance in the account, provided the balance is above zero dollars on the date of account review;
5. Instructions to the contrary in the order; or
6. The nature of the debt or obligation underlying the order.

Priority of account review

The financial institution must perform the account review prior to taking any other actions related to the garnishment order that may affect funds in the account.

Rules and Procedures to Protect Benefits (31 CFR 212.6)

If an account review shows that covered Federal benefits have been directly deposited into an account during the lookback period, the financial institution must comply with the rules and procedures to protect Federal benefits set forth in 31 CFR 212.6.

Protected amount

The financial institution must calculate and establish the protected amount for an account, ensuring that the account holder has full access to the protected amount.⁹ The financial institution may not freeze the protected amount in response to the garnishment order. Further, the account holder may not be required to assert any right of garnishment exemption prior to accessing the protected amount in the account.

Separate protected amounts

The financial institution must calculate and establish the protected amount separately for each account in the name of an account holder, consistent with the requirements in 31 CFR 212.5(f) to conduct distinct account reviews.

Funds in excess of the protected amount

For any funds in an account in excess of the protected amount, the financial institution must follow its customary procedures for handling garnishment orders, including the freezing of ⁸ State law is not inconsistent with the interagency regulation if it protects benefit payments in an account from being frozen or garnished at a higher protected amount than required under the regulation. For further discussion on preemption of State law (31 CFR 212.9), see “Comments and Analysis” section in Part II of Supplementary Information of the final rule. See 78 FR at 32106-32107.

⁹ Where an account holder had debit card access to an account prior to the receipt of a garnishment order, the requirement to provide “full and customary” access to the protected amount means the account holder should have debit card access to that amount. See 78 FR at 32104. Also, the interagency regulation does not limit a Federal credit union’s right to exercise its statutory lien authority against the protected amount in a member’s account. A lien may be enforced against an account when the member fails to satisfy an outstanding financial obligation due and payable to the Federal credit union. 12 U.S.C. 1757(11) and 12 CFR 701.39.

VI. Deposits — Garnishment of Accounts Containing Federal Benefit Payments

funds, provided they are consistent with paragraphs (f) and (g) of 31 CFR 212.6.

One-time account review process

The financial institution is only required to perform the account review one time after it receives a garnishment order. The financial institution should not repeat the account review or take any other action related to the order if the same order is subsequently served again upon the financial institution. However, if the financial institution is subsequently served a new or different garnishment order against the same account holder, the financial institution must perform a separate and new account review.¹⁰

No continuing or periodic garnishment responsibilities

The financial institution may not continually garnish amounts deposited or credited to the account following the date of account review. It also must take no action to freeze any funds subsequently deposited or credited, unless the institution is served with a new or different garnishment order.

Impermissible garnishment fee

The financial institution may not charge or collect a garnishment fee against a protected amount. The financial institution may charge or collect a garnishment fee up to five business days after the account review if funds other than a benefit payment are deposited to the account within this period, provided that the fee may not exceed the amount of the non-benefit deposited funds.

Notice to the Account Holder (31 CFR 212.7)

A financial institution must send an account holder named in the garnishment order a notice if:

1. A covered Federal benefit payment was directly deposited into an account during the lookback period;
2. The balance in the account on the date of account review was above zero dollars and the financial institution established a protected amount; and
3. There are funds in the account in excess of the protected amount.

Notice content

The notice must contain the following information in readily understandable language:

1. The financial institution's receipt of an order against the account holder;
2. The date on which the order was served;
3. A succinct explanation of garnishment;
4. The financial institution's requirement under the interagency regulation to ensure that account balances up to the protected amount specified in 31 CFR 212.3 are protected and made available to the account holder if a benefit agency deposited a benefit payment into the account in the last two months;
5. The account subject to the order and the protected amount established by the financial institution;
6. The financial institution's requirement pursuant to State law to freeze other funds in the account to satisfy the order and the amount frozen, if applicable;
7. The amount of any garnishment fee charged to the account, consistent with 31 CFR 212.6;
8. A list of the Federal benefit payments subject to this interagency regulation, as identified in 31 CFR 212.2(b);
9. The account holder's right to assert against the creditor that initiated the order a further garnishment exemption for amounts above the protected amount, by completing exemption claim forms, contacting the court of jurisdiction, or contacting the creditor, as customarily applicable for a given jurisdiction;
10. The account holder's right to consult an attorney or legal aid service in asserting against the creditor that initiated the order a further garnishment exemption for amounts above the protected amount; and
11. The name of the creditor, and, if contact information is included in the order, means of contacting the creditor.

Optional notice content

The financial institution also may provide the account holder in readily understandable language any of the following information:

1. The means of contacting a local free attorney or legal aid service;
2. The means of contacting the financial institution; and

¹⁰ A "new" garnishment order means the creditor has gone back to court and obtained a new order, as opposed to re-filing an order previously served (<https://www.fms.treas.gov/greenbook/FAQs-May-12-trsy-ver1.pdf>). A garnishment order that is re-issued after the return date, under a different execution number, would not constitute a "new" garnishment order.

VI. Deposits — Garnishment of Accounts Containing Federal Benefit Payments

3. A disclaimer that the financial institution is not providing legal advice by sending the required notice to the account holder.

Amending notice content

The financial institution may also amend the content of the notice to integrate information about a State's garnishment rules and protections in order to avoid potential confusion or harmonize the notice with State requirements, or to provide more complete information about an account.

Notice delivery

The financial institution must issue the notice directly to the account holder, or to a fiduciary who administers the account and receives communications on behalf of the account holder. Only information and documents pertaining to the garnishment order (including other notices or forms that may be required under State or local law) may be included in the communication.

Notice timing

The financial institution must send the notice to the account holder within three business days of the date of account review.

One notice for multiple accounts

The financial institution may issue one notice with information related to multiple accounts of an account holder.

Record Retention (31 CFR 212.11)

A financial institution must maintain records of account activity and actions taken in response to a garnishment order, sufficient to demonstrate compliance with this part, for a period of not less than two years from the date on which the financial institution receives the garnishment order.¹¹

Model Notice to Account Holder (31 CFR 212, Appendix A)

A financial institution may use the model notice found in Appendix A to the interagency regulation to meet the requirements of 31 CFR 212.7. Although use of the model notice is not required, a financial institution using it properly is deemed to be in compliance with 31 CFR 212.7.

¹¹ The financial institution has discretion in deciding what documentation to retain. The appropriate documentation may vary depending on the circumstances of each situation. See 78 FR at 32107.

Examination Procedures¹²

Initial Action upon Receipt of a Garnishment Order (31 CFR 212.4)

1. Determine whether, prior to taking any action relating to a garnishment order, the financial institution reviewed the order within two business days of receiving the order to ascertain whether it was obtained by the United States or issued by a State child support enforcement agency.
 - A. If the garnishment order was obtained by the United States or issued by a State child support enforcement agency as indicated by an attached or included Notice of Right to Garnish Federal Benefits, determine whether the financial institution followed its customary procedures to comply with the order.
 - B. If the garnishment order is not accompanied by a Notice of Right to Garnish Federal Benefits, proceed with the remaining examination procedures to determine whether the institution followed the requirements of 31 CFR 212.5 and 212.6.

Account Review (31 CFR 212.5)

2. Determine whether the financial institution performed an account review:
 - A. No later than two business days following receipt of both the garnishment order and sufficient information from the creditor to determine whether the debtor is an account holder; or
 - C. By a later date permitted by the creditor in situations where the financial institution is served a batch of a large number of orders. The date must be consistent with the terms of the orders and the financial institution must maintain records on such batches and creditor permissions consistent with 31 CFR 212.11(b).

Rules and Procedures to Protect Benefits (31 CFR 212.6)

3. If an account review shows that a covered benefit agency deposited a benefit payment into an account during the lookback period (i.e., the preceding two-month period as defined in 31 CFR 212.3), determine whether the financial institution has appropriately calculated and established the protected amount, and has done this separately for each account in the name of the account holder, if applicable.

¹² These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

VI. Deposits — Garnishment of Accounts Containing Federal Benefit Payments

4. Determine that the account holder has full and customary access to the protected amount established after the account review.
 5. If a garnishment fee has been assessed, determine that it was charged or collected up to five business days of the account review date and was not charged against a protected amount.
 6. For any funds in an account in excess of the protected amount, determine whether the financial institution followed its customary procedures for handling garnishment orders, including the freezing of funds.
 7. Determine whether the financial institution ceased to garnish amounts deposited or credited to the account following the date of account review.
 8. Determine whether the financial institution performed one-time account review upon the first service of the order and only took action to freeze funds subsequently deposited or credited if the institution was served with a new or different garnishment order consistent with the interagency regulation.
- I. The financial institution's requirement pursuant to State law to freeze other funds in the account to satisfy the order and the amount frozen, if applicable.
 - J. The amount of any garnishment fee charged to the account, consistent with 31 CFR 212.6.
 - K. A list of the Federal benefit payments subject to this interagency regulation, as identified in 31 CFR 212.2(b).
 - L. The account holder's right to assert against the creditor that initiated the order a further garnishment exemption for amounts above the protected amount, by completing exemption claim forms, contacting the court of jurisdiction, or contacting the creditor, as customarily applicable for a given jurisdiction.
 - M. The account holder's right to consult an attorney or legal aid service in asserting against the creditor that initiated the order a further garnishment exemption for amounts above the protected amount.
 - N. The name of the creditor, and, if contact information is included in the order, means of contacting the creditor.

Notice to the Account Holder (31 CFR 212.7)

9. If a covered benefit agency deposited a benefit payment into an account during the lookback period, the balance in the account on the date of account review was above zero dollars, the financial institution established a protected amount, and there are funds in the account in excess of the protected amount, determine whether the financial institution sent a notice to the account holder named in the garnishment order in readily understandable language within three business days of account review and included the following:

- D. The financial institution's receipt of an order against the account holder.
- E. The date on which the order was served.
- F. A succinct explanation of garnishment.
- G. The financial institution's requirement under the interagency regulation to ensure that account balances up to the protected amount specified in 31 CFR 212.3 are protected and made available to the account holder if a benefit agency deposited a benefit payment into the account in the last two months.
- H. Identification of the account subject to the order and notice of the protected amount established by the financial institution.

A financial institution may also provide optional notice content or amend the notice content consistent with this section of the regulation.

A financial institution may use the model notice in Appendix A of the interagency regulation to meet the requirements of 31 CFR 212.7. Although use of the model notice is not required, a financial institution that uses it properly is deemed to be in compliance with this section.

Record Retention (31 CFR 212.11)

10. Determine whether the financial institution maintains records of account activity and actions taken in response to a garnishment order for at least two years from the date on which it receives the garnishment order.

VII. Unfair and Deceptive Practices

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act

Federal Trade Commission Act, Section 5 and Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, Sections 1031 and 1036

Introduction

These examination procedures inform examiners about activities that may constitute unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices and how to evaluate the effectiveness of FDIC-supervised institutions' processes for identifying, measuring, monitoring, and otherwise mitigating the risks associated with them. In this context, unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices are legal standards established pursuant to Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (FTC Act) and the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (the Dodd-Frank Act). Throughout these procedures these standards will be referred to, respectively, as "FTC UDAPs" and "Dodd-Frank UDAAPs."

The FDIC utilizes a risk-focused examination approach to promote, assess, and confirm institutions' compliance with FTC UDAPs and/or Dodd-Frank UDAAPs. While FTC UDAPs and/or Dodd-Frank UDAAPs occur infrequently, they may result in significant consumer harm and erode consumer confidence in the financial institution. Heightened risk may be present in situations involving: changes to a bank's products or services; the offering of a complex or atypical product; and marketing and delivery strategies using one or more third party providers.

A FTC UDAP and/or Dodd-Frank UDAAP finding is dependent on the relevant specific facts and circumstances; each institution is different and presents distinct potential risks. Accordingly, examination staff should apply the instructions in these procedures consistently as part of their assessment of institutions. In addition, the FDIC will conduct appropriate legal analysis based on the FTC UDAP and/or Dodd-Frank UDAAP standards, and consider the particular facts and circumstances at each institution to determine whether a violation has occurred.

Background

In 1938, Congress expanded the FTC Act to not only prohibit unfair methods of competition but to also prohibit "unfair or deceptive acts or practices" in or affecting commerce to allow the FTC to directly protect consumers. See 15 U.S.C. § 45(a) (Section 5 of the FTC Act). These procedures provide information regarding the applicability of Section 5 of the FTC Act.

In 2010, Congress passed the Dodd-Frank Act. Section 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act prohibits a "covered person"¹ from engaging in unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices (Dodd-Frank UDAAP). See 12 U.S.C. § 5536. Section 1031 of the Dodd-Frank Act provides authority to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) to promulgate rules identifying such acts or practices as unfair, deceptive, or abusive in connection with consumer financial products and services generally. See 12 U.S.C. § 5531. These procedures also provide information regarding Sections 1031 and 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act.²

The legal standards for "unfair" and "deceptive" under Section 5 of the FTC Act and the Dodd-Frank Act are substantially similar. Further, the legal standards for unfair, deceptive, or abusive are independent of each other. Depending on the facts, an act or practice may be unfair or deceptive or abusive or any combination of the three, or not constitute a violation.

Section 5 of the FTC Act

The banking agencies³ have authority to enforce Section 5 of the FTC Act for the institutions they supervise and their institution affiliated parties (IAPs). The FDIC has provided notice to state nonmember institutions of its intent to cite them and their IAPs for violations of Section 5 of the FTC Act, and of its intent to take appropriate action pursuant to its authority under Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (FDI Act) when a FTC UDAP violation is cited. The FTC has authority to take action against nonbanks that engage in a FTC UDAP. If a FTC UDAP involves an entity or entities over which more than one agency has enforcement authority such as, for example, the FDIC and the FTC, the agencies may coordinate their enforcement actions. Unlike many consumer protection laws, Section 5 of the FTC Act also applies to transactions that may impact business customers as well as individual consumers.⁴

On March 11, 2004, the FDIC and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (FRB) issued additional guidance regarding FTC UDAPs prohibited by Section 5 of the FTC

¹ The term "covered person" means (1) any person who engages in offering or providing a consumer financial product or service; and (2) any affiliate of a person described in (1) if such affiliate acts as a service provider to such person. See 12 U.S.C. § 5481(6).

³ Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal Reserve Board, and Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

⁴ FTC v. IFC Credit Corp., 543 F. Supp. 2d 925, 943 (2008): "The FTC has construed the term 'consumer' to include businesses as well as individuals. Deference must be given to the interpretation of the agency charged by Congress with the statute's implementation."

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act

Act.⁵ Following the release of the guidance, the FDIC issued examination procedures, which include:

- Standards used to assess whether an act or practice is unfair or deceptive
- Interplay between the FTC Act and other consumer protection statutes
- Examination procedures for determining compliance with the FTC Act standards, including risk assessment procedures that should be followed to determine if transaction testing is warranted
- Best practices for documenting a case
- Corrective actions that should be considered for violations of Section 5 of the FTC Act
- List of resources

NOTE: In August 2014, the FDIC, FRB, CFPB, the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) (collectively, the Agencies) issued guidance regarding certain consumer credit practices as they relate to Section 5 of the FTC Act. The authority to issue credit practices rules under Section 5 of the FTC Act (e.g., Regulation AA, Credit Practices Rule) for banks, savings associations, and federal credit unions was repealed as a consequence of the Dodd-Frank Act.

Notwithstanding the repeal of such authority, the guidance indicated that the Agencies continue to have supervisory and enforcement authority regarding unfair or deceptive acts or practices, which could include those practices previously addressed in the former credit practices rules. Such practices included: (1) the use of certain provisions in consumer credit contracts, (2) the misrepresentation of the nature or extent of cosigner liability, and (3) the pyramiding of late fees.

The guidance clarifies that institutions should not construe the repeal of these rules to indicate that the unfair or deceptive practices described in these former regulations are permissible. The guidance makes clear that these practices remain subject to Section 5 of the FTC Act and Sections 1031 and 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act.

Standards for Determining What is Unfair or Deceptive

The legal standard for unfairness is independent of the legal standard for deception. Depending on the facts, an act or practice may be unfair, deceptive, both, or neither.

Section 5 of the FTC Act also applies to commercial transactions and businesses. In applying these statutory factors, the FDIC will identify and take action whenever it finds conduct that is unfair or deceptive, as such conduct that falls well below the high standards of business practice expected of banks and the parties affiliated with them.

FTC UDAPs may also violate other federal or state laws. However, practices that fully comply with consumer protection or other laws may still violate Section 5 of the FTC Act. For additional information, please refer to the “Relationship to Other Laws” section further in this document.

Unfair Acts or Practices

The FDIC applies the same standards as the FTC in determining whether an act or practice is unfair. These standards were first stated in the FTC Policy Statement on Unfairness. An act or practice is unfair when it (1) causes or is likely to cause substantial injury to consumers, (2) cannot be reasonably avoided by consumers, and (3) is not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition. Congress codified the three-part unfairness test in 1994.⁶ Public policy may also be considered in the analysis of whether a particular act or practice is unfair. All three of the elements necessary to establish unfairness are discussed further below.

- The act or practice must cause or be likely to cause substantial injury to consumers.

Substantial injury usually involves monetary harm, but can also include, in certain circumstances, unquantifiable or non-monetary harm. An act or practice that causes a small amount of harm to a large number of people, or a significant amount of harm to a small number of people, may be deemed to cause substantial injury.

An injury may be substantial if it raises significant risk of concrete harm. Trivial or merely speculative harms are typically insufficient for a finding of substantial injury. Emotional impact and other more subjective types of harm will not ordinarily make a practice unfair.

- Consumers must not be reasonably able to avoid the injury.

An act or practice is not considered unfair if consumers may reasonably avoid injury. Consumers cannot reasonably avoid injury from an act or practice if it interferes with their ability to effectively make decisions or to take action to avoid injury. This may occur if material information about a product, such as pricing, is modified or withheld until after the consumer has committed to purchasing the product, so that the consumer cannot reasonably avoid the injury. It also may occur where testing reveals that disclosures do not effectively explain an act or practice to consumers.⁷ A practice may also be unfair where consumers are subject to undue influence or are coerced into purchasing unwanted products or services.

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act

Because consumers should be able to survey the available alternatives, choose those that are most desirable, and avoid those that are inadequate or unsatisfactory, the question is whether an act or practice unreasonably impairs the consumer's ability to make an informed decision, not whether the consumer could have made a wiser decision. In accordance with FTC case law, the FDIC will not second-guess the wisdom of particular consumer decisions. Instead, the FDIC will consider whether an institution's behavior unreasonably creates an obstacle that impairs the free exercise of consumer decision-making.

The actions that a consumer is expected to take to avoid injury must be reasonable. While a consumer could potentially avoid harm by hiring independent experts to test products in advance or bring legal claims for damages, these actions generally would be too expensive to be practical for individual consumers and, therefore, are not reasonable.

- The injury must not be outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition.

To be unfair, the act or practice must be injurious in its net effects — that is, the injury must not be outweighed by any offsetting consumer or competitive benefits that are also produced by the act or practice. Offsetting consumer or competitive benefits may include lower prices or a wider availability of products and services. Nonetheless, both consumers and competition benefit from preventing unfair acts or practices because prices are likely to better reflect actual transaction costs, and merchants who do not rely on unfair acts or practices are no longer required to compete with those who do. Unfair acts or practices injure both consumers and competitors because consumers who would otherwise have selected a competitor's product are wrongly diverted by the unfair act or practice.

Costs that would be incurred for remedies or measures to prevent the injury are also taken into account in determining whether an act or practice is unfair. These costs may include the costs to the institution in taking preventive measures and the costs to society as a whole of any increased burden and similar matters.

Public Policy May be Considered

Public policy, as established by statute, regulation, judicial decision, or agency determination, may be considered with all other evidence in determining whether an act or practice is unfair. Public policy considerations by themselves, however, will not serve as the primary basis for determining that an act or practice is unfair. For example, the fact that a particular lending practice violates a state law or a banking regulation may be considered as evidence in determining whether the act or practice is unfair. Conversely, the fact that a particular practice is permitted by statute or regulation may, under some circumstances, be considered as evidence that the practice is not unfair. The requirements of the Truth in Lending Act (TILA), the Truth in Savings Act (TISA), the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA), or the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) are examples of public policy considerations. However, an institution's compliance with another statute or regulation does not insulate the institution from liability for an unfair act or practice under Section 5 of the FTC Act. Fiduciary responsibilities under state law may clarify public policy for actions, especially those involving trusts, guardianships, unsophisticated consumers, the elderly, or minors. State statutes and regulations that prohibit FTC UDAPs are often aimed at making sure that lenders do not exploit the lack of access to mainstream banking institutions by low-income individuals, the elderly, and minorities.

Deceptive Acts or Practices

A three-part test is used to determine whether a representation, omission, or practice is deceptive. This test was first laid out in the FTC Policy Statement on Deceptive Acts and Practices.⁸ First, the representation, omission, or practice must mislead or be likely to mislead the consumer. Second, the consumer's interpretation of the representation, omission, or practice must be reasonable under the circumstances. Third, the misleading representation, omission, or practice must be material.⁹ As a general matter, the standards for establishing deception are less burdensome than the standards for establishing unfairness because, under deception, there is no requirement of ⁷ The FRB's testing of certain disclosures concluded that consumers cannot reasonably avoid certain payment allocation and billing practices because disclosures fail to adequately explain these practices. See Jeanne M. Hogarth & Ellen A. Merry, Designing Disclosures to Inform Consumer Financial Decisionmaking: Lessons Learned from Consumer Testing, Federal Reserve Bulletin (August 2011), <https://www.federalreserve.gov/pubs/bulletin/2011/pdf/designingdisclosures2011.pdf> (summarizing the outcomes of consumer tests on various financial product disclosures). The FTC discusses potential ways to make electronic disclosures clear and understandable in its "Dot Com Disclosures: How to Make Effective Disclosures in Digital Advertising" (March 2013), available at <https://www.ftc.gov/sites/default/files/attachments/press-releases/ftc-staff-revises-online-advertising-disclosure-guidelines/130312dotcomdisclosures.pdf>.

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act substantial injury or the likelihood of substantial injury, or the other elements of unfairness related to consumer injury. The following discusses all three of the elements necessary to establish deception.¹⁰

- There must be a representation, omission, or practice that misleads or is likely to mislead the consumer.

An act or practice may be found to be deceptive if there is a representation, omission, or practice that misleads or is likely to mislead a consumer. Deception is not limited to situations in which a consumer has already been misled. Instead, an act or practice may be found to be deceptive if it is likely to mislead consumers. A representation may be in the form of express or implied claims or promises and may be written or oral. Omission of information may be deceptive if disclosure of the omitted information is necessary to prevent a consumer from being misled. An individual statement, representation, or omission is not evaluated in isolation to determine if it is misleading, but rather in the context of the entire advertisement, transaction, or course of dealing. Acts or practices that have the potential to be deceptive include: making misleading cost or price claims; using bait-and-switch techniques; offering to provide a product or service that is not in fact available; omitting material limitations or conditions from an offer; selling a product unfit for the purposes for which it is sold; and failing to provide promised services.

- The act or practice must be considered from the perspective of the reasonable consumer.

In determining whether an act or practice is misleading, the consumer's interpretation of or reaction to the representation, omission, or practice must be reasonable under the circumstances. In other words, whether an act or practice is deceptive depends on how a reasonable member of the target audience would interpret the marketing material. When representations or marketing practices are targeted to a specific audience, such as the elderly or the financially unsophisticated, the communication is reviewed from the point of view of a reasonable member of that group.

If a representation conveys two or more meanings to reasonable consumers and one meaning is misleading, the representation may be deceptive. Moreover, a consumer's interpretation or reaction may indicate that an act or practice is deceptive under the circumstances, even if the consumer's interpretation is not shared by a majority of the consumers in the relevant class, so long as a significant minority of such consumers is misled.

Written disclosures may be insufficient to correct a misleading statement or representation, particularly where the consumer is directed away from qualifying limitations in the text or is counseled that reading the disclosures is unnecessary. Likewise, oral disclosures or fine print are generally insufficient to cure a misleading headline or prominent written representation. Finally, a deceptive act or practice cannot be cured by subsequent truthful disclosures.

- The representation, omission, or practice must be material.

A representation, omission, or practice is material if it is likely to affect a consumer's decision to purchase or use a product or service. In general, information about costs, benefits, or restrictions on the use or availability of a product or service is material. When express claims are made with respect to a financial product or service, the claims will be presumed to be material. While intent to deceive is not a required element of proving that an act or practice is deceptive, the materiality of an implied claim will be presumed if it can be shown that the institution intended that the consumer draw certain conclusions based upon the claim.

Claims made with knowledge that they are false will also be presumed to be material. Omissions will be presumed to be material when the financial institution knew or should have known that the consumer needed the omitted information to make an informed choice about the product or service.

Sections 1031 and 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act (Dodd-Frank UDAAP)

Title X of the Dodd-Frank Act provides exclusive supervisory authority and primary enforcement authority to the CFPB for insured depository institutions with total assets over $10 billion for the Dodd-Frank UDAAP provisions of Sections 1031 and 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act.¹¹ The Dodd-Frank Act

¹⁰ Clear and Conspicuous Disclosures

When evaluating the three-part test for deception, the four "Ps" should be considered: prominence, presentation, placement, and proximity. First, is the statement prominent enough for the consumer to notice? Second, is the information presented in an easy to understand format that does not contradict other information in the package and at a time when the consumer's attention is not distracted elsewhere? Third, is the placement of the information in a location where consumers can be expected to look or hear? Finally, is the information in close proximity to the claim it qualifies? VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act provides the FDIC with supervisory and enforcement authority for Dodd-Frank UDAAP, as well as other Federal consumer financial laws, for state, nonmember banks with total assets of $10 billion or less.¹² As a result of the provisions contained in the Dodd-Frank Act and Section 5 of the FTC Act, the FDIC has supervisory or enforcement authority that includes both FTC UDAP and Dodd-Frank UDAAP in certain situations.¹³

The standards for determining whether an act or practice is unfair or deceptive under the Dodd-Frank Act are substantially similar to the FTC Act standards.¹⁴ Section 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act prohibits unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts and practices with respect to consumer financial products and services generally.¹⁵ An abusive act or practice is one that:

- Materially interferes with the ability of a consumer to understand a term or condition of a consumer financial product or service or
- Takes unreasonable advantage of:
 - A lack of understanding on the part of the consumer of the material risks, costs, or conditions of the product or service; or
 - The inability of the consumer to protect its interests in selecting or using a consumer financial product or service; or
 - The reasonable reliance by the consumer on a covered person¹⁶ to act in the interests of the consumer.¹⁷

Unlike the standards for unfair or deception under Section 5 of the FTC Act, where all prongs of the test must be met for there to be a violation, the abusive standard lays out individual, stand-alone tests to determine if an act or practice is abusive. Although abusive acts also may be unfair or deceptive, examiners should be aware that the legal standards for abusive, unfair, and deceptive are independent of each other.

The Role of Consumer Complaints in Identifying Unfair, Deceptive, or Abusive Acts or Practices

Consumer complaints play a key role in the detection of a FTC UDAPs and Dodd-Frank UDAAPs. Consumer complaints have often been an essential source of information for possible FTC UDAPs and Dodd-Frank UDAAPs and can also be an indicator of weaknesses in elements of the institution's compliance management system, such as training, internal controls, or monitoring.

While the absence of complaints does not ensure that FTC UDAPs or Dodd-Frank UDAAPs are not occurring, the presence of complaints may be a red flag indicating that a more detailed review is warranted. This is especially the case when similar complaints are received from several consumers regarding the same product or service. One of the three tests in evaluating an apparent deceptive practice is: "The act or practice must be considered from the perspective of the reasonable consumer." Consumer complaints provide a window into the perspective of the reasonable consumer.

Complaint Resolution Procedures

Examiners should interview institution staff about consumer complaints and the institution's procedures for resolving and monitoring consumer complaints. Examiners should determine whether management has responded promptly and appropriately to consumer complaints. The FDIC expects institutions to be proactive in resolving consumer complaints, as well as monitoring complaints for trends that indicate potential FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP concerns. Institutions should centralize consumer complaint handling and ensure that all complaints are captured, whether they are made via telephone, mail, email, in person, the institution's regulator, text message, live chat, or other methods. In addition to resolving individual complaints, an institution should take action to improve its business practices and compliance management system, when appropriate. The institution's audit and/or monitoring function should also include a review of consumer complaints.

Sources for Identifying Complaints

Consumer complaints can originate from many different sources. The primary sources for complaints are those received directly by the institution and those received by the FDIC National Center for Consumer and Depositor Assistance Consumer Response Unit (Consumer Response Unit). Secondary sources for complaints include State Attorneys General or Banking Departments, the Better Business Bureau, the FTC's Consumer Sentinel database, the CFPB's Consumer Complaint Database, consumer complaint boards, and web blogs. In many cases, complaints have been identified through simple Internet searches with the institution's name or particular product or service that it offers. At times, former employees may post complaints. These can be an important ¹² The Dodd-Frank Act provided the FDIC backup enforcement authority with respect to Dodd-Frank UDAAP over FDIC-supervised institutions with total assets over $10 billion.

¹³ The FDIC also has the authority to enforcement any federal law or regulation under the general grant of authority provided by Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1818.

¹⁴ See 12 U.S.C. § 5531.

¹⁵ See 12 U.S.C. § 5536.

¹⁶ The term "covered person" means (1) any person who engages in offering or providing a consumer financial product or service; and (2) any affiliate of a person described in (1) if such affiliate acts as a service provider to such person. See 12 U.S.C. § 5481(6).

¹⁷ See 12 U.S.C. § 5531(d)(1)-(2).

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act

information source. For institutions that have significant third-party relationships, complaints may have been directed to the third party, rather than to the institution. Examiners should determine if the institution is provided with copies of complaints received by third parties. If they are not, this would be a red flag and should be examined further.

Analyzing Complaints

Examiners should consider conducting transaction testing when consumers repeatedly complain about an institution's product or service. However, even a single complaint may raise valid concerns that would warrant transaction testing. Complaints that allege misleading or false statements, missing disclosure information, excessive fees, inability to reach customer service, or previously undisclosed charges may indicate a possible FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP.¹⁸

If a large volume of complaints exists, examiners should create a spreadsheet that details the complainant, date, source (i.e., institution, website, etc.), product or service involved, summary of the issue, and action taken by the institution. The spreadsheets can then be used to identify trends by type of product or issue. The Consumer Response Unit can be of assistance during this process by creating spreadsheets for complaints that were received by the FDIC.

When reviewing complaints, examiners should look for trends. While a large volume of complaints may indicate an area of concern, the number of complaints alone is not dispositive of whether a potential FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP exists. Conversely, a small number of complaints does not undermine the seriousness of the allegations that are raised. If even a single complaint raises valid concerns relative to a FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP, a more thorough review may be warranted. It is important to focus on the issues raised in the complaints and the institution's responses, and not just on the number of complaints.

Note also that high rates of chargebacks or refunds regarding a product or service can be indicative of potential FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP violations. This information may not appear in the consumer complaint process.

When reviewing complaints, also look for any complaints lodged against subsidiaries, affiliates, third-parties, and affinity groups regarding activities that involve the institution, a product offered through the institution, or a product offered using the institution's name. While the institution may not be actively involved in the activity, if it is a branded product or product offered through a third-party relationship, the institution can be held responsible and face the same risks as if the activity was housed within the institution. *In re Columbus Bank and Trust Company, First Bank of Delaware, First Bank and Trust (Brookings, South Dakota), and CompuCredit Corporation*¹⁹ is an example of where complaints against a third-party directly related to the institutions and the institutions were held accountable for the activities of the third-party.

Relationship to Other Laws

Unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices that violate the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act may also violate other federal or state laws. These include, but are not limited to, TILA, TISA, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA), the Fair Housing Act (FHA), the FDCPA, the FCRA, and laws related to the privacy of consumer financial information. On the other hand, certain practices may violate the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act while complying with the technical requirements of other consumer protection laws. Examiners should consider both possibilities. The following laws may warrant particular attention in this regard:

Truth in Lending Act (TILA)

Pursuant to TILA, creditors must "clearly and conspicuously" disclose the costs and terms of credit. An act or practice that does not comply with these provisions of TILA may also violate the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act. Conversely, a transaction that is in technical compliance with TILA may nevertheless violate the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act. For example, an institution's credit card advertisement may contain all the required TILA disclosures, but limitations or restrictions that are obscured or inadequately disclosed may be considered a FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP.

Truth in Savings Act (TISA)

TISA requires depository institutions to provide interest and fee disclosures for deposit accounts so that consumers may compare deposit products. TISA also provides that advertisements cannot be misleading or inaccurate or misrepresent an institution's deposit contract. As with TILA, an act or practice that does not comply with these provisions may also violate the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act, but transactions that are in technical compliance with TISA may still be considered as unfair, deceptive, or abusive. For example, consumers could be misled by advertisements of "guaranteed" or "lifetime" interest rates when the creditor or depository institution intends to change the rates, even if the disclosures satisfy the technical requirements of TISA.

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act

Equal Credit Opportunity (ECOA) and Fair Housing (FHA) Acts

ECOA prohibits discrimination in any aspect of a credit transaction against persons on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, age (provided the applicant has the capacity to contract), the fact that an applicant's income derives from any public assistance program, and the fact that the applicant has in good faith exercised any right under the Consumer Credit Protection Act. The FHA prohibits creditors involved in residential real estate transactions from discriminating against any person on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status, or national origin. FTC UDAPs and Dodd-Frank UDAAPs that target or have a disparate impact on consumers in one of these prohibited basis groups may violate the ECOA or the FHA, as well as the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act. Moreover, some state and local laws address discrimination against additional protected classes, e.g., handicap in non-housing transactions, or sexual orientation. Such conduct may also violate the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act.

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA)

The FDCPA prohibits unfair, deceptive, and abusive practices related to the collection of consumer debts. Although this statute does not apply to institutions that collect their own debts in their own name, failure to adhere to the standards set by the FDCPA may violate FTC UDAP.²⁰ Moreover, institutions that either affirmatively or through lack of oversight permit a third-party debt collector acting on their behalf to engage in deception, harassment, or threats in the collection of monies due may be exposed to liability for participating in or permitting a FTC UDAP.

Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA)

The FCRA contains significant responsibilities for institutions that obtain and use information about consumers to determine the consumer's eligibility for products, services, or employment; share such information among affiliates; and furnish information to consumer reporting agencies. The FCRA was substantially amended with the passage of the Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act (FACT Act) in 2003, which contained many new consumer disclosure requirements as well as provisions to address identity theft. Violations of the FCRA may also be considered as a FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP. For example, obtaining and using unsolicited medical information (outside of the exceptions provided by the rule) to make credit decisions may also be considered as unfair.

Privacy of Consumer Financial Information

Regulation P (12 CFR Part 1016.12) prohibits an institution or its affiliates from disclosing a customer's account number or similar access code for a credit card, deposit, or transaction account to a nonaffiliated third party for use in telemarketing, direct mail marketing, or other marketing through electronic mail. There are only three exceptions to this prohibition. A financial institution may disclose its customers' account numbers to: (1) a consumer reporting agency; (2) its agent to market the institution's own products or services, provided that the agent is not authorized to directly initiate charges to the account; or (3) another participant in a private label credit card or an affinity or similar program involving the institution. Depending upon the totality of the circumstances, an institution that does not comply with these requirements may be also engaging in FTC UDAPs.²¹

Examination Procedures

Examination Objectives

1. To assess the quality of the financial institution's compliance management systems, internal controls, and policies and procedures for avoiding unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices.
2. To identify products, services, or activities that materially increase the risk of being unfair, deceptive, or abusive.
3. To gather facts that help determine whether a financial institution's products, services, programs, or operations are likely to be unfair, deceptive, or abusive.

General Guidance

During pre-examination planning, examiners should determine if transaction-related testing is warranted for one or more of the institution's products or services. Also, examiners should be alert to possible FTC UDAPs and Dodd-Frank UDAAPs throughout an examination, including when reviewing specific products or services for compliance with other consumer compliance regulatory requirements.

The following risk assessment and transaction-related examination procedures should be used, as appropriate, to assist examiners in recognizing potential FTC UDAPs and ²⁰ The same conduct could also violate Dodd-Frank UDAAP; however, interpretive authority for the Dodd-Frank Act rests with the CFPB.

²¹ The same conduct could also violate Dodd-Frank UDAAP; however, interpretive authority for the Dodd-Frank Act rests with the CFPB.

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act

Dodd-Frank UDAAPs, analyzing potential issues, and determining an appropriate response.

Risk Assessment Procedures

The risk assessment process should begin during the pre-examination planning stage, when the institution is first contacted to discuss the Compliance and Information Document Request (CIDR). The CIDR can then be customized to request information that is needed to determine the institution's risk profile for potential FTC UDAPs and Dodd-Frank UDAAPs.

Institutions with increased risk: Institutions may have a higher risk profile for potential FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP violations if they introduce new products or services, especially those targeting individuals who are financially unsophisticated, vulnerable to financial abuse, or financially distressed. Risks may increase when an institution introduces a new delivery channel, a complex product, or a new activity, or when staff is not sufficiently qualified or trained. As in other areas, the strength of an institution's CMS, such as strong management controls, effective training, and on-going monitoring, is a mitigating factor.

Institutions with limited risk: Many institutions have low risk profiles for potential FTC UDAP or the Dodd-Frank UDAAP violations and would not generally require transaction testing. These include institutions that do not offer products associated with increased incidence of complaints, violations, chargebacks, or risk of consumer harm; have not introduced any new products; and have no consumer complaints (or a limited number of consumer complaints that are unrelated to FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP). However, examiners should be alert to possible FTC UDAPs or Dodd-Frank UDAAPs throughout an examination, including when reviewing specific products or services for compliance with other consumer compliance regulatory requirements.

Transaction-Related Examination Procedures

If, upon conclusion of the risk assessment procedures, risks requiring further investigation are noted, examiners should conduct transaction testing, as necessary. Use examiner judgment in deciding whether to sample individual products, services, or marketing programs. Increase the sample to achieve confidence that all aspects of the financial institution's products and services are sufficiently reviewed.

An FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP analysis is fact-specific and cannot be based on a particular checklist; however, transaction-related examination procedures fall into the following general categories: marketing and disclosures, availability of credit, availability of advertised terms, repricing and other changes, servicing, and collections.

The following are examples of items that should be reviewed, as applicable:

- Advertisement and marketing documentation
- New product development documentation
- Documentation of software testing
- Procedural manuals, including those for servicing and collections
- Customer disclosures, notices, agreements, and periodic statements for each product and service reviewed
- Account statements
- Agreements with third-parties
- Compensation programs
- Promotional materials
- Telemarketing and customer service scripts
- Recorded calls for telemarketing or collections
- Organization charts and process workflows
- Relevant marketing and advertising materials, including website pages
- Relevant disclosures and customer contracts
- Collection scripts and notices
- Relevant training materials
- Relevant software algorithms or parameters
- Consumer complaint files

Collaboration with Others

Regional Examination Specialists

Examiners should follow field office, regional, and national consultation procedures, including contacting the appropriate Regional Examination Specialists for assistance in determining whether unfair, deceptive, or abusive acts or practices have occurred.

Legal Division (Legal)

Following applicable protocol, examiners are encouraged to consult with Regional or Washington Office Legal, as appropriate, as early as possible when potential violations of the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act are identified. Legal staff can provide valuable assistance to examiners during the onsite examination, including advising examiners on the types of documentation that should be obtained and developing interview questions.

Risk Management Supervision

Following regional protocol, examiners should consider if a potential violation of the FTC Act or the Dodd-Frank Act could have an impact on the safety and soundness of the bank and alert risk management staff accordingly. This may warrant a joint onsite presence at the institution, request for additional information or other appropriate supervisory action.

VII. Unfair, Deceptive, and Abusive Practices - Federal Trade Commission Act/Dodd-Frank Act

Policy and Research Branch

The Policy and Research Branch can provide assistance in conducting an analysis of large amounts of customer data. Examiners should follow regional and Washington consultation procedures in seeking assistance from Policy and Research.

Documentation

Documentation of potential FTC UDAP or Dodd-Frank UDAAP violations is extremely important. The following guidance should be used to facilitate review of a potential violation:

1. Create an inventory of documentary evidence gathered and interviews conducted.
2. Create chronologies or charts to explain complex fact patterns.
3. For printed materials (marketing, solicitations, disclosures), an original, unmarked copy should be maintained.
4. For websites, print copies or save the webpages electronically as soon as possible. Websites are easily altered, so versions of the website that support the case must be preserved by the examiner. When possible save webpages electronically such as a PDF. The electronically saved copy should be formatted such that the following information is included: window title, URL, date, time, page number, total number of pages. In cases where the website includes links for additional information, notate the page succession.
5. If consumer complaints are voluminous, create spreadsheets or summaries. Refer to the Analyzing Complaints section for additional guidance.
6. Indicate the type of institution reports that are available. For those documents received, notate why it was obtained, how it was received, when, and from whom.
7. Maintain a final, typed version of the interview notes. All examiners that participated in the interview should review the notes and attest to their accuracy. Consider having the interviewee review the notes.
8. During the examination, the examiner should consider the types of corrective actions that may be pursued. For cases where restitution to consumers may be necessary, the examiner should obtain information needed to identify and estimate restitution.
9. If the potential violation involves an affiliate or third party, obtain the information and documentation needed to determine whether an affiliate is an IAP. Refer to the IAP examination procedures for further information and guidance.

10. The following includes a list of other documents that are generally needed:

- Income reports
- Third-party contracts
- Relevant board minutes
- Relevant audit reports
- Due diligence records
- Training materials
- Telemarketing and customer service scripts
- Software parameters
- Account agreements
- Collection scripts and notices
- Consumer communications and notifications
- Billing Statements

Corrective Actions to be Considered for Violations of Section 5 FTC Act or Sections 1031 and 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act

As with any violation of law or regulation, the response to a violation of Section 5 of the FTC Act and Sections 1031 and 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act will depend on a number of factors, including:

- The nature of the violation;
- Whether it is a repeat violation or a variation of a previously cited violation;
- The harm, or potential harm, suffered by consumers;
- The number of parties affected; and
- The institution's overall compliance posture and history, both in general and with respect to FTC UDAP and Dodd-Frank UDAAP.

Level 3 or Level 2 violations may result in a downgrade of the institution's compliance and CRA ratings and potentially, the institution's risk management rating. In determining the overall CRA rating for an institution, examiners consider evidence of discrimination or other illegal acts, including violations of Section 5 of the FTC Act or Sections 1031 or 1036 of the Dodd-Frank Act.

In addition to determining a violation's impact on the institution's compliance and CRA ratings, examiners must consider corrective actions that should be taken. These may include requiring the discontinuance of the act or practice, restitution to consumer and business customers, informal or formal enforcement actions, and assessment of a civil money penalty. Examiners should refer to the Formal and Informal Enforcement Actions Manual in the references section below for additional guidance.

FTC Rule – Preservation of Claims and Defenses

Introduction

The purpose of the Federal Trade Commission’s (FTC) 1976 rule concerning the Preservation of Consumers’ Claims and Defenses (16 C.F.R. Part 433), sometimes called the Holder-in-Due-Course Rule (Rule), is to ensure that consumer credit contracts used in financing the retail purchase of consumer goods or services specifically preserve the consumer’s rights against the seller. The FTC determined that it constitutes an unfair and deceptive practice for a seller, in the course of financing a consumer purchase of goods or services, to employ procedures which make the consumer’s duty to pay independent of the seller’s duty to fulfill its obligations.

Regulation Overview

The Holder-in-Due-Course Rule prohibits a seller from taking or receiving a consumer credit contract that does not contain a prescribed notice which preserves the consumer’s claims and defenses in the event that the contract is negotiated or assigned to a third party creditor. In addition, the Rule provides that the seller may not accept the proceeds of a purchase money loan unless the evidence of the loan contains the prescribed notice preserving as against the lender whatever claims and defenses the consumer may have against the seller. Omission of the required notice by the seller, or acceptance by the seller of the proceeds of the purchase money loan where the evidence of the loan does not contain the notice, constitutes an unfair or deceptive practice within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The Rule does not apply to all credit instruments. The Notice must appear in written obligations defined as “Consumer Credit Contracts” in the Rule. The definition includes any written instrument which, under the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z constitutes a consumer credit contract and which is used to “Finance a Sale” or in connection with a “Purchase Money Loan,” as those terms are defined in the Rule. Credit card instruments are specifically exempted from the Rule.

Under the Rule, banks which purchase consumer paper containing the notice required of sellers cannot avail themselves of the holder-in-due-course doctrine. Also, banks which make purchase money loans containing the notice will be subject to all claims and defenses which the consumer could assert against the seller.

If banks accept consumer paper which fails to contain the notice required of sellers, they may be considered to be a participant in the seller’s violation of the Rule. Banks making purchase money loans must include the prescribed notice in their contracts.

The required notice, which follows, must be in at least ten point, bold face, type:

NOTICE

Any holder of this consumer credit contract is subject to all claims and defenses which the debtor could assert against the seller of goods or services obtained pursuant hereto or with the proceeds hereof. Recovery hereunder by the debtor shall not exceed amounts paid by the debtor hereunder.

Preservation of Consumers' Claims and Defenses (PCCD)

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act¹Introduction

The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA), (15 USC 1692 et seq.), which became effective March 20, 1978, was designed to eliminate abusive, deceptive, and unfair debt collection practices. The FDCPA also protects reputable debt collectors from unfair competition and encourages state action to protect consumers from abuses in debt collection.

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Dodd-Frank Act) granted rulemaking authority under the FDCPA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) and, with respect to entities under its jurisdiction, granted authority to the CFPB to enforce compliance with the FDCPA.² The federal banking agencies, the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA), the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), and certain other regulators are authorized to enforce compliance with the FDCPA with respect to institutions under their respective jurisdictions.³ When the FDCPA became effective, it authorized the FTC to issue rules only for States to apply for exemptions from the requirements of the FDCPA. The FTC issued Regulation F to govern this process. The Dodd-Frank Act transferred authority for Regulation F to the CFPB and authorized the CFPB to issue substantive rules under the FDCPA with respect to the collection of debts by debt collectors. The CFPB restated the FTC's Regulation F in 2011.⁴ In 2020 and 2021, the CFPB amended Regulation F. The amendments, which address a broader range of topics, such as debt collection communications, and restate the substantive provisions of the FDCPA, became effective on November 30, 2021.⁵

The CFPB has issued frequently asked questions, a small-entity compliance guide, and other reference materials related to the FDCPA and Regulation F.⁶

Definitions – 12 CFR 1006.2Debt That Is Covered

The FDCPA and Regulation F apply only to the collection of debt incurred by a consumer primarily for personal, family or household purposes. They do not apply to the collection of corporate debt or to debt owed for business or agricultural purposes.

Debt Collectors That Are Covered

Under the FDCPA, and Regulation F a “debt collector” is defined as:

- Any person⁷ who uses any instrumentality of interstate commerce or mail in any business whose principal purpose is debt collection.
- Any person who regularly collects, or attempts to collect, debts owed to another person
- A creditor who, in the process of collecting its own debts, uses a name, other than the creditor's own, which would indicate that a third person is collecting the debt.
- For purposes of 12 CFR 1006.22(e) only, any person who uses any instrumentality of interstate commerce or mail in any business whose principal purpose is the enforcement of security interests.

Debt Collectors That Are Not Covered

A person is not a debt collector under the FDCPA and Regulation F when the person collects:

- Another's debts in isolated instances.
- Debts under the person's own name that the person originated.
- Debts that the person originated and then sold but continues to service (for example, mortgage and student loans).
- Debts owed or due, or asserted to be owed or due, to another, that were not in default when they were obtained.
- Debts that were obtained as security for a commercial credit transaction (for example, accounts receivable financing).
- Debts incidental to a bona fide fiduciary relationship or escrow arrangement (for example, a debt held in the institution's trust department or mortgage loan escrow for taxes and insurance).
- Debts for another person who is related by common ownership or corporate control.

Others that are not covered also include:

- Officers or employees of a creditor who collect debts owed to the creditor in the creditor's name.
- Legal process servers.

VII. Unfair Deceptive and Abusive Practices — FDCPA

Examples

The following examples illustrate the definition of “debt collector”:

- An institution’s principal business purpose is the collection of debts. The institution is a debt collector, assuming it uses any instrumentality of interstate commerce or mail.
- An institution regularly collects debts owed or due to another. The institution is a debt collector.
- An institution services loans owned by others. The loans placed for servicing regularly include loans that are in default when placed with the institution. The institution is a debt collector as to any debts that were in default at placement.
- An institution’s principal business purpose is the collection of debts it has purchased. The institution is a debt collector both when it contacts consumers itself and when it hires other collection agencies to do so, assuming it uses any instrumentality of interstate commerce or mail.
- An institution collects defaulted debts that the institution has purchased, but does not collect or attempt to collect, directly or indirectly, debts owed or due, or asserted to be owed or due, to another, and does not have a business the principal purpose of which is the collection of debts. The institution is not a debt collector.
- An institution originates loans. When any of its loans go into default, the institution attempts to collect them while using an assumed name. The name indicates that a third party is collecting the debt. The institution is a debt collector.
- An institution’s principal business purpose is the enforcement of security interests. The institution is a debt collector for purposes of 12 CFR 1006.22(e), assuming it uses any instrumentality of interstate commerce or mail. 12 CFR 1006.22(e) prohibits taking or threatening to take any nonjudicial action in certain circumstances, such as where there is no present right to possession through an enforceable security instrument.

Communications

“Communicate” or “communication” (as defined in 12 CFR 1006.2(d)) means the conveying of information regarding a debt directly or indirectly to any person through any medium. If an attempt to contact, a message to, or a discussion with a consumer or third party does not convey information regarding a debt, it is not a communication under Regulation F.

Even if such actions are not communications, they may be “attempts to communicate” for the purposes of the FDCPA and Regulation F. An “attempt to communicate” is any act to initiate a communication or other contact about a debt with any person through any medium, including by soliciting a response from such person. For example, placing a telephone call to a person is an attempt to communicate with the person regardless of whether the collector reaches the person.

A voicemail with the content described in 12 CFR 1006.2(j) is a “limited-content message.” A limited-content message is not a communication for the purposes of the FDCPA and Regulation F; however, it is an attempt to communicate.

Communications in Connection With Debt Collection – 12 CFR 1006.6 and 1006.10

When, Where, and With Whom Communication Is Permitted

Communicating With the Consumer

A debt collector may not communicate or attempt to communicate with a consumer at any unusual time or place, or at any time or place that the debt collector knows or should know that is inconvenient to the consumer, unless the consumer has given prior consent for such contacts directly to the debt collector, or a court of competent jurisdiction has already given permission for such contacts. A debt collector may not communicate or attempt to communicate with a consumer at the consumer’s place of employment if the collector knows or has reason to know that the employer prohibits such contacts.

A debt collector knows or should know that a time or place is inconvenient for a consumer if the consumer uses the word “inconvenient” or if the facts and circumstances indicate that a time or place is inconvenient for the consumer, even if the consumer does not specifically state to the debt collector that a time or place is “inconvenient.” Absent information to the contrary, debt collectors are to assume that communications and attempts to communicate between 9:00 p.m. and 8:00 a.m. in the consumer’s time zone are inconvenient.

If a debt collector knows that the consumer has retained an attorney to handle the debt, and knows or can readily obtain the attorney’s name and address, the debt collector may not communicate or attempt to communicate with the consumer, unless the attorney is unresponsive or agrees to allow direct communication with the consumer.

Ceasing Communication With the Consumer

When a consumer refuses, in writing or electronically, to pay a debt or requests that the debt collector cease further communication, the collector must cease all further communication and attempts to communicate with the consumer with respect to that debt, except to advise the consumer that:

- The collection effort is being stopped.
- Certain specified remedies ordinarily invoked may be pursued or, if applicable, that a specific remedy will be pursued.

Cease-communication requests sent by the consumer in writing or electronically are complete when they are received by the debt collector.

Communicating With Third Parties

In general, a debt collector who is trying to collect a debt may communicate with only the following persons:

- The consumer.
- The consumer's attorney.
- A consumer reporting agency (if permitted by local law).
- The creditor.
- The creditor's attorney.
- The debt collector's attorney.

The consumer or a court of competent jurisdiction may, however, give the debt collector specific permission to communicate with other third parties. For purposes of this restriction, the term "consumer" is defined to include the consumer's spouse, parent (if the consumer is a minor), guardian, executor, administrator, or successor in interest.,

A debt collector who has not yet located a consumer may ask a third party for the consumer's home address, telephone number and place of employment (location information). The debt collector must give the collector's own name and state that the collector is confirming or correcting location information about the consumer. Unless specifically asked, the debt collector may not name the collection firm or agency. The debt collector must not state the consumer owes any debt.

The prohibition against engaging any person in telephone conversations repeatedly or continuously with intent to annoy, abuse, or harass discussed below applies to calls to third parties. Additionally, a debt collector may not communicate with a third party more than once unless the collector believes that the information from the earlier communication was wrong or incomplete and that the third party has since received better information, or unless requested to do so by the third party.

Bona Fide Error in Electronic Communications With Third Parties

A debt collector's prohibited communication with a third party by email or text message can be a bona fide error for purposes of civil liability under 15 USC 1692k(c) if the debt collector maintains procedures reasonably adapted to prevent such communications. The procedures are reasonably adapted to this purpose, for example, if they contain the steps outlined in 12 CFR 1006.6(d)(3)-(5)

Right to Opt Out of Electronic Communications

When communicating or attempting to communicate using a specific email address, telephone number for text messages, or other electronic-medium address, a debt collector must provide the consumer an opt-out notice. The notice must be clear and conspicuous and must describe a reasonable and simple method by which the consumer can opt out of further electronic communications or attempts to communicate by the debt collector to that address or telephone number.

Prohibited Practices

Harassing, Oppressive, or Abusive Conduct – 12 CFR 1006.14

A debt collector may not engage in any conduct the natural consequence of which is to harass, oppress, or abuse any person in connection with the collection of a debt. For example:

A debt collector may not:

- Use or threaten to use violence or other criminal means to harm the physical person, reputation, or property of any person.
- Use obscene, profane, or other language that abuses the hearer or reader.
- Publish a list of consumers who allegedly refuse to pay debts, except to a consumer reporting agency or to persons meeting the requirements of Sections 603(f) or 604(a)(3) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.
- Advertise a debt for sale to coerce payment.
- Make telephone calls without meaningfully disclosing the debt collector's identity, except as allowed to obtain location information.
- Communicate or attempt to communicate with a person through a medium of communication if the person has requested that the debt collector not use that medium to communicate with the person, with certain limited exceptions.

VII. Unfair Deceptive and Abusive Practices — FDCPA

Telephone Call Frequency Limitation

A debt collector may not cause a person's telephone to ring or engage any person in telephone conversations repeatedly or continuously with intent to annoy, abuse, or harass. Compliance with this provision is presumed, unless either of the following occurs (in which case, a violation is presumed):

- The debt collector places telephone calls to a person in connection with the collection of a particular debt more than seven times within a seven-day period.
- The debt collector places a telephone call to a person in connection with the collection of a particular debt within seven days after engaging in a telephone conversation with the person about the particular debt.

Telephone calls do not count toward these telephone call frequencies if they are:

- Placed with the person's consent given directly to the collector within the last seven days.
- Not connected to a dialed number. A call does not connect to the dialed number if, for example, the collector receives a busy signal or an indication that the number is not in service. (Comment 14(b)(3)(ii)-1).
- Placed to the consumer's attorney, a consumer reporting agency, the creditor or creditor's attorney, or the debt collector's attorney.

In the case of student loan debts, the term "particular debt" means all student loan debts that a consumer owes or allegedly owes that were serviced under a single account number at the time the debts were obtained by a debt collector.

False, Deceptive, or Misleading Representations or Means — 12 CFR 1006.18

A debt collector may not use any false, deceptive, or misleading representation or means to collect or attempt to collect a debt. For example, a debt collector may not:

- Threaten to take any action that cannot legally be taken or that is not intended to be taken.
- Falsely represent or imply that nonpayment of any debt will result in the arrest or imprisonment of any person or the seizure, garnishment, attachment or sale of any property or wages of any person, unless such action is lawful and intended by the debt collector or creditor.
- Falsely represent or imply that the sale, referral, or other transfer of the debt will cause the consumer to lose a claim or a defense to payment, or become subject to any practice prohibited by the FDCPA or Regulation F.
- Falsely represent or imply that the consumer committed a crime or other conduct to disgrace the consumer.
- Communicate, or threaten to communicate, credit information that the debt collector knows or should know to be false, including not identifying disputed debts as such.
- Use or distribute written communications made to look like or falsely represented to be documents authorized, issued, or approved by any court, official, or agency of the United States or any State, or that give a false impression of their source, authorization, or approval.
- Use any false representation or deceptive means to collect or attempt to collect a debt or to obtain information about a consumer.
- Fail to disclose in the initial written communication with the consumer, and in the initial oral communication if it precedes the initial written communication, that the debt collector is attempting to collect a debt and that any information obtained will be used for that purpose. In addition, the debt collector must disclose in subsequent communications that the communication is from a debt collector. (These disclosures do not apply to a formal pleading made in connection with a legal action.)
- Falsely represent or imply that accounts have been sold to innocent purchasers.
- Falsely represent or imply that documents are legal process.
- Use any name other than the true name of the debt collector's business, company, or organization. (A debt collector's employee may use an assumed name when communicating or attempting to communicate with a person, provided that the employee uses the assumed name consistently and that the debt collector can readily identify any employee using an assumed name.)
- Falsely represent or imply that documents are not legal process or do not require action by the consumer.
- Falsely represent or imply that the debt collector operates or is employed by a consumer reporting agency.

Unfair or Unconscionable Means – 12 CFR 1006.22

A debt collector may not use unfair or unconscionable means to collect or attempt to collect a debt. For example, a debt collector may not:

- Collect any amount, including any interest, fee, charge or expense incidental to the principal obligation unless it was expressly authorized by the original debt agreement or permitted by law.
- Accept a check or other instrument post-dated by more than five days, unless the collector notifies the consumer, in writing, of any intention to deposit the check or instrument. That notice must be made not more than ten (10) or less than three (3) business days before the date of the deposit.
- Solicit a post-dated check or other post-dated payment instrument to use as a threat or to institute criminal prosecution.
- Deposit or threaten to deposit a post-dated check or other post-dated payment instrument before the date on the check or instrument.
- Cause communication charges, such as those for collect telephone calls and telegrams, to be made to any person by concealing the true purpose of the communication.
- Take or threaten to repossess or disable property when the creditor has no enforceable right to the property or does not intend to take possession of it, or if, under law, the property cannot be taken, repossessed or disabled.
- Communicate with a consumer regarding a debt by postcard.
- Use any language or symbol, other than the debt collector's address, on any envelope when communicating with a consumer; a debt collector may use its business name if such name does not indicate it is in the debt collection business.
- Communicate or attempt to communicate with a consumer by sending an email to an email address that the debt collector knows is provided to the consumer by the consumer's employer, with certain exceptions.
- Communicate or attempt to communicate with a person in connection with the collection of a debt through a social media platform if the communication or attempt to communicate is viewable by the general public or the person's social media contacts.

Collection of Time-Barred Debts – 12 CFR 1006.26

A debt collector may not bring, or threaten to bring, a legal action against a consumer to collect a time-barred debt (i.e., a debt for which the applicable statute of limitations has expired).

Other Prohibited Practices – 12 CFR 1006.30Passive Collections

In general, a debt collector may not furnish information about a debt to a consumer reporting agency before the debt collector:

- Speaks to the consumer about the debt in person or by telephone; or
- Sends a letter or electronic message to the consumer about the debt and waits a reasonable period of time (14 days is a safe harbor) to receive a notice of undeliverability.

This prohibition does not apply to a debt collector's furnishing of information to a nationwide specialty consumer reporting agency that compiles information on a consumer's check-writing history.

Selling or Placing for Collection Certain Debt

A debt collector may not, with certain exceptions, sell, transfer for consideration, or place for collection a debt that it knows or should know has been paid or settled or discharged in bankruptcy.

Multiple Debts

If a consumer owes several debts that are being collected by the same debt collector and makes any single payment, that payment must be applied according to the consumer's instructions if such instructions are provided. No payment may be applied to a disputed debt.

Legal Actions by Debt Collectors

A debt collector may file a lawsuit to enforce a security interest in real property only in the judicial district in which the real property is located. Other legal actions may be brought only in the judicial district in which the consumer lives or in which the contract creating the debt was signed.

Furnishing Certain Deceptive Forms

No debt collector (and under 15 USC 1692j, no person) may design, compile, and furnish any form knowing that such form would be used to create the false impression that someone other than the creditor (for example, a debt collector) is participating in the collection of a debt.

Validation of Debts – 12 CFR 1006.34 and 1006.38

The debt collector must provide the consumer with "validation information" in a "clear and conspicuous" form in the initial communication or within five days of the initial communication. If not provided in the initial communication, the validation information must be provided in writing or electronically. If the consumer pays the debt within five days of the initial communication, then the debt collector is not required to provide the validation information.

VII. Unfair Deceptive and Abusive Practices — FDCPA

The validation information must include the following:

- The debt collector communication disclosure required by 12 CFR 1006.34(c)(1).
- The information about the debt required by 12 CFR 1006.34(c)(2).
- The information about consumer protections required by 12 CFR 1006.34(c)(3).
- The consumer-response information required by 12 CFR 1006.34(c)(4).

The document containing this information is often called a “validation notice.” A model validation notice appears in appendix B-1 to Regulation F. Use of the model notice is not required, but a debt collector who uses it has complied with the validation information content and form requirements. A debt collector has the option to use a version of the model validation notice that adds or omits certain optional content, a version that includes certain content on a separate page, or a version that is otherwise substantially similar to the model validation notice. A debt collector may make these changes and retain the safe harbor for compliance with the validation information content and form requirements received through use of the model validation notice.

During the validation period (as defined in 12 CFR 1006.34(b)(5)), the debt collector must not engage in any collection activities or communications that overshadow or are inconsistent with the disclosure of the consumer’s rights to dispute the debt and to request the name and address of the original creditor.

If, within 30 days of receiving the validation notice, the consumer disputes in writing any portion of the debt or requests the name and address of the original creditor, the collector must stop all collection efforts until the collector sends the consumer, in writing or electronically, a copy of a judgment or verification of the debt, or the name and address of the original creditor, as applicable.

Sending Required Disclosures – 12 CFR 1006.42

With certain exceptions, whenever the FDCPA or Regulation F requires a debt collector to provide a disclosure and the disclosure is provided in writing or electronically, the debt collector must provide the disclosure in a manner that is reasonably expected to provide actual notice and in a form that the consumer may keep and access later.

To comply with this requirement, a debt collector sending the following disclosures electronically must do so in accordance with the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act:⁸

- The validation notice described in 12 CFR 1006.34(a)(1)(i)(B).
- The response to a request for original-creditor information described in 12 CFR 1006.38(c).
- The response to a dispute described in 12 CFR 1006.38(d)(2)(i).

Record Retention – 12 CFR 1006.100

A debt collector must retain records that are evidence of compliance or noncompliance with the FDCPA and Regulation F starting on the date that the collector begins collection activity on the debt and until at least three years after the last collection activity on the debt. A debt collector must retain any recordings of telephone calls in connection with the collection of a debt for three years after the date of the call.

Civil Liability – 15 USC 1692k, 1692n, 1692o

A debt collector who fails to comply with any provision of the FDCPA or Regulation F is liable for:

- Any actual damages sustained as a result of that failure.
- Punitive damages as allowed by the court:
 - in an individual action, up to $1,000; or
 - in a class action, up to $1,000 for each named plaintiff and an award to be divided among all members of the class of an amount up to $500,000 or 1 percent of the debt collector’s net worth, whichever is less.
- Costs and a reasonable attorney’s fee in any such action.

In determining punitive damages, the court must consider the nature, frequency and persistency of the violations and the extent to which they were intentional. In a class action, the court must also consider the resources of the debt collector and the number of persons adversely affected.

Intent

A debt collector may have a bona fide error defense to civil liability if it shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the violation was not intentional and was the result of a bona vide error that arose despite procedures reasonably designed to avoid any such error. The collector is also not civilly liable if the collector, in good faith, relied on an advisory opinion of the CFPB even if the ruling is later amended, rescinded, or determined to be invalid for any reason.

Jurisdiction and Statute of Limitations

Action against debt collectors for violations of the FDCPA or Regulation F may be brought in any appropriate U.S. district court or other court of competent jurisdiction. The consumer has one year from the date on which the violation occurred to start such an action.

State Law – 12 CFR 1006.104, 1006.108

Relation to State Law

The FDCPA and Regulation F preempt state law only to the extent that a state law is inconsistent with them. A state law that is more protective of the consumer is not considered inconsistent with the FDCPA or Regulation F.

Exemption for State Regulation

The CFPB may exempt certain classes of debt collection practices within any state from the requirements of the FDCPA and Regulation F if the CFPB has determined that the law of that state imposes substantially similar requirements and that there is adequate provision for enforcement.

Examination Objectives

To assess the quality of the institution's compliance management system for FDCPA and Regulation F.

1. To determine compliance with FDCPA and Regulation F.
2. To initiate corrective action when the institution's compliance management system is deficient, or when violations of law or regulation are identified.

Examination Procedures¹⁰

Each examination should be risk-based and may not require an examiner to address all of the procedures below. In addition, each supervising agency may have its own supervisory strategy that will dictate which examination procedures are required to be completed.

General Procedures

1. Determine if the institution acts as a debt collector under the FDCPA and Regulation F.
2. Determine if the institution places debt for collection by, or sells debt to, one or more debt collectors under the FDCPA and Regulation F.
3. Through discussions with management and review of relevant documents, determine the adequacy of the institution's compliance management system for the FDCPA and Regulation F.
4. If the institution and, if consistent with the scope of the review, any service providers with which the institution places debt for collection has acted or is acting as a debt collector, assess compliance with the FDCPA and Regulation F. Consider, among other things practices and contracts for debt placements, purchases and sales, collection letters, dunning notices, envelopes, electronic communications, call logs, call recordings, scripts used by collection personnel, validation notices, individual collection files, complaint files, and other relevant records. Determine if the institution has:
 - a. Communicated with the consumer or third parties in any prohibited manner (12 CFR 1006.6, 1006.10);
 - b. Used any harassing, abusive, unfair, or deceptive collection practice or any other prohibited practice (12 CFR 1006.14, 1006.18, 1006.22, 1006.30);
 - c. Brought or threatened to bring a legal action against a consumer to collect a time-barred debt (12 CFR 1006.26);

- d. Furnished the written validation notice within the required time period and otherwise complied with applicable validation requirements (12 CFR 1006.34, 1006.38);
- e. Sent required disclosures in the prescribed manner (12 CFR 1006.42); and

Third Party Risk

Introduction

The board of directors and management of an insured depository institution (institution) are ultimately responsible for managing activities conducted through third-party relationships, and identifying and controlling the risks arising from such relationships, to the same extent as if the activity were handled within the institution. The use of third-party relationships does not relinquish responsibility of the board of directors and management. The institution's officials are expected to have a clearly defined system of risk management controls built into the management system that governs the institution's compliance operations, including controls over activities conducted by affiliates and third-party vendors. The more significant the third party program, the more important it is that the institution conduct regular periodic reviews of the adequacy of its oversight and controls over third-party relationships.

Examiners should evaluate all applicable activities conducted through third-party relationships as though the activities were performed by the institution itself. It must be emphasized that while an institution may properly seek to mitigate the risks of third-party relationships through the use of indemnity agreements with third parties, such agreements do not insulate the institution from its ultimate responsibility to conduct banking-related activities in a safe and sound manner and in compliance with applicable consumer protection laws and regulations including fair lending laws and regulations (for example, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act (ECOA) and the Fair Housing Act).

The Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council's Uniform Interagency Consumer Compliance Rating System (CC Rating System), which is a supervisory policy for evaluating financial institutions' adherence to consumer compliance requirements, addresses third-party relationships. Under the CC Rating System, each financial institution is assigned a consumer compliance rating. The CC Rating System requires examiners to review a financial institution's management of third-party relationships and servicers as part of its overall consumer compliance program.

These examination procedures provide additional context and guidance for compliance examiners when evaluating an institution's third-party relationships. These procedures include a description of potential risks arising from third-party relationships and provide examiners with insight on how to assess compliance risk for third-party business relationships.

A third-party relationship could be considered "significant" if:

- the institution's relationship with the third party is a new relationship or involves implementing new institution activities;
- the relationship has a material effect on the institution's revenues or expenses;
- the third party performs critical functions;
- the third party stores, accesses, transmits, or performs transactions on sensitive customer information;
- the third-party relationship significantly increases the institution's geographic market;
- the third party provides a product or performs a service involving lending or card payment transactions;
- the third party poses risks that could materially affect the institution's earnings, capital, or reputation;
- the third party provides a product or performs a service that covers or could cover a large number of consumers;
- the third party provides a product or performs a service that implicates several or higher risk consumer protection regulations;
- the third party is involved in deposit taking arrangements such as affinity arrangements; or
- the third party markets products or services directly to institution customers that could pose a risk of financial loss to the individual.

Background

For purposes of this guidance, the term "third party" is broadly defined to include all entities that have entered into a business relationship with the institution, whether the third party is a bank or a nonbank, affiliated or not affiliated, regulated or nonregulated, a wholly- or partially-owned subsidiary, or a domestic or a foreign institution.

Institutions generally enter into third-party relationships by outsourcing¹ certain operational functions to a third party or by using a third party to make products and services available that the institution does not originate. Also, institutions may ¹ The term "outsourcing" is a vernacular expression that refers to a company or business that contracts or subcontracts a service or function to a third party that might otherwise be performed by in-house employees. Institutions may use the terms "outsourcing" and "third-party" interchangeably. However, examiners should remember that services and functions outsourced by an institution contain varying degrees of risk. Therefore, when reviewing for third-party risk, examiners should request a listing of all functions and services outsourced to ensure that appropriate relationships that have third-party risk are captured for review.

VII. Unfair and Deceptive Practices — Third Party Risk

enter into arrangements with third parties in which the institution funds directly or indirectly through a line of credit certain products originated by a third party. As the financial services industry continues to evolve, some institutions are also using third parties for functions that are either new or have traditionally been performed in-house, e.g., outsourcing the institution's audit function.

The use of third parties can aid institution management in attaining strategic objectives by increasing revenues or reducing costs. The use of a third party also serves as a vehicle for management to access greater expertise or efficiency for a particular activity. Appropriately managed third-party relationships can enhance competitiveness, provide diversification, and ultimately strengthen the safety and soundness and compliance management system (CMS) of the institution. However, third-party arrangements also present risks if not properly managed. Specifically, failure to manage these risks can expose an institution to supervisory action, financial loss, litigation, and reputational damage. To that end, the decision about whether to use a third party should be considered by an institution's board of directors and management, taking into account the circumstances unique to the potential relationship.

Institutions have also been presented with increasing opportunities to enter into contractual arrangements with foreign-based third-party service providers to fulfill outsourcing needs. Examiners should evaluate these relationships with, at least, the same level of vigilance and scrutiny as with domestic third-party service providers (see discussion of Country Risk below).

These examination procedures provide a framework for examining the effectiveness of an institution's CMS as it relates to the policies and procedures for overseeing, managing, and controlling third-party relationships. More importantly, this guidance supplements, but does not replace, previously issued information on third-party risk and is intended to aid in the examination of third-party arrangements.²

Potential Risks Arising from Third-Party Relationships

There are numerous risks that may arise from an institution's use of third parties. Some of the risks are associated with the underlying activity itself, similar to the risks faced by an institution directly conducting the activity. Other potential risks arise from or are heightened by the involvement of a third party. Failure to prevent or mitigate these risks can expose an institution to supervisory action, financial loss, litigation, and reputation damage, and may even impair the institution's ability to establish new or service existing customer relationships.

Not all of the following risks will be applicable to every third-party relationship; however, complex or significant arrangements may have definable risks in most areas. The institution's board of directors and management should understand the nature of these risks in the context of the institution's current or planned use of third parties and in establishing and evaluating the institution's risk oversight and control systems. The following summary of risks is not considered all-inclusive.

“Compliance Risk” Compliance risk is the risk arising from violations of laws, rules, or regulations, or from noncompliance with the institution's internal policies or procedures or business standards. This risk exists when the products or activities of a third party are not consistent with governing laws, rules, regulations, policies, or ethical standards. For example, some third parties may engage in product marketing practices that are deceptive in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, or lending practices that are discriminatory in violation of the ECOA and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's Regulation B. The ability of the third party to maintain the privacy of customer records and to implement an appropriate information security and disclosure program is another compliance concern. Liability could potentially extend to the institution when third parties experience security breaches involving customer information in violation of the safeguarding requirements of customer information, as set out in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) and Federal Trade Commission regulations. Compliance risk is exacerbated when an institution has inadequate oversight, monitoring, or audit functions over third-party relationships.

“Reputation Risk” Reputation risk is the risk arising from negative public opinion. Third-party relationships that result in dissatisfied customers, unexpected customer financial loss, interactions not consistent with institution policies, inappropriate recommendations, security breaches resulting in the disclosure of customer information, and violations of laws and regulations are all examples that could harm the reputation and standing of the institution. Any negative publicity involving the third party, whether or not the publicity is related to the institution's use of the third party, could result in reputation risk.

“Strategic Risk” Strategic risk is the risk arising from adverse business decisions, or the failure to implement appropriate business decisions in a manner that is consistent with the institution's strategic goals. The use of a third party to perform banking functions or to offer products or services that do not help the institution achieve corporate strategic goals and provide an adequate return on investment exposes the institution to strategic risk.

“Operational Risk” Operational risk is the risk of loss resulting from inadequate or failed internal processes, people, systems, or external events. Third-party relationships often integrate the internal processes of other organizations with the institution’s processes and can increase the overall operational complexity.

“Transaction Risk” Transaction risk is the risk arising from problems with service or product delivery. A third-party’s failure to perform as expected by customers or the institution due to reasons such as inadequate capacity, technological failure, human error, or fraud, exposes the institution to transaction risk. The lack of an effective business resumption plan and appropriate contingency plans increase transaction risk. Weak control over technology used in the third-party arrangement may result in threats to security and the integrity of systems and resources. These issues could result in unauthorized transactions or the inability to transact business as expected.

“Credit Risk” Credit risk is the risk that a third party, or any other creditor necessary to the third-party relationship, is unable to meet the terms of the contractual arrangements with the institution or to otherwise financially perform as agreed. The basic form of credit risk involves the financial condition of the third party itself. Some contracts provide that the third party ensures some measure of performance related to obligations arising from the relationship, such as loan origination programs. In these circumstances, the financial condition of the third party is a factor in assessing credit risk. Credit risk also arises from the use of third parties that market or originate certain types of loans, solicit and refer customers, conduct underwriting analysis, or set up product programs for the institution. Appropriate monitoring of the financial activity of the third party is necessary to ensure that credit risk is understood and remains within board-approved limits.

“Country Risk” Country risk is the exposure to the economic, social and political conditions and events in a foreign country that may adversely affect the ability of the foreign-based third-party service provider (FBTSP) to meet the level of service required by the arrangement, resulting in harm to the institution. In extreme cases, this exposure could result in the loss of data, research and development efforts, or other assets. Contracting with a FBTSP exposes an institution to country risk, a unique characteristic of these arrangements. Managing country risk requires the ability to gather and assess information regarding a foreign government’s policies, including those addressing information access, as well as local political, social, economic, and legal conditions.

“Other Risks” The types of risk introduced by an institution’s decision to use a third party cannot be fully assessed without a complete understanding of the resulting arrangement.

Therefore, a comprehensive list of potential risks that could be associated with a third-party relationship is not possible. In addition to the risks described above, third-party relationships may also subject the institution to liquidity, interest rate, price, legal, and foreign currency translation risks.

With the wide array of risks that may occur, the following includes some pragmatic examples of concerns that can surface if there is lack of appropriate oversight and monitoring of third-party relationships and associated CMSs:

- Where the institution lends its name or regulated entity status to products and services originated by others or activities predominantly conducted by others, and those vendors engage in practices that may be considered predatory, abusive, or unfair and deceptive to consumers;
- When possible violations of fair lending and consumer protection laws and regulations occur, particularly when the actual involvement of the institution and the third party is invisible to the customer;
- Where the third-party relationships do not meet the expectation of the institution’s customers;
- Where, due to the third party, the customer experiences poor service, disruption of service, financial loss resulting from not understanding product or service risks or alternatives, and inferior choices stemming from lack of disclosure(s);
- When privacy of consumer and customer records is not adequately protected;
- Where the third party is unable to deliver products or services due to fraud, error, inadequate capacity, or technology failure, and where there is a lack of effective business resumption and contingency planning for such situations;
- Where a problem or issue lies with a service being rendered by a third party that went undetected by the institution because an appropriate audit or monitoring program was not in place for the third-party relationship; and
- Where the third party is the auditor for the institution’s CMS and management failed to properly oversee and manage the scope and intensity of these audits to ensure reviews were comprehensive or covered areas of significant risk.

Compliance Management System Review

The key to the effective and successful use of a third party in any capacity is for the institution’s management to

VII. Unfair and Deceptive Practices — Third Party Risk

appropriately assess, measure, monitor, and control the risks associated with the relationship and weave that process into its CMS. While engaging another entity may aid management and the board in achieving strategic goals, such an arrangement reduces management’s direct control. Therefore, the use of a third party increases the need for robust oversight of the process from start to finish. This guidance provides four main elements of an effective third-party risk compliance management process:

1. Risk Assessment – The process of assessing risks and options for controlling third-party arrangements.
2. Due Diligence in Selecting a Third Party – The process of selecting a qualified entity to implement the activity or program.
3. Contract Structuring and Review – The process of ensuring that the specific expectations and obligations of both the institution and the third party are outlined in a written contract prior to entering into the arrangement—a contract should act as a map to the relationship and define its structure.
4. Oversight – The process of reviewing the operational and financial performance of third-party activities over those products and services performed through third-party arrangements on an ongoing basis, to ensure that the third party meets and can continue to meet the terms of the contractual arrangement.

While these four elements apply to any third-party activities, the precise use of this process is predicated upon the nature of the third-party relationship, the scope and magnitude of the activity, and the risks identified. These examination procedures are not intended to result in an expansion or a decrease in the use of third parties by institutions, but to provide a framework for assessing, measuring, monitoring, and controlling risks associated with third parties. A comprehensive risk management process, which includes management of any third-party relationships, will enable management to ensure that the third party is operating in a manner consistent with federal and state laws, rules, and regulations, including those intended to protect consumers. With that, the aforementioned four elements will serve as the nexus for examining the effectiveness of an institution’s oversight and management of third-party relationships.

Examination Objectives

1. Determine if the financial institution has any “significant” third-party relationships;
2. Determine the adequacy of the institution’s CMS, including policies and procedures, internal controls, training, monitoring, and internal and external auditing procedures associated with third-party relationships to ensure consistent and ongoing compliance with all applicable consumer protection laws and regulations;

3. Determine whether activities conducted through third parties are compliant with applicable consumer protection laws, fair lending regulations, and internal policies; and
4. Determine appropriate corrective action when third-party risk issues are identified or deficiencies are noted.

Examination Procedures

Pre-Examination Planning

Examiners should follow the general Compliance Examination procedures pertaining to pre-examination planning, found in the FDIC’s Compliance Examination Manual, to gather as much information as possible about an institution’s involvement in any third-party arrangement. Examiners must consider these relationships when assessing the quality of the institution’s CMS. The following includes the steps that examiners should generally follow in gathering information on an institution’s third-party relationships:

1. During the initial contact with the institution and through the Compliance Information and Document Request (CIDR), identify the presence of any third-party relationships;
2. During the initial contact with the institution and through the CIDR, identify planned or newly initiated third-party relationships;
3. Obtain and review copies of current contracts and relevant records that management utilizes to manage third-party relationships. Examples of relevant records may include, but are not limited to, audit reports, engagement letters, contracts, references, marketing scripts, due diligence documentation, advertisements (e.g., paper, electronic, and e-mail), promotional materials, disclosures, documentation of monitoring efforts, training material, policies, and procedural manuals;
4. Review prior Compliance and Risk Management examination reports along with institution file correspondence for information concerning any adverse material effect the third-party relationship(s) has on compliance with consumer protection laws and regulations that may affect safe and sound operations. It may be possible to risk scope certain aspects of the Compliance review depending on timing and depth of the Risk Management Review; and issues to the board and appropriate committee for review and approval.

Risk Assessment

1. Determine if management, prior to entering the third-party relationship, ensured that the proposed third-party relationship is consistent with the institution's strategic planning and overall business strategy.
2. Determine if management, prior to entering the third-party relationship, analyzed the strategic risk the institution is willing to enter into given its size, resources, capacity, and number of employees.
3. Determine if management, prior to entering the third-party relationship, analyzed the benefits, costs, legal aspects, and the potential risks associated with the third party under consideration.
4. Determine if management performed a risk/reward analysis, comparing the proposed third-party relationship to other methods of performing the activity or product offering, including the use of other vendors or in-house staff. For such matters, the analysis should be considered integral to the institution's overall strategic planning, and should thus be performed by management and reviewed by the board or an appropriate committee.
5. Determine if institution personnel have the requisite knowledge and skills to adequately perform the risk analysis. Certain aspects of the risk assessment phase may include the use of internal or external auditors, compliance officers, technology officers, and legal counsel. This phase should also identify performance criteria, internal controls, reporting needs, and contractual requirements that would be critical to the ongoing assessment and control of specific identified risks. For example, if the activity involves consumer products or services, the board and management should establish a clear solicitation and origination strategy that allows for an assessment of performance, as well as mid-course corrections.
6. Determine if management reviewed whether the third-party's activities could be viewed as predatory, discriminatory, abusive, unfair, or deceptive to consumers.
7. Determine if management reviewed its ability to provide adequate oversight and management of the proposed third-party relationship on an ongoing basis.
8. Determine if management has a process in place for elevating new or significant third-party relationships and

Due Diligence in Selecting a Third Party

1. Determine if management conducted an adequate due diligence that included a review of all available information about a potential third party, focusing on the entity's financial condition, its specific relevant experience, its knowledge of applicable laws and regulations, its reputation, and the scope and effectiveness of its operations and controls, as applicable. The scope and depth of due diligence should be directly related to the importance and magnitude of the third-party relationship. (Note: Due diligence should be performed not only prior to selecting a third-party relationship, but also periodically during the course of the relationship, particularly when considering a renewal of a contract.) The evaluation of a third party may include the following items:
 - Audited financial statements, annual reports, Securities and Exchange Commission filings, and other available financial information;
 - Significance of the proposed contract on the third-party's financial condition;
 - Experience and ability in implementing and monitoring the proposed activity;
 - Business reputation, including any complaints filed;
 - Span of business operations in which the third party is engaged;
 - Qualifications and experience of the company's principals;
 - Strategies and goals, including service philosophies, quality initiatives, efficiency improvements, and employment policies;
 - Existence of any significant complaints or litigation (past and pending), or supervisory actions against the company or its owners or principals;
 - Ability to perform the proposed functions using current systems or the need to make additional investment;
 - Use of other parties or subcontractors by the third party;
 - Scope of internal controls, systems and data security, privacy protections, and audit coverage;
 - Business resumption strategy and contingency plans;
 - Knowledge of and background and experience with consumer protection laws and regulations;

- Underwriting criteria;
- Adequacy of management information systems;
- Insurance coverage;
- Marketing materials to determine how the institution's name will be associated with the product;
- Websites; and
- Vendor and institution management responsibilities.

Contract Structuring and Review

1. Determine if management ensures that the specific expectations and obligations of both the institution and the third party are outlined in a written contract prior to entering into the arrangement. Any material or significant contract with a third party should prohibit assignment, transfer, or subcontracting by the third party of its obligations unless the institution appropriately determines that such activity is consistent with its due diligence responsibilities.
 2. Determine if the board provides approval prior to entering into any material third-party arrangements. When reviewing this area, questions that compliance examiners may want to consider are: (1) Are board members fully aware of the risks, issues, and responsibilities associated with the third-party relationship under consideration?; (2) Do any board members have close ties to or have a vested interest in the third-party relationship under consideration?; (3) Did the Directorate abrogate their responsibilities during the review and approval of any material third-party relationship?; (4) Were board members provided access to the due diligence findings and were findings accurately presented?; and (5) Do minutes exist of Board meetings where the third-party arrangements were addressed?
 3. Determine if appropriate legal counsel reviewed significant contracts prior to finalization.
 4. Determine if clearly defined performance standards are included to serve as a basis for measuring the performance of the third party. Determine if management periodically reviews the performance measures to ensure consistency with its overall objectives. Performance standards may also be used as a factor in the compensation or fee paid to the third party. Institutions should employ compensation programs that are consistent with consumer protection laws and sound banking practices.⁴
5. Determine if the contract addresses the following:
 - Outlines the fees to be paid, including fixed compensation, variable charges, and any fees to be paid for nonrecurring items or special requests. Other items that should be addressed, if applicable, are the cost and responsibility for purchasing and maintaining any equipment, hardware, software, or other item related to the activity. Additionally, the contract should address obligations for retaining documentation for compensation arrangements, as appropriate. Also, the party responsible for payment of any legal or audit expenses should be identified.
 - Specifies the type and frequency of management information reports to be received from the third party. Routine reports may include performance, audits, financial, security, consumer complaint, and business resumption testing reports. Determine if management considers mandating exception-based reports that would serve as notification of any changes or problems that could affect the nature of the relationship or pose a risk to the institution.
 - Specifies the institution's right to audit the third party (or engage an independent auditor) as needed to monitor performance under the contract. Management should ensure that the third-party's internal control environment as it relates to the service or product being provided to the institution is sufficiently audited or monitored. Does the contract specify the scope of audits that will be performed? Do audits capture all compliance-related risk?
 - Prohibits the third party and its agents from using or disclosing the institution's information, except as necessary to perform the functions designated by the contract, or as otherwise permitted by law. For example, any non-public personal information of the institution's customers must be handled in a manner consistent with the institution's own privacy policy and in accordance with applicable privacy laws and regulations. Any breaches in the security and 4 The FDIC enforces laws and regulations that prohibit the use of compensation arrangements that encourage third-party originators to inappropriately steer borrowers into higher cost products or avoid mortgage lending in low-income neighborhoods where home prices are lower. Compensation arrangements should not create unintended incentives to engage in unfair or deceptive acts or practices, particularly with respect to product sales, loan originations, and collections; or be tailored to circumvent other applicable consumer protection laws and regulations, including fair lending laws and regulations.

confidentiality of information should be fully and promptly disclosed to the institution.

- Specifies whether the institution or the third party has the duty to respond to any complaints received by the third party from customers of the institution. If the third party is responsible for such responses, a copy of any complaint and the response should be forwarded to the institution. The contract should also provide for periodic summary reports detailing the status and resolution of complaints along with a trend analysis on types of complaints. Additionally, the contract should address record retention provisions for retaining relevant consumer complaint records.
- Addresses the third-party's responsibility for continuation of services provided for in the contractual arrangement in the event of an operational failure, including both man-made and natural disasters. The third party should have appropriate protections for backing up information and also maintain disaster recovery and contingency plans with sufficiently detailed operating procedures. Results of testing of these plans should be provided to the institution.
- Specifies what circumstances constitute default, identifies remedies, and allows for a reasonable opportunity to cure a default. Similarly, termination rights should be identified in the contract, especially for material third-party arrangements and relationships involving rapidly changing technology or circumstances. For example, termination rights may be sought for various conditions, such as inability to prevent violations of consumer protection laws and regulations.
- Includes a dispute resolution process for the purpose of resolving problems expeditiously. Continuation of the arrangement between the parties during the dispute should also be addressed.
- Addresses ownership issues and the third-party's right to use the institution's property, including intellectual property such as the institution's name and logo, trademark, and other copyrighted material. It should also address ownership and control of any records generated by the third party.
- Provides indemnification provisions that require the third party to hold the institution harmless from liability as a result of negligence by the third party, and vice versa. The existence of indemnification provisions will not be a mitigating factor where deficiencies indicate the need to seek corrective actions. For example, where violations of consumer protection laws and regulations are present, the FDIC's consideration of remedial/enforcement measures will be made irrespective of the existence of indemnification clauses in third-party contracts.

Board and Management Oversight

1. Determine if the board initially approved significant third-party arrangements, and what the Board considered in reaching that approval. Additionally, determine if the board oversees and reviews, at least annually, significant third-party arrangements, and reviews these arrangements and written agreements whenever there is a material change to the program.
2. Determine if management periodically reviews the third party's operations in order to verify that they are consistent with the terms of the written agreement and that risks are being controlled. The institution's CMS should also ensure continuing compliance with applicable consumer protection laws and regulations, as well as internal policies and procedures.
3. Determine if management allocates sufficient qualified staff to monitor significant third-party relationships and provides the necessary oversight. Specifically, management should consider designating an individual or committee to coordinate the oversight activities with respect to significant relationships, and involve their compliance management function and, as necessary, other operational areas such as audit.⁵
 - An oversight program will generally include monitoring of the third-party's quality of service, risk management practices, financial condition, and applicable controls and reports.
4. Determine if management is following the institution's policies and procedures for terminating or probating third-party relationships, based on findings from audits and/or performance monitoring.
5. Determine if the results of oversight activities for material third-party arrangements are periodically reported to the institution's board of directors or designated committee. Identified weaknesses should be documented and promptly addressed.
6. Determine if the institution maintains documents and records on all aspects of the third-party relationship, including valid contracts, business plans, risk analyses, due diligence, and oversight activities (including reports to the board or delegated committees and documents regarding any dispute resolution) and for what period of time.

Institution-Affiliated Party

Institutions can also outsource activities to third parties, or otherwise make use of products or services provided by third parties, via a subsidiary or affiliate referred to as an Institution-Affiliated Party (IAP).⁶ By statute, an IAP is defined as:

- Any director, officer, employee, or controlling stockholder (other than a bank holding company) of, or agent for, an insured depository institution;
- Any other person who has filed or is required to file a change-in-control notice with their primary Federal banking regulator;
- Any shareholder (other than a bank holding company), consultant, joint venture partner, and any other person as determined by the appropriate Federal banking agency (by regulation or case-by-case) who participates in the conduct of the affairs of an insured depository institution; or
- Any independent contractor (including any attorney, appraiser, or accountant) who knowingly or recklessly participates in:
 - any violation of any law or regulation;
 - any breach of fiduciary duty; or
 - any unsafe or unsound practice, which caused or is likely to cause more than a minimal financial loss to, or a significant adverse effect on, the insured depository institution.

The designation of a third party as an IAP is significant when the FDIC is considering bringing enforcement action against a third party, because the FDIC's direct enforcement jurisdiction over third parties generally is limited to insured State nonmember banks, foreign institutions having an insured branch, and their IAPs. Examiners should be mindful of the possible existence of this status during examinations and utilize the same examination principles and level of caution for reviewing the institution's management of these third-party relationships.

If significant ambiguity exists when trying to ascertain if the third party is an IAP, a case-by-case analysis may be warranted, in consultation with the FDIC's Legal Division, before proceeding with the examination of the third party. The FDIC's examination authority over third parties is broader than enforcement jurisdiction.

Refer to the IAP examination procedures⁷ for further information and guidance on examining and potentially bringing enforcement action against a person or entity that may be an IAP.

Transaction Sampling and Testing

Based on the examiner's conclusions about the institution's CMS, a determination should be made about the extent of transaction testing or file review necessary to complete the Compliance Examination. The severity of the CMS weaknesses and risks present should dictate the intensity of transaction testing. The determination and level of transaction testing should be tailored to weaknesses identified in the CMS as it relates to specific third-party relationships, focusing on those areas that present the greatest degree of risk to the institution or to consumers. The following are examples of items that should be reviewed, as applicable:

- Advertisement and marketing documentation;
- New product development documentation;
- Procedural manuals, including those for servicing, collections, and safeguarding customer information;
- Employee training records;
- Audit/monitoring report findings;
- Customer disclosures, notices, agreements, and periodic statements for each product and service reviewed;
- Account statements;
- Contracts with third parties;
- Compensation programs;
- Promotional materials;
- Telemarketing scripts; and
- Recorded calls for telemarketing or collections.

Documentation of Examination Findings

At the conclusion of the examination, examiners should document their conclusions about the institution's third-party relationships in the examination work papers and Report of Examination, as appropriate. The Third Party Check List is provided to aid examiners in reviewing third-party relationships and documenting examination findings.

⁶ Despite the use of the word "person" and other similar vernaculars in the definition, an institution-affiliated party can be an individual or institution itself.

⁷ Examination procedures for IAPs can be found in Section X-5.1, Bank Subsidiaries and Affiliates, of the Compliance Examination Manual.

Institutions that fail to comply with applicable laws and regulations, or fail to establish or observe appropriate policies and procedures should be subject to criticism in the Report of Examination and appropriate corrective action.

Consultations

Because of the wide range of facts, activities, and issues that can arise in the context of third-party relationships, as well as the multitude of consumer protection regulations that can be impacted, the examiner should consult the Regional Office when possible issues or concerns are identified at a Compliance Examination.

Appropriate corrective action, including enforcement action, may be pursued for deficiencies related to a third-party relationship, including IAP activities that pose compliance management concerns or result in violations of applicable consumer protection laws and regulations.

Examiners are reminded that indemnity or other contractual provisions with third parties cannot insulate the institution from regulatory corrective action.

VII. Unfair and Deceptive Practices — Third Party Risk

This job aid can be utilized for examining the effectiveness of a financial institution’s (institution) compliance management system as it relates to the procedures for overseeing, managing, and controlling third-party relationships. Complete only those aspects of the job aid that specifically relate to the area being reviewed and retain those completed sections in the compliance examination work papers.

When reviewing an institution’s self-monitoring controls and oversight of third-party relationships, a “No” answer indicates a possible exception/deficiency and should be further investigated and explained in the examination work papers and report of examination, as appropriate. If a line item is not applicable within the area of review, indicate “NA.”

VIII. Privacy and Consumer Information

Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (Privacy of Consumer Financial Information)

Introduction

Title V, Subtitle A of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (“GLBA”)¹ governs the treatment of nonpublic personal information about consumers by financial institutions. Section 502 of the Subtitle, subject to certain exceptions, prohibits a financial institution from disclosing nonpublic personal information about a consumer to nonaffiliated third parties, unless (i) the institution satisfies various notice and opt-out requirements, and (ii) the consumer has not elected to opt out of the disclosure. Section 503 requires the institution to provide notice of its privacy policies and practices to its customers. Section 504 authorizes the issuance of regulations to implement these provisions.

In 2000, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (“Board”), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (“FDIC”), the National Credit Union Administration (“NCUA”), the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (“OCC”), and the former Office of Thrift Supervision (“OTS”), published regulations implementing provisions of GLBA governing the treatment of nonpublic personal information about consumers by financial institutions.²

Title X of the Dodd-Frank Act Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (“Dodd-Frank Act”)³ granted rulemaking authority for most provisions of Subtitle A of Title V of GLBA to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (“CFPB”) with respect to financial institutions and other entities subject to the CFPB’s jurisdiction, except securities and futures-related companies and certain motor vehicle dealers. The Dodd-Frank Act also granted authority to the CFPB to examine and enforce compliance with these statutory provisions and their implementing regulations with respect to entities under CFPB jurisdiction.⁴ In December 2011 the CFPB recodified in Regulation P, 12 CFR Part 1016, the implementing regulations that were previously issued by the Board, the FDIC, the Federal Trade Commission (“FTC”), the NCUA, the OCC, and the former OTS.⁵

The regulation establishes rules governing duties of a financial institution to provide particular notices and limitations on its disclosure of nonpublic personal information, as summarized below.

- A financial institution must provide notice of its privacy policies and practices, and allow the consumer to opt out of the disclosure of the consumer’s nonpublic personal information to a nonaffiliated third party if the disclosure is outside of the exceptions in sections 13, 14, or 15 of the regulation. If the financial institution provides the consumer’s nonpublic personal information to a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in section 13, it must provide notice of its privacy policies and practices to the consumer. Under the exception in section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution’s behalf, including use under an exception in sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If the financial institution complies with these requirements, it is not required to provide an opt out notice.
- Regardless of whether a financial institution shares nonpublic personal information, the institution must provide notice of its privacy policies and practices to its customers.
- A financial institution generally may not disclose consumer account numbers to any nonaffiliated third party for marketing purposes.
- A financial institution must follow redisclosure and reuse limitations on any nonpublic personal information it receives from a nonaffiliated financial institution.

In general, the privacy notice must describe a financial institution’s policies and practices with respect to collecting and disclosing nonpublic personal information about a consumer to both affiliated and nonaffiliated third parties. Also, the notice must provide a consumer a reasonable opportunity to direct the institution generally not to share nonpublic personal information about the consumer (that is, to “opt out”) with nonaffiliated third parties other than as permitted by exceptions under the regulation (for example, sharing for everyday business purposes, such as processing transactions and maintaining customers’ accounts, and in response to properly executed governmental requests). The Section 1002(12)(J) of the Dodd-Frank Act, however, excluded financial institutions’ information security safeguards under GLBA section 501(b) from the CFPB’s rulemaking, examination, and enforcement authority.

⁵ 76 FR 79025 (Dec. 21, 2011). Pursuant to GLBA, the FTC retains rulemaking authority over any financial institution that is a person described in 12 U.S.C. Section 5519 (with certain statutory exceptions, the FTC generally retains rulemaking authority for motor vehicle dealers predominantly engaged in the sale and servicing of motor vehicles, the leasing and servicing of motor vehicles, or both).

VIII. Privacy — GLBA

privacy notice must also provide, where applicable under the Fair Credit Reporting Act (“FCRA”), a notice and an opportunity for a consumer to opt out of certain information sharing among affiliates.

Section 728 of the Financial Services Regulatory Relief Act of 2006 required the four federal banking agencies (the Board, the FDIC, the OCC, and the former OTS) and four additional federal regulatory agencies (the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (“CFTC”), the FTC, the NCUA, and the Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC”)) to develop a model privacy form that financial institutions may rely on as a safe harbor to provide disclosures under the privacy rules.

On December 1, 2009, the eight federal agencies jointly released a voluntary model privacy form designed to make it easier for consumers to understand how financial institutions collect and share nonpublic personal information.⁶ The final rule adopting the model privacy form was effective on December 31, 2009.

On October 28, 2014, the CFPB published a final rule amending the requirements regarding financial institutions’ provision of their annual disclosures of privacy policies and practices to customers by creating an alternative delivery method that financial institutions can use under certain circumstances.⁷ The amendment was effective immediately upon publication. The alternative delivery method allows a financial institution to provide an annual privacy notice by posting the annual notice on its web site, if the financial institution meets certain conditions.

As of December 4, 2015, section 75001 of the Fixing America’s Surface Transportation Act⁸ (“FAST Act”) amended section 503 of GLBA to establish an exception to the annual privacy notice requirements whereby a financial institution that meets certain criteria is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to customers. The amendment was effective upon enactment.

There are fewer requirements to qualify for the exception to providing an annual privacy notice pursuant to the FAST Act GLBA amendments than there are to qualify to use the CFPB’s alternative delivery method; any institution that meets the requirements for using the alternative delivery method is effectively excepted from delivering an annual privacy notice.

Definitions and Key Concepts

In discussing the duties and limitations imposed by the regulation, a number of key concepts are used. These concepts include “financial institution”; “nonpublic personal information”; “nonaffiliated third party”; the “opt out” right and the exceptions to that right; and “consumer” and “customer.” Each concept is briefly discussed below. A more complete explanation of each appears in the regulation.

Financial Institution: A “financial institution” is any institution the business of which is engaging in activities that are financial in nature or incidental to such financial activities, as determined by section 4(k) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956. Financial institutions can include banks, securities brokers and dealers, insurance underwriters and agents, finance companies, mortgage bankers, and travel agents.⁹

Nonpublic personal information: “Nonpublic personal information” generally is any information that is not publicly available and that:

- a consumer provides to a financial institution to obtain a financial product or service from the institution;
- results from a transaction between the consumer and the institution involving a financial product or service; or
- a financial institution otherwise obtains about a consumer in connection with providing a financial product or service.

Information is publicly available if an institution has a reasonable basis to believe that the information is lawfully made available to the general public from government records, widely distributed media, or legally required disclosures to the general public. Examples include information in a telephone book or a publicly recorded document, such as a mortgage or security interest filing.

Nonpublic personal information may include individual items of information as well as lists of information. For example, nonpublic personal information may include names, addresses, phone numbers, social security numbers, income, credit score, and information obtained through Internet collection devices (i.e., cookies).

There are special rules regarding lists. Publicly available information would be treated as nonpublic if it were included on a list of consumers derived from nonpublic personal information. For example, a list of the names and addresses of a financial institution's depositors would be nonpublic personal information even though the same names and addresses might be published in local telephone directories, because the list is derived from the fact that a person has a deposit account with an institution, which is not publicly available information.

⁸ Fixing America’s Surface Transportation Act of 2015, Pub. L. No. 114-94 (2015), 129 Stat. 1312 (2015).

⁹ Certain functionally regulated subsidiaries, such as brokers, dealers, and investment advisers, are subject to GLBA implementing regulations issued by the SEC. Other functionally regulated subsidiaries, such as futures commission merchants, commodity trading advisors, commodity pool operators, and introducing brokers in commodities, are subject to GLBA implementing regulations issued by the CFTC. Insurance entities may be subject to privacy regulations issued by their respective state insurance authorities.

However, if the financial institution has a reasonable basis to believe that certain customer relationships are a matter of public record, then any list of these relationships would be considered publicly available information. For instance, a list of mortgage customers from public mortgage records would be considered publicly available information. The institution could provide a list of such customers, and include on that list any other publicly available information it has about those customers without having to provide notice or opt out.

Nonaffiliated third party: A “nonaffiliated third party” is any person except a financial institution's affiliate or a person employed jointly by a financial institution and a company that is not the institution's affiliate. An “affiliate” of a financial institution is any company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the financial institution.

Opt Out Right and Exceptions:

The Right—Consumers must be given the right to “opt out” of, or prevent, a financial institution from disclosing nonpublic personal information about them to a nonaffiliated third party unless an exception to that right applies. The exceptions are detailed in sections 13, 14, and 15 of the regulation and described below.

As part of the opt out right, consumers must be given a reasonable opportunity and a reasonable means to opt out. What constitutes a reasonable opportunity to opt out depends on the circumstances surrounding the consumer's transaction, but a consumer must be provided a reasonable amount of time to exercise the opt out right. For example, it would be reasonable if the financial institution allows 30 days from the date of mailing a notice or 30 days after customer acknowledgement of an electronic notice for an opt out direction to be returned. What constitutes a reasonable means to opt out may include check-off boxes, a reply form, or a toll-free telephone number. It is not reasonable to require a consumer to write his or her own letter as the only means to opt out.

The Exceptions

Exceptions to the opt out right are detailed in sections 13, 14, and 15 of the regulation. Financial institutions need not comply with opt-out requirements if they limit disclosure of nonpublic personal information:

- Section 13: To a nonaffiliated third party to perform services for the financial institution or to function on its behalf, including marketing the institution's own products or services or those offered jointly by the institution and another financial institution. The exception is permitted only if the financial institution provides an initial notice of these arrangements and by contract prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information for other than the specified purposes. However, if the service or function is covered by the exceptions in section 14 or 15 (discussed below), the financial institution does not have to comply with the disclosure and confidentiality requirements of section 13.
- Section 14: As necessary to effect, administer, or enforce a transaction that a consumer requests or authorizes, or under certain other circumstances relating to existing relationships with customers. Disclosures under this exception could be in connection with the audit of credit information, administration of a rewards program, or provision of an account statement.
- Section 15: For specified other disclosures that a financial institution normally makes, such as to protect against or prevent actual or potential fraud; to the financial institution's attorneys, accountants, and auditors; or to comply with applicable legal requirements, such as the disclosure of information to regulators.

Consumer and Customer:

The distinction between consumers and customers is significant because financial institutions have additional disclosure duties with respect to customers. Under the regulation, all customers are consumers, but not all consumers are customers.

A “consumer” is an individual, or that individual's legal representative, who obtains or has obtained a financial product or service from a financial institution that is to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

A “financial service” includes, among other things, a financial institution's evaluation or brokerage of information that the institution collects in connection with a request or an application from a consumer for a financial product or service. For example, a financial service includes a lender's evaluation of an application for a consumer loan or for opening a deposit account even if the application is ultimately rejected or withdrawn.

Consumers who are not customers are entitled to an initial privacy and opt out notice before the financial institution shares nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties outside of the exceptions in sections 13, 14, and 15. Consumers who are not customers are entitled to an initial privacy notice before the financial institution shares nonpublic personal information with a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in section 13. Under the exception in section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf, including use under an exception in sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If a financial institution complies with these requirements, it is not required to provide an opt out notice.

A “customer” is a consumer who has a “customer relationship” with a financial institution. A “customer relationship” is a continuing relationship between a consumer and a financial institution under which the institution provides one or more financial products or services to the consumer that are to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

- For example, a customer relationship may be established when a consumer engages in one of the following activities with a financial institution:
 - maintains a deposit or investment account;
 - obtains a loan;
 - enters into a lease of personal property; or
 - obtains financial, investment, or economic advisory services for a fee.

Customers are entitled to initial and annual privacy notices regardless of the information disclosure practices of their financial institution unless an exception to the annual privacy notice requirement applies.

There is a special rule for loans. When a financial institution sells the servicing rights to a loan to another financial institution, the customer relationship transfers with the servicing rights. However, any information on the borrower retained by the institution that sells the servicing rights must be accorded the protections due any consumer.

- Note that isolated transactions alone will not cause a consumer to be treated as a customer. For example, if an individual purchases a bank check from a financial institution where the person has no account, the individual will be a consumer but not a customer of that institution because he or she has not established a customer relationship. Likewise, if an individual uses the ATM of a financial institution where the individual has no account, even repeatedly, the individual will be a consumer, but not a customer of that institution.

Financial Institution Duties

The regulation establishes specific duties and limitations for a financial institution based on its activities. Financial institutions that intend to disclose nonpublic personal information outside the exceptions in sections 13, 14, and 15 will have to provide opt out rights to their customers and to consumers who are not customers. All financial institutions have an obligation to provide initial and annual notices of their privacy policies and practices to their customers (unless an exception to the annual privacy notice requirement applies) and to provide an initial notice to consumers who are not customers before disclosing nonpublic personal information to a nonaffiliated third party other than under sections 14 and 15. All financial institutions must abide by the regulatory limits on the disclosure of account numbers to nonaffiliated third parties and on the redisclosure and reuse of nonpublic personal information received from nonaffiliated financial institutions.

A brief summary of financial institution duties and limitations appears below. A more complete explanation of each appears in the regulation.

Notice and Opt Out Duties to Consumers:

Before a financial institution discloses nonpublic personal information about any of its consumers to a nonaffiliated third party, and an exception in section 14 or 15 does not apply, then the financial institution must provide to the consumer:

- an initial notice of its privacy policies and practices;
- an opt out notice (including, among other things, a reasonable means to opt out); and
- a reasonable opportunity, before the financial institution discloses the information to the nonaffiliated third party, to opt out.

Before a financial institution discloses nonpublic personal information about a consumer to a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in section 13, the financial institution must provide to the consumer an initial notice of its privacy policies and practices. Under the exception in section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf, including use under an exception in sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If a financial institution complies with these requirements, it is not required to provide an opt out notice.

The financial institution may not disclose any nonpublic personal information to nonaffiliated third parties except under the enumerated exceptions unless these notices have been provided and the consumer has not opted out (where applicable). Additionally, the institution must provide a revised notice before the financial institution begins to share a new category of nonpublic personal information or shares information with a new category of nonaffiliated third party in a manner that was not described in the previous notice.

Note that a financial institution need not comply with the initial and opt-out notice requirements for consumers who are not customers if the institution limits disclosure of nonpublic personal information to the exceptions in sections 14 and 15. A financial institution that discloses nonpublic personal information about a consumer to a nonaffiliated third party under the exception in section 13 must provide an initial notice. Under the exception in section 13, the financial institution must also enter into a contractual agreement with the third party that prohibits the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf, including use under an exception in sections 14 or 15 in the ordinary course of business to carry out those services or functions. If these requirements are met, the financial institution is not required to provide an opt out notice.

Notice Duties to Customers:

In addition to the duties described above, there are several duties unique to customers. In particular, regardless of whether the institution discloses or intends to disclose nonpublic personal information, a financial institution must provide notice to its customers of its privacy policies and practices at various times.

- A financial institution must provide an initial notice of its privacy policies and practices to each customer, not later than the time a customer relationship is established. Section 4(e) of the regulation describes the exceptional cases in which delivery of the notice is allowed subsequent to the establishment of the customer relationship.
- A financial institution must provide an annual notice at least once in any period of 12 consecutive months during the continuation of the customer relationship unless an exception to the annual privacy notice requirement applies.
- Generally, new privacy notices are not required for each new product or service. However, a financial institution must provide a new notice to an existing customer when the customer obtains a new financial product or service from the institution, if the initial or annual notice most recently provided to the customer was not accurate with respect to the new financial product or service.
- When a financial institution does not disclose nonpublic personal information (other than as permitted under section 14 and section 15 exceptions) and does not reserve the right to do so, the institution has the option of providing a simplified notice.

Requirements for Notices

Clear and Conspicuous. Privacy notices must be clear and conspicuous, meaning they must be reasonably understandable and designed to call attention to the nature and significance of the information contained in the notice. The regulation does not prescribe specific methods for making a notice clear and conspicuous, but does provide examples of ways in which to achieve the standard, such as the use of short explanatory sentences or bullet lists, and the use of plain-language headings and easily readable typeface and type size. Privacy notices also must accurately reflect the institution's privacy practices.

Delivery Rules. Privacy notices must be provided so that each recipient can reasonably be expected to receive actual notice in writing, or if the consumer agrees, electronically. To meet this standard, a financial institution could, for example, (1) hand-deliver a printed copy of the notice to its consumers, (2) mail a printed copy of the notice to a consumer's last known address, or (3) for the consumer who conducts transactions electronically, post the notice on the institution's web site and require the consumer to acknowledge receipt of the notice as a necessary step to completing the transaction.

For customers only, a financial institution must provide the initial notice (as well as any annual notice and any revised notice) so that a customer can retain or subsequently access the notice. A written notice satisfies this requirement. For customers who obtain financial products or services electronically, and agree to receive their notices on the institution's web site, the institution may provide the current version of its privacy notice on its web site.

As of October 28, 2014, a financial institution may use an alternative delivery method for providing annual privacy notices to customers through posting the annual notices on their web sites if: (1) no opt out rights are triggered by the financial institution's information sharing practices under GLBA or under FCRA section 603, and opt out notices required by FCRA section 624 and Subpart C of Regulation V have previously been provided, if applicable, or the annual privacy notice is not the only notice provided to satisfy those requirements; (2) certain information included in the annual privacy notice has not changed since the previous notice; and (3) the financial institution uses the model form provided in the regulation as its annual privacy notice. In order to use this alternative delivery method, an institution must: (1) insert a clear and conspicuous statement at least once per year on an account statement, coupon book, or a notice or disclosure the institution issues under any provision of law that informs customers that the annual privacy notice is available on the institution's web site, that the institution will mail the notice to customers who request it by calling a specific telephone number, and that the notice has not changed; (2) continuously post the current privacy notice in a clear and conspicuous manner on a page on its web site, on which the only content is the privacy notice, without requiring the customer to provide any information such as a login name or password or agree to any conditions to access the web site; and (3) mail its current privacy notice to those customers who request it by telephone within ten calendar days of the request.

As of December 4, 2015, pursuant to the FAST Act's GLBA amendment, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P section 1016.13) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P sections 1016.14 and .15) or regulations prescribed under GLBA section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA section 503. An institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

Notice Content. A privacy notice must contain specific disclosures. However, a financial institution may provide to consumers who are not also customers a "short form" initial notice together with an opt out notice stating that the institution's privacy notice is available upon request and explaining a reasonable means for the consumer to obtain it. The following is a list of disclosures regarding nonpublic personal information that institutions must provide in their privacy notices, as applicable:

1. categories of information collected;
2. categories of information disclosed;
3. categories of affiliates and nonaffiliated third parties to whom the institution may disclose information;
4. policies and practices with respect to the treatment of former customers' information;
5. categories of information disclosed to nonaffiliated third parties that perform services for the institution or functions on the institution's behalf and categories of third parties with whom the institution has contracted (Section 13);
6. an explanation of the opt out right and methods for opting out;
7. any opt out notices that the institution must provide under the FCRA with respect to affiliate information sharing;
8. policies and practices for protecting the security and confidentiality of information; and
9. a statement that the institution makes disclosures to other nonaffiliated third parties for everyday business purposes or as permitted by law (Sections 14 and 15).

Model Privacy Form. The Appendix to the regulation contains the model privacy form. A financial institution can use the model form to obtain a "safe harbor" for compliance with the content requirements for notifying consumers of its information-sharing practices and their right to opt out of certain sharing practices. To obtain the safe harbor, the institution must provide a model form in accordance with the instructions set forth in the Appendix of the regulation. Additionally, institutions using the alternative delivery method for providing annual privacy notices to customers must use the model form.

Limitations on Disclosure of Account Numbers (section 12):

A financial institution must not disclose an account number or similar form of access number or access code for a credit card, deposit, or transaction account to any nonaffiliated third party (other than a consumer reporting agency) for use in telemarketing, direct mail marketing, or other marketing through electronic mail to the consumer.

The disclosure of encrypted account numbers without an accompanying means of decryption, however, is not subject to this prohibition. The regulation also expressly allows disclosures by a financial institution to its agent to market the institution's own products or services (although the financial institution must not authorize the agent to directly initiate charges to the customer's account). The regulation also does not bar a financial institution from disclosing account numbers to participants in private-label or affinity card programs, if the participants are identified to the customer when the customer enters the program.

Redisclosure and Reuse Limitations on Nonpublic Personal Information Received (section 11):

If a financial institution receives nonpublic personal information from a nonaffiliated financial institution, its disclosure and use of the information is limited.

- For nonpublic personal information received under a section 14 or 15 exception, the financial institution is limited to:
 - Disclosing the information to the affiliates of the financial institution from which it received the information;
 - Disclosing the information to its own affiliates, who may, in turn, disclose and use the information only to the extent that the financial institution can do so; and
 - Disclosing and using the information pursuant to a section 14 or 15 exception (for example, an institution receiving information for account processing could disclose the information to its auditors).
- For nonpublic personal information received other than under a section 14 or 15 exception, the recipient's use of the information is unlimited, but its disclosure of the information is limited to:

- Disclosing the information to the affiliates of the financial institution from which it received the information;
- Disclosing the information to its own affiliates, who may, in turn disclose the information only to the extent that the financial institution can do so; and
- Disclosing the information to any other person, if the disclosure would be lawful if made directly to that person by the financial institution from which it received the information. For example, an institution that received a customer list from another financial institution could disclose the list in accordance with the privacy policy of the financial institution that provided the list, subject to any opt out election or revocation by the consumers on the list, and in accordance with appropriate exceptions under sections 14 and 15.

Other Matters

Fair Credit Reporting Act

The regulation does not modify, limit, or supersede the operation of the FCRA.

State Law

The regulation does not supersede, alter, or affect any state statute, regulation, order, or interpretation, except to the extent that it is inconsistent with the regulation. A state statute, regulation, order, or interpretation is consistent with the regulation if the protection it affords any consumer is greater than the protection provided under the regulation, as determined by the CFPB, on its own motion or upon the petition of any interested party, after consultation with the agency or authority with jurisdiction under section 505(a) of GLBA over either the person who initiated the complaint or that is the subject of the complaint.

Guidelines Regarding Protecting Customer Information

The regulation requires a financial institution to disclose its policies and practices for protecting the confidentiality, security, and integrity of nonpublic personal information about consumers (whether or not they are customers). The disclosure need not describe these policies and practices in detail, but instead may describe in general terms who is authorized to have access to the information and whether the institution has security practices and procedures in place to ensure the confidentiality of the information in accordance with the institution's policies.

The four federal banking agencies published guidelines, pursuant to section 501(b) of GLBA, that address steps a financial institution should take in order to protect customer information. The guidelines relate only to information about customers, rather than all consumers. Compliance examiners should consider the findings of a 501(b) inspection during the compliance examination of a financial institution for purposes of evaluating the accuracy of the institution's disclosure regarding information security.

Examination Objectives

1. To assess the quality of a financial institution's compliance management policies, procedures, and internal controls for implementing the regulation, specifically ensuring consistency between what the financial institution tells consumers in its notices about its policies and practices and what it actually does.
2. To determine the reliance that can be placed on a financial institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls for monitoring the institution's compliance with the regulation.
3. To determine a financial institution's compliance with the regulation, specifically in meeting the following requirements:
 - Providing to customers notices of its privacy policies and practices that are timely, accurate, clear and conspicuous, and delivered so that each customer can reasonably be expected to receive actual notice;
 - Disclosing nonpublic personal information to nonaffiliated third parties, other than under an exception, after first meeting the applicable requirements for giving consumers notice and the right to opt out;
 - Appropriately honoring consumer opt out directions; Lawfully using or disclosing nonpublic personal information received from a nonaffiliated financial institution; and Disclosing account numbers only according to the limits in the regulation.
4. To initiate effective corrective actions when violations of law are identified, or when policies, procedures, or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures¹⁰

- A. Through discussions with management and review of available information, identify the institution's information sharing practices (and changes to those practices) with affiliates and nonaffiliated third parties; how it treats nonpublic personal information; and how it administers opt-outs. Consider the following as appropriate:

¹⁰ These reflect the interagency examination procedures in their entirety.

VIII. Privacy — GLBA

1. Notices (initial, annual, revised, opt out, short-form, and simplified);
 2. Institutional privacy policies, procedures, and internal controls, including those to:
 - Process requests for nonpublic personal information, including requests for aggregated information;
 - Deliver notices to consumers;
 - Manage consumer opt out directions (e.g., designating files, allowing a reasonable time to opt out, providing new opt out and privacy notices when necessary, receiving opt out directions, handling joint account holders);
 - Prevent the unlawful disclosure and use of the information received from nonaffiliated financial institutions; and prevent the unlawful disclosure of account numbers;
 3. Information sharing agreements between the institution and affiliates and service agreements or contracts between the institution and nonaffiliated third parties either to obtain or provide information or services;
 4. Complaint logs, telemarketing scripts, and any other information obtained from nonaffiliated third parties (NOTE: review telemarketing scripts to determine whether the contractual terms set forth under section 13 are met and whether the institution is disclosing account number information in violation of section 12);
 5. Categories of nonpublic personal information collected from or about consumers in obtaining a financial product or service (e.g., in the application process for deposit, loan, or investment products; for an over-the-counter purchase of a bank check; from E-banking products or services, including information collected electronically through Internet cookies; or through ATM transactions);
 6. Categories of nonpublic personal information shared with, or received from, each nonaffiliated third party;
 7. Consumer complaints regarding the treatment of nonpublic personal information, including those received electronically;
 8. Records that reflect the bank's categorization of its information sharing practices under Sections 13, 14, 15, and outside of these exceptions; and
 9. Results of a 501(b) inspection (used to determine the accuracy of the institution's privacy disclosures regarding information security).
- B. Use the information gathered from step A to work through the "Privacy Notice and Opt Out Decision Tree" (Attachment A). Identify which module(s) of procedures is (are) applicable.
- C. Use the information gathered from step A to work through the Redisclosure and Reuse and Account Number Sharing Decision Trees, as necessary (Attachments B and C). Identify which module is applicable.
- D. Determine the adequacy of the financial institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls to ensure compliance with the regulation as applicable. Consider the following:
1. Sufficiency of internal policies, procedures, and internal controls, including review of new products and services and controls over servicing arrangements and marketing arrangements;
 2. Effectiveness of management information systems, including the use of technology for monitoring, exception reports, and standardization of forms and procedures;
 3. Frequency and effectiveness of monitoring procedures;
 4. Adequacy and regularity of the institution's training program;
 5. Suitability of the compliance audit program for ensuring that:
 - The procedures address all regulatory provisions as applicable;
 - The work is accurate and comprehensive with respect to the institution's information sharing practices;
 - The frequency is appropriate;
 - Conclusions are appropriately reached and presented to responsible parties;
 - Steps are taken to correct deficiencies and to follow-up on previously identified deficiencies; and
 6. Knowledge level of management and personnel.
- E. Ascertain areas of risk associated with the financial institution's sharing practices (especially those within Section 13 and those that fall outside of the exceptions) and any weaknesses found within the compliance management program. Keep in mind any outstanding deficiencies identified in the audit for follow-up when completing the modules.
- F. Based on the results of the foregoing initial procedures and discussions with management, determine which procedures if any should be completed in the applicable module, focusing on areas of particular risk. The selection of procedures to be employed depends upon the adequacy of the institution's compliance management system and level of risk identified. Each module contains a series of general instructions to verify compliance, cross-referenced to cites within the regulation. Additionally, there are cross-references to a more comprehensive checklist, which the examiner may use if needed to evaluate compliance in more detail.

- G. Evaluate any additional information or documentation discovered during the course of the examination according to these procedures. Note that this may reveal new or different sharing practices necessitating reapplication of the Decision Trees and completion of additional or different modules.
- H. Formulate conclusions.

Summarize all findings.

- For violation(s) noted, determine the cause by identifying weaknesses in internal controls, compliance review, training, management oversight, or other areas.
- Identify action needed to correct violations and to address weaknesses in the institution's compliance system, as appropriate.
- Discuss findings with management and obtain a commitment for corrective action.

VIII. Privacy — GLBA

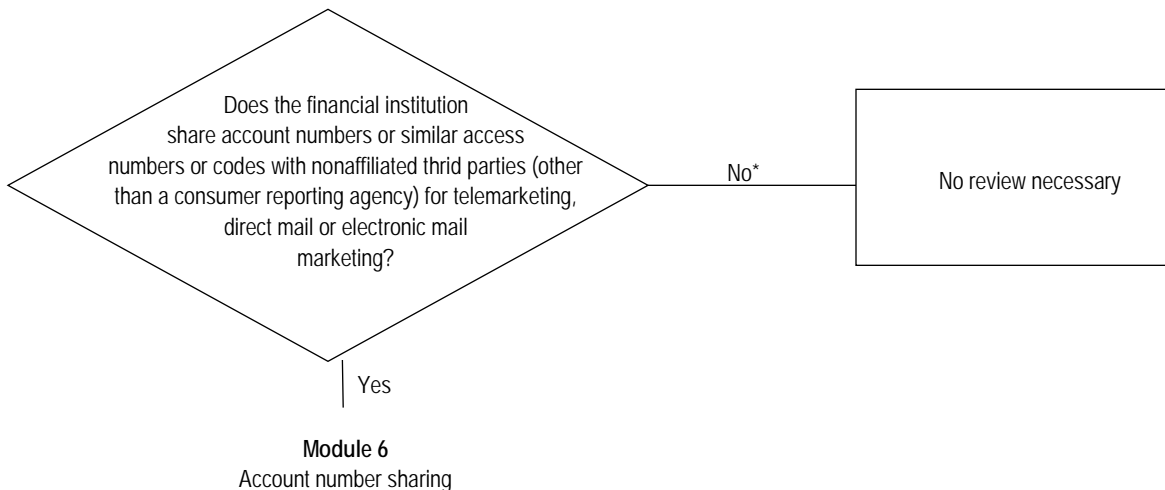

Privacy Notice and Opt Out Decision Tree

RedisDisclosure and Reuse of Nonpublic Personal Information Received from Nonaffiliated Financial Institutions Decision Tree (Sections 11(a) and 11(b))

Account Number Sharing Decision Tree (Section 12)

*This may include sharing of encrypted account numbers but not the decryption key.

Module 1

Sharing nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties under Sections 14 and/or 15 and outside of the exceptions (with or without also sharing under Section 13).

NOTE: Financial institutions whose practices fall within this category engage in the most expansive degree of information sharing permissible. Consequently, these institutions are held to the most comprehensive compliance standards imposed by the regulation.

NOTE: As of December 4, 2015, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its applicable customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P section 1016.13) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P sections 1016.14 and .15) or regulations prescribed under GLBA section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA section 503. A financial institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

A. Disclosure of Nonpublic Personal Information

1. Select a sample of third party relationships with nonaffiliated third parties and obtain a sample of information shared between the institution and the third party both inside and outside of the exceptions. The sample should include a cross-section of relationships but should emphasize those that are higher risk in nature as determined by the initial procedures. Perform the following comparisons to evaluate the financial institution's compliance with disclosure limitations.
 - a. Compare the categories of information shared and with whom the information was shared to those stated in the privacy notice and verify that what the institution tells consumers (both customers and those who are not customers) in its notices about its policies and practices in this regard and what the institution actually does are consistent. (Sections 6,10)
 - b. Compare the information shared to a sample of opt out directions and verify that only nonpublic personal information covered under the exceptions or from consumers (customers and those who are not customers) who chose not to opt out is shared (Section 10).
2. If the financial institution also shares information under Section 13, obtain and review contracts with nonaffiliated third parties that perform services for the financial institution not covered by the exceptions in section 14 or 15. Determine whether the contracts prohibit the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to carry out the purposes for which the information was disclosed (Section 13(a))

B. Presentation, Content, and Delivery of Privacy Notices

1. Review the financial institution's initial, annual and revised notices, as well as any short-form notices that the institution may use for consumers who are not customers. Determine whether or not these notices:
 - a. Are clear and conspicuous (Sections 3(b), 4(a), 5(a)(1), 8(a)(1));
 - b. Accurately reflect the institution's policies and practices. (Sections 4(a), 5(a)(1), 8(a)(1))
NOTE: this includes policies and practices disclosed in the notices that exceed regulatory requirements; and
 - c. Include, and adequately describe, all required items of information and contain examples as applicable (Section 6). Note that if the institution shares under nonpublic personal information under Section 13 the notice provisions for that section shall also apply.
 - d. If the model privacy form is used, determine that it reflects the institution's policies and practices. For institutions seeking a safe harbor for compliance with the content requirements of the regulation, verify that the notice has the proper content and is in the proper format as specified in the Appendix A of the regulation.
2. Through discussions with management, review of the institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls and a sample of electronic or written consumer records where available, determine if the institution has adequate policies, procedures, and internal controls in place to provide notices to consumers, as appropriate. Assess the following:
Timeliness of delivery (Sections 4(a), 7(c), 8(a)); and
 - a. Reasonableness of the method of delivery (e.g., by hand; by mail; electronically, if the consumer agrees; or as a necessary step of a transaction) (Section 9).
 - b. For customers only, review the timeliness of delivery (Sections 4(d), 4(e), 5(a)), means of delivery of annual notice (Section 9(c)), and accessibility of or ability to retain the notice (Section 9(e)).

C. Opt Out Right

1. Review the financial institution's opt out notices. An opt out notice may be combined with the institution's privacy notices. Regardless, determine whether the opt out notices:

- a. Are clear and conspicuous (Sections 3(b) and 7(a)(1));
 - b. Accurately explain the right to opt out (Section 7(a)(1));
 - c. Include and adequately describe the three required items of information (the institution’s policy regarding disclosure of nonpublic personal information, the consumer’s opt out right, and the means to opt out) (Section 7(a)(1)); and
 - d. Describe how the institution treats joint relationships, as applicable (Section 7(d)).
2. Through discussions with management, review of the institution’s policies, procedures, and internal controls and a sample of electronic or written consumer records where available, determine if the institution has adequate policies, procedures, and internal controls in place to provide notices to consumers, as appropriate. Assess the following:
- a. Timeliness of delivery (Section 10(a)(1));
 - b. Reasonableness of the method of delivery (e.g., by hand; by mail; electronically, if the consumer agrees; or as a necessary step of a transaction) (Section 9).
 - c. Reasonableness of the opportunity to opt out (the time allowed to and the means by which the consumer may opt out) (Sections 10(a)(1)(iii), 10(a)(3)); and
 - d. Adequacy of procedures to implement and track the status of a consumer’s (customers and those who are not customers) opt out direction, including those of former customers (Section 7(e), (f), (g)).

VIII. Privacy — GLBA

Module 2

Sharing nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties under Sections 13, and 14 and/or 15 but not outside of these exceptions

NOTE: As of December 4, 2015, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its applicable customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P section 1016.13) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P sections 1016.14 and .15) or regulations prescribed under GLBA section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA section 503. A financial institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

A. Disclosure of Nonpublic Personal Information

1. Select a sample of third party relationships with nonaffiliated third parties and obtain a sample of information shared between the institution and the third party. The sample should include a cross-section of relationships but should emphasize those that are higher risk in nature as determined by the initial procedures. Perform the following comparisons to evaluate the financial institution's compliance with disclosure limitations.
 - a. Compare the information shared and with whom the information was shared to ensure that the institution accurately categorized its information sharing practices and is not sharing nonpublic personal information outside the exceptions. (Sections 13, 14, 15)
 - b. Compare the categories of information shared and with whom the information was shared to those stated in the privacy notice and verify that what the institution tells consumers in its notices about its policies and practices in this regard and what the institution actually does are consistent. (Sections 10, 6)
 - c. If the model privacy form is used, determine that it reflects the institution's policies and practices. For institutions seeking a safe harbor for compliance with the content requirements of the regulation, verify that the notice has the proper content and is in the proper format as specified in the Appendix of the regulation.
2. Review contracts with nonaffiliated third parties that perform services for the financial institution not covered by the exceptions in section 14 or 15. Determine whether the contracts adequately prohibit the third party from disclosing or using the information other than to carry out the purposes for which the information was disclosed (Section 13(a)).

B. Presentation, Content, and Delivery of Privacy Notices

1. Review the financial institution's initial and annual privacy notices. Determine whether or not they:
 - a. Are clear and conspicuous (Sections 3(b), 4(a), 5(a)(1));
 - b. Accurately reflect the institution's policies and practices (Sections 4(a), 5(a)(1)). Note, this includes policies and practices disclosed in the notices that exceed regulatory requirements; and
 - c. Include, and adequately describe, all required items of information and contain examples as applicable. (Sections 6, 13)
2. Through discussions with management, review of the institution's policies, procedures, and internal controls and a sample of electronic or written consumer records where available, determine if the institution has adequate policies, procedures, and internal controls in place to provide notices to consumers, as appropriate. Assess the following:
 - a. Timeliness of delivery (Section 4(a)); and
 - b. Reasonableness of the method of delivery (e.g., by hand; by mail; electronically, if the consumer agrees; as a necessary step of a transaction; or pursuant to the alternative delivery method) (Section 9).
 - c. For customers only, review the timeliness of delivery (Sections 4(d), 4(e), and 5(a)), means of delivery of annual notice (Section 9(c)), and accessibility of or ability to retain the notice (Section 9(e)).

C. Checklist Cross References—Module 2

Module 3

Sharing nonpublic personal information with nonaffiliated third parties only under Sections 14 and/or 15.

NOTE: This module applies only to customers.

NOTE: As of December 4, 2015, a financial institution is not required to provide an annual privacy notice to its applicable customers if it: (1) solely shares nonpublic personal information in accordance with the provisions of GLBA sections 502(b)(2) (corresponding to Regulation P section 1016.13) or 502(e) (corresponding to Regulation P sections 1016.14 and .15) or regulations prescribed under GLBA section 504(b); and (2) has not changed its policies and practices with regard to disclosing nonpublic personal information since its most recent disclosure to its customers that was made in accordance with GLBA section 503. A financial institution that at any time fails to comply with either of the criteria is not eligible for the exception and is required to provide an annual privacy notice to its customers.

A. Disclosure of Nonpublic Personal Information

1. Select a sample of third party relationships with nonaffiliated third parties and obtain a sample of information shared between the financial institution and the third party.
 - a. Compare the information shared and with whom the information was shared to ensure that the institution accurately states its information sharing practices and is not sharing nonpublic personal information outside the exceptions.

B. Presentation, Content, and Delivery of Privacy Notices

1. Obtain and review the financial institution’s initial and annual notices, as well as any simplified notice that the institution may use. Children’s Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA)

Introduction

COPPA was enacted to prohibit unfair and deceptive acts or practices in connection with the collection, use, or disclosure of personal information from children under the age of 13 in an online environment. Generally, the Act requires operators of Web sites or online services directed to children, or that have actual knowledge that they are collecting or maintaining personal information from children online, to provide certain notices and obtain parental consent to collect, use, or disclose information about children. The FDIC is granted enforcement authority under the Act. Federal Trade Commission regulations (16 CFR 312) that implement COPPA became effective April 21, 2000.

Examiners should consider conducting a compliance review using these procedures only when an institution is operating a Web site or online service directed to children that collects or maintains personal information about children, or operating a general audience Web site or online service and knowingly collecting or maintaining personal information from a child online.

Examination Objectives

1. To determine that reliance can be placed on a financial institution’s compliance management policies, internal controls, and procedures for ensuring the institution’s compliance with the COPPA regulation.
2. To require effective corrective actions when violations of law are identified, or when policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the institution operates a Web site or online service directed to children that collects or maintains personal information about them, or operates a general audience Web site or online service and knowingly collects or maintains personal information from a child online.
2. If the financial institution does not operate a Web site or online service directed to children that collects or maintains personal information about them, and does not knowingly collect or maintain personal information from a child online, it is not subject to COPPA. No further examination is necessary.
3. If the financial institution does operate a Web site or online service directed to children that collects or maintains personal information about them, or knowingly collects or maintains personal information from a child online, it is subject to COPPA. Continue with step 4 below.

4. Determine whether the institution participates in an FTC-approved, self-regulatory program. If it does, no further examination is necessary. If it does not participate in such a program, continue with the procedures below.
5. Assess the quality of the institution’s compliance risk management by determining whether procedures and controls ensure compliance with COPPA. Consider the following, as they pertain to COPPA:
 - a. Knowledge level of management and staff;
 - b. Board of Directors adoption, and management implementation, of policies and procedures;
 - c. Adequacy of the institution’s training program;
 - d. Frequency of compliance monitoring;
 - e. Effectiveness of the compliance audit program to detect and correct compliance deficiencies; and
 - f. Appropriate and timely handling of consumer complaints.
6. Identify any weaknesses in compliance management policies, procedures, or controls, and the areas and level of risk associated with the institution’s Web site or online service subject to COPPA.
7. Formulate conclusions.
 - a. Summarize all findings, and describe the general assessment of the quality of the institution’s compliance management program for implementing COPPA.
 - b. Discuss findings with management and obtain a commitment for corrective action, as necessary.

Right to Financial Privacy Act

Introduction

The 1978 Right to Financial Privacy Act (RFPA) establishes specific procedures that federal government authorities must follow in order to obtain information from a financial institution about a customer's financial records. Generally, these requirements include obtaining subpoenas, notifying the customer of the request, and providing the customer with an opportunity to object. The Act imposes related limitations and duties on financial institutions prior to the release of information requested by federal authorities. For purposes of RFPA, a customer is defined as any person or representative of that person who utilized or is utilizing any service of a financial institution, or for whom a financial institution is acting or has acted as a fiduciary, in relation to an account maintained in the person's name. "Person" is defined by the RFPA as an individual or a partnership of five or few individuals. Therefore, restrictions in the Act do not apply to the financial records of corporations or partnerships with six or more partners. The RFPA has been amended several times, most recently in 2001, to permit greater access without customer notice to customer information requested for criminal law enforcement purposes and for certain intelligence activities.

Examination Objective

The objective of the examination is to ensure that the financial institution has procedures in place to ensure compliance with the RFPA, and to test whether its practices conform to RFPA.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine whether the financial institution has established procedures and internal controls for fulfilling requests by government authorities for a customer's financial records to ensure that all requests are handled in compliance with the Act. (§ 1100)
2. Determine whether the financial institution has received any requests covered by the RFPA for a customer's financial records since the last compliance examination. (1103, 1105, 1106, 1107, 1108, 1114)

NOTE: RFPA does not apply to prohibit or limit the FDIC's disclosure of financial information to state authorities, including banking, law enforcement and other state agencies such as appraisal certification boards.

NOTE: RFPA does not prohibit the FDIC from providing DOJ with "raw" CRA census-tract data from banks' annual CRA reports even if DOJ used the CRA data to assist in enforcing anti-trust or other public laws. The FDIC should furnish DOJ with "raw" CRA data only in conjunction or consultation with the other federal banking agencies.

If the financial institution has received such requests since the last compliance examination:

3. Determine whether the financial institution provided a customer's financial records to government authorities only after receiving the proper written certification. (1105, 1106, 1107, 1108)
4. Determine whether internal procedures require that the financial institution refrain from requiring a customer's authorization for disclosure of financial records as a condition of doing business. (1103(d)(2) and 1104(b))
5. Determine whether the financial institution keeps appropriate records of instances when a customer's records are disclosed to the government authority upon authorization by the customer, including a copy of the request and the identity of the government authority. (1104(c) and 1113(h)(6))
6. Determine whether the financial institution provides the customer a copy of the records upon request (unless a court order has been obtained blocking such access). (1104(c) and 1113(h)(6))
7. Determine whether the financial institution maintains appropriate records of all disclosures of a customer's records made to a government authority in connection with a government loan, guaranty, or insurance program.
8. Determine whether the financial institution allows a customer to examine these records upon request. (1113(h)(6))

Controlling the Assault of Non-Solicited Pornography and Marketing Act of 2003

Introduction

Under Controlling the Assault of Non-Solicited Pornography and Marketing Act of 2003 (CAN-SPAM or Act)¹, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) is charged with issuing regulations for implementing CAN-SPAM.² The FTC has issued regulations, effective as of March 28, 2005, that provide criteria to determine the primary purpose of electronic mail (e-mail) messages. The FTC has also issued regulations that contain criteria pertaining to warning labels on sexually oriented materials, which became effective as of May 19, 2004.

The goals of the act are to:

- Reduce spam and unsolicited pornography by prohibiting senders of unsolicited commercial e-mail messages from disguising the source and content of their messages.
- Give consumers the choice to cease receiving a sender's unsolicited commercial e-mail messages.

Compliance authority was expressly granted to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Office of Thrift Supervision to be enforced under Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. The National Credit Union Association was granted authority through the Federal Credit Union Act 12 USC 1751.

The FTC has researched and determined that a "Do Not Spam" registry (similar to the highly effective "Do Not Call" registry) would not be effective or practicable at this time.

Key Definitions

"Affirmative Consent" (usage: commercial e-mail messages)

- The recipient expressly consented to receive the message, either in response to a clear and conspicuous request for such consent or at the recipient's own initiative; and
- If the message is from a party other than the party to which the recipient communicated such consent, the recipient was given clear and conspicuous notice at the time the consent was communicated that the recipient's e-mail address could be transferred to such other party for the purpose of initiating commercial e-mail messages.

² Final rules relating to the established criteria for determining when the primary purpose of an e-mail message is commercial were published in the Federal Register on January 19, 2005 (70 FR 3110). Final rules relating to governing the labeling of commercial e-mail containing sexually oriented material was published in the Federal Register on April 19, 2004 (69 FR 21024).

"Commercial E-mail Message" Any e-mail message the primary purpose of which is to advertise or promote for a commercial purpose, a commercial product or service (including content on the Internet). An e-mail message would not be considered to be a commercial e-mail message solely because such message includes a reference to a commercial entity that serves to identify the sender or a reference or link to an Internet Web site operated for a commercial purpose.

"Dictionary Attacks" Obtaining e-mail addresses by using an automated means that generates possible e-mail addresses by combining names, letters, or numbers into numerous permutations.

"Harvesting" Obtaining e-mail addresses using an automated means from an Internet Web site or proprietary online service operated by another person, where such service/person, at the time the address was obtained, had provided a notice stating that the operator of such Web site or online service would not give, sell, or otherwise transfer electronic addresses.

"Header Information" The source, destination, and routing information attached to the beginning of an e-mail message, including the originating domain name and originating e-mail address.

"Hijacking" The use of automated means to register for multiple e-mail accounts or online user accounts from which to transmit, or enable another person to transmit, a commercial e-mail message that is unlawful.

"Initiate" To originate, transmit or to procure the origination or transmission of such message but shall not include actions that constitute routine conveyance. For purposes of the Act, more than one person may be considered to have initiated the same message.

"Primary Purpose" The FTC's regulations provide further clarification regarding determination of whether an e-mail message has "commercial" promotion as its primary purpose. [16 CFR 316.3]

- (1) The primary purpose of an e-mail message will be deemed to be commercial if it contains only the commercial advertisement or promotion of a commercial product or service (commercial content);
- (2) The primary purpose of an e-mail message will be deemed to be commercial if it contains both commercial content and "transactional or relationship" content (see below for definition) if either:
 - a recipient reasonably interpreting the subject line of the e-mail message would likely conclude that the message contains commercial content; or

VIII. Privacy — CAN-SPAM

- the e-mail message’s “transactional or relationship” content does not appear in whole or substantial part at the beginning of the body of the message.
- (3) The primary purpose of an e-mail message will be deemed to be commercial if it contains both commercial content as well as content that is not transactional or relationship content if a recipient reasonably interpreting either:
- the subject line of the e-mail message would likely conclude that the message contains commercial content; or
 - the body of the message would likely conclude that the primary purpose of the message is commercial.
- (4) The primary purpose of an e-mail message will be deemed to be transactional or relationship (non-commercial) if it contains only “transactional or relationship” content.

“Protected Computer” A computer:

- Exclusively for the use of a financial institution or the United States government, or, in the case of a computer not exclusively for such use, used by or for a financial institution or the United States government and the conduct constituting the offense affects that use by or for the financial institution or the government; or
- Which is used in interstate or foreign commerce or communication.

“Recipient” An authorized user of the electronic mail address to which the message was sent or delivered.

“Sender” A person who initiates an e-mail message and whose product, service, or Internet Web site is advertised or promoted by the message.

“Sexually Oriented Material” Any material that depicts sexually explicit conduct unless the depiction constitutes a small and insignificant part of the whole.

“Transactional or Relationship E-mail Message” An e-mail message with the primary purpose of facilitating, completing or confirming a commercial transaction that the recipient had previously agreed to enter into; to provide warranty, product recall, or safety or security information; or subscription, membership, account, loan, or other information relating to an ongoing purchase or use.

General Requirements of the CAN-SPAM Statute:

- Prohibits the use of false or misleading transmission information [§7704(a)(1)] such as:
 - False or misleading header information;
 - A “from” line that does not accurately identify any person who initiated the message; and
 - Inaccurate or misleading identification of a protected computer used to initiate the message because the person initiating the message knowingly uses another protected computer to relay or retransmit the message for purposes of disguising its origin.

- Prohibits the use of deceptive subject headings. [§7704(a)(2)]
- Requires a functioning e-mail return address or other Internet-based response mechanism. [§7704(a)(3)]
- Requires that commercial e-mail messages be discontinued within 10 business days after receipt of opt-out notification from recipient. [§7704(a)(4)]
- Requires a clear and conspicuous identification that the message is an advertisement or solicitation; clear and conspicuous notice of the opportunity to decline to receive further commercial e-mail messages from the sender; and a valid physical postal address of the sender. [§7704(a)(5)]
- Prohibits address harvesting (obtaining e-mail addresses using an automated means from an Internet Web site or proprietary online service operated by another person, where such service/person, at the time the address was obtained, had provided a notice stating that the operator of such Web site or online service will not give, sell, or otherwise transfer electronic addresses) and dictionary attacks (obtaining e-mail addresses by using an automated means that generates possible e-mail addresses by combining names, letters, or numbers into numerous permutations). [§7704(b)(1)]
- Prohibits hijacking, the use of automated means to register for multiple e-mail accounts or online user accounts from which to transmit, or enable another person to transmit, a commercial e-mail message that is unlawful. [§7704(b)(2)]
- Prohibits any person from knowingly relaying or retransmitting a commercial e-mail message that is unlawful. [§7704(b)(3)]
- Requires warning labels (in the subject line and within the message body) on commercial e-mail messages containing sexually oriented material. [§7704(d)]
- Prohibits a person from promoting, or allowing the promotion of, that person’s trade or business, or goods, products, property, or services in an unlawful commercial e-mail message. [§7705(a)]

Examination Objectives:

1. Assess the quality of a financial institution’s compliance program for implementing CAN-SPAM by reviewing the appropriate policies and procedures and other internal controls.
2. Determine the reliance that can be placed on a financial institution’s audit or compliance review in monitoring the institution’s compliance with CAN-SPAM.
3. Determine a financial institution’s compliance with CAN-SPAM.

4. Initiate effective corrective actions when violations of law are identified, or when policies or internal controls are deficient.

Examination Procedures

Initial Procedures

1. Through discussions with appropriate management officials, determine whether or not management has considered the applicability of CAN-SPAM and what, if any, steps have been taken to ensure current and future compliance.
2. Through discussions with appropriate management officials, ascertain whether the financial institution is subject to CAN-SPAM by determining whether the financial institution initiates e-mail messages whose primary purpose is “commercial.”

Stop here if the financial institution does not initiate “commercial” electronic mail. The financial institution is not subject to CAN-SPAM, and no further examination for CAN-SPAM is necessary.

3. Determine, through a review of available information, whether the financial institution’s internal controls are adequate to ensure compliance with CAN-SPAM. Consider the following:
 - Organization chart to determine who is responsible for the financial institution’s compliance with CAN-SPAM;
 - Process flow charts to determine how the financial institution’s CAN-SPAM compliance is planned for, evaluated, and achieved;
 - Policies and procedures;
 - Marketing plans that reflect electronic communication strategies; and
 - Internal checklists, worksheets, and other relevant documents.
4. Review applicable audit and compliance review material, including work papers, checklists, and reports, to determine whether:
 - Procedures address CAN-SPAM provisions applicable to the institution;
 - Effective corrective action occurred in response to previously identified deficiencies;
 - Audits and reviews performed were reasonable and accurate;
 - Deficiencies, their causes, and the effective corrective actions are consistently reported to management or the members of the board of directors; and
 - Frequency of the compliance review is satisfactory.
5. Review a sample of complaints to determine whether or not any potential violations of CAN-SPAM exist.

6. Based on the review of complaints that pertain to aspects of CAN-SPAM, revise the scope of examination focusing on the areas of particular risk. The verification procedures to be employed depend upon the adequacy of the institution’s compliance program and level of risk identified.

Verification Procedures

1. Obtain a list of products or services that the financial institution has promoted with e-mail.
2. Obtain a sample of the e-mail messages to determine whether those messages had “commercial” promotion as their primary purpose.
3. Through review of e-mail messages whose primary purpose is “commercial,” verify that the messages comply with the CAN-SPAM provisions:
 - a. Do not use false or misleading transmission information [§7704(a)(1)] such as:
 - False or misleading header information;
 - A “from” line that does not accurately identify any person who initiated the message; and
 - Inaccurate or misleading identification of a protected computer used to initiate the message.
 - b. Do not use deceptive subject headings. [§7704(a)(2)]
 - c. Provide a functioning e-mail return address or other Internet-based response mechanism. [§7704(a)(3)]
 - d. Provide a clear and conspicuous identification that the message is an advertisement or solicitation; clear and conspicuous notice of the opportunity to decline to receive further commercial e-mail messages from the sender; and a valid physical postal address of the sender. [§7704(a)(5)] Note: this provision does not apply to a commercial e-mail message if the recipient has given prior affirmative consent to receipt of the message.
 - e. Do not reflect address harvesting, hijacking, or dictionary attacks. [Section 7704(b)(1, 2)]
 - f. Provide a warning label (in the subject and within the message body) on commercial e-mail messages containing sexually oriented material. [Section 7704(d)]
4. Review any customer requests to opt out of receiving any additional e-mail messages from the institution. [Section 7704(a)(4)] Confirm that there are controls in place to discontinue commercial e-mail messages within 10 days of receipt of opt-out notification.

Conclusions

1. Summarize all findings, supervisory concerns, and regulatory violations.

VIII. Privacy — CAN-SPAM

2. For the violation(s), determine the root cause by identifying weaknesses in internal controls, audit and compliance reviews, training, management oversight, or other factors; also, determine whether the violation(s) are repetitive or systemic.
3. Identify action needed to correct violations and weaknesses in the institution's compliance program.
4. Discuss findings with the institution's management and obtain a commitment for corrective action.
5. Record violations according to agency policy to facilitate analysis and reporting.

Telephone Consumer Protection Act

Introduction and Overview

The Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991 (TCPA) amended the Communications Act of 1934¹ and was enacted to address telephone marketing calls and certain telemarketing practices. The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has regulatory authority under the statute.

In 1992, the FCC adopted rules to implement the TCPA, including the requirement that entities making telephone solicitations institute procedures for maintaining company-specific do-not-call lists.² In 2003, the FCC, in coordination with the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), revised its TCPA rules to establish a national Do-Not-Call registry.³ The national registry is nationwide and covers almost all telemarketers. The FTC administers the registry, which went into effect on October 1, 2003. To reduce the number of hang-up and dead air calls consumers experience, the FCC's TCPA regulations also contained restrictions on the use of autodialers and requirements for transmitting Caller ID information. Subsequently, the Junk Fax Prevention Act of 2005 amended provisions of the TCPA related to unsolicited advertising faxes and became effective on July 9, 2005. In 2010, the TCPA was amended to prohibit manipulation of caller identification information, and was amended again in 2015 to provide an exception for calls to collect a debt owed to or guaranteed by the United States from the prohibitions on autodialed calls or prerecorded calls to cell phones and residential lines. However, the Supreme Court deemed this exception unconstitutional in July 2020.⁴

In 2012, the FCC revised its regulations to require telemarketers to (1) no longer allow telemarketers to use an “established business relationship” to avoid getting consent from consumers, (2) obtain prior express written consent from consumers before making calls with an autodialer or that contain a message made with a prerecorded or artificial voice, and (3) require telemarketers to provide an automated, interactive opt-out mechanism during each of the type of calls mentioned above in “(2)” so that consumers can immediately tell the telemarketer to stop calling.

The FCC revised its regulations twice in 2019 to provide a safe harbor from liability for making calls to reassigned telephone numbers and to eliminate the requirement for an opt-out notice on fax advertisements sent with the recipient's prior express permission or consent. The FCC further revised its regulation in 2021 to implement the Pallone-Thune Telephone Robocall Abuse Criminal Enforcement and Deterrence Act (TRACED Act), in which it codified exemptions for calls to wireless numbers, amended exemptions for artificial or prerecorded voice calls made to residential telephone lines, and included exemptions for calls by financial institutions provided the call is not charged to the called person's plan limits on minutes or texts.⁵

The FCC's TCPA regulations apply without exception to financial institutions, including banks, savings associations, and credit unions engaged in any of the telemarketing activities targeted by the TCPA and the FCC's final rulemaking. Occasionally, the FCC issues declaratory rulings, also referred to as declaratory orders. The declaratory rulings are issued for the purpose of clarifying the interpretation and application of the TCPA and its implementing regulations, usually to resolve uncertainty and terminate controversies, and are authoritative as to the FCC's view on the laws and rules they administer. Therefore, the declaratory rulings are included in the examination procedures in this chapter as reference materials and guidance about how the FCC would interpret the TCPA and its implementing regulations in a given factual scenario. However, when examiners discover TCPA violations, financial institutions should be cited for violations of the TCPA and/or its implementing regulations, not the related FCC declaratory rulings.

Pursuant to section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1818, the FDIC, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency have authority to enforce compliance with any laws or regulations in connection with its regulated banks. This section 8 authority allows the agencies to impose cease and desist orders, restitution, and/or civil money penalties when they discover violations of the TCPA. Moreover, the National Credit Union Administration has supervisory and enforcement authority under the Federal Credit Union Act, 12 U.S.C. § 1786(e) and §1786(k). This authority allows the NCUA to consider instituting civil enforcement actions against credit unions and institution affiliated parties when the agency discovers violations of the TCPA.

VIII. Privacy — Telephone Consumer Protection Act

In this chapter, the use of the words “person” and “entity” includes banks, savings associations, and credit unions, and third parties acting on behalf of those financial institutions.

Key Definitions (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(f))

“Advertisement” means any material advertising the commercial availability or quality of any property, goods, or services.

“Automatic Telephone Dialing System” and “Autodialer” mean equipment which has the capacity to store or produce telephone numbers to be called, using a random or sequential number generator; and to dial such numbers.⁶

“Clear and Conspicuous” means a notice that would be apparent to the reasonable consumer, separate and distinguishable from the advertising copy or other disclosures. With respect to facsimiles and for purposes of notices contained in an unsolicited advertisement⁷, the notice must be placed at either the top or bottom of the facsimile.

“Emergency Purposes” means calls made necessary in any situation affecting the health and safety of consumers.

“Established Business Relationship” for the purposes of telephone solicitations means a prior or existing relationship formed by a voluntary two-way communication between a person or entity and a residential subscriber, with or without an exchange of consideration, on the basis of the subscriber’s purchase or transaction with the entity within the 18 months immediately preceding the date of the telephone call, or on the basis of the subscriber’s inquiry or application regarding products or services offered by the entity within the three months immediately preceding the date of the call, which relationship has not been previously terminated by either party.

- The subscriber’s seller-specific do-not-call request, as discussed under the Company-Specific Do-Not-Call Lists section below,⁸ terminates an established business relationship for purposes of telemarketing and telephone solicitation even if the subscriber continues to do business with the seller.

- The subscriber’s established business relationship with a particular business entity does not extend to affiliated entities unless the subscriber would reasonably expect them to be included given the nature and type of goods or services offered by the affiliate and the identity of the affiliate.

“Established Business Relationship” for purposes of the use of telephone facsimile machine, computer, or other device to send unsolicited advertisements to a telephone facsimile machine on the sending of facsimile advertisements means a prior or existing relationship formed by a voluntary two-way communication between a person or entity and a business or residential subscriber, with or without an exchange of consideration, on the basis of an inquiry, application, purchase, or transaction by the business or residential subscriber regarding products or services offered by such person or entity, which relationship has not been previously terminated by either party.

“Facsimile Broadcaster” means a person or entity that transmits messages to telephone facsimile machines on behalf of another person or entity for a fee.

“Personal Relationship” means any family member, friend, or acquaintance of the telemarketer making the call.

“Prior Express Written Consent” means an agreement, in writing, bearing the signature of the person called that clearly authorizes the seller to deliver or cause to be delivered to the person called advertisements or telemarketing messages using an automatic telephone dialing system or an artificial or prerecorded voice, and the telephone number to which the signatory authorizes such advertisements or telemarketing messages to be delivered.

- The written agreement shall include a clear and conspicuous disclosure informing the person signing that:
 - By executing the agreement, such person authorizes the seller to deliver or cause to be delivered to the signatory telemarketing calls using an automatic telephone dialing any service for which the called party is charged for the call.

- Note: A person will not be liable for violating this prohibition¹³ when the call is placed to a wireless number that has been ported from wireline service and such call is a voice call; not knowingly made to a wireless number; and made within 15 days of the porting of the number from wireline to wireless service, provided the number is not already on the national do-not-call registry or caller's company-specific do-not-call list.

Exceptions to the General Prohibitions¹⁴

No person or entity may initiate, or cause to be initiated, any telephone call that includes or introduces an advertisement or constitutes telemarketing, using an automatic telephone dialing system or an artificial or prerecorded voice, to any of the lines or telephone numbers described above, other than:

- A call made with the prior express written consent of the called party or the prior express consent of the called party when the call is made by or on behalf of a tax-exempt nonprofit organization; or
- A call that delivers a “health care” message made by, or on behalf of, a “covered entity” or its “business associate,” as those terms are defined in the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) Privacy Rule.¹⁵

Prohibitions on Prerecorded Calls to Residential Lines (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(a)(3))

No person or entity may initiate any telephone call to any residential line using an artificial or prerecorded voice to deliver a message without the prior express written consent of the called party, unless the call:

- Is made for emergency purposes;
- Is not made for a commercial purpose;

- Is made for a commercial purpose but does not include or introduce an advertisement or constitute telemarketing;
- Is made by or on behalf of a tax-exempt nonprofit organization; or
- Delivers a “health care” message made by, or on behalf of, a “covered entity” or its “business associate,” as those terms are defined in the HIPAA Privacy Rule.¹⁶

Safe Harbor (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(m))

A person will not be liable for violating the prohibitions under the Prohibition on Autodialed or Prerecorded Calls to Cell Phones, Other Sensitive Numbers section and the Prohibition on Prerecorded Calls to Residential Lines section above¹⁷ by making a call to a number for which the person previously had obtained prior express consent of the called party as required in those same sections¹⁸ but at the time of the call, the number is not assigned to the subscriber to whom it was assigned at the time such prior express consent was obtained if the person, bearing the burden of proof and persuasion, demonstrates that:

- The person, based upon the most recent numbering information reported by telecommunications carriers to the North American Numbering Plan Administrator, by querying the database operated by the North American Number Plan Administrator and receiving a response of “no”, has verified that the number has not been permanently disconnected since the date prior express consent was obtained as required in the Prohibition on Autodialed or Prerecorded Calls to Cell Phones, Other Sensitive Numbers section and the Prohibition on Prerecorded Calls to Residential Lines section above;¹⁹ and
- The person's call to the number was the result of the database erroneously returning a response of “no” to the person's query consisting of the number for which prior express consent was obtained as required in the Prohibition on Autodialed or Prerecorded Calls to Cell Phones, Other Sensitive Numbers section and the Prohibition on Prerecorded Calls to Residential Lines section above²⁰ and the date on which such prior express consent was obtained.

Disclosures and Notices for Artificial or Prerecorded Voice Telephone Messages (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(b))

All artificial or prerecorded voice telephone messages shall:

- At the beginning of the message, state clearly the identity of the business, individual, or other entity that is responsible for initiating the call. If a business is responsible for initiating the call, the name under which the entity is registered to conduct business with the State Corporation Commission (or comparable regulatory authority) must be stated;
- During or after the message, state clearly the telephone number (other than that of the autodialer or prerecorded message player that placed the call) of such business, other entity, or individual. The telephone number provided may not be a 900 number or any other number for which charges exceed local or long distance transmission charges. For telemarketing messages to residential telephone subscribers, such telephone number must permit any individual to make a do-not-call request during regular business hours for the duration of the telemarketing campaign; and
- In every case where the artificial or prerecorded voice telephone message includes or introduces an advertisement or constitutes telemarketing and is delivered to a residential telephone line or any of the lines or telephone numbers described in the first paragraph under the Prohibition on Autodialed or Prerecorded Calls to Sensitive Numbers and Cell Phones section above (*General Prohibition*²¹), provide an automated, interactive voice- and/or key press-activated opt-out mechanism for the called person to make a do-not-call request, including brief explanatory instructions on how to use such mechanism, within two (2) seconds of providing the identification information required in the first bullet above in this section.²² When the called person elects to opt out using such mechanism, the mechanism must automatically record the called person's number to the seller's do-not-call list and immediately terminate the call. When the artificial or prerecorded voice telephone message is left on an answering machine or a voice mail service, such message must also provide a toll free number that enables the called person to call back at a later time and connect directly to the automated, interactive voice- and/or key press-activated opt-out mechanism and automatically record the called person's number to the seller's do-not-call list.

Do-Not-Call Lists

Nationwide Do-Not-Call List (47 C.F.R. § 64.1200(c)(2))

No person or entity shall initiate any telephone solicitation to a residential telephone subscriber or wireless telephone subscriber²³ who has registered his or her telephone number on the national do-not-call registry of persons who do not wish to receive telephone solicitations that is maintained by the Federal Government.²⁴ Such do-not-call registrations must be honored indefinitely, or until the registration is cancelled by the consumer or the telephone number is removed by the database administrator. Any person or entity making telephone solicitations (or on whose behalf telephone solicitations are made) will not be liable for violating this requirement if:

- It can demonstrate that the violation is the result of error and that as part of its routine business practice, it meets the following standards:
 - It has established and implemented written procedures to comply with the national do-not-call rules;
 - It has trained its personnel, and any entity assisting in its compliance, in procedures established pursuant to the national do-not-call rules;
 - It has maintained and recorded a list of telephone numbers that the seller may not contact;
 - It uses a process to prevent telephone solicitations to any telephone number on any list established pursuant to the do-not-call rules, employing a version of the national do-not-call registry obtained from the administrator of the ²⁴ 47 C.F.R. § 64.1100(h). The term subscriber is any one of the following: (1) The party identified in the account records of a common carrier as responsible for payment of the telephone bill; (2) Any adult person authorized by such party to change telecommunications services or to charge services to the account; or (3) Any person contractually or otherwise lawfully authorized to represent such party.
